"Aristophanis Λυσιστράτη. Schol. Lysistr. 173, Καλλίου ἄρχοντος ἐφ' οὗ εἰσῆχθη τὸ δρᾶμα. Arg. Lysistr., ἐδιδάχθη ἐπὶ Καλλίου ἄρχοντος τοῦ μετὰ Κλεόκριτον ἄρξαντος. εἰσῆκται δὲ διὰ Καλλιστράτου. Schol. Lysistr. 1096, ἐπὶ Σικελίας ἐμῆλλον πλεῖν πρὸ ἐτῶν τεσσάρων τῆς καθέσεως τούτου τοῦ δράματος. Four years were the actual interval, from the sailing of the expedition, B. C. 415, θέρους μεσοῦντος, to the Dionysia of the Archon Callias, B. C. 411. Musgrave has neglected these testimonies, and has followed Petitus in the chronology of this Play, which he places in Ol. 92, 4, or three years below the true time." Clinton, Fasti Hellenici, p. 73. Droysen, (Introduction to the Lysistrata, p. 127,) "It has not been recorded whether this play was brought on the stage at the Lenæan festival, or at the Dionysia, i. e. in January or March of the year 411. According to the internal evidence of the time, the latter would appear the more probable." The plot is this:—Lysistrata, the wife of an Athenian magistrate, takes it into her head to attempt a pacification between the belligerents. She summons a council of women, who come to a determination to expel their husbands from their beds, until they conclude a peace. In the mean time the elder women are commissioned to seize the Acropolis, and make themselves masters of the money which had been stowed therein for the purposes of war. Their design succeeds; and the husbands are reduced to a terrible plight by the novel resolution of their wives. Ambassadors at length come from the belligerent parties, and peace is concluded with the greatest despatch, under the direction of the clever Lysistrata.

LYSISTRATA.

[SCENE—the front of a house.]

LYS. WELL! if one had summoned them to the temple of Bacchus,¹ or Pan, or Colias,² or Genetyllis, it would not even have been possible to pass through by reason of the kettle-drums: but now not a single woman is present here; saving that my neighbour here is coming forth. [Enter Calonice.] Welcome, Calonice!

CALON. And you too, Lysistrata! Why are you troubled? Be not of a sad countenance, child! for it does not beseem you to arch³ your eyebrows.

LYS. I am inflamed in my heart, Calonice, and am greatly vexed on account of us women, because we are considered among men to be bad;—

CALON. For,⁴ by Jove, we are so!

LYS. —and when it was told⁵ them to meet together here,

⁴ See Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 69, 32, obs. 21.

⁵ Hermann (Vig. n. 213), Matthiä (Gr. Gr. § 564), Kön (Greg. Cor. p. 159), and Enger (ad loc.) consider these forms to be nominatives absolute. On the contrary, Krüger (Gr. Gr. § 56, 2, obs. 5) and Idem (Gr. Gr. § 700) consider them accusatives absolute. Philologers to deliberate about no small matter, they sleep, and have not come.

CALON. But, my dearest, they will come. Of a truth women find it difficult to get out. For one of us goes poking¹ about her husband, another wakens the servant, another puts the child to bed, another washes hers, another feeds hers with morsels.

LYS. But indeed there were other matters more important for them than these.

CALON. What is the matter, dear Lysistrata, for which you summon us women? What is the affair? Of what size is it?

LYS. Great.

CALON. Is it also thick?²

LYS. And thick, by Jove.

CALON. Why, how then have we not come?³

LYS. This is not the fashion of it; for, if it had been so, we should have quickly assembled. But there is a certain affair which has been investigated by me, and revolved with much sleeplessness.

CALON. Doubtless the matter revolved is somewhat subtle.

LYS. Aye, so subtle, that the safety of all Greece depends upon⁴ the women.

CALON. Upon the women? Why, it depended⁵ on a slight thing then.

LYS. Since⁶ the affairs of the state depend upon us, either that there should be no longer any⁷ Peloponnesians—— would do well to reflect whether the list of accusatives absolute be not already fuller than can be maintained by fair argument. Cf. Vesp. 1288.

ἐνθάδε κυπτάζουσι πλείσται γυναῖκες.

For this use of the aorist, see Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 53, 6, obs. 3.

² "Quod dixit Lysistrata μέγα, accipit Calonice de virili membro. Brunch.

³ See Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 53, 6, obs. 2, and note on Pax, 1077.

⁴ See Hermann, Vig. n. 388.

Enger, objecting to ἔχουσθαι ἐπὶ τινος, as an unstatuteable construction, reads ἐπ' ὀλίγου ὀχεῖτ' ὄρα, which is a slight modification of Dobree's emendation.

⁵ See Elmsley's note on Acharn. vs. 335.

⁷ "Lysistrata was going to add 'or any Athenians,' but stops herself, lest she should utter any thing ill-omened for her own country.

CALON. Then, by Jove, 'tis best they should no longer exist.

LYS. —and that all the Boeotians perish utterly.¹

CALON. Not all, pray; exempt the eels.²

LYS. But about Athens I will utter no such ill language.³ Do you conjecture something⁴ else! If the women assemble here, both those from Boeotia, and those from the Peloponnese, and we from Attica, we shall save Greece in common.

CALON. What prudent or brilliant action could women accomplish? we, who sit decked⁵ out, wearing saffron-coloured robes, and beautified, and wearing loose Cimmerian vests, and sandals?

LYS. For⁶ in truth these are even the very things, which I expect will save us; the little saffron-coloured robes, and the unguents, and the sandals, and the alkanet root, and the transparent vests.

CALON. In what manner, pray?

LYS. So that none of the men of the present day lift a spear against each other——

CALON. Then, by the two goddesses, I'll get me a saffron robe dyed

Brunck. "This passage has been misunderstood by Brunck, Dindorf, and Bothe, who think Βοιωτίους τε in vs. 35 corresponds to this μήτε. The Scholiast rightly explains, 'μὴ πεισθέντας ἡμῖν μήτε τοὺς Ἀθηναίους μήτε τοὺς Πελοποννησίους (μηκέτ' εἶναι). ὥς φιλόπατρις δὲ ἀπεισιώπησε τοὺς Ἀθηναίους.' He might have added ἢ πεισθέντας τὴν Ἑλλάδα σωθῆναι,—although πεισθέντας is scarcely correct,—for the correlative to ἢ in vs. 33, is what is contained in 39—41." Enger.

LYS. —nor take a shield—

CALON. I'll put on a Cimmerian vest.

LYS. —nor little sword.

CALON. I'll get sandals.

LYS. Ought not, then, the women to have been present?

CALON. No, by Jove, but to have come flying long ago.¹

LYS. Nay, my dear,² you'll see them thorough Attic—doing every thing later than they ought. Yet not even from the people of the sea-coast³ is any woman present, nor from Salamis.

CALON. But those, I well know, have crossed over at day-break in the swift boats.

LYS. Nor have the Acharnian women⁴ come, whom I expected and counted on to come hither the first.

CALON. At any rate the wife of Theogenes⁵ consulted the statue of Hecate, with the intention of coming hither. But see! here now are some coming! and, again, some others are coming! Hah! hah! Whence are they?

LYS. From Anagyrus.

CALON. Aye, by Jove! In sooth methinks Anagyrus⁶ has been set in motion. [Enter Myrrhina.]

MYRRH. Surely we have not come too late, Lysistrata? What do you say? Why are you silent?

LYS. I do not commend you, Myrrhina, who have only now come about so important a matter.

² "Although the feminine of μέλις is μέλις (Vesp. 312), yet the vocative ὦ μέλις is applied to either sex." Brunck. Cf. Eccles. 245.

³ "The Πελαῖοι are those that dwell on the sea-coast." Droysen. See Herm. Pol. Ant. § 106.

⁵ "Whether this Theogenes be the Theogenes mentioned in Av. 822, may be doubted. For the Hecateion, see Vesp. 804." Droysen. Δουκάτειον ἦρετο is Bentley's emendation (ad Callim. Fr. ccxxvii.) for τὰκάτειον ἀνῆρετο. Compare Lobeck, Aglaoph. p. 1337. "οὗτος δειλὸς ἦν· εἶχε δὲ ἑκάτης ἀγάλμα, ᾧ ἐπυνθάνετο πανταχοῦ ἀφίων." Scholiast.

MYRRH. I had great difficulty in finding my girdle in the dark. But if it be very pressing,¹ tell it to us now we are present.

LYS. No, by Jove; but let us wait for a little while for the women from Bœotia and from the Peloponnese to come.

MYRRH. You say far better. But see! here now's Lampito approaching! [Enter Lampito.]

LYS. O dearest Laconian! welcome, Lampito! How your beauty, dearest, shines forth! What² a fresh colour you have! how vigorous your body is! You could even throttle a bull.

LAMP. I fully believe so, by the two goddesses! I exercise myself and spring against my buttocks.

LYS. What beautiful breasts³ you have!

LAMP. Upon my word you handle me like a victim.

LYS. But from what country is this other young woman?

LAMP. By the two goddesses, a Bœotian of rank is coming to you. [Enter Bœotian.]

LYS. Aye, by Jove, O Bœotian, with a beautiful bosom.⁴

CALON. And, by Jove, with the hair very neatly plucked out.

LYS. Who is the other girl? [Enter Corinthian.]

LAMP. A good one, by the two goddesses; but a Corinthian.

LYS. Aye, by Jove, she is evidently good,⁵—see here! in these parts!

LAMP. But who brought together this company of women?

LYS. I here!

LAMP. Then say⁶ to us what you wish.

LYS. Yea, by Jove, my dear woman.

⁴ Supply ικνεῖ from the former line.

⁵ Comp. vs. 1157, infra. There is a play on χαίρω, χαυδός. The loose character of the Corinthian women was notorious.

"Tüchtig, meiner Seelen, ist

Und recht Korinthisch ihr Doppelhafen hier und dort." Droysen. ταῦτα is used δεικτικῶς. Bergler renders it, "bonam profecto esse apparet hinc ex istis indiciis." Enger, who approves of Bergler's interpretation, adds, "i. q. κατά γε ταῦτα ἃ ἔστιν ἐντεῦθεν. ἐντεῦθεν is used in the same way again in vs. 802, καὶ Μυρωνίδης γὰρ ἦν τραχὺς ἐντεῦθεν."

⁶ "Μουσιῶδες λαλεῖ, ὁμιλεῖ." Hesychius.

MYRRH. Mention, then, the important business, whatever this is.

LYS. I will now mention it. But before I mention it, I will ask you this small question.

MYRRH. Whatever you please.

LYS. Do you not long for the fathers of your children, who are absent on military service? for I well know that the husband of each one of you is abroad.¹

CALON. In truth my husband has been absent, O unhappy man, five months in Thrace, guarding Eucrates.²

LYS. And mine has been absent seven whole months in Pylos.

LAMP. And mine, even if he ever does depart from the ranks,³ having taken up his shield, flies off and disappears.

LYS. But not even a spark of a paramour is left; for since the Milesians⁴ betrayed us, I have not seen a thing of the kind, which might have consoled us in the absence of our husbands. Would you be willing, therefore, with me to put an end to the war, if I were to find a contrivance?

MYRRH. Yea, by the two goddesses, I would be willing, if I were obliged even to pawn this upper garment, and drink the proceeds this very day.⁵

CALON. Methinks I would even cut myself in half like a turbot and give⁶ it away.

⁵ "So mir Gott,

Ich sicher, müsst' Ich auch sogleich mein Mäntelchen
Im Trödel versetzen und—vertrinken diesen Tag." Droysen.

⁶ See note on Thesm. 526.*

LAMP. And I would even go up to Taygetus, if there¹ I were about to get a sight of peace.

LYS. I will² mention it; for the matter must not remain concealed. We, O women, if we are to compel the men to be at peace, must abstain——

MYRRH. From what? tell us!

LYS. Will you do it then?

MYRRH. We will do it, even if we must die.

LYS. Then we must abstain³ from the marriage-bed. Why do you turn away from me? Whither are you going? Ho you! why do you compress your lips and shake your heads at me? Why is your colour changed? Why is the tear let fall? Will you do it, or will you not do it? or what do you purpose⁴ to do?

MYRRH. I cannot do it; let the war go on!

CALON. Neither can I, by Jove! let the war go on.⁵

LYS. You say this, you turbot? And yet,⁶ just now, you said you would even cut yourself in half.

CALON. Any thing else, any thing else, whatever you wish. I am willing to walk even through fire, if I must: this⁷ rather than the loss of conjugal rights; for there's nothing like them, dear Lysistrata.

LYS. (to Myrrhina). What, then, do you say?

MYRRH. I also am willing to walk through fire.

LYS. Oh, our entire race, devoted to lewdness! No wonder tragedies⁸ are made from us; for we are nothing but "Neptune and a boat."⁹ But, my dear Laconian, vote with me! for if only you side with me, we may yet restore the affair.

⁷ τοῦτο refers to the notion contained in the preceding line, and not to any specific word. This is often the case also with δ and αὐτό. See Viger, p. 289. Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 58, 2, obs. 8. Eccles. 465, 887, 888. Plut. 236, 492, 524, 645, 778. Aves, 604, 758.

LAMP. By the two goddesses, women find it hard to sleep alone without a husband. Yet still¹ we must do it, for there is great need of peace.

LYS. O thou dearest, and the only woman out of these!

CALON. But if we were to abstain as much as possible from what² you now mention, (which may heaven forefend!) would peace be made aught the more for this?

LYS. Aye, much, by the two goddesses! For if we were to sit³ at home painted, and approach them lightly clad in our vests of fine linen, having the hairs plucked off our bosoms, the men would become enamoured, and desire to lie with us; and if we were not to come nigh them, but abstain, they would quickly make peace, I well know.⁴

LAMP. Of a truth Menelaus, when he had taken a side glance at the breasts⁵ of Helen when naked, threw away his sword, I believe.

MYRRH. But what, my friend, if our husbands leave us?

LYS. The saying of Pherecrates,⁶ "to flay a skinned dog."

CALON. These similes are idle talk. If they should lay hold of us and drag us to the chamber by force?

LYS. Do you hold on by the doors.

where the beautiful girl appears with Neptune in the beginning, and at the close with two little boys, whom she exposes in a boat." Droysen. ⁶

³ For this form, see Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 38, 6. Cf. Hermann, Vig. n. 280. Dawes M. C. p. 440.

⁴ For this use of οἷδ' ὅτι at the end of a verse, cf. 59, 764. Plut. 183, 889. Pax, 365, 373, 1296. Nub. 1175. Aves, 1401.

⁵ The allusion is to the Andromache of Euripides, where Peleus thus reproaches Menelaus, vs. 628, οὐκ ἔκτανες γυναῖκα χειρίαν λαβὼν, ἀλλ' ὥς ἐσεῖδες μαστόν, ἐκβαλὼν ξίφος, φίλημ' ἐδέξω, προδότιν αἰκάλλων κύνα, ἥσσω πεφυκὼς Κύπριδος, ὦ κάκιστε εὖ.

⁶ "Pherecrates was one of the most distinguished comedians of the day." Droysen. "The proverb is used of those who labour in vain." Brunck.

CALON. But what if they beat us?

LYS. You must be niggardly of conjugal rights; for there is no pleasure in these acts which are accomplished by force. Besides, you must pain them; and be assured they will very soon give up. For a man¹ will never be delighted, unless it suits the woman.²

CALON. If in truth you two are decided about this, we also agree.³

LAMP. And so we will persuade our husbands every where justly to keep peace without deceit. In what way, however, *could*⁴ any one, on the other hand, persuade the unstable crowd of the Athenians not to talk nonsense?

LYS. We of course will persuade our party.

LAMP. Not as long as the triremes are in readiness⁵ and

³ This verse is also found in Av. 1630. Reisig (Conject. p. 133) would place the comma after σφῆρ.

⁴ For this emphatic use of καί, cf. vs. 836, infra. Nub. 785, 840. Ran. 737. Aves, 508, 1446. Pax, 1289. Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 69, 32, obs. 16. Enger reads πᾶ κά τις ἀμπείσειεν αὐ μὴ πλαδδιῆν; Dobree had conjectured πᾶ κά τις ἀναπείσειεν; For πλαδδιῆν, cf. vs. 990, and Kōn on Greg. Cor. p. 229.

⁵ A somewhat similar construction is Herod. ix. 66, ὅπως αὐτὸν ὀρίωσι σπουδῆς ἔχοντα. Compare also Soph. Rex, 709, μαντικῆς ἔχον τέχνης. Dindorf renders it, “Non persuadebis, quamdiu saltem triremes instruantur,” and Brunck, “Nequicquam, quamdiu in triremes conferentur studia.” The Ravenna MS. exhibits σπονδᾶς, Aldus οὐ λισποπύγας. Bentley conjectured οὐκ ἀσπίδας. “The Athenians had bestowed their treasure in the inner cell of the temple of Minerva. At the beginning of the war it had consisted of 6000 talents of silver, of which sum 1000 talents were set aside for cases of extreme necessity. These were also touched in the course of the Archon-year in which the Lysistrata was brought upon the stage.” Droysen. Cf. Plut. 1194. Bothe and Enger, rejecting in toto the construction of ἔχω with a genitive, adopt the emendation of Valckenaer, Eur. Diatrib. p. 233. Enger reads οὐχ ἄς πόδας γ’ ἔχωνται τριήρεις, and adds, “ἄς primus intellexit Koenius ad Greg. Cor. p. 188, qui Hesychium affert: ἄς· ἔως, ὅπως, μέχρις οὐ. Koenius ad Greg. Cor. p. 189, et Dobræus τριήρεις, quod recepimus.” But in such phrases as ὡς εἶχε ποδῶν, ποδῶν is not the genitive governed by εἶχε, but the Genitivus Respectus = quod pedes attinet. See Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 47, 21. Bernhardy, W. S. p. 172. Arnold, Greek Ex. § 146, c. And with this view only have the recent editors left the genitive in the text. Moreover, Enger’s οὐχ is wrong, unless followed by a comma or longer stop.

the inexhaustible sum of money is in the temple of the goddess

LYS. But this also has been well provided for; for to-day we shall seize upon the Acropolis. For orders have been given to the oldest to do this,¹ while we arrange these matters, to seize upon the Acropolis while pretending to sacrifice.

LAMP. It may be altogether well,² for so you represent it.

