Tanwīn is represented by n, thus فررأ fauran. Alif-i maqṣūra is represented by ā;— thus, نعرى da'wā.

In the Arabic character, a final silent h is not transliterated,—thus بنده banda.

When pronounced, it is written,—thus, گناه gunāh.

Vowels when not pronounced at the end of a word, are not written in transliteration. Thus, বন ban, not bana. When not pronounced in the middle of a word or only slightly pronounced in the middle or at the end of a word, they are written in small characters above the line. Thus (Hindī) ইন্তবা dēkhatā, pronounced dēkhtā; (Kāśmīrī) বৃদ্ধ কৈ terh; কেন্দ্ৰ kar", pronounced kor; (Bihārī) ইন্তবি dēkhath.

- C.—Special letters peculiar to special languages will be dealt with under the head of the languages concerned. In the meantime the following more important instances may be noted:—
 - (a) The ts sound found in Marāṭhī (司), Puṣḥtō (內), Kāśmīrī (內, 司), Tibetan (克), and elsewhere, is represented by ts. So, the aspirate of that sound is represented by tsh.
 - (b) The dz sound found in Marāṭhī (ज), Puṣḥtō (♠), and Tibetan (♣) is represented by dz, and its aspirate by dzh.
 - (c) Kāśmīrī ভ (ন) is represented by ñ.
 - (d) Sindhī &, Western Panjābī (and elsewhere on the N.-W. Frontier) إلى and Puṣḥtō j or are represented by n.
 - (e) The following are letters peculiar to Puṣḥtō:—

 $\tip !; \times \text{ts} \text{ or } \frac{dz}{dz}$, according to pronunciation; $\text{q} : \text{g} : \text{g} \text{p} \text{or } \text{g}$, according to pronunciation; $\text{ing to pronunciation} : \text{y} \text{sh or } \text{kh}, according to pronunciation}; $\text{y} \text{or } \text{g}$.
 - (f) The following are letters peculiar to Sindhī:— (f) (f) The following are letters peculiar to Sindhī:— (f) (f)
- D.—Certain sounds, which are not provided for above, occur in transcribing languages which have no alphabet, or in writing phonetically (as distinct from transliterating) languages (such as Bengali) whose spelling does not represent the spoken sounds. The principal of these are the following:
 - á, represents the sound of the a in all.
 - \tilde{e} , , , , a in hat. \tilde{e} , , , , e in met.
 - o, " " o in hot.
 - e, " , é in the French était.
 - o, " , o in the first o in promote.
 - ö, " " ö in the German schön.
 - ü, ,, ,, ü in the ,, mühe.
 - th, , , thin think.
 - dh, ,, ,, th in this.

The semi-consonants peculiar to the Munda languages are indicated by an apostrophe. Thus k', t', p', and so on.

E.—When it is necessary to mark an accented syllable, the acute accent is used. Thus in (Khōwār) ássistai, he was, the acute accent shows that the accent falls on the first, and not, as might be expected, on the second syllable.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

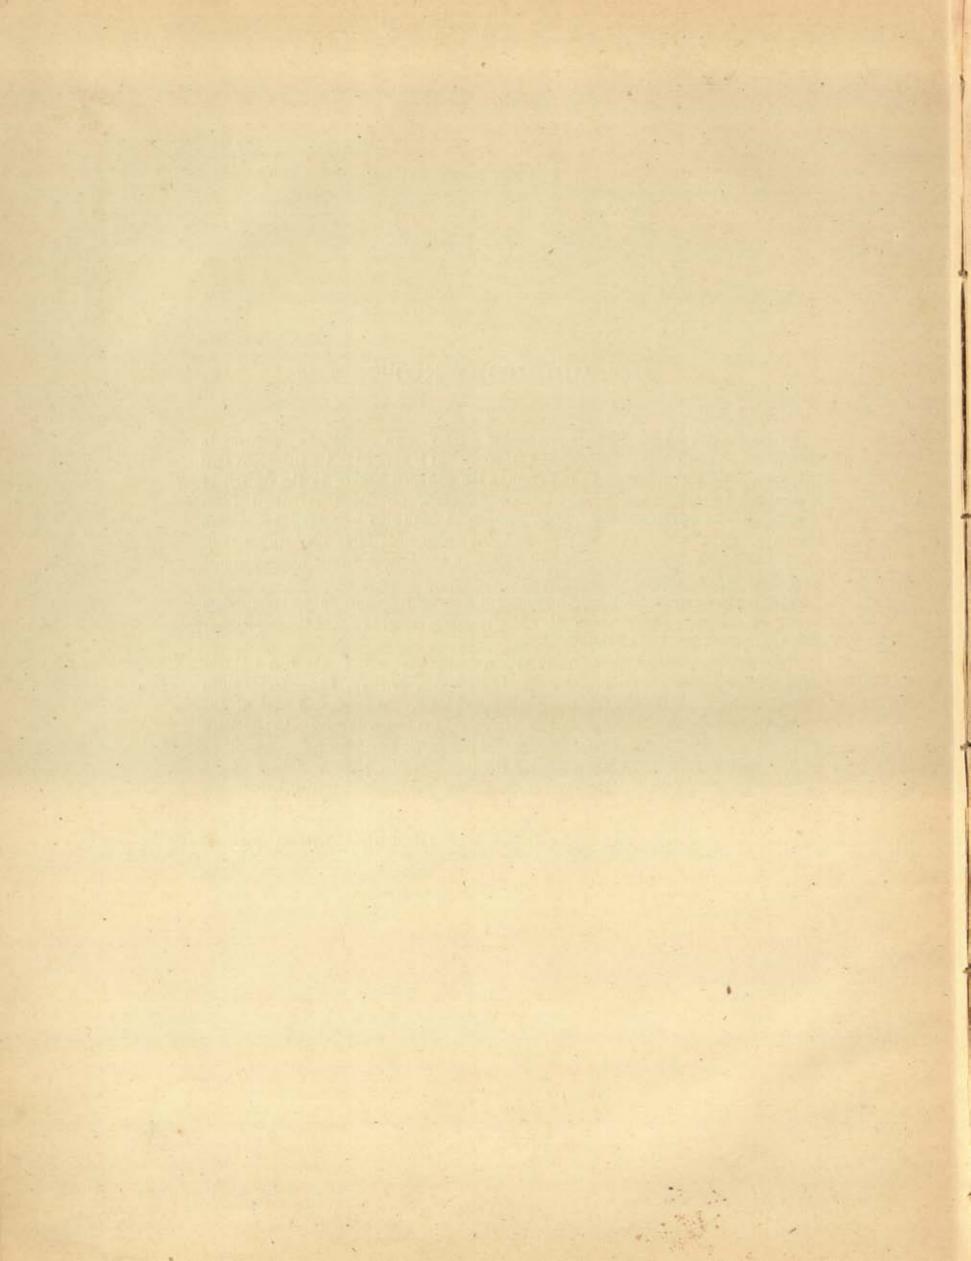

Part III of Volume IX of the Linguistic Survey is in reality a supplement to Part II which deals with Rājasthānī and Gujarātī. It is devoted to the numerous Bhīl languages of Central and Western India and to the Khāndēśī spoken in the district of Khandesh. Certain of the so-called 'Gipsy Languages,' viz., Bāorī, Habūrā, Pāradhī, and Siyālgirī, have been discovered to be varieties of Bhīlī and have been classed with that language. These are spoken by wandering tribes in widely separated parts of India, some of the specimens coming from Lahore in the Punjab, while another comes from Midnapore in Bengal.

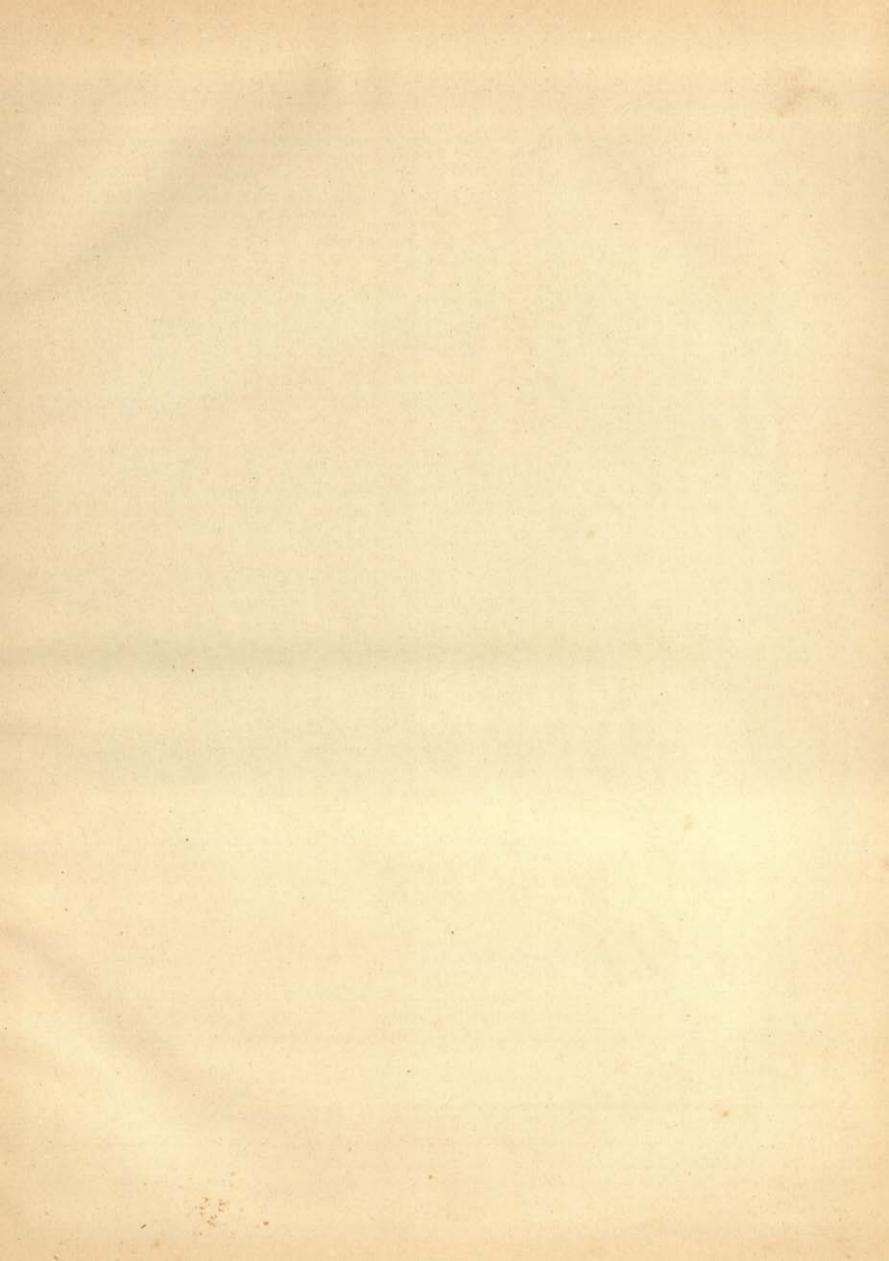

The volume concludes with an account of the dialect of the wandering carriers known as Banjārās or Labhānās. This is evidently a corrupt form of the Rājasthānī spoken in the North-West of Rajputana.

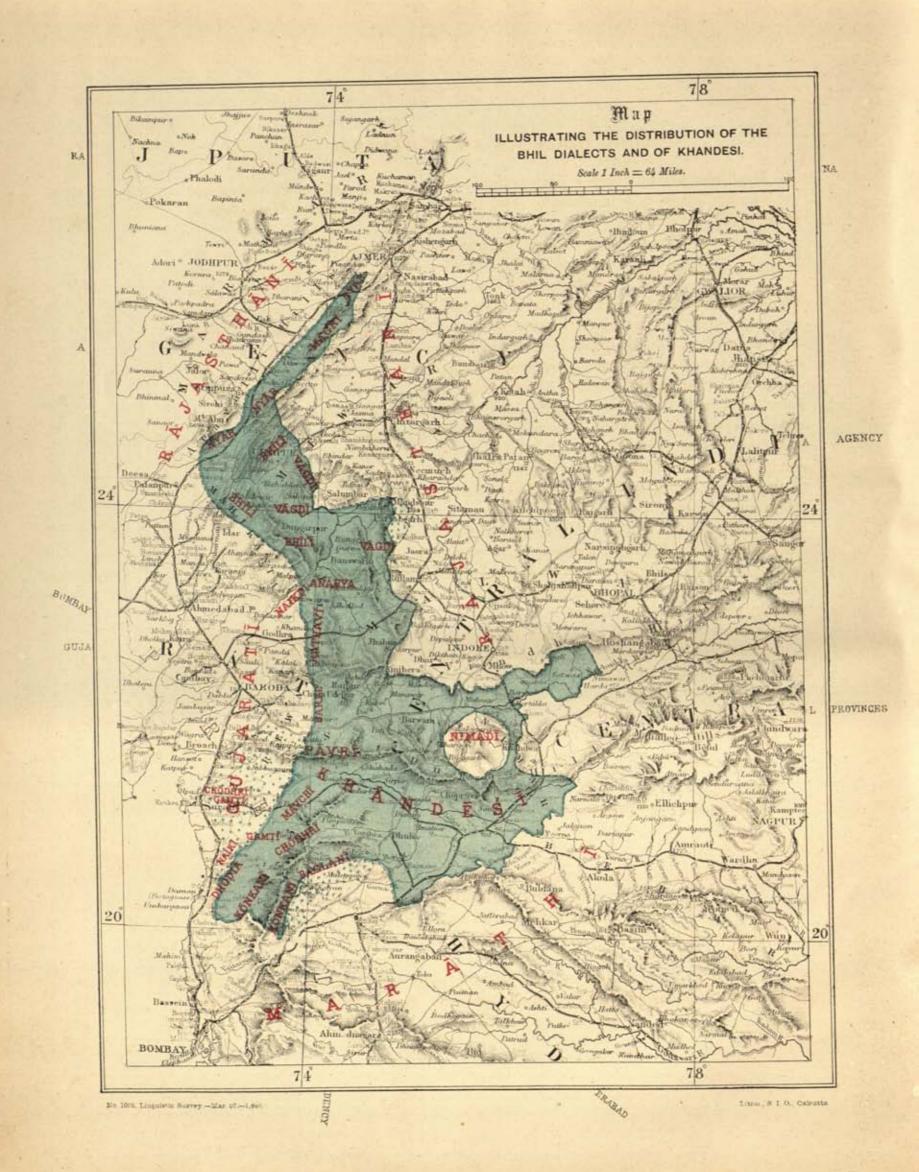

The sections dealing with Bhīlī and with Khāndēśī have been in the first instance prepared by my Assistant Dr. Sten Konow, of Christiania, Norway; I have edited them throughout, and have added a few remarks here and there. As General Editor of the series of volumes of the Linguistic Survey of India, I am responsible for all statements contained in these sections. The remainder of this part has been prepared by myself.

I take this opportunity of recording my obligations to Mr. A. H. A. Simcox of the Indian Civil Service for a valuable series of excellent and carefully prepared specimens illustrating several of the Bombay Bhīl dialects.

GEORGE A. GRIERSON.

BHIL DIALECTS AND KHANDESI.

The border country between Rajputana, Central India, the Central Provinces, and the Bombay Presidency is inhabited by many tribes known under various names, such as Bhīls, Ahīrs, and so forth.

Their home may be described as an irregularly shaped triangle, with the apex in the Aravalli Hills, and the base roughly corresponding to the Area within which spoken. south-eastern frontier of the district of Khandesh. The frontier line goes south-westwards from the Aravalli Range, including the south-eastern corner of Sirohi, and, farther to the south, including Mahikantha and the eastern portion of Rewakantha. The population of the Surat District and the Surat Agency, and of the Nawsari division of the Baroda State, is mostly Bhil, and we also find them in Thana and Jawhar, and even further south, in Ahmednagar. From the south of Dharampur, in the Surat Agency, the frontier of the Bhīl-Ahīr country proper turns first eastward and then northward including the north-western strip of the district of Nasik. It then crosses Nasik, leaving the greater—southern—part of that district to Marathi, follows the southeastern frontier of Khandesh, includes a strip of the Melkapur Taluka of Buldana and the Burhanpur Taḥṣīl of Nimar. Thence it turns northwards to the Nerbudda. In Bhopawar, however, Nimari is spoken in a large, circular, area to the west of the Nimar district. The frontier line then follows the Nerbudda towards the east, and then goes northwards to the Vindhya, where it turns westwards up to near the town of Indore, whence it runs in an irregular bow up to the Aravalli Hills, including the western portion of Jhabua and Ratlam, Banswara and the west of Partabgarh, Dungarpur and the hilly tracts of the Mewar State.

Outside of this territory we find Bhīl tribes in various districts of Berar, and similar dialects are spoken by wandering tribes in the Punjab, the United Provinces, and even in the Midnapore district of Bengal. Ahīrs are found all over Northern India, but it is only in Cutch that their dialect resembles that spoken by the various Bhīl tribes and by the inhabitants of Khandesh.

The number of speakers of the various dialects will be given in detail in the following pages. We shall here only state the general results.

They are as follows:—

Bhil dialects	:		:	:	:	:	2,689,109 1,253,066
				Тота	L		3,942,175

The dialects in question are mostly bounded towards the north and east by the various dialects of Rājasthānī, towards the south by Marāṭhī, and towards the west by Marāṭhī and Gujarātī.

Among the dialects spoken within the territory sketched above there is one, viz.,

Relation to other Indo-Aryan Khāndēśī, which has hitherto been classed as a form of vernaculars. Marāṭhī. The ensuing pages will, however, show, on the one side, that the so-called Bhīl dialects gradually merge into the language of Khandesh, on the other that Khāndēśī itself is not a Marāṭhī dialect. Several suffixes, it is true, are identical with those used in Marāṭhī. But most suffixes and the inner form of the language more closely agree with Gujarātī and Rājasthānī.

The northern and eastern dialects connect Gujarātī with Rājasthānī, while, in the west, there runs a continuous line of dialects southwards towards the broken Marāthī dialects of Thana. The influence of Marāthī increases as we go southwards, and these forms of speech are thus a link between that language and Gujarātī. This latter language is, however, everywhere the original base, and the gradual approaching the principles of Marāthī in structure and inflexional system seems to be due to a secondary development. It should, however, be remembered that the inner Indo-Aryan languages and those of the outer circle have, at an early date, met and influenced each other in Gujarat and the adjoining districts.

The relation existing between the dialects in question and other Indo-Aryan vernaculars will be defined in greater detail in the ensuing pages. In this place we must confine ourselves to some general remarks.

The short a has, in many dialects, the broad sound of o in 'hot.' Thus, pōg and pag, foot. The same is the case in Rājasthānī dialects and in Kōnkanī, but usually not in those dialects where the Marāṭhī influence is strongest. E takes the place of a in Sirohi, and also, to some extent, in Jhabua.

The palatals commonly become s-sounds, especially in the north. The same is the case in Gujarātī and Rājasthānī dialects, and we may also compare the pronunciation of ch and j as ts and dz, respectively, in Marāṭhī and in the Charōtarī dialects of Gujarātī.

S very commonly developes to a sound which is described as something between h and s. The real sound seems to be that of ch in 'loch.' This pronunciation is quite common everywhere in the eastern part of Gujarāt. As we go westwards and eastwards, this sound becomes an ordinary h as in some dialects of Gujarātī and Malvī. In the south, on the other hand, an s usually remains. The letter h itself is very commonly dropped, as is also the case in Gujarātī and Rajasthānī dialects.

There is a strong tendency to substitute hard for soft mutes. This is especially the case with soft aspirates, and forms such as $k\bar{o}d\bar{o}$ or $kh\bar{o}d\bar{o}$, instead of $gh\bar{o}d\bar{o}$, a horse, are quite common. There are also many instances of the hardening of unaspirated soft letters. Thus $l\bar{i}t\bar{o}$ and $l\bar{i}d\bar{o}$, taken; $t\bar{a}h\bar{i}$ and $d\bar{a}h\bar{i}$, a cow, and so on. The palatal j seems to be especially apt to be hardened, and is very often pronounced as an s. The emphatic particle ch in Khāndēśī is perhaps due to this tendency and is not identical with the Marāṭhī $\underline{t}s$.

In many dialects a medial r is frequently elided, as in $k\tilde{o}i$, for kari, having done; $m\tilde{o}\tilde{u}$, for $mar\tilde{u}$, I may die; $d\tilde{u}u$, for $d\tilde{u}r$, far; all of which are quoted from the Mawchi of Khandesh.

These last two peculiarities,—the hardening of soft mutes, and the elision of medial r,—also occur in the languages of North-Western India (Sindhī, Lahndā, and Piśācha), as well as in some dialects of Bengali (notably Rājbangšī), all of which belong to the Outer Band of Indo-Aryan Languages.

The inflexion of nouns is mainly the same as in Gujarātī. In the south we find some instances of the use of the Marāṭhī oblique form, not, however, as a regular feature. Khāndēśī has developed a separate oblique form of the plural ending in ēs or s. In Ahīrī we find a similar form ending in ē. An s is very often added to the base in many dialects; thus, bā and bās, a father. Similar forms are common in the Marāṭhī dialect of the Central and Northern Konkan.

Strong masculine bases form their plural in \tilde{a} as in Gujarātī. In the dialects spoken in the southern part of Rewakantha, in Khāndēšī, and in the Bhīl dialects spoken between that district and the sea, however, we also find the Marāṭhī form ending in \tilde{e} .

The case suffixes are the same as in Gujarātī. As in some Gujarātī dialects, the ablative suffix is usually inflected in the same way as the genitive suffix. In addition to the form $th\tilde{o}$, etc., it also occurs as $h\tilde{o}$, etc., compare Rājasthānī. The n of the suffix $n\tilde{e}$ of the dative is often replaced by l especially in the south and west. It then also sometimes assumes the Marāṭhī form $l\tilde{a}$.

The suffixes of the genitive and the dative are usually $n\bar{o}$ and $n\bar{e}$, respectively. There is also another pair of suffixes $h\bar{o}$ and $h\bar{e}$, respectively. These suffixes are apparently confined to the west, from Sunth and southwards. We meet them again in the broken Marathi dialects of the Northern Konkan.

The personal pronoun of the first person usually forms its nominative singular as in Gujarātī; thus, $h\widetilde{u}$, I, with several slightly varying forms. We also find forms such as $m\widetilde{u}$ in the dialects which lead over to Mālvī, and in the south and west the Marāṭhī form $m\widetilde{i}$ gradually gains ascendancy.

The present tense of the verb substantive is $chh\tilde{u}$, etc., in Gujarātī and Eastern Rājasthānī, and $h\tilde{u}$, etc., in Western Rājasthānī. The future tense is usually formed by adding an s-suffix in those dialects where 'I am' is $chh\tilde{u}$, and an h-suffix where the corresponding form is $h\tilde{u}$. Periphrastic future forms are used besides, an inflected $l\tilde{o}$ being added in the east, and an indeclinable $l\tilde{a}$ in the west. We also find a $g\tilde{o}$ -suffix in Mālvī and some dialects of Mārwārī.

All these forms occur in the various Bhīl dialects. The h-form of the present tense of the verb substantive prevails in the dialects spoken in the Aravalli Hills, and neighbourhood, such as Mag*rī and Nyār; in the hilly tracts of the Mewar State, in Partabgarh, Ratlam, and Dhar. It is further the common form in the Bhīl dialects of Mahikantha, the Sunth State of Rewakantha; the Nōrī dialects of Ali Rajpur; the Māwchī dialect of Khandesh, and the various forms of Bhīlī spoken in the Nausari Division of the Baroda State and neighbourhood, such as Rāṇī, Chōdhrī, Gāmṭī, Naikaḍī. The Marāṭhī forms of the verb substantive begin to be used in the south, and are prevalent in most forms of Kōnkaṇī.

The future is formed by adding an h-suffix in most of these dialects. In the north, however, in Merwara, we find the Jaipuri future ending in $l\bar{o}$, and in Ratlam, Partabgarh and Dhar we have the $g\bar{o}$ -future of Malvi.

The chh-form of the verb substantive often replaces the initial chh with s. The s-form prevails in the Bhīl dialects of the Panch Mahals, Jhabua, Chhota Udaipur, and Rajpipla, and the chh-form in the Lunawada and Baria States of Rewakantha; in Ali Rajpur, Barwani, and over the greater portion of Khandesh.

The future is formed by adding an h-suffix in the Panch Mahals, Jhabua, Chhota Udaipur, and Rajpipla. An s-suffix is adopted in Lunawada, Bharia, Khandesh, Ali Rajpur, and Bharwani, in the latter district the gō-suffix of Nimārī and Mālvī being used as well.

The present tense of finite verbs is commonly formed as in Gujarātī and Rājasthānī by adding the verb substantive to the old present. In the west and south there is, however, a tendency to substitute the present participle for the old present, first apparently in the plural, and then, afterwards, in the whole tense. Khāndēśī has remained in the intermediate stage, and has regularly forms such as paḍas, he falls; paḍatas, they fall. Further details will be found later on.

The past tense is usually formed as in Gujarātī. As in that language and in Eastern Hindī, a suffix $n\bar{o}$ or $n\bar{o}$ is used as well as the ordinary $y\bar{o}$ -suffix. $L\bar{o}$ is often substituted for $n\bar{o}$, just as l and n interchange in the suffix of the dative.

The $n\bar{o}$ -suffix is occasionally also used in the present tense. It is not certain whether it is identical with the l-suffix in Marāṭhī or not. It is also possible to think of a connexion of the n-suffix which forms relative participles in Telugu and other Dravidian languages. If $n\bar{o}$ is identical with Marāṭhī $l\bar{a}$, its wide use in Bhīlī must be accounted for by the use of the old l-suffix (Prakrit illa) at a period when it was still a pleonastic suffix without being limited to the past tense.

The future, the verbal noun, and the conjunctive participle, are formed as in Gujarātī. As we approach the Marāṭhī territory, however, the forms of that language begin to appear and gradually gain ascendancy.

The preceding remarks will have shown that the position assigned to the dialects n question is correct, and that they are in reality more closely related to Gujarātī and Rājasthānī than to any other Indo-Aryan vernacular. The same result may be derived from a comparison of the vocabulary. We are not, however, able to make any statement in this respect regarding Khāndēśī. As to the Bhīl dialects, the Rev. Ch. Thompson has calculated that about 84 per cent. of the words found in the Bhīl dialect of Mahikantha may be derived from Sanskrit and correspond to words used in Gujarātī. About 10 per cent. are of Persian descent, and the remaining six cannot as yet be traced.

We shall now proceed to consider the various dialects in detail, and first turn to the so-called Bhīl dialects.

BHĪLĪ OR BHILODĪ.

The Bhīls are known under a bewildering variety of names. On account of their dark colour they are often called Kālī paraj, the black people. The only comprehensive name is, however, Bhīl, the Sanskrit Bhilla.¹ Ethnographically they are sometimes stated to be Dravidians, and sometimes to belong to the Muṇḍā stock. Accounts of the various tribes are found in the Census Reports and the District Gazetteers. In this place we have only to do with their language. Whatever their original speech may have been, there can be no doubt that, at the present day, they speak an Aryan dialect, closely related to Gujarātī and Rājasthānī.

The territory occupied by the Bhīl tribes is a rather extensive one, and there Bhīl dialects.

are, as might be expected, differences of dialect in the different parts of the Bhīl country. Towards the north and east the dialects of the Bhīls gradually merge into the various forms of Rājasthānī. In the west and south the influence of Marāṭhī gradually increases. Thus the southern forms of Kōnkanī are almost Marāṭhī and gradually merge into some broken dialects of the Northern Konkan, such as Vāralī, Phudagī, Sāmvēdī, and Vādaval, which have now become real Marathi dialects, though their original base must have agreed with Bhili. More towards the east the Bhil dialects gradually approach Khandeśi, and at the Khandesh frontier, in Northern Nasik and in the Dangs, they are almost pure Khandeśi.

The Bhil dialects, therefore, form a continuous chain, between Rajasthani, through Gujarātī and Khāndēśī, and Marāthī. In most cases, however, the Marāthī influence is only of a quite superficial kind, and the general character of the dialect remains Gujarātī. In Nimar, the Bhili seems to have been more strongly influenced by Marathi than elsewhere, the specimens forwarded from that district being written in a corrupt Marathi, see below, p. 174. From Berar only one set of specimens has been received. It had been prepared in Basim and was written in a form of Gondi. The specimen will be dealt with in connexion with that latter form of speech. The reported number of speakers from Berar has, however, been added in the figures given above. It seems probable that the Gondi-speaking Bhils simply employ the language of their neighbours.

Specimens will be given in the following pages of the various Bhil dialects. They will be arranged according to principles which it will be necessary to point out in this place.

The best known among all Bhil dialects is that of Mahikantha. It is the main basis of the Rev. Ch. Thompson's Bhil grammar. Mahikantha is also a convenient starting point if we desire to follow the various ramifications of the Bhīl dialects, and the form of Bhīlī spoken there has accordingly been dealt with as Standard Bhīlī.

It is closely related to Gujarātī. The present tense of the verb substantive, however, does not begin with chh, but with an h-sound which seems to correspond to the ch in 'loch.' The same sound is also the characteristic of the future tense.

To the north-east of Mahikantha lie the hilly tracts of the Mewar State where Bhīlī is the principal language. The dialect is almost the same as in Mahikantha. There are, however, traces of the influence of the neighbouring Marwari. Thus the periphrastic future ending in -go begins to occur in Kotra.

The influence of Marwari increases as we proceed northwards along the Aravalli hills, where we find the so-called Girasia or Nyar. Still farther to the north, in the southern portion of the Merwara State, we find the dialect Magari which is almost pure

If we return to Mahikantha we can trace another series of dialects forming a link with Malvi. They are spoken to the east of Mahikantha, in Dungarpur, Banswara, Partabgarh, Ratlam, and Dhar. The present tense of the verb substantive begins with an h, and the future is usually formed periphrastically by adding $-g\tilde{o}$. In Ratlam we also find the chh form of the present tense of the verb substantive which is common in the dialects to the west of the State.

We again return to Mahikantha. The Bhīlī of the Sunth State of Rewakantha is almost identical with the dialect spoken in Mahikantha. Proceeding towards the east we find, in the eastern portion of the Panch Mahals, a dialect of Bhīlī which may be considered as the central link in a chain connecting Nīmārī in the east with Standard Gujarātī in the west. The present tense of the verb substantive begins with s while the characteristic element of the future is an h. The same is the case with the dialects spoken in Jhabua, and with the Bhīl dialects of Chhota Udaipur and Rajpipla of the Rewakantha Agency. The Bhīlī of the two last-mentioned districts, however, has so many points of analogy with the dialects spoken farther south and gradually approaching Marāṭhī that they will be dealt with in connexion with them.

The Bhīl dialects of Ali Rajpur and Barwani, on the other hand, will be dealt with in connexion with those spoken in the Panch Mahals and Jhabua. The present tense of the verb substantive here begins with chh and the future is formed by adding an s-suffix. In Barwani the Bhīl dialects gradually merge into Nīmārī, and we occasionally also find the periphrastic future formed by adding a gā. From Ali Rajpur we shall proceed westwards through a series of dialects which gradually merge into Standard Gujarātī. The present tense of the verb substantive begins with chh and the future is formed by adding an s. These dialects are spoken in Baria, the western portion of the Panch Mahals, and in Lunawara. The dialect spoken in the Halol taluka of the Panch Mahals and in Lunawara is called Naikadī. This dialect is also spoken in Surat where it has come under the influence of Marāṭhī. All the various forms of Naikadī will therefore be dealt with later on.

The dialect of the Ahīrs in Cutch, on the other hand, is closely related to Gujarātī, and will be dealt with in this connexion. It, however, also agrees with Marāthī in several points, and we shall therefore proceed from Ahirī to a series of dialects which runs down from Rewakantha and gradually approaches Marāthī and Khāndēšī.

We shall begin these with the dialects spoken in Chhota Udaipur and Rajpipla of the Rewakantha Agency. They agree with the Bhīlī of the eastern Panch Mahals in the formation of the present tense of the verb substantive and of the future. The former begins with chh and the suffix of the future is h or ī.

In those dialects we meet with a new feature.

The usual present tense in Gujarātī and Rājasthānī is formed by adding the verb substantive to the conjunctive present. Thus, Gujarātī hũ karũ chhũ, I do. In Marāṭhī the same tense is formed from the present participle. Thus, mī karitō, I do. The forms used in Khāndēśī agree with Gujarātī in the singular and with Marāṭhī in the plural. Thus, karas, he does; karas, they do.

The northern Bhīl dialects mainly agree with Gujarātī and Rājasthānī. In Chhota Udaipur, on the other hand, the Khāndēśī and Marāṭhī forms begin to appear. Thus, chhũ, I am; chhẽ and chhatāh, they are. Compare also forms such as jāt*lu chhē, thou goest.

Pāwarī, a dialect spoken in the north of Khandesh, will be dealt with between the Bhīlī of Chhota Udaipur and that spoken in Rajpipla. It is closely related to the Barēl dialect of Chhota Udaipur, and leads, on the other hand, over to Khāndēśī.

In Rajpipla we begin to find the Marāṭhī present of the verb substantive, āhē. That form is more closely related to hē than to chhē. Hē, is, and the h-suffix of the future tense prevail in the southern dialects of Naikadī, and the various forms of that speech will therefore be dealt with after the Bhīlī of Rajpipla.

The h-form of the present tense and the corresponding h-future also prevail in Māw'chī, spoken in the eastern part of Khandesb, and in the Nōrī dialect of Ali Rajpur.

The same is the case with the various Bhīl dialects spoken in the Nawsari Division of the Baroda State and neighbouring districts, such as Rāṇī, Chōdhrī. Gāṃṭī, and Dhōḍiā. Rāṇī may be considered as the link connecting the southern forms of Bhīlī with Pāw'rī and the dialects of Chhota Udaipur and Rajpipla. It shares the ablative suffix $d\bar{e}kh$ with Pāw^{}rī. Both dialects begin to use the Marāthī form of the plural of strong masculine bases, as is also the case in Rajpipla and Khandesh. The possessive pronouns are $m\bar{a}$, my; $t\bar{a}$, thy, as in Rajpipla, Māw^{}chī, and other connected dialects. The plural, and sometimes also the singular, of the present tense is formed from the present participle, and so forth.

The other Bhīl dialects of Nawsari have still more traces of the influence of Marāthī, and the various forms of the so-called Konkanī gradually merge into the broken Marāṭhī dialects of Thana.

In Nasik, Könkanī merges into several Bhīl dialects which are almost identical with Khāndēśī.

Before proceeding to deal with that form of speech we shall have to consider some dialects which have been more or less influenced from various sources.

In the first place the Bhīlī of Nimar. That dialect has been largely influenced by the Marāthī of the Central Provinces, though it preserves sufficient traces of its different origin.

Then we shall have to deal with Bhil dialects spoken by some vagrant tribes, viz.,

Bāorī, Habūrā, Pāradhī, and Siyālgirī.

It should be borne in mind that the Bhīls are not of Aryan origin, and that they have, accordingly, adopted a foreign tongue. We cannot under such circumstances expect the same consistency as in the case of the genuine Aryan vernaculars, and as a matter of fact we often meet with a state of affairs that reminds us of the mixed character of the language of other aboriginal tribes, which have, in the course of time, adopted the speech of their Aryan neighbours.

The Bhils have semetimes been considered as originally a Dravidian race, and sometimes as belonging to the Munda stock. We are not as yet in a position to settle the question.

The various Bhīl dialects contain several words which do not appear to be of Aryan origin. Some of them seem to be Muṇḍā; thus, $t\bar{a}h\bar{i}$, a cow; $b\bar{o}d\bar{o}$, back. Compare Muṇḍārī $t\bar{a}hi$, to milk a cow; Khariā $b\bar{o}d$, back.

In other cases there is apparently a certain connexion between Bhīlī and Dravidian. Compare $talp\bar{a}$, head; $t\bar{o}l\bar{i}$, a cow; $\bar{a}kh^sl\bar{o}$, a bull; with Tamil $tale\bar{i}$, head; Gōndī tālī, a cow; Kanarese ākaļu, a cow, and so forth.

It would not, however, be safe to base any conclusion on such stray instances of correspondence. We have not, as yet, sufficient insight into the relationship between the vocabularies of the Dravidian and Mundā families. There can be no doubt that both have several words in common, especially in those districts where the two families meet. We are not, however, justified in concluding from such facts that these forms of speech are derived from the same base. It seems much more probable that they are both to some extent mixed languages, representing the dialects of the different races which have, in the course of time, invaded India. Each new race to some extent absorbed the old inhabitants, whose language left its mark in the grammar and vocabulary of the new invaders.

We must, therefore, leave the question about the origin of the non-Aryan element in Bhīlī vocabulary open until further investigations have thrown more light upon the relationship of the different linguistic families of India.

There are, on the other hand, a few points in Bhili grammar which apparently show some connexion with Dravidian forms of speech. They are not, however, numerous and quite insufficient to prove a closer connexion. The principal ones are as follows.

Soft aspirated letters are commonly hardened. Thus, $kh\bar{o}r\bar{o}$, a horse; $ph\bar{a}\bar{i}$, a brother. A similar hardening of unaspirated soft letters occurs in some Bhīl dialects. See below. This state of affairs can perhaps be compared with the hardening of initial soft consonants in Dravidian. Compare, for example, Telugu $k\bar{a}ramu$, Sanskrit gharma, heat.

The neuter gender is sometimes used to denote female beings, just as is the case in Telugu, Gōṇḍī, etc. Thus, $bair\widetilde{u}$, a wife; $bair\widetilde{a}$, wives. The same is also the case in the Marāṭhī dialects of the coast where Dravidian influence is probable.

In this connexion we may also note the fact that the pronoun $h\bar{a}$, this, has the same form for the feminine and neuter singular, just as is the case with the demonstrative pronouns in Telugu. The pronoun du, this, can further be compared with Tamil a-du, that, i-du, this, and similar forms in other Dravidian languages.

Finally, we may note the suffix n of the past tense. It is, of course, quite possible that this suffix is identical with the Aryan l in Marāthī and other languages. On the other hand, it can also be compared with the Dravidian suffix n. Compare Tamil $\bar{o}du$ - $n\bar{e}n$, I ran. The Dravidian n-suffix has, in other dialects, a very wide use, and this fact can perhaps be adduced in order to explain the occurrence of the n-suffix in Bhīlī in other tenses than the past. The Aryan l-suffix is, however, also used outside the past tense and was originally a common derivative suffix.

It would not be safe to urge such points. They are not of sufficient importance to furnish a conclusive proof. We should, however, remember that the Bhils belong to Western India where we might reasonably expect to find remnants of the old Dravidian population, and such strong grammatical characteristics as have just been mentioned make the supposition the more plausible that the Bhils have once spoken a Dravidian dialect. It is even possible that their original language was a Munda form of speech, which was in its turn superseded by a Dravidian tongue.

BHILT OF MAHIKANTHA.

It has already been stated that the Bhil dialect spoken in Mahikantha may be conveniently chosen as a starting point from which we can follow the ramifications of these forms of speech in all directions. It will therefore be necessary to give a somewhat fuller account of that dialect.

The remarks which follow are based on the specimens received from the Edar State and on the following

AUTHORITY-

THOMPSON, REV. CHAS. S.,—Rudiments of the Bhili Language. Ahmedabad. United Printing Press, 1895.

Mr. Thompson's Bhīlī is in all essential points the dialect of Mahikantha.

Pronunciation.—The letter a is often pronounced as an \tilde{o} , or, more probably, as the a in English 'all.' It has been transliterated as \tilde{o} , and I have not ventured to alter the spelling. Thus, pag and $p\tilde{o}g$, foot; pan and $p\tilde{o}n$, but. In the same way we find \tilde{o} for \tilde{a} in $p\tilde{o}n\tilde{i}$ (Gujarātī $p\tilde{o}n\tilde{i}$) and $p\tilde{a}n\tilde{i}$, water. In some Gujarātī dialects this \tilde{o} , transliterated \tilde{o} and pronounced as in 'all,' is regularly substituted for \tilde{a} . A nasalized \tilde{a} is very commonly written \tilde{o} , and seems to be pronounced like on in French 'bon.' Thus, $tam\tilde{a}$ and $tam\tilde{o}$, you; $\tilde{a}kh$ and $\tilde{o}kh$, eye.

Final i in the singular of feminine nouns is commonly pronounced almost as an ē; thus, sōri or sōrē, daughter; vi and vē, she. So also in dialectic Gujarātī.

A long final vowel is very often nasalized. Thus the suffix of the dative is \tilde{e} or \tilde{e} , and $n\tilde{e}$ or $n\tilde{e}$.

The hard palatals do not occur, they having been replaced by s as in dialectic Gujarātī; thus, sōrũ, Standard Gujarātī chhōrũ, a child; sōr, Standard Gujarātī chōr, a thief.

The soft palatal j is pronounced as a soft s or z; thus, $jun\tilde{u}$, old, pronounced $zun\tilde{u}$. When j is followed by y in the past tense of verbs and in some forms of feminine $\tilde{\imath}$ -bases, it is, however, pronounced as an ordinary j; thus, $g\tilde{\imath}jy\tilde{o}$, (he) went; $s\tilde{o}rjy\tilde{e}$, by a daughter. Compare below. The same change occurs in dialectic Gujarātī.