LYS. Why then, Lampito, do we not swear to these things as soon as possible, that they may be inviolable?

LAMP. Produce the oath, that we may swear.

LYS. You say well. Where is the policewoman?³ Whither are you staring? Set the shield before us upside down; and let some one give me the sacrificial parts.

CALON. Lysistrata, what oath in the world will you make us swear?

LYS. What? Over a shield, slaying sheep, as they say Æschylus⁴ once did.

CALON. Nay, do not swear anything about peace, O Lysistrata, over a shield.

LYS. What, then, should the oath be?

CALON. If we were to get a white horse⁵ from some quarter and sacrifice it as a victim.

LYS. For what purpose a white horse?

CALON. How then⁶ shall we swear?

LYS. I will tell you, by Jove, if you wish. Let us place a large black cup upside down,⁷ and slaughter a Thasian jar of wine, and swear over the cup—to pour no water in.

Come you, therefore, at noon and loosen this, so that it may be wider." Such things concur in such³ affairs, when I, who am a Committee-man, who have provided spars for oars,⁴ am shut out⁵ from the gates by the women, now when there's need of the money. But it's no⁶ use to stand. Bring the levers, that I may restrain them from their insolence. Why do you gape, you wretch? Whither, again, are you staring, who do nothing but look after a tavern? Will you not place your levers under the gates and force your way on that side? and I will join in forcing⁷ this way. [Enter Lysistrata.]

Lys. Do not force⁷ with your levers! for I am coming forth of my own accord. What need is there of levers? For there is not more need of levers, than of sense and judgment.

Com. What, really, you abominable creature? Where is the policeman? Seize her, and tie her hands behind her!

Lys. By Diana, if in truth he shall lay the tip of his hand upon me, he shall weep for it, policeman⁸ as he is! [Police-men draw back.]

Com. Are you afraid, you fellow? Will you not seize her by the waist, and you with him, and bind her quickly?

3RD WOM. By Diana, if in truth you shall approach her, I'll pluck out the hairs that will make you scream!⁶ [Police men run away.]

COM. Ah me, unfortunate! The policeman has deserted⁷ me. But we must never be conquered by⁸ women. [Police come back.] Let us march against them, O policemen, in order of battle!

COM. Ah me, how miserably have my policemen² fared!

COM. Aye, by Apollo, and very much too, if a tavern³ be near!

CHO. OF MEN. O commissioner of this land, who have wasted many words, why do you hold a parley with these wild beasts? Do you not know with what a bath these just now drenched us in our garments, and that too⁴ without lye?

CHO. OF MEN. O Jupiter! what ever shall we make of these⁵ monsters? For these things are no longer bearable. But you must inquire into this casualty along with me, with whatever intent they seized upon the citadel, and for what purpose they seized upon the Acropolis on the mighty rock, not to be trodden, the sacred enclosure. LYS. That we might make the money safe, and that you might not fight on account of it.

COM. Why, are¹ we fighting on account of the money?

LYS. Aye, and all the other matters, too, have been thrown into confusion. For in order that Pisander² might be able to steal, and those who aim at offices, they were always stirring up some commotion.³ Therefore let them do whatever they please, for that matter! for they shall no longer take out this money.

COM. What will you do then?⁴

LYS. Ask me this? We will manage it.

COM. Will you manage the money?

LYS. Why⁵ do you think this strange? Do we not wholly manage your domestic property also for you?

Lys. Aye, and if there was any sense in you, you would administer¹ all your affairs after the fashion of our wool.

Com. How, pray? Come, let me see!

Lys. In the first place it behoved you, as if washing away the dirt of a fleece in a bath, to flog the knaves headlong out of the city, and to pick out the briars; and to tear in pieces these who combine together and those who press themselves close together² for the magistracies, and to pluck their heads;³ and then all to card public good-feeling into a basket, having mixed up⁴ both the resident-aliens and whatever stranger or friend there is with you, and whoever is indebted to the public, and to mix these up⁵ in one body; and, by Jove, to mark⁶ the states, as many as are colonies of this city, that these lie uncared for, like the pieces of wool, each apart by itself; and then, having taken the wool from all these, to bring it together, and collect it into one mass; and then to make a large ball; and then, out of this to weave a cloak for the people.

Com. Is it not, therefore, shameful that these should cudgel⁷ these things and wind them off into a ball, who had not even any concern in the war at all?

COM. Do not men, therefore, grow old as well?

LYS. But, by Jove, you do not mention a like case. For he, when he has come back, even though he be gray-headed, soon marries a young girl; but the woman's time is short, and if she do not take advantage of it, no one is willing to marry her; but she sits looking for omens.³

For already these matters appear to me to savour of more and greater deeds; and especially I scent the tyranny of Hippias;³ and I fear greatly lest some men of the Spartans, having assembled here in the house of Clisthenes,⁴ should by craft stir up the women hateful to the gods to seize upon our money, and our pay, whereby I lived. For surely it is shameful that these, women as they are, should now advise the citizens, and prate about a brazen shield, and besides⁵ reconcile us to the Lacedæmonians, to whom there's no trusting,⁶ unless one can a gaping wolf. But these things, sirs, they have contrived for a tyranny. But over me they shall not tyrannize; for I will be on my guard, and will henceforth wear my sword in a myrtle-bough,⁷ and will lounge in the market-

CHO. OF WOM. Then your mother shall not recognise⁴ you when you enter the house. But, O dear matrons, let us first place these on the ground. For we, O all ye citizens, begin words serviceable to the state ; naturally, since it reared me splendidly in luxury. As soon as⁵ I was seven years of age I carried the peplus ; and then,⁶ when I was ten-years of age, I was meal-grinder to Diana ;⁷ and then I was Arctos⁸ at the Brauronia, wearing the saffron-coloured robe ; and at length, when I was a beautiful girl, I carried the basket, wearing a chain of figs. Do I not then owe⁹ it to the state to give it some good advice ? But if I am a woman, do not grudge me this,¹⁰ if I introduce something better than the present part of affairs. For I have a part in the contribution ; for I contribute men. But you miserable old men have no part ; for after you have expended¹¹ your ancestral fund, as it is called, which you got from the Persians,¹² you do not pay in turn your contributions. But moreover we are in danger of being ruined by you. Then ought you to grumble? But if you shall annoy me at all, I will strike your jaw with this untanned buskin.

CHO. OF MEN. Then are not these matters great insolence? and methinks the matter will increase still more. But whoever is a perfect man must repel the matter. Come, let us strip off our sleeveless coat, since it behoveth a man forthwith to savour of manhood; but it does not become him to be muffled up. But come, ye white-footed,¹ now it behoveth us, who went to Lipsydrium,² when as yet³ we were men, now it behoveth us to grow young again, and to make our whole body active,⁴ and to shake off this old age. For if any of us shall afford these if it were but a small handle,⁵ they will in no wise fail of assiduous handicraft; but they will both build ships, and furthermore attempt to fight by sea, and to sail against us, like Artemisia.⁶ But if they turn themselves to horsemanship, I strike the Knights off the list. For a woman is a creature most skilful in horsemanship and having a good seat.⁷ And she would not slip off when it runs. See the Amazons whom Micon painted⁸ on horseback fighting with the men! But we ought to take and fit this neck⁹ into the perforated stocks of all these.

CHO. OF WOM.-By the two goddesses, if you shall provoke me, I will now let loose my passion,¹ and will make you to-day call your fellow-tribesmen to your aid, being pommelled. But let us also,² O women, speedily strip, so that we may savour of women angered even to biting.³ Now let any one come near me! in order that he may never eat garlic or black beans.⁴ Since, if you shall even merely speak ill of me,—for I am exceedingly angry,—I the beetle will deliver you like⁵ an eagle that is laying eggs. For I will not care for you, if my Lampito live, and the dear Theban girl, well-born⁶ Ismenia. For you will have no power, not even if you make decrees seven times, who, O wretch, wast hateful even⁷ to all your neighbours. Therefore also yesterday, when I was making a feast⁸ to Hecate, I invited from my neighbours a good and amiable girl as the companion of my children—an eel⁹ from Bœotia; but they said they would not send it, on account of your decrees. And you will not cease¹⁰ from these decrees, till some one, having taken you by the leg, take and break your neck. LYS. The truth! the truth!

CHO. OF WOM. What is there alarming? Tell it to your own friends!

LYS. But it is disgraceful² to mention, and difficult to keep silent.

CHO. OF WOM. Do not then conceal from me what ill we have suffered.

LYS. To speak in fewest words,³ we long for the men.

CHO. OF WOM. O Jupiter!

LYS. Why call on⁴ Jupiter? In truth this is so. Consequently I am no longer able to keep them from their husbands; for they are escaping by stealth. The first I caught widening the hole where the cave of Pan⁵ is; the other, again, creeping down by the pulley;⁶ the other deserting; the other one upon a sparrow, purposing now to fly down to the house of Orsilochus,⁷ I dragged down yesterday by the hair. And they keep making all sorts of excuses⁸ so as to depart home. In sooth, one of them is now coming. Hollo you! whither are you running? [A woman attempts to run past.]

1ST WOM. I wish to go home; for my Milesian fleeces are being destroyed by the moths at home.

LYS. What⁹ moths? Will you not go back again?

1ST WOM. But, by the two goddesses, I will return speedily, when I have only spread them out on the couch—

I Ys. Yes, if there be need of this.¹ [1st woman goes back again.]

2ND WOM. Ah me, miserable! miserable for my flax which I have left at home unhackled!

LYS. See! here's another coming out for her unhackled flax!² Come back again hither!

2ND WOM. But, by Diana,³ I will return instantly when I have barked it?⁴

LYS. Don't⁵ bark it! for if you begin this, another woman will wish to do the same. [2nd woman goes back again.]

3RD WOM. O mistress⁶ Ilithyia, delay my parturition until I shall have gone to a place not hallowed!

3RD WOM. A male child.

LYS. Not you, by Venus! except that⁸ you appear to have some hollow brazen vessel. I will know. [Feels her dress.]
O you ridiculous! said you you were pregnant, when you had the sacred⁹ helmet?

3RD WOM. But I am not even able to sleep in the Acropolis, since once I saw the serpent, the guardian³ of the house.

4TH WOM. And I, unhappy, am destroyed with want of sleep through the owls, which are constantly crying, "to-who."⁴

LYS. My good women, cease from your juggling tricks! You long for your husbands perhaps: but do you not think that we long for them? They spend uneasy nights, I well know. But hold out, my good friends, and persevere still further for a short time! for we have an oracle that we shall prevail, unless we be distracted by seditions. Now this is⁵ the oracle.

CHO. OF WOM. Tell us what it says.⁶

LYS. Be silent now! "But when the Swallows,⁷ avoiding the Hoopoes, cower into one place, and abstain from the phallus, there shall be a rest from evils, and high-thundering Jove shall make⁸ the higher to be lower"—

LYS. ——"but if the Swallows be at variance,¹ and fly away with their wings from the sacred temple, no longer shall any bird whatever appear to be more lewd."

CHO. OF WOM. By Jove, the oracle is clear! Let us not then, O all ye gods, give up through suffering; but let us go in. For this will be disgraceful, my dearest women, if we shall betray the oracle.² [Exit Lysistrata.]

CHO. OF MEN. I wish to tell you a story, which I once heard myself when I was yet a boy; in this wise:³—There was once a youth, Melanion, who, avoiding marriage, went to a desert place and dwelt in the mountains. And then he hunted hares,⁴ having made nets: and he had a dog. And he returned home again no more by reason of his hatred. So much⁵ did he abominate the women: and we, who are chaste, abominate them no less than Melanion.⁶

OLD MAN. I wish, old woman, to kiss you——

WOMAN. Then you shall not eat an onion.⁷

OLD MAN. ——and to lift up your leg and tread on you.

WOMAN. You wear a large beard.

CHO. OF WOM. I also wish to tell you a story in reply to your Melanion. There was a certain Timon,¹ unsettled, encompassed round as to his face with unapproachable thorns,² a scion of the Furies. This Timon, then, by reason of his hatred, went off having imprecated many *curse*s against wicked men. So much did he always hate in return your³ wicked men; but he was very dear to the women.

WOMAN. Would you that I strike your jaw?

OLD MAN. By no means! I am afraid of it.

WOMAN. But I will strike you with my leg.

OLD MAN. You will show your ancles.

WOMAN. Yet, however, you would not see them with long hair, though I am an old woman, but depilated with the lamp.⁴

[Enter Lysistrata attended by several women.]

LYS. Ho! ho, women! come hither to me quickly!

1ST WOM. What's the matter? tell me, what means the cry?

LYS. I see a man, a man approaching frantic, seized⁵ with the transports of love. O mistress,⁶ who rulest over Cyprus and Cytheræ and Paphos, proceed straight on the course you are going!

1ST WOM. Where is he, whoever he is?

LYS. Near the temple of Ceres.⁷

1ST WOM. Oh, by Jove, in truth there is! Who⁸ in the world is he?

CIN. Ho you! what are¹ you about? Do you not even pity the little child, being unwashed and unsuckled six days past?

MYRRH. Of course I pity it; but its father² is negligent.

CIN. Come down, my good girl, to your little child!

MYRRH. What³ a thing it is to be a mother! I must descend. For what shall I do?⁴ [Enter Myrrhina.]

CIN. Why she seems to me to have become much younger, and more loving⁵ to look at; and in that she is cross to me, and bears herself haughtily,⁶ these are the very things now which kill me with desire.

MYRRH. O thou dearest little child⁷ of a bad father! come, let me kiss you, most dear to your mother!

CIN. Why, O wretch, do you do this, and comply with other women, and cause me to be grieved, and⁸ art grieved yourself?

MYRRH. Don't put your hand on me!

CIN. While you are ruining⁹ my and your property, which is in the house.

MYRRH. I care little about them.

CIN. Care you little about your thread, which is tossed¹⁰ about by the cocks and hens?

MYRRH. Even so, by Jove!¹

CIN. The rites of Venus have been so long a time uncelebrated by you. Will you not go back?

MYRRH. Not I, by Jove! unless you make peace and cease from the war.

CIN. Therefore, if it seem good to you, we will e'en do so.

MYRRH. Therefore, if it seem good to you, I will e'en go thither; but now I have sworn not to do it.

CIN. At least lie down with me for² a while!

MYRRH. Certainly not! and yet I cannot say³ that I do not love you.

CIN. Do you love me? Why then do you⁴ not lie down, my little Myrrhina?

MYRRH. O you ridiculous man! in presence of the child?

CIN. No, by Jove! but, Manes, do you take it home! [Servant leads the child off.] There! the child is now out of the way: will you not lie down?

MYRRH. Why, where could one do this, you rogue?

CIN. Very well,⁵ where the temple of Pan is.

MYRRH. Why, how, pray, any longer could I go to the Acropolis pure?

CIN. Very well, I ween, after you have washed in the Clepsydra.⁶

MYRRH. Shall I then, pray, break my oath, you rogue, after having sworn?

CIN. On my head be it!⁷ Don't be concerned at all for your oath!

MYRRH. Come then, let me bring a little bed for us.

CIN. By no means! It suffices us upon the ground.

⁷ Comp. Ach. 833.

MYRRH. By Apollo, I will not¹ make you lie down upon the ground, although being such! [Runs off.]

CIN. Of a truth it is right well evident that my wife loves me.²

MYRRH. (returning with a bedstead). There! lie down quickly; and I will undress myself. [Cinesias lies down upon the bed.] And yet, bless³ my soul, I must bring out a mattress.

CIN. What mattress? Don't talk to me⁴ of that!

MYRRH. Yea, by Diana! for it were shameful to lie upon the bed-cords.

CIN. Let me give you a kiss then!

MYRRH. There! [Kisses him and runs off.]

CIN. Ah! Return then very quickly!

MYRRH. (returning with a mattress). There's a mattress! Lie down! I'll now undress myself. And yet, bless my soul! you have not a pillow.

CIN. Neither do I want one.

MYRRH. But, by Jove, I do! [Runs off.]

CIN. Truly my carcase is entertained like Hercules.⁵

MYRRH. (returning with a pillow). Rise! jump up!⁶

CIN. I have every thing now.⁷

MYRRH. All, pray?⁸

CIN. Come then, my little treasure!⁹

MYRRH. Now I'll undo my girdle! ¹ Remember then; do not deceive me about the peace.

CIN. Then ² may I perish, by Jove!

MYRRH. You have not a counterpane. ³

CIN. Neither do I want one, by Jove; but I want something else.

MYRRH. Don't trouble yourself! You shall do so; for I will come speedily. • [Runs off.]

CIN. The woman ⁴ will kill me with her bed-clothes.

MYRRH. (returning with a counterpane). Raise yourself up!

CIN. But I am raised up already.

MYRRH. Would you that I anoint you?

CIN. Nay, do not, by Apollo!

MYRRH. Yea, by Venus, whether you will or no! [Runs off.]

CIN. O Lord Jove, would the unguent were ⁵ poured out!

MYRRH. (returning with a flask of ointment). Reach forth your hand now, and take it and anoint yourself!

CIN. By Apollo, this ointment is not sweet! unless to be dilatory and not savouring of marriage be so. ⁶

⁷ Bergler remarks, that the Rhodian unguent was an inferior sort. Enger reads ῥόδιον.

CIN. 'Tis excellent! Never mind it,¹ my good girl!

MYRRH. Nonsense! [Runs off.]

CIN. May he perish most miserably, who first boiled unguents!

MYRRH. (returning with a fresh flask). Take this casket!

CIN. But I have another. Come, you tiresome² thing, lie down and don't bring me any thing at all! o

MYRRH. I will do so, by Diana! In sooth I am taking off my shoes. But, my dearest, see that you vote to make peace.

CIN. I will determine about it. [Exit Myrrhina.] My wife has undone me and killed me, both in all other respects, and because she has flayed me and gone. Ah me! what shall I do?³ Whom shall I solicit, being disappointed of the prettiest of all? How shall I educate this? Where's the Dog-fox?⁴ Let out⁵ a nurse to me.

CHO. OF MEN. O thou unhappy, thou art afflicted in thy soul with dreadful suffering, having been deceived! And I pity you, alas! alas! For what kidneys could hold out, what soul,⁶ and what bowels, and what loins? What rump could, being strained, and not having to do with any one in the morning?⁷

CIN. O Jove, what dreadful convulsions!⁸

CHO. OF MEN. This, however, has your all-abominable and all-execrable wife now done to you.

CIN. No, by Jove, but dear and sweetest of all!

HER. Where is the Senate of the Athenians, or the² Prytanes? I wish to make an announcement.

COM. Whether are you a man or Conisalus?³

HER. By the two gods, I have come from Sparta as a herald, young⁴ man, about the peace!

COM. And then, pray, have you come with a spear under your arm?

HER. No, by Jove, not I!

COM. Whither are you turning yourself? Why, pray, do you put forward your cloak? or have you a swelling in the groin from your journey?

HER. The fellow's a fool,⁵ by Castor!

COM. But you are excited, O you most abominable!

HER. No, by Jove, not I! Don't talk nonsense⁶ again!

COM. But what's this here?

HER. All Sparta is excited, and all the allies are excited. There is need of Pellene.¹

COM. From whom did this misfortune fall upon you? From Pan?²

HER. No; Lampito, I think, began it; then the other women throughout Sparta at once, as if starting from one starting-post, drove away their husbands from their beds.

COM. How are you then?

HER. We are distressed;³ for we go bending through the city, as if carrying⁴ lamps. For the women will not even suffer us to touch them, till we all with one accord make peace with Greece.

COM. This thing has been sworn to by the women from all parts: I have just now⁵ ascertained it. But bid them as soon as possible send here ambassadors with full powers to treat about peace! and I will bid the senate choose other ambassadors from hence, having exhibited this.

HER. I will fly; for you speak altogether most excellently. [Exeunt Herald and Committee-man.]

CHO. OF MEN. Well now, I see these here aborigines putting back their dress from their bellies, like wrestlers, so that the disease² appears to be one belonging to an athlete. [Enter Athenians.]

ATHEN. Who can tell us where Lysistrata is? for see! we men here³ have come, of such rank!

CHO. OF MEN. Both this disease and the other agree in this way.⁴ Does a tension seize you towards morning?

ATHEN. No, by Jove, but we are killed when we undergo⁵ this: so that, if some one will not quickly make peace between us, we shall certainly commit a rape upon Clisthenes.⁶

CHO. OF MEN. If you are wise, you will take your clothes, so that none of the mutilators of the Hermæ⁷ shall see you.

ATHEN. By Jove, you certainly say well!

SPART. Yea, by the two gods, by all means! Come, let us put on our dress!⁸

ATHEN. Come now, Spartans, you must mention each severally. For what are you come hither?

SPART. As ambassadors about peace.

ATHEN. In truth you say well: we also are come on account of this. Why then do we not summon Lysistrata, who alone can make peace between us!

SPART. Aye, by the two gods, and Lysistratus,¹ if you like.

CHO. OF MEN. But there's no occasion, as it seems, for us to call her; for see! here she² is herself coming out, when she heard it! [Enter Lysistrata.] Hail! O thou bravest of all women; now it behoveth thee to be clever,³ good, easy, grave, mild, and shrewd; for the chiefs of the Grecians, caught by thy charm, have yielded to thee, and referred all their grievances to thee in common.

Lys. Well, the business is not difficult, if one were to find people eager for peace,⁴ and not making trial of each other. But I'll soon know. Where is Peace?⁵ First take and lead forward the Spartans, and not with a hand violent or self-willed, nor as our husbands⁶ used unskilfully to do it, but very affectionately,⁷ as is proper women should. If any do not give his hand, lead him by the nose. [Enter Peace represented by a beautiful girl.] Come! do you also lead these Athenians, and lead them forward, having caught hold of them by whatever part they present. You Spartans, stand close beside me, and you on this side, and hear my words! I am a woman, it is true; but sense is in me:⁸ "and of myself

One part of my speech⁵ is thus far finished.

ATHEN. I am killed with desire.

LYS. In the next place, ye Spartans,—for I will turn to you,—do you not know, when formerly Periclides⁶ the Spartan came hither as a suppliant of the Athenians, and sat upon the altars, pale, in a red cloak, begging an army? At that time Messena⁷ was pressing upon you, and at the same ATHEN. By Jove, Lysistrata, these are in the wrong!

SPART. We are in the wrong: but sin is unspeakably beautiful.²

LYS. Do you suppose I shall let you³ Athenians off? Know you not when the Spartans in turn came in arms and slew many Thessalians,⁴ and many confederates and allies of Hippias, alone on that day⁵ marching out with you to battle, and freed you, who were wearing servile⁶ dresses, and in place of the servile dress, clothed your people again with a mantle?

SPART. I have never seen a better⁷ woman!

ATHEN. And I, never yet a fairer bosom!

LYS. Why, then, when many benefactions⁸ exist on both sides, do you fight, and not cease from your wickedness? Why do you not make peace? Come, what's the hinderance?

SPART. We are willing, if one be willing to restore to us this spencer.

LYS. Do you demand another place instead of this!

ATHEN. Then do you deliver up to us the what d'ye call 'em—in the first place this Echinus, and the Melian Gulf behind it, and the legs¹ of Megara!

SPART. No, by the two gods, not all, my good sir!²

LYS. Give them up! do not dispute about legs!

ATHEN. I am willing now to strip and cultivate the land naked.³

SPART. And I, by the two gods, to dung them⁴ in the morning.

LYS. When⁵ you shall have made peace, you shall do so. But if you think fit to do this, deliberate, and go and consult your allies!

ATHEN. What⁶ allies, my friend? We are excited. Will not our allies be of the same opinion—all to enjoy themselves?

SPART. Ours⁷ will, at any rate, by the two gods!

ATHEN. Aye, by Jove! for the Carystians also will.⁸

LYS. You say well. Now therefore see that you be pure, so that we women may entertain you in the Acropolis with what we have in our chests. And there give oaths and assurances to each other; and then each of you shall take his own wife and depart.

ATHEN. I have never seen such an entertainment! Upon my word, the Spartans were even entertaining; but we were the cleverest boon-companions¹ over the wine.

CHO. OF MEN. Aye, rightly said; because we Athenians are not in our right senses when we are sober. If I prevail upon the Athenians by my words,² we shall always go on embassies³ to all places drunk. For at present, whenever we go to Sparta sober, we immediately look to see what we can disturb:⁴ so that, what they say, we hear not; but what they don't say, this we wrongly suspect.⁵ And we do not make the same report about the same things.⁶ But now every thing pleases; so that, if any one were to sing the scolion of Telamon,⁷ when he ought to sing that of Clitagora, we would praise⁸ him, and swear a false oath beside that it

"THE Thesmophoriazusa was acted Ol. 92, 1, in the archonship of Callias. Scholiast on vs. 841, ἐπαινεῖ τὸν Λάμαχον νῦν ἤδη γὰρ εἰσθνήκει ἐν Σικελίᾳ τετάρτῳ ἔτει πρότερον. Lamachus died in the beginning of Ol. 91, 2. See Thuc. vi. 101. Scholiast on vs. 190, γέρον γὰρ τότε Εὐριπίδης ἦν· ἔκτω γοῦν ἔτει ὕστερον τελευτᾷ. Euripides died about the close of Ol. 93, 2, or the beginning of 93, 3. Scholiast on Ran. 53, ἡ γὰρ Ἀνδρομέδα ὀγδόῳ ἔτει προεισῆται, i. e. Ol. 91, 4. Now Aristophanes himself (Thesm. vs. 1060) testifies that the Andromeda was acted the year before the Thesmophoriazusa." Enger. Dindorf and Wachsmuth also refer it to this year; on the contrary, Dobree and Fritzsche refer it to Ol. 92, 2.

The Thesmophoriazusa has a proper intrigue, a knot which is not loosed till the conclusion, and in this therefore possesses a great advantage. Euripides, on account of the well-known hatred of women displayed in his tragedies, is accused and condemned at the Thesmophoria, at which festival women only were admitted. After a fruitless attempt to induce the effeminate poet Agathon to undertake the hazardous experiment, Euripides prevails on his father-in-law, Mnesilochus, who was somewhat advanced in years, to disguise himself as a woman, that under this assumed appearance he may plead his cause. The manner in which he does this gives rise to suspicions, and he is discovered to be a man; he flies to the altar for refuge, and to secure himself still more from the impending danger, he snatches a child from the arms of one of the women, and threatens to kill it if they do not let him alone. Upon examination, however, it turns out to be a wine-skin, wrapped up like a child. Euripides now appears in a number of different shapes to save his friend: at one time he is Menelaus, who finds Helen again in Egypt; at another time he is Echo, helping the chained Andromeda to pour out her lamentations, and immediately after he appears as Perseus, about to release her from the rock. At length he succeeds in rescuing Mnesilochus, who is fastened to a sort of pillory, by assuming the character of a procuress, and enticing away the officer of justice who has charge of him, a simple barbarian, by the charms of a dancing-girl. These parodied scenes, composed almost entirely in the very words of Euripides' tragedies, are imitable. Whenever Euripides is introduced, we may always, generally speaking, lay our account with having the most ingenious and apposite ridicule: it seems as if the mind of Aristophanes possessed a peculiar and specific power of giving a comic turn to the poetry of this tragedian. Whatever be the faults of the present play, it will be very generally admitted to be the drollest and most facetious of all the writings of Aristophanes.

THE THESMOPHORIAZUSÆ

[SCENE—the front of Agathon's house.]

MNESILOCHUS, EURIPIDES.

MNES. O JUPITER! will the swallow ever¹ appear? The man will kill me with dragging me about² from early dawn. Is it possible, Euripides, before I lose my spleen entirely, to learn from you whether you are leading me?

EUR. (with great seriousness). Nay, you must³ not hear all that you will soon see, being present.

MNES. How say you? Tell it me again! Must I not hear?

EUR. Not what you are to see.

MNES. Then must I not even see?

EUR. Not what you must hear.

MNES. How do you advise me? Upon my word, you speak cleverly! You say I must neither hear nor see.

EUR. Not so; for, be well assured, the nature of each of them is distinct, of not hearing, and of not seeing.

Droysen.

"It is more suitable that Mnesilochus should ask num quando? than quando?" Wellaner. "As the appearance of the swallow in spring puts an end to winter, so the simple Mnesilochus wishes for some kind of a swallow to terminate his painful situation." Droysen. See note on Aves, 161, 1308.

² See Liddell's Lex. in voc. "ἀλοῶν ἐξωθεν ἐν κύκλῳ περιάγων ὡς οἱ ἐν ταῖς ἄλωσιν." Suidas.

³ "Nein, hören nicht das Alles musst du, was du gleich Mit Augen sehn wirst!" Droysen.

Comp. Lidd. Lex. voc. παρίστημι. "The rich jest of this exordium lies in the philosophical mannerism of Euripides, who is fond of using his odd figures and antitheses every where." Droysen.

MNES. How distinct?

EUR. Thus have these been distinguished formerly.¹ For Ether, when first it was separated,² and in itself bore moving animals, first contrived an eye for that which ought to see, modelled after the sun's disk, and bored ears like a funnel.

MNES. On account of the funnel, then, must I³ neither hear nor see? By Jove, I am delighted at having learned this in addition! What a thing, I wœn, are learned conversazioni!

EUR. Many such matters mayest thou learn from me.

MNES. Would,⁴ then, that, in addition to these good things, I could find out how I might still learn in addition to be lame⁵ in my legs.

EUR. Come hither, and give me your attention!

MNES. Well!

EUR. Do you see this little door?⁶

"róte here means olim." Brunck. See note on Lys. 1023.

For it refers to the preceding words of Euripides, in which he had ordered Mnesilochus neither to see nor hear. In reference to these words, then, which might have been briefly stated, μήτε ἄκουε μήτε ὄρα, he says, διὰ τὴν χεῖρα οὐκ ἔστιν ἀκούω μήθ' ὄρω; wegen des Trichters also soll Ich weder hören noch sehen?" Hermann.

For it behoveth a poet, conformably to the dramas which he must compose, to have his turn of mind in accordance with these. For example,⁴ if one be composing female dramas, the body of the poet ought to have a participation in their manners.

teeth. Previously, indeed, it was possible at least ¹ to secretly open the door, if we got a three-obol ² seal-ring made. But now this home-born slave ³ Euripides has taught them to have rings of worm-eaten wood, having them suspended about them. Now therefore I move ⁴ that we mix up some destruction in some ⁵ way or other for him, either by poison, or by some one artifice, so that he shall perish. These I speak openly; but the rest I will draw up in the form of a motion in conjunction with the secretary.⁶

CHO. Never yet did I hear a woman more intriguing than this, nor one that spoke more ably. For she speaks all justly, and has well examined all appearances, and weighed ⁷ all things in her mind, and shrewdly discovered artful, well-invented wiles; so that, if Xenocles the son of Carcinus were to speak immediately after ⁸ her, he would appear to us all, as I think, to say absolutely nothing to the purpose.

2ND WOM. For the purpose of a few words I also have come forward. For the other matters she has laid to his charge rightly: but what I have suffered personally, these I wish to state. My husband died in Cyprus,¹ having left behind him five little children, whom I used to maintain with difficulty by plaiting wreaths in the myrtle-wreath-market.² Before this³ I supported myself, indeed, but miserably.⁴ But now this fellow by representing in his tragedies,⁵ has persuaded the people that there are no gods; so that we do not now earn even to the amount of⁶ one half. Now therefore I exhort and charge all to punish this man for many reasons; for, O women, he does savage deeds to us, as having been reared himself among the potherbs⁸ in their wild state. But I will be off to the market-place; for I have twenty bespoken⁹ wreaths to plait for people.

MNES. It is not wonderful, O women, that you who are so abused³ should be exceedingly exasperated at Euripides, nor yet that your bile should boil over; for I myself hate that man, if I be not mad,—so⁴ may I be blessed in my children! But nevertheless we must grant the privilege of speaking amongst each other; for we are by ourselves, and there is no blabbing⁵ of our conversation. Why thus do we accuse⁶ him, and are vexed, if, being cognizant of two or three misdeeds of ours, he has said them of us⁷ who perpetrate innumerable? For I myself, in the first place,—not to speak of any one else,—am conscious with myself of many shameful⁸ acts: at all events of that⁹ most shameful one, when I was a bride of three days, and my husband was sleeping beside me. Now I had a friend,¹⁰ who had debauched me when I was seven years of age. He, through love of me, came and began scratching at the door; and then I immediately understood it; and then I was for going down¹¹ secretly, but my husband asked me, “Whither are you going down?” “Whither?—A

6TH WOM. What belongs to the priestess?

MNES. (tossing her the empty wine-skin). Take it!

7TH WOM. Most wretched Mica, who has robbed you of² your daughter? who has taken away your beloved child?³

6TH WOM. This villain! But since you are present, guard him, in order that I may take Clisthenes and tell to the Prytanes⁴ what this man has done. [Exit 6th woman.]

MNES. Come now, what shall be my contrivance for safety? what my attempt? what my device? For he who is the author of this, and who has involved⁵ me in such troubles, does not yet appear. Come, what messenger can I send to him? Now I know a contrivance out of his Palamedes:⁶ I'll write upon the oars and throw them out, as that well-known⁷ character did. But the⁸ oars are not at hand. Whence therefore can it be possible for me to get oars?

PARABASIS.

CHO. Let us then praise ourselves in our parabasis.⁷ And yet every one says many ill things of the race of women, that we are an utter evil⁸ to men, and that all evils spring from us, strifes, quarrels, sedition, painful grief, and war. Come now, if⁹ we are an evil, why do you marry us, if indeed we are really

Being in want of firewood, he broke up a statue of Hercules for that purpose. "Mnesilochus inscribes his misfortune upon the busts and statues of the gods, of which there were several in the Thesmophorium, and throws them forth, so that he might send Euripides letters worthy of Euripides." Fritzsche. And if the wife should go out any whither, and you then should discover her to be out of doors, you rage with madness, who ought to offer libations and rejoice, if indeed you really find the evil to be gone away from the house, and do not find it at home. And if we sleep in other people's houses, when we play² and are tired, every one searches for this evil, going round about the beds. And if we peep out³ of a window, he seeks to get a sight of the evil. And if she retire again, being ashamed, so much the more does every one desire to see⁴ the evil peep out again. So manifestly are we much better than you. And a test is at hand to see.⁵ Let us make trial, which of the two are worse. For we say that you are; but you say that we are. Let us consider now, and compare each with each, placing each name⁶ side by side, both the woman's and the man's. Charminus⁷ is inferior to Nausimache: his deeds are manifest. And in truth also Cleophon⁸ is, I ween, by all means inferior to Salabaccho. And none of you even attempts to contend with Aristomache for a long time,⁹ that notable one at Marathon, and with Stratonice.

But what senator of those of last year, who delivered up his senatorial office¹ to another, is superior to Eubule? Not even he himself² will say this. So much³ better do we profess to be than the men. Neither would a woman who has stolen at the rate⁴ of fifty talents of the public money come into the city in a chariot; but when she may have committed her greatest⁵ peculations, when she has stolen a bushel of wheat from her husband, she restores them⁶ the same day. But we could point out many of these present who do this, and who are, in addition to this, more gluttonous than we, and footpads, and parasites,⁷ and kidnappers. And in truth also they are, I ween, inferior to us in preserving⁸ their patrimony. For still even now our loom⁹ is safe, our weaving-beam, our baskets, and our parasol; while the beam¹⁰ of many of these our husbands has perished from the house together with the head, and the parasol of many others has been cast from their shoulders in their expeditions. 7TH WOM. Yes, by Jove! for now assuredly⁵ a tricky fellow⁶ almost took him away from me.

MNES. O Prytanis, by your right hand, which you are accustomed to hold⁷ out bent, if any one offer you money, grant me a small favour, although about to die.

PRYT. In what shall I oblige⁸ you?