The cerebral d between vowels is usually pronounced as an r, also as in Gujarātī dialects; thus, $kh\bar{o}r\bar{o}$ and $gh\bar{o}d\bar{o}$, a horse.

A y followed by a vowel is often changed to a jy; thus, $s\tilde{o}r\tilde{i}$, a daughter; $s\tilde{o}rjy\tilde{a}-n\tilde{o}$, of daughters; $may\tilde{a}$ and $m\tilde{a}jy\tilde{a}$, compassion; $m\tilde{a}ry\tilde{o}$ and $m\tilde{a}r^{s}jy\tilde{o}$, struck, and so on. This secondary j is not pronounced as a z.

The sounds v and w are pronounced as in Gujarātī and Rājasthānī.

The letter h is pronounced in two different ways. When it corresponds to an h in Gujarātī and connected languages it is very faintly sounded, and often dropped altogether as in the colloquial form of that language; thus, $h\tilde{u}$ ato, Standard Gujarātī $h\tilde{u}$ hato, I was. H is, however, also regularly substituted for every s in the corresponding Gujarātī word. This h is pronounced as a guttural h, like the ch in 'loch' or in the German 'ich.' It has been transliterated as an h. Thus, $h\tilde{o}n\tilde{u}$, Gujarātī $s\tilde{o}n\tilde{u}$, gold, $b\tilde{e}h$, Gujarātī $b\tilde{e}s$, sit. In Gujarātī dialects s regularly becomes h.

Soft consonants are often replaced by the corresponding hard ones. Thus, $t\bar{a}h\bar{i}$ and $d\bar{a}h\bar{i}$, a cow; $l\bar{i}d\tilde{u}$ and $l\bar{i}t\tilde{u}$, taken; $up^{o}v\tilde{u}$ and $ub\tilde{u}$ $th\bar{a}v\tilde{u}$, to stand. The soft palatal j is said to be often pronounced as an s. Usually, however, the soft consonant which is changed to a hard one is an aspirate. Thus, $gh\bar{e}r$, ger, and $kh\bar{e}r$, house; $gh\bar{o}d\bar{o}$ and $kh\bar{o}d\bar{o}$, a horse; $th\bar{a}m^{o}v\tilde{u}$ and $dh\bar{a}m^{o}v\tilde{u}$, to run; $th\bar{o}l\tilde{u}$ and $dh\bar{o}l\tilde{u}$, white; $bh\bar{a}\bar{i}$ and $ph\bar{a}\bar{i}$, a brother, and so on.

The principal features of the Bhīlī dialect will be seen from the short grammatical sketch which follows. For further details the student is referred to Rev. Chas. S. Thompson's Rudiments of the Bhili Language quoted under Authorities, above.

Suffixes ending in $\vec{\pi}$ are often nasalized. Thus, $\vec{\pi}ap\vec{\pi}$, by the father. Other case suffixes are,—ablative $\vec{kan\vec{\pi}}$-th$\vec{\pi}$; locative $m\vec{\pi}y$, $m\vec{\pi}$, $\vec{kan\vec{\pi}}$, and $\vec{\pi}$; thus, $\vec{kun\vec{\pi}}$-m\vec{\pi}$, in the well; $\vec{hath\vec{\pi}}$ ($\vec{hath\vec{\pi}}$ ($\vec{hath\vec{\pi}}$), on the hand.

The neuter gender is often used to denote feminine beings; thus, bairt and bairt, a woman.

Adjectives.—All adjectives which do not end in \tilde{u} are uninflected. Those ending in \tilde{u} are inflected for gender, number, and partly for case. Thus, $bhal\bar{u}$, good; fem. $bhal\bar{u}$; neut. $bhal\bar{u}$; pl. $bhal\bar{u}$, fem. $bhal\bar{u}$, neut. $bhal\bar{u}$; oblique $bhal\bar{u}$, fem. $bhal\bar{u}$; before locatives also $bhal\bar{u}$. The genitive and ablative suffixes are such adjectives; thus, $t\bar{u}r\bar{v}$ $\bar{u}t\bar{u}-n\bar{v}$ (or, $t\bar{u}r\bar{u}$ $\bar{u}t\bar{u}n\bar{u}$) $bh\bar{u}r-n\bar{u}$, in thy father's house; $h\bar{u}g^*d\bar{u}-n\bar{u}$ 0 bk0 bk0, one servant from among the servants; $b\bar{u}-h\bar{u}$ 0 bk0, wherefrom have you come?

III.-VERBS.

A .- Verb Substantive .- Atwif, to be.

		Present, I am, etc.	Past, I was, etc.	Future, I shall be, etc.	Subjunctive, I may be, etc.	Imperative, be, etc.
ing.	1 1	. 12.	atō.	ahi, hōih, ahjē.	ugũ, hõũ, wũ.	Committee of
		hā.	atō.	ahē.	ugē, vē.	hō, hōjē.
	3 1	hā.	atō.	aķē.	ugē, vē.	1 2015
lur.	1 2	hã, hãi-yê.	atā. =	ahã.	ugã, wã.	an Action
	2 2	Ãō.	atā.	ahō.	ugō, wō.	hō, hōjō.
		18, 18.	atā.	aht.	ug 8, v8.

The past tense is inflected as an adjective and agrees with the subject in gender and number. Thus, vi ati, she was. A past subjunctive is ugēk or ugēt, I might be. It does not change for person.

B.-Finite Verb.-pad wi, to fall.

Verbal Noun.—pad"wũ, genitive pad"wā-nō.

Participles. - pad*tō, falling; pad*jyō, padēlō, fallen; pad*wā-nō, about to fall; pad*tā, on falling.

Conjunctive participle.—padī, padī-nē, padī-nē.

	Pres. conj., I may fall, etc.	Present, I fall, etc.	Past, I fell, etc.	Future, I shall fall, etc.	Imperative fall, etc.
ig.	padű.	padīī-hũ.	pad*jyō.	padī(h), padahi.
.8	padē.	padē-hē.	padejyō.	pad*hé, padī(h).	pad, pad*jē.
3		padē- h ē.	pad*jyō.	pad*hē.	ne de ma enem
lur.	padž, padiyē.	padā-hã.	pad*jyā.	padehã.	padiyē.
2		padō-hō.	pad*jyā.	pad*hō.	pado, padojo.
3		padē-hē.	pad*jyā.	pad*h8.	10-1-11

Present definite.-hu padu hu, I am falling.

Imperfect,-hu padeto ato, I was falling.

Perfect .- hu pad jyo hu, I have fallen.

Pluperfect. - hu pad jyō atō, I had fallen.

The present conjunctive is also used as an ordinary present. The past participle passive has sometimes the forms padiyō, padyō, and pado.

Similarly are inflected all regular verbs. The past tense of transitive verbs agrees with the object; thus, want punji alyi he gave his property; and i-ne mokalyo, he sent him.

C .- Irregular Verbs.

Several verbs form their past tense irregularly. Thus,pēh wu, to enter, past pētho. kar wu, to do, past kīdō. pīwu, to drink, " pīdo. " khādō. khāwū, to eat, » bīnō. bitoù, to fear, " gijyð. jāwi, to go, " bētho. bēh wũ, to sit, " ditho. dēkh wu, to see, " muő. mar wũ, to die, » dīdō. diwu, to give, " lido. nāh wu, torun away, " nātho. liwu, to take, Occasionally we also find forms such as rihāṇō, he got angry; marāṇō, beaten, etc.

Passive Voice.—Formed by adding a to the base; thus, kar ww, to do; kardww, to be done; kēwā, we are called; kēwāē, they are called. Causative verb .- Formed as in Gujāratī by adding aw, aw, and ad. When aw is added the verbal noun usually ends in no and not in www. Thus, waj www, to sound; wajaw nw, to cause to sound: beh ww, to sit; behad ww, to cause to sit; phar ww, to turn; pheraw nw, to cause to turn.

BHĪLĪ OR BHILŌDĪ.

The dialect spoken by the Bhīls in the Edar State, in Mahikantha, very closely agrees with the preceding skeleton grammar, as will be seen from the two specimens which follow. The Bhīls of that district are commonly called Dungri Bhils, from the neighbouring Dungarpur, and their dialect is also known as Dungarī.

The first specimen is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second an account of the way in which the Bhīls contract their marriages.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

We are called Bhils, and live among the mountains. Originally our forefathers came here and so these mountains are called ours. The marriage among us is performed in this way. The parents, cousins, and uncles of the bridegroom meet together at his house and then go out to choose a bride for him. Having chosen a bride in a particular village they go to her house and ask whether they would like to give their daughter to their son. If the parents of the girl are pleased with the offer, they give their consent. and wine worth one rupee is bought from the grogshop. All drink it together there, and then the parents return home and commence the preparations. In the first place the bridegroom is anointed with yellow turmeric, and the village people are invited to a feast of wine and kugri (grain and maize). After the feast is over they commence a dance and when that is over they return to their homes. Then they all go with the bridegroom to the house of the bride for the marriage ceremony. bhābhī (brother's wife) of the bride joins the right hands of the bride and the bridegroom and takes them seven times round the fire. Now the marriage is performed and the bridegroom comes out with the bride and they all return to the house of the bridegroom. There the bride and the bridegroom are received into the house, and they again come out, after which the bride returns to her parents. After about a week the bridegroom, in company of several men, goes again to invite the bride to his house.

Bhīlī is the principal language of the hilly tracts of the Mewar State. It is almost the same form of speech as that current in Mahikantha. There is, however, a slight admixture of Mārwārī, especially round Kotra.

AUTHORITY-

HENDLEY, T. H., -An Account of the Maiwar Bhils. Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. xliv, Part i, 1875, pp. 347 & ff.

The Bhīli spoken in the Khadak District of the Mewar State very closely agrees with the Bhīl dialect of Mahikantha.

We may only note a few peculiarities.

The cerebral l is no more used; thus, $h\tilde{a}g^{a}l\tilde{o}$ for $h\tilde{a}g^{a}l\tilde{o}$, all; $k\tilde{a}l$, for $k\tilde{a}l$, famine.

An original s is usually changed to h; thus, $hu\bar{e}r$, Gujarātī suwar, pig. But $d\bar{e}s$ - $m\tilde{a}$, in the country.

The neuter gender is usually replaced by the masculine. Thus, jē mārē pāhē hai vī tārō hai, what mine is that is thine. Compare, however, bē sōrā hatā, two sons (litchildren) were.

In the verb substantive he has been replaced by hai. Thus, tũ hai, thou art; ghaṇā nōkar haĩ, many servants are. Compare Mārwārī.

In other respects the dialect agrees with the Bhīlī of Mahikantha as will be seen from the beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows.

The Bhīlī spoken in the Kotra district of Mewar has been much influenced by Mārwārī, and may be considered as the link connecting that language with the Bhīl dialect of Mahikantha.

The materials forwarded from Kotra are rather corrupt, and the grammatical remarks which follow are therefore given with some reserve. On the whole, however, the texts are sufficient to show that the dialect under consideration is in reality, as might be expected from the locality within which it is spoken, a mixed form of speech.

The palatals have developed to s-sounds, and s has been changed to h as in Mahi-kantha. Thus, $p\tilde{a}s$, five; $v\bar{\imath}h$, twenty. Chh is, however, often written instead of s; thus, chhōrō and sōrō, a son.

D between vowels is pronounced as an r; thus, $gh\tilde{o}r\tilde{o}$, a horse.

So far as we can judge from the materials available b is sometimes substituted for v and w. Thus, $b\bar{e}g^al\bar{o}$, far, but $v\bar{i}h$, twenty.

The neuter gender is often confounded with the masculine; thus, $k\bar{e}hy\bar{o}$ and $k\bar{e}y\tilde{u}$, it was said; $n\bar{a}n\bar{u}$, the younger son; $h\bar{o}nu$, gold; $rup\bar{o}$, silver, etc.

The plural of strong feminine bases sometimes ends in i and sometimes in iyā; thus, ghōrī, mares; chhōriyã, daughters.

The suffix of the genitive is $r\bar{o}$, or, sometimes, $n\bar{o}$; thus, $b\bar{a}p$ - $r\bar{o}$ and $b\bar{a}p$ - $n\bar{o}$, of a father. The suffix of the dative is $n\bar{e}$; thus, $chh\bar{o}r\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{e}$, to the son. Occasionally $k\bar{o}$ is used instead; thus, $n\bar{o}kar$ - $k\bar{o}$, to the servants.

With regard to numerals we may note the form $\tilde{e}k^s$, one. Here we have, apparently, the pleonastic s which is common in Jaipuri.

'I' is hu and mu, case of the agent mai, genitive maro, mharo, and mako; plural hamō, genitive mhārō.

'He' is wo, oblique una and wana. The interrogative pronouns are kūn, who? kinā-rō, whose? hũ, what? etc.

The present tense of the verb substantive is :-

 Singular, 1. hũ.
 Plural, 1. haĩ.

 2. hai.
 2. hō, haĩ.

 3. hai.
 3. hai, haĩ.

The past tense is hato and tho, plural hata.

The finite verbs are inflected as in connected dialects. Thus, hũ jãũ hũ, I go; thũ jãvề-hai, thou goest, etc.

The past tense of transitive verbs is often combined with a subject in the nominative case. Thus, bēṭō kēhyũ, the son said; mũ gunō kīdō hai, I (instead of maĩ, by-me) sin done is, etc.

The conjunctive present is often used as a future; thus, $m\tilde{u}$ $j\tilde{a}\tilde{u}$, I will go. The true future is formed from this tense by adding $g\tilde{o}$, plural $g\tilde{a}$. Thus, $h\tilde{u}$ $kut\tilde{u}\cdot g\tilde{o}$, I shall strike.

The verbal noun ends in wō, oblique wā; thus, kuṭ wō, to strike; kuṣ kar wā lāgā, they began to make merry.

Note also the causative form kew rau, I may be called.

It is hoped that the beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows will be sufficient to show the characteristic features of the dialect. It will be seen that the spelling is rather inconsistent. I have, however, corrected all serious mistakes in the original, where the Devanagari text in numerous instances was at variance with the transliteration.

GIRĀSIĀ OR NYĀR.

The Bhil dialect spoken in the eastern part of Marwar and Malani along the hills bordering on Merwara and Mewar is known as the Nyār-kī-bōlī, or Nyār dialect. It is also spoken in the south-eastern corner of the Sirohi State, where it is known as Girāsiā.

The most characteristic feature of this dialect is the frequency with which \tilde{e} is substituted for other vowels; thus, dhen, wealth; den, day; kere-ne, having done. In words such as husēlo or huselo, son; apēņo and apeņo, own, etc., the ē is probably short.

Note also the frequent contractions such as unai for una-ē, to him, etc.

The cerebral l has been replaced by the dental l; thus $k\bar{a}l$ for $k\bar{a}l$, famine.

The inflexion of nouns and verbs is, broadly speaking, the same as in the Bhili of Mahikantha. The suffix of the genitive is, however, ro as in Marwari; thus, nokeri . ro, of the servants. The future of kut wu, to strike, is given as follows,-

> Singular, 1. kutu. Plural, 1. kutã. 2. kutī.

> > 3. kuti. 3. kutī.

2. kutī.

Note also the pronoun du, this.

On the whole the dialect will be seen to agree with the Bhīlī of Mahikantha with an admixture of Mārwārī, though not to the same extent as is the case with the Bhili of Mewar.

Of the two specimens which follow the first is a version of the Parable of the Pro-It has been received from Jodhpur in Marwar. Only the first few lines have been reproduced. The second specimen is a short folk-tale from Sirohi. It will be seen that both represent the same dialect.

Once upon a time there were two brothers, Khumjī Ṭhākōr and Prēmlō Nāwṭō. One day Prēmlō Nāwṭō took his arrows and said, 'O Khumjī Ṭhākōr, if we go on in this way we shall not make a name. Let us both go and sit down at the well. When anybody comes to draw water, we will shoot the water-poṭ to pieces.' So they did, and soon the queen Phulmātī came to fetch water. After having filled her pitcher she ascended from the steps of the well, and they broke her pitcher by shooting an arrow at it. The queen Phulmātī fled to the palace and loudly complained to her husband that her pitcher had been broken. Her husband then banished the two brothers.

At noon Khumjī Thākōr became hungry and went home to get some bread. When he saw the proclamation of banishment, he thought, 'what is this? I will go and see.' He found that his father had written as follows, 'it is not allowed to drink water here. If you remain here and drink water, then you will drink the blood of a black cow.'

Khumjī Thākor then went to his brother Prēmlo, and said, 'brother Prēmlo, let us not stay here and drink water. My father has banished us, therefore let us be off.' So they went away.

On their way they came to Ujjain. The king of Ujjain from his elevated seat saw the young men coming and asked them where they were going. They answered that they intended to serve for a seer of flour, and so he asked them to stay with him and took them in his service.

Now the king had a daughter. One day she was carried away by a tiger, and she cried out, 'make haste, make haste.' Khumjī Ṭhākōr mounted a horse and hastened after her into the wood, and killed the tiger. Then Prēmlō Nāwṭō arrived. Having killed the tiger with his dagger Khumjī descended into a well in order to wash his dagger, and Prēmlō Nāwṭō pushed him into the well, so that Khumjī with his dagger fell into the water. Then Prēmlō Nāwṭō brought the king's daughter to the king of Ujjain. The king asked who had released her and Prēmlō answered that he had done it. Said the king, 'since you have released her, you alone shall marry her, and the marriage shall be in six months.'

MAGARI OR MAGARA-KĪ BOLĪ.

In the north, Nyār approaches Mārwārī and has to its east a dialect of that language which in some characteristics agrees with Bhīlī, viz., the so-called Magarī or Magarā-kī bōlī. Magarō means 'hill,' and Magarā-kī bōlī is therefore simply 'hill-language.' It is the dialect of the southern, hilly, part of Merwara, and is spoken by 44,500 people.

Mag'rī in most characteristics agrees with ordinary Mārwārī. There are, however, some indications which show that the base of the dialect is identical with the various forms of Bhili spoken to the south.

An h is often substituted for an s; thus, hagolo, all; huraj, sun; doh, ten.

Rāṇī, Nōrī, etc.

The inflexion of nouns and pronouns is essentially the same as in Mārwārī. The suffix of the case of the agent is, however, \tilde{e} or $n\tilde{e}$, as in Mālvī and Gujarātī Bhīlī. Thus, $bh\tilde{o}ly\tilde{e}$, by the son; $b\tilde{a}$ - $n\tilde{e}$, by the father. This suffix is sometimes added to the adjective, and not to the qualified noun. Thus, $v\tilde{i}$ - $k\tilde{e}$ $b\tilde{a}$, by his father; $th\tilde{a}$ -rai $b\tilde{a}$, by thy father.

The suffixes of the dative are \tilde{e} , and $n\tilde{e}$ or nai. Thus, $b\tilde{a}y\tilde{\tilde{e}}$ and $b\tilde{a}$ - $n\tilde{e}$, to the father; ēk-nai, to some one.

The suffix of the ablative is $h\tilde{u}$; thus, $b\tilde{a}$ - $h\tilde{u}$, from a father.

The usual suffix of the genitive is $k\bar{o}$; thus, $b\bar{a}$ - $k\bar{o}$, of the father. In the case of pronouns we also find the suffixes $r\bar{o}$ and $n\bar{o}$; thus, $\bar{a}p^{o}r\bar{o}$, his own; $mh\bar{a}n\bar{o}$ and $mh\bar{a}r\bar{o}$, my; $th\bar{a}n\bar{o}$ and $th\bar{a}r\bar{o}$, thy. When the genitive qualifies a noun in the dative case it sometimes ends in \bar{a} and sometimes in \bar{e} or ai. Thus, $g\bar{a}w$ - $k\bar{a}$ $P\bar{a}t\bar{e}l\bar{e}$, to the Pațel of the village; $v\bar{i}$ - $k\bar{e}$ galai, to his neck; $mhar\bar{a}$ $b\bar{a}$ -kai $jan\bar{a}\bar{e}$, to my father's servants.

The suffix of the locative is $m\tilde{e}$, $m\tilde{a}$ or $m\tilde{a}y$. The following are the personal pronouns:—

			I			We *		Thou		You		He			They
Nominative			mhű		-	mh g			th ii			thē			ū.			ชฮ์.
Agent .		4	mhë		*	mhã			the	*		thã			ยเ			wā.
Genitive .		٠		mhi	īņō,	mhāro			thāṇō, thārō					unkö			und-kō.

Other pronouns are kun, who? $k\bar{a}y$, what? $jak\bar{o}$, who; $j\tilde{i}$, by whom; $j\tilde{a}\tilde{e}$, whom. The conjugation of verbs agrees with Mārwāṇi. Thus, $mh\tilde{u}$ $h\bar{o}$, I was; $mh\tilde{u}$ $j\bar{a}\tilde{u}$ - $l\bar{a}$, I shall go.

Note finally the frequency with which the suffix do occurs. Thus, dyādā, days; jōgōḍō, worthy; muōḍō, dead; gamyōḍō, lost.

In most respects, however, Magari closely agrees with Marwari, as will be seen from the specimen which follows.

The Bhīlī dialect of Ratlam, in many characteristics differs from the connected forms of speech to the west and approaches the neighbouring Mālvī.

The palatals are sometimes retained, and sometimes also changed to s-sounds. Thus, $ch\bar{a}k^ar\tilde{a}$ - $n\bar{e}$, to the servants; $chh\bar{o}r\bar{o}$ and $s\bar{o}r\bar{o}$, a son. Similarly, we find both s and h corresponding to Gujarātī s; thus, $sag^*l\bar{o}$, all; das, ten; $ham^oj\bar{a}n^ow\bar{a}$ $l\bar{a}g\bar{o}$, he began to entreat; $h\bar{o}$, hundred, etc.

The cerebral d between vowels is pronounced as an r; thus, $gh\bar{o}r\bar{o}$, Gujarātī $gh\bar{o}d\bar{o}$, a horse.

The cerebral l has disappeared; thus, $sag^{a}l\bar{o}$, Gujarātī $sag^{a}l\bar{o}$, all; $k\bar{a}l$, Gujarātī $k\bar{a}l$, famine, etc.

With regard to the inflexion of nouns it should be noted that the neuter gender is on the point of disappearing. Thus, we find $h\bar{o}n\bar{o}$ instead of $h\bar{o}n\tilde{u}$, gold; $at^al\bar{a}$ warsa, so many years, etc. In the latter instance the adjective is put in the masculine and the noun in the neuter plural. Similarly we find $j\bar{e}$ $m\bar{a}r\bar{o}$ (masc.) $h\bar{e}$ $t\bar{e}$ $t\bar{a}r\tilde{u}$ (neut.) $h\bar{e}$, what mine is that is thine.

The plural of strong feminine bases ends in $y\tilde{a}$ as in Rajasthāni; thus, $s\tilde{o}ry\tilde{a}$, daughters.

The ablative suffixes are thi and \hat{u} ; thus, $b\bar{a}p$ -thi, from a father; $sab\bar{a}$ - \hat{u} $uch\bar{o}$, all-from high, highest.

The usual suffix of the genitive is no. Occasionally, however, the Malvi and Marwari suffix ro is used instead; thus, wani des-ra rewawara-kane, to a citizen of that country.

The personal pronoun of the first person singular is $h\tilde{u}$ and $m\tilde{u}$ as in Mālvī. 'We' is $ham\bar{o}$, and 'you' $tam\bar{o}$ or $tam\bar{e}$. 'He' is \bar{u} or wu, genitive \bar{u} - $n\bar{o}$, $un\bar{i}$ - $n\bar{o}$ or $wan\bar{i}$ - $n\bar{o}$; plural $v\bar{i}$ and $v\bar{i}$ - $h\bar{e}l\bar{a}$. The relative pronoun is $j\bar{o}$ and $j\bar{e}$, case of the agent $j\bar{e}n\bar{e}$. 'Who?' is $k\bar{u}n$, genitive $k\bar{i}$ - $n\bar{o}$, oblique $kan\bar{i}$.

The present tense of the verb substantive is-

Singular, 1. $h\tilde{u}$, \tilde{u} , $h\tilde{e}$. Plural, 1. hai, $h\tilde{e}$, $h\tilde{a}$.

2. $h\tilde{e}$, hai.

2. $h\tilde{o}$, hai, $h\tilde{e}$.

3. $h\tilde{e}$, hai.

3. $h\tilde{e}$, hai.

Instead of he we also find chhe.

The present and past tenses of finite verbs are formed as in other connected dialects. Thus, hũ mārữ-hữ, I strike; tamô jāwô-hô, you go; unī-ē māryô, he struck. Note ũ lāgô, he began,

The present participle is used as a present definite and an imperfect. Thus, $kh\bar{a}t\bar{a}$, (they) were eating; $t\tilde{u}$ ma- $i\bar{e}$ -kanē sadā $r\bar{e}t\bar{o}$, thou art always living near me.

The future is formed as in Malvi. Thus, hũ mārữ jā, I shall strike. The conjunctive present is sometimes used instead; thus, kahũ, I will say.

The verbal noun ends in no or wo; thus, jano, to go; alwo, to give.

The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows will be sufficient to show the character of this dialect as being a link between the western Bhīlī and Rājasthānī or, more especially, Mālvī.

WĀG^DĪ.

Wāgadī is the dialect of a Bhīl tribe which is found in Rajputana and the adjoining districts. In the Mewar State we find them in the hilly tracts in the south-west. They are also found in the adjoining parts of Gwalior, Partabgarh, Banswara, and Dungarpur, and in the north-eastern corner of Mahikantha. A few speakers of Wāgadī have also been returned from Rewakantha. The following are the revised figures:—

Mewar State								280,000
Banswara State								74,900
Dungarpur State	222							98,000
Partabgarh State	Mi.	1						53,000
Gwalior Agency		100	-					2,000
Mahikantha								17,400
Rewakantha .			9.5					75
Rewasanua .
					18	To	TAL	525,375

Of the 53,000 speakers reported from Partabgarh, 47,000 are stated to use a mixed form of speech, called Mēwārī-Wāgadī. No specimens are, however, forthcoming, and it has been found convenient to include the whole total under Wāgadī. The language of almost the whole of Partabgarh is Bhīlī.

Specimens have only been received from Mahikantha. They exhibit a dialect which in most particulars agrees with Mālvī, in the inflexion of nouns and pronouns, the verb substantive, and the various tenses of the finite verb. Compare forms such as $m\bar{a}nakh-k\bar{e}$, to a man; $b\bar{a}p-na$, to the father; $b\bar{a}p-k\bar{o}$, of the father; $m\tilde{u}$, I; $th\bar{o}$, he was; $mar\tilde{u}-h\tilde{u}$, I am dying; $j\bar{a}\tilde{u}-g\bar{a}$, I shall go. The past tense of the verb substantive is sometimes formed as in Mālvī, singular $th\bar{o}$, plural $th\bar{a}$, and sometimes as in Mārwārī, singular $h\bar{o}$, plural $h\bar{a}$.

It is not, however, necessary to go into further details. The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows will be sufficient to show how closely Wagadi agrees with Malvi.

The dialect spoken by the Bhīls in the Dhar State of the Bhopawar Agency has been so much influenced by the neighbouring Mālvī that it might just as well be considered as a dialect of that form of speech. It will, however, be more convenient to deal with it in connexion with the other Bhīl dialects with which it agrees in some characteristic features.

Pronunciation.—Final a (or \bar{a}) and \bar{e} are frequently interchanged, as is also the case in Khāndēśī and other connected dialects. Thus, ha and $h\bar{e}$, is; $kar\bar{i}$ -na and $kar\bar{i}$ - $n\bar{e}$, having done; $y\bar{a}$ and $y\bar{e}$, this.

 \bar{E} and \bar{o} after long vowels are usually written y and w respectively; thus, $j\bar{a}y$ for $j\bar{a}\bar{e}$, he may go; $j\bar{a}w$ for $j\bar{a}\bar{o}$, go ye.

Wa is sometimes written for wo; thus, wa and wo, he.

The palatals seem to be pronounced as in the western Bhīl dialects, that is to say, as s, z, respectively, with or without aspiration. This must be inferred from spellings such as par-dēch-mā, in a foreign country; chhīr kār, government, etc. Compare also dim wāṭī hē, a drum is beaten, where wāṭī is the past participle passive of wāj nō, to beat. The corresponding verb in western Bhīl dialects is wāj wũ, pronounced wāz wũ.

The soft palatal is, in western Bhīl dialects, often confounded with the corresponding hard sound and pronounced as an s. The same tendency seems to prevail in Dhar where the emphatic particle j often takes the form ch. It is, however, also possible that ch is the Marāthī form of the word, which also occurs in Khāndēśī.

The hard aspirated palatal has become h in hede, on the border; compare Gujarātī chhēdo, border.

The same pronunciation of ch seems to occur in $par-d\bar{e}ch$, a foreign country, where it is written for an s. This latter sound has regularly developed into an h. Thus, $h\bar{o}n\bar{o}$, gold; bah, sit. It is often, however, preserved in writing; thus, das, ten; $b\bar{s}s$, twenty. Considering the mixed character of the dialect it is very probable that s is often also preserved in pronunciation. Thus a list of words which has not been reproduced contains both $h\bar{o}n\bar{o}$ and $s\bar{o}n\bar{o}$, gold.

There is a strong tendency to cerebralize dental sounds. Thus we find <code>dhaw*lo</code>, white; <code>hūd</code>, consciousness; <code>hutā</code>, slept; <code>vinā</code> and <code>vinā</code>, the oblique form of <code>wo</code>, he.

Compare Ahiri.

B is used as in eastern dialects where Gujarātī has v or w, thus, $b\bar{\imath}s$, twenty; $b\bar{\imath}d$, hair. There is no marked difference between aspirated and unaspirated letters. Compare $v\bar{a}$ and $vh\bar{a}$, there; $\bar{a}d\bar{o}$, half; ka-na $l\bar{a}gy\bar{o}$, he began to say; $nh\bar{a}k$ and $n\bar{a}kh$, throw; mha-ka and ma-ka, to me.

Nouns.—The neuter gender has almost entirely disappeared. The only trace of it which occurs in the materials available is the form $kad\tilde{u}$, it was said. It is usually replaced by the masculine; thus, $n\tilde{a}ch^an\tilde{o}$ huny \tilde{o} , dancing was heard.

Number.—The plural is formed as in western Bhīl dialects; thus, $gh\bar{o}d\bar{o}$, a horse; $gh\bar{o}d\bar{a}$, horses: $gh\bar{o}d\bar{a}$, a mare; $gh\bar{o}d\bar{a}$, mares. $G\bar{a}y$, a cow, adds \bar{a} in the plural as in Marāthī; thus, $g\bar{a}y\bar{a}$, cows. $Ab^od\bar{o}$, troubles, seems to be a Gujarātī form.

Case.—The oblique form is in most cases identical with the base. Strong masculine bases, which end in \tilde{o} or \tilde{a} , take \tilde{a} in the oblique form. In the plural there is an oblique form ending in $h\tilde{o}n$ (compare Mālvī $h\tilde{o}n$). Thus, ghar-ma, in the house; $gh\tilde{o}d\tilde{o}$, and $gh\tilde{o}d\tilde{a}$, a horse; $dhaw^{\circ}l\tilde{a}$ $gh\tilde{o}d\tilde{a}-k\tilde{o}$ $kh\tilde{o}g\tilde{a}r$, the saddle of the white horse; $n\tilde{o}kar-h\tilde{o}n-ka$, to the servants.

The usual case suffixes are,—case of the agent, $n\tilde{e}$ and na; dative, $k\tilde{e}$, ka, and $k\tilde{u}$; ablative, $h\tilde{i}$, $h\tilde{e}$, and $s\tilde{e}$; genitive, $k\tilde{o}$, fem. $k\tilde{i}$, oblique, $k\tilde{a}$; locative, ma and $m\tilde{e}$. Compare Mālvī. Occasionally we find forms such as $dh\tilde{o}r \cdot k\tilde{e}r$, of the cattle; ghar, at the house; $h\tilde{e}d\tilde{e}$, at the edge; $bh\tilde{u}k\tilde{o}$, with hunger, and so on.

Pronouns.—The personal pronouns are mainly the same as in Mālvī. Thus, $h\tilde{u}$ and $m\tilde{e}$, I; $m\tilde{e}$, $m\tilde{e}$ - $n\tilde{e}$, $mhay\tilde{e}$, $mah\tilde{i}$ and mai, by me; $mh\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$, my; but also $m\tilde{e}r\tilde{i}$, my. The plural of the personal pronouns is ham and $\tilde{a}pan$, we; $ham\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$, our: tam and tum, you; tamārō, your.

The demonstrative and relative pronouns have an oblique form ending in $n\bar{a}$ or na (or $n\bar{a}$, na, respectively). Thus, $w\bar{o}$ and $v\bar{i}$, that; $vin\bar{a}$ $jh\bar{a}d$ - $k\bar{a}$ $n\bar{i}ch\bar{e}$, under that tree: $y\bar{e}$ and $y\bar{a}$, this; ina $kar^as\bar{a}n$ -na, by that cultivator. The use of this form is not, however, fixed, and we also find forms such as $w\bar{a}$, and vi- $k\bar{i}$ $kar^as\bar{a}n$ - $k\bar{i}$ $lug\bar{a}\bar{i}$, the wife of that cultivator. Vi in vi- $k\bar{i}$ is the base used before case-suffixes. The plural of $w\bar{o}$ is $v\bar{i}$ or $v\bar{e}$, genitive vin- $k\bar{o}$; case of the agent vin-na and $vin\bar{a}$ -na. Similarly are inflected $y\bar{e}$, this; genitive i- $k\bar{o}$; oblique $in\bar{a}$: $j\bar{o}$, who; genitive ji- $k\bar{o}$; oblique $jan\bar{a}$. The base ta occurs in tina man_okyā ghar, to that man's house. The relative jō is also used as a demonstrative. Thus, jō hag^oļā mhārā-kana hē jō thārā-j hē, what all of-me-near is that thine-only is, whatever is mine, that is thine.

'Who?' is kūn, genitive ki-kō; 'what?' is kat and kya.

Verbs.—The verb substantive forms its present tense as in Mālvī and some western Bhīl dialects. Thus, singular, 1, $h\tilde{u}$ and $h\tilde{e}$; 2 and 3, $h\tilde{e}$; plural, 1, $h\tilde{a}$; 2, $h\tilde{o}$; 3, $h\tilde{e}$. The corresponding past tense is, singular, $th\tilde{o}$ or $hat\tilde{o}$ ($vhat\tilde{o}$); plural, $th\tilde{a}$ or $hat\tilde{a}$.

The old present is used as a contingent present, and it is inflected as in western Bhīl dialects and in Mālvī. Thus, $j\tilde{a}\tilde{u}$, I may go; $j\tilde{a}y$, thou mayst go; plural, 1, $j\tilde{a}w\tilde{a}$; 2, $j\tilde{a}w\tilde{o}$; 3, $j\tilde{a}\tilde{e}$. An ordinary present is formed by adding the verb substantive. Thus, $v\tilde{i}$ pada- $h\tilde{e}$, they fell.

The past tense is usually formed as in Mālvī; thus, $h\tilde{u}$ gayō, I went; tum gayā, you went; $bh\tilde{u}k$ $l\tilde{a}g\bar{\imath}$, hunger came. The suffix na, which is common in Khāndēśi occurs in forms such as rihānō, he lived; bharānō, he entered.

The irregular verbs mainly agree with Gujarātī and western Bhīl dialects. Thus, bahonō, to sit; past baṭhō; khānō, to eat, past khādō; kanō, to tell, past kahyō and kadō; lēṇō, to take, past lidō and liyō, and so on.

The future is formed as in Mālvī. Thus, tū dēgā, thou wilt give; milagā, it will be found; lēwogā, i.e., lēogā, you will take, etc.

The imperative agrees with Mālvī. Thus, $j\bar{a}$, go; $dai-d\bar{o}$, giving-give; $dy\bar{o}$, give; $l\bar{\imath}j\bar{o}$, you should take.

The verbal noun ends in no, na and wa; thus, ka-na, or ka-wa, lagyo, he began to sav.

The participles agree with Malvi. Thus, aw to, coming; rota kar na, bread should be prepared.

The conjunctive participle is usually formed as in Gujarātī and western Bhīl dialects. Thus, karīnē and karīna, having made; wāṭī, having divided. Besides we occasionally also find forms such as kar, having done; nhāk-kar, having thrown, etc.

The specimen which follows will show that the Bhil dialect of the Dhar State in most characteristics agrees with Mālvī, though it has still sufficient traces of a different origin.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A mendicant ascetic once set out to collect a seer of juari (a kind of grain). He met a peasant who asked him, 'holy father, whither are you going?' 'My son,' replied he, 'I am going to look for a seer of juari.' 'Then,' said the peasant, 'you may, perhaps, get five seers if you wander abroad, but if you will accept it from me I will give you a whole dhadi (ten seers).' 'My son,' said the ascetic, 'if that is what you will give, I will accept it; and in the meantime I will wait here.' So the peasant stayed on there the whole day driving his plough, and then both went to his house. When he got home the peasant foddered and watered his bullocks, and then, with a meaning look,1 said to his wife, 'the holy father is come. Make some good bread that we may feed him.' Then he left the ascetic (hungry where he was outside the door), and going in himself sat down to his evening meal. When he had finished his supper he turned in to bed, and with a wink to his wife said, 'go outside and have a talk with the holy father.' So she went outside to the ascetic and said, 'holy father, tell me a story.' 'Daughter of my mother' (a term of respect), said he, 'shall I tell you a long tale or shall it be a short one, for my belly is drying up with hunger? In the fields outside the village there is a three-legged deer. If your good man is anything of a swordsman, let him go out and kill it.'

Now, a thief used to steal sugarcane from a field of the headman of the village. The woman went to her husband and roused him saying, 'there's a three-legged deer going about in the fields outside the village. Get up and go and kill it.' The peasant said to the ascetic, 'holy father, where has the deer gone?' He answered, 'it is in the sugarcane field. If anyone kills it, he will get a reward from Government.' Now, that thief used to steal the headman's sugarcane every day, and on that day half-a-dozen men had hidden themselves in a corner of the field to catch him. When the peasant came they rushed out and caught him, the headman crying, 'this is the very thief, the eater of my sugar.'

Bye and bye, the peasant's wife began to ask the ascetic, 'holy father, when will my good man come back?'

Now, on that day a wizard was driving the devil out of a sick man, and when she asked the ascetic this question he replied, 'do you hear that drum being beaten in the village? They're dividing things there, and if you go you will get half the things they are giving.' So she went to where the wizard was driving out the devil, and hid behind the wall. Then began the wizard to address the invalid. 'Ask for your food and grain.' The woman cried out from behind the wall: 'O, but half of it is my share.' Then three or four men jumped up and seized her as witch, while the wife of the invalid cried out, 'this is the beldame that is eating my good man.' So they bound her and marched her off to the judge's court.

In the meantime the ascetic waited there, at the door of the peasant's house. As soon as the coast was clear, in he went, ate up all the bread he could find, and let all the cattle loose from their stalls. Then stick in hand and wallet under his arm, he marched off to the court. He sat down in a corner and asked what theft the peasant had committed. 'Brother,' said they, 'this fellow has every day been stealing the sugarcane of the headman.' Then the ascetic considered to himself and said, 'brothers, listen, and I will tell you the story of this peasant. I was on my way to a certain village, and this peasant saw me and asked me where I was going. I said, "to get a seer of juari." Said he, "if you go elsewhere you may get five seers or a little more, but if you will accept from me you will get ten or twenty seers of grain." So we worked at the plough the whole day, and at eventide went to his house. He gave grass and water to his bullocks, and said to his wife, "there is the holy father. Make good bread that we may feed him." Then, in he goes himself, has his bread and water (with nary a supfor me), spreads his bed and goes to sleep. All he does for me is to tell his wife to go and talk to me. He kept me hungry the whole day, so I sent him to the sugarcane field with a yarn about a three-legged deer to be found there. I told him that if he went and killed it he would get a reward from Government. I simply played this trick and sent him to the sugarcane field because he had kept me hungry. After a while his wife looked at me and asked when her husband would be back, so I sent her off to where the wizard was working his hocus-pocus, telling her that if the wizard should say "ask for your food or grain," she was to hide herself behind the wall and cry out "half of it is mine." By playing off these tricks upon them, I got them both into trouble. Now please let them go.' So the peasant and his wife trudged off to their home, while the ascetic took his way to another village.

² She mistook the meaning of the question. The wizard was a-king the devil what offering he wanted. She thought he was telling the sick man to take all there was for the imaginary distribution. When she claimed a half share, the friends of the sick man naturally took her for some one in league with the devil, and acted with the promptness native to such an occasion.

The Bhīl dialects described in the preceding pages connect the form which the language assumes in Mahikantha with Mārwārī in the north and Mālvī in the east. We shall now proceed to a group of dialects which may be properly classed as links connecting the dialect of Mahikantha with Nīmādī in the east and Standard Gujarātī in the west.

Bhīlī is, to a great extent, spoken all over Rewakantha. The principal dialect of the Sunth State is a form of that language. It is known under different names such as Anārya and Pahādī, and the number of speakers has been estimated at 43,500. A list of Standard Words and Phrases has been received from Rampur. It represents a dialect which is very closely related to that spoken in Mahikantha. It will be sufficient to draw attention to a few points in which it differs.

E may be substituted for ō in ghēr and ghōr, house.