MNES. Order the Policeman to strip me naked and fasten me to the plank; in order that, being an old man, I may not in saffron-coloured robes, and a woman's night-cap, afford laughter to the crows, while I feast them.⁹

CHO.² Come now, let us sport, as is here the custom with the women, whenever on holy seasons we celebrate the solemn orgies of the two goddesses, which Pausan³ also honours, and fasts, oftentimes protesting to them from season to season that such are frequently a care to himself.⁴ Put yourself in motion, each of you, advance, come on lightly with your feet in a circle,⁵ join hand to hand, move to the time⁶ of the dance; go with swift feet. Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 57, 3, and note on Plut. 314. According to Droysen, Euripides flies through the air a la Perseus. "Aristophanes is ridiculing the Andromeda of Euripides, which was acted at the same time with his Helen," Enger. See note on vs. 848. "From this it is understood, that Euripides came on the stage habited as Perseus, and at first personated Perseus, as Mnesilochus did Andromeda; but with great confusion of character." Fritzsche.

for the crows. Do you see? not among dantes, nor yet accompanied by the girls¹ of my own age, do I stand with the ballot-box of pebbles, but, entangled in strong fetters, I am exposed as food for the whale Glaucetes.² Lament me, O women, not with a bridal song, but with a prison-song,³ since I have suffered wretched things, wretched man, oh me unhappy, unhappy! and among my other impious sufferings from my relations, supplicating the man,⁴ kindling the all-tearful lamentation of death,⁵ alas! alas! who first shaved me clean, who clothed me in a saffron-coloured robe; and, in addition to this, sent me up to this temple, where the women were assembled. Ah me, thou unrelenting god of my fate! Oh me, accursed! Who at the presence of my woes will not look⁶ upon my unenviable suffering? Would that the fire-bearing star⁷ of Æther would utterly destroy me, ill-fated man. For no longer is it pleasing to me to behold the immortal

¹ Cf. Eur. Phœn. 1265. Here he is "dancing among the girls of his own age;" presently he forgets himself and relapses into the old Athenian "with ballot-box in hand." Throughout the whole there is a studied confusion of persons, genders, and constructions. Aristophanes, like Rabelais, often writes incoherent nonsense designedly. See Aves, 926—930, 950, 951, 1000—1009. Ran. 1264—1267, 1274—1277, 1285—1295. Pax, 1070, 1071.

THE ARGUMENT.

According to the notice of the ancient Didascalia, this play was acted at the Lenæan festival, January, B. C. 405, in the Archonship of Callias. It was brought out in Philonides' name, who gained the first prize, Phrynichus the second with his "Muses," and Plato the third with his "Cleophon." The Frogs was so much admired on account of its parabasis, that it was acted a second time;—very probably in the March of the same year, at the Great Dionysia. The Frogs has for its subject the decline of the Tragic Art. Bacchus has a great longing for Euripides, and determines to bring him back from the infernal world. In this he imitates Hercules, but although furnished with that hero's lion-skin and club, in sentiments he is very unlike him, and as a dastardly voluptuary affords much matter for laughter. He rows himself over the Acherusian lake, where the frogs merrily greet him with their melodious croakings. The proper Chorus, however, consists of the shades of those initiated in the Eleusinian mysteries. Æschylus had hitherto occupied the tragic throne in the world below, but Euripides wants to eject him. Pluto presides, but appoints Bacchus to determine this great controversy. The two poets, the sublimely wrathful Æschylus, and the subtle and conceited Euripides, stand opposite each other, and deliver specimens of their poetical powers; they sing, they declaim against each other; and their peculiar traits are characterized in masterly style. At last a balance is brought, and separate verses of each poet are weighed against each other. Notwithstanding all the efforts of Euripides to produce ponderous lines, those of Æschylus always make the scale of his rival to kick the beam. Bacchus in the mean time has become a convert to the merits of Æschylus, and although he had sworn to Euripides to take him back with him to the upper world, he dismisses him with a parody of one of his own verses in the Hippolytus:

"My tongue hath sworn, I however make choice of Æschylus."

Consequently Æschylus returns to the living world, and resigns the tragic throne in his absence to Sophocles. The scene is first laid at Thebes; afterwards it changes to the nether shore of the Acherusian lake; and finally to the infernal world, with the palace of Pluto in the background.

THE FROGS.

[SCENE—the front of Hercules' temple.]

BACCHUS,¹ XANTHIAS—[the former with the lion's skin of Hercules thrown over his usual effeminate attire, and armed with that hero's club; the latter mounted on an ass, and carrying their travelling baggage on the end of a pole].

XAN. SHALL I say some of the usual jokes, master, at which the spectators always laugh.²

BAC. Yes, by Jove, whatever you please, except "I am burdened;"³ but beware of this, for it is by this time utterly sickening to me.⁴

XAN. Nor any thing else facetious?

² It appears from this scene, that a custom prevailed among the inferior dramatic poets at Athens, of introducing servants laden with baggage, whose sole business it was to complain, and whose ὥς θλίβομαι, and ὥς πιέζομαι, were catchwords similar in their effects to those so ably exposed by Mr. Gifford in his Baviad.

BAC. Except, "How I am afflicted!"

XAN. What then? shall I say what is very laughable?

BAC. Aye, by Jove, boldly: that thing only¹ take care you say not——

XAN. What?

BAC. That with shifting the yoke² from one shoulder to the other, you desire to ease yourself.

XAN. Nor that I shall break wind with carrying so great a load upon me, unless some one shall remove it?

BAC. Nay, do not, I beseech you, except when I am about to vomit.

XAN. Then what occasion³ was there that I should carry this baggage, if I am to do none of those things which Phrynichus⁴ is accustomed to do, and Lycis, and Amipsias? They are always carrying baggage in Comedy.⁵

BAC. Don't do so then; for whenever, being a spectator, I see any of these stage tricks, I come away older by more than a year.⁶

XAN. O this thrice-unlucky neck then! because it is distressed, but must not utter what is laughable.

¹ Comp. Eccles. 258. For this exhortative use of ὅπως, see note on Lys. 316.

² Cf. Eccles. 833. Phœnissæ, Fragm. iii., (ed. Dindorf,) and note on Lys. 312.

³ "What's the use, then,
Of my being burthen'd here with all these bundles,
If I'm to be deprived of the common jokes
That Phrynichus, and Lycis, and Amipsias
Allow the servants always in their Comedies, Without exception, when they carry bundles?" Frere.

⁵ This line is bracketed by Dindorf as spurious. Brunck's method of construing it makes the construction solecistic; for ποίεω is not construed with a dative in Attic Greek. See Dawes, M. C. p. 334. Elmsl. Med. 1271. Bernhardt, W. S. p. 123. Wherever the dative is found with ποίεω, it is the "Dativus Commodi." See Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 46, 12, obs. 3.

⁶ The Scholiast quotes the following line from Homer as an illustration of this:

Αἰψὰ γὰρ ἐν κακόητι βροτοὶ καταγρηάσκουσιν. Cf. vs. 91, infra.

BAC. Then is not this insolence and much conceit, when I, who am Bacchus, son of—a wine-jar,¹ am walking myself, and toiling, while I let him ride, in order that he might not be² distressed or carry a burden?

XAN. Why, do I not carry?

BAC. Why, how do you carry, who are carried?

XAN. Because I carry these.³

BAC. In what way?

XAN. Very heavily.

BAC. Does not the ass then carry this weight which you carry?

XAN. Certainly not what I hold and carry; no, by Jove!

BAC. Why, how do you carry, who are yourself carried by another?

XAN. I know not; but this shoulder of mine is burdened.

BAC. Do you then, since you deny that the ass assists you, in your turn take up and carry the ass.

XAN. Ah me, miserable! Why was I not at the sea-fight?⁴ Of a truth I would have bid a long farewell to you.⁵

¹ Where he should have said "son of Jove," contrary to expectation, he calls himself "son of a wine-jar." The vessel here mentioned occurs also in the Lysistrata, 196: and that in which the portion of manna was set apart by the children of Israel as a memorial is called by the Septuagint στράμνος, Exod. xxvi. 33.

³ i. e. τὰ σπώματα.

⁵ For this repetition of ἀν with an indicative, cf. Aves, 1593. Lys.

BAC. Dismount, you scoundrel, for now I go¹ near this door, whither I was first to betake myself. [Knocks violently at the door.] Little boy, boy, I say,² boy! [Xanthias dismounts from his ass.]³

³ The simile is well chosen for the character of Hercules, who had himself witnessed the insolence of which he speaks. According to the Scholiast, this is ironically spoken by Hercules, as if Bacchus had been unable, through weakness and effeminacy, to strike the door violently. Plaut. Trucul. ii. 2, 1, Quis illic est, qui tam proterve nostras ædes arietat? With ὅσρα we ought, strictly speaking, to supply the requisite form of the preceding verb (ἐνέλατο). See Krüger's Gr. HER. Desire? How great⁷ a one?

BAC. A little one: as big as Molon.⁸

HER. For a woman?

³ "Whenever καί—γέ is used in answers, it adds something new, and more important than the preceding; answering to the Latin atque adeo." Enger.

⁴ The battle of Arginusæ had but just taken place, and, as usual, the most worthless fellows, who had been compelled to engage in it, were making themselves out each the hero of the day. Hercules, who would put a stop to Bacchus's vaunts, replies to him with the usual conclusion of those who relate their dreams. In the Cyclops of Euripides, Silenus, the mythological attendant of Bacchus, is boasting of some exploit against a giant, and, at the end, asks himself, doubtingly, whether it be not a dream. "A polite way of telling people that they have been romancing. It is remarked by the German translators, Conz and Welcker, that their ancestors had a similar proverbial mode of expression, used for a similar purpose, und mit dem erwacht Ich." Mitchell.

HER. For a boy, then?¹

BAC. By no means.

HER. For a man, then?

BAC. Faugh!

HER. Have you been with Clisthenes?

BAC. Do not mock me, brother, for² I am distressed; such a desire utterly undoes me.

HER. Of what sort, my little brother?

BAC. I am not able to tell it; yet certainly³ will I declare it to you in a riddle.⁴ Did you ever⁵ suddenly desire pea-soup?

HER. Pea-soup? bless me! ten thousand times in my life.

BAC. Shall I teach you thoroughly the truth⁶ of the matter, or shall I declare it in some other way?

HER. Nay, do not about the pea-soup at least; for I understand that instance very well.

BAC. Therefore such a longing for Euripides consumes me——

HER. And that too⁷ when he is dead?

BAC. And no man could persuade me, so as not to go to fetch him.⁸

HER. To Hades below?

⁵ In the Peace, 841, Hercules is laughed at for his voracity, which the complaints of the hostesses in this play abundantly testify. Bacchus, therefore, when he would give his brother the strongest idea of his passion for Euripides, reminds him of his own for the ἔρνος, which was made of boiled pulse, and the proper diet of the brave in fight, according to the Scholium. For ἤδη, see note on Equit. 869.

BAC. Why, to be⁵ sure this is even the only good thing still remaining, if indeed even this be good; for I don't know⁶ for certain even how this is.

HER. Do you not mean, then, to bring up Sophocles,⁷ who is before⁸ Euripides, if you must bring one from thence?

BAC. Not before I shall have taken Iophon alone by himself, and tried him, what he can do without Sophocles. And besides, Euripides, as he is roguish, would even attempt to run away hither along with me, while the other is easy here, and easy there.⁹

³ The Scholiast observes that this is a hemistich from Euripides. The seventy-second line is also from the Æneus of that tragedian.

⁹ This expression occurs in the Alcmena of Euripides, Fragm. ii., and points at once to the garrulity and barbarisms of the poets alluded to. Virgil mentions the first, Geor. iv. 307, as an attribute of the swallow; and the latter we may gather from the interpretation of the Dodonæan pigeon by Herodotus, ii. 57, where he says, "as long as she (the Egyptian) spoke in a foreign language, she appeared to them (the natives) to utter the sounds of a bird." Such was the opinion passed upon our own tongue by Charles V.

600, 5) and Mitchell imagine that in this kind of formulæ one δ belongs to the optative, the other to the participle, so that the participle is thereby = εἰ c. optativo. More accurate grammarians have very properly rejected this as a monstrosity, and recognise in such constructions merely the usual repetition of άν with an optative, as in Thesm. 196. Moreover a participle alone by itself is constantly used as a protasis = εἰ c. optativo, as may be seen ap. Krüger, Gr. § 56, 11; Matthiä, § 566, 4; Jelf, § 697, b. A good example is Eur. Ph. 514.

² This line is from the Melanippe of Euripides, and quoted correctly in the Thesm. 272, although here the comedian's malice or forgetfulness has led him to render it more ridiculous by the substitution of δωμάριον for οἶκησιν. The expression, "foot of time," is in the Bacchæ, 876. Cf. Alex. Fragm. xxi. The passage which follows is a paraphrase of the celebrated line in the Hippolytus, vs. 608; see Thesm. 275. Cicero both translates and applauds it in the Offices, iii. 29.

BAC. Have done, you tell me a choking one.

HER. But there is a compendious and well-beaten³ path, that through a mortar.

BAC. Do you mean hemlock?

HER. Certainly.

BAC. Aye, a cold and chilly one, for it immediately benumbs⁴ the shins.

HER. Would you have me tell you a speedy and down-hill road?

BAC. Yes, by Jove, for I am not good at walking.

HER. Creep down then to the Ceramicus.⁵

³ The reader will perceive the pun. Plato, Phæd. p. 116, "And let some one bring in the poison, if it has been pounded, if not, let him beat it up." And again, p. 117, "And after he had pounded it for a considerable time, he came with the person who was to give the poison to Socrates, bringing it beaten in a cup."

⁴ This is Plato's account of the effects of hemlock: Phæd. p. 118, "And then having violently squeezed his foot, he asked him [Socrates] if he felt it; but he said, no: and after this again his shins; and then he came up to us and told us that Socrates was becoming chilled and benumbed."

⁴ "People among whom Cerberus dwells, not without allusion to the Homeric Cimmerii." Mitchell. There were two nations of this name, one on the Palus Mæotis, who in the time of Cyaxares invaded Asia Minor, Herod. i. 6; another that dwelt on the western coast of Italy, and from their habits, such as concealing themselves in caves, &c., were supposed by the ancients to be denizens of hell. Homer, Virgil, and Milton have all availed themselves of this idea.

⁵ A dark place at the foot of Malea, a promontory of Laconia, the southern point of Europe. Neptune had a temple there, and for an offence against him, the earthquake which demolished Sparta was supposed to have happened. ¹ The allusion is to the battle of Arginusæ. "The sense is: nisi pugna navali interfuit et eo sibi libertatem paravit: περὶ τῶν κρείων is said for περὶ τῶν σωμάτων." Thiersch. According to Mitchell, Charon judges of the battle from his stand-point as ferryman, and therefore speaks of it only as the battle in which so many carcasses had to be recovered for the rites of sepulture. And this seems the most probable explanation. Herod. viii. 102, ἀγῶνας δρομέονται περὶ σφίων αὐτίων.

FROGS. Nay, rather, we will sing the more, if ever on³ sunny days we have leapt through galingal and sedge, delighting in strains of song with many a dive; or at the bottom, avoiding the rain of Jove, have chanted⁴ our varied watery choral music amid the noise of bursting bubbles. Brekekekex, coax, coax.

Yet it appears to have been a constant practice that the chorus, whenever it was engaged otherwise than in its proper character—in the technical language of the theatre a parachoregema—should not be visible. A similar case occurs in Thesm. 100 foll." Droysen. The present chorus of frogs is not the proper chorus, but the subordinate chorus. The proper chorus consists of the shades of the initiated.

⁶ According to Schlegel, the scene in the beginning is at Thebes, whence it changes to the banks of Acheron, without Bacchus or Xanthias leaving the stage; the hollow of the orchestra then becomes the river he is to cross, he embarks at one end of the Logeum, (which was a platform comprehending the proscenium, and in fact all that part of the theatre occupied by the actors,) rows along the orchestra, and lands on the other end, coasting, as it were, the proscenium, &c.; meantime the scene has again changed, and we are now presented with the infernal regions, and the palace of Pluto in the centre.

XAN. It is best for us to go forward, for this is the place where he was saying the dreadful wild beasts were.

BAC. How he shall smart for it!¹ He was humbugging, so that I might be frightened, as he knew me to be valiant, out of jealousy; for there is nothing so self-conceited as Hercules. But I should wish to fall in with one, and meet with an encounter worthy of my journey.

XAN. Well now,² by Jove, I hear some noise.

XAN. From behind.

BAC. Go behind.

XAN. But it is in front.

BAC. Then go in front.

XAN. Well now, by Jove, I see a huge wild beast.

BAC. What sort of a one?

XAN. Dreadful: at any rate it becomes of every shape; at one time an ox, and now a mule, and at another time, again, a most beautiful woman.

BAC. Where is she? come, let me go to her.

XAN. But, again, it is no longer a woman, but now it is a dog.

Cic. de Nat. De. i. 23. The other Diagoras was a lyric poet, said to be ever introducing "Iacchus, Iacchus." The latter is meant here. See Bergk, Poet. Lyr. p. 846. He had now been dead for a long time, but still lived in people's memories as the hero of the comic art." Droysen. The epithet Taurophagus belonged originally to Bacchus, but Aristophanes introduced Cratinus in this place in allusion to his Bacchanalian habits of drunkenness; on which see *Hor. Ep. ⁵ Spanheim quotes Aristotle, (Rhet. iii. 11,) to support his opinion that Demeter is here meant, and mentions an inscription on a coin which attributes the same epithet to that goddess; but at the same time acknowledges that her daughter Persephone shares the title with her on the coins of the Cyzicenes. Droysen and Thiersch suppose it to belong to Minerva, because Ceres is celebrated below, and we know the appellation was bestowed on various deities, in different places, or at different times; whence it afterwards descended to kings, as Ptolemy Soter, &c. Liddell understands it to mean Demeter, Mitchell, Persephone.

But come on now, and invite hither with songs the blooming god, our partner in this choral dance.

O highly-honoured Iacchus, who invented the very sweet melody of the festival, follow along with us hither to the goddess, and show how long a journey⁴ you accomplish without toil.

Iacchus, friend of the choral dance, escort me; for, having glanced a little aside, I just now spied the bosom of a young and very pretty girl, our playmate, as it peeped out from her vest rent at the side. Iacchus, friend of the choral dance, escort me.

⁴ Eurip. Bacc. 194. Bergler and Thiersch suppose it to allude to the travels of Bacchus in India; Conz and Mitchell, to the procession of Iacchus from the Ceramicus to Eleusis; when, by the aid of the god, whose statue and mystic banners accompanied them, the votaries accomplished a long journey. The word expected was φραστήρας, "teeth that indicate the age;" but he substitutes φράτερ-ας, to ridicule him as an alien. See Donaldson, New Crat. p. 297. The custom is explained by Potter as follows:—"All fathers were obliged to enrol their sons in the register of their peculiar φαρρία, (or ward,) at which time they made oath that every son so registered was either born to them in lawful matrimony, or lawfully adopted. Notwithstanding which, the φράτερες, or members of that ward, had the liberty of rejecting any person against whom sufficient evidence appeared, concerning which they voted by private suffrage." And again, on this very passage, "Whereby they (the chorus) seem to intimate that he (Archedemus) had fraudulently insinuated himself into the number of the citizens, it being usual for those who were free-born to be registered before that age." ⁴ Applied to any pestering reiteration. The proverb is here used by Xanthias with reference to line 165, where he receives a similar command. Cf. Eccles. 828. Pind. Nem. vii. 155. The origin of the saying is supposed to have been as follows: Once an ambassador came from Corinth to Megara, (their colony,) and threatened them, as rebels from the mother city, with vengeance human and divine, reiterating the words δικαίως ἂν στενάζοι ὁ Διὸς Κόρινθος, εἰ μὴ λάβοι δίκην, whereupon the Megarians, in a rage, took and beat him, crying παῖε, παῖε τὸν Διὸς Κόρινθον. CHO. Let us proceed to the flowery meadows abounding in roses, sporting in our manner, the most beautiful in the dance,¹ which² the blessed Fates institute. For to us alone, as many as have been initiated, and conducted ourselves in a pious manner towards the foreigners and the citizens, are the sun and the light joyous.³

BAC. Come now, in what way shall I knock at the door? in what?⁴ How then do the people of the country here knock?

XAN. Don't loiter,⁵ but try the door, as you have your dress and your spirit after the manner of Hercules.

BAC. (knocking at the door). Boy! boy!

ÆACUS (from within). Who's there?⁶

BAC. Hercules the brave. [Æacus comes out.]

ÆAC. O you impure, and shameless, and audacious fellow, and abominable, and all-abominable, and most abominable! who dragged out our dog Cerberus,⁷ which I had the care of, and darted away holding him by the throat, and ran clear off with him. But now you are held by the middle; such a black-hearted rock of Styx, and blood-dripping cliff of Acheron, environ you, and the roaming dogs⁸ of Cocytus, and the hundred-headed Echidna,⁹ which shall rend in sunder your viscera; and a Tartessian¹⁰ serpent shall fasten on your lungs,

The allusion is to the night-festival which terminated the sixth and great day of the Eleusinian mysteries.

while Tithrasian¹ Gorgons shall tear in pieces your kidneys, together with your entrails, stained with blood; to fetch which I will set in motion a swift foot.² [Exit Æacus, and Bacchus falls down in a fright.]

XAN. Hollo you! what have you done?

BAC. Eased myself: invoke the god.³

XAN. O you ridiculous fellow! will you not then get up quickly, before some stranger sees you?

BAC. But I am fainting. Come, bring a sponge to put to my heart.

XAN. There, take it! [Offers him a sponge.]

BAC. Put it to it.

XAN. Where is it? [Bacchus presents his posteriors to him.] Oh ye golden⁴ gods! is it there you keep your heart?

BAC. Why, it crept down through fright into the bottom of my belly.⁵

XAN. O thou most cowardly of gods and men!

BAC. I? how am I cowardly,⁶ who asked you for a sponge? No other man then would have done it.⁷

XAN. What then⁸ would he have done?

BAC. He would have lain sniffling, if he was a coward; but I got up, and moreover wiped myself clean.

XAN. Bravely done,¹ by Neptune!

BAC. By Jove, I think so. But did you not fear the sound of his words and his threats?

XAN. No, by Jove! I did not even give them a thought.

BAC. Come then, since you are so spirited and brave, do you take this club and the lion's skin and become me, if² you are so fearless of heart; and I will be your baggage-carrier in turn.

XAN. Give them now quickly, for I must³ comply with you; and look at the Hercules-Xanthias, if I shall be a coward, and with a spirit like you. [Dresses himself in the lion's skin.]

BAC. No, by Jove, but truly the worthless slave of Melite.⁴ Come then, let me take up⁵ this baggage. [Enter a maid-servant of Proserpine.]

SERVANT. O dearest Hercules,⁶ have you come? Come in hither; for the goddess, when she heard that you⁷ were come, immediately began baking loaves, boiled⁸ two or three pots of soup of bruised peas, broiled a whole ox, baked cheese-cakes and rolls. But do come in.

² See note on Thesm. 789.

³ See note on Nub. 232. Bernhardt, W. S. p. 352.

⁴ Melite was a deme of Attica, so called from the nymph of that name, with whom Hercules was in love. There was a temple there to Hercules Averter of ill, (Ἀλεξίκακος,) which name Bacchus exchanges παρ' ἐπώνυμον for Mastigias. In the village of Melite, Hercules was initiated in the lesser mysteries. Cf. Müller's Dorians, i. p. 445. "A sarcasm is also implied against Callias, who was likewise of Melite, and used a lion-skin as his military dress." Frere. See note on Aves, 13.

⁵ See note on Lys. 864.

⁷ "Only in this case did the Attic tone of conversation allow an enclitic to stand at the commencement of a member of a sentence, which was closely connected with the preceding, and imparted to the pronoun a moderate emphasis: Nicomachus, (ap. Athen. vii. p. 291, B.,) ὧν εἶδέναι σοι κρεῖττον ἦν μοι πρὶν λαλεῖν. Plat. XAN. No, I thank you.¹

SER. By Apollo, I will not suffer you to go² away! for³ in truth she has been boiling poultry,⁴ and toasting⁵ sweet-meats, and mixing up most delicious wine. But come in along with me.

XAN. No, I thank you.

SER. You are talking nonsense: I will not let you go; for there is a⁶ very pretty flute-girl too within, and two or three dancing-girls besides.⁷

XAN. How say you? dancing girls?

SER. Youngish,⁸ and newly depillated. But do come in, for the cook was just going to take up the slices of salt fish, and the table was being carried in.

XAN. Go then, first of all tell the dancing-girls who are within, that ourself is coming in. [Addressing Bacchus.] Boy,⁹ follow this way with the baggage. [Exit maid-servant.]

BAC. Hollo you! stop! you are not for taking it in earnest, surely,¹⁰ because I dressed you up as Hercules in jest? Don't be trifling, Xanthias, but take up the baggage again and carry them.

XAN. What's the matter? Surely you don't intend to take away from me what you gave me yourself?

BAC. Not soon, but instantly¹¹ I'll do it. Lay down the skin!

XAN. (sulkily). Never mind;—'tis well;—take them.³ For you will perhaps want me some time, please God.⁴

CHO. This is⁵ agreeably to the character of a man who possesses prudence and understanding, and who has sailed about much, always to roll himself over to the snug side⁶ of the ship, rather than to stand like⁷ a painted image, having assumed one appearance: whereas, to turn oneself to the easier side is agreeably to the character of a clever man and a Theramenes⁸ by nature.

All the commentators follow the Scholiast in his application of this passage to sailors, who run to that side of the ship which, in a storm, is kept uppermost by the waves. It is not unlikely, therefore, that the mention of the painted figures is only a continuation of the same allusion, and relates to the signs borne by vessels on their prows and sterns, chiefly the latter, as Ovid mentions,—"Accipit et pictos puppis adunca Deos." See Liddell's Lex. in voc. ροῖχος.

⁷ See note on Plut. 314.

⁸ Theramenes was son of Hagnon, and a general at Athens, in the time of the comedian. His political character was so proverbially fickle and changeable, that he got the nickname of κόθοτρος, i. e. a shoe that would serve either foot. See Mus. Crit. ii p. 212. Thucydides bears testimony both to his talents and his changeable temper. (Thuc. viii. 68, 89.) On the fall of Athens, he became one of the thirty tyrants, but was far from participating in their cruelties. His humanity rendered him a dangerous inmate at their councils, and being accused by his colleague Critias, he was condemned, and ordered to drink hemlock; which sentence, and its execution, he bore with a constancy quite foreign to his former character.

BAC. Why, would it not have been ridiculous, if Xanthias, slave as he is, wallowed on Milesian¹ bed-clothes, and paid court to a dancing-girl, and then asked for a chamber-pot;² while I looked at him and employed myself otherwise, and he, inasmuch as he is a knave himself, saw it, and then struck me with his fist and knocked out my front row of teeth out of my jaw. ⁵ The comedian's vengeance pursues Cleon, his great enemy, to the very recesses of Tartarus, where he gives him both clients and company worthy of him. Hyperbolus was an Athenian, banished from his country on account of the peculiar infamy of his character. He had retired to Samos, where the friends of the democratic party rose and slew him. Thuc. vii. 73. He is mentioned in terms of strong reprobation in Equit. 1304, 1363, where Mr. Mitchell has a note, giving an account of the cause of his banishment. It appears he had endeavoured to effect a quarrel between Nicias and Alcibiades, and bring on the latter the punishment of ostracism. They united their influence, and declared him a person dangerous to the state. The people were surprised, being well acquainted with the meanness of his character; they humoured the jest, however, and in his banishment by ostracism, the better citizens gained the double advantage of being at once rid of him, and shortly after, of that punishment itself, which had come into disrepute from being exercised on such a villain. 1ST INNK. And I should like to take a sickle and cut out your gullet, with which you swallowed down my tripe.³ But I will go to fetch⁴ Cleon, who shall summon him to-day, and wind these out⁵ of him. [Exeunt female innkeepers.]

BAC. May I die most miserably, if I don't love Xanthias!

XAN. I know, I know your⁶ purpose: have done, have done with your talk! I will not become⁷ Hercules.

BAC. By no means say⁸ so, my dear little Xanthias.

XAN. Why, how could I become the son of Alcmena, "who am at the same time⁹ a slave and a mortal?"

BAC. I know, I know that you are angry, and that you act so justly; and even if you were to beat me,¹⁰ I could not gainsay you. But if ever I take them away from¹¹ you henceforth, may I myself perish most miserably, root and branch, my wife, my children, and the blear-eyed Archedemus.¹²

² "Well, is not this quite monstrous and outrageous, To steal the dog, and then to make an assault, In justification of it?" Frere.

I have noticed that the Greeks prefer to place the subject of the infinitive after the infinitive, and the object of the infinitive before it. See vss. 530, 596. Plut. 401. Vesp. 1368. Aves, 1280. Theoc. iii. 21. Cf. Bernhardt, W. S. p. 460. Very often the right understanding of the whole sentence depends upon this principle. See Plato, Crit. p. 48, E.; Thuc. viii. 66, where, moreover, the omission of the article as well shows that ἐπιβουλεύσαντα is the subject. For this adverbial use of πρὸς, see Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 68, 2, obs. 2.

³ See note on Thesm. vs. 646.

⁴ Mr. Frere is mistaken in supposing this to be said in the softened, obliging tone of one who consults another's pleasure. See Porson, Phœn. 1373. Hermann, Alc. 498.

⁵ This passage is quoted by Archbishop Potter in his Antiq. vol. i. p. 60 ; to which punishments he adds grinding at the mill, and burning marks on their flesh. Commentators express surprise at the modes of torture here allowed, and to which the masters were compelled, when summoned by their adversaries, to surrender their domestics, when a law was existing, whereby the person who killed a slave became liable to the same penalty as the murderer of a free citizen.

⁶ The change of tense is worthy of notice. The two first are him, by racking¹ him, and further, by pouring vinegar into his nostrils, by heaping bricks upon him,² and every other way; only don't beat him with leek or young onion.³

ÆAC. Your proposition is just; and if I maim your slave at all by beating him, the money shall be deposited.⁴

XAN. Nay,⁵ nought of that; so lead him away and torture him, as I said.

ÆAC. Nay, rather, here, in order that he may speak before your face:⁶ do you [to Bacchus] put down the baggage quickly, and see that you tell us no lies here.

BAC. I advise somebody not to torture me, who am an immortal; otherwise, blame yourself.⁷

ÆAC. What do you say?

BAC. I assert that I am an immortal,⁸ Bacchus, son of Jove, but that this fellow is a slave.

BAC. Why then, since you also say you are a god, are you not also beaten with the same number of blows as I?¹

XAN. The proposition is just; and which ever of us [to Æacus] you see crying first, or caring at all because he is beaten, consider him to be no god.

ÆAC. It must be that you are a noble fellow, for you come to fair terms.² Now strip.

XAN. How then will you test us fairly?

ÆAC. Easily, blow for blow each party.³

XAN. You say well.

ÆAC. Well!

XAN. Observe then if you see me flinching. [Puts himself in an attitude for receiving the blows.]

ÆAC. (striking him). Now I have struck you.

XAN. No, by Jove!

ÆAC. Neither do you seem⁴ to me to have felt it. But I will go to this fellow and strike him. [Strikes Bacchus.]

ÆAC. Assuredly I struck you.⁵

BAC. Why, how then did I not sneeze?

ÆAC. I know not: but I will try this fellow again.

ÆAC. The pious man!² I must go this way again. [Strikes Bacchus.]

BAC. Oh! oh!

ÆAC. What's the matter?

BAC. I see horsemen.

ÆAC. Why then do you weep?

BAC. I smell onions.

BAC. O Apollo!³—"who, I ween, inhabitest Delos or Pytho."

XAN. (to Æacus). He was pained. Did you not hear him?

BAC. Not I; for I was recollecting⁴ an iambic verse of Hipponax.

¹ Diomeia was a deme of the tribe Ægeis, so called from Diomus, son of Colyttus, the friend of Hercules, who had a temple there, and was worshipped there in great splendour. The Diomeians are reproved in the Acharnians for their boastful temper; and, in a note on that passage, Mr. Mitchell observes, that "The Diomeian tribe did not assume a more heroic character in times posterior to Aristophanes; for it was among them that the sixty wits, (γελωτοποιοί), who registered the squibs, the sarcasms, the follies, and eccentric characters of Athens, held their sittings, which even the tumult of the Macedonian war did not disturb."

² See Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 45, 2, obs. 4.

³ "O Apollo—nemlich 'der du Pytho und Delos schirmst.'" Droy. To this the Scholiast adds two other lines,—

Ἦ Νάξου ἢ Μίλητον ἢ Δείην Κλάρον

Ἴκον καθ' ἑρ' ἢ Σκύθας ἀφίξεαι,— and observes, that in his pain and confusion, Bacchus ascribes them to the wrong author, Ananius having composed them. Bergk, however, classes them amongst the writings of Hipponax. See his Poet. Lyr. p. 525. "See Fabric. Bibl. Gr. ii. 104." Mitchell.

BAC. O Neptune!—

XAN. Some one was pained.¹

BAC. —“who rulest the *Ægean*² headland, or, in the depths, the azure sea.”

ÆAC. By Ceres, I certainly am not able to discover as yet which of you is the god. But go in; for my master himself and Proserpine will distinguish you, inasmuch as they also are gods.

BAC. You say rightly; but I should have wished that you had done this before I received the blows. [Exeunt Bacchus, Xanthias, and Æacus.]

The Scholiast says, that Plato the comedian wrote a drama on this Cleophon, in which he accuses him of foreign parentage. It is supposed that Euripides alludes to him in the Orestes, 901. See Thesm. 805, and vs. 1532, infra.

And if any one has erred, having been deceived somewhat by the artifices of Phrynichus,³ I assert that it ought to be allowed those who made a false step at that time to do away with their former transgressions by pleading their cause.⁴ In the next place I assert that no one in the city ought to be civilly disqualified;⁵ for it is disgraceful that those who have fought one battle at sea, should straight-

If the number of the black beans were greatest, he pronounced the person guilty; and, as a mark to denote his condemnation, drew a long line, whence ἅπασιν τιμᾶν μακρὰν, in the comedian, signifies to condemn all: on the contrary, he drew a short line in token of absolution, if the white beans exceeded, or only equalled, the number of the black; for such was the clemency of the Athenian laws, that when the case seemed equally disputable on both sides, the severe and rigorous commands of justice gave place to the milder laws of mercy and compassion. ÆAC. Nay, but I am more than mad with joy!

XAN. But what, when you blab this to those outside?

ÆAC. I? Nay, by Jove, but when I do this, I am even transported beyond measure.

XAN. O Phœbus Apollo! give me your right hand, and let me kiss you, and do you kiss me yourself, and tell me, by Jove, who⁵ is our fellow-slave, what is this tumult, and clamour, and wrangling, within?

ÆAC. Between Æschylus and Euripides.

XAN. Ha!

ÆAC. An affair, a mighty, a mighty affair⁶ has been set a going among the dead, and a very great commotion.

XAN. Wherefore?⁷

The Epoptæ are said by Potter to mean all who were admitted (in the year following their initiation to the lesser mysteries) to behold the Arcana of Eleusinian worship. The commentators on this passage, however, rank them with the Hierophant and torch-bearer as peculiar ministers, who could not obtain their office until they had been one year Mystæ. As then the Mystæ were accounted happy, the Epoptæ were proportionably capable of more exalted happiness. For μᾶλλον, see note on Thesm. 646.

ÆAC. —until some other person, better skilled in the art than he, should come;⁴ then it was his duty to give place.

XAN. Why then has this disturbed Æschylus?

ÆAC. He held the tragic seat,⁵ as being the best in his art.

XAN. But who now?

ÆAC. As soon as Euripides came down, he began to show off to the foot-pads, and cut-purses, and parricides, and house-breakers; of which sort of men⁶ there is a vast quantity in Hades, and they, hearing his objections, and twistings, and turnings, went stark mad, and thought him the cleverest. And then elated he laid claim to the throne where Æschylus was sitting.

XAN. And was he not pelted?⁷

ÆAC. To institute a contest, and trial, and ordeal of their skill forthwith.⁴

XAN. Why, how then did not Sophocles also lay claim to the seat?

ÆAC. Not he, by Jove, but kissed Æschylus as soon as he came down,⁵ and gave him his right hand; and he⁶ had given up to him the seat. But now he was intending, as Clidemides⁷ said, to sit down as third combatant, and if Æschylus conquer, to remain in his place; but if not, he declared he would contend against Euripides in skill.

ÆSCH. Certainly not; before I shall have shown up clearly this introducer of lame characters, what sort³ of a person he is, who speaks so boldly.

BAC. Boys, bring out a lamb, a black lamb, for a storm⁴ is ready to issue forth.