With regard to the inflexion of nouns and pronouns we may note forms such as $s\tilde{o}r\tilde{i}y\tilde{e}$, daughters; $s\tilde{o}r\tilde{i}y\tilde{a}$ - $n\tilde{e}$, to daughters; $\tilde{a}d^{o}m\tilde{i}y\tilde{o}$, men; $am\tilde{o}$, we; $tam\tilde{o}$, you, etc.

The present tense of the verb substantive is, singular, 1, hû, 2 and 3, hē; plural, 1, hē; 2, hō; 3, hē. The past tense is hētō or yētō, plural hētā.

The present tense of finite verbs is similarly formed; thus, hũ māru-hũ, I strike; tu mārē-hē, thou strikest; amō mārīē hē, we strike, and so on. The future of the same verb is, singular mārēh, plural 1, mār hũ, 2, mār hō, 3, mār hē.

Bhīlī is the principal language of the eastern part of the district of the Panch Mahals, which consists of the talukas of Jalod and Dohad. Their dialect is sometimes, like other Bhīl dialects in Gujarat, called Kālī Parajī. It does not differ much from that spoken in Mahikantha. The following points may be noted.

 \vec{E} is often used when the Mahikantha dialect has $\tilde{\imath}$ or a; thus, \tilde{e} - $n\tilde{u}$, his; $t\tilde{e}$ - $n\tilde{e}$, by him; haver, Gujarātī savār, morning, etc.

The usual suffix of the ablative is $th\tilde{o}$, inflected like an adjective; thus, $h\tilde{u}$ $v\tilde{e}g^{a}l\tilde{e}$ - $th\tilde{o}$ $\tilde{a}i\tilde{o}$, I have come from far off.

The plural of feminine bases ending in i ends in $jy\tilde{e}$; thus, $gh\tilde{o}d-jy\tilde{e}$, mares.

The forms $am\bar{o}$, we; $tam\bar{o}$, you; and $t\bar{e}$, they; seem to be in regular use, no other forms occurring in the materials available.

The present tense of the verb substantive is se in all persons and numbers. The corresponding past tense is hētō, plural hētā.

With regard to the inflexion of finite verbs we may note forms such as hamō mārojyē, we strike; hamō jājyē-sē, we go. The past tense of jāwũ, to go, is gyō, plural gyā. The future of mārowũ, to strike is, singular 1, mārohē; 2, mārohē; 3, mārohē; plural 1, mārohũ; 2, mārohō; 3, mārohē. Note also the form ālē, I will give.

In most respects, however, the Bhīlī of Panch Mahals is the same as that spoken in Mahikantha. Thus, j is pronounced as a z in the same cases as in Mahikantha; h has the same two sounds, etc. There are, however, no instances of the substitution of the hard for the soft consonant; of the past tense ending in $jy\tilde{u}$, etc.

The short specimen which follows will be sufficient to give an idea of the character of the Bhīlī of Jalod. The dialect spoken in the other talukas of eastern Panch Mahals is stated to be almost identical.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Our cow had gone to graze in the morning, and the calf was left at the house. The cow licked it and thus showed its affection. (Said the mother), 'my dear, untie the calf. I will milk the cow so that the calf can suck.' 'O mother, don't take all the milk, leave a little for the calf.' 'Very well, dear.' 'Mother, I am very fond of cow's milk.' 'There, drink a little. To-night I will give you more with your supper.'

The Bhīlī of the Jhabua State is very closely related to the dialect of the Bhīls of the Panch Mahals. I shall only draw attention to a few points.

A final \tilde{u} is often lengthened to \tilde{u} ; thus, $h\tilde{u}$ and $h\tilde{u}$, I.

Though the palatals are pronounced as s and z respectively we sometimes find forms such as $ch\bar{a}l$ and $s\bar{a}l$, go; $chh\bar{e}t\bar{i}$ and $s\bar{e}t\bar{i}$, far. They can only be considered as attempts at a learned orthography.

The masculine gender is occasionally used instead of the neuter. Thus, $\bar{a}p^{a}d\bar{o}$ dhan, his property; hagolo, all.

Feminine i-bases form their plural in iyē; thus, sōrīyē, daughters; genitive sōrīyō-nō. Similarly bairē, women, from baiyar, a woman. The oblique plural sometimes ends in ũ instead of ỡ; thus, *yō ghōdō kēt*rā war*hũ-nō sē*, how old is this horse?

With regard to personal pronouns we may note the plural forms hamu, we, and tamű, you.

'He' is tyō and pēlō, plural pēlā and tī, genitive tīhū-nō. Note also the oblique form tinā in tinā dēh-mã, in that country; tin-ē, by him.

The relative pronoun is jo, who. Who? is kon, genitive ko-no, whose?

The present tense of the verb substantive is $s\tilde{e}$ in all persons and numbers. It is added to the conjunctive present in order to form the ordinary present of finite verbs. Thus, $h\tilde{u}$ $m\tilde{a}r\tilde{u}$ $s\tilde{e}$, I strike; $ham\tilde{u}$ $m\tilde{a}r\tilde{v}$ \tilde{e} $s\tilde{e}$, we strike.

The future of the verb mar wu, to strike, is formed as follows:-

Singular, 1 mari.

Plural, 1 marhu.

3 mār hē.

So also hũ kĩ, I shall say.

Note finally the curious form kar telo, he was doing. This l-suffix is common in Ali Rajpur. See p. 52.

The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows will show how closely the Bhīl dialect of Jhabua agrees with the form of the language current in the Panch Mahals.

The Bhil dialect spoken in the Ali Rajpur and the Barwani States of the Bhopawar Agency is a mixed form of speech, and in many characteristic features agrees with Rājasthānī, or, more especially, with Nīmādī. It is sometimes also called Bhilālī, or, in Barwani, Rāṭhavī Bhilālī. The Bhilālas are a mixed tribe, half Bhīl and half Rajput, and the Rāṭhavas are one of the minor sub-divisions among them. With regard to the dialect of the Rāṭhavas of Chhota Udaipur, see below, pp. 60 and ff.

The Nori dialect of Ali Rajpur, on the other hand, is quite different and will be separately dealt with, see pp. 105 and ff. below.

The specimens forwarded from Ali Rajpur and Barwani, and professing to be written some in Bhīlī and some in Bhilālī, exhibit the same form of speech, and they will, therefore, be dealt with together.

The broad pronunciation of a short a as \bar{o} or \tilde{a} is very marked. Thus, $gh\bar{o}r$, a house; $m\bar{o}r\tilde{u}$, I am dying; $k\bar{o}r\bar{i}n\bar{e}$, having done.

The palatals and s have the same sounds as in Western Hindi. Thus, chāl, go; chhōrī, a daughter; jō, who; sāt, seven.

V, w becomes b as in Rājasthānī where Gujarātī and the Western Bhīl dialects have v and w; thus, $b\bar{i}s$, twenty; baras, a year.

The cerebral l is sometimes changed to l and sometimes confounded with n; thus, $k\bar{a}l$ and $k\bar{a}l$, famine; $j\bar{o}l$ and $j\bar{o}n$, near.

With regard to the formation of words we may note the frequent use of the suffix $l\tilde{o}$; thus, $w\tilde{a}r\tilde{u}$ and $w\tilde{a}r^{o}l\tilde{u}$, good; $gh\tilde{o}d\tilde{o}$ and $gh\tilde{o}d^{o}l\tilde{o}$, horse; $gh\tilde{o}d\tilde{i}$ and $gh\tilde{o}d^{o}l\tilde{i}$, mare; $uch^{o}l\tilde{o}$, high; $hat\tilde{o}$ and $hat^{o}l\tilde{o}$, he was; $gay\tilde{a}$ and $gay\tilde{e}l\tilde{a}$, they went; $kh\tilde{a}t^{o}l\tilde{a}$, they were eating; $m\tilde{a}r^{o}t\tilde{o}$ and $m\tilde{a}r^{o}t\tilde{e}l\tilde{o}$, beating, etc.

This use of the suffix lo is of interest because it agrees with the use of the corresponding suffix illa in Māhārāshtrī Prākrit.

Nouns.—The neuter gender is very often replaced by the masculine, especially in Barwani. Thus, $s\tilde{o}n\tilde{u}$ (Ali Rajpur) and $s\tilde{o}n\tilde{o}$ (Barwani), gold; $kh\tilde{o}t\tilde{o}$ $k\tilde{a}m$, a bad deed; $t\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$ $n\tilde{a}m$, thy name.

The plural is formed as in other Bhīl dialects. Thus, $chhōr\bar{o}$, a son; $chhōr\bar{a}$, sons: $chhōr\bar{i}$, a daughter; $chhōr\bar{i}$ and $chhōr\bar{i}y\bar{a}$, daughters. In Barwani the plural of strong feminine bases ends in $n\bar{a}$ as in Nīmādī; thus, $gh\bar{o}d^*l\bar{i}-n\bar{a}$, mares. The suffix $n\bar{a}$ is also used in the oblique plural of masculine bases; thus, $\bar{a}d^*m\bar{i}-n\bar{a}-n\bar{o}$, of the men.

An s is often added to the base, especially in Ali Rajpur. Thus, bās, a father; bēţō and bēţōs, a son; bhāī and bhāis, a brother; bōh°nīs, a sister. Compare the similar pleonastic as in Jaipurī.

The oblique singular sometimes ends in \tilde{e} or $y\tilde{a}$; thus, $b\tilde{a}h\tilde{a}s\tilde{e}$ -n, of a father; $b\tilde{a}h\tilde{a}s\tilde{e}$ - $j\tilde{o}l$, to the father; $m\tilde{a}n^{o}sy\tilde{a}$ - $n\tilde{o}$, of a man.

The usual case suffixes are,—case of the agent \tilde{e} and $n\tilde{e}$; dative $n\tilde{e}$, $kh\tilde{e}$, ka and $k\tilde{a}j\tilde{e}$; ablative $s\tilde{e}$, $s\tilde{u}$, $th\tilde{i}$ and $kath\tilde{i}$; genitive n, $n\tilde{o}$, and $k\tilde{o}$; locative $m\tilde{a}$ and $m\tilde{o}$. Thus, $b\tilde{a}h\tilde{a}s\tilde{e}$ (Ali Rajpur) and $b\tilde{a}s$ - $n\tilde{e}$ (Barwani), by the father; $b\tilde{a}p$ - $k\tilde{a}j\tilde{e}$, to the father; $dah\tilde{a}d^*ky\tilde{a}$ - $n\tilde{e}$, to the servants; $m\tilde{e}$ - $kh\tilde{e}$, to me; sukh- $s\tilde{e}$, in happiness; sarag- $s\tilde{u}$, from heaven; $kuw\tilde{a}$ - $m\tilde{a}$ - $th\tilde{i}$, from in the well; $b\tilde{a}h\tilde{a}s\tilde{e}$ -n, of the father; $b\tilde{a}p$ - $k\tilde{o}$, of the father; $Ch\tilde{a}nd^{\circ}p\tilde{u}r$ - $n\tilde{o}$, of Chandpur; $gh\tilde{o}r$ - $m\tilde{a}$, in the house; $kh\tilde{e}t$ - $m\tilde{o}$ (Barwani), in the field.

Pronouns .- The following are the personal pronouns :-

mẽ and hữ, L tũ, thou põlō, he.

mẽ-khẽ, mi-sẽ, to me põlā-kājẽ, tẽ-khẽ, to him.

mārhō, mārō, my tārhō, tārō, thy põlān, tērhō, his.

(h) amũ, we tuhu, tamũ, you põlā, they.

(h) am-rō, our tuh°rō, tamārō, your põlān, their.

Demonstrative pronouns are $y\bar{o}$, this, genitive $\bar{e}rh\bar{o}$, oblique $in\bar{a}$; $w\bar{o}$, that, dative \bar{o} -kha, oblique $un\bar{a}$. A demonstrative base cha occurs in $ch\bar{o}$, that; $chah\tilde{a}$, there; $ch\bar{e}$, then, etc.

The relative pronoun is $j\bar{o}$ and $j\bar{e}$, which. 'Who?' is kun, genitive kunin; 'what?' is $k\bar{a}i$, etc.

Verbs .- The present tense of the verb substantive is formed as follows :-

Singular, 1. chhũ, chhaữ Plural, 1. chhẽ.
2. chhẽ 2. chhō, chhẽ.
3. chhẽ 3. chhẽ.

The past tense is hato, hat'lo or hot'lo, plural hata, etc.

The conjunctive present of finite verbs, which is often used as an ordinary present, is formed as in other Bhīl dialects. Thus, mē mārū, I strike; 2, mārē; 3, mārē; plural, 1, mārē; 2, mārō; 3, mārē.

The ordinary present and past tenses are regularly formed; thus, pōlā jāē-chhē, they go; tuē māryũ (or māryō), thou struckest.

The present participle, with the addition of the suffix $l\bar{o}$, is used as a present definite and an imperfect. Thus, $m\tilde{e}$ $m\bar{a}rat^{a}l\bar{o}$, I am striking, I strike; $kh\bar{a}t^{a}l\bar{a}$, they were eating.

The future of the verb kut no, to strike, is-

Singular, 1. $kut^{i}s$ Plural, 1. $kut^{o}s\tilde{u}$. 2. $kut^{o}s\bar{i}$ 2. $kut^{o}s\bar{i}$. 3. $kut^{o}s\bar{i}$ 3. $kut^{o}s\bar{i}$.

In Barwani the periphrastic forms me maruga, I shall strike, etc., are used besides, as is also the case in Nīmāḍī.

The verbal noun ends in nō, oblique nē (nyā, or na). Thus, mār nō to strike: chār nē, in order to graze; nach nyān nād, sound of dancing; jāna-nō man, intention to go. Occasionally we also find forms such as bhar wā, to fill (Barwani).

The conjunctive participle ends in $\bar{\imath}$ or $\bar{\imath}n\bar{e}$ ($\bar{\imath}na$); thus, $kh\bar{a}\bar{\imath}$, having eaten; $k\bar{o}r\bar{\imath}$ - $n\bar{e}$, having done; $uth\bar{\imath}na$, having risen. The final $\bar{\imath}$ is sometimes dropped. Thus, $m\bar{o}r$ $guil\bar{o}$, he had died.

The two specimens which follow have been received from Ali Rajpur as representing the so-called Bhili spoken in that State. The first is the beginning of the Parable and the second is the deposition of a witness. They have been prepared at different times and are quite independent of each other.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

My name is Kālu, and my father's name Nānkyō. By caste I am a Māwḍā Bhīl. I live in Punyawat, Pargana Chandarpur, and am a cultivator.

Question.—Thy sister Bhūrā, the wife of Rumāl, who lived in Nahalipol, has died. Write down what thou knowest about the circumstances of her death.

Answer.—About a month ago Dēbryō Wasūnyā, a Bhīl from Nahalipol, Pargana Bhabra, came to me one day in the evening and said, 'thy sister has been ill, and has now died, go and look to it.' In the morning of the following day I set out and went to Bhurā's house in Nahalipol and saw my sister's body. I then observed two marks of a stick on the right side of her belly. I then said to her husband Rumāl, 'my sister has died because thou hast beaten her. I will go to Bhabra and make a statement in the police station.' Thereupon my brother-in-law and Chēnyō Taḍvī of Nahalipol and other men entreated me and said, 'don't go to the station. We will settle the matter about the murder for you.' Therefore I did not go to the station. The village council settled the matter and ordered ten piece of cattle to be given on account of the murder. Bhurā's corpse was then instantly burned in Nahalipol, but even now the cattle has not been handed over to me.

The so-called Bhilali of Ali Rajpur is practically identical with the dialect illustrated in the preceding specimens. The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows will be sufficient to show this.

The Bhīl dialects spoken in Ali Rajpur and Barwani gradually merge into Nīmāḍī. We shall now turn to the dialects which form the link between the Bhīlī of Mahikantha and Standard Gujarātī.

The Bhīlī of the Baria State of the Rewakantha Agency is known under the names of Bhīlī and Rāthavī. We shall first take the so-called Bhīlī.

Our knowledge of that dialect is based on a list of Standard Words and Phrases which has not been reproduced.

'House' is always ghor, not ghar or gher.

The palatals are usually retained; thus, chhōrō, a son; chandarmā, moon. Ch is, however, also changed to s as in other Bhīl dialects of the neighbourhood; thus, pasāh, fifty.

The plural of feminine i-bases ends in io; thus, chhorio, daughters.

'We' is hamu; 'you' tamu; and 'they' tē, tēō and tēhō. 'Who?' is kun, genitive

The present tense of the verb substantive is 1, chhu, 2, chhē, 3, chhē; plural 1, chhiē, 2, chhō, 3, chhē. The past tense in hutō, plural hutā.

The future tense of kut*wũ, to strike, is 1, kutēś, 2, kutēś, 3, kut*śē; plural 1, kut*śu, 2, kut*śō, 3, kut*śē.

RĀŢH*VĪ.

The Rāṭh*was are a tribe living in the forests in the southern part of Baria and the northern part of Chhota Udepur in the Rewakantha Agency. They are said to be settlers from Rāṭh, a district in Ali Rajpur. Compare pp. 51 and ff., above. They do not settle for a long time in one place, but move from one tract to another.

Rāṭhavī has been returned as the dialect of 8,000 individuals in Rewakantha. It is almost pure Gujarātī, as will be seen from the beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows:—

Note only the Gujarātī form tam-nē, to them. Compare Chāraṇī têm-nũ, their.

CHĀRANĪ.

The Charans are a wandering tribe in the Bombay Presidency. Charani has been returned as a separate dialect only from the Panch Mahals and Thana.

In the Panch Mahals they wander about in Halol and Kalol and are said to have immigrated from Kathiawar.

In Thana they are found in Vada, Murbad, Karjat, Bhiwndi, Salsette and Panvel. They are said to have come from Malegaon in Nasik.

The estimated numbers of speakers are-

Panch Thana	Mahals	•	:	•	:	:		:	· in			. 100 . 1,100
										To	TAL	. 1,200

No specimens have been received from Thana. The Chāraṇī of the Panch Mahals is of the same kind as the various dialects spoken in the neighbourhood, and can most properly be styled a form of Gujarātī Bhīlī. We shall only note a few characteristic points. L and n are interchangeable. Thus, $ma-n\bar{e}$ and $m\bar{o}-l\bar{e}$, to me; $m\bar{o}-l\tilde{u}$, my; $t\bar{o}-l\tilde{u}$, thy. In such cases l is sometimes written; thus, $m\bar{o}-l\tilde{u}$ or $m\bar{o}-l\tilde{u}$, my.

With regard to pronouns we may note the forms $\bar{o}ly\bar{o}$, he; $\bar{o}ly\bar{a}$, they; $t\bar{e}m$ - $n\tilde{u}$, their. The present tense of finite verbs is formed by adding the verb substantive to the present participle, and not to the conjunctive present. Thus, $h\tilde{u}$ $m\bar{a}r^{a}t\bar{o}$ $chh\tilde{u}$, I strike.

In most respects, however, Chāraṇī closely agrees with Gujarātī Bhīlī as will be seen from the beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows.

AHĪRĪ OF CUTCH.

The Ahirs or Abhirs are a class of cowherds in Cutch, and are found in the north and east of Bhuj, in the east of Kanthi and the west of Wagad. According to their traditions they originally accompanied Krishna from Mathurā to Girnar in Kathiawar and thence came to Cutch. Their number has been estimated for the use of this Survey at 30,500.

Ahīrs are also found in Kathiawar and Khandesh, and, outside of the Bombay Presidency, in Central India, Rajputana, the United Provinces and the western part of Bengal.

The Ahīrs everywhere use a local form of the language of their neighbours. The same is also the case in Cutch where their dialect is sometimes also called Ayarī. Short specimens of it have been printed in the Gazetteer of the Bombay Presidency, Vol. v., p. 78⁵.

The Ahīrī of Cutch is, in most characteristics, a Gujarātī dialect. In some features, however, it agrees with Gujarātī Bhīlī, and it has been found convenient to deal with it in connection with those forms of speech. In doing so the Ahīrs of Cutch will be brought into relation to the Ahīrs of Khandesh, and it will not be necessary to separate them from the Chārans who look on them as their kindred.

The specimens printed below will be sufficient to give a good idea of the dialect, and it will only be necessary to draw attention to some points in which it differs from ordinary Gujarātī.

Gujarātī s is replaced by an h, which is pronounced as a strong aspirate, somewhat like the ch in German 'ach.' It has been distinguished from the ordinary h by $\underline{\ }$ under it. Thus, $\underline{h}\bar{a}t$, seven; $da\underline{h}$, ten; $bai\underline{h}$, sit. S and \underline{h} are sometimes interchangeable; thus, $t\bar{a}p^*\underline{h}\bar{o}$, you will warm yourself; $m\bar{a}r^*s\bar{o}$, you will strike; $s\bar{e}$ and $\underline{h}\bar{e}$, they are.

Chh is often interchangeable with, and probably also pronounced as, s; thus, chhē, sē, and hē, they are; karachhō, you will make; mārasō, you will strike. The writing of chh is probably due to the influence of Standard Gujarātī.

A dental d is commonly cerebralised. Thus, $d\tilde{i}$, day, $dak\tilde{a}r$, famine; $d\tilde{a}d\tilde{i}$, grand-mother.

Cerebral \dot{q} between vowels is pronounced \dot{r} ; thus, $gh\bar{o}r\bar{o}$, a horse. It has been dropped in $py\bar{o}$, he fell, here agreeing with Kachhī, Panjābī, and Sindhī.

Nouns.—The neuter gender has almost disappeared; thus, $chh\tilde{o}k^{o}r\tilde{o}$, a child; $d\tilde{\iota}k^{o}r\tilde{e}$ bhany \tilde{o} , it was said by the son. Forms such as $h\tilde{o}n\tilde{u}$, gold, etc., are probably due to the influence of Standard Gujarātī.

The plural is formed as in Gujarātī, usually, however, without the suffix \tilde{o} ; thus, $gh\tilde{o}_{r}\tilde{a}$, horses. Note the plural of strong feminine bases which ends in $i\tilde{u}$; thus, $gh\tilde{o}_{r}i\tilde{u}$, mares.

The case-suffixes are the same as in Gujarātī. In the dative, however, $n\tilde{e}$ is seldom used and commonly replaced by $h\tilde{e}$, and in the ablative the suffix is $th\bar{o}$, which is inflected as an adjective. Thus, $b\bar{a}p$ - $h\tilde{e}$, to a father; $tam\tilde{e}$ $\bar{a}w^{a}t\bar{a}$ $ky\tilde{a}$ - $th\bar{a}$ $s\bar{o}$, where do you come from? Chaparērī- $th\bar{o}$ $\bar{a}w^{a}t\bar{o}$ $h\tilde{a}$, I come from Chaprērī. Note also the oblique plural of masculine bases which ends in \bar{e} and corresponds to Khāndēśī $\bar{e}s$; thus, $b\bar{a}p\bar{e}$ - $p\bar{a}h\bar{e}$ - $th\bar{o}$, from the fathers.

With regard to pronouns we may note the form $m\tilde{a}r\tilde{e}$, to me (compare $m\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$, my), $k\tilde{u}n$, who? $k\tilde{e}-n\tilde{u}$, whose; $k\tilde{a}n\tilde{u}$, what?

Verbs.—The present tense of the verb substantive is,- Singular, 1. chhã.

2. chhō.

3. chhē.

Plural, 1. chhaiể.

2. chhō.

3. chhē.

S and h are often substituted for chh. See above. The past tense is $h\tilde{u}t\tilde{o}$, plural $h\tilde{u}t\tilde{a}$.

The present tense of finite verbs is formed by adding the verb substantive to the present participle and not to the conjunctive present. Thus, $h\widetilde{u}$ mar*to $chh\widetilde{a}$, I die.

The conjunctive present has the same terminations as the present tense of the verb substantive. Thus, $h\tilde{u}$ $m\tilde{e}l\tilde{a}$, I may put. Forms such as $h\tilde{u}$ $v\tilde{e}chh\tilde{u}$, I may sell, are Gujarātī.

The future of marowo, to strike, is,- Singular, 1. mārēs.

2. mārēs,

3. mār°sē.

Plural, 1. mār°sīč.

2. mār°sē.

3. mār°sē.

Instead of the characteristic s of this form we also find \underline{h} , and even chh; thus, $tumh\tilde{e}$ $t\tilde{a}p^*\underline{h}\tilde{o}$, you will warm yourself; $h\tilde{u}$ jichh, I shall go. The chh seems to be an attempt to write the Gujarātī form correctly, and the proper forms seem to be those the characteristic consonant of which is \underline{h} , just as in the case of the Gujarātī Bhīlī of Mahikantha.

The conjunctive participle ends in ū or ū-ne; thus, vechū, having divided; mārū-ne, having struck.

Of the two specimens which follow the first is the beginning of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second a dialogue between two Ahīrs.

 - B .- Four days' fever.
 - A.—How are the crops getting on?
- B.—There was not much rain this year, and so the crops are not good. How much have you paid for your bullocks?
 - A .- Four hundred and fifty koris.
 - B .- Will you sell them?
 - A .- Yes, if you pay me enough.
 - B .- I will pay you three hundred koris.
 - A .- Do you think that I will sell them for three hundred.
 - B .- I thought they were old and then the price was reasonable.
 - A .- When are you going to make the wedding of your daughter?
 - B.—When a year has past after the death of my grandmother.
 - A .- Stay in our house this night.
 - B.—Thanks, I must be in Dharang to-night.
 - A .- Then come to us some other day.
 - B.-Very well. Good-bye, I am off.
 - A .- My compliments to all in your house.

Most of the remaining Bhīl dialects may be described as connecting the Bhīlī of Mahikantha and neighbourhood with Marāṭhī and Khāndēśī. We have already followed the line of Bhīl dialects from Mahikantha down into the northern portion of Rewakantha. In Chhota Udepur and Rajpipla we find dialects which already show traces of Marāṭhī influence, and that influence increases as we go southwards. The Bhīl dialects of Thana have, to a great extent, now become forms of Marāṭhī.

BAREL.

The Bārēls are one of the Bhīl clans which inhabit the wild hilly tracts in Chhota Udepur in the Rewakantha Agency. The number of speakers has been estimated at 1,000.

The Bārēl dialect is of the same kind as other Bhīl dialects of the neighbourhood. It is, in all essentials, a form of Gujarātī. The Bārēls frequently come in contact with the Bhīls of Ali Rajpur and Rajpipla, and there is a slight tinge of the neighbouring Khāndēśī in their speech.

The two specimens which follow will show the general character of the dialect. The first is the beginning of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second is a short dialogue between a mother and her child.

The h which often closes the words in the specimens does not seem to be pronounced. Compare $b\bar{a}h-n\bar{e}$ and $b\bar{a}h-n\bar{e}h$, to the father, etc.

Final \tilde{o} and u are often interchanged. Thus, $g\tilde{o}y\tilde{o}$ and $g\tilde{o}yu$, he went.

There is a marked tendency towards nasalization. Compare $at\tilde{u}$, I was; $g\tilde{o}y\tilde{u}$, he went, etc.

Note also the dropping of r in words such as $m \delta y^* l \delta$, dead; $k \delta h$, at the house. The same tendency is noticeable in many neighbouring dialects and also in the languages to the North-West (Sindhī, Lahndā, and Piśācha), all of which belong to the Outer Band of Indo-Aryan Languages.

With regard to the inflexion of nouns and pronouns it should be noted that the old terminations of the genitive and dative, $h\bar{o}$ and $h\bar{e}$, have survived alongside the post-positions $n\bar{o}$ and $n\bar{e}$. Thus, $b\bar{a}h$ - $n\bar{o}$, of a father; $gh\bar{o}d\bar{a}h\bar{o}$, of a horse; $m\bar{u}$ - $n\bar{e}$ and $m\bar{o}h\bar{e}$, to me. Similarly also $m\bar{o}h$ - $r\bar{o}$ and $m\bar{a}h\bar{o}$, my; $t\bar{e}h$ - $r\bar{o}$ and $\bar{a}h\bar{o}$, his. Note also the pronoun $chy\tilde{u}$, he.

The verb substantive is usually formed as in Gujarātī,— Singular, 1. chhũ. Plural, 1. chhiê.

2. chhē. 2. chhō.

3. chhē. 3. chhē.

In the plural, however, the form chhatāh may be used in all persons. Compare Khāndēśi śētas.

In the past tense we find $at\bar{a}$, $h\bar{o}t^*n\bar{a}$, and $hut^*l\bar{a}$, they were. The suffix $n\bar{a}$ or $l\bar{a}$ is often added in similar forms, apparently without adding anything to the meaning. Compare $kh\bar{a}t^*l\bar{a}$, eating; $din^*l\tilde{u}$ and $din\tilde{u}$, given; $\bar{a}p\bar{i}n\tilde{u}$, $\bar{a}p^*l\tilde{u}$, and $\bar{a}p^*y\tilde{u}$, given, etc.

For further details the specimens which follow should be consulted.

PĀWARĪ.

The Pawras are a tribe of cultivators in Khandesh. Their home is the Akrani Parganā round Dhadgaon. They are also found below the Ghats in Taloda and Shahada, and, in small numbers, north of the Narbada and in Kathi. According to information forwarded for the use of this Survey, the number of speakers of Pāw*rī is 25,000. AUTHORITIES-

Gazetteer of the Bombay Presidency, Vol. xii.—Bombay, 1880. Short note on the dialect on p. 95.

VARLEY, F. J., -A Short Hand-Book of the Marchi and Pavra Dialects. Bombay, 1902.

The Pāwarī dialect is a form of Gujarātī Bhīlī. The Pāwaras deny that they are Bhīls and claim to be the descendants of the Rajput Pawars or Pramaras of Dhar, and to belong to the Jagdeo and Udaisingh septs of that clan. They say that they have been settled in Khandesh for seven generations. In their manners, customs, and general appearance they differ from the other tribes who inhabit the Satpuras. A tradition current in Taloda says that they were driven from Pali or Palagad, a village on the right bank of the Narbada in the Udepur State, whence they migrated southwards and settled on the tableland of the Satpura, now called Akrani Parganā. Their northern origin is confirmed by their language, which has several points of connexion with the Bārēl dialect of Udepur, and with the Bhil dialects of Rajpipla, Ali Rajpur, and Barwani.

I am able to give two excellent specimens of this dialect, which have been prepared by Mr. G. B. Brahme, First Assistant, Deputy Educational Inspector, Khandesh, and have been checked and supplied with notes by Mr. A. H. A. Simcox, of the Indian Civil Service, to whom I am indebted for much valuable assistance in regard to the Bhīl dialects of Khandesh and Nasik.

The general character of the dialect is well illustrated by the specimens, and I shall here point out only a few characteristic points. The first specimen is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second a conversation between two villagers.

Pronunciation.—The short α is often pronounced as an \tilde{o} ; thus, $\tilde{o}t\tilde{o}$, he was; doh, ten; nāchņēn hōmballō, dancing was heard.

O is often interchangeable with u; thus, $ch\bar{o}$ and chu, he; $g\bar{o}d\bar{o}$ and $gud\bar{o}$, a horse; chhurō, a son. Though the \bar{o} is invariably marked as long in the specimen, it is probably often short. Thus, Mr. Varley gives chhoro, a son.

Vowels are often nasalized, as in tu or $t\tilde{u}$, thou; $\tilde{a}v\tilde{e}$ or $\tilde{a}v\tilde{e}$, I shall come.

An initial h is often dropped; thus, āt or āth, a hand; ōtō, he was; ōran (=haran), a deer. So also aspiration is lost in words like gōdō, a horse; gōr, a house; bāi, a brother.

Chh is probably pronounced as an s; thus, chhurō, pronounced surō, a son. Similarly j seems to be pronounced as a soft z. Mr. Varley gives $z\bar{a}$, go, etc.

S has been replaced by h; thus, dui vihī-n doh, fifty; hōnō, gold.

Note the frequent use of the suffix lo, which is also found in Ali Rajpur and Chhota Udepur. Thus, moțlo and moțo, great; hājlo and hājo, good; maratlo, I die; gōyō and gōylō, he went, etc. This suffix does not seem to affect the meaning.

Nouns .- There are only two genders, the masculine and the feminine, the former being also used as a neuter.

The plurals of strong masculine and feminine bases end in a and i, respectively. Thus, chhōrō, a son; chhōrā, sons; chhōrī, a daughter, daughters. Sometimes we meet Marāthī forms, such as hāwjē and hāwjā, swine; warhē, years.

The oblique form is the same as in Gujarati Bhili. Sometimes it ends in ā or hā, (as in Ali Rajpur) as in chhurā, (to) the son; bāhā-n, of the father; and sometimes in ō, as in āthō-may, on the hand; dewō-n, of God.

The subject of a verb is put in the case of the agent, when the predicate is the past tense of a transitive verb. Thus, bāhē pōtān māl wāṭī dēnlō, the father divided (and) gave his own property. The usual case suffixes are,- Agent and instrumental, ē. Dative, hā, n, or no suffix. Ablative dokh (not dekh as elsewhere). Genitive, n. Locative, mē, mā, mãy, mã, ē.

Thus, bāhē, by the father (the property was divided); bukē, (I die) by hunger; bāhā-hā, to the father; māṭi-n, to a man; chhurā, (he said) to the son; bāhā-pā-dōkh, from near a father; tinā-mã-dōkh, from among them; bāhā-n, of a father; mālō-n, of the property; gor-me, gor-may, in the house; dehe, in the country.

Adjectives follow the Rajasthani and Gujarati system of being put into the locative or agent case, when agreeing with a noun in that case. Thus, gaye ine warhe, in this past year; jine chhure, by the son who.

Numerals.-There are no numerals beyond twenty. 'Fifty' is 'two twenties and ten,' dui vihi-n doh.

Pronouns.—'I' 'by me' is $m\bar{i}$ (Mr. Varley's $\tilde{a}y$, etc., is not borne out by other authorities); mêhê, me; mārō, my; āmu, we; āmuhn, to us; āmrō, our.

Tu, tũ, thou; tẽ hẽ, thee; tu, tuế, by thee; tarô, thy; tumu, you; tumuhẽ, to you;

tumrō, your.

The demonstrative pronouns are chu, chō, and pōlō, he, that; fem. chī; obl. sing. tinhah or tinā; tinā-n, to him; tinē, by him; tinā-n and tērō, his; chā, tinu, they. Compare chō in Bārēl and the Bhīlī of Ali Rajpur.

Yo or yū, this; obl. sing. inā; yā, these. The feminine singular does not occur in the specimens.

Apnē, potā-n, or jivo-n, own. Kun, who? kay, what?

Verbs.—The present tense of the verb substantive is chhē, plural also chhētā. Compare Bārēl chhatā and Khāndēśī śētas. The past tense is ōtō, plural, ōtā

Finite Verb .- Only a few forms of the old present occur. These are, ape, I shall give; āvē, I shall come; āvē, he may come; ka-dokh āpu, where-from shall I-give? pode, it falls; mile, it is got. The usual form of the present tense is made by adding lo to the present participle; thus, jāt-lo, goes; plur. jāt-la. Compare Bārēl khāt'la, eating. Bhīlī of Ali Rajpur and Barwani māratolō, I strike.1

The past tense is formed by adding yō or lō; thus, gōyō or gōylō, he went; pōdyō or podlo, he fell.

¹ Lo or la forms a future in Rajasthani and Naipali, and a present or future in the Bhojpuri dialect of Bihari.

The future is formed by adding $h\bar{e}$ or i in the singular, and $h\tilde{u}$ or \tilde{u} and $h\bar{o}t$ in the plural. Thus, $b\bar{o}h\bar{a}t$ -i, I, thou, or he will strike; $\bar{a}p\bar{e}h\bar{e}$, I shall give; $l\bar{a}gh\bar{e}$, thou wilt begin; $j\bar{a}h\bar{e}$, he will go; $b\bar{o}h\bar{a}t$ - \tilde{u} , we shall strike, you will strike; $jih\tilde{u}$, we shall live; kut- $h\bar{o}t$, they will strike; $\bar{o}h\bar{o}t$, they will become.

Another future ends in $n\tilde{e}$ or $n\tilde{e}$ and thus has the same form as the infinitive; thus, $j\tilde{a}n\tilde{e}$ or $j\tilde{a}n\tilde{\tilde{e}}$, I shall go, I am off; $\tilde{a}pn\tilde{e}$, if I give.

The plural of the imperative ends in ā or ō; thus, bōhāṭā, strike; nākhō, put.

The verbal noun ends in në and the conjunctive participle in i or in; thus, rākhnē-n, for keeping; āpi, having given; kōrin, having done.

Other forms will be easily recognized from the specimens which follow.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Mōtī.—Good morning, Pāṭīl, good morning. Come and sit down. What is your name?

Mungā.—Good morning, friend. Why, have you forgotten? I am the Pāṭīl Mungā of Junane.¹ We have met in Dhadgam.²

Moti.-Yes, now I remember. Are you well?

Mungā.—How should I be well? I had six sons and five daughters, and now only two sons are left.

Mötī.-What has become of the others?

Munga.—One son was killed by a snake; another went to bathe in the river and was drowned; the third died from cholera; the fourth was struck by lightning. One of the girls was killed by her husband; the second was eaten by a tiger; the third went mad and died; the fourth died of dysentery; and the fifth has run away.

Mōtī.—Alas. That is very bad. A curse on God's mother.3 Thou hast not done well, O God!—How great are your lands?

Mungā.—I should want two and forty pairs of bullocks⁴ to cultivate it. It is assessed at hundred rupees. But what is the use of cultivating it. I cannot get a living out of it.

Moti. - This year there will be good rain, and the crops will ripen well.

Mungā.—What is the use of a good rainy season? We had good rains last year, and then the rats came and ate the crops.

Moti.—Is every time of this sort? (i.e. this time it may be otherwise).

Mungā. - What guarantee have we? A curse on his mother! Men do not understand God's doings.

Mōtī.—You are right. But all care should be left to him who made us. When will you begin ploughing?

Mungā.—In two or three days.

Mōtī.—How many labourers will you employ, and how much will you pay them a day?

Mungā.—Twelve labourers will be required, and each will get two pice5 and a half.

Möti. - What will you sow this year?

Mungā.—I have sown Bādi, Bōṭṭi, Nāngali, Mōr, Hangari, Juvār, Bājrā, and Tili.6 But I shall not see much of them.

Moti.-Why not?

Mungā.—Brother, I have a bad neighbour, and when I see him, I have no luck. Once he set my house on fire. I have also four other enemies, on the four sides of my fields.

⁴ One pair of bullocks can cultivate about thirty acres of land.

The paisă in Khandesh is half an anna.

No explanation is given about these terms. A great many of the hill grains are little better than grasses. Local names for them vary every few miles.

Moti.-Who are they?

Mungā.—To the east my sister's husband; to the west my sister's son; to the north' my uncle; to the south' my wife's brother.

Mōtī.-Do your relatives always vex you?

Munga.—What is the use of saying it? If you give them something, well and good. If not, then they get angry. All the world is so.

Moti.-Will you lend me twenty-five rupees?

Munga.-How should I? I have not got them myself.

Moti.—I shall pay them back in the month Kelyo.3

Munga.-Well and good, but I cannot give you what I have not got.

Moti.-As you like it.-Who is this woman?

Mungā.-My daughter-in-law.

Moti.-Which ornaments is she wearing?

Mungā.—Ear-rings and nose-rings; a silver chain and her marriage-string round her neck; Battis and tin bracelets on her hand, and anklets on her feet.

Moti.—Is she with child, and how many months has she been so?

Mungā. - Dear no, her stomach is so in itself. You are fond of joking. All our women look so.

Moti.-Why so?

Mungā.—It is so here in our country. Our bodies are slim, but the stomach is like a kettle-drum.

Mōtī.-How many times do you eat during the day?

Mungā.—Three times, in the morning, at noon, and in the evening.

Möti.-What do you eat?

Mungā.—On work-days bread of Bājrī (holcus spicatus) and pulse of Udīd (phaseolus radiatus). On holidays we eat ghee and cock's flesh and drink liquor.

Mötī.—Are the girls brought to bed the first time in the house of their father-inlaw or in that of their father?

Munga.-There is no fixed rule.

Moti.—How many days must a woman stay at home after a child-bed, and how long does the child suck?

Mungā.—The mother stays in the house five days, and the child goes on sucking till another child is born. But it is getting late, and I must be off. God bless you.

Mōtī,-Do come again to-morrow. God speed you.

Munga.-I cannot come to-morrow, but I shall come the day after. Good-bye.

³ The last month of the Pawra year corresponding to Bhadrapada.

Bhīlī is also the principal language of the southern part of Chhota Udepur and of Rajpipla.

No specimen has been received from the former state. The Bhīlī spoken there is probably identical with Barēl. The Rajpipla dialect is connected with Barēl in the north, and with the various forms the language assumes in Khandesh in the east. Towards the south it is connected with the various dialects of the Nawsari division of the Baroda State.

The palatals are retained, at least in writing. Thus, pach, five; chhēto, far; pachhal, after. Spelling such as khuchī, merry, however, point to the pronunciation of ch as s.

L is interchangeable with n; thus, $m\tilde{o}k^{o}ny\tilde{o}$, he was sent ; $\tilde{a}gan$, before ; $n\tilde{a}g\tilde{i}$, she began.

The cerebral l does not seem to exist in this dialect. Compare $k\bar{a}l$, famine. In $d\bar{o}y\bar{a}$, eye, however, it has become y as in Khānděšī.