ÆSCH. O thou that collectest Cretan⁵ monodies, and introducest unholy nuptials into the art——

BAC. Hollo! stop, O highly-honoured Æschylus! And do you, O unlucky Euripides, get yourself out of the way of the hail-storm, if you are wise, lest through passion he smite your temples with a head-breaking word and let out your Telephus.⁶ And do you, O Æschylus, not angrily, but temperately refute, and be refuted.⁷ It is not meet that poets should rail at each other, like bread-women. BAC. What, pray, do you mean to do? Tell me, Æschylus!

ÆSCH. I was wishing² not to contend here; for our contest is not on equal terms.

BAC. Why, pray?

ÆSCH. Because³ my poetry has not died with me, but this man's has died with him, so that he will be able to recite it. But still, since you think proper, I must do so.

BAC. Come then, let some one give me here frankincense and fire, that I may pray,⁴ prior to the learned compositions, so as to decide⁵ this contest most skilfully. But do you [to the Chorus] sing some song to the Muses.

of both is not devoid of courage, nor their souls sluggish. Therefore 'tis reasonable to expect that one will say something clever and well-polished; while the other, tearing them up,¹ will fall on him with words torn up from the very roots, and toss about many long rolling words.

BAC. Come, you ought to recite as soon as possible: but in such manner that you shall utter what is polite, and neither metaphors,² nor such as any one else might say.

EUR. Well now, I will speak of myself subsequently, what I am in poetry; but first I will convict this fellow, that he was an impostor and a quack, and will show with what tricks he cajoled the spectators, having received them reared as fools in the school of Phrynichus.³ For first of all he used to muffle up and seat some single character, an Achilles⁴ or a Niobe, without showing the face, a piece of tragic quackery,⁵ who did not even utter so much——

² The first sarcasm is directed at the transcendental metaphors of Æschylus, the second at Euripides' fondness for the language of common life.

EUR. His chorus, on the other hand, used to hurl four series of songs one after another without ceasing ; while they were silent.

EUR. For you were a simpleton, be well assured.

BAC. I also think so myself.² But why did What's his name do this ?

EUR. Out of quackery,³ that the spectator might sit expecting, when his Niobe would⁴ utter something ; while the play would be going on.

BAC. O the thorough rascal ! How I was cheated, then, by him ! [To Æschylus.] Why are you stretching and yawning, and showing impatience ?

EUR. Because I expose him. And then, when he had trifled in this way, and the drama was now half over, he used to speak some dozen words as big⁵ as bulls, with brows and crests, some tremendous fellows of terrific aspect, unknown to the spectators.

ÆSCH. Ah me, miserable !

BAC. (to Æschylus). Be silent.

EUR. But not a single plain word would he utter.⁶

BAC. But I thought it was Eryxis,⁴ the son of Philoxenus.

EUR. Ought you then to have introduced a cock⁵ into tragedy?

ÆSCH. And what sort,⁶ you enemy of the gods, are the things which you introduced?

EUR. Not horse-cocks, by Jove, nor yet goat-stags, as you do, such as they depict on the Persian tapestry:⁷ but immediately, as soon as ever I received the art from you, puffed out with pompous phrases and ponderous words, I first of all reduced it, and took off its ponderousness with versicles, and argumentations, and with white beet,⁸ giving it chatter-juice, filtering it from books: and then I nursed it up with monodies, making an infusion of Cephisophon.⁹ Then I did not

⁶ The Panathenaia were divided into Greater and Lesser, the former being celebrated on the twenty-second of the month Hecatombeon, once in five years; the latter was observed every year, on the twentieth of Thargelion. In this last there were three games, managed by ten presidents elected out of all the tribes of Athens, who continued in office four years. On the first day at even there was a race with torches, wherein first footmen, and afterwards horsemen, contended: the same custom was likewise observed in the greater festival. The second contention was εὐανδρία ἀγών: i. e. a gymnical exercise, so called because the combatants therein gave a proof of their strength or manhood. The place of these games was near the river, and called Panathenaïcum. The last was a musical contention, first instituted by Pericles. BAC. How, pray? tell⁷ me how you make that out.

ÆSCH. "To have come" to a land⁸ is in any one's power who has his part in a country, for he has come to it without any calamity⁹ besides; but a man in exile "comes and returns from exile."¹⁰

² Spanheim here observes that Eubulus the comedian derides Chæremon on the same point, for making use of the terms "water," and "the body of a river," in the same line, to express a single stream. See Aul. Gell. Noct. Att. xiii. 24.

¹⁰ For this use of ἄλλος, see Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 50, 4, obs. 11. It is commonly, but very erroneously, said to be pleonastic in such formulæ. "In these cases ἄλλος and ἔτερος may often be translated by 'besides,' 'moreover.'" Krüger. Cf vs. 515, supra.

¹¹ Demosthenes (Ag. Aristocr. vol. 1. p. 636) has these words,— "For it is evidently impossible for a man to return (κατελθεῖν) to a country whence he has not previously been banished." See the Eumenides, vs. 459; Soph. Antig. vs. 200; Porson add. ad Eur. Med. 1011. The preposition has precisely the same force in κατάγω.

BAC. Good, by Apollo! What say you, Euripides?

EUR. I deny that Orestes "returned" home; for he came secretly, without having prevailed upon the rulers.¹

BAC. Good,² by Mercury! but I do not understand what you mean.

EUR. Therefore repeat another.

BAC. Come, Æschylus, be quick and repeat it; and do you [to Euripides] look to what is faulty.

ÆSCH. "Upon this mound of his tomb I call upon my father to hearken to me and hear."

EUR. There again³ he utters another tautology, "to hearken and hear;" which⁴ is most evidently the same thing.

BAC. Why, he was calling to dead people,⁵ you wretch, whom we can't reach even by calling thrice.⁶

ÆSCH. But how did you compose your prologues?

EUR. I will show you; and if any where I say the same thing twice,⁷ or you see any expletive in it foreign to the subject, spit upon me.

See note on Lys. 556.

⁶ This alludes to a well-known custom. Hom. Od. ix. 65,

Πρὶν τινα τῶν δειλῶν ἐτάρων τρίς ἑκάστον ἀΐσαι.

So also Virgil, Æn. vi. 505, x

"Et magna manes tē voce vocavi."

In like manner Hercules, in Theocritus xxiii. 43, calls Hylas thrice. This was practised only in the case of those who died in a foreign land, and whose souls were supposed to be recalled thereby to their native country. For the construction, see note on Nub. 689.

Or a single word clapt in to botch a verse—

That's all!—I'll give you leave to spit upon me." Frere.

Commentators have produced two passages in Euripides, in which, they assert, useless repetitions are introduced. The first is in the BAC. (to Euripides). Come now, recite; for¹ I must listen to the correctness of the verses of your prologues.

EUR. "Œdipus² was at first a fortunate man,"—

ÆSCH. No, by Jove, certainly not;³ but unfortunate by nature, inasmuch as⁴ Apollo, before he was begotten, before even he was born, said he should kill his father. How was he "at first a fortunate man?"

EUR. "And then, on the other hand, became the most wretched of mortals."

ÆSCH. No, by Jove, certainly not; nay, rather, he did not cease to be:⁵ assuredly not; when they exposed him as soon as he was born, in the winter, in an earthen vessel,⁶ that he might not be brought up and become his father's murderer; and then he went to Polybus swollen in his feet;⁷ and then, being himself a young man, married an old woman, and in addition to this, his own mother; and then he blinded himself.

BAC. Then he had been fortunate,⁸ if he had also been general along with Erasinides.⁹

Phænissæ, 1380, where, speaking of Eteocles and Polynices, he says, δισσω στρατηγῶ καὶ διπλῶ στρατηλάτα; the other in the Orestes, vs. 340,—μὴ κτυπεῖτε, μὴδ' ἴστω κύπος. It is but justice, however, to Euripides to observe, that his best editors expunge the former of these lines as spurious.

³ It is a curious fact, that while Æschylus (S. C. Theb. vs. 774) and Sophocles (Œd. Tyr. 1189) both assert the happiness of Œdipus before his fall, Euripides himself (Phœn. 1611) contradicts the assertion he has here made, by causing his hero to exclaim, "O fate, how, from the beginning, hast thou engendered me to misery!"

⁵ "Non desiit esse infortunatus." Dindorf. For the negatives, see note on Plut. 551.

⁶ See Thesm. 505, where an old woman is mentioned as carrying a supposititious child in one of these vessels.

⁷ For the construction, see note on Plut. 734.

⁸ For this construction, see Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 54, 10, obs. 1. ἀν is thrown out in this way, when the speaker would represent the consequence as infallible.

He ought to have served at sea with Erasinides." Frere.

EUR. You talk foolishly: I compose my prologues excellently.

ÆSCH. Well now, by Jove, I will not carp at each sentence of yours word by word;¹ but, with God's help,² I will demolish your prologues with a little oil-flask.³

EUR. You demolish my prologues with a little oil-flask?

ÆSCH. With one only. For you compose them in such a way that every thing fits your iambs, a little sheep-skin, a little oil-flask, a little bag. I will show you directly.

EUR. "You will show me," quoth'a!

ÆSCH. Yes.

BAC. (to Euripides). You ought now to recite.

EUR. "Ægyptus,⁴ as the very widely circulated report has been spread, with fifty sons, by ship,⁵ having landed⁶ at Argos"—

⁷ "The entertainment which follows, consists of a musical burlesque, in which each of the rival candidates is represented as exhibiting a caricature of the style of his opponent. This caricature seems to have consisted of a series of musical phrases, selected from their works; but, as the music was the only object, while the words served only to indicate the music which was attached to them; the words, which now remain alone, (the music having shared the common fate of all the other music of the ancients,) present little more than a jumble of sentences, incapable of being connected by any continuous meaning." Frere. Euripides exemplifies this by producing passages marked by a recurrence of the same musical cadence. As the original is throughout what Carlyle would call "a heap of clotted nonsense," the reader must not expect much better from the translation. "Et noctem flumine purgat."

² See note on Thesm. 728.

³ "With the dawn I was beginning
Spinning, spinning, spinning, spinning,
Unconscious of the meditated crime;
Meaning to sell my yarn at market-time.
Now tears alone are left me,
My neighbour hath bereft me
Of all—of all—of all—all but a tear!
Since he, my faithful trusty Chanticleer,
Is flown—is flown! is gone—is gone!
But, O ye nymphs of sacred Ida, bring Torches and bows, with arrows on the string;
And search around
All the suspected ground." Frere.

⁵ Eur. Bacch. 1205, λευκοπήχεσιν χειρῶν ἄκμαϊσι. Soph. Rex. 1034, ποδοῖν ἄκμαϊ.

⁶ This and the following verse are quotations from the Cretans of Euripides.

⁷ Æsch. Theb. 114, Ἀργεῖοι γὰρ πόλισμα Κάδμου κυκλοῦνται.

⁸ "And thou, fair huntress of the sky,
Deign to attend, descending from on high;
While Hecate with her tremendous torch,
Even from the topmost garret to the porch,
Explores the premises with search exact,
To find the thief and ascertain the fact." Frere.

⁹ On old coins Hecate is represented with torches

Jove, holding up lamps with double lights with very rapid hands, light me along to Glyce's, that I may enter and search after the theft."

BAC. Have done now with your melodies.

ÆSCH. I too have had enough. For I wish to bring him to the scales, which alone will try our poetry; for they will test the weight of our expressions.

BAC. Come hither then, if I must do this,¹ vend the art of poets like cheese.² [A huge pair of scales is brought on the stage.]

CHO. The clever poets are painstaking. For this, again, is another novel prodigy, full of strangeness, which no³ other person would have thought of! By the deity,⁴ I would not have believed it, if even any one of the common⁵ people had told me, but would have thought he was trifling therein.

BAC. Come then, stand by near the scale.⁶

ÆSCH. AND EUR. Very well.

BAC. And take hold and each of you recite your sentence, and do not let go till I cry "cuckoo" to you.⁷

ÆSCH. AND EUR. We are keeping hold.

BAC. Now recite your verse into the scales.

EUR. "Would that⁸ the hull of the Argo had not flown through."

¹ Plato, Gorgias, § 102, ἡ τοῦτο μὲν οὐδὲν δεῖ, αὐτὸν ἑαυτοῦ ἀρχεῖν. For this use of the demonstrative, see notes on Thesm. 520; Nub. 380. For καί, see note on Lys. 171.

² Or, rather, to appraise like a petit maître. As similar instances of this quaintness of expression, we may compare Equit. 289, κυνοκοπήσω σου τὸ νῶτον. Pax, 747, ἐδενδροτόμησε τὸ νῶτον. Ran. 798, μειαγωγήσουσι τὴν τραγωδίαν. Empedocles, vs. 286, ὥσοκεῖ μακρὰ δένδρεα. Eupolis (ap. Bekk. Anecd. i. p. 84), βουκολεῖσθαι αἶγας.

³ For this remarkable construction, cf. Lys. 259; Thuc. viii. 96; Plato, Apol. p. 38, D. In the present passage it looks very like a Latinism. See Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 54, 14, obs. 2, and § 51, 17, obs. 7, and note on vs. 1456.

⁴ For this elliptical expression, see Kün, Greg. Cor. p. 150. Bernhardt, W. S. p. 192.

⁵ Mitchell cites Plato, Cratyl. p. 390, D.; Theæt. p. 171, C.; Demosth. p. 1370, 5; Soph. Rex, 393.

⁷ "Und lässt sie nicht, bis dass Ich "kukuk" rufe, los." Droysen.

⁸ Opening of the Medea. For ὠφελεν, see note on Nub. 41. For σκῆφος, see Blomf. gl. Pers. 425.

ÆSCH. 'O river¹ Sperchius, and ye cattle-feeding pastures."

BAC. "Cuckoo!" let go! Why, this man's side² sinks far lower.

EUR. Why, what ever is the reason?

BAC. Because he put in a river,³ having like a wool-dealer made his verse wet as they do their fleeces; while the verse which you put in was furnished with wings.

EUR. Come, let him recite another and weigh it against mine.

BAC. Then take hold again.

ÆSCH. AND EUR. See there!

BAC. Recite!

EUR. "There is no other temple of Persuasion,⁴ save speech."—

ÆSCH. "For⁵ Death alone of the gods loves not gifts."

BAC. Let go! let go! Why, this man's side declines again; for he put in Death, the weightiest of evils.

EUR. And I Persuasion,⁶ a verse most admirably expressed.

BAC. But Persuasion is a light thing, and has no sense. Come, search again for some other of your heavy ones, which shall draw down the scale for you, a mighty and huge one.

EUR. Come, where then have I such a one? where?

² "Viel tiefer sinkt des Aischylos Seite." Droysen.

³ "He slipped in a river, like the wool-jobbers,
To moisten his metre—but your line was light,
A thing with wings—ready to fly away." Frere.

Young readers would do well to remember that τοῦπος ἐπτερόμενον is not τὸ ἐπτερωμένον ἱππος. See vs. 1419, infra. Equit. 1106. Pax, 220, 1032. Eccles, 227, 721, 782. Schäfer on Theoc. xxvii. 37, and on Soph. Ajax, 573, and on Greg. Cor. p. 877. Krüger on Xenoph. Anab. i. 9, 18. Donaldson, New Crat. p. 382. So in Eur. Hippol. 681, we must read Ζεὺς σε γεννήτωρ ἐμός. Cf. Bast, Greg. Cor. p. 170. Donaldson, Complete Greek Grammar, § 404.

⁴ From the Antigone of Euripides. Pitho (worshipped under the name Suada, or Suadela, at Rome) was fabled to be the offspring of Venus and Mercury. Her symbols were a thunderbolt, chains of flowers, and the caduceus of her father.

⁵ From the Niobe of Æschylus.

⁶ "But I put in Persuasion finely expressed In the best terms." Frere.

BAC. I'll tell you: "Achilles has thrown¹ quatre-deux." Recite! for this is your last weighing.

EUR. "And in² his right hand he grasped a club heavy with iron."

ÆSCH. "For³ chariot upon chariot, and corpse upon corpse."

BAC. He has foiled you again, even now.

EUR. In what way?

BAC. He put in two chariots and two corpses, which not even a hundred Egyptians⁴ could lift.

ÆSCH. And now let him no longer dispute with me word by word; but let him get into the scales and sit down, himself, his children, his wife, and Cephisophon, having taken his books⁵ with him, while I will merely recite two verses of mine.

² From Euripides' Meleager.

³ From the Glaucus Potniensis of Æschylus, to which Brunck subjoins this line,— ἵπποι δ' ἐφ' ἵπποις ἦσαν ἐμπεφυρμένοι.

BAC. The men are friends of mine,¹ and I will not decide between them. For I will not become hostile to either of them; for the one² I consider clever, the other I am delighted with.

PLUTO. Then will you accomplish none of those things, for the sake of which you came?

BAC. But if I decide?

PLUT. You shall take one of the two, whichever you prefer, and depart, that you may not come in vain.

BAC. May you be prosperous! Come, hear this from me: I came down for a poet.³

EUR. On what account?

BAC. In order that the city may be saved and hold its choruses. Whichever therefore of you shall give some good advice to the state, him I purpose to take. In the first place, then, what opinion do you each entertain respecting Alcibiades?⁴ For the state has difficult labour-pains.

EUR. But what opinion does it entertain respecting him?

BAC. What?⁵ It longs for, yet detests him,⁶ while it wishes to have him. But tell me what you think of him.

“ Well, they ’re both friends of mine—I shan’t decide,
To get myself ill-will from either party;
One of them seems extraordinary clever,
And the other suits my taste particularly.” Frere.

“ Amici sunt isti.” Brunck. To imagine that οἱ ἄνδρες φίλοι could be an address, may be excused in those who could translate τὸ ἔπος ἐπτερωμένον (vs. 1388) a winged word.

² “Bacchus expresses the judgment of the connoisseurs, and of the great mass of the people. The former praised Æschylus, the latter preferred Euripides.” Welcker.

³ See Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 68, 42, obs. 2.

⁶ “Imitated from a verse in the Φροντοὶ of Ion, the Tragedian, in which Helen is reported to have said to Ulysses, σιγῇ μὲν, ἐχθαίρει δὲ, βούλει γὰρ μὴν.” Mitchell. Shakspeare, Othello, act iii. sc. 3,

“Who dotes, yet doubts; suspects, yet fondly loves.”

See Class. Mus. No. xxv. p. 249.

EUR. I hate a citizen, who shall show himself slow to benefit his country, but quick to greatly injure it; and I hate one who is full of resources for himself, but without resources for the state.