R seems to have been dropped in words such as $k\tilde{o}in\tilde{e}$, Gujarāti $karin\tilde{e}$, having done; $p\tilde{o}y^{o}n\tilde{a}$, Gujarāti $bhar^{o}w\tilde{u}$, to fill; and probably also in $k\tilde{o}$, Gujarāti ghar, a house. The last two instances show that a hard consonant is often substituted for a soft aspirate, just as was the case in Mahikantha. Thus also $k\tilde{o}d\tilde{o}$, a horse, etc.

Nouns.—The inflexion of nouns is mainly the same as in Mahikantha. The oblique form is sometimes used alone, without any suffix, to denote various cases; thus, $b\bar{a}y^{a}ch\bar{a}$, by a father, to a father, of a father, and O father. The plural of strong masculine bases ends in \bar{a} and \bar{e} , as is also the case in Khāndēśī. Thus, $p\bar{o}y^{a}r\bar{a}$ and $p\bar{o}y^{a}r\bar{e}$, sons. The same form is also occasionally used for the neuter plural; thus, $bhund\bar{e}$, swine; $war^{a}h\bar{e}$, years. Compare the corresponding \hat{e} in Marāṭhī.

The plural of feminine i-bases ends in io; thus, kōdi, a mare; kōdio, mares.

An oblique plural is occasionally formed by adding $\tilde{a}h\tilde{a}$; thus, $ch\tilde{a}k^{a}r\tilde{a}h\tilde{a}$ - $m\tilde{a}$, among the servants.

The case suffixes seem to be the same as in Mahikantha. Thus, $p\bar{o}y^{\circ}r\bar{a}\bar{e}$, by the son; $majur\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{e}$, to the servants; $p\bar{o}y^{\circ}r\bar{i}\bar{o}$ - $th\bar{i}$, from the daughters; $mil^{\circ}kat$ - $n\bar{o}$ $bh\bar{a}g$, a share of the property; $d\bar{e}h$ - $m\tilde{a}$, in the country; $kh\bar{e}t\bar{a}$ - $m\tilde{e}$, in the fields. Note also the postposition $d\bar{e}kh\bar{e}$, from.

Pronouns.—The following are the personal pronouns:—

āi, I.	tũ, tu, thon.	tē, tō, tēō, he.
maië, āiē, by me.	tuē, by thee.	ltio, tiā, tiē, tiān(ē), by him.
mā, man, mā-nē, to me.		tēān(ē), to him.
mā, my.	tō, thy,	tīā, tīān, his.
amo, umu, āpah, we.	tumō, you.	tiō, they.
amī, by us.	tumi, by you.
amd, our.

Demonstrative and relative pronouns.— $t\bar{i}$, etc., that; $t\bar{e}\ d\bar{e}h$ - $m\tilde{a}$, in that country; \bar{a} and $\bar{a}i$, this; $\bar{i}\bar{a}n$, to this; $j\bar{e}$, which; $j\bar{i}\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{e}$, by whom.

The interrogative pronouns are $k\bar{o}$ - $d\bar{o}$, who? ku- $n\bar{o}$, whose? $k\bar{a}$ and $k\bar{a}\bar{i}$, what? $k\bar{o}d\bar{o}$ has an oblique form $kad\bar{a}$ in $kad\bar{a}$ - $b\bar{i}$, by any one.

Verbs.—The Verb substantive forms its present tense as follows :-

 Sing.
 1. chhũ, āhē.
 Plur.
 1. hễ, āhē.

 2. chhē, āhē.
 2. hē-rā, āhē.

 3. hē, āhē.
 3. hē-rā, āhē.

The final $r\bar{a}$ in the second and third persons plural seems to be an affirmative particle. Compare $\bar{a}w$ - $r\bar{a}$, come; $t\bar{u}$ $j\bar{a}h\bar{a}$ - $r\bar{a}$, thou goest; $\bar{a}i$ $kut\bar{e}$ - $r\bar{a}$, I shall strike, etc.

The past tense is hatō, ūtō, watō or hatā, etc., plural hatā, etc., or hatē, etc.

The present tense of finite verbs is formed as in Mahikantha. Thus, āi kuṭũ, I strike; āi marũ hũ, I die, I am dying. In the plural we also find forms such as amō thōk tā-hā, we strike, etc. Of the verb 'to go' we find jāhũ, (I) go, jāhē and jāhāy-rā, he goes; jātā-hā, (we, you or they) go.

The past tense is apparently regular, though the spelling is rather inconsistent. Thus, $gay\bar{o}$, $g\bar{o}y\bar{o}$, and $gu\bar{o}$, he went; $huy\bar{o}$ and $wuy\bar{o}$, he became; $\bar{a}p\bar{i}u$, it was given; $p\bar{a}p$ $k\bar{o}yu$, sin was made, etc.

The future seems to be formed as in other Bhīl dialects. Thus, $j\bar{a}h\bar{i}$, I will go; $k\bar{o}h\bar{i}$, I will say; $m\bar{a}r\tilde{u}h\tilde{u}$, we will strike; $m\bar{a}r^{o}h\bar{o}$, you will strike; $m\bar{a}r^{o}h\bar{e}$, they will strike. The future participle ending in $n\bar{a}r\bar{a}$ is often used instead. Thus, $m\bar{a}r^{o}n\bar{a}r\bar{a}$, we, you or they, will strike.

The imperative plural sometimes ends in \tilde{a} and sometimes in \tilde{o} ; thus, $\tilde{a}p\tilde{a}$, give; $\tilde{a}w\tilde{o}$, come. $Wuij\tilde{e}$, let us become, is the ordinary present conjunctive in the first person plural.

The verbal noun ends in wā and nā; thus, tīān ābodā pōdowā nāgī, to him distress to arise began; wāronā hāru, in order to tend.

The present participle ends in $t\bar{o}$ or in $n\bar{o}$; thus, $j\bar{\imath}w^{\circ}t\bar{o}$, living; $kut^{\circ}n\bar{o}$, striking; $kh\bar{a}t^{\circ}n\bar{e}$ $\bar{u}t\bar{e}$, they were eating. The suffix $n\bar{o}$ is sometimes also added to the past participle passive; thus, $muin\bar{o}$, dead; $guin\bar{o}$, gone. Compare the pluperfect participle ending in $l\bar{o}$ in Gujarātī. $\bar{A}l\bar{a}$, come, seems to be the Marāṭhī form.

The conjunctive participle ends in $\bar{\imath}$ or $\bar{\imath}$ - $n\bar{e}$; thus, $w\bar{a}t\bar{\imath}$, having divided; $k\bar{o}\bar{\imath}$ - $n\bar{e}$, having done.

The vocabulary is to a great extent peculiar. On the whole, however, the dialect is closely related to other Bhīl dialects of the neighbourhood, as will be seen from the specimen which follows.

NAIKADĪ.

The Naikas or Naikadas are one of the aboriginal tribes of the Bombay Presidency. Most of them are found in the wildest parts of the Panch Mahals and Rewakantha. They are considered to be inferior to the Bhīls in social position, and only partially lead a settled life. The rest of them wander about in Jambughoda, Chhota Udepur and other districts in the Rewakantha Agency, in the Nawsari Division of the Baroda State, and in the frontier tracts between Rewakantha and the Panch Mahals on one side and Khandesh and Malwa on the other. In the Panch Mahals they are principally found in the Halol Taluka. They are also found in the Surat District, in the eastern half of the Balsar Division, where they are sometimes confounded with the Dhōdias or Dhuṇdias. Thus, some of the specimens received from Surat profess to be written in the Naikī-Dhōdiā dialect. Compare Dhōdiā on pp. 124 and ff., below.

Naikadi has been returned as a separate dialect from Rewakantha, the Panch Mahals and Surat. The following are the revised figures:—

Danak Makala									To	TAL	12,100
Panch Mahals	Surat	7.1				-					3,300
	Panch	Mahals				. 4				100	8,300
Rewakantha	Rewak	cantha	1.61	*							500

Specimens have been received from the Lunawada State and from Jambughoda in Rewakantha, the Halol Taluka in the Panch Mahals, and from Surat. They show that Naikadi is no proper dialect but a form of speech which varies according to locality. In the Lunawada State it is almost pure Gujarātī. In the other districts it is a mixed form of speech, based on Gujarātī-Bhīlī with a tinge of Marāthī. The Marāthī element increases as we go southwards and is especially strong in Surat. The mixed character of the speech also appears in the fact that various forms are confounded, so that for instance the dative is used instead of the case of the agent, and so on. On the whole, however, Naikadī agrees with Gujarātī-Bhīlī and may be considered as one of the links which connects that form of speech with broken dialects of Thana such as Sāmavēdī, Phudagī, etc.

It will be sufficient to give a few details. The specimens received from the Lunawada State in the north of Rewakantha are written in a slightly disguised Gujarātī. We may only note the substitution of h for s in vih, twenty, etc.; of r for l in $k\bar{a}r$, famine; forms such as $jy\bar{o}$ for $gy\bar{o}$, he went, and so forth.

It will be sufficient to give the first lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in order to show how little the dialect here differs from ordinary Gujarātī.

The Naik das of Jambughoda speak almost the same dialect. There is, however, a certain admixture of Marāṭhī. Thus, the dative is formed by adding $l\bar{a}$ and $n\bar{e}$, the singular of strong neuter bases ends in \tilde{a} , etc. Compare $w\bar{a}chhad\bar{i}$ - $l\bar{a}$, for the calf; $t\bar{i}h$ - $n\bar{e}$, to-her; $\bar{a}khy\hat{a}$, it was said, etc.

The short specimen which follows contains a conversation between a village woman and her child, and will be sufficient as an illustration of the dialect.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

My cow one morning was going to graze while its calf stayed at home. The cow then stayed and licked it. So I said to my child, 'darling, loosen the calf, I will milk the cow so that the calf may suck.' My child said, 'mother, don't draw all the milk, but only a little, and leave the rest for the calf.' 'Very well, darling.' 'Mother, I am very fond of cow's milk.' 'Well, drink this drop. I will give you much milk for your supper in the evening.'

In the Panch Mahals Naik* $d\bar{i}$ is spoken in the Halol Taluka. The dialect is, to some extent, mixed with Marāṭhī, as was also the case in Jambughoda. The dative suffix $l\bar{a}$, which is used in addition to the Gujarātī suffix $n\bar{e}$, also has the form $n\bar{a}$; thus, $t\bar{\imath}$ - $n\bar{a}$, to him. It is clearly a borrowed suffix and occasionally also occurs in the case of the agent. Thus, putas- $l\bar{a}$ $\bar{a}khy\bar{a}$, the-son-by it-was-said. Note also the past tense in $l\bar{a}$ and $n\bar{a}$; thus, $pais\bar{a}$ $\bar{a}p^{\circ}l\bar{a}$, the money was given; $p\bar{a}p$ $kar^{\circ}n\bar{a}$ $\bar{a}chhi$, sin is done. L and n seem, on the whole, to be interchangeable.

The beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows will show the mixed character of the dialect and how this mixture has weakened the sense for grammatical correctness.

The Naikadī dialect of Surat is still more influenced by Marāthī than was the case with the language of the Naikadas of Rewakantha and the Panch Mahals. Thus, we not only find the dative suffix $l\bar{a}$ in forms such as $m\bar{a}$ - $l\bar{a}$, to me, but often also the Marāthī oblique form. Thus, $d\bar{e} \pm i \bar{a} + i \bar{a} +$

The form $m\bar{a}$ - $l\bar{a}$, my, corresponds to $m\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{o}$ in connected dialects, and shows the same change of n to l as we found in the Panch Mahals. In this connexion we may also note forms such as $l\bar{a}g\bar{i}n$, he began; $h\bar{o}ij\bar{i}n$, he became, etc. They correspond to forms ending in $\bar{e}l$ and $\bar{e}l\bar{o}$ in connected dialects.

It would, however, only be waste of time and paper to go into further details. The character of the dialect will appear from the beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows.

MĀWCHĪ.

The Māwchīs or Mauchis are a Bhīl tribe whose home is in the West Pimpalner and Baglan Talukas of the Nawapur Peta of the Khandesh District and the adjoining parts of the Dangs and Baroda. They are sometimes also called Gāvīts, and are mostly cultivators.

The Warlis of Khandesh are said to speak a form of Mawchi. Compare Vol. vii. pp. 141 and ff.

The estimated number of speakers of the Mawchi dialect is 30,000.

AUTHORITY-

VARLEY, F. J.,—A Short Hand-Book of the Marchi and Parra Dialects. Bombay Government Central Press, 1902.

Māwchī is a dialect of Gujarātī Bhīlī of the same kind as Chōdhrī, Dhōdiā, Gāmtī, Rānī Bhil, etc.

The short a has the same broad pronunciation as in other Bhil dialects. Thus, $b\bar{o}h\bar{i}$, a sister; $b\bar{o}h$, sit; $k\bar{o}i$, having done, etc.

An h between vowels is usually very faintly sounded and is often dropped. In such cases the vowels separated by the h may be contracted. Thus, $t \, \bar{o} h \, \bar{o}$, $t \, \bar{o} \bar{o}$, and $t \, \bar{o}$, thy; $t \, y \bar{a} h \, \bar{a}$, $t \, y \, \bar{a} \bar{a}$, and $t \, y \, \bar{a}$, his; $\bar{e} h \, \tilde{i}$, $a \, h \, \tilde{i}$, and \tilde{e} , I.

Vowels are very commonly nasalized. Thus, $k\tilde{o}i$, having done; $b\tilde{o}l\tilde{e}-h\tilde{\tilde{e}}$, he says; $\tilde{e}-h\tilde{\tilde{e}}$, it comes.

An r is usually dropped between vowels; thus, $k\tilde{o}\tilde{\imath}$, having done; $m\tilde{o}\tilde{u}$, I may die; $d\tilde{u}u$, far; $b\tilde{o}h\tilde{\imath}$, i.e. $bhar\tilde{\imath}$, having filled.

S is replaced by h; thus, $d\bar{o}h\bar{o}$, ten; $b\bar{e}$ vihi, forty; $w\bar{o}hat\bar{i}$, dwelling; $nh\bar{a}$, run. Forms such as $pais\bar{o}$, or $pais\bar{o}$, money, however, also occur.

Nouns .- There are only two genders, the masculine and the feminine.

Strong masculine bases end in \tilde{o} or \tilde{a} , plural \tilde{a} or \tilde{e} ; thus, $p\tilde{o}h\tilde{o}$ or $p\tilde{o}h\tilde{a}$, a son; plural $p\tilde{o}h\tilde{a}$ or $p\tilde{o}h\tilde{e}$. \tilde{A} and \tilde{o} , \tilde{e} and \tilde{a} , are, in the same way, interchangeable in verbal forms; thus, $j\tilde{a}y\tilde{a}$, they became; $l\tilde{a}g\tilde{e}$, they began. The plural of other masculine bases usually ends in \tilde{e} ; thus, $d\tilde{o}g^{a}r\tilde{e}$, cattle; $duk^{a}r\tilde{e}$, pigs; $m\tilde{a}h\tilde{e}$, men. Strong feminine bases end in \tilde{i} , plural $i\tilde{a}$ or $i\tilde{o}$; thus, $p\tilde{o}h\tilde{i}$, a daughter; plural, $p\tilde{o}hi\tilde{a}$ or $p\tilde{o}hi\tilde{o}$; $gh\tilde{o}d\tilde{i}$, a mare; plural $gh\tilde{o}di\tilde{a}$, etc.

The oblique form agrees with Gujarātī. Thus, $p\bar{o}h\bar{a}$ -l, to the son; mauj- $m\tilde{a}$, in merriment. Often, however, it is formed from the genitive; thus, $p\bar{o}hi\bar{e}$, of a daughter; $p\bar{o}hi\bar{e}l$, to a daughter; $\bar{a}b\bar{o}h\bar{o}l$, to a father, etc. Occasionally we also find Marāṭhī forms such as $mulukh\bar{a}$ - $m\tilde{a}$, in the country.

The cases are the same as in Gujarātī. The nominative is sometimes used instead of the case of the agent to denote the subject when the verb is the past tense of a transitive verb. Thus, $t\bar{o}$ $\bar{a}b\bar{o}h\bar{o}l$ $\bar{a}khy\bar{a}$, he said to his father. The suffix of the case of the agent is \bar{e} , \bar{e} or $h\bar{e}$, $h\bar{e}$; thus, $m\bar{a}h\bar{e}$, by the man; $\bar{a}b\bar{o}h\bar{e}$ $p\bar{a}ngad$ $d\bar{e}ni$, thefather-by a-feast was-given.

The suffix of the dative is n, l or $l\bar{a}$; thus, $\bar{a}b\bar{o}h\bar{o}l$, to the father; $p\bar{o}h\bar{a}l$, to the son; $m\bar{a}h\bar{u}-l\bar{a}$, to a man; $p\bar{o}y^{\alpha}r\bar{a}-h\bar{a}n$, to the sons.

The ablative is formed by adding $n\bar{e}$; thus, $r\bar{a}n\bar{a}$ - $m\bar{a}y$ - $n\bar{e}$, from in the fields. The suffix of the genitive is $h\bar{o}$ or \bar{o} . The final vowel of the suffix is treated, in accordance with the rules for the inflexion of strong bases, as in an adjective. Thus mā ābō-hā kōlā āw tyā-hāl, to how many servants of my father's; bhōg wān-ē ihī, at God's, towards God. There is, however, considerable uncertainty, and we find forms such as tō ābō-hō gahā-mē, in thy father's house; pōhi-ē, of a daughter.

The suffix of the locative is $m\tilde{a}$, $m\tilde{a}y$, or $m\tilde{e}$; thus, $mulukh\tilde{a}$ - $m\tilde{a}$, in the country; $r\tilde{a}n\tilde{a}$ - $m\tilde{a}y$, in the fields; $gah\tilde{a}$ - $m\tilde{e}$, in the house. $M\tilde{a}$ is sometimes abbreviated to m; thus, monā.m, in the mind.

Pronouns .- The following are the personal pronouns :-

 \widetilde{e} , $\widetilde{e}h\widetilde{\imath}$, $ah\widetilde{\imath}$, I. $t\widetilde{u}$, thou. $may\widetilde{e}$, by me. $tu\widetilde{e}$, by thee. $m\widetilde{a}l$, to me. $t\widetilde{u}l$, to thee. $m\widetilde{a}$, my. $t\widetilde{o}h\widetilde{o}$, $t\widetilde{o}\widetilde{o}$, $t\widetilde{o}$, thy. $amh\widetilde{a}$, $am\widetilde{a}$, we. $tumh\widetilde{a}$, $tum\widetilde{a}$, you. $amh\widetilde{e}$, $\widetilde{a}m\widetilde{e}$, our. $tumh\widetilde{e}$, $tum\widetilde{e}$, your.

Demonstrative pronouns are \tilde{o} , fem. $\tilde{i}h$, obl. $y\tilde{a}$, this; $t\tilde{o}$, fem. $t\tilde{i}$, obl. $ty\tilde{a}$, that; $ty\tilde{a}\cdot h\tilde{a}$, $ty\tilde{a}$, his; $ty\tilde{a}\tilde{\tilde{e}}$, by him; $\tilde{e}l\tilde{o}$ or $\tilde{e}p^{o}l\tilde{o}$, that, etc. Similarly $j\tilde{o}$, who.

The interrogative pronouns are kũ or kō, who? kāy, what?

Verbs .- The present tense of the verb substantive is,- Singular, 1. haũ, hũ. Plural, 1. hējē.

2. hai, hē.

3. hai, hē.

3. hētā, etc.

Or $h\bar{e}$, hai, throughout. The past tense is regular, singular $hat\bar{o}$, etc., plural $hat\bar{a}$ or $hat\bar{e}$, etc.

The old present is used as a conjunctive present, an ordinary present, a past, and, after the negative $m\tilde{a}$, as a negative imperative. The ordinary present is also used in the last mentioned way. The old present is regularly formed. Thus, $m\tilde{o}\tilde{u}$, I die, I may die; $r\tilde{o}h\tilde{e}$, thou livest; $\tilde{a}kh\tilde{e}$, he said; $m\tilde{a}s\tilde{o}d\tilde{e}$, or $s\tilde{o}d\tilde{e}-h\tilde{e}$, don't leave me.

The present tense of finite verbs is formed as follows:-

 $th\bar{o}k\tilde{u}-h\tilde{u}$, I strike; $th\bar{o}k\tilde{e}-h\tilde{e}$, thou strikest, he strikes; plural $th\bar{o}k^{o}t\bar{a}-h\bar{a}$ or $th\bar{o}k^{o}t\tilde{e}-h\tilde{e}$. In the singular we also find forms such as $j\bar{a}t\bar{o}-h\bar{o}$, I go, thou goest, he goes; and in the plural $j\bar{a}h\tilde{u}$, we go; $j\bar{a}h\tilde{a}$, you go; $j\bar{a}h\tilde{a}$ or $j\tilde{a}$, they go.

The past tense is formed as in connected dialects by adding $y\bar{o}$ (\bar{o}), $n\bar{o}$, $l\bar{o}$, etc.; thus, $g\bar{o}y\bar{o}$, he went; $l\bar{a}g\bar{e}$, they began; $\bar{e}n\bar{a}$, we came; $gunh\bar{o}$ $k\bar{o}l\bar{o}$ hai, sin is done; $k\bar{a}y\bar{e}l$, was done; $d\bar{e}n\bar{e}l$, was given; $gay\bar{o}l$, he had gone, etc.

The ordinary future of thokono, to beat, is,- Singular, 1. thōkihĩ.

2. thōkihĩ.

3. thōkī.

4. thōkihĩ.

5. thōkihĩ.

6. thōkihĩ.

7. thōkihĩ.

8. thōkihĩ.

9. thōkihĩ.

9. thōkihĩ.

Other forms are $d\tilde{e}\tilde{i}$, I shall give; $r\tilde{o}h\tilde{i}$, I shall be; $k\tilde{o}h\tilde{u}$, we shall make. The form $h\tilde{o}r\tilde{i}$, I may be, seems to be miswritten for and identical with $r\tilde{o}h\tilde{i}$, I shall be.

The plural of the imperative ends in \tilde{a} as in Khāndēśī; thus, $d\tilde{a}$, give ye; $gh\tilde{a}l\tilde{a}$, put ye.

Other forms will be easily recognized as identical with those occurring in other Bhil dialects.

I am indebted to A. H. A. Simcox, Esq., I.C.S., for the two specimens which follow. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second a folk-tale. Mr. Simcox remarks that the native who prepared the texts for him has to some extent been influenced by Marāthī, the official language of the district. On the whole, however, the specimens are relatively free from any admixture. The beginning of another version of the Parable, which has been independently prepared, has been added as a third specimen.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

Once upon a time there was a Headman. One day he was irrigating his fields, when a crocodile came through the channel. The crocodile said to him, 'Headman, please hear what I tell you.' The Headman says to her, 'Tell what you have to tell.' She said, 'take me to the river; I will catch fishes and give them to you.' Then the Headman lifted her up and carried her to the sand in the river. He said, 'may I leave you on the sands?' She said, 'carry me into the water; don't leave me here.' Then be took her into the water till it reached his knee. The Headman said, 'may I le ave you here?' She said, 'do not leave me here.' He advanced till the water reac hed his waist, and said to her, 'may I leave you here?' She said, 'do not leave me here.' Then he carried her further into the water till it reached his neck and said to her, 'may I leave you here?' She said, 'yes.' Accordingly he let her loose. She went down to the bottom of the water and got hold of his foot. Then there came a bullock to the water in the course of grazing. To him the Headman said, 'a crocodile has got hold of me, make her release me.' The bullock said, 'as long as I was young you acquired agricultural produce through me; now I have become old, and now I get no grain, no fodder; I won't release you.' The bullock drank water and went away. Then a horse came. He said to the horse, 'a crocodile has got hold of me; release me.' The horse said, 'when I was young you rode on me, I became old, and now I get no grain, no fodder; I won't release you.' Then a cow came. He began to tell her, 'a crocodile has caught me.' The cow said, 'what should I do? as long as I was young you got milk from me and drank. Now I have become old, I have no grain, no fodder; I won't release you.' Then there came a jackal. To him the Headman said, 'Jackal brother, a crocodile has got hold of me, do release me.' Then the jackal said, 'Headman, you are a fool. The crocodile has not caught you. She has caught the staff that is in your hand.' The crocodile got up, left the foot, and got hold of the staff, when the Headman ran off.

NŌRĪ.

Norī is the dialect of a small tribe in the Bhopawar Agency of Central India. It has not been returned as a separate dialect for the use of this Survey. At the last Census 346 speakers were returned.

I am indebted to the courtesy of Captain Luard, Superintendent of Census Operations in Central India, for a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in the Nori dialect of Ali Rajpur. It was forwarded without an interlinear translation and the explanation is not quite certain in a few places. Some passages, moreover, seem to have been misunderstood by the translator. The text must, on the whole, be used with considerable caution.

The Norī dialect is related to Barēl, the Bhīlī of Rajpipla, Pāwrī and the Bhīl dialects spoken in the Nawsari Division of the Baroda State. Compare the pronunciation of a as \tilde{o} , the dropping of r between vowels, the loss of aspiration, and the change of soft to hard consonants in words such as $d\tilde{o}h$, ten; $m\tilde{a}in\tilde{u}$, to strike; $m\tilde{o}\tilde{o}$, I die; $ut\tilde{a}$ and $h\tilde{o}t\tilde{a}$, were; $k\tilde{o}$, house; $k\tilde{o}d\tilde{o}$, horse, etc. The nasal pronunciation is the same as in Barēl; thus, $h\tilde{o}n\tilde{o}$, $h\tilde{o}nu$, and $hon\tilde{u}$, he. The cerebral l is occasionally dropped; thus, $d\tilde{o}\tilde{a}$, eye. The same word also occurs in Rānī, and the intermediary link is the pronunciation of l as y.

With regard to the inflexion of the nouns we may note the use of the nominative and the oblique form in the same wide way as in Rajpipla; thus, $t\bar{a}a$ $b\bar{a}h$ $k\bar{o}a$ - $m\tilde{e}$, in thy father's house. The plural of strong masculine bases ends in \bar{a} and \hat{e} ; thus, $chhu\bar{a}$, sons; $kud\bar{e}$, horses.

The commonest case suffixes are, dative \tilde{o} ; ablative $r\tilde{o}t\tilde{a}$; genitive $n\tilde{o}$ or no suffix; locative $m\tilde{a}$, $m\tilde{a}y$, $m\tilde{a}hi$, and $m\tilde{e}$.

The usual personal pronouns are,- $\widetilde{o}\widetilde{i}$, I. $t\widetilde{u}$, thou. $h\widetilde{o}n\widetilde{o}$, $w\widetilde{o}$, $t\widetilde{o}$, $y\widetilde{o}$, he. $m\widetilde{a}$, my. $t\widetilde{a}(\widetilde{a})$, thy. $(ti)y\widetilde{a}$, his. $am\widetilde{e}$, we. $tum\widetilde{e}$, you. $h\widetilde{o}n\widetilde{a}$, $t\widetilde{e}$, they. $m\widetilde{a}a$, our. $tum\widetilde{a}a$, your. $tiy\widetilde{a}$, their.

There are, however, several other forms. Thus $m\tilde{a}h$, he; $tiy\tilde{a}$, thy; $chh\tilde{o}a$, his, and so forth. Some of these forms are perhaps due to misunderstanding.

The present tense of the verb substantive is given as follows :-

Sing. 1. hã.
2. hōyō.
3. hōyō, hōē.
Plur. 1. hōjē.
2. hōyā.
3. hōyā.
3. hōyā.

The past tense is hōtō, plural hōtā, with many varieties.

With regard to the inflexion of finite verbs we may note that the n-suffix is often used both in the present and past tenses. Thus, mānũ, I strike; rōinũ, he is; māinũ, (I) struck; kāl paḍinō, hunger arose. It is also used after the present participle. Thus, jātnā, we go. Dētnũ, was given, seems to contain a past participle passive dēt.

The usual suffix of the past tense is $y\bar{o}$; thus, $g\bar{o}y\tilde{u}$, plur. $g\bar{o}y\bar{a}$, went. The subject of transitive verbs is sometimes put in the nominative and sometimes in the case of the agent.

The imperative ends in \bar{e} , plural \bar{a} or \bar{o} ; thus, $\bar{a}p\bar{e}$, give; $b\bar{a}nd\bar{a}$, bind; $m\bar{e}h\bar{a}$, put, $k\bar{a}n\bar{o}$, put on.

The conjunctive participle ends in i to which t or $t\tilde{e}$ is usually added. Thus, $kh\tilde{o}i$, having spent; $k\tilde{o}it$, having done; $gug^ndit\tilde{e}$, having run.

The verbal noun and the infinitive are sometimes formed as in Marāṭhī and sometimes as in Gujarātī Bbīlī. Thus, $chār\bar{o}$, in order to tend; $kh\bar{a}\tilde{o}$, to eat; $k\bar{o}in\tilde{u}$, to make. The form $g\bar{o}y^an\bar{a}$, let us go, seems to be an infinitive.

For further details the specimen which follows should be consulted.

The principal language of the Baroda State is Gujarātī. A considerable portion of the inhabitants of the Nawsari Division, however, speak several dialects of Bhīlī. Bhīl dialects are also spoken in the Baroda Division, but no figures have been returned for the use of this Survey.

Eleven various Bhīl dialects are said to be spoken in the Nawsari Division, viz., Rāṇī, Chōdhrī, Dhōdiā, Gāmtī, Kōṅkaṇī, Kaṭhōdī, Kōṭalī, Māwchī, Naikdī, Wālvī, and Wārlī. Only the first five of these dialects have been returned for the use of this Survey. Kōṅkaṇī will be dealt with separately below. It has been returned from several neighbouring districts as well. Kōṭalī and Māwchī properly belong to Khandesh. The former belongs to that group of dialects which gradually merge into Khāndeśī. See pp. 168 and ff. below. Māwchī has been dealt with on pp. 95 and ff. Specimens of Naikdī have been received from Rewakantha, the Panch Mahals, and Surat. The dialect belongs to the chain which connects Bhīlī with the broken dialects of Thana. See above pp. 88 and ff. Specimens of Wārlī have only been forwarded from Thana. The dialect has there come under the influence of Marāṭhī and will be dealt with in connexion with that language. See Vol. vii, pp. 141 and ff. TheWārlīs of Khandesh are said to speak a form of Mawchī, and the same is probably the case in Nawsari. Kaṭhōdī has also come under the influence of Marāṭhī and will be dealt with as a form of that language. See Vol. vii, pp. 130 and ff. No information is available about Wālvī. It is probably a form of Rāṇī.

The remaining dialects, Rāṇī, Chōdhrī, Gāmṭī, and Dhōdiā, will be dealt with in what follows. The estimated number of speakers will be found separately under each dialect. The number of speakers is, however, steadily decreasing. The Bhīls of Baroda who emigrate from the hills into the more civilized portions of the state rapidly abandon their native tongue and adopt Gujarātī instead. The table which follows compares the estimates forwarded for the use of this Survey with the returns of the last Census of the Baroda State:—

RĀŅĪ BHĪLĪ.

The eastern portion of the Nawsari Division of the Baroda State is a hill country covered with forests. It is known as the Rāṇī Mahāls, i.e., forest districts, and comprises the Mahals of Mahuha, Vyara, Songhad, and the Wakal district of Velachha. One of the Bhīl dialects of that district is known as Rāṇī Bhīlī, and the number of speakers has been estimated for the use of this Survey at 87,540.

Rāṇī is a dialect connected on one side with Barēl, the Bhīlī of Rajpipla, Nōrī, Pāwrī, etc., and, on the other, with Chōdhrī, Gāmtī, etc.

We find hard consonants substituted for soft aspirates and an r dropped between vowels as in Barel and connected dialects. Thus, $k\bar{o}d\bar{o}$, horse; $k\bar{o}$, house; $p\bar{u}ta$, devil (Sanskrit $bh\bar{u}ta$).

An h is dropped as in the dialects just mentioned; thus, $at\bar{o}$, was. A cerebral l has been dropped as in Nori in $d\bar{o}a$, eye, and so forth.

The oblique form is used as a genitive, just as is the case in Rajpipla and other districts; thus, $b\bar{a}h^ak\bar{a}$, of a father. It also occurs as the case of the agent; thus, $b\bar{a}h^ak\bar{a}$, by the father. We also find forms such as \bar{a} $k\bar{o}d\bar{o}$ $k\bar{o}t\bar{a}$ $wary\bar{o}$ - $h\bar{o}$ $ah\bar{a}y$, that horse howmany years-of is? where the suffix of the genitive is $h\bar{o}$ as in Barēl and connected dialects.

The ablative suffix dekh Rāṇī shares with Pāwrī and other dialects.

 $M\tilde{a}\tilde{a}$, my, and similar forms, correspond to Nõrī $m\tilde{a}a$, Barēl $m\tilde{a}h\tilde{o}$, Rajpipla Bhīlī $m\tilde{a}$, and so forth. The same forms are also used in Gāmṭī, etc.

The present tense of the verb sustantive is ahay; compare ahe in Rajpipla.

The present tense of $th\bar{o}k^on\bar{e}$, to strike, is $th\bar{o}k\tilde{u}-h\tilde{u}$, I strike; $th\bar{o}k\bar{o}-h\bar{o}$, thou strikest; $th\bar{o}k\bar{e}-h\bar{e}$, he strikes; plural $th\bar{o}k^ot\bar{a}-h\bar{a}$. Compare the Bhīlī of Rajpipla.

In the future we find forms such as $th\bar{o}k\bar{\imath}h\bar{\imath}$, I shall strike; $th\bar{o}kuh\tilde{u}$, we shall strike, etc., corresponding to the usual forms in Rajpipla.

In some of the points just mentioned, and in several other characteristics, Rāṇī agrees with Chōdhrī and the other Bhīl dialects of the neighbourhood.

It will be sufficient to give the beginning of the Parable of the Prodigal Son as an illustration of the dialect.

CHODHRI.

The Chodhras are one of the aboriginal tribes of Surat and the Nawsari Division of Baroda. In the former district they are found on both sides of Nawsari, in the Olpad Division in the west, and in the Mandvi Taluka and near Walod in the east.

The numb	er o	of s	peakers	has	been	esti	imated	for	the	use	of	this	Sur	vey	as follows:-
Surat														100	35,000
Nawsari															86,258
											1	COTAL			121,258

The Chodhri dialect in most characteristics agrees with Gujarātī Bhīlī. In some points, however, it differs and approaches Marāthī on one side and Khāndēśī on the other.

The short a is often pronounced as an open \tilde{o} ; thus, $p\tilde{o}r^{o}m\tilde{e}har$, God; $h\tilde{o}gl\tilde{o}$, all; $k\tilde{o}r\tilde{i}\cdot n\tilde{e}$, having made.

L commonly becomes n, and the cerebral l is always changed to l; thus, $n\tilde{o}w^{o}d\tilde{o}$, iron; $n\tilde{e}dh\tilde{o}$, taken; $ch\tilde{a}n$, go; $k\tilde{a}l$, famine; $d\tilde{o}l\tilde{o}$, eye.

The soft aspirates are commonly hardened. The aspiration is, in such cases, apparently very strong, and in the specimens received from Olpad we therefore find a second h added. Thus, $khh\bar{o}r$, house; $chhh\bar{a}d$, tree; $fh\bar{o}g^*w\bar{a}n$, God. The last instance shows that f is substituted for ph. This is only the case in Olpad, and is perhaps only a difference in writing.

A similar hardening of j occurs in $th\bar{o}k^achy\bar{o}$, struck; $\bar{a}p^achy\bar{o}$, given, and similar forms of the past tense. Compare forms such as $pad^ajy\bar{o}$, he fell, in the Bhīlī of Mahikantha.

As in other neighbouring dialects, there is a strong tendency to pronounce vowels with a drawl. The result is usually a doubling of the vowel and the insertion of a weakly sounded h; thus, $phuhul\bar{a}i$, having died (compare Gujarātī $bhul^s vo\tilde{u}$, to err); $h\bar{a}ruhu$, Gujarātī $s\bar{a}r\tilde{u}$, for the sake of; $\bar{a}t\bar{o}$ and $\bar{a}t\bar{o}h\bar{o}$, a father; $d\bar{a}kr\bar{o}$ and $d\bar{a}kr\bar{o}h\bar{o}$, a son, etc.

The inflexion of nouns is mainly the same as in Mahikantha. The neuter plural, however, ends in \hat{e} ; thus, $m\tilde{a}n^{o}h\tilde{e}$, men; $h\tilde{e}\hat{n}g^{o}d\tilde{e}$, husks. Strong feminine bases form their plural regularly; thus, $dikr\tilde{e}h\tilde{e}$, daughters; $kh\tilde{o}di\tilde{e}$, mares.

The genitive suffix is $n\bar{o}$ (or $n\bar{o}$), but occasionally $h\bar{o}$ is used instead; thus, $m\bar{a}\bar{a}r\bar{e}$ $k\bar{a}k\bar{a}h\bar{e}$ $d\bar{i}kr\bar{o}$, my uncle's son. This latter form is often used as an oblique base; thus, $dikrih\bar{e}$ - $n\bar{e}$, to a daughter. Compare, however, the note regarding the pronunciation of vowels above.

Adjectives, including the genitive ending in $n\bar{o}$ and the ablative ending in $th\bar{o}$, are inflected as in Gujarātī. Strong adjective bases, however, often use a form ending in \bar{e} throughout; thus, $m\bar{a}\bar{a}r\bar{e}$ $ph\bar{a}g$, my share.

With regard to pronouns we may note the forms $p\bar{o}t\bar{i}-k\bar{o}$, his own, in $p\bar{o}t\bar{i}-k\bar{a}$ $kh\bar{e}t\bar{a}-m\bar{a}$, into his own field; $m\bar{a}\bar{a}r\bar{e}$, my; $\bar{a}m\bar{e}$, we; $tum\bar{e}$, you, etc.

The verb substantive has the same form in the singular and in the plural, viz, first person $h\bar{a}m$ (or $\tilde{a}m$), second and third persons $h\bar{a}$ (or \bar{a}). The corresponding past tense is $hut^an\bar{o}$ or $h\bar{o}t^an\bar{o}$.

The present tense of finite verbs is formed by adding the verb substantive to the present participle; thus, thok tom (or thok to-am), I strike; thok ta-ha, you, they, strike.

The past tense ends in $y\bar{o}$, \bar{o} , $chy\bar{o}$, and $n\bar{o}$; thus, $g\bar{o}$ and $gan\bar{o}$, he went; $m\bar{o}kiny\bar{o}$, he was sent; $th\bar{o}k^achy\bar{o}$, he was struck; $man\ h\bar{o}wa$, his mind became, he wished, etc.

The suffix $n\bar{o}$ is often also added to the present participle; thus, $j\bar{a}t^an\bar{o}$, going. The future of $th\bar{o}k^awa$, to strike, is,

Singular, 1. thokihi.

Plural, 1. thokuhũ.

2. thökēhē.

2. thökahā.

3. thōkii.

3. thōkii.

Another form of the future ends in wānō, plural wānā; thus, mārovānō, I, thou, or he, will strike.

Other forms will be easily recognized from the specimens which follow.

The first is the beginning of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son received from Nawsari. The second is a translation of a well-known tale into the Chodhri dialect of Olpad. The third is a conversation between two villagers from Surat.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A boy was tending goats in the fields. Once upon a day he playfully cried out for nothing, 'the tiger has come, the tiger has come; run, run.' Then all the peasants of the neighbourhood came running and saw that there was no tiger. The boy, on the contrary, looked at them and began to laugh. The poor peasants got ashamed and were very sorry. Afterwards on another occasion when a real tiger came the boy got afraid and cried out, 'a tiger, a tiger!' But the peasants did not believe him. Thereupon the tiger killed several goats.

If the boy had not told a lie and cheated the peasants so much mischief would not have occurred.

GĀMAŢĪ OR GĀMAŢADĪ.

The Gāmatas or Gāmits are another aboriginal tribe living in the same localities as the Chōdhras. The estimated numbers of speakers are as follows:—

Gām^{*}țī is closely related to Chōdhrī. The hardening of soft aspirates, however, does not seem to occur. Compare $bh\bar{a}g$, share; $bh\bar{o}d\tilde{e}$, swine. L is not regularly changed to n; thus, $l\bar{a}k^*d\bar{i}$, stick; $l\bar{a}$, take. R between vowels is often dropped, thus, $k\bar{o}in\bar{e}$, having done; $m\bar{o}ot\bar{a}-h\tilde{u}$, I am dying; duu, far,

The inflexion of nouns is the same as in Chōdhrī. The suffix of the dative is, however, l where Chōdhrī has $n\bar{e}$; thus, $\bar{a}bb\bar{a}h\bar{a}l$, to the father. The usual suffix of the ablative is $r\bar{e}$; thus, $t\bar{a}$ - $m\bar{a}y$ - $r\bar{e}$, from among them.

'My' is mā or māā; 'thy' tā or tāā, as in Rāṇī.

The present tense of the verb substantive is,

 Singular, 1. hētaũ, hũ.
 Plural, 1. hējyē.

 2. hētō, hā, hō.
 2. hētā, hā, hē.

 3. hēy, hē.
 3. hētā, hā, hē.

The past tense is ātō, plural ātā.

The present tense of finite verbs is formed as in Chōdhrid We also find forms such as thōk tā-hū, I strike; tō jā-hē, he goes; tō thōk t-hē, he strikes; amã thōk jē-hē, we strike. Note also tō thōk h, he will strike; amã thōk hē or thōk hū, we will strike, and so on.

There are no instances of the suffix chyō in the past tense.

Note also forms such as muḍā, break ye; paḍā, to fall; morō, to die; chārā, in order to tend, etc.

In most particulars, however, Gām^{*}ṭī agrees with Chōdhrī, as will be seen from the two specimens which follow. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son received from the Olpad Division of Surat. The other is the translation of a well known story into the dialect as spoken in Nawsari.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

-An old man had four sons, but there was little harmony among them. When he was on deathbed, he having called his sons caused them to sit beside him, and having ordered a bundle of thin sticks, told each of them to break it. But nobody could break it. Then the old man said, 'now untie the bundle, and let each one of you break each stick apiece.' When they did so, they could easily break all. The boys wondering thereat, asked the father the reason. Then he said, 'when so many sticks were together, they were very strong, and so you could not break them. When they were separated from each other, they were easily broken to pieces. In like manner if you will live in harmony, nobody will trouble you and you will live in happiness; but if you quarrel and are disunited, you will be weak like each separate stick.'

DHODIA.

Dhōdiā is the dialect spoken by the Dhōndias or Dhundias, one of the aboriginal tribes of Surat and Thana. They are chiefly found in the eastern parts of Jalalpur and Balsar, the western half of Dharampur and Bansda of Surat, and in the adjoining districts of Baroda and Thana. In the specimens received from Jalalpur their dialect is called Dhōdiā-Naikī; compare Nāikādī, above, pp. 88 ff.

The	following	are	the	revised	figures :-
-----	-----------	-----	-----	---------	------------

Surat Thana		100	1	1	•	:		51,000 9,000

Like Nāikadī, Dhōdiā has been influenced by the neighbouring Marāṭhī. Thus the singular of strong neuter bases usually ends in \tilde{a} and there are some instances of the use of the Marāṭhī oblique form. Thus, $badh\tilde{a}$, all; but $s\tilde{o}n\tilde{u}$, gold; $g\tilde{a}w\tilde{a}$ - $m\tilde{a}$, in a village; but muluk- $m\tilde{a}$, in the country.

The case suffixes are generally the same as in Gujarātī. Thus, $p\bar{o}h\bar{e}$, by the son; $b\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{e}$, to the father; $m\bar{a}n^{\circ}h\bar{a}\bar{e}$, to a man; $b\bar{a}$ - $th\bar{i}$, from a father; $p\bar{o}h\bar{i}$ - $n\bar{o}$, of a daughter; $b\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{e}$ ghar- $m\tilde{a}$, in the father's house. The dative is sometimes apparently formed without any suffix, and the genitive occasionally ends in $h\bar{o}$ or \bar{o} ; thus, $b\bar{a}h$, to the father; $m\bar{a}$, to me; $p\bar{o}h\bar{i}h\bar{o}$, of a daughter; $Par^{*}m\bar{e}har\tilde{a}$ $p\bar{a}p$, sin against God. The suffix of the ablative is sometimes the $th\bar{o}$ of northern Gujarātī, which is declined like an adjective; thus, $tiy\bar{a}$ - $m\tilde{a}$ - $th\tilde{a}$ vih $rupiy\bar{a}$, twenty rupees from among them.

The following are the principal pronominal forms :-

 $M\tilde{e}$, I, by me; $m\tilde{a}$, me, to me; $m\tilde{a}n\tilde{o}$, my; $\tilde{a}mu$, $\tilde{a}m\tilde{u}$, we, by us; $\tilde{a}m\tilde{a}$, us, to us; $\tilde{a}m^{\sigma}n\tilde{o}$, our.

Tu, $t\tilde{u}$, thou, by thee; $tuw\tilde{a}$, thee, to thee; $t\tilde{u}n\tilde{o}$, thy; $tum\tilde{i}$, you, by you; $tum\tilde{a}$, you, to you; $tum^a n\tilde{o}$, your.

 $T\tilde{e}$, $t\tilde{o}$, he, that, etc.; $t\tilde{e}n\tilde{e}$, by him; $t\tilde{a}$, $t\tilde{e}$, him, it, etc.; $t\tilde{a}n\tilde{o}$, of him, etc.; $t\tilde{e}$, $t\tilde{i}$, they; $t\tilde{i}$ or $t\tilde{e}n\tilde{e}$, by them; $tiy\tilde{a}-m\tilde{a}$, in them; $t\tilde{a}n\tilde{o}$, of them.

The present tense of the verb substantive is as follows:-

Sing.	Piur,
1. ãhế, ãhê, ấy, ãê.	ahũ, ãũ.
2. āhē, āy, āē.	ahā, a.
3. āhē, āy, āē.	āhē, āy, āē.

The Past Tense is ato (-ā, -i)

In the conjugation of all verbs, the letter h is often suffixed to the second person singular, although it does not always appear in the paradigms. Thus, $g\bar{o}h$, thou wentest; $bhan^oj\bar{a}h$, learn (imperative); $kar^oj\bar{a}h$, do (imperative); $m\tilde{a}g\bar{e}h$, thou mayest ask.

The following is the present tense of the verb badawi (imperative badaw), to beat.

Sing.	Plur,
1. bad⁵v€.	bad*wũ.
2. bad*vē.	bad*wā.
3. baď vě.	baď°vē.

The present definite is formed from the present participle. Thus, tu baḍaṭētā or baḍaṭētāē, thou strikest; āmi baḍaṭaṭā, we strike; tumī baḍaṭaṭā, you strike. The verb substantive is added in order to form a present definite; thus, mē marētāy, I am dying.

The form baḍaṭētā or baḍavētā, striking, corresponds to Marāṭhī forms such as mārīt, striking. It will be seen that the plural is formed from a participle baḍaṭatā, which corresponds to Marāṭhī mārat. The use of different forms in the singular and the plural is perhaps due to the influence of the old present. Some lists of words which have not been reproduced record forms such as mē karēt-āhē, I do; hami mārūt-āhū, we strike. Such forms look like a compromise between the Gujarātī and Marāṭhī forms, and are perhaps the first step towards the distinguishing of the singular and plural forms just mentioned.

The imperfect is formed by adding $hat\tilde{o}$ (not $at\tilde{o}$), etc., to the present participle. The initial h is combined with the final t of the present participle into one letter, th (u). Thus, $m\tilde{e}$ $bad^av\tilde{e}that\tilde{o}$, or $m\tilde{e}$ $bad^av\tilde{e}that\tilde{o}$, I was striking.

The future of badatowi or badowi, to strike, is formed as follows :-

Sing.	Plur,
 bad*fi, bad*vi. 	bad° tũ, bad° wũ.
2. bad*fih, bad*vih.	bad*ţā, bad*wā.
3. baq*ti, baq*et.	bad*fī, bad*vī.

Besides this, we also find forms such as ākhīh, I will say.

Tenses are formed from the past participle in the usual way, transitive verbs taking the passive construction. The past participle is formed by adding $n\bar{o}$, \bar{o} ($y\bar{o}$), or $\bar{e}l\bar{o}$. Thus, $pad^an\bar{o}$, he fell; $g\bar{o}$, he went; $g\bar{o}\bar{a}$ or $gu\bar{a}$, they went; $m\tilde{e}$ $bad^aty\bar{o}$, I struck; $t\bar{e}n\bar{e}$ $bad^aw\bar{o}$ or $bad^av\bar{e}l\bar{o}$, they struck. Note forms such as $\bar{a}ikh\tilde{a}$, for $\bar{a}khy\tilde{a}$, it was said. Such also occur in the Gujarātī of Surat.

'I have struck' is $m\tilde{e}$ $bad^aw\tilde{o}-\tilde{a}h\tilde{e}$. Or $v\tilde{i}$ or $b\tilde{i}$ may be added to the past participle, as in $kadh\tilde{e}l\tilde{a}-b\tilde{i}$, they have been made.

Amongst irregular past participles, we can quote dédhēlō, given; kadhēlō, done; and gō, gone.

Verbal nouns, such as $kar\tilde{u}$, to do; $ch\tilde{a}r\tilde{u}$ - $l\tilde{a}g$, in order to tend, point to the influence of Marāthī. Besides we also find forms such as $badat^*w\tilde{u}$ or $bad^*w\tilde{u}$, to strike.

The general character of the dialect will be seen from the two specimens which follow. The first is a version of the commencement of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second is a village scene in which a village banker duns one of his clients.

- 1. Deo-chand.-Hullo! Kikla Bhikharia.
- 2. Kiklā.-Who are you?
- 3. D .- I your Banker. Open the door and come out.
- 4. K.—Ho! Is it you Seth? What brings you here so late at night?
- 5. D .- Well, bring the money you owe me with the interest.
- 6. K .- What amount do you want?
- 7. D.—Look here! R40 for the bullock I got you, R60 given to you for marrying your brother, and R20 given to you for subsistence. Bring R150 in all.
- 8. K.—What became of the 3 hārās1 of rice I gave you from my fields?
- 9. D.-Well! I set off R40 on that account against the interest.
- 10. K.-Hum! So many rupees for interest of 10 months?
- 11. D.—I swear by your patron God that the interest amounts to R60; but I allow you a remission of R20 therefrom, as you are my old client.
- 12. K.—Wait! Let me call my son Radkā. He is educated and will cast up the accounts.
- 13. Radkā.—Have you credited in your account book the sums paid to you from time to time, or not?
- 14. D.—See. Here is the account!
- 15. R.—Where are the amounts paid credited?
 - You keep false accounts and cheat us poor people. Your due comes to simply R50. Just come to the police court and you will see.
- 16. D .- Well, do you want to pay R50 even or not?
- 17. R.—R50, by all means. Pass a receipt and take your money.
- 18. D.—Radkā! As you have just learnt to read and write, have you got wind in your head, eh? What humbug has Government started by educating you? What shall we do when you take to real learning?
- 19. R.—You will reap what you sow. The Government has after all done the right thing.

A hara is the name of a corn measure. Twenty-one maunds = one 'big hara,' and 7 maunds one 'small hara.'

KONKANI.

The Könkanis are a tribe which is found in the Nawsari Division of the Baroda State, the eastern part of Dharampur and Bansda in the Surat Agency, in the Surgana State, in Talukas Peint and Kalwan of district Nasik, and in Khandesh, especially in Pimpalner. The estimated numbers of speakers are as follows:—

Nawsari		 1							5,613
	*						N. 00		125,000
Surat Agen	-		1911				100		9,000
Surgana						1.5			MG 000
Nasik	*								15,000
Khandesh				110	*				10,000
							To	PAL	232,613

The Könkanis consider themselves as superior to the Bhils and say that their ancestors originally came from the Konkan. Their appearance resembles that of the Konkan Thäkurs.

The Könkanı dialect is not uniform in all districts. As we proceed southwards it more and more approaches Marāṭhī, and in Dharampur and the southern part of Taluka Peint of Nasik it might with equal right be classed as a Marāṭhī dialect. The influence of Marāṭhī, in the form which that language assumes in the Northern Konkan, is, however, traceable everywhere, though the base of the Könkanı dialect is Gujarātī, or rather Gujarātī Bhīlī.

There is a strong tendency to nasalize vowels. Thus, $\tilde{a}h\tilde{a}$ and $\tilde{a}h\tilde{a}$, he is; ra and $r\tilde{a}$, a particle of frequent use in queries and exhortations. Compare the corresponding $r\tilde{e}$ in the Magahī dialect of Bihārī (Vol. v, Pt. ii, p. 30).

The mixed character of the dialect is easily recognizable in the inflexional forms.

Thus the oblique form is usually identical with the base, as is also the case in Gujarātī. Occasionally, however, and especially in Dharampur, we find forms such as $m\bar{a}n^{a}s\bar{a}-l\bar{a}$, to a man.

The suffixes of the dative are $n\hat{e}$ and $l\hat{a}$; those of the genitive $n\hat{a}$ and $ch\hat{a}$; thus, $b\hat{a}h\hat{a}s$ - $ch\hat{a}$ and $b\hat{a}h\hat{a}s$ - $n\hat{a}$, of the father. The suffix $ch\hat{a}$ of the genitive does not, however, seem to occur in Nawsari. Similarly we find $gh\hat{o}d\hat{o}$ and $gh\hat{o}d\hat{o}$, a horse, and so on.

'My' is mā-nā and mā-jā, or mājhā.

The past tense of finite verbs is usually formed as in Gujarātī Bhīlī; thus, $g\bar{\imath}y\bar{a}$, he went; $padn\bar{o}$, he fell. Note that the neuter form ends in \tilde{a} as in the Marāṭhī of the Konkan; thus, $s\bar{a}ng\bar{a}$, it was said. Marāṭhī forms such as $jh\bar{a}l\bar{a}$, he became; $m\bar{a}r^{\alpha}la$, it was struck, however, are of frequent occurrence, especially in Dharampur and Nasik.

The future is formed as in Marāṭhī; thus, kuṭīn, I shall strike; ākhan, I shall say. The plural of the imperative is formed as in Marāṭhī; thus, ghālā, put ye.

The conjunctive participle is sometimes, especially in Nawsari, formed as in Gujarātī Bhīlī, and sometimes as in Marāṭhī; thus, karīnē, having done; wāṭun, having divided. In Bansda we also find forms such as khāi-han, having eaten; compare Khāndēśī khāī-san, and the change of s to h in the Gujarātī Bhīlī of Mahikantha.

It will not, however, be necessary to go into further details. It will be sufficient to give short specimens of the various forms of the dialect. The first specimen which follows is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son received from Nawsari. It is comparatively free from Marāṭhī elements. The second one is a short conversation between two Bhīls received from Surgana, for which I am indebted to Mr. A. H. A. Simcox, I.C.S. It is more mixed up with Marāṭhī. Mr. Simcox, however, states that this may to some extent be due to the fact that the young chiefs who assisted him in preparing it had been educated in Marāṭhī schools.

The third specimen is the beginning of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son received from Dharampur. The Marāṭhī element is here exceptionally strong. This may, however, be due to similar reasons as those just alluded to with regard to the Surgana specimen.

Naik dī and Konkanī may be considered as the last links in the chain connecting the Bhīlī of Mahikantha with the broken Marāthī dialects of Thana. In Nasik Konkanī gradually merges into Khāndēsī, the principal language of Khandesh and the adjoining parts of Nasik, Buldana, and Nimar. Some Bhīl dialects spoken in these districts are almost identical with Khāndēsī, and they will be dealt with in what follows:—

PANCHĀĻĪ.

The Panchals, or brass-workers, of Buldana have been reported to speak a separate dialect called Panchali. The number of speakers has been estimated at 560.

A version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son in Panchāļī has been received from the Melkapur Taluka on the Khandesh border of Buldana. It exhibits a form of speech which, in many points, is related to Khāndēśī, though of a much more mixed nature.

The pronunciation is apparently the same as in Khāndēśī. It should, however, be noted that final \bar{a} and \bar{o} or u are frequently interchanged. Thus, $p\bar{o}ry\bar{a}$ and $p\bar{o}ry\bar{o}$, a son; $t\bar{a}r\bar{a}$, $t\bar{a}r\bar{o}$ and $t\bar{a}ru$, thy; $gay\bar{o}$ and $gay\bar{a}$, he went; $h\bar{a}t$ - $m\bar{o}$, on the hand; $\bar{a}ng$ -ma, on the body, etc.

The inflexion of nouns differs from Khāndēśī in so far as there are no traces of the oblique plural ending in s; thus, chāngolyā mānus-na, of good men.

The case of the agent is formed by adding $n\bar{e}$, na, or \bar{e} ; the dative by adding na; the locative by adding ma, etc. Thus, $b\bar{a}p-n\bar{e}$ and $b\bar{a}p\bar{e}$, by the father; $m\bar{a}nus-na$, by the man, to the man; $v\bar{a}var-ma$, in the field. Note also $y\bar{e}$ ritan, in this way.

There is apparently no neuter gender. Compare gānō aiku āī, singing to-hear came; pēṭ bharē as tu, he would have filled his belly; i-na ēk nōkar-na puchī, he asked a servant.

Pronouns.—'I' is $h\tilde{u}$ as in Gujarātī and Mālvī; 'my' is $m\tilde{a}r\tilde{a}$; 'thy' $t\tilde{a}r\tilde{a}$ and $t\tilde{o}r\tilde{o}$; 'his' u-na; 'your' $tum\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$, and so on. Note also \tilde{o} , he; u-na and $t\tilde{i}$ - $n\tilde{e}$, by him; $y\tilde{e}$, this; $y\tilde{e}$ - $ky\tilde{o}$, to this; $j\tilde{e}$, who, etc.

The verb substantive is chha as in Gujarātī and the Khāndēśī of Nimar. Chha (or chhē) is used for all persons and numbers of the present tense. The past tense is, singular, 1, hōtō, or tō; 2, hōtās; 3, hōtō, hōtā, thō, and huyā; plural, 1, hōtō; 2, hōtā; 3, hōtā.

The present tense of finite verbs is formed by adding chha to the old present; thus, hũ jāu-chha, I go; tu jāi-chha, thou goest; ō jāi-chha, he goes. Other forms are hũ maras, I die; tu rahi-ch, thou remainest; ō āwas, he comes; hāmī mārū, we strike; hũ māras chhē, I am striking.

The past tense is formed by adding the suffixes \bar{a} or $y\bar{a}$; thus, \bar{o} $l\bar{a}gy\bar{a}$, he began; $gay\bar{o}$, $gay\bar{a}$, he went; $rah\bar{a}$, he remained; \bar{o} didu nahi, that was not given; $h\bar{u}$ $t\bar{a}ri$ $s\bar{e}v\bar{a}$ kari, I did thy service, etc.

There are only a few instances of a future. Thus, kawhas, I will say; mārūs, I will strike; hāin, I shall be; āpuṇ ānand karō, we shall make merry. The last mentioned form karō is probably simply the first person plural of the present. In āpun khāī pīī majā kari, let us eat and drink and make merry, kari seems to correspond to the Khāndēsī future ending in ī.

The verbal noun is formed as in Khāndēśī. Thus, suk³vā, to say; karāvā and karvā-nā, to make; aḍ²chan paḍyā lāgī, distress began to arise. In poshākh āṅg-ma mēl³nō, put a cloth on his body, the form ending in nō seems to be a future participle passive, corresponding to Marāṭhī forms ending in vā.

The conjunctive participle is formed as in Khāndēśī. Thus, $w\bar{a}t\bar{i}$, having divided; achīn, having been; karin, having done. Note also aikiyē, having heard, where the suffix \tilde{e} of the case of the agent has been substituted for n.

The specimen which follows will probably be sufficient to give an idea of the character of the dialect.

RANAWAT.

This dialect is spoken by the Khiste Brāhmans of the Burhanpur Tahsil of Nimar. The number of speakers has been estimated for the use of this Survey at 500.

Ranāwat is, in all essential points, identical with the current Khāndēšī of the Burhanpur Tahsil. The following peculiarities should be noted:—

Final vowels in postpositions are often dropped; thus, $ty\bar{a}l$ and $ty\bar{a}-l\bar{e}$, to him; $jam\bar{a}n$ for $jam\bar{a}-n\bar{a}$, of the property.

N is often cerebral; thus, mā-nā, my.

Note also the y in forms such as ghar-myā, in the house; lāgyā and lāgā, he began, etc. There are no traces of the oblique plural form ending in s. A form ending in āt or hāt seems to be used instead; thus, majūr-hāt-lē, to the servants; lōkē-hāt-nī gardī, a crowd of people; chhōk²ryāt-lē, to the daughters. The suffix of the case of the agent is ē; thus, bāpē, by the father. Note also the postposition warā-mē in śuddhi-warā-mē, on his senses; tyā-nī warā-mē, thereupon. The suffix nī in tyā-nī in the last instance is the usual oblique form of the genitive suffix.

The plural of strong masculine bases ends in \tilde{a} ; thus, $gh\tilde{o}d\tilde{a}$, a horse and horses. With regard to pronouns we may note the plural forms $ty\tilde{a}$ - $n\tilde{a}$, their; $ty\tilde{a}t$ - $l\tilde{e}$, to them, etc.

The verb substantive is chhau, I am, second and third persons chhē or chha; plural, 1, chhējēchh; 2 and 3, chhētēchh. The past tense is chhā and thā, used for all persons and numbers.

Similarly chh is used in the present tense of finite verbs instead of Khāndēśī s; thus, mārachh and mārachha, I, thou, or he, strikes; plural, 1, mārajēchh, 2 and 3, māratēchh. In the plural forms the final chh is often, in all such forms, replaced by ch; thus, tyā māratēch, they strike,

The past tense is formed as in Khāndēśī. Note, however, the forms ending in $y\bar{a}$; thus, $l\bar{a}g\bar{a}$ and $l\bar{a}gy\bar{a}$, began; puchya, it was asked.

'To strike' is given as mār'wa, and the future of that verb is, singular, 1, mār'sū; 2, mār'sī; 3, mārai; plural, 1, mār'sū; 2, mār'sō; 3, mār'tī.

Note finally the form khuśi manāwa, let us make merry.

In all essential points, however, the specimen which follows will show that Ranāwat closely agrees with ordinary Khāndēśī.

Bhīls are the principal inhabitants of the Surgana State and of the northern part of Nasik, and they are also found in the Dangs State. Their dialect is very closely related to Khāndēśī. It will be sufficient to draw attention to a few points.

There is a tendency to clip final vowels; thus, tyā-n and tyā-na, by him; may mar, I die.

V is dropped before i, \bar{e} , and y; thus, istu, fire; $\bar{\imath}s$, twenty; $yap\bar{a}r$, business.

The inflexion of nouns is, broadly speaking, the same as in Khāndēśī. Note, however, the dative suffix ta. Thus, ābās-nā, of the father; chākaras-ta, to the servants; pātil-nī ghar, at the Patil's house. The sense of gender is weak. Thus, we find hai (fem. and n.) diwas (m.), this day; sampatti wāṭi dinā, property having-divided was-given.

The present tense of the verb substantive is formed as follows:-

Singular, 1. āsa, or śāūsa Plural, 1. āsat, sat(as)
2. āsa(s), śās
2. āsat, sat(as)
3. āsa, sa
3. āsat, sat(as)

The present tense of finite verbs is formed as in Khāndēśī; thus, $m\bar{a}ras$, plural $m\bar{a}r^atas$ from $m\bar{a}r^an\bar{a}$, to strike. We, however, also find forms such as $j\bar{a}s$, we, or you, go; $j\bar{a}t$, they go; bharat, they fill.

The past tense is formed as in Khāndēśī; thus, rahinā, he remained; $l\bar{a}g\bar{a}$, he began; $gay\bar{o}l$ and $gay\bar{e}l$, he had gone, etc. Marāṭhī, or mixed Marāṭhī, forms are $l\bar{a}g^{o}la$, they began; $j\bar{a}y^{o}l\bar{a}$, they were; $wan^{o}l\bar{a}$, they came, etc.

The active and the passive constructions are sometimes confounded. Thus, mul sāngonu, the-son it-was-said, the son said. The impersonal passive construction is sometimes used with neuter verbs, as also occurs in Rājasthānī. Thus, tyān gayā, by-him it-was-gone, he went.

The future agrees with Khāndēśī. Thus, from mār nā to strike:-

Singular, 1. $m\bar{a}r^{\sigma}s\bar{u}$ Plural 1. $m\bar{a}r^{\sigma}s\bar{u}(t)$ 2. $m\bar{a}r\bar{s}s$, $m\bar{a}r^{\sigma}s\bar{s}s$ 2. $m\bar{a}r^{\sigma}s\bar{a}s$, $m\bar{a}r^{\sigma}s\bar{a}s$ 3. $m\bar{a}r^{\sigma}s\bar{s}s$ 3. $m\bar{a}r^{\sigma}s\bar{s}s$ 3. $m\bar{a}r^{\sigma}s\bar{s}s$ 3. $m\bar{a}r^{\sigma}s\bar{s}s$

Other forms will be easily recognized as identical with, or corresponding to, those used in Khandesi.

I am indebted to Mr. A. H. A. Simcox, I.C.S., for an excellent specimen of the Bhil dialect of the northern part of Nasik, about Malegaon.

BAGALANI OR NAHARI.

This is the dialect of the ancient kingdom of Baglan, comprising the present Taluka of Satana and parts of Malegaon, Kalwan and Pimpalner. The name Nahari is stated to be a corruption of Nyahadi, a name given by the people along the Tapti to those who live along the small mountain rivers in Baglan. Nahari, therefore, probably means 'river-language.'

It has been returned as a separate dialect from the Peint Taluka in Nasik and from the Surgana State. The following are the revised figures:—

Nasik								10,000
Surgana		156	1000					3,000
						Тот	ΛL	13,000

In the south of Peint Taluka the dialect gradually merges into Marāthī. In the north it becomes more and more like Khāndēśī, and may be considered as a form of that language. I am indebted to Mr. A. H. A. Simcox, I.C.S., for two specimens, both prepared in Baglan. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, only the first few lines of which have been reproduced. The second is a conversation between a villager and a wayfarer.

The Brāhmans of Khandesh are said to be able to understand Bāgalānī without difficulty, and the dialect does not differ much from Khāndēśī. We may only note forms such as $m\bar{\imath}$ śēūs, I am; $t\tilde{\imath}$ śās, thou art; āmi śijēs, we are; and the imperative of verbs ending in \bar{a} , which add y; thus, $dz\bar{a}y$, go; $kh\bar{a}y$, eat, etc.

A. -There is no need to walk. This is a great trade route, and many carts pass both ways every day. Some-one will let you sit in his cart.

B .- Very well, let us go and dine at your house.

BHILT OF KHANDESH.

A large portion of the population of Khandesh has been reported as speaking various dialects of Bhīlī. Some of them, viz., Pāwrī, Māwchī, and Kōnkaṇī, have already been dealt with in the preceding pages. The Wārlis are said to speak a form of Māwchī. No further details are, however, available, and the estimated number of speakers in Khandesh has, therefore, been added to the figures for Wārlī in Thana, which is so largely influenced by Marāṭhī that it has been dealt with in connexion with that language. See Vol. vii, pp. 141 and ff. The same remarks apply to Kāthōdī.

The Bhils of Khandesh may, according to the District Gazetteer, be arranged in three groups, Plains Bhils, Hill and Forest tribes, and mixed tribes. We are here only concerned with the two former groups.

The Bhīls of the plains are found in small numbers in almost all the villages of Central and South Khandesh. They can scarcely be distinguished from the low caste Hindus among whom they live. Their language seems everywhere to be that of their neighbours.

Specimens have been received from the Pachora and Chalisgaon Talukas, and they are written in a form of speech which is practically identical with Khāndēśī.

The Chalisgaon specimens transliterate the palatals as in Marāṭhī; thus, dzō, who; tsānd, moon. They also evince a tendency towards aspiration; thus, tyā-mha, among them; tyā mārhīt, they will strike.

In Pachora we find the Gujarātī particle j used in addition to the common ch which Khāndēśī shares with Marāṭhī; thus, tu- $nh\bar{a}$ -j, thine-indeed.

The inflexion of nouns is the same as in Khāndēśī, with the same loose conception of gender. The oblique plural of masculine and neuter bases, however, ends in as or $\bar{a}s$, and not in $\bar{e}s$; thus, $m\bar{a}n^asas-l\bar{a}$, to the men; $duk^aras-na$, by the swine. The suffix of the dative is usually $l\bar{a}$, that of the ablative $th\bar{i}n$, or, sometimes, sa; thus, $p\bar{o}r\bar{i}s-l\bar{a}$, to daughters; $kh\bar{e}t$ -mayī-thīn, from in the field; $\bar{a}nand$ -sa, with joy.

The oblique form of adjectives and words used as adjectives ends in i; thus, $ty\bar{a}-n\bar{i}$ $b\bar{a}b\bar{a}-l\bar{a}$, to his father. There are, however, many instances of inconsistency. Thus, $t\bar{o}$ $m\bar{a}nus-na$, by that man; $dz\bar{o}$ $\bar{a}nd\bar{o}r-n\bar{i}$, by which son, the son by whom.

With regard to pronouns, we may note āmhu, we; tumh, tumhu, and tumha, you; jō and jī, both used for the neuter of the relative pronoun, etc.

Verbs commonly add an s in the second person singular. Thus sa, I am, he is, but sas, thou art; plural sat. The past tense of the verb substantive is $as^at\bar{o}l$ and $as^an\bar{o}l$, plural $as^atal\bar{a}$ and $as^anal\bar{a}$.

The present tense of finite verbs is formed in the same way as in the case of the verb substantive. Thus, mī māra, I strike; tū jās, he goes; tō jāy, he goes; mārat, we, you, and they, strike.

The pluperfect seems to be used as an ordinary past; thus, $t\bar{u}$ gayās and gayōl, thou wentest; $t\bar{o}$ gayā and gayōl, he went; $ty\bar{a}$ gayāt, and gayʾlā, they went.

The past tense of transitive verbs is often actively construed; thus, may tu-nī sēwā kar^anā, I did thy service; tyā mār^anāt, they struck. On the other hand we find tyā-nī sāṅg^awā lāgā, him-by to-say it-was-began, he began to say.

In Chalisgaon s is often added instead of ni or san in the conjunctive participle. Thus, uthis, having arisen; bolais, having called.

In all essential points, however, the so-called Bhilodi closely agrees with Khandeśi. The specimen which follows has been received from the Pachora Taluka. It is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son. A specimen received from Chalisgaon will be found below on pp. 155 and ff.

The specimen received from Chalisgaon closely agrees with those forwarded from Pachora. The only difference is the pronunciation of the palatals, which, according to the transliterated text, in Chalisgaon is the same as in Marāṭhī.

The hill and forest tribes of Bhīls are chiefly found in the Satpuras. Specimens have only been received in Pāwrī, Māwchī, Dēhawāļī, and Kōṭalī. The two former dialects have already been dealt with, and specimens of Dēhawāļī and Kōṭalī will be given below. Wārlī and Kāthōḍī have been described as dialects of Marāṭhī. See Vol. vii, pp. 130 and ff.

The remaining Satpura tribes which were returned for the use of this Survey are as follows:—

				Nam	e of I	lialect.					Number of Speakers
Mathawāḍ	1.							12			20,000
Nāli		1.01				5.4					10,000
Kāyalī			100		¥	4					25,000
									To	TAL	 55,000

No specimens have been forwarded in any of those dialects, and later information from the district is to the effect that they do not any longer exist. It is therefore probable that the various names of the hill dialects are only local denominations of slightly varying forms of Khāndēśī. Such a conclusion is made probable by the fact that Kōṭalī is not very different from Khāndēśī. All the tribes in question have, therefore, been put down simply as Bhīls in the figures given above on p. 5.

AUTHORITY-

RIGBY, LIEUT. C. P., —On the Satpoora Mountains. Transactions of the Bombay Geographical Society. Vol. ix, 1850, pp. 69 and ff. Contains Vocabularies of Pauri, Wurralee (Warli), and Bhili.

DEHAWALT.

The plains below the Satpura range in Taloda, Nandurbar, and Mewas, of the district of Khandesh is locally called the $d\tilde{e}h$, i.e., $d\tilde{e}s$, country. The dialect of the Dehawāļs, the inhabitants of the $d\tilde{e}h$, is known as Dehawāļī. The number of speakers has been estimated at 45,000.

Dēhawāļī is closely related to other Bhīl dialects such as Māwchī, Rāṇī, etc.

Two excellent specimens have been prepared by Mr. G. B. Brahme and further annotated by Mr. A. H. A. Simcox, I.C.S. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and the second is a popular tale which was obtained from Bapu Gumba Padavi, the Rāja of Singapur and other states in the Taloda taluka.

Pronunciation.—Dēhawāļī is characterized by the drawling pronunciation of final vowels and the free use of the Anunāsika. Compare $h\tilde{a}\tilde{a}$, yes; $m\tilde{a}h\tilde{u}\tilde{u}$, a man; $p\tilde{o}w\tilde{o}h\tilde{o}$, a brother; $m\tilde{a}\tilde{a}$, $m\tilde{a}\tilde{a}$, and $m\tilde{a}\tilde{a}$, my; $l\tilde{a}gy\tilde{a}$ and $l\tilde{a}gy\tilde{a}$, they began; $j\tilde{a}t\tilde{o}-h\tilde{o}$ and $j\tilde{a}t\tilde{o}-h\tilde{o}$, he goes, etc.

The short a is apparently always distinctly pronounced, or, when final, replaced by ē or ō; thus, dēwa, dēvē, and dēwō, God.

An initial h is commonly dropped, and aspirated soft consonants are replaced by the corresponding unaspirated hard ones. Thus, $\bar{a}th\bar{e}$, hand; $\bar{a}h\eta\bar{e}$, to laugh; $k\bar{a}l\bar{a}$, Marāṭhī $gh\bar{a}l\bar{a}$, put; $p\bar{u}t\bar{e}$, devil; $pukh\bar{e}$, with hunger, etc.

S becomes h, and an r between vowels is often dropped. Thus, $k\bar{e}h\bar{e}$, hair; $hun\bar{o}$, dog; $k\bar{o}\bar{o}$, Marāṭhī ghar, house; kii, having done; $chh\bar{o}\bar{o}$, son; $m\bar{o}\bar{o}$, die, etc.

The cerebral l is not regularly used. Thus, māļā and mālā, a floor; dōā, an eye. Compare Khāndēśī.

Nouns.—Strong masculine bases are formed as in Gujarātī. Thus, $b\bar{a}hak\bar{o}$, a father; $b\bar{a}hak\bar{a}$, fathers. Feminine nouns ending in \bar{i} form their plural in \bar{a} ; thus $p\bar{o}yar\bar{i}$, daughter; $p\bar{o}yary\bar{a}$, daughters.

There is apparently no neuter gender. Forms such as $p\bar{o}yar\tilde{o}$, child; \tilde{i} , this thing, can be either masculine or feminine.

The case of the agent is identical with the oblique base, and the genitive is formed by doubling the final vowel. Thus, $b\bar{a}hak\bar{a}$ or $b\bar{a}hak\bar{a}$, by the father; $b\bar{a}hak\bar{a}\bar{a}$, of the father; $p\bar{o}yar\bar{i}i$, of the daughter; $d\bar{e}w\bar{o}\bar{o}$, of the God.

The suffix of the dative is $n\bar{e}$ or $l\bar{e}$; that of the ablative $d\bar{e}kh\tilde{u}\tilde{u}$; and the locative is formed by adding $m\bar{e}$ or \bar{e} ; thus, $b\bar{a}hak\bar{a}-n\bar{e}$ and $b\bar{a}hak\bar{a}-l\bar{e}$, to the father; $b\bar{a}hak\bar{a}-d\bar{e}kh\tilde{u}\tilde{u}$, from the father; $k\bar{o}\bar{o}-m\bar{e}$, in the house.

Pronouns.-The personal pronouns are :-

$\tilde{a}\tilde{i}$, I	$t\widetilde{\vec{u}}$, thou	tō, he māyữ, by me	tuyữ, by thee	$tiy\widetilde{a}$, by him mā-nē, to me	tu-le, to thee	tiyā-lē, to him mãã, my	tõõ, thy	tiyāā, his āmū, we	tumū, you	tē, they āmāã, our	tumôð, your	tiyãā, their

Other pronouns are \tilde{o} , this; \tilde{i} , this thing; $k\tilde{e}d\tilde{o}$, fem. $k\tilde{e}d\tilde{i}$, who? $k\tilde{a}y$, what? \tilde{I} , this thing, is perhaps originally feminine.

Verbs.—The verb substantive is āhī; past āthō, plural āthā.

The present tense of finite verbs is formed from the present participle by adding $h\bar{o}$, plural $h\bar{a}$; thus, $j\bar{a}t\bar{o}-h\bar{o}$, I go, thou goest, he goes; plural, $j\bar{a}t\bar{a}-h\bar{a}$. In the singular, however, the old present is in frequent use. Thus, $th\bar{o}k\tilde{u}$ or $th\bar{o}k\tilde{u}-h\tilde{u}$, I strike; $th\bar{o}k\bar{o}-h\bar{o}$, thou strikest; $\bar{a}w\bar{o}$, if thou come; $th\bar{o}k\bar{e}-h\bar{e}$, he strikes; $p\bar{o}d\bar{e}$, if it falls. The instances show that the old present is used as a conjunctive present, while an ordinary present is effected by adding $h\tilde{u}$, second person $h\bar{o}$, third $h\bar{e}$.

The suffix of the past tense is yō, fem. i; thus, giyō, he went; kālī, she was put.

Other forms are khāhalē, they ate; ālō-hō, I have come.

The future tense of thokualo, to strike, is given as follows:-

Singular. 1. thokehe

Plural. 1. thokuhu

2. thököhö

2. thokaha

3. thōkīi

3. thokii

Other forms will be easily understood from the specimens which follow, and it is not necessary to go into detail.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

In a village there lived a man called Gimbō. His wife's name was Jānū. Gimbō was poor and somewhat dull. But when he had got some work to do, he did not leave off till he had finished it.

One winter husband and wife were occupied in cutting the shrubs' and cleaning the four boundaries of their land. In order to get seed-corn, they worked with a gentleman and saved their wages till they got enough to buy a big pot full of rice.

Towards the rains in the month of Jeshth, they burnt the shrubs and cleared the ground. When the black clouds began to rain, the husband and wife went to the field to sow the rice. Then cucumbers were sown. During the raining of the black clouds all things were sprouting. The grasses and shrubs in the woods were sprouting, and the forest began to get a deep green hue.

When the rice began to appear, Gimbō built a high platform in the field and said to Jānū, 'henceforward I shall live on the platform in the field and practise austerities. Therefore you must not come into the field. When you bring some provisions for me, then you should only proceed so far as the boundary and put it there. Then you should beat on a dry stick and go away. I shall then go to the boundary and fetch the provisions. When the rice ripens, I shall thresh it and come home. In the meantime, if there is some urgent business, then go to the boundary and shout loudly, and I shall answer.' Having said so Gimbō began to live on the platform in the field.

On the boundary of that field there was a sanctuary to a boundary god.² He went there day and night, cleaned the place, worshipped the god, and prayed. When he was going to return he used to say, 'O boundary god, I have sown a potful of rice. If I can get a khāṇḍī³ of rice out of it, well and good. If not, then I shall cut thy nose with this knife.' And so saying he placed a knife which he held in his hand on the nose of the god's image. Thus he did day and night.

In this way the time went on, and the rice was weeded and ripened. When the time came for cutting it, then he always went to the sanctuary, day and night, worshipped, and at the time of returning he said, 'O god, till to-day I have been serving thee day and night. And indeed, if I get a khāndī out of my potful of seed, it is all right. If not, then I shall not leave thee without cutting thy nose.' So saying he went to work on the field.

The god began to think, 'this man must be mad, that he asks a khāndī rice out of a pot of seed. And he threatens me and says, "if there comes a khāndī rice out of my pot of seed, then it is well. If not, then I shall cut thy nose," and he places his knife on my nose and makes a mark on it. He is practising austerities and serving me. I cannot, therefore, do him any harm. But it is meet that I should frighten him. And then he will give up that bad habit.'

Then in the dead of night the god assumed a bear's appearance and went to where Gimbō was sleeping on the platform in the field and began to roar. Then Gimbō said, 'I do not know anything about a bear. Thou art the god and hast come to frighten me, but I am not afraid. Till now I asked for a khāṇḍī out of my pot, but now I must have two.'

¹ Chômôtê corresponds to dāḍh in the Konkan. It means the ground burnt in preparation of the seed, but also the loppings and grass strewn over the ground to be burnt, and the corn grown on such ground.

^{*} A khāṇḍī is equal to twenty maunds.

The god went on roaring till cock's crow, and then went off. On the following day he, in the dead of night, assumed the form of a tiger, went to the platform, and began to roar. Gimbō then said, 'thou hast come in the form of a tiger, but I have found thee out and am not afraid. Thou art the god. Yesterday I demanded two khāndīs out of my potful, but now I will not leave off till I get four.'

The god again kept on roaring until cock's crow, and then went away.

The god now began to reflect, 'I am trying to frighten him, and he is not afraid, but goes on asking the double amount. The more I frighten him, the more he will increase his demands, and he will not run away.' Therefore he remained silent, and the crops got ripe. Gimbō cut the rice and began threshing.

One day the procession of king Pānaṭhō¹ passed by there. The boundary god went to him and said, 'a man has tilled a ground close to my abode, and he has sown a potful of rice there. In order to watch the rice he has built a platform in the field, and he stays there. Day and night he practises austerities and comes and worships me. When he goes away, he says, 'I have sown a potful. If I get a khāṇḍī out of it, well and good. If not, I shall cut thy nose. And he applies his knife to the nose of my image. I have tried to frighten him once or twice, but he is not to be brought out of his mind, and goes on increasing his demands.'

King Pānaṭhō said to the god, 'if he is so strong in his austerities and so obstinate we must yield to him.' And both gods went to where Gimbō was threshing.

When Gimbō saw king Pānaṭhō, he ran and fell to his feet. Then the gods entered the threshing floor and sat down. Gimbō first worshipped king Pānaṭhō, and then the boundary god, and remained standing folding his hands. King Pānaṭhō said, 'We will give you fame and prosperity, and your progeny shall increase.' And so saying the gods departed.

Gimbo then threshed and winnowed the rice, and four khāndīs came out. Again he worshipped at the abode of the boundary god, took the rice and all implements with him to his house, and settled down.