BAC. O Neptune, excellent! But [to Æschylus] what opinion do you hold?

ÆSCH. One must not rear a lion's whelp¹ within the city: above all not rear a lion in the city; but if one rear it, one must submit to its ways.

BAC. By Jupiter the Preserver, I am in doubt;² for the one has spoken cleverly, the other clearly.³ But do each of you⁴ deliver one opinion more about the state, what means of safety you have.

EUR. If any one were to wing Cleocritus⁵ with Cinesias,

¹ It is worthy of note, that this sentiment is expressed by Euripides plainly, in his Troades, 718, respecting Astyanax, and under the same allegory in the Heracleidæ, 1005, where Eurystheus speaks to Alcmena of putting to death her grand-children. See Süvern, "Clouds," p. 61—75. According to him, the first line is a quotation from the Δῆμοι of Eupolis. He compares Æsch. Agam. 725, ed. Schütz.

² Eurip. Erechth. Fr. xii., αἰδοῦς δυσκρίτως ἔχω πέρι.

³ There is the same jingle in the original.

⁴ "So sagt mir also eure Meinung jeder noch

In Betreff des Staates, wenn ihr zum Heil ihm eine habt."

Droysen.

⁵ Cleocritus was a herald by profession. He is ridiculed in the Aves, 876. He appears afterwards as joined with Thrasybulus in the short civil war of the Piræus. Cleocritus was celebrated for his immense size, Cinesias for his extreme slenderness, (vs. 152, supra. Aves, 1377. Eccles. 330. Fr. 198,) and the poet means to hint that this would be a good way of getting rid of them both.

"Beflügelte wer den Kleokritos mit Kinesias,

Und hob' ein Windhauch über Meeres Gebreit ihn hin."

Droysen.

Vss. 1437—1441, were obelized by the Alexandrine critics. In Dindorf's edition, they are bracketed as doubtful. For the nominative absolute in vs. 1437, see Krüger, Gr. and the winds were to bear them over the plain¹ of the sea—

BAC. 'Twould look ridiculous: but what is the meaning of it?

EUR. If they were in a sea-fight, and then with vinegar cruets were to sprinkle vinegar in the enemy's eyes—[Bacchus turns angrily away.] I know, and am willing to speak.

BAC. Say on.

EUR. When we consider trustworthy what is now distrusted, and what is trusted, unworthy of trust—

BAC. How? I do² not understand you. Speak somehow less learnedly and more clearly.

EUR. If we were to distrust those citizens whom we now trust, and employ those whom we do not employ,³ we might be saved. If we are now unsuccessful in these measures, how should we not be saved by doing the contrary?

BAC. Bravo, O Palamedes!⁴ O most clever intellect! Did you invent this yourself, or did Cephisophon?⁵

EUR. I only: but Cephisophon the vinegar-cruets.

BAC. (to Æschylus). What then do you say?

ÆSCH. Now tell me first about the city, what kind of persons it employs:⁶ is it the good?

BAC. By no means.⁷ It hates them most abominably.

ÆSCH. And does it take pleasure in the bad?

BAC. It certainly does not; but employs them of necessity.

ÆSCH. How¹ then could one save such a city, which neither cloak nor goat-skin fits?

BAC. Devise something, by Jupiter! if possibly it may emerge again.²

ÆSCH. I will speak there;³ but here I am not willing.

BAC. Nay, don't⁴ say so; but send up your good counsel from here.

ÆSCH. When they consider the land⁵ of their enemies to be theirs, and theirs their enemies', and their navy as their revenue, and their revenue as poverty.⁶

BAC. Good, but the judge⁷ swallows them alone.

PLU. (to Bacchus). Decide!⁸

BAC. This shall be your judgment; for I will choose him whom my soul desires.

EUR. Being mindful, then, of the gods by whom you swore, that you would assuredly take me away homewards, choose your friends.

BAC. "My⁹ tongue has sworn," but I shall choose Æschylus.

¹ "The judgment which Æschylus pronounces on the city itself, by which a city, which hates the honest citizens, and yet does not give itself up altogether to the bad, is declared to have no chance of being saved, must, from the evident connexion of the thought with line 1425, be referred to Alcibiades alone." Süvern.

And we shall lose our supper, if we stay." Frere.

⁸ The pay of the 6000 jurymen annually sworn in eats away so much of the revenue, that nothing is left for the navy." Droysen. Frere sees in it a double allusion; to the jurymen, and to the hurry of the actors and theatrical judges to get to the supper, which concluded the business of the day. Cf. Eccles. 1178. For this use of the neuter plural, see Bernhardt, W. S. p. 282.

⁹ See note on vs. 437.

⁹ Euripides' sophistry is here retorted on himself. See vs. 101, and Thesm. 275.

EUR. What have you done, O most abominable¹ of men?

BAC. I? I have adjudged Æschylus to be conqueror. For why not?

EUR. Do you look me in the face, after you have done a most shameful deed to me?

BAC. "Why shameful,² if the spectators do not think so?"

EUR. Wretch! will you allow me to be dead then?

BAC. "Who knows³ but to live is to die, and to breathe, to feast, and to sleep, a sheep-skin."

PLU. Go⁴ ye then within, Bacchus.

BAC. Why so?

PLU. That I may entertain you two, before you sail away.

BAC. You say well, by Jove; for I am not displeased with the matter. [Exeunt Pluto, Bacchus, Æschylus, and Euripides.]

CHO. Happy is the man who possesses perfect knowledge. And we may learn this by many instances. For this man, having been adjudged⁵ to be wise, will depart home again, to the advantage of his citizens,⁶ and to the advantage of his own relations and friends, by reason of his being intelligent.⁷ 'Tis well then not to sit by Socrates⁸ and chatter, having re-

⁸ Speaking of his power of language, Mr. Mitchell says, "That a person possessed of so powerful a weapon should sometimes have been a little too much delighted with the use of it, is no subject of wonder." And again, "Much was affirmed by him, and little proved: both sides of the question were alternately taken, and the jected music, and having neglected the most important parts of the tragic art. But to idly waste one's time on grand¹ words and petty quibbles, is the part of a madman. [Re-enter Pluto, Bacchus, and Æschylus.]

PLU. Come now, Æschylus, depart joyfully, and save our city by good advice, and instruct the senseless, for they are numerous; and take and give this [offering a halter] to Cleophon, and this [offering a bowl of hemlock] to the financiers Myrmex and Nicomachus² together, and this [offering a scourge] to Archenomus; and bid them come hither quickly to me, and not delay. And if they do not come quickly, by Apollo, I will brand them, and bind them hand and foot, and quickly despatch them under the earth along with Adimantus the son of Leucolophus.³

ÆSCH. I will do so; and do you give my seat to Sophocles to keep and preserve for me, if perchance I should ever return hither. For him I judge to be next in genius. But mind that the rascal, and liar, and buffoon, never sit upon my seat, even against his will.

PLU. (to the Chorus). Therefore do you light for him the sacred torches, and at the same time escort him, celebrating him with his own⁴ melodies and songs.

THE ARGUMENT.

Of the date of the Ecclesiazusæ we are not informed by any Didascalia. We learn, however, from a note of the Scholiast on vs. 193, that it was brought on the stage two years after the league with the Bœotians; consequently, in the spring of the year 392, B. C.; and, (as may be inferred from the Scholiast on the Frogs, vs. 404,) at the Great Dionysia. The Ecclesiazusæ is, like the Lysistrata, a picture of woman's ascendancy, but one much more depraved than the other. In the dress of men the women steal into the public assembly, and by means of the majority of voices which they have thus surreptitiously obtained, they decree a new constitution, in which there is to be a community of goods and of women. This is a satire on the ideal republics of the philosophers, with similar laws. Protagoras had projected such before Plato. This comedy appears to labour under the very same fault as the Peace: the introduction, the secret assembly of the women, their rehearsal of their parts as men, the description of the popular assembly, are all handled in the most masterly manner; but towards the middle the action stands still. Nothing remains but the representation of the perplexities and confusion which arise from the different communities, especially the community of women, and from the prescribed equality of rights in love both for the old and ugly, and for the young and beautiful. These perplexities are pleasant enough, but they turn too much on a repetition of the same joke.

THE ECCLESIAZUSÆ

[SCENE—the front of a citizen's house, having a lamp suspended over the door. TIME—a little past midnight.]

PRAXAGORA (coming out of the house dressed in men's clothes). O bright eye of the wheel-formed lamp,¹ suspended most commodiously in a situation commanding a wide view, (for I will declare both your parentage² and your fortunes:³ for, having been driven with the wheel by⁴ the force of the potter, you possess in your nozzles⁵ the bright honours of the sun,) send forth the signal of flame agreed upon! For to you alone we reveal it:—justly; for you also stand close by us in our bed-chambers when we try the various modes of Aphrodite; and no one excludes your eye from the house, the witness of our bending bodies. And you alone cast light into the secret recesses of our persons, when you singe⁶ off the hair which flourishes upon them. And you aid us when secretly opening⁷ the storehouses filled with fruits and the Bacchic stream. And although you help to do this, you do not babble of it to the neighbours. Wherefore you shall also be privy to our present designs, as many as were determined on by my friends at the Scira.¹ But none of them is present, who ought to have come. And yet it is close upon day-break; and the Assembly will take place immediately;² and we must take possession of different³ seats from those which Phyromachus formerly ordered, if you still remember, and sit down without being detected. What then can be the matter? Have they their beards not sewed on, which they were ordered to have? or has it been difficult for them to steal and take their husbands' clothes? But I see a lamp there⁴ approaching. Come, now let me⁵ retire back, lest the person who approaches should chance to be a man. [Retires to one side.]

1ST WOMAN (entering with a lamp). It is time to go; for the herald just now crowed⁶ the second time, as we were setting out.

PRAX. (coming forward out of her hiding-place). I was lying awake the whole night expecting you. But come, let me summon our neighbour here by tapping at her door: for I must escape the notice of her husband. [Taps at the door.]

2ND WOMAN (coming out of the house). I heard the tapping⁷ of your fingers, as I was putting on my shoes, since I was not asleep: for my husband, my dearest, (for he whom I live with⁸ is a Salaminian,) was occupying me the whole night

PRAX. Will you not hasten then? for Glyce swore that that one of our¹ number who came last, should pay three choæ of wine, and a choenix of chick-peas.

1ST WOM. Don't you see Melistice, the wife of Smicythion, hastening in² her slippers? and she alone appears to me to have come forth from her husband undisturbed.³

2ND WOM. And don't you see Gusistrate, the wife of the innkeeper, with her lamp in her right hand, and the wife of Philodoretus, and the wife of Chæretades?

PRAX. I see very many other women also approaching, all that are good for aught in the city.⁴

3RD WOM. (entering, followed by many others). And I, my dearest, escaped and stole away with very great difficulty; for my husband kept coughing the whole night, having been stuffed with anchovies over-night.⁵

PRAX. Sit down then, since I see you are assembled, in order that I may ask you about this, if you have done all that was determined on at the Scira.

4TH WOM. Yes. In the first place I have my armpits rougher⁶ than a thicket, as was agreed upon. In the next place, whenever my husband went to the market, I anointed

5TH WOM. (holding one up). And I one, not a little finer than that of Epicrates.³

PRAX. (turning to the others). But what do you say?

1ST WOM. Yea, by Jove! wherefore you ought to take your seat under the Bema,⁵ over against the Prytanes.

PRAX. "Carded," quoth'a! you who ought to exhibit no part of your person to the meeting! 8TH WOM. How³ then? don't they also drink in the Assembly?

PRAX. "Drink," quoth'a!

8TH WOM. Yes, by Diana! and that too unmixed wine. Hieronymus’ participation in the glorious sea-fight at Cnidus may have obtained some importance for an otherwise insignificant person.” Droysen.

⁶ Dindorf’s text exhibits marks of a lacuna between vs. 203 and vs. 204. “This very difficult passage appears to refer to this, that Thrasybulus, the well-known deliverer of the city from the domination of the Thirty, had set out in this year with forty ships to the aid of the Rhodians without waiting for their invitation, in order that they might free themselves from the domination of the Spartans. The poet means, that the good prospects obtained by the victory at Cnidus and the other events of the war would be lost through such

2ND WOM. Well done ! well done ! by Jove ! well done ! say on, say on, O good sir !

PRAX. "But that they are superior to us in their habits I will demonstrate. For, in the first place, they wash their wool in warm water, every one of them, after the ancient custom. And you will not see them trying in a different way. But would not the city of the Athenians be saved, if it observed this properly,⁴ unless it made itself⁵ busy with some other new-fangled scheme ? They roast sitting, just as before. They carry burdens on their heads, just as before. They keep the Thesmophoria, just as before. They⁶ bake their cheese-cakes, just as before. They torment their husbands,⁷ just as before. They have paramours in the house, just as before. They buy dainties for themselves, just as before. They like their wine unmixed,⁸ just as before. They delight⁹ in being wantonly treated, just as before. Therefore, sirs, let us intrust the city like undertakings as Thrasybulus recommended." Droysen. Few persons, I am persuaded, will approve of this view.

to them, and not chatter exceedingly, nor inquire what in the world they will do; but let us fairly suffer them to govern, having considered this alone,¹ that, in the first place, being mothers, they will be desirous to save the soldiers; and in the next place, who could send provisions quicker than the parent? A woman is most ingenious² in providing money; and when governing, could never be deceived; for they themselves are accustomed to deceive. The rest I will omit: but if you take my advice in this, you will spend your lives happily."

1ST WOM. Well done, O sweetest Praxagora, and cleverly! Whence, you rogue, did you learn this so prettily?

PRAX. During the flight³ I dwelt with my husband in the Pnyx; and then I learnt by hearing the orators.

1ST WOM. No wonder then, my dear, you are⁴ clever and wise: and we⁵ women elect you as general on the spot, if you will effect these things, which you have in your mind. But if Cephalus⁶ should be unlucky enough to meet⁷ and insult you, how will you reply to him in the Assembly?

PRAX. I will say he is crazed.

1ST WOM. But this they all know.

PRAX. But also that he is melancholy-mad.

1ST WOM. This too they know.

PRAX. But also that he tinkers⁸ his pots badly, but the state well and prettily.

³ The long lapse of time will hardly allow us to refer this to the flight of the country people into the city in accordance with the policy of Pericles. ⁸ A happy coincidence in the German language has enabled Droysen to translate this verbal play with singular felicity:

some old man's¹ song, imitating the manner of the country people.

2ND WOM. You say well. But let us [to those next her] go before them; for I fancy other women also² will come forthwith³ from the country to the Pnyx.

PRAX. Come, hasten! for it is the custom there for those who are not present at the Pnyx at day-break,⁴ to skulk away, having not even a doit.⁵ [The women advance into the orchestra, and there form themselves into a chorus.]

CHORUS. It is time for us to advance, O men,—for this⁶ we ought mindfully to be always repeating, so that it may never escape⁷ our memories. For the danger is not trifling, if we be caught entering upon so great an enterprise in secret. Let us go to the Assembly, O men; for the Thesmotheses threatened, that whoever should not come at dawn very early, in haste, looking sharp and sour, content⁸ with garlic-pickle, he would not give him the three obols.

⁷ Elmsley (Mus. Crit. i. p. 483) alters this to καὶ μή ποτ' ἐξολίσθη, i. e. ἐξολισθῆτω, as Aristophanes does not join ὥς = ita ut with a conjunctive without ἀν. The usage in prose writers is just the reverse. See Harper, Powers of the Greek Tenses, p. 125. "The pronoun ἡμᾶς does not depend on ἐξολίσθη. The ordo is: τοῦτο γὰρ χρὴ μνησθῆναι ἡμᾶς αἰεὶ λέγειν, ὥς μή ποτ' ἐξολίσθη." Brunck.

"Time now 'tis, my merry men, time now for us to start,
That we are men repeating oft, lest we belie our part.
Not slight would be the peril, if any prying eyes,
In secret while we plot should pierce through our disguise.
Then on, my merry men, for the council let us start." Smith.

Come, O Charitimides,¹ and Smicythus, and Draces, follow in haste, taking heed to yourself that you blunder in none of those things which you ought to effect. But see that, when we have received our ticket,² we then sit down³ near each other, so that we may vote for all measures, as many as it behoves our sisterhood. And yet, what am I saying? for I ought to have called them "brotherhood."⁴

But see that we jostle those who have come from the city, as many as heretofore,⁵ when a person had to receive only one obolus on his coming, used to sit and chatter, crowned with chaplets.⁶ But now they are a great nuisance. But when the brave Myronides⁷ held office, no one used to dare to conduct the affairs of the state for the receipt⁸ of money; but each of them used⁹ to come with drink in a little wine-skin, and bread at the same time, and two onions besides, and three olives.¹⁰ But now, like people carrying clay, they seek to get three obols, whenever they transact any public business.

petticoat and shoes). What's the matter? Whither in the world is my wife gone? for it is now near¹ morning, and she does not appear. I have been lying this long while wanting to ease myself, seeking to find my shoes and my garment in the dark. And when now,² on groping after it, I was not able to find it, but he, Sir-reverence, now continued to knock at the door,³ I take this kerchief of my wife's, and I trail along her Persian slippers. But where, where could one ease himself in an unfrequented⁴ place? or is every place a good place⁵ by night? for now no one will see me easing myself. Ah me, miserable! because I married a wife, being an old man.⁶ How many stripes I deserve to get! For she never went out to do any good. But nevertheless I must certainly go aside to ease myself.

A NEIGHBOUR (coming forward). Who is it? Surely it is not Blepyrus⁷ my neighbour? Yes, by Jove! 'tis he himself assuredly. [Goes up to him.] Tell me, what means this yellow⁸ colour? Cinesias has not, I suppose, befouled you somehow?

BLEP. No; but I have come out with my wife's little saffron-coloured robe⁹ on, which she is accustomed to put on.

NEIGH. But where is your garment?

BLEP. I can't tell. For when I looked for it, I did not find it in the bed-clothes.

BLEP. By Bacchus, neither could I my Laconian shoes! but as I wanted to ease myself, I put my feet into my wife's buskins and am hastening, in order that I might⁶ not do it in the blanket, for it was clean-washed.⁷

NEIGH. What then can it be? Has some woman among her friends invited her to breakfast?