From that day his estate, his crops, and his money went on increasing, he got many children, and lived in happiness.

KOTALI.

This is the dialect of the Kōṭals, a wild Bhīl tribe in the Satpuras, in the northern part of Khandesh. They collect gum and wax in the forests and sell it in the plains. Their number has been estimated at 40,000.

So far as we can judge from the specimens received from Khandesh, Kōṭalī is almost identical with Khāndēśī.

Two specimens, a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son and a story, have been printed below, and they will not present any serious difficulty to the student.

It will be sufficient to draw attention to a few details in which Kōṭalī differs from Khāndēśī.

Ya is substituted for ē in yak, one.

The cerebral ! is sometimes replaced by !; thus, pal, run.

The distinction of gender is apparently still less consistent than is the case in Khān-dēśī. Thus we find tu- $n\bar{\imath}$ $nauk^{o}r\bar{\imath}$ ma-na $kar^{o}n\bar{a}$, thy service (fem.) me-by was-done (masc.).

The oblique plural of masculine bases ends in ās or as, and not in ēs; thus, pōrās-maīn, from among the sons; chōras-lā, to the thieves. The suffix of the ablative is thīn or paīn; thus, Talōdyā-thīn, from Taloda; bā-paīn, from a father.

Strong adjectives, including the genitive, have an oblique form ending in i; thus, $m\bar{a}nus-n\bar{i}$ ghar, in a man's house. The use of this form is, however, rather inconsistent. Thus we find $t\bar{i}$ $p\bar{o}ry\bar{a}$, that son, in the nominative; but $t\bar{o}$ dhan \bar{i} -na, by that rich man, in the case of the agent.

The pronouns are mainly the same as in Khandesi. Note, however, mi-na, by me; tu-na, by thee; amu, we; tumu, you; hai, this (all genders), etc.

The verb substantive forms its present as follows, singular sa, plural sat. The second person singular has also the form sas. The past tense is as not, plural as natā.

The present tense of finite verbs is formed as in Khāndēśī in the singular. Thus, māras, I strike, thou strikest, he strikes. The plural ends in at; thus, mārat, they strike. In the first person plural we find forms such as mārajē, we strike; jāut, we go. Forms such as mī mara, I die; mī jāy, I go; tō jāy, he goes; but tū jās, thou goest, correspond to the present singular of the verb substantive.

In the past tense we find forms such as gayā and gayōl, went, apparently used without any difference of meaning. In tu-na mēnḍh rū dinās, thou gavest a kid, the suffix s of the second person singular is used as in Marāṭhī. Dinās might, however, also be a wrong transliteration instead of dinā sa,

In the future we may note the form $t\bar{u}$ $m\bar{a}r^{\circ}s\bar{\imath}s$, thou wilt strike. In other respects Kōṭalī seems to agree with Khāndēśī.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A Musalman sepoy once travelled from Taloda to Nandurbar. While he was still walking on the road the sun set, and he found himself alone. After some time he saw four thieves standing before him. They seized him there and then and beat him soundly, and took all his clothes from him. Then one of the thieves drew his sword, another showed him a knife, and they said to him, 'Ho, sepoy, dance before us. If not, we will kill you.' Out of fear the sepoy then began to dance. At last he fell on his knees and obtained his freedom, whereafter he returned to Taloda. The police-officer of Taloda learned of the affair and had the thieves seized and reported the matter to the Magistrate. He tried the thieves and sentenced them to six months' imprisonment.

The Bhīl dialects just dealt with are little more than ordinary Khāndēśī. Before dealing with that form of speech we will, however, have to mention some Bhīl dialects of a slightly different kind.

The Bhīlī of Nimar is now almost a Marāṭhī dialect. It differs from other Bhīl dialects described in the preceding pages as links between Gujarātī-Bhīlī and the broken Marāṭhī dialects of Thana, in having, to a much greater extent, assumed the inner form of Marāṭhī, e.g., in using the Marāṭhī oblique form. On the other hand, it is easy to see that the base of the dialect is some form of Gujarātī Bhīlī.

The Bhili dialects spoken in Berar are probably of the same kind as Panchālī, dealt with above (pp. 138 and ff.). Some of the Bhils of Basim, however, speak a form of Gōṇḍī. Specimens will be given in connexion with that form of speech.

Lastly, there are four related dialects spoken outside the proper Bhīl country, viz., Bāorī, Habūrā, Pār *dhī and Siyālgirī. They have been somewhat influenced by other dialects. In most respects, however, they are of the same kind as the Bhīlī of Mahikantha and neighbourhood.

The dialect of the Bhīls of Nimar is a mixed form of speech. The base is some dialect related to the western forms of Bhīlī. Compare forms such as khēt-bhītar, in the fields; chalyōl, gone; karīna, having done. It has, however, been so largely mixed with the Mārāṭhī spoken in the Central Provinces that it might with equal justice be regarded as a Marāṭhī dialect. Compare forms such as ādomyā-la, to a man; wāṭā, a share; gēlā, he went; hōlā, he became; kahīn, I will tell, etc.

It will be quite sufficient to give the first lines of the Parable of the Prodigal Son as an illustration of this mixed form of speech.

BĀORĪ.

This is the dialect of the Bāwarias, a hunting and criminal tribe of the Panjab and the Muzaffarnagar District of the United Provinces. In Rajputana Bāorī has been returned as the lauguage of 400 Moghius in Kishangarh. The Moghius are a similar tribe; compare Sir Henry M. Elliot, Memoirs on the History, Folk-Lore and Distribution of the Races of the North-Western Provinces of India. Edited by John Beames, Vol. i, London, 1869, p. 9.

The fullest account of the Bawarias will be found in Mr. W. Crooke's, The Tribes and Castes of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, Vol. i, Calcutta, 1886, pp. 228 ff.

The number of speakers has been estimated for the use of this Survey as follows:-

PANJAB AND FE Hissar											931
The second second	*				1.	13/0		**
Kapurthal	a.					32			3.6		80
Nabha											30

	Sar								15			104
RAJPUTANA-
Kishangari	1		1		•	2			241			- 400
		20								m	OTAL	43,003

The estimates from Firozpur and probably also from Faridkot are, however, too high. At the last Census (1901) only 4,952 speakers of Bāorī were counted in the Panjab and its feudatories. The Bāwarias are a vagrant tribe, and it is, therefore, difficult to form an accurate estimate of their number. In the Panjab they sometimes call their language Thallī, and they are there said to have come from the Thal or Bikaner desert.

This is, however, in no way borne out by their language, which is certainly a form of the Gujarātī Bhīlī. Several specimens of it have been received, and they all have the same basis. The specimens received from Lahore are the purest, although that district is the one which is farthest from the Bhīl country. In the specimens received from the other districts of the Panjab, the language is in its essence the same, but is more or less mixed with the Panjābī spoken by the surrounding population.

The Bāwariās have no written character of their own, and some of the specimens have been written in the Persian, some in the Gurmukhī, and some in the Dēva-nāgarī character. I hence only record them here in the Roman character, as the most convenient one.

The following two specimens come from Lahore and have been very carefully prepared. After being faired out, they were again checked on the spot by Mr. Jowala Sahai Misr, B.A., Extra Assistant Commissioner, and give an excellent idea of the dialect. It will be seen that, save in a few matters of spelling, it does not differ from Gujarātī Bhīlī. We may note the following (which are only a few out of many) characteristics of the dialect.

The letter s regularly becomes \underline{kh} , as in \underline{kh} at, for sat, seven; $vi\underline{kh}$, for vis, twenty; $kh\bar{e}\underline{kh}$ for $kh\bar{e}s$ or $k\bar{e}s$, hair; $manu\underline{kh}\bar{o}$, a man. Sometimes the \underline{kh} is weakened to h (as in Northern Gujarātī), as in $h\tilde{a}b^sli\bar{o}$, he was heard; $h\bar{a}p\bar{a}i$, for $sip\bar{a}h\bar{i}$, a peon; $hark\bar{a}r$, the Government. Before i or \bar{e} , the s is sometimes preserved, as in $man^ss\bar{i}$, a woman; $s\bar{e}$, why? but $\underline{kh}\tilde{o}$, for $s\tilde{u}$, what? Ch and chh become s as in $s\bar{o}$ for $chh\tilde{o}$, I am; $pass\bar{e}$ for $pachchh\bar{e}$, afterwards. There is a tendency to prefer dentals to cerebrals as in $vitt\bar{i}$ or $v\bar{i}t\bar{i}$, for $v\bar{i}t\bar{i}$, a ring. There is no cerebral l.

Strong masculine nouns with a bases end in \bar{o} , not \bar{a} , with an oblique singular in \bar{a} not \bar{e} , as in $manu\underline{kh}\bar{o}$, a man; oblique singular $manu\underline{kh}\bar{a}$. When the noun is neuter the \bar{o} is usually nasalized as in $\underline{kh}\bar{o}n\bar{o}$, gold; $puchhi\bar{o}$, it was asked; $kih\bar{o}$, it was said. Gender is, however, carelessly observed. The plural of neuter nouns ends in \bar{a} , as in $rupai\bar{a}$, rupees; $lug^{o}r\bar{a}$, robes; $kh\bar{a}\underline{kh}^{a}r\bar{a}$, shoes.

The postposition of the genitive is $n\bar{o}$ or nau (feminine $n\bar{i}$, oblique masculine $n\bar{a}$). That of the dative is $n\bar{w}$, $n\bar{e}$, nai or $n\bar{a}$. $N\bar{w}$ is evidently borrowed from the surrounding Panjābī. The dative suffix is often weakened to a mere n, as in $tih\bar{o}n$, to them; $ch\bar{a}r^ow\bar{a}-n$, to graze. The suffix of the ablative is $th\bar{o}$, which agrees in gender and case with the governing noun, as in $tih\bar{o}-m\bar{a}i-th\bar{e}$ $nan\bar{o}r\bar{e}$, by the younger from among them. Note that, as in the last example, the agent case ends in \bar{e} . So also the locative, as in $ghar\bar{e}$, in a house.

The pronouns are-

1st person, $h\tilde{u}$, I; $m\tilde{i}$, by me; $mann\tilde{e}$, to me; $mh\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$ or $m\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$, my; $ham\tilde{e}$, we, by us; $ham\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$, our.

2nd person, $ta\tilde{u}$ or $t\tilde{u}$, thou; $t\tilde{i}$ or $t\tilde{e}n$, by thee; $t\tilde{a}h^{a}r\tilde{o}$ or $t\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$, thy; $tam\tilde{e}$, $tamm\tilde{e}$ or $tamh\tilde{e}$, you, by you; $tauh\tilde{e}$, you (accusative plural); $tam\tilde{a}h^{a}r\tilde{o}$, your.

There are several demonstrative pronouns. Thus, $y\bar{o}h$, he; $inh\bar{o}$, $ih^an\bar{o}$, his. $T\bar{i}\bar{o}$, $t\bar{i}\bar{o}h$, or $ty\bar{o}h$, he, that; $tinn\bar{o}$, $t\bar{i}n\bar{o}$, his; $t\bar{i}nn\bar{e}$, $tinh\bar{e}$, $t\bar{i}n\bar{e}$, to him, by him, in that; $t\tilde{e}$, by him; $tih\bar{a}$, that (oblique adjective); $t\bar{e}$, $t\bar{e}h\bar{e}$, they, by them; $t\bar{e}h\bar{o}$, $tih\bar{o}$ (oblique plural); $t\bar{e}h\bar{o}n\bar{o}$, $tih\bar{o}n\bar{o}$, their; $tih\bar{o}n$, to them. $P\bar{e}ll\bar{o}$ (=Gujarātī $p\bar{e}l\bar{o}$), he, that; oblique $p\bar{e}ll\bar{a}$, agent $p\bar{e}ll\bar{e}$.

Hīō, hīōh, or hyōh is 'this'; oblique singular hyā or hā.

Other forms are $j\bar{o}$, who; $j\bar{\imath}n\bar{o}$, of whom; kaun, who? $k\bar{\imath}n\bar{o}$, whose? kaun $kan-th\bar{o}$, from near whom? $\underline{kh}\tilde{o}$, what? $k\bar{\imath}n\bar{e}$, by anyone; $kih\bar{e}$ waq $t\bar{e}$, at any time; $k\bar{a}\tilde{\imath}s$, anything.

Verbs are conjugated just as in Gujarātī Bhīlī. The verb substantive is $s\tilde{o}$ (for $chh\tilde{o}$), I am; $utt\tilde{o}$, was. When employed as an auxiliary $utt\tilde{o}$ becomes $t\tilde{o}$, as in $gi\tilde{o}$ - $t\tilde{o}$, had gone. The present definite is formed by conjugating the simple present (not the present participle) with the verb substantive. Thus, $m\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$ - $s\tilde{o}$, I am beating. The conjunctive participle ends in n, as in $v\tilde{e}ch\tilde{i}n$, having sold, or, more usually, the n is dropped as in $kar\tilde{i}$, having done. The past participle ends in $i\tilde{o}$, as in $m\tilde{a}ri\tilde{o}$, struck. Irregular are $kih\tilde{o}$, said; $didd\tilde{o}$, given; $lidd\tilde{o}$, taken.

The negative verb has $k\bar{o}$, at all, prefixed as in Rājasthānī. Thus, $k\bar{o}$ -didd \bar{o} -nahī, was not given at all. The Rājasthānī pleonastic suffix s (sometimes written \underline{kh}) is very common. Thus, $\underline{kh}\bar{a}r\bar{a}$ -s, all: $kad\bar{e}$ - \underline{kh} , ever.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

There was an animal under that bush. There is no canal in the district.

An old woman was telling the truth.

I took my dinner.

My daughter is 12 years old.

I heard his words.

There are two brothers of mine.

Yesterday I went to Chunian, where the Taḥṣīldār seized me. I had gone to sell two maunds of grain, and on my way back, the taḥṣīl peon met me at my house, and told me to attend the taḥṣīl as the Taḥṣīldār wanted me soon. I did not take my bread and went straight to Chunian. When I reached Chunian and presented myself before the Taḥṣīldār, he ašked me, 'do you know the Baori dialect?' I replied, 'yes, I will speak my own language.' The Taḥṣīldār told me 'will you sing a song in your own language? I have received an order from Government. Speak in your own language. You will be able to go to-day or to-morrow after I have done with you. The Government will be pleased, and will give you great peace.'

It is unnecessary to give further specimens of the Bāorī spoken in the Punjab. All those received closely resemble the foregoing ones, only being more or less mixed with Panjābī idioms. As Lahore is the most western locality from which Bāorī is reported, it will be sufficient to give one more specimen, a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son from the most eastern, the district of Muzaffarnagar, in the United Provinces. As Muzaffarnagar is in the Upper Dōāb, we shall not be surprised to find examples of the idiom of the vernacular Hindōstānī used in the district. Such is the frequent doubling of a medial consonant, with the consequent shortening of the preceding vowel, as in bābbā, a father; hottō, he was; minn-hē, to me; khettar, a field. In bābbā, as in the local vernacular Hindōstānī, the first ā, though written long, is pronounced short like the ā in the German word 'mann.' Other departures, also probably due to the influence of the local vernacular, are forms like minn-hē, for mannē, to me; tinn-hō for tihō, to them; maī, I, by me; hottō or huttō, for uttō, was.

In other respects, after allowance has been made for variations of spelling, the dialect is practically the same as that of Lahore.

HABÜŖĀ.

The Habūrā are a vagrant thieving tribe found chiefly in the Central Ganges-Jumna Doab.

In the Census of 1891 their number was reported to be as follows :-

Aligarh		-			2.63	23		-	-					868
Mathura	*8	12		59			0.					(4)		731

	100							1000					_
													-	_

They have a language of their own, which, however, was reported for the purposes of this Survey only from Aligarh, as spoken by 950 people. As they wander about a great deal, the difference between 950 and 868, the number given in the Census of 1891, needs no explanation.

The fullest account of the tribe will be found on pages 473 and ff. of Vol. II of Mr. Crooke's The Tribes and Castes of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh. Their origin is obscure. Mr. Crooke says that they have a regular Thieves' Latin of their own, but the list of words which he gives are nearly all ordinary Bhīlī.

I give, as a specimen, a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son received from Aligarh. It entirely bears out the impression conveyed by Mr. Crooke's list. The language is simply ordinary Gujarātī Bhīlī, and closely resembles Bāorī.

It has also the peculiar habit of doubling consonants which is present in the Upper Gangetic Doab, and to which reference has been made more than once. Thus $b\bar{a}bb\bar{o}$, a father; $hutt\bar{o}$, or $hitt\bar{o}$, was; $kh\bar{e}tadd\bar{o}$, for $kh\bar{e}t^*r\bar{o}$, a field; $diddh\bar{o}$, given; and so on. Before these doubled consonants long vowels (except \bar{a}) are shortened, and \bar{a} is pronounced like the a in the German 'mann.' As in Gujarátī Bhīlī, the letter s is regularly pronounced \underline{kh} like the ch in 'loch.' The neuter gender ends in \tilde{o} , as in $kahy\tilde{o}$, it was said. $Th\bar{a}r\bar{o}$, your, becomes $t\bar{a}rh\bar{o}$. There are no other peculiarities which deserve special notice.

PĀRADHĪ OR TĀKAŅKĀRĪ.

The Pāradhīs are a wandering tribe of fowlers in Chanda and Berar. They are mostly snarers and are therefore also called Phāsa Pāradhīs. Their dialect has been returned from the following districts:—

	Where spoken.												Number of speakers.
m .					101	943	*						(10)		25
Amraoti			4		14	2	16		•						500
Akola												-01			1,635
Illichpur					54			*2			4	- 14			1,000
Buldana												-	530		250
Vun					0										2,000
												То	TAL		5,410

The Țākankārīs are a similar tribe of vagrant mill-grinders. They have been returned as speaking a separate dialect from Amraoti, Akola, Ellichpur, and Buldana. The following are the revised figures:—

Amraoti		•						55		200
Akola						12				2,323
Ellichpur				100						500
Buldana					25					215
								To	TAL	3,238

Specimens have been received in both dialects from Akola. Another specimen, which has been forwarded from Melkapur in Buldana, professes to illustrate both dialects. And the specimens clearly show that this Pāradhī and Ṭākaṇkārī are in reality identical. By adding the figures just given we therefore arrive at the following total for the dialect:—

Pār*dhī Tākankāri	- 4		•		4	-				5,410
Ţākaņkārī				*					*	3,238
								Тот	AL	8,648

The dialect under consideration is a form of Gujarātī-Bhīlī. In some points it agrees with Khāndēśī, and there is also a slight admixture of Marāṭhī. This latter element is, however, insignificant, and is clearly a loan.

The characteristic features of the dialect will be seen from the specimens printed below, and I shall here only draw attention to a few points.

An s is very commonly replaced by kh, i.e. probably \underline{kh} ; thus, $pai\underline{kh}\bar{o}$, money; $\underline{kh}\bar{a}ml\bar{i}na$, having heard, Gujarātī $s\bar{a}bhal\bar{i}n\bar{e}$, and so on. The same substitution of kh for s also occurs in Siyālgirī. S is, however, often retained; thus, $s\bar{u}$, what; $d\bar{e}s$ and $d\bar{e}s$, country, etc. The real sound is probably that of ch in German 'ach,' and I have therefore written \underline{kh} . Compare the corresponding \underline{h} in the Bhīlī of Edar and neighbourhood.

Ch is sometimes interchangeable with s; thus, $j\bar{a}yach$ and $j\bar{a}s$, thou goest. It is, accordingly, possible that ch has the sound of s as in other Bhīl dialects.

V is dropped before palatal vowels; thus, ikh, twenty; iti, ring.

Nouns.—There is a tendency to replace the neuter by the masculine gender; thus, $ap-n\bar{o}$ $p\bar{e}t$, his own belly. On the whole, however, the genders are correctly distinguished.

The nominative is sometimes used instead of the case of the agent; thus, $b\bar{a}w\bar{o}\ didu$, the father gave (lit. it was given). The suffixes of the case of the agent are \bar{e} , $n\bar{e}$, and na; thus, $\bar{a}d^am\bar{i}$ - $y\bar{e}$, by the man; $dhan\bar{i}$ - $n\bar{e}$, by the rich man; ti-na, by him. Occasionally we also find $n\bar{o}$; thus, ti- $n\bar{o}$, by him.

The suffixes of the dative and the locative are n and na, ma and $m\bar{o}$, respectively; thus, $\bar{a}d^*m\bar{i}$ -n, to a man; $b\bar{a}w\bar{a}$ -na, to the father; muluk-ma, in the country; $gal\bar{a}$ - $m\bar{o}$, on the neck.

In most other respects the inflexion of nouns agrees with Gujarātī. Thus, $gh\bar{o}d\bar{o}$, a horse; $gh\bar{o}d\bar{a}$, horses. Occasionally, however, we find Marāṭhī forms such as $chhiy\bar{a}$, instead of the common $chhiy\bar{o}$, a son.

'I' is $h\widetilde{u}$; in Buldana, however, mi as in Marathi. Note the form $s\widetilde{u}$, what? The oblique form $ty\overline{a}$, that, is Marathi.

Verbs.—The usual form of the present tense of the verb substantive is chha in all persons and numbers. Other forms, however, also occur. Thus, $chh\tilde{u}$, I am; $chh\tilde{e}$ thou art, he is, they are, etc. Compare Gujarātī.

The present tense of finite verbs has many various forms. The regular ones of $m\bar{a}r^{o}w\tilde{u}$, to strike, are,—

 Sing. 1. mārūs.
 Plur. 1. mārīs.

 2. māras.
 2. mārōs.

 3. māras.
 3. māras.

Compare Khāndēśī and other Bhīl dialects. Ch is often substituted for s; thus, mārōch, you strike. See above.

The past tense is usually regular. Thus, $g\bar{e}y\bar{o}$ and $gay\bar{o}$, he went; $gay\bar{a}$, they went. The form ending in \bar{a} is, however, also used in the singular; thus, $rh\bar{a}$, he lived. Compare Nouns, above. On the other hand, we also find forms such as $\bar{a}y\bar{o}$, they came, and there seems to be a tendency to obliterate the difference between the two numbers. S is sometimes also added in the past tense; thus, $rahy\bar{a}s$, they lived.

The neuter form of the past tense sometimes ends in i instead of in yu; thus, ma-na pāp karī, by-me sin was done.

The conjunctive participle ends in $\bar{\imath}$ or $\bar{\imath}na$ ($\bar{\imath}n$); thus, $kar\bar{\imath}$ and $kar\bar{\imath}na$ ($kar\bar{\imath}n$), having done. Marāṭhī forms such as $j\bar{a}un$, having gone, also occur.

The verbal noun ends in $w\bar{a}$ and \bar{i} ; thus, $ch\bar{a}r\bar{a}w\bar{a}$ -n, in order to tend; $ad^{\circ}chan\ pad\bar{i}$ $l\bar{a}g\bar{i}$, distress began to come.

Other forms will be easily recognizable from the specimens.

The first of the specimens which follow is the beginning of a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which has been received from Melkapur in Buldana. It professes to illustrate both the dialects in question. The second is the deposition of a witness in Pāradhī, received from Akola. The third is a version of the Parable in Ṭākaṇkārī, received from Akola. It will be seen that it is written in the same dialect as the two preceding specimens.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

On a Friday night, about a fortnight ago, I, my wife, and two children were sleeping. About midnight my wife awakened me and said 'there is some noise in the house, and I heard foot-steps. Therefore arise.' I got up and looked towards the wall where I saw a hole. Then I understood that some one had broken into the house. There was no lamp burning, but there was a match box under the carpet. I quickly seized it and lighted a match. Then the accused went towards the hole in the wall. When I saw him, I seized his hand and said, 'now, thief, where are you going?' Thereupon we began to wrestle and I made great noise, so that my neighbours Sitaram and Vithōbā came. In the meantime my wife lighted the lamp and opened the door so that they could come in. Then I felt very strong (and overcame him). We found five pieces of cloth on him. They were worth five rupees and belonged to me.

I do not know the village or the name of the accused, because he is not of our village. I had no lamp burning therefore I lighted a match. Then I saw the accused near the hole. Therefore I could not light the lamp. The hole in the wall was large enough for a man to get through it with difficulty. The bar with which the hole in the wall was made has been produced in the Court. I found it in the bath-room.

Saipur.

A few Siyālgirs are also found in Suga and Simla in District Balasore.

The tribe seems to have immigrated into its present habitat some 150 years ago, and their language shows that they have come from Western India. It is, therefore, probable that they entered Bengal as camp-followers to the Bhonslas, who invaded Bengal in the middle of the eighteenth century.

Their features do not give any clue as to their origin. They now look like ordinary Bengali peasants.

Most of the preceding remarks have been taken from the following,-

AUTHORITY-

Geierson, George A.—Note on a Dialect of Gujarātī discovered in the District of Midnapur. Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. Ixvii, Part i, 1898, pp. 185 and ff.

Siyalgiri is derived from a dialect closely related to Gujarati-Bhili, and the tribe has probably originally come from the border districts between Central India, Rajputana, and the Bombay Presidency, the stronghold of the Bhil tribes. On their way towards the east they have come into contact with various tribes, and the results can be traced in their speech, which now presents a mixed appearance though the original base is easily recognizable.

The only source of our knowledge of Siyalgiri is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which has been forwarded by Babu Krishna Kisor Acharji, Secretary to the Midnapore District Board. See the paper quoted as Authority above.

The materials are not sufficient to solve all the problems connected with the dialect. There cannot, however, be any doubt with regard to its general character. The ensuing remarks are entirely based on the specimen.

Pronunciation.—In many Bhīl dialects an s is regularly replaced by a sound which is something between s and h, somewhat like the ch in German 'ach'. In Pār'dhī kh is used instead of this h; thus, paikhō, money; īkh, twenty, etc. Similarly kh is usually substituted for s in Siyālgirī. Thus, khab for sab, all; dēkh for dēs, country; khāmlōyā-n, Gujarātī sābhal'wũ, to hear (compare hām'līnē, having heard, in the Bhīl dialects of Jhabua and Kotra); barakh, Gujarātī varas, a year; khāk-hāun having become awakened (compare hamki, thought, in the Bhīl dialect of Ratlam).

We have no information as to the pronunciation of this \underline{kh} . It is, however, probable that it is pronounced in the same way as in other Bhīl dialects. For we occasionally find h and even g used instead; thus, kahabin, a harlot; rig, anger. I have therefore substituted the sign \underline{kh} for the \underline{kh} of the original.

The ksh in hiksha, share, is probably due to the influence of angéa, share, in the Bengali text from which the translation was originally prepared.

A cerebral d between vowels is pronounced as an r, as is also the case in other Bhil dialects; thus, thora, few.

L is sometimes substituted for n; thus, lachu, dancing; and perhaps also lasin, running. The same change is common in many Bhīl dialects, but may also be due to the influence of eastern vernaculars.

V is sometimes dropped before i and \hat{e} , as is usually the case in many Bhīl dialects and in the Marathi of Berar and the Central Provinces. Thus, ēglasta, Gujarātī vēgoļu, distant; îțī, Gujarātī vīṭī, ring. In āt, word, w has been dropped before ā. In other cases w becomes b as in eastern vernaculars; thus, barakh, year; jībat, living; sēbā, service.

Nouns.-The various genders are constantly confounded. Thus, so khab kharachpatra kidhi, that all expended was made; tāri āt parhikōlā, thy word was transgressed.

The plural seems to have the same form as the singular. Thus, dikrā, a son, and sons.

With regard to cases, the case of the agent is never used. The subject of transitive verbs is put in the nominative case even when the verb is a passive form. Thus, bab kahu, the-father (-by) it was said.

The nominative singular of strong masculine bases ends in \bar{a} as in Marāthī and eastern vernaculars; thus, dikrā, a son. Traces of the Gujarātī termination ō are, however, found in the adjectives; thus, moto dikrā, the big (i.e. elder) son.

The usual case suffixes are as follows :-

Dative, nē, n; kō. Ablative, sē.

Genitive, nā, n. Locative, mē, mi, mō.

Thus, mānkhā-n, to a man; bābā-nē, to the father; ghar-mi-kō, to-in-the house, into the house; barakh-sē, years-from; ēk marad-nā baya dikrā thēi, one man of two sons were; māra bābā-n kēṭlā jhānā darmō-pāun chākēr, how many hired servants of my father's; gāmṛā-mi, in the village; undēl-mē, on the neck; bil-mō, in the field. Old locatives are dekhēhē, in the country; bilē, in the fields.

It will be seen that an oblique base ending in \tilde{a} seems to occur in some of these forms. Compare $b\bar{a}b$, the father; $b\bar{a}b\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{e}$, to the father.

Most of the suffixes just mentioned occur in other Bhil dialects. The locative suffix $m\bar{o}$ and the dative suffix $k\bar{o}$ are perhaps borrowed from Rājasthānī or some eastern dialect. Similar forms, however, also occur in the speech of other Bhīl tribes.

Adjectives.—There is no fixed rule for the inflexion of adjectives. Thus, ap-nu bābā-nē, to his father; āp-nā chākēr-nē, to his servant; āp-nā pēţ, his belly.

Pronouns.—'I' is mu. This form also occurs in some Bhil dialects. 'My' is māra. The suffix of the dative of pronouns is hē; thus, minhē or manhē, to me. The dative suffix $h\bar{e}$ is common in some Bhīl dialects. It corresponds to a genitive suffix $h\bar{o}$ as nē corresponds to the genitive ending in no. The genitive suffix ho occurs in forms such as tũhu āgal, before thee; inhā hāthē, on his hand, etc.

To the genitive mara, my, corresponds a dative mara, to me. It will be seen that the various dative suffixes correspond to genitives formed by adding the same suffix with another termination. The three pairs of suffixes also occur in other Bhil dialects.

'Thou 'is tu, genitive tũhu, tār, and tē-rā.

The demonstrative pronouns seem to be derived from various sources. Thus, we find \tilde{a} , this; $\tilde{e}hi$, this; tinha, and inha, he; $hiy\tilde{e}$, he; $s\tilde{o}$, that; $t\tilde{o}$, that; $t\tilde{e}$ - $kr\tilde{a}$ his;

tar bad, that after, etc. The forms tinha and inha are perhaps originally the case of the agent.

'What?' is khũ, corresponding to hũ in Gujarātī-Bhīlī.

Verbs.—There is apparently no difference between the singular and the plural. Thus, rahin means 'he was' and 'they were.'

Of the verb substantive the following forms occur, raha, thou art; thā, it is; hutā, he was; thēi, they were.

The conjunctive present is used both as a present and as a past; thus, maru, I die; kahē, he said; rahē, he lived; jāi kō-ni, he would not go. All these forms are Gujarātī-Bhīlī. The same is the case with the ordinary past; thus, āvya, he came; dikrā kahā, the-son(-by) it-was said; hīksha didhu, the share was given; giya, he went; lāgā, they went; jō tār khābja khādu, who ate thy property, etc.

The future is formed as in Gujarātī-Bhīlī; thus, kahis, I shall say.

Eastern forms are perhaps khāin, they ate; rahin, he lived. It is, however, possible that the final n in such forms corresponds to the n in the past tense of Khāndēśī and some Bhīl dialects. Compare lāgīn, he began, they began, etc., in the Naikadī dialect of Surat.

The conjunctive participle ends in i or in, u or un; thus, kari, having done; $l\bar{e}in$, having taken; $j\bar{a}u$, having gone; $kh\bar{a}un$, having eaten. The form $kar-k\bar{e}$, having done, is borrowed from Hindi.

The negative particle is kō-ni, not. The same form occurs in some Rājasthānī and Bhīl dialects.

The inflexion of Siyālgirī is, as the preceding remarks will have shown, mainly the same as in Gujarātī-Bbīlī. The same is the case with the vocabulary. I am not, however, able to explain all the words occurring in the specimen. Compare $\bar{a}g\bar{a}$, father (probably the Turkī $\bar{a}gh\bar{a}$, master, borrowed through Hindustānī); badi-thēi, against; ba-bhain, thereupon; ēlā-tō, then (probably the ablative of the base contained in Māwachī ēlō, that); chhēya (perhaps a corruption of the Bengali chēyē) in darkār ghanu chhēya khādu, more food than necessary; dayā-bahi, pitying (perhaps, compassion having flowed); lāsin, having run; unḍēl, neck, etc.

For further particulars the student is referred to the specimen which follows:-

KHĀNDĒSĪ, AHĪRĀŅĪ OR DHĒD GUJARĪ.

The district of Khandesh is surrounded by territories belonging to three distinct languages. Gujarātī is spoken towards the west and north-west, Rājasthānī towards the north, and Marāthī in the districts to the east and south. Gujarātī is also spoken by the higher class husbandmen in Khandesh to the north of the Tapti, and it is the language of trade throughout the district. Marāthī is, to some extent, spoken in the south and west. It is also the language of Government offices and schools, and it is stated to be gradually gaining ascendancy.

The principal language of the district is, however, a form of speech which shares some of the characteristic features of Gujarātī and in others agrees with Marāthī. It is sometimes simply called Khāndēśī, i.e., the language of Khandesh. Another name is Ahīrāṇī, i.e., the language of the Ahīrs or cowherds, a name which is also reported from other parts of India. Lastly, the denomination Dhēd Gujarī connects the language with a group of low-caste husbandmen. The Kuṇ bīs are stated to speak a separate dialect called Kuṇ bāū or Kuṇ bī. It does not, however, differ from the current language of the district in any essential points.

The territory within which Khāndēśī is spoken does not exactly correspond to the district of Khandesh. It also comprises the northern border of Nasik and the Burhanpur Tahsil of Nimar. This latter district is still spoken of as Khandesh by the inhabitants. Burhanpur was the capital of Khandesh before Akbar overthrew the dynasty. The dialect of Burhanpur has formerly been classed as Varhādī, and only 136 Sonars were reported as speaking Ahīrānī.

Khāndēšī is further spoken by 500 individuals in Buldana, on the Khandesh frontier and in some border-villages near Jalgaon in Akola.

AUTHORITY-

Gazetteer of the Bombay Presidency, Vol. xii, Khandesh. Bombay, 1880. Account of the language on pp. 42 and ff.

Pronunciation.—A, \bar{a} and \bar{e} are not seldom interchanged; thus, sa, $s\bar{a}$, and $s\bar{e}$, he is; $b\bar{a}p$ - $l\bar{e}$ and $b\bar{a}p$ - $l\bar{a}$, to the father; $m\bar{a}nus$ - $n\bar{e}$ and $m\bar{a}nus$ - $n\bar{a}$, by a man. As in the Marāṭhī of Berar, neuter bases end in a where Dēśī Marāṭhī has \hat{e} ; thus, $asa\ w\bar{a}t^*na$, so it appeared; $s\bar{o}na$, gold.

 \bar{E} is interchangeable with $y\bar{a}$; thus, $t\bar{e}$ and $ty\bar{a}$, they.

The palatals are pronounced as in Gujarātī and Rājasthānī. Thus, $m\bar{i}$ $j\bar{a}s$, I go; $th\bar{o}d\bar{a}$ -ch din-thī, after a few days. Note the emphatic particle ch in the last instance. It agrees with Marāṭhī $\underline{t}s$ and apparently not with Gujarātī j. Compare, however, the pronunciation of j as s and ch in Bhīl dialects.

The cerebrals are pronounced as in Marāṭhī and Gujarātī. Thus, $gh\bar{o}d\bar{a}$, a horse. The cerebral n is very irregularly used, and a dental n is often used instead; thus, $k\bar{o}n\bar{i}$ and $k\bar{o}n\bar{i}$, some one. In Nimar there seems to be a strong tendency to use the cerebral sound. Thus, we find $m\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{a}$, my; $ty\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{a}$, his.

The cerebral l is sometimes replaced by the dental one in one set of specimens received from Khandesh, where we find forms such as $d\bar{o}l\bar{a}$, eye; pal, run. The specimens forwarded from Nandurbar, Amalner, and Nimar, however, always distinguish the two l-sounds. The same is the case in the dialect spoken in the Dangs, and the writing of l instead of l is, therefore, probably inaccurate. The cerebral l is commonly pronounced like the l movillé in French, and it is, accordingly, often written as a y; thus, $d\bar{o}y\bar{a}$, eye; pay, run. Y instead of l is very common in the specimens received from Amalner. According to the District Gazetteer, however, it represents the common pronunciation in Khandesh. Compare the substitution of y and r for l in the Marāṭhī of Berar, and for r in Dravidian languages.

V is pronounced as in Marāṭhī and Gujarātī. It is sometimes dropped before i, as is also the case in the Marāṭhī of Berar. Thus, ichāra, it was asked; ikat, buying.

Aspirated letters sometimes lose their aspiration. Thus, the usual ablative post-position is written both $th\bar{i}$ and $t\bar{i}$.

The Anunasika is rarely met with and seems to be very faintly sounded. Thus, $as\tilde{a}$, but usually asa; thus, $(ghar-)m\tilde{a}$, in (the house); and only occasionally $(h\tilde{a}t-)m\tilde{a}$, on (the hand).

The phonetical system is, on the whole, the same as in Marāthī and Gujarātī. Where those two languages differ, it sometimes agrees with the latter, but in most cases with the former.

Nouns.—Gender.—There are three genders as in Marāṭhī and Gujarātī. The neuter is, however, constantly confounded with the masculine. Thus, it na wāṭ nā, so-much appeared; pāp kar nā sā, sin is made. In these instances the subject is neuter, but the verb is put in the masculine.

Number.—There are two numbers, the singular and the plural. They are, however, constantly confounded. Thus, the plural is used as an honorific singular in tyās-lē, to him; ghōḍās-nā jīn, the saddle of the horse. Much more common is the use of the singular instead of the plural; thus, $ch\bar{a}kar-l\bar{e}$, to the servants; $hai\ dukkar$ $rahin\bar{a}$, these swine are. Compare verbs below. The plural of weak masculine bases is formed without any addition. Thus, $\bar{a}nd\bar{o}r$, a son, and sons. Strong masculine bases end in \bar{a} in the singular, as is also the case in Marāthī. In the plural they usually preserve the \bar{a} as in Mālvī and Gujarātī; thus, $gh\bar{o}d\bar{a}$, horses; $chh\bar{o}k^{a}r\bar{a}$, sons. Occasionally, however, we also find Marāthī forms such as $gh\bar{o}d\bar{e}$.

Weak feminine bases seem to form their plural as in Marāṭhī and Mālvī; thus, gāyā, cows; pōrī, daughters. Strong feminine bases form their plural as in Marāṭhī and Mālvī; thus, ghōḍyā, mares.

Weak neuter bases seem to form their plural in \tilde{e} ; thus, $duk^ar\tilde{e}$, swine. But also dukkar, swine. Strong neuter bases end in a in the singular; thus, $s\tilde{o}na$, gold. No instances are available for the plural.

Case.—Cases are formed by adding suffixes. In the singular they are added directly to the base, as is also the case in Mālvī and Gujarātī. Thus, bāp-lē, to the father; ghōdā-nā, of the horse. Marāṭhī forms, such as ghōdyā-war, on a horse; tār khē-nā, on that day, occur in a few instances. According to the grammatical sketch in the District Gazetteer, however, they are not justified. The only exception is said to be bhingōtā, a bee, oblique bhingōtyā.

The plural has a separate oblique form ending in s, or, in the case of weak masculine and neuter bases, $\bar{e}s$. Thus, $b\bar{a}p\bar{e}s$ - $l\bar{e}$, to fathers; $p\bar{o}ris$ - $l\bar{e}$, to daughters; bhitas- $m\bar{a}$, in the walls; $gh\bar{o}d\bar{a}s$ - $n\bar{a}$, of the horses. It has already been noted that the singular form is often used instead; thus, $b\bar{a}p$ - $l\bar{e}$, to fathers; $m\bar{a}nus$ - $l\bar{e}$ and $m\bar{a}n^ss\bar{e}s$ - $l\bar{e}$, to the men.

The usual case postpositions are,—instrumental, $s\bar{\imath}$, $war\bar{\imath}$, $gh\bar{a}\bar{\imath}$; case of the agent, $n\bar{a}$, $n\bar{\imath}$, $n\bar{e}$; dative $l\bar{e}$, $l\bar{a}$, $n\bar{e}$, $n\bar{a}$; ablative, $th\bar{\imath}$, $jaw^al\bar{\imath}u$; $p\bar{a}s\bar{\imath}n$, $p\bar{a}y$, $p\bar{a}in$, pun; genitive, $n\bar{a}$, fem. $n\bar{\imath}$, neut. na; locative $m\bar{a}$, $m\bar{e}$, $m\bar{a}$, and $majh\bar{a}r$. Thus, $d\bar{o}r^aka-s\bar{\imath}$, with ropes; $b\bar{a}p-n\bar{a}$, by the father; $hiss\bar{a}\cdot l\bar{e}$, to (my) share; $ghar-m\bar{a}$, in the house; $gh\bar{o}d\bar{a}s\cdot n\bar{a}$, of the horses.

In Nimar the instrumental and the case of the agent usually end in \bar{e} as in Gujarātī; thus, $b\bar{a}p\bar{e}$, by the father; $bhuk\bar{e}$, by hunger. Similar forms occasionally also occur in Khandesh.

The instrumental suffix $s\bar{\imath}$ is Marāṭhī. The same is the case with the ablative suffix $jaw^a l\bar{u}n$, which is not, however, used in any specimen but only occurs in a list of words received from Khandesh.

The suffixes of the case of the agent correspond to Marāṭhī na, $n\tilde{e}$ and Mālvī $n\tilde{e}$. The usual dative suffix is $l\tilde{e}$ as in the Marāṭhī of Berar. Besides we also find the usual Marāṭhī form $l\tilde{a}$. L and n seem to be interchangeable in this suffix, so that we also find it in the forms $n\tilde{e}$ and $n\tilde{a}$. We may, therefore, perhaps compare Mālvī and Gujarātī $n\tilde{e}$.

The usual suffix of the ablative is $th\tilde{\iota}$ as in Gujarātī. With this latter language also the suffix of the genitive agrees. The locative suffix $m\tilde{a}$, $m\tilde{a}$ corresponds to Gujarātī $m\tilde{a}$, and $m\tilde{e}$ to Mālvī $m\tilde{e}$, $m\tilde{e}$.

An old locative is ghar, in the house.

It will be seen that the inflexion of nouns agrees with Marathi in some suffixes and the formation of most plural forms. The main principles of the inflexion, however, where the oblique form does not differ from the base, is quite different from that prevailing in Marāthī. In this respect Khāndēśī approaches Gujarātī and Mālvī, with which languages it also shares most case suffixes.

Adjectives.—Adjectives are inflected in gender and number as in Marāṭhī. Thus, bhalā mānus, a good man; bhalā yā bāyākā, good women. The form usually remains unchanged when the qualified noun is inflected. Thus, thōdā-ch din-thī, after few days; tyā-nā gaļā-mā, on his neck. In some cases, however, we find Marāṭhī forms, such as bhalyā mānus-lē, to a good man. An oblique form seems to end in ī; thus, jan-nī ghar, in a man's house; tu-nī samōr, before thee.

Numerals.—The numerals are formed as in Marāṭhī. In Nimar, however, Gujarātī forms, such as chha, six, das, ten, pachās, fifty, and sō, hundred, are used. Sō and das also occur in Khandesh.

Pronouns.—The personal pronouns are mainly the same as in Marāṭhī. The case suffixes arē the same as in the case of nouns. 'I' is mī, but also mai, as in Mēwātī. 'We' is ham or ām, as in Mēwātī; 'you' is tum, as in Mēwātī. Other forms are āmhū, we; āpan, we, including the person addressed; āmī, ām-ē and āmhū, by us; tumī, tumhī, and tumē, by you, etc.

The pronouns $t\bar{o}$, that, he, and $j\bar{o}$, which, have three genders as in Marāṭhī. The same is the case with hau and au, this: compare Marāṭhī $h\bar{a}$, Rajpipla Bhīlī $\bar{a}i$, Māwchī, Dēhawālī and Dhōḍiā \bar{o} , Mālvī $y\bar{o}$.

Kon, who? does not change in the oblique form.

Verbs.—The Khāndēśi verb has developed several characteristic features of its own. It has already been remarked that the two numbers are often confounded. Thus, jāyāt, they became, is also used in the sense of 'he became'; rahinā, he lived, is sometimes used with a plural subject.

Verbs are used in the active, passive, and impersonal constructions as in Marāṭhī and Gujarātī. Instead of the neuter form of the verb in the impersonal construction we, however, often find the masculine; thus, $b\bar{a}p-n\bar{a}$ $s\bar{a}ng^{o}n\bar{a}$, instead of $s\bar{a}ng^{o}na$, the father said. The past tense of transitive verbs often agrees with an inflected object, as is also the case in Gujarātī. Thus, $ty\bar{a}-\bar{e}$ $ti-l\bar{e}$ $bal\bar{a}v\bar{i}$, he called her. The past tense of transitive verbs is sometimes also actively construed; thus, $t\bar{o}$ $kar^{o}n\bar{a}$, he did.

Verb substantive.—The present tense is formed from the base sa which also occurs in many Bhīl dialects, and in the Ahīrwāṭī and Mēwātī dialects of Rājasthānī. In Nimar we also find chhē as in Nimārī and Gujarātī. The forms sā, sē, and śē are used for all persons in the singular. The corresponding plural form is śētas, or, in Nimar, śētēs. Sas and śēs are also used instead of sā and śē, respectively, in the second and third persons singular. The singular form is often also used for the plural, and vice versā.

The past tense is formed from the base hōta or whata. Compare Maraṭhī hōta, Gujarātī hata. The regular forms are,—singuiar, 1, whatū; 2, whatā; 3, whatā; plural, 1, whatūt; 2, whatāt; 3, whatāt. The form whatā is only used with a masculine subject. The corresponding feminine and neuter forms are whatī and whata, respectively.

The first person singular is often identical with the second and third. Thus, mī hōtā, I was. The singular is also commonly used for the plural. Sometimes the terminations of the present tense are added; thus, hōtās, thou art, you are, they are, etc.

The infinitive is kona or asna, to be. The conjunctive participle is hoi-san, having been. Marāthi forms such as asūn, however, also occur.

Finite verb.—There are only a few instances of the old present in the specimens. Thus, $j\bar{a}y-n\bar{a}$, he would not go.

The ordinary present has the same terminations as in the case of the verb substantive. Thus, karas, I, thou, or he, does; karatas, we, you, or they, do. In Nimar the plural is karajes, we do; karates, you and they do. In the same district we also find forms such as jaus, I go.

The past tense is often formed as in High Hindî; thus, $l\bar{a}g\bar{a}$, he began; $ty\bar{a}-n\bar{e}$ $m\bar{a}r\bar{a}$, he struck. Commonly, however, a suffix $n\bar{a}$ is added. Thus, $t\bar{o}$ $pad^n\bar{a}$, he fell; $t\bar{i}$ $pad^n\bar{n}$, she fell. This suffix must be compared with the common n-suffix in Bhīlī and the suffix $n\bar{e}$ of the past tense of Sadrī Korwā and other broken dialects spoken by aborigines—See Vol. vi, p. 222. Compare also forms such as $bandh\bar{a}n\bar{o}$, bound; $dith\bar{a}n\bar{o}$, seen; quoted in the Khandesh Gazetteer from Northern Gujarātī.

The suffix $n\bar{a}$ is sometimes also transferred to the present tense; thus, $m\bar{i}$ $ch\bar{a}l^on\bar{a}$, I go; $t\bar{o}$ $r\bar{a}hin\bar{a}$, he lives. A corresponding present participle is $r\bar{a}h^on\bar{a}$, being.

The wide use of this n-suffix for past time in Gujarātī, Bhīlī, and Khāndēśī (it also occurs in Eastern Hindī), may suggest that it is of a different origin from the Aryan suffix la. It can perhaps sometimes be compared with the suffix na which forms relative participles in Telugu and other Dravidian forms of speech or with the common n-suffix in Muṇḍā languages.

The usual singular form of the past tense ends in \tilde{a} , fem. \tilde{i} , neut, a, the corresponding plural in $\tilde{a}t$; thus, $gy\tilde{a}$, \tilde{i} , thou, or he, went; $gy\tilde{a}t$, we, you, or they, went. The first persons singular and plural have sometimes special forms; thus, $m\tilde{i}$ $ga\tilde{u}$, \tilde{i} went; ham $ga\tilde{u}t$, we went. The singular is very often used instead of the plural; thus, $j\tilde{a}y\tilde{a}$, they became; $l\tilde{a}g\tilde{a}$, they began.

In the case of transitive verbs, the past tense agrees with the object or is put in the neuter singular. Thus, $rup^{\circ}y\bar{a}$ $k\bar{a}n\bar{\imath}$ $lidh\bar{a}t$, who took the rupees? The final a of the past tense neuter is often dropped; thus, $ty\bar{a}-n\bar{\imath}$ ghar $b\bar{a}ndh$, he built a house.

Periphrastic tenses are formed by adding the verb substantive to the present, past, and pluperfect participles. Thus, $ty\bar{a}$ $kh\bar{a}t\bar{a}$ - $t\bar{a}$, they were eating; $t\bar{\imath}$ $rad^a t\bar{\imath}$ - $t\bar{\imath}$, she was crying; $p\bar{a}p$ $k\bar{\imath}da$ $\delta\bar{e}$, sin has been done; $ch\bar{a}l\bar{e}l$ $\delta\bar{e}$, I have walked; $mar\bar{e}l\bar{a}$ $h\bar{o}t\bar{a}$, he had died. The past tense of the verb substantive has, as will be seen from the instances just quoted, sometimes the form $t\bar{a}$, etc., in such compound tenses. This $t\bar{a}$ is perhaps only abbreviated from $h\bar{o}t\bar{a}$. It is, however, possible that it is identical with Mālvī and Mēwātī $th\bar{a}$ and the Bundēlī $t\bar{o}$. This latter form at least seems to occur in lai- $th\bar{u}$, I took; lai- $th\bar{u}t$, you took. Compare $bas\bar{\imath}$ $rah^a n\bar{a}$ $\delta\bar{e}$, he is sitting.

The future is formed by adding an s-suffix, as in Gujarātī. In the third person singular and plural, however, we usually find the Marāṭhī forms. Thus, karsā, I shall do; karsā, karīs and karī, thou wilt do; karā and karal, he will do; karsāt and karsā, we shall do; karsā, karsā(l), and karsāt, you will do; karstī(l) and karstīn, they will do. The form karī is said to be optionally used for all persons and numbers.

A past conjunctive is formed from the present participle; thus, mī ōļakh°tū, (if) I had recognized; tō āp°na pēṭ bhar°tā, he would have filled his stomach; tī dētī, (if) she had given.

The imperative is formed as in Marathi; thus, kar, do; chala, go ye.

An infinitive is formed with the suffix \bar{u} (u); thus, $karu\ l\bar{a}g^{o}n\bar{a}$, he began to do. Sometimes $l\bar{a}g^{o}na$ is added to the conjunctive participle; thus, $t\bar{o}\ kar\bar{\iota}\ l\bar{a}g^{o}n\bar{a}$, he began to do

208 KHĀNDĒŚĪ,

Other verbal nouns end in nā, ā, and wā; thus, nāchonā, dancing; khāwā-lē, in order to eat; sāngowā-lē, in order to say; chārā-lē, in order to tend.

The present participle ends in t, or, in the strong form, $t\bar{a}$; thus, $y\bar{e}t$, coming; $kh\bar{a}t\bar{a}$, eating. The past participle passive ends in \bar{a} or $n\bar{a}$; thus, $ky\bar{a}$, $kid\bar{a}$ or $kar^an\bar{a}$, done. It has already been stated that the suffix $n\bar{a}$ is occasionally also used to form a present participle; thus, $r\bar{a}h^an\bar{a}$, living.

A pluperfect participle is formed as in Gujarātī by adding l to the past participle; thus, $ch\bar{a}l\bar{e}l$, having gone; $gay\bar{a}l$ and $gay\bar{o}l$, having gone; $gam\bar{a}in\bar{o}l$, who had been lost; $m\bar{a}r\bar{e}l$, who had been struck; $mar\bar{e}l\bar{a}$, who had died.

A future participle passive is formed as in Marathi. Thus, pot bhar va, the belly should be filled.

The conjunctive participle is formed as in Gujarātī by means of the suffix $\bar{\imath}$, to which n, $n\bar{e}$, $n\bar{\imath}$, san, and $san\bar{\imath}$ may be added. Thus, $d\bar{e}\bar{\imath}$, having given; $uth\bar{\imath}n$ and $uthin\bar{e}$, having arisen; $kh\bar{a}yin\bar{\imath}$, having eaten; $l\bar{e}\bar{\imath}\cdot san$, having taken; $mhan\bar{\imath}\cdot s^*n\bar{\imath}$, having said. In a few instances we find Marāṭhī forms such as $kar\bar{u}n$, having done; $mhan\bar{\imath}n$ and $mh\bar{u}n$, having said.

The preceding remarks will have shown the mixed nature of the Khāndēśī verb. Just as the language differs from Marāṭbī and approaches the languages of the inner circle in the formation of the oblique base, so it agrees with these latter forms of speech in other important test points. The past tense is not formed by means of an l-suffix; it has an s-future, and its conjunctive participle takes the suffix $\bar{\imath}$,

The preceding remarks will also have shown that there is a great variety of forms in common use. The regular inflexion will be seen from the short skeleton grammar which follows:—

ADJECTIVES.—Weak adjectives are not inflected. Strong adjectives, including the genitive, are inflected for gender and number, but not for case. Thus, dhāk*lā, small, fem. dhāk*lī, neut. dhāk*lā; plural dhāk*lē and dhāk*lā, fem. dhāk*lyā, neut. dhāk*lē (?).

The oblique Marathi form occasionally occurs. Thus, dhak'le ghar-ma, in the small house.

Similarly all other verbs. In the past tense \bar{a} may be substituted for $n\bar{a}$; thus, $t\bar{i}$ $l\bar{a}g\bar{i}$ or $l\bar{a}g^an\bar{i}$, she began. Transitive verbs are passively construed in the past tense. Thus, $ty\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{i}$ $p\bar{o}th\bar{i}$ $w\bar{a}ch\bar{i}$, he read the book.

C.—Irzegular Verbs.—Several verbs form their past tense irregularly. Thus, $j\bar{a}$ -na, to go, past $g(n)y\bar{a}$, first person also $ga\bar{u}$; $y\bar{s}$ -na, to come, past $un\bar{a}$; $b\bar{s}$ -na. to become, past $j\bar{a}y\bar{a}$; kar^ana , to do, past $k(a)y\bar{a}$, $ky\bar{s}$, $kid\bar{a}$, and $kar^an\bar{a}$; $l\bar{s}$ -na, to take, past $lid(h)\bar{a}$, $linh\bar{a}$, and $l\bar{s}n\bar{a}$; $d\bar{s}$ -na, to give, past $did(h)\bar{a}$, $din\bar{a}$, etc.

Of the three specimens which follow, the two first have come from Khandesh, and the third represents the dialect of the Sonars of Burhanpur in Nimar.

The first specimen, a translation of the Parable of the Prodigal Son from Nandurbar Taluka, is a fairly good example. The second is the statement of a witness in a dialect which shows strong traces of the influence of Marāṭhī. The third specimen has been translated from a Marāṭhī reader. It more closely agrees with Gujarātī than is the case with the other specimens. Thus the instrumental always ends in ē, e.g., bāpē, by the father, etc.

On the fifteenth I had gone to the bazar of Sindkheda. I and Chuḍāman Tānājī went in the same carriage. After having done marketing we returned. On that day we went to Nirguḍī and came so far as half-a-mile from Warsi, when we were waylaid by thieves. One of the thieves threw a stone which hit me on the cheek. The thieves unloosened our bundles, both mine and Tānājī's. From my bundle they took two saries, a turban, and thirty-three rupee-pieces and two-and-a-half rupees in English coppers. From Tānājī's bundle they took six saries and three pieces of khan,¹ and seven rupees cash, of which four were in whole rupees and three in coppers. One of the thieves pricked me with a spear.

Then the thieves fled towards the garden of Nirgudi, and we collected our kit and went to Warsi. There we made an information to the police master. The thieves were not then present, but he had their house watched. We do not know when they came in. Those thieves belong to our village, and I always see them. If I had shown that I recognized the thieves, then they would have killed us, and therefore I did not show any recognition.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A certain boy went to a school. One day he stole something which belonged to another boy, and brought it to his mother. Instead of punishing the boy as she ought to have done, she approved of his action and gave him a guava fruit to eat. After that time the boy began to commit greater and greater thefts as he grew up, till at last he was caught in a theft. The Government officers brought him away to be hanged. A crowd of people gathered in order to see the spectacle, and among them was also his mother who was incessantly sobbing and crying. When he caught sight of her, he asked the officers to let him join his mother for a moment. Out of pity they called the mother to him. Then he angrily bit her ear off. Seeing this the people said, 'see, see how wicked this boy is. Even on his way to the gallows he does not fail to commit so great a sin.' Having heard this he retorted, 'good people, listen to my statement. Even if I had now taken my mother's life, no blame would have been attached to me. And I will tell you why. When a small boy I once brought her something which I had stolen from another boy at school. Had she at that occasion punished me, and not given me a guava fruit, then I should not to-day have come to such a pass.'

The dialect spoken by the Kuṇabīs of Khandesh has been returned as Kuṇabī or Kuṇabāū. Specimens have been received from Amalner, and they show that the dialect does not differ from ordinary Khāndēśī, as will be seen from the Parable of the Prodigal Son which follows.

DĀNGI.

The Dangs State, on the western frontier of Khandesh, had, in 1891, a population of 32,900 souls, 31,700 of whom were stated to speak Dangi. Specimens have been forwarded in that dialect, and one of them, a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, will be found below.

The so-called Dangi is almost identical with the current language of Khandesh.

There is a tendency to pronounce an a as an o. Thus $b\tilde{a}s$, a father, is pronounced as $b\tilde{o}s$, or rather as $b\tilde{a}s$, with the same vowel as that occurring in English 'all', but pronounced through the nose. Similarly pal, to run, is pronounced $p\tilde{a}l$.

The cerebral n is very irregularly used. Thus we find $\bar{a}n\bar{a}$ and $\bar{a}n\bar{a}$, he came; $l\bar{a}g^an\bar{a}$ and $l\bar{a}g^an\bar{a}$, he began. The pronunciation is probably always that of a dental n.

The inflexion of nouns and pronouns is the same as in Khāndēśī. Only the ablative suffix is $t\bar{i}n$ and not $th\bar{i}$ or $t\bar{i}$; thus, $dur-t\bar{i}n$, from a distance.

'I' is $m\bar{a}$ and $m\bar{i}$; 'we' $\bar{a}mh\bar{i}$ and $\bar{a}pan$; 'you' $tumh\bar{i}$, and so on. $J\bar{i}$, which, is apparently used for all genders. Thus, $j\bar{i}$ $w\bar{a}t\bar{a}$, which share; $j\bar{i}$ - $k\bar{a}h\bar{i}$, what-ever. The neuter gender is, on the whole, very seldom used. We find neuter forms such as $sag^{s}la$, all, but usually the masculine, and sometimes also the feminine, is used instead. Thus, $m\bar{o}th\bar{a}$ $p\bar{a}p$, a great sin; $as\bar{i}$ $t\bar{e}$ - $n\bar{a}$ man- $m\bar{a}$ $wan\bar{a}$, such a thing entered his mind.

The verb substantive has the same form as in Khāndēśī; thus, $t\tilde{o}$ $s\tilde{e}$, he is. Sometimes, however, $\tilde{a}h\tilde{a}$ or ha is used instead.

The inflexion of verbs does not call for any remarks. We may only note the Marāṭhī form $j\bar{a}\bar{\imath}n$, I shall go; but $mhan^os\bar{u}$, I shall say; infinitives such as $mhanu-l\bar{a}$, in order to say, etc.

The vocabulary is, to some extent, different from that of Khāndēśī. Compare $b\tilde{a}s$, a father; $g\tilde{o}h\tilde{o}$, a man, and so on.

RANGART.

The Rangārīs or dyers of Berar speak a dialect which is related to Khāndēśī. The dialect is not uniform, but differs slightly in the various districts. Some Rangārīs have also abandoned their old speech and adopted the Marāthī used by their neighbours. Thus the specimens received from Ellichpur were written in Kōshṭī, a form of that language. It is, however, possible that some of the 250 speakers returned from that district use the same dialect as the Rangārīs of Akola, and the Ellichpur figures have therefore been added to the estimated number of speakers in the other districts.

The revised figures for Rangari are as follows:-

							То	TAL		3,630
Duidana.		- •								680
Buldana .			5 3	1 4			*			250
Ellichpur			5							250
Akola .									-	2,700

Two specimens of Rangārī will be found below. The first is a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son received from Akola, and the second the beginning of a similar version forwarded from the Melkapur Taluka of District Buldana. The latter is not correct, and in some minor points it presents forms which differ from those used in the Akola specimen. The difference is, however, not important, and it is, therefore, possible to deal with both specimens conjointly.

Pronunciation.—The pronunciation is mainly the same as in the Marāṭhī of Berar. Thus we find $d\bar{o}l\bar{o}$ and $d\bar{o}y\bar{o}$, an eye; is and vis, twenty, etc. The palatals are transliterated ch, j, etc. It is, however, probable that they are really pronounced \underline{ts} , \underline{dz} , etc., as in Marāṭhī.

Nouns.—The inflexion of nouns is mainly the same as in Gujarātī. Strong masculine bases end in \bar{o} , plural \bar{a} ; strong feminine bases in \bar{i} , plural $y\bar{a}$; and strong neuter bases in u. No instance is available of the plural of a strong neuter noun. Thus, $p\bar{o}r^{\sigma}g\bar{o}$, son; $p\bar{o}r^{\sigma}g\bar{a}$, sons: $p\bar{o}r^{\sigma}g\bar{a}$, daughter; $p\bar{o}r^{\sigma}gy\bar{a}$, daughters: $s\bar{o}nu$, gold. A suffix $h\bar{a}n$ or hun (as in Mālvī) is sometimes added in the plural; thus, $m\bar{o}l^{\sigma}kar\bar{\imath}-hun-n\bar{a}$, to the labourers; $ch\bar{a}k^{\sigma}r\bar{o}-h\bar{a}n-n\bar{a}$, to the servants. Compare the honorific pronoun $t\bar{e}-h\bar{a}n$, he, in the second specimen. The Gujarātī plural suffix \bar{o} in $ch\bar{a}k^{\sigma}r\bar{o}-h\bar{a}n-n\bar{a}$ also occurs in $b\bar{a}p-\bar{o}-n\bar{o}$, to fathers.

The usual case-suffixes are, dative $n\bar{o}$, na; case of the agent $n\bar{e}$, na, n; ablative $t\bar{i}$, $t\bar{e}$; genitive $n\bar{o}$, $n\bar{i}$, nu; locative $m\bar{a}$, $m\bar{o}$. Thus, $b\bar{a}p-n\bar{o}$, $b\bar{a}p-na$, to the father; $b\bar{a}p-n\bar{e}$, by the father; $b\bar{a}p-n\bar{a}$ $p\bar{a}s-t\bar{i}$, from the father; $m\bar{a}nus-n\bar{o}$, of a man; $ghar-m\bar{a}$, in the house; $p\bar{a}y-m\bar{o}$, on the feet.

Pronouns. - The following are the personal pronouns :-

ma-na, me	tu-na, thee	tēnē, tē-na, him.
mā-rō, my	tā-rō, thy	tē-nō, his.
āmhī, we	tumhī, you	tē, they.
āmārō, our	tumārō, your	tē-nō, their.

230 KHĀNDĒŚĪ.

Other forms are $my\bar{a}$, by me; $t\bar{e}$ -na, by him; $tamay\bar{e}$ (sic.), to him; $t\bar{e}$ -hun-na, to them. 'Who?' is $k\bar{o}n$, and 'what?' is $k\bar{a}y$.

Verbs.—The present tense of the verb substantive is sa or $s\bar{e}$ in all persons and numbers. The corresponding past tense is $h\bar{o}t\bar{o}$, fem. $h\bar{o}t\bar{i}$, neut. $h\bar{o}tu$. The plural is $h\bar{o}t\bar{a}$ or $h\bar{o}t\bar{e}$, etc.

The present tense of finite verbs ends in s. Thus, from maranu, to strike, we find,-

Sing. 1. mārus

Plur. 1. mārus

2. māras

2. māras, mārōs

3. māras

3. māras

The form mārus, I strike, is perhaps a honorific plural. Forms such as rahēs and rahis, I am, are used as well.

The suffix of the past tense is $\bar{\imath}$ or \bar{e} . Thus, $gay\bar{e}$, I, thou, or he, went; $gay\bar{a}$, we, you, or they, went; $my\bar{a}$ $kar\bar{e}$, or $kar\bar{\imath}$, I did. We also find forms such as $ga\bar{e}$ -n, he went; $pad\bar{e}$ -l, it fell. Compare Khāndēśī.

A perfect and a pluperfect are formed from the past; thus, $s\bar{a}p^{\circ}d\bar{e}$ -s, he has been found; $gay\bar{e}$ - $t\bar{o}$, I had gone.

The future of maranu, to strike, is inflected as follows :-

Sing. 1. mārīs

Plur. 1. mārūs, mārasū

2. mārīs

2. mār sō

3. mār śī

3. māreśī

The imperative is formed as in Gujarātī. Thus, mār, strike; bas-ō, sit ye.

Conjunctive participles are formed by adding the suffixes i (i), in, or i-san. Thus, val_{i} , having divided; jain, having gone; uthi-san, having arisen.

For further details the specimens which follow should be consulted.

BANJĀRĪ OR LABHĀNĪ AND BAHRUPIĀ.

BANJĀRĪ OR LABHĀNĪ.

The Banjārās are the well-known tribe of carriers who are found all over Western and Southern India. One of their principal sub-castes is known under the name of 'Labhānī,' and this name (or some related one) is often applied to the whole tribe. The two names appear each under many variations, such as Banjārī, Wanjārī, Brinjārī, Labhānī, Labānī, Labānā, Lamānī, Lambādī, and Lambānī. At the consus of 1891, the number of Banjārās (under any of their names) recorded was as follows:—

In many parts of India these people merely use the language of the population of the country in which they dwell, but in Berar, Bombay, the Central Provinces, the Panjab, the United Provinces, and Central India, they are reported to have a language of their own, the name of which varies according to the local name of the tribe. Although widely spread over North-Western India, the Banjaras are strongest in the Deccan. where they are found in the greatest numbers, and where they retain much more of their primitive manners and customs than elsewhere. The name 'Banjara' and its congeners is probably derived from the Sanskrit Vāṇijyakārakas, a merchant, through the Prakrit Vāṇijjaāraō, a trader.1 The derivation of 'Labhānī' or 'Labānī,' etc., is obscure. It has been suggested that it means 'salt carrier' from the Sanskrit lavanah, salt, because the tribe carried salt, but this explanation goes against several phonetic rules, and does not account for the forms of the word like 'Labhani' or 'Lambani.'

The tribe has been known in India for centuries. It appears to be a mixed race and to owe its origin and organization to the wars of the Delhi Emperors in Southern India, where they carried the commissariat of the armies. They are often said to be mentioned by name in Sanskrit literature so early as the 6th century A.D., but this is a mistake. The earliest certain dated reference 2 to them is believed to be in the Tārīkh-e Khān-Jahān Lodī of Ni'āmatu'llah, written about 1612 A.D., and referring to events of 1504 A.D. He says :--

As scarcity was felt in his [the Sultan's] camp, in consequence of the non-arrival of the Banjaras, he despatched 'Azam Humayun for the purpose of bringing in supplies.'

That the tribe existed and practised the vocation of grain-carriers long before this is certain, and it is probable that the Sanskrit writer Dandin (about 6th century A.D.) had them in his mind, though he did not distinctly mention them, when he wrote the oft-quoted passage above referred to.3

The Banjaras of the Deccan claim descent from the great Brahman and Rajput tribes of Northern India, and this is partly borne out by the fact that their language is certainly connected with that spoken at the present day in Western Rajputana.

The following are the more important accountsof the Banjaras.

Separate figures for the Banjārī language were not systematically recorded for all provinces in the Census of 1891, and it is therefore impossible to compare census figures with those given above.

Banjārī falls into two main dialects—that of the Panjab and Gujarat, and that of elsewhere (of which we may take the Labhāṇī of Berar as the standard). To these we may add the Labānkī of Muzaffargarh in the Panjab, which differs from that spoken in the rest of the province. The dialects of the Kakērs, or comb-makers, of Jhansi in the United Provinces, and of the Bahrūpiās of the Panjab have also, on examination, turned out to be the same as the Labhāṇī of Berar. We therefore find the total number of speakers of Banjārī to be as follows:—

Labanki of Muzaffargarh				-					436
Labanki of the rest of the	Panj	ab						22,433	100
Labani of Gujarat .								1,300
									23,733
Other Banjari								131,419
Kakeri			1.					40
Bahrūpiā of the Panjab				1				2,872
									134,331
				Тота	L, Spe	akers	of B	anjāri .	158,500

All these different dialects are ultimately to be referred to the language of Western Rajputana. The few speakers of Labānkī in Muzaffargarh employ ordinary Bīkanērī, and my only reason for entering their language above is that it is not the vernacular of Muzaffargarh, which is Lahndā.

The Labanki of the Panjab is most nearly connected with the Bagri spoken in Hissar and in the adjoining parts of Bikaner.

For the other Banjārī dialects, we must take the Labhānī of Berar as the standard. It is in this locality that the tribe has most strongly preserved its racial characteristics, and employs the purest form of its speech. Elsewhere (except in the Panjab and Gujarat) the same dialect is spoken, but more and more corrupt as we go eastwards, westwards, or northwards from Berar. I have little information regarding the Banjārī of Hyderabad and the rest of Southern India, as the Linguistic Survey does not touch these tracts, but from what I have learnt concerning it, it appears to me that the dialect of Hyderabad closely resembles that of Berar, while that of Madras is more mixed with the surrounding Dravidian languages.

The Labhāṇī of Berar possesses the characteristics of an old form of speech, which has been preserved unchanged for some centuries. It may be said to be based partly on Mārwāṇī and partly on Northern Gujarātī, and gives one the idea of being derived from the original language from which these closely connected forms of speech have sprung in comparatively late times.

In the following pages, I shall first deal with the Labhāṇī of Berar as the standard. I shall then describe the Lamāṇī of the Bombay Deccan, next the Labhāṇī of the Central Provinces, and then the Banjārī of the United Provinces. In connexion with this, I shall deal with the Kakērī of Jhansi. I shall next describe the Labankī of the Panjab (devoting a few lines to that of Muzaffargarh), and then the Labāṇī of Gujarat. Finally, I shall describe the Bahrūpiā of the Panjab, which properly belongs to the Berar dialect, but which is here placed on account of its geographical habitat.

It should be observed that nowhere, not even in Berar, is Banjārī a pure language. It is everywhere mixed, to a greater or less extent, with the vernacular of the country in which its speakers dwell. The amount of the mixture varies greatly, and is probably, in each case, much dependent on the personal equation of the speaker.

No specimens of Banjārī have been received from the Central India Agency. We may assume that the language is the same as that of the Central Provinces and of Berar.

LABHĀŅĪ OF BERAR.

The Labhāṇi or Waṇjāṇi of Berar is a rough kind of Western Rājasthāni much mixed with Gujarāti. It does not vary materially over the whole province, and two specimens will suffice. Its pronunciation is in the main that of Berar, not of Gujarat or Rajputana. For instance there is no change of s to h or of chh to s.

No one who is familiar with Gujarātī or Mārwārī will find any difficulty in reading it. I therefore give only a brief account of its grammatical peculiarities.

In pronunciation the cerebral l is common, as in $g\bar{o}l\bar{a}$, collected. There is a tendency to aspirate consonants, as in $m\bar{o}th\bar{o}$, for $m\bar{o}t\bar{o}$, great; $\bar{e}kh\bar{a}d\bar{i}$, for $\bar{e}k\bar{a}d\bar{i}$, a certain one; $chhum\bar{o}$ for $chum\bar{o}$, kissed; $\bar{a}gh\bar{e}$ or $\bar{a}g\bar{e}$, before.

The vowel scale is indefinite. We find i changed to a in words like dan, for din, a day; $bar\bar{a}j\bar{e}$, he shines; and u changed to a in $sakh\bar{\imath}$ for $sukh\bar{\imath}$, happy. A final \bar{e} is often weakened to a, as in chha for $chh\bar{e}$, he is; na or $n\bar{e}$, to; ra or $r\bar{e}$, the locative of $r\bar{o}$, of. Similarly a final \bar{o} often becomes \bar{u} , as in $d\bar{e}kh\bar{u}$ for $d\bar{e}kh\bar{o}$, seen; $r\bar{u}$ for $r\bar{o}$, of. Initial u often becomes wa, as in $wadh\bar{a}l$ -pan \bar{o} (for $udh\bar{a}l$ -pan \bar{o}), debauchery; $wad\bar{a}$ - $d\bar{e}n\bar{o}$ for $ud\bar{a}$ - $d\bar{e}n\bar{o}$, he squandered.

The declension of nouns is very irregular. No doubt all strong nouns of a basis originally had their nominatives singular in \bar{o} , with an oblique form in \bar{a} . Thus, $gh\bar{o}d\bar{o}$, a horse; oblique form $gh\bar{o}d\bar{a}$. But the Labhānās in the course of their wanderings have also picked up the Hindōstānī idiom of making these nouns have their nominatives in \bar{a} , with an oblique form in \bar{e} . Thus, $gh\bar{o}d\bar{a}$, a horse; oblique form $gh\bar{o}d\bar{e}$. We meet the same word sometimes with one termination and sometimes with the other, and there is absolutely no rule on the subject. It is a matter of mere caprice. We even find both forms in the same sentence. Good examples are $ghan\bar{o}$ $\bar{a}chh\bar{o}$ $kap^od\bar{a}$, a very good robe; $m\bar{a}r\bar{o}$ $chh\bar{o}r\bar{a}$, my son; $m\bar{o}th\bar{o}$ $chh\bar{o}r\bar{o}$, the elder son.

Many nouns, even those ending in consonants, have an oblique form in \bar{e} . Thus $b\bar{a}p\bar{u}$, a father; $b\bar{a}p\bar{e}-n\bar{e}$, to a father: dan, a day; $dan\bar{e}-m\bar{e}$, in (a few) days: $kh\bar{e}t$, a field; $kh\bar{e}t\bar{e}-m\bar{e}$, in a field: $h\bar{a}t$, a hand; $h\bar{a}t\bar{e}-m\bar{e}$, on (his) hand: $bh\bar{u}k$, hunger; $bh\bar{u}k\bar{e}-t\bar{\iota}$, by hunger, and many others. The plural of nouns in \bar{o} or \bar{a} ends in \bar{a} or \bar{e} . Thus $b\bar{e}t\bar{o}$, a son, plural $b\bar{e}t\bar{a}$; $b\bar{e}t\bar{a}$, a son, plural $b\bar{e}t\bar{e}$. Examples of the plural of feminine nouns are $b\bar{\imath}r$, a woman, plural $b\bar{\imath}r\bar{e}$; $b\bar{e}t\bar{\imath}$, a daughter, plural $b\bar{e}t\bar{\imath}y\bar{a}$. Other nouns form their plural as in Western Rājasthānī.

For the various cases we have the following postpositions.

For the agent, we have $n\bar{e}$, often weakened to na, as in \bar{o} - $n\bar{e}$, by him; $j\bar{e}$ -na, by whom. The use of the agent case is, however, rare. More usually the nominative is used, and governs transitive verbs just as if they were intransitives. Thus we have $m\bar{e}$ $m\bar{a}ry\bar{o}$, I struck; ham $m\bar{a}r\bar{e}$, we struck. As an example of the agent case, we have \bar{o} - $n\bar{e}$ $m\bar{e}ly\bar{o}$, he sent. On the other hand we have $b\bar{a}p$ $ky\bar{o}$, the father said.

For the dative-accusative we have the usual locatives of the genitive postpositions. Thus $n\bar{e}$, often weakened to na, and $r\bar{e}$ (or ra). Thus $b\bar{a}p\bar{e}-n\bar{e}$, to the father; $m\bar{a}t\bar{i}-na$, to a man; $d\bar{e}s-r\bar{e}$, to a country. We have also the form $n\bar{u}$, sometimes pronounced $n\bar{o}$, which was probably picked up in the Panjab. Thus $b\bar{a}p\bar{e}-n\bar{u}$ and $b\bar{a}p\bar{e}-n\bar{o}$, to the father.

The suffix of the ablative is usually to as in wadhal-pane-to, by debauchery.

The suffix of the genitive is usually $r\bar{o}$. Sometimes we meet the Gujarātī $n\bar{o}$, as in $b\bar{e}l\bar{i}$ - $n\bar{o}$, of a daughter. $R\bar{o}$ has its oblique masculine $r\bar{a}$, its feminine $r\bar{i}$, and its locative (agreeing with nouns in the locative and dative) $r\bar{e}$, as in Mārwārī. It is sometimes pronounced $r\bar{u}$. The whole series is, however, much confused. We find cases of $r\bar{a}$ being used for $r\bar{o}$, and vice versā. $R\bar{e}$ often becomes ra, and is once (\bar{o} - $r\bar{e}$ māl-matā, his property) used for $r\bar{o}$. Examples are $b\bar{a}p\bar{e}$ - $r\bar{o}$ $b\bar{e}l\bar{o}$, the son of the father; but \bar{o} - $r\bar{a}$ (not \bar{o} - $r\bar{o}$) $p\bar{e}l$, his belly; $gh\bar{o}d\bar{e}$ - $r\bar{o}$ $gh\bar{o}g\bar{i}r$, the saddle of the horse; $bak^{o}r\bar{a}$ -ra (for $bak^{o}r\bar{a}$ - $r\bar{o}$) $pil\bar{a}$, the young of a goat; \bar{o} - $r\bar{o}$ (for \bar{o} - $r\bar{a}$) $gal\bar{a}$ -ma, on his neck; $jh\bar{a}d\bar{e}$ - $r\bar{e}$ $h\bar{e}l\bar{e}$, at the bottom of the tree.

The usual sign of the locative is $m\tilde{e}$, ma, or $m\tilde{a}$. Thus, $h\tilde{a}t\tilde{e}$ - $m\tilde{e}$, on the hand; $gal\tilde{a}$ -ma, on the neck; $sud\tilde{e}$ - $m\tilde{a}$, in one's right-mind.

The sense of gender is very capricious. Thus we have sēwā (feminine) kidō (masculine), service was done.

Adjectives follow the Mārwārī rules. They are put in the locative in \tilde{e} to agree with a noun in that case.

Pronouns.—The pronouns of the first and second person make no distinction between the nominative and the agent cases. Both are the same. The following forms occur:—

Mē, ma, may, I; mhārō, mārō, my; manē, mana, mārē, māra, to me; ham, we; hamārō, our.

 $T\bar{u}$, $t\tilde{u}$, thou; $t\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$, thy; $tan\tilde{e}$, tana, $t\tilde{a}r\tilde{e}$, $t\tilde{a}ra$, to thee; tam, $tam\tilde{o}$ (this is a Gujarātī form), you; $tam\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$, your.

For Demonstrative pronouns (including the pronoun of the third person, we have \tilde{u} , \tilde{o} , he, that, they; \tilde{o} - $n\tilde{e}$, by him (but \tilde{u} $ky\tilde{o}$, he said); \tilde{o} - $r\tilde{o}$, his; \tilde{o} - $r\tilde{e}$, \tilde{o} -na, to him; $\tilde{a}nu$ - $r\tilde{o}$ or anu- $r\tilde{o}$, their.

Tō-nē, tō-na, him, to him; tē, they.

Ā or ī, this; yē ghōḍē-nō, of this horse.

 $\tilde{A}pan$, we (including the person addressed); $\tilde{a}p^{a}n\tilde{e}-n\tilde{e}$, to us; $\tilde{a}p^{a}n\tilde{o}$, own.

 $J\tilde{o}$, $jak\tilde{o}$, who, what; $j\tilde{e}$ -na, by whom; $k\tilde{u}n$, who? $k\tilde{e}$ - $r\tilde{o}$, whose? $k\tilde{a}i$, what? $ka\delta\tilde{o}$ - $r\tilde{o}$, of what? $ka\delta\tilde{o}$ -na, for what, why? $k\tilde{o}i$, anyone; $\tilde{e}a\delta^{}r\tilde{a}$, this many; $ka\delta^{}r\tilde{a}$, how many (with pleonastic k of Rajasthani, $ka\delta^{*}r\tilde{a}$ -k); $s\tilde{e}$, all, the whole.

Conjugation.—The present tense of the verb substantive closely follows colloquial Gujarāti. It is as follows:—

	Sing.	Plur.
1	chhū or chha	chhā or chha
2	chhi or chha	chhō or chha
3	chhē or chha	chhē or chha

It will be observed that, as in some forms of colloquial Gujarāti, chha may be used for all persons and both numbers.

The past is $v\bar{e}t\bar{o}$. $V\bar{e}t\bar{o}$ is sometimes written $wh\bar{e}t\bar{o}$, which shows that the word is only a by-form of the Gujarātī $hat\bar{o}$. When used as an auxiliary it becomes simply $t\bar{o}$, as in colloquial Gujarātī. Thus $m\bar{a}r^at\bar{o}-t\bar{o}$, was striking. Indeed $v\bar{e}t\bar{o}-t\bar{o}$, itself (corresponding to the Hindōstānī $h\bar{o}t\bar{a}-th\bar{a}$), is generally used to mean 'was.'

Wherever it occurs in the specimens or list, the masculine plural of větō is větē, not vētā, as it ought to be.

As for Finite verbs, the Infinitive, Present Participle, and Past Participle are as in Rājasthānī, viz., $m\bar{a}r^{\alpha}n\bar{o}$, to strike; $m\bar{a}r^{\alpha}t\bar{o}$, striking; $m\bar{a}ry\bar{o}$, struck. In the past participle, however, the y is often omitted, so that we also have $m\bar{a}r\bar{o}$. So $d\bar{e}kh\bar{u}$, for $d\bar{e}kh\bar{o}$, seen, and others.

The simple present is conjugated much like the corresponding tense in Gujarātī and Rājasthānī. Thus—

I strike, etc.

	Sing.	Plur.
	olug.	riur,
1	mārā	mārā
2	mārē	märö
3	mārē	märē

The present definite is also conjugated as in these languages, the auxiliary verb being added to the simple present, and not to the present participle. Thus $m\bar{a}r\bar{u}$ - $chh\bar{u}$ or $m\bar{a}r\bar{u}$ -chha, I am beating. Other examples are (often with the sense of a future) $mar\bar{u}$ - $chh\bar{u}$, I die; $kh\bar{a}\bar{u}$ -chha, we may eat; $h\bar{o}\bar{u}$ -chha, let us become.

The Imperfect is māratō-tō, was striking.

The Past tense is as usual, except that this tense in the case of transitive verbs agrees with the subject. Thus mē māryō, I struck; ham mārē, we struck.

The Perfect is māryō-chhū or māryō-chhē, I have struck. In the former case, the auxiliary verb agrees with the subject. So also in pāp kidō-chhū, I have done sin.

The Pluperfect is $m\bar{a}ry\bar{o}$ - $t\bar{o}$, had struck. In $uth\bar{o}$ - $r\bar{i}$, he got up, the $r\bar{i}$ is probably a contraction of $rah\bar{e}$.

The Future is mainly based on the h-future of Mārwārī. It has some peculiar forms. It is conjugated as follows:—

I shall strike, etc.

	Sing.	Plur,
1	mārhiyā or mārhyā	1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1
2	mārhīyā or mārhyā	The same as the singular.
. 3	märhiyé or märhyé	January Danies Sui artime

In the specimens we find chha added in jāhyū-chha, I will go; uṭhī-chha, I will arise; āyī-chha, it will come. The exact meaning of these forms is doubtful. The chh possibly really represents an s, so that we have here examples of an s-future, as in Gujarātī. Another form in the specimens is kahēn, I will say. This seems to be borrowed from Marāṭhī.

Irregular Past Participles are khādō, eaten; kidō, done; dinō or dēnō, given; lābhō, got; kyō, kēwō, or kēhō, said; ryō, remained; gyō or gō, gone. In vēlā paḍ-gē, want fell, gē seems to be used as a feminine instead of gī.

The conjunctive participle is formed by adding an to the root. Thus māran, having beaten. A sort of continuous conjunctive participle is formed by adding tānī (for thānē, having become, as we see from the Central Provinces specimens) to the root, as in rē-tānī, while remaining; dē-tānī, while giving.

Vocabulary.—The Rājasthānī idiom of employing kō-nī, at-all not, for the negative is very common.

The following unusual words occur in the specimen :-

ajī, or wajī, and āṭ, a sound bāṭī, bread ḍhyā, with kamēdī, a bird kēldā, kēldū, a calf kwatrā (=kutrā), a dog mātī, a man yādī, a mother.

A quarrel took place between a father and a son; and the latter got angry with the former, and set out on a journey. The mother remonstrated, saying, 'child, return back;' he did not heed his mother, but being angry and indifferent went forth; and set out for a distant country. When he went a little distance ahead, he heard a peacock scream on his right, and a jackal howl on the left. He then looked before him; and saw one road of six months resulting in happiness; the other of three months resulting in grief. The son left the happy one and took the other full of misery. No sooner did he throw a glance ahead than he saw a tiger lying down asleep. He got up and said, 'child, where are you going?' The boy said, 'I am going to a distant country.' The tiger said 'what do you go for to a distant country? Show me your skill in fighting once or twice here. Child, begin you with the first stroke.' The boy said, 'no nunkey, you begin with the first stroke.' At last the boy gave the first cut, but missed, and the tiger sprang up, seized him, and killed him.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

I.

(A poem in honour of Sēwābhāyā, a Labhānā hero.)

There was Sēwābhāyā. His body was brilliant as silver and gold. Sēwābhāyā is dead and gone. He left his throne to Sūkā, and gave Jētā his blessing.

Great wealth had Sewabhaya amassed. He had the horse Tularam.

Worldly wealth had he in plenty. He had drums and umbrellas as tokens of his royalty.

Mēhmadyā the Bard sings this song. To him it is every one's duty to give many presents of food and money.

II.

(In praise of Dharmito Bābā, who planted a grove and built a masonry well.)

- (1) There is a grove and a garden, and a well built as an act of charity, where shines the great Rām himself in all his glory (and grants all the wishes of the donor). May Rām endow thee with good prosperity.
- (2) Sītā the chaste, Lakshman the faithful, Hanuman the mighty warrior, are all with thee. May Rām endow thee with good prosperity.
- (3) It is useless to make two pilgrimages to Dwārakā, for it is in thy heart that God dwells. There, too, is the Dwārakā of Bālājī, the Dwārakā of Krishņa. May Rām endow thee with good prosperity.
- (4) Dharmītō Bābā, the devotee of Bālājī, gives gifts in full handfuls. May Rām endow thee with good prosperity.

LAMANT OF NASIK.

The Labhani or, as it is locally called, Lamani of Nasik differs in no way from that of Berar. As a specimen, it will be sufficient to give an extract from a popular poem. The specimen gives a good example of the very peculiar vocabulary of the tribe. I am not certain that all the words have been correctly translated. They are not found in any dictionary, and I give the meanings as they have been reported to me.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

(The song deals with the adventures of the Labhana hero Isara. In the first verses he is addressed by his father.)

(1) 'O Isarā, break our camp and load our pack-bullocks. Look out for a wide plain, and there let the cattle loose. Make a room, of the grain-bags and over them stretch a red cloth so as to form a tent. (5) Put the bullock harness into water to clean it.'

(Isarā demands to be married at once, but his father at first refuses.)

A quarrel arose between the father and the son. 'My son, let this year pass. In the meantime take the bullock harness out of water.'

(Isarā insists, and at length the father consents to an immediate marriage. In the following lines the marriage procedure is referred to.)

'Send for horses loaded with ghee and molasses, (10) and for bullocks laden with rice. Call a meeting of wise men and wise women (and take their advice). Here come the horses laden with ghee and molasses, and the bullocks laden with rice. (15) Send a barber to invite the women, and on Saturday have the veil stretched out. Make five jarfuls of bhang-sherbet, and offer five pots full to the family priest. Invoke blessings from the wise men, (2) and make good arrangements for giving the guests a dinner.'

(The rest of the poem, which is a long one, has not been recorded. It describes Isarā's marriage, and the heroic feats performed by him and by his bride. Isarā's best friend had become his foe on account of the marriage, having become himself enamoured of the bride. It was with him that the struggle took place, which resulted in Isarā's complete victory.)

LAMANT OF BELGAUM.

It will suffice to give one more specimen of the Lamani of the Bombay Deccan, a short extract from a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son which comes from Belgaum. An example is, indeed, hardly necessary, for it will be seen that the dialect is the same as that of Berar. The only small point of difference is that in words like ra, to, the final a is sometimes dropped so that we get simply r. Thus, mati-r, for mati-ra, to a man.

LABHANT OF THE CENTRAL PROVINCES.

The Labhani of the Central Provinces differs only from that of Berar in being more corrupt. It is everywhere mixed with the local vernacular of the tract where the speakers are found, but its basis, as in Berar, is the language of West Rajputana and North Gujarat.

I give three specimens of it, one from the centre of the Provinces, one from the west, and one from the east.

LABHANI OF MANDLA.

The following version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son comes from Mandla, and is a good example of the Labhānī current in the Central Provinces. Everywhere in these Provinces it is based on the same dialect as that which we found in Berar, but it is always much corrupted by being strongly mixed with the local dialect of the place. I have selected the Mandla version because it is fairly central, and because it has been very carefully prepared. Here it will be seen that the language is mixed with the Eastern Hindī of that district. Indeed, the Eastern Hindī element often predominates to the total exclusion of the Labhānī forms. For instance, in the very first line we have the Eastern Hindī genitive termination $k\bar{e}r$, instead of the true Labhānī $r\bar{o}$ or $n\bar{o}$.

The Labhānī element itself is a good deal altered. We find the letter r by itself used to indicate the genitive case, instead of $r\bar{o}$, and this r is even added to words which are already in the genitive as in $t\bar{a}r\bar{o}$ -r, thy, and even $tar\bar{i}$ -r $bh\bar{a}\bar{i}$, thy brother. This r is even added to the adverb $\bar{o}t\bar{e}$, there, so that we have $\bar{o}t\bar{e}$ -r, of there, used to mean 'of him.'

For the locative postposition we have thani or thane, as in galo-thani, on the neck. Thani is literally the Gujarati thaine, having been, and it, as well as the cognate form chhane or chhani, formed from the verb chhe, he is, is used to make conjunctive participles, as in uth-chhane, having arisen; dekh-thane, having seen; daur-thani, having run. So in Berar we had de-tani (for de-thani), on giving.

The verb substantive is conjugated as follows:-

Present.

	Sing.	Plur.
1	chhū	chhā
	chhai, chhē	chhō, chhē
3	chhai, chhē	chhai, chhā

The plural is often used for the singular. Thus, ham chhā, I am.

The following very peculiar forms are given in a list received from Mandla. I have met them nowhere else, and hence have been unable to check them.

	Sing.	Plur.
1	chhukan	chhūk*ran
2		chhik*ran
3.		chhīk ran

The word for 'was,' 'were' is achchhē or chhē. The Eastern Hindi rahē is also common.

Chhē is added to almost any verbal form without affecting the meaning. Thus, beside present definites like marī-chhē, I am dying, and imperfects like khāt-chhē, they were eating, we have it added to the simple past, as in kahō-chhē, he said; gaya-chhē, he went; kāṭ-chhē, he spent (time); so we have in the future jawā-chhē, we (I) will go; kahowā-chhē, we (I) will say. In fact the future is almost the same as the present definite, mār-chhū, I will strike; mār-chhō, you will strike; and so on, besides mārū-chhē; mārō-chhē, and other forms.

Again chhë is added to the Imperative in kar-chhë, make (me as one of thy servants); and even to a verbal noun as in rahanwärë-chhë madhë, amongst the inhabitants. In bhäran-chhë, he wished to fill, the words appear to mean literally 'he was for filling.'

As already said, the conjunctive participle is formed by adding chhānē, thānē or thānī. We have also the Eastern Hindī suffix ke, and a parallel form, kō, in nikāl-kō, having taken out.

In one instance kahō, he said, is contracted to kōh.

Note the Rajasthānī method of forming casual verbs by adding r, as in rakhārō, kept.

LABANI OF HOSHANGABAD.

In Hoshangabad, in the west of the Central Provinces, the Labhānī is corrupt like that of Mandla, but not so corrupt. On the other hand, many of the corruptions of the Labhānī of this district clearly come from the Punjab. This is specially evident in the frequent use of $d\bar{a}$ $(d\bar{e}, d\bar{\imath})$ as the suffix of the genitive, and of $n\bar{u}$ as the suffix of the dative. The basis is, however, the same as that of the Labhānī of Berar, viz., the language of Western Rajputana and Gujarat.

The following points may be noted. There is the usual $r\bar{o}$ suffix of the genitive, as in $l\tilde{o}riy\bar{a}-r\bar{i}$ $m\tilde{a}$, the mother of the children; $kur^{o}m\bar{i}-r\bar{a}$ ghar, in a Kurmi's house; u-raī bōlī, by her (i.e., she) said.

We have the Panjābī $d\bar{a}$ series in $b\bar{a}m^{a}n\bar{a}-d\bar{\imath}$ (for $-d\bar{e}$) ghar, in the house of a Brāhman; $k\bar{e}-d\bar{a}$ $b\bar{a}n\bar{a}$, the arrows of some; $put\bar{a}-d\bar{\imath}-\bar{o}rat$, the wife of the son; $u-d\bar{e}$, to him, for her; u-dyā byāw, her marriage.

The Gujarātī-Panjābī $n\bar{o}$ series is also common, as in $put\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{i}$ $\bar{o}rat$, the wife of the son; $put\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{i}$, $putt\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{i}$, to the son (or sons); u- $n\bar{e}$ $put\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{e}$, to her son; $putt\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{i}$ $chal\bar{a}$ - $gy\bar{a}$, by the six sons it was gone, the six sons went away; $j\bar{e}$ - $n\bar{i}$, by whom; $kh\bar{a}n\bar{a}$ - $n\bar{u}$, for eating; $dhar\bar{i}$ - $n\bar{o}$, having carried. Note that the n of the suffix is often cerebralized.

Note how the word yadi, mother, here appears under the form yani, in the meaning of 'female.'

Note also the use of vē (i.e. whē) for 'was.'

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A certain king had seven sons. One day they all went up on to the top of the palace, and each shot an arrow. The arrow of one fell on a king's house, of another on a potter's, of another on an ascetic's, of another on an oil-monger's, of another on a Brahman's, of another on a Kurmi's, and of another on a merchant's. The oil-monger had a daughter, and the prince who shot the arrow which fell on his house married her. Similarly, another prince married the Kurmi's daughter, another the merchant's, another the potter's, another the Brahman's, and another the king's. But in the ascetic's house there was only a she-monkey, and the prince whose arrow fell there married her.

Then the mother of the princes went round to eat dinner at each of her seven sons' houses. Last of all she came to the house of the prince who had married the monkey and he made dinner ready. 'Where is your wife?' said she. So he went off and came back with the monkey sitting on his shoulder. As soon as he came before the queen, the monkey took off her outer garment, and, lo and behold, she turned into a beautiful fairy. Then they all sat down and ate their meal. When the old queen got up to go home she said, 'the wives of my six other sons can't cook a bit, but this son's wife has given me a first-rate dinner.' So she had a palace built for the couple, and banished the six other sons with their wives. So the prince who married the monkey got a fine palace to live in, and she turned into a beautiful fairy. That is the way that luck turns out.

LABHĀNĪ OF KANKER.

As a last example of the Labhānī of the Central Provinces, I give a specimen from the State of Kanker, which lies well to the east. It will be seen that, if we take the Berar Labhānī as the standard, it is much purer than that of Mandla or of Hoshangabad. The infusion of the local Chhattīsgaṛhī is comparatively small. Note the pronucciation of bāgh, a tiger, as bahāg. The Gujarātī root sābhar, hear, appears here as sāmar. The postposition nē is frequently employed to indicate the case of the Agent. Note also, warī meaning 'he'; kauh, said; the Rājasthānī futures, dīhū, I shall give, and vīhai (for whaihai), it will be; and the numerous conjunctive participles in thānīn.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A tiger once lay asleep in a certain forest, when there suddenly came out from their hole a number of mice. The tiger, startled by the noise they made, awoke, and his paw fell on one of them. In his anger he determined to kill the little creature, but the mouse made a humble petition saying, 'let Your Honour compare Your Honour's self and this poor me. What credit will Your Honour get from killing so tiny a creature?' Then the tiger relented and let him go, and the mouse said, 'bless my luck! Your Honour saw the difference between us, and let me go. Some day or other I will return this kindness which Your Honour has shown me.' When the tiger heard these words he laughed in scorn, and took his way into the heart of the forest. Some days afterwards the forest men set a springe for the tiger, as he had been every now and then killing their cattle, and into the springe the tiger fell. The tiger did his best to get out of the noose, but could not do so, and, feeling fit to die for grief, began to roar. Now that very mouse whom the tiger had released heard the roar, and recognized the voice as that of his benefactor. So he searched about till he found him lying caught in the springe. With his sharp teeth he cut the string of the noose, and released the tiger.

BANJARI OF THE UNITED PROVINCES.

The Labhānī of the United Provinces is usually called 'Banjārī.' It closely resembles that of Berar, though it is much corrupted, and is also much mixed with the vernacular dialects of the localities in which it is found. As in Berar, its basis is the language of Western Rajputana and of Northern Gujarat. I give a complete set of examples from the district of Saharanpur, and also a short extract from Khērī. It is unnecessary to give further specimens, as throughout the provinces the only variation is the greater or less admixture of the local dialect.

BANJART OF SAHARANPUR.

We may note the following peculiarities of the Banjari of Saharanpur: -

As in Northern Gujarat, a cerebral l is represented by r. Thus, $k\bar{a}l$, famine, becomes r.

As usual the nominative of strong a-bases ends in \tilde{o} , with an oblique form in \tilde{a} . Thus, $gh\tilde{o}r\tilde{o}$, a horse, oblique form, $gh\tilde{o}r\tilde{a}$. Nouns ending in consonants have an oblique form in \tilde{e} . Thus, $m\tilde{a}l$, property; genitive $m\tilde{a}l\tilde{e}-r\tilde{o}:mulk$, a country; locative, $mulk\tilde{e}-r\tilde{e}-m\tilde{a}\tilde{i}$, in a country: $b\tilde{a}t$, a thing: $b\tilde{a}t\tilde{e}-r\tilde{e}$, for a thing.

The usual case postpositions are—agent, $n\tilde{e}$; dative-accusative, $r\tilde{e}$, as in $g\tilde{a}or\tilde{a}$ - $r\tilde{e}$, to a man; \tilde{u} - $r\tilde{e}$, him. Sometimes we have the Gujarātī $n\tilde{e}$, as in $n\tilde{o}k^or\tilde{e}$ - $n\tilde{e}$, to a servant. For the genitive we generally have $r\tilde{o}$ (oblique $r\tilde{a}$, feminine $r\tilde{i}$). When it agrees with a noun in the locative, it becomes $r\tilde{e}$. Sometimes we have the Gujarātī $n\tilde{o}$, as in \tilde{u} - $n\tilde{o}$, of him. For the locative we have $m\tilde{a}\tilde{i}$, usually suffixed to the locative of the genitive, as in $mulk\tilde{e}$ - $r\tilde{e}$ - $m\tilde{a}\tilde{i}$, in a country.

The word for 'two' is dī, as in Berar, not dō.

The Pronouns generally are as in Berar. Manahĩ or manēhē, is 'to me.' The word for 'he' is \bar{u} or $w\bar{o}h\bar{o}$. 'One's own' is $ap\text{-}r\bar{o}$. $\bar{A}p$ is also used to mean 'we,' including the person addressed. Its genitive is then $\bar{a}p\text{-}r\bar{o}$, and its dative $\bar{a}p\text{-}r\bar{e}$.

The Present tense of the Verb Substantive is conjugated as follows:-

Dr. Parkers	Sing.	Plur.
1	chhữ or chhê	chhã or chhē.
2	chhē	chhō or chhē.
3	chhē	chhē, chhaĩ.

It will be observed that chhē can be used for all persons in both numbers.

The Past Tense is the Mālvī thō, was. Its feminine is thī. We should expect its masculine plural to be thā, but in the places where it occurs the ordinary Hindōstanī thē is used instead. In other parts of the United Provinces chhē is also employed for the past tense.

The Finite verb is as in Berar. The definite present is formed by suffixing the auxiliary verb to the simple present, and not to the present participle. Thus, $mar\tilde{u}$ - $chh\tilde{u}$, I am dying.

The Past Participle does not take y. Thus, kahō, not kahyō, said.

The Conjunctive Participle usually takes the suffix $t\bar{\imath}$ or $th\bar{\imath}n$ (compare the Berar $t\bar{\imath}an\bar{\imath}$, Central Provinces $th\bar{\imath}an\bar{\imath}$). Thus, $chhad\bar{\imath}a-t\bar{\imath}$, having left; $kar-th\bar{\imath}n$, having done; and many others. We have also a form like $d\bar{e}kh\bar{\imath}n$, having seen. Compare Gujarātī $m\bar{a}r\bar{\imath}n\bar{e}$, having struck.

The Rajasthani negative kô-ni, occurs.

Transitive verbs in the past tense generally, but not always, have the subject in the agent case.

I served for ten years in the State of Nāhan, and came home a year ago. The climate there is very good, but does not please the people of our country, for the mountaineers there are very ignorant, and we find it difficult to understand their speech. But the Rājā of Nāhan is making greater efforts than the neighbouring Rājās are doing to educate the people, and to polish their language. The Rājā's mind is full of this idea,—

'I must teach my subjects to read, and must polish their language.' With this object he is establishing schools here and there.

The people of that country very slowly understand our language, but now that the Rājā is endeavouring to improve theirs, it will very quickly become quite polished.

OUDH BANJĀRĪ.

In Oudh, the Banjārī does not differ from that of Saharanpur. A few short sentences will serve to show this. I have selected them to exemplify the use of chhē to mean 'was,' as stated when dealing with the Saharanpur Banjārī. We may note a few Rājasthānī forms which did not occur in the specimens from the latter district. Such are man, I, and thaī, thou.

Two brothers, living in the same house, used to quarrel about their property. One said to the other, 'let us partition the property. We can call four arbitrators, and they can divide it half and half, and then whether I use my property or dissipate it, it will be no concern of yours.'

KĀKĒRĪ.

The Kakers are a small tribe of comb-makers who are settled in the district of Jhansi in the United Provinces. They are said to have immigrated thither from Ajmer about two hundred years ago. They have a language of their own. Only some forty speakers of it have been recorded. I give two specimens of it,—an extract from the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and a folk-tale.

It will be seen that the language is exactly the same as that form of Labhāni of which the standard is found in Berar. In other words, it is based on the language of South-West Rajputana and of North Gujarat.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A certain king had a very beautiful daughter. His private chaplain looked upon her with evil intent, and to gratify it, said to the king that she was under the influence of some evil omen. The king stood before the monk with joined hands and asked him how the evil might be removed from his daughter. The monk then said, 'Make a chest of sandal-wood, and having shut up your daughter therein, throw her into the sea.'

The king did as he was told, and having shut her up in the chest threw her into the sea.

The girl's husband, who was out hunting, saw the floating chest, and ordered his men to jump into the sea and fetch it ashore. His men did so. When the chest was brought on land and opened, lo! there was the girl alive. As soon as she recognized her husband, she covered her face. The husband asked her how she had been thus shut up. She replied that her father's chaplain, who had an evil intent with regard to her, had brought her into this predicament. Then the husband asked her to come home with him, but she refused and said that she could not do so unless a monkey brought from the forest was placed in her stead, and the chest left floating.

Her husband did so, and she went to her husband's house.

Meanwhile the monk whose monastery was situated on an island on the sea, saw the chest floating and ordered his disciples to bring it ashore.

They did so and he had it removed to his own room.

Then he ordered his disciples to go on with their usual hymns with great vigor, and added that even if he should call them, they need not attend.

Then at midnight, full of joy, he opened the chest; but to his surprise, he found there a fierce monkey who fell upon him and tore his throat open, so that he fell down dead.

Next morning, when the disciples saw that their master did not come out though it was late in the day, they peeped through a hole in the door, and saw that he lay dead. They opened the door, and out ran the monkey.

Then they understood that the monkey must have killed their preceptor.

MORAL.—As a man sows, so does he reap. Beauty sits quiet at home, while the monk is killed by the monkey.

LABANKI OF THE PUNJAB.

The Labhānī (locally called Labānī or Labān*kī) of the Punjab is also based on Rājasthānī. But its original is rather the Bāgrī of north-west Rajputana, than the half Mārwārī half Gujarātī which we have observed in the Central Provinces. It will be remembered that one of the typical peculiarities of Bāgrī is that the initial k of the genitive postposition is changed to g, so that $k\bar{o}$ becomes $g\bar{o}$. In Punjab Labānī this principle is carried still further. The dative postposition $k\bar{u}$ becomes $g\bar{u}$; the ablative postposition $t\bar{i}$ becomes $d\bar{i}$; the past tense of the verb substantive $t\bar{o}$, was, becomes $d\bar{o}$, and similarly the illative conjunction $t\bar{o}$, then, becomes $d\bar{o}$. We even find the word $pahar\bar{a}o$, clothe, changed to $bhar\bar{a}o$.

The declension of nouns follows the usual north-western Rājasthānī forms. The nominative of strong masculine a-bases ends in \bar{o} , not \bar{a} , and its oblique form and plural ends in \bar{a} , not \bar{e} . Thus, $gh\bar{o}r\bar{o}$, a horse, oblique form $gh\bar{o}r\bar{a}$. There is the usual locative in \bar{e} , as in $gh\bar{o}r\bar{e}$, on a horse. The agent case, however, takes the postposition $n\bar{e}$, and is regularly employed before the past tenses of transitive verbs.

The usual postpositions are-

Dative-accusative $kh\tilde{o}$, $g\tilde{u}$, $g\tilde{e}$ (locative of the genitive), $k\tilde{o}$ (borrowed from Hindostānī), $n\tilde{e}$ (a Gujarātī form), $n\tilde{u}$ (Panjābī).

Ablative, dī, san, kōlɔ̃ (from·near). Genitive, gō (Bāgṛī), rō (Mārwāṛī), kā (Hindōstānī). Locative, mã.

Sometimes $r\bar{e}$ is used as a sign of the agent case as in un- $r\bar{e}$ $d\bar{i}n\bar{o}$, he gave; jin- $r\bar{e}$, by whom. The genitive postpositions end in \bar{e} , when agreeing with a noun in the locative, as in in- $r\bar{e}$ $w\bar{a}st\bar{e}$, for this. In one case we have $n\bar{e}$, the locative of the Gujarātī genitive suffix $n\bar{o}$, viz., in chillar- $n\bar{e}$ $kar\bar{e}$, with the husks. $R\bar{a}$ is used as the sign of the accusative in $j\bar{e}$ - $r\bar{a}$ $s\bar{u}r$ $kh\bar{a}v\bar{e}$ - $d\bar{a}$, what the swine were eating.

The vocative particle is $r\bar{e}$ when addressing men, and $r\bar{i}$, when addressing women.

The oblique plural sometimes ends in an, as in Rājastbānī. Thus, $\tilde{a}khan-m\tilde{a}$, in eyes; $g\bar{o}dan-m\tilde{a}$, on the feet.

As a general rule Hindostānī and Panjābī forms are also freely used, so that, though based on Rājasthānī, the language is essentially mixed in character.

The numerals are as in Hindostāni. It will be noticed that the form di for 'two,' which we met in the Central Provinces, is not found in the Labāni of the Punjab.

The first two personal pronouns are as follows. The agent case is the same as the nominative:—

Maî, I, by me; mhārō, my; mū-khō, to me; ham, we, by us; hamārō, our.

 $T\tilde{u}$ or $th\tilde{u}$, thou, by thee; $th\tilde{u}r\tilde{o}$, thy; tam (a regular Rajasthani and Gujarātī form), you, by you; $thu\tilde{u}r\tilde{o}$, your.

In both pronouns Hindostani forms are also freely employed.

'He,' 'that' is ō or woh, oblique singular ū, nom. pl. vē or veh; oblique plural to or un. We have also forms like unhā ghar-mā, in that house; unā mulk-mā, in that country.

Yeh or yoh, is 'this'; $\bar{\imath}$ -gē (accusative), it; $\bar{\imath}$ -gō, of this one; $inh\tilde{a}$ ghōrā-gī umar, the age of this horse.

Other pronominal forms are $j\bar{o}$, who; $j\bar{e}$ - $r\bar{a}$ (acc.), what; kaun, $k\bar{e}h^ar\bar{o}$, who? $k\bar{u}$ - $g\bar{o}$, whose? $k\bar{a}$, $k\bar{a}$ - \bar{e} , what? $kit^an\bar{a}$ -k (with Rajasthani pleonastic k), how many?

Ghar-gō, of the house, is regularly used to mean 'one's own,' like the Hindöstānī ap nā.

The verb substantive is thus declined in the present :-

haigō, chhaigō

	Sing.	Plur.
1.	õ, ã, aũ	ã.
2.	6, 1	ã, ō.
3.		ã, ē.
The follow	ing forms are also used :
	Sing.	Plur.
1. haigõ, chhaigõ		haigã, chhaigã.
2.	haigð, chhaigð	haigã, chhaigã.

Note that, as in Northern Gujarātī, the second person singular is the same as the first person singular. Note, also, that all persons of the plural end in \tilde{a} .

haigã, chhaigã.

Finally, hai or chhai can be used for any person of the present tense. This also occurs in Gujarātī dialects.

The past tense is $d\bar{o}$, $h\bar{e}g\bar{o}$ - $d\bar{o}$, or $chh\bar{e}g\bar{o}$ - $d\bar{o}$. The masculine plural is $d\bar{a}$, $h\bar{e}g\bar{a}$ - $d\bar{a}$, or $chh\bar{e}g\bar{a}$ - $d\bar{a}$.

The simple present tense of the finite verb takes the following forms. Thus, 'I strike,' etc.:—

Sing.	Plur.
marii	mārã.
mārữ	mārē.
mārē	mārē.
	mārữ mārữ

The Present Definite is formed as in Rājasthānī and Gujarātī, by conjugating the verb substantive with the simple present, and not with the present participle. Thus, $ma\tilde{\imath} \ m\tilde{a}r\tilde{u}-\tilde{a}\tilde{u}$, I am striking. Similarly we have an Imperfect $kh\bar{a}v\bar{e}-d\bar{a}$, they were eating.

The Future has s for its characteristic letter as in eastern Rājasthānī and Gujarātī. It is conjugated as follows. 'I shall strike, etc.':—

	Sing.	Plur.
1.	mārūs.	mār⁴s∰,
2.	māraš.	mār° sō.
3.	mār*sī.	mār*san, mār*sē.

There is a future passive participle in $b\bar{o}$, which can also be used for the future, as in $kar^{o}b\bar{o}$, it is to be done, i.e., (we) shall do.

The Imperative is as usual. Thus, $d\tilde{e}$ -thão, give away. Special forms are li-as, bring, with the Rājasthānī pleonastic s; $khāj\bar{e}$, eat; $h\bar{o}j\bar{e}$, become; $chāl^{\circ}j\bar{e}$, go.

It seems that the syllable $g\bar{o}$ (feminine $g\bar{i}$) may be added to all these forms without affecting the sense. Thus, $\bar{a}v\bar{e}-g\bar{o}$, it may come; $ch\bar{a}h\bar{i}-g\bar{o}$, it is proper; $ch\bar{a}l^{o}j\bar{e}-g\bar{i}$, go ye women.

The past participle ends in $i\bar{o}$. Thus, $m\bar{a}ri\bar{o}$, struck. From this past tenses are formed exactly as in Hindőstáni. Thus, \bar{o} - $n\bar{e}$ $m\bar{a}ri\bar{o}$, he struck; \bar{o} $gi\bar{o}$, he went. The Perfect sometimes combines the past participle with the verb substantive into one word. Thus, $\bar{a}y\bar{a}$, for $\bar{a}i\bar{o}$ - \bar{a} , I have come.

Karono, to do, makes its past participle kio or kīno. Kio is also used to mean 'said,' as in Gujarātī.

The present participle is mār tō, striking; the infinitive, mār nō, to strike; and the conjunctive participle, mār, mār gē, or mār kē, having struck.

In khawāriō, caused to feed, we have a causal verb formed by suffixing ār, as in Rājasthānī.

The first two specimens of Labani of the Punjab come from Lahore. They are a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son and a folk-song.

LABANT OF KANGRA.

The Labānī of Kangra does not differ from that of Lahore. There are only a few local peculiarities. As a specimen, I give an interesting folk-tale.

We may note the following few divergencies from what we have seen in Lahore.

The locative of the genitive as well as the sign of the conjunctive participle is sometimes written gai instead of $g\bar{e}$. For the dative we have $g\bar{u}$ (not $g\hat{u}$) and $kh\bar{u}$ (not $kh\bar{o}$). The sign of the locative is $ma\tilde{i}$.

The datives of the first two personal pronouns are $ma-kh\bar{u}$, to me; $ta-kh\bar{u}$, to thee. Woh, that, and yoh, this, have feminine forms, wah and yah, in the nominative singular. Thus, wah ant dēsī, she will give the explanation; wah jagah dīsī, that place (fem.) appeared; yah (bāt, understood) mushkal chhai, this thing is difficult. In Rājasthānī these pronouns have also such feminine forms.

The same two pronouns have une and ine for their oblique forms singular. Thus, une janana-ne, by that woman; ine bat-gu, to this thing.

'What?' is kah, and 'anything' kau.

Among verbal forms note thō as well as dō for 'was'; karas, I shall do; dēs, I will give; dēsī, she will give. The past participle is spelt with y, not i. Thus, $d\bar{e}khy\bar{o}$, seen.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

A man was once coming home from service, and as he was benighted on the way, stopped for the night in a wayside house. At midnight he saw a woman kill her son at the instigation of her lover. He stayed where he was till morning, and then asked her for an explanation of her conduct. 'Is not,' said he, 'thine own son dear to thee?' She replied, 'If thou want an explanation, thou must go to my sister. I will give thee a letter to her, and she will give thee the explanation.'

So the man took the letter to the woman's sister, and when the latter had read it, she said, 'Come to me on the first Sunday of next month with a first-born goat, and I will give you the explanation.' So on the first Sunday of the next month the man brought her the goat. She had prepared a sacrificial platform on which she made the goat to stand, and she put a vermilion mark on its forehead. Then she gave a sword into the man's hand and said, 'When I give thee the sign kill the goat.' Then she recited some incantations and gave the sign. The man killed the goat, and, lo and behold, he immediately found himself in the middle of a forest, with not a soul near him. He wandered about till he came to a round-looking house without a door. He walked round it, and somehow or other managed to climb up the wall and to get down inside. There he found a bedstead and bedding, but nobody was there, so he quietly lay down on the bed and went to sleep.

Now the owners of this house were four fairies. When they came home they were quite frightened to see a strange man, and they said among themselves, 'God has sent us a man in the middle of this forest. Let us not say anything to him.' So they said nothing to him, and when he awoke they put nice food before him, and did all they could for his comfort. In this way they tended him for some ten or fifteen days, and they all became quite fond of him and he of them.

One day the man said to them, 'When you go out for a stroll, I am always afraid of being alone.' So they gave him the keys of the house, and told him that he might amuse himself by looking into all the rooms, except one, and into that room he was not to go. After a month had passed they got on so well together that they took him for their husband, and he took them for his wives.

One day it came into the man's head that he would look through the rooms of the house, and he opened the door of the room which the fairies had told him not to enter. In the room he saw an ass. It had a saddle on its back, and jewelled trappings. The ass said to him, 'Mount my back, and I will take thee for a ride for a great distance in a moment of time, and then I will bring thee safely back here.' So the man got on its back, and the ass flew up to heaven, and when it came down again, it alighted in a forest. It began to walk about on a dunghill and to eat the dirt. The man thought that the ass was hungry, and got off to give it something to eat and drink. No sooner had he dismounted than he fell into a deep sleep. When he awoke and opened his eyes, the ass was no longer there, and he found himself in the very place where he had killed the goat. He ran up to the woman, and asked her to send him back again to his home with the fairies. She replied, 'This is a difficult thing to do. If you will bring me your firstborn son, I will be able to send you there.' As soon as she had finished, he went and fetched his eldest son, and the woman made the boy stand on the platform on which the goat had previously stood. She put a sword into the man's hand and began to recite her incantations. When the time came for her to make the sign to strike the mortal blow, she snatched the sword from his hand, and said, 'Thou brute, dost thou not yet understand why my sister killed her child to please her lover?'

Except those received from the district of Muzaffargarh, all the remaining Labānī specimens received from the Punjab are in the same language as that of those just given. Further examples are therefore not necessary.

The specimens received from Muzaffargarh are quite different. This district is separated from Bikaner by the north of the State of Bahawalpur, and the Muzaffargarh Labānī specimens are in ordinary Bikanērī. A few lines from the commencement of a folk-tale which in itself is not of great interest, and is moreover not very decent, will show this.

saudāgar saudāgarī-nē Ek giō. Saudagar-zādī ēk*lī rahī. went. merchant trade-for The-merchant's-wife A alone remained. Pādshāhī-rō wazīr buddhī-nē 'saudāgar-zādī kahē lāgō, the-wazir old-woman-to The-kingdom-of anto-say began, 'the-merchant's-wife dhurī jāō, mare-la-re majlas karā.' intimacy make.' near me-with go,

It is unnecessary to give more. It will be seen that the above is ordinary Bikanērī. I may mention, however, that in this dialect the word for 'two' is dī, as in the Labhānī of the Central Provinces.

LABANT OF GUJARAT.

As an example of the Labhani (locally called 'Labani') of Gujarat, I give an extract from a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son received from the district of the Panch Mahals. It will be seen that it follows the Panjabi Labani in changing an initial k to g. Thus, $k\bar{o}$, of, becomes $g\bar{o}$, and $k\bar{i}$, that, becomes $g\bar{i}$. I have not found any instances of the change of t to d, which also occurs in the Panjab. As will be seen from the specimen, the dialect is in other respects a mixture of Gujarātī and Mālvī.

Amongst special peculiarities, we may notice the change of i to a in words like dan for din, a day, and nakalyo for nikalyo, he went out. So, e becomes a in pharabo for phēr bo, to journey. U becomes a in malak for mulk, a country; adāu for udāu, prodigal, and gamāyō for gumāyō, wasted. All these also occur in colloquial Gujarātī.

The usual postposition of the agent case is ne, but we have also ge in ~ge gamayo, he wasted. The demonstrative pronoun is $\tilde{u}$, $t\tilde{i}$, or $v\tilde{i}$.

BAHRUPIĀ.

The Bahrūpiās or Mahtams are a tribe who have settled in the Punjab districts of Gujrat and Sialkot. A few, also, are found in the State of Kapurthala. They have a dialect of their own, of which the following speakers have been returned for this Survey:—

Sialkot	100	ä	112	-	TI, SI		4	2			1,500
Gujrat
Kapurthala			1.5	3.5	12	7.50		 300	100	10	70
								То	TAL	-	2,872

Their own tradition is that they came from Rajputana with Rājā Mān Singh on the occasion of his expedition to Kabul (A.D. 1587), and that some of them settled in the neighbourhood of their present seat on his return from that country.

There is a Bahrūp sub-tribe of the Labānās of the Punjab, and Sir Denzil Ibbetson¹ has pointed out that the Labānās and Mahtams closely resemble each other.

Their language is nearly the same as that of the Labhānīs of Berar, i.e., it is based on the dialects spoken in Northern Gujerat (of Bombay) and in South-Western Rajputana. It hence differs somewhat from the Labānī of the Punjab, which, as we have seen, is more nearly connected with Bāgṛī.

As specimens of this dialect, I give a version of the Parable of the Prodigal Son, and an account of the origin of the tribe as narrated by a Bahrūpiā. Both come from Sialkot. It will be seen that the language differs but slightly from Berar Labhānī, except that it is freely mixed with Panjābī. The specimens received from Gujrat are similar, but have a stronger admixture of that language. No specimens have been received from Kapurthala.

The following are the principal characteristics by which we can compare the language of the specimens with the Labhani of Berar.

There is a tendency to metathesis, or the interchange of consonants in the same word. Thus, wahēlī for havēlī, a mansion.

There is the usual oblique form in \tilde{e} for nouns ending in consonants. Thus the dative of $L\tilde{a}h\tilde{o}r$, Lahore, is $L\tilde{a}h\tilde{o}r\tilde{e}\cdot n\tilde{e}$; so $ghor\tilde{e}\cdot th\tilde{a}$, from the house. Strong masculine nouns with \tilde{a} bases end, as usual, in \tilde{o} , with an oblique form in \tilde{a} . Thus, $gh\tilde{o}r\tilde{o}$, a horse, oblique singular $gh\tilde{o}r\tilde{a}$. The postposition of the genitive is $r\tilde{o}$ (with the usual changes), and that of the dative, $r\tilde{e}$, $r\tilde{a}$, or $n\tilde{e}$. The case of the agent may take $n\tilde{e}$, but, as often as not, drops it.

Note the form dī, not dō, for 'two.' This is characteristic of Labhānī.

As for the pronouns, there are a few peculiar forms. In the first two personal pronouns, $ma\tilde{\imath}$ is 'I' and 'by me,' and $ta\tilde{\imath}$ or $t\tilde{u}$ is 'thou' and 'by thee.' Irregular is $mim\tilde{\imath}$ for $ma\tilde{\imath}$ $v\tilde{\imath}$, even I. The genitives are properly $mh\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$ and $th\tilde{a}r\tilde{o}$ (as in Berar), but they are often written $m\tilde{a}hr\tilde{o}$ or $m\tilde{a}har$ and $t\tilde{a}hr\tilde{o}$ or $t\tilde{a}har$, respectively. The pronoun of the third person is \tilde{u} , its oblique form, and also its agent case, is oh, \tilde{u} , or $uh\tilde{o}$. 'This' is ai. $Ja\tilde{\imath}$, by whom.

chhữ or chhẽ.	chhã or chhē.
chhē.	chhō or chhē.
chhē.	chhē.

Note that $chh\bar{e}$ can be used for any person and in both numbers. It is also used for the past tense, as in the first sentence of the Parable and in many other passages in the specimens. The Gujarātī forms $hat\bar{o}$ and $t\bar{o}$ are also freely used.

The conjugation of the finite verb is the same as that of Berar Labhānī. We may note the Gujarātī form gēlō as well as giyō, for 'he went.'

We have a peculiar negative in natar dētō, was not giving.

FREE TRANSLATION OF THE FOREGOING.

When Rājā Mān Singh¹ came here, we were his servants. The Rājā conquered Kabul, and then his ministers and courtiers advised him to return towards Lahore. When he halted in the Punjab District of Gujrat, four of our clans, Pawār, Raṭhaur, ¹ Rajā of Āmbēr (Jaipur). He was Akbar's famous lieutenant.

Chōhān, and Tūr, were in attendance on him. Three of these have survived, but the fourth, the Tūr, became Muhammadans for the sake of a Gūjar woman. Those of our brethren who went home with the Rājā went home; but we stopped at Rāmnagar where we built houses and dwellings. Thence we migrated to Sōdhrā, and settled there. Then we again moved from Sōdhrā and founded our present villages.