BLEP. In my⁸ opinion it is so. She's certainly not an ill body, as far⁹ as I know.

CHREM. Nay, rather, by Jove, at dawn. And indeed the vermillion,² O dearest Jove! which they threw about on all sides, afforded much laughter.

BLEP. Then did you get your three obols?

CHREM. Would³ I had! But now I came too late; so that I am ashamed * * * * * By Jove, I have brought nothing else but my pouch.⁴

BLEP. But what was the reason?

CHREM. A very great crowd of men, as never at any time⁵ came all at once to the Pynx. And indeed, when we saw them, we compared them all to shoe-makers: for⁶ the Assembly was marvellously⁷ filled with white⁸ to look at. So that neither I myself nor many others got any thing.

CHREM. No, nor any longer shall you rear the children you have, but your wife.

BLEP. Nor any longer is it my business to groan¹ at day-break?

CHREM. No; by Jove! but this now is the women's care; while you shall remain at home without groans.

BLEP. ——to lie with them.

CHREM. But what if we be not able?

BLEP. They will not give us our breakfast.

CHREM. Do you, by Jove, manage this, that you may breakfast and amuse yourself at the same time.

BLEP. Compulsion is most dreadful.⁴

CHORUS OF WOMEN. Advance, proceed! Is there any of the men that is following us? Turn about! look! guard yourself carefully,—for knaves are numerous,—lest perchance some one being behind us, should espy¹ our dress. But step along, stamping² with your feet as much as possible. This affair would bring disgrace upon us all among³ the men, if⁴ it were discovered. Wherefore gird yourself up, and look about⁵ in that direction and on the right, lest the affair shall become a mishap.⁶ Come, let us hasten! for we are now near the place, whence we set out to the Assembly, when we went⁷ there: and we may see the house, whence is our general, who devised the measure which has now been decreed by the citizens. Wherefore it is fitting that we do not loiter waiting longer, equipped with beards, lest some one shall see us, and perhaps⁸ denounce us. But come hither to the shade,⁹ having come to the wall,¹⁰ glancing aside with one eye,¹¹ change your dress again as you were before, and do not loiter: for see here! now we behold our general coming from the Assembly. Come, hasten every one, and hate to have a beard¹ on your jaws. For see! they have come with this dress on this long while. [Enter Praxagora and other women from the Assembly, no longer disguised as men.]

PRAX. (addressing the chorus). These measures, O women, which we deliberated on, have turned out successfully. But throw off your cloaks as soon as possible, before any of the men see you! let the men's shoes go far away! undo² the fastened Laconian shoe-strings! throw away your staffs! And do you now [to a female servant] put them in order. I wish to creep in secretly, before³ my husband sees me, and deposit his garment again whence I took it, and⁴ the other things which I brought out.

CHO. Now all the things you spoke of are lying in order. It is your business to instruct us in the rest, by doing what useful thing we shall seem rightly to obey you. For I know I have conversed with no woman cleverer than you.

PRAX. Wait then, in order that I may use you⁴ all as advisers in the office to which I have been just now elected. For there, in the uproar and danger, you have been most courageous.

BLEP. (suddenly coming out of his house). Ho you! whence have you come, Praxagora?

PRAX. What's that to you,⁵ my dear?

BLEP. "What's that to me?" How foolishly you ask.

PRAX. You certainly will not say, from a paramour.

BLEP. Perhaps not from one.⁶

PRAX. Well now you can put this to the test.

BLEP. How?

PRAX. If my head smells of perfume.⁷

BLEP. How then? does not a woman intrigue even without perfume?

PRAX. I, unhappy, certainly not.¹

BLEP. Why² then did you go off at day-break in silence with my garment?

PRAX. A woman my companion and friend sent for me in the night, being in the pains of labour.³

BLEP. And then was it not possible for you to go when you had told me?

PRAX. And not to care for the woman in child-bed,⁴ being in such a condition, husband?

BLEP. Yes, if you had told me. But there is some mischief in this.

PRAX. Nay, by the two goddesses! but I went just as I was; for she who came in quest of⁵ me, begged me to set out by all means.

BLEP. Then ought you not to have worn your own⁶ garment? But after you had stripped me, and thrown your upper garment over me, you went off and left me as if I were laid out⁷ for burial; only that you did not crown⁸ me, nor yet place a vase⁹ beside me.

PRAX. For it was cold; while I am thin and weak. So then I put it on, in order that I might be warm.¹⁰ But I left you lying in the warmth, and in the bed-clothes, husband.

PRAX. I changed shoes with you, in order that I might keep the garment safe,² imitating you, and stamping with my feet, and striking the stones with the staff.

BLEP. Do you know then that you have lost a sextary³ of wheat, which I ought to have received from the Assembly?

PRAX. Don't be concerned; for she has borne a male child.

BLEP. The Assembly?

PRAX. No, by Jove! but the woman I went to. But has it been held?⁴

BLEP. Yes, by Jove! Did you not know that I told you yesterday?

PRAX. I just now recollect it.

BLEP. Then don't you know what has been decreed?

PRAX. No, by Jove! not I.

BLEP. Then sit down and chew cuttle-fish;⁵ for they say the state has been committed to you.

PRAX. What to do? to weave?

BLEP. No, by Jove! but to rule.

PRAX. What?

BLEP. The affairs of the state, every one.

PRAX. By Venus, the state⁶ will be happy henceforth!

BLEP. On what account?

PRAX. For many reasons. For no longer will it be permitted for the audacious to act shamefully towards it henceforth, and no where to give evidence, nor to act the informer——

BLEP. By the gods, by no means do this, nor take away⁷ my livelihood.

CHO. Now it behoves you to rouse a prudent mind and deep thought friendly to the commons, who know how to defend your friends. For your inventiveness of mind comes for the public prosperity, delighting the commons⁶ with innumerable aids⁷ for life, showing what it is able to effect. It is time:⁸ for our state has need of some clever contrivance. Come, do you only accomplish⁹ what has never been done nor mentioned before as yet. For they hate, if they see the old things often. BLEP. Now about making innovations,² don't be alarmed; for to do this and to neglect what is ancient, is with us equivalent to another constitution.

PRAX. BLEP. If on seeing a girl any one should desire her and wish to lie with her, he will be able² to make presents by taking from these ; but he will enjoy a share of the common property by sleeping with her.

PRAX. But he will be permitted to sleep with her for nothing ; for I will make³ them in common for the men to lie with, and for any one that pleases to beget children.

BLEP. How then, if all shall go to the most beautiful of them and seek to lie with her ?

PRAX. The uglier and more flat-nosed women shall sit by the side of the beautiful ;⁴ and then if any desire her,⁵ he shall first lie with the ugly one.

BLEP. Then the nose of Lysicrates⁵ will now be as proud as that of the handsome men.

PRAX. But what occasion is there? for they will consider all those who are older than themselves in age to be their fathers.

BLEP. Therefore they will rightly and properly throttle every old man¹ one after another through ignorance; for even now, when they know their true father, they throttle him. What then? when he is unknown, how will they not then even dung upon him?

PRAX. But he who is standing by will not permit it. Formerly² they had no concern about other people's fathers, if any one beat them; whereas now, if any hear a father beaten, being alarmed lest any person should be beating his father, he will oppose those³ who do this.

BLEP. The rest you say not amiss. But if Epicurus were to come to me, or Leucolophas,⁴ and call me father, this now would be terrible to hear.

PRAX. A much more terrible thing, however, than this thing is——

BLEP. What?

PRAX. If Aristyllus⁵ were to kiss you, saying you were his father.

BLEP. He would suffer for it and howl.

PRAX. And you would smell of mint. But he was born before the decree was made, so there is no fear lest he kiss you.

BLEP. I should indeed have suffered⁶ a terrible thing. But who is to cultivate the land?

BLEP. But about garments, what will be your contrivance? For this also³ must be asked.⁴

PRAX. In the first place what you have at present will be at hand; and the rest we will weave.

BLEP. One thing further I ask: if one be cast⁵ in a suit before the magistrates at the suit of any one, from what source will he pay off this? For it is not right to pay it out of the common fund.

PRAX. But in the first place there shall not even be any suits.

BLEP. But how many this will ruin!

PRAX. I also make⁶ a decree for this. For on what account, you rogue, should there be any?

BLEP. By Apollo, for many reasons! in the first place, for one reason, I ween, if any one, being in debt, denies it.

PRAX. Whence⁷ then did the lender lend the money, when all things are in common? He is, I ween, convicted of theft.

BLEP. By Ceres, you instruct us well! Now let some one⁸ tell me this: whence shall those who beat people pay off *an action*⁹ for assault, when they insult people after a banquet? For I fancy you'll be at a loss about this.

BLEP. Then will they not even strip people by night?²

PRAX. Not, if you sleep—at home;³ nor, if you sleep abroad, as they used before. For all shall have subsistence. And if any one tries⁴ to strip a person, he shall give them of his own accord. For what occasion is there for him to resist? for he shall go and get another better than that from the common stock?

BLEP. Then will the men⁵ not even play at dice?

PRAX. Why, for what *stake*⁶ shall any one do this?

BLEP. What will you make our mode of life?

PRAX. Common to all. For I say I will make the city one house, having broken up⁷ all into one; so that they may go into each other's houses.

BLEP. But where will you serve up the dinner?

PRAX. I will make the law-courts and the porticoes⁸ wholly men's apartments.

BLEP. What use will the Bema be to you?

PRAX. I will set the mixers and the water-pots on it; and it shall be for the boys to sing of those who are brave in war, and of him, whoever⁹ has been cowardly, so that they¹⁰ may not dine, through shame.

PRAX. I will deposit them in the market-place; and then I will place all the people beside the statue of Harmodius and choose them by lot, until he who has drawn the lot departs joyfully, knowing in what letter he is to dine.² And *the crier*³ shall command those of Beta to follow to the royal⁴ portico to dine; and Theta to the portico next this;⁵ and those of Kappa to go to the flour-market.⁶

BLEP. That they may gobble up⁷ the flour?

PRAX. No, by Jove! but that they may dine there.

BLEP. But whoever⁸ has not the necessary⁹ letter drawn, according to which he is to dine, all will drive away.

PRAX. But it shall not be so with us. For we will supply all things to all in abundance; so that every one when he is drunk shall go home together with his chaplet,¹⁰ having taken his torch. 2ND CIT. Don't you know when we voted for those copper¹ coins?

1ST CIT. Aye, and that coinage was a loss to me. For I sold some bunches of grapes and went away with my mouth² full of copper coins. And then I went to the market-place for some barley-meal. Then, just as I was holding my bag under for the meal, the crier proclaimed that "henceforth no one take copper; for we use silver."

2ND CIT. And were we not³ all lately swearing that the state would have five hundred talents from the tax of one fortieth, which Euripides⁴ devised? and immediately every man was for plastering Euripides with gold.⁵ But as soon as on our examining⁶ it, it appeared to be "Jove's⁷ Corinth," and the measure did not suffice, every man again was for plastering Euripides with pitch.⁸

CRIER. O all ye citizens,¹—for so this is now,—come, hasten straight² to our Princess-President, in order that chance may point out to you, drawing lots man by man,³ where you shall dine; for the tables are piled up⁴ and furnished with all good things, and the couches are heaped with goatskins and carpets. They are mixing⁵ goblets; the female-perfumers are standing in order; the slices of salt-fish are boiling; they are spitting the hare's flesh; cakes⁶ are baking; chaplets are plaiting; sweetmeats⁷ are toasting; the youngest women are boiling pots⁸ of pea-soup; and Smoius amongst them with a Knight's uniform on is cleansing thoroughly the women's cups. And Geron⁹ comes with a cloak on and light sandals, laughing loudly with another youth; and his shoes lie uncared for, and his threadbare coat is thrown off.¹⁰ Wherefore come! for he who carries the barley-cake¹¹ is standing. Come, open your mouths! [Exit.]

2ND CIT. Therefore I will certainly go. For why do I keep standing here, when these things have been decreed by the state?

1ST CIT. Why, whither will you go, if you have not paid in your property?

2ND CIT. To dinner.

1ST CIT. Certainly not, if there be any sense in them, until you deliver in¹² your property.

1ST CIT. How, pray?²

2ND CIT. I assert that others will deliver in their property still later than I.

1ST CIT. But will you go to dinner notwithstanding?

2ND CIT. Why, what³ must I do? for it behoves those who have right understanding to assist the state to the best of their ability.

1ST OLD WOMAN. Why in the world are the men not come? it has been time this long while: for I am standing idle, painted over with white lead,³ and clad in a saffron-coloured robe, and humming a tune⁴ to myself, playing amorously, in order that I may catch⁵ some of them as he is passing by. 1ST OLD WOM. Yes; for you must obey our laws.

YOUNG MAN. But how, if a tribesman⁵ of mine, or one of my friends, comes and rescues me?

1ST OLD WOM. But no man is any longer authorized beyond a medimnus of corn.⁶

YOUNG MAN. But is there no swearing off?⁷

1ST OLD WOM. No; for there is no occasion for shuffling.⁸

YOUNG MAN. But I'll pretend to be a merchant.⁹

1ST OLD WOM. Aye, to your cost.¹⁰

YOUNG MAN. What then must I do?

1ST OLD WOM. Follow this way to my house.

YOUNG MAN. Why, is there a necessity for me to do this?

1ST OLD WOM. Aye, a Diomedean¹¹ necessity.

YOUNG MAN. Then first strew me some origanum¹² under-1ST OLD WOM. (sarcastically). Assuredly you will moreover buy me a chaplet² too!

YOUNG MAN. Yes, by Jove! if it be of the waxen³ sort; for I fancy you will immediately fall in pieces⁴ within.

YOUNG WOM. (suddenly coming out of her house). Whither are you dragging this man?

1ST OLD WOM. I am leading in mine own.

YOUNG WOM. Not discreetly: for he is not of the age for sleeping with you, being so young; since you might more fitly be his mother than his wife.—Wherefore, if you shall establish this law, you will fill the whole earth with Œdipuses.

1ST OLD WOM. O you all-abominable, you devised this argument through envy. But I'll be revenged on you. [Exit.]

YOUNG MAN. By Jove the preserver, you have obliged me, my darling, by having removed the old woman from me. Wherefore, in return for these good deeds, I will at night return you a kindness great and thick.⁵ [Young woman takes him by the arm.]

2ND OLD WOM. (suddenly coming up). Hollo you! whither are you dragging this man in violation of the law, when the written law orders him first to sleep with me?

YOUNG MAN. Ah me, miserable! Whence did you pop out,—the devil take⁶ you! For this pest is more abominable than that.

2ND OLD WOM. (trying to drag him away). Come this way!

YOUNG MAN (to the young woman). By no means suffer me to be dragged away by this old woman, I beseech you!

2ND OLD WOM. Follow this way quickly, my darling,² and don't chatter!

YOUNG MAN. Come then, permit me first to go to the necessary and recover my spirits, otherwise you'll see me presently making something yellow³ on the spot through fear.

2ND OLD WOM. Be of good courage! come! you shall ease yourself in the house.

YOUNG MAN. I fear lest I do even⁴ more than I wish. But I will put in two sufficient sureties.

2ND OLD WOM. Put me in no sureties!

3RD OLD WOM. (running up). Whither, whither are you going with her?

YOUNG MAN. I am not going, but am dragged. But many blessings on you, whoever you are,⁵ because you did not suffer me to be destroyed. [Catches sight of her for the first time.] O Hercules! O ye Pans!⁶ O ye Corybantes! O ye Dioscuri! this pest, again, is much more abominable than the other. But what in the world is this thing, I beseech you? 2ND OLD WOM. Nay, rather, this way.

3RD OLD WOM. Be assured that I will never let you go.

2ND OLD WOM. Neither, indeed, will I.

YOUNG MAN. You will tear me in pieces, the devil take you!¹

2ND OLD WOM. For you ought to follow me in conformity with the law.

3RD OLD WOM. Not if another old woman still uglier appear.

YOUNG MAN. Come, if I first perish miserably through you, how shall I come to that beautiful one?

3RD OLD WOM. Do you look to that yourself: but this you must do.

YOUNG MAN. Then by lying with which of you first shall I be set free?

2ND OLD WOM. Don't you know? you must come this way.

YOUNG MAN. Then let this one let me go.

YOUNG MAN. You would wear out those on board by dragging them.

It was provided by the decree of Cannonus, that where there were many criminals charged with the same offence, each should be tried separately. The young man says the necessity is imposed upon him according to the decree of Cannonus,—not κρίνειν δίχα ἕκαστον, but βινεῖν, permolere." Brunch.

of Cannonus; I must lie with you divided into two.¹ How then shall I be able to row² both double-handed?

2ND OLD WOM. Very well, when you shall have eaten a pot of onions.³

YOUNG MAN. Ah me, miserable! I am now dragged close to the door. [The 2nd old woman here attempts to drag him into her house and exclude the 3rd old woman.]

3RD OLD WOM. (to the 2nd old woman). But it shall be no⁴ advantage to you; for I will rush in along with you.⁵

YOUNG MAN. Nay, do not, by the gods!⁶ for it is better to be afflicted with one than two evils.

3RD OLD WOM. Yea, by Hecate! whether you wish it or no.⁷

YOUNG MAN (to the audience). O thrice-unlucky, if I must lie with an ugly old woman the whole night and the whole day; and then, again, as soon as I am freed from her, with a Phryne,⁸ who has a flask⁹ on her jaws. Am I not wretched? Nay, rather, by Jove¹⁰ the Preserver, a most wretched man, and unfortunate, who¹¹ must swim with such wild beasts.

¹ Aristophanes evidently distorts the sense of this word from the sense it bears in the above decree. "Whereas in the decree it ran, that the defendants should διαλεημένους ἀπολογεῖσθαι, the young man says that he διαλεημένον, in diversa diductum, as it were, must serve the two old women at the same time." Brunck. This is confirmed by the δικωπεῖν ἀμφοτέρας of the next line, for ἀμφοτέρας can only signify binas simul; though vs. 1092 seems to oppose this view. THE ARGUMENT

"THE Plutus, according to an indubitable tradition, was twice brought upon the stage; first, in the year 408, B. C., in the Archonship of Diocles, and then, in the year 388, B. C., in the Archonship of Antipater. In its second representation, the Plutus contended successfully against the "Lacedæmonians" of Nicochares, the "Admetus" of Aristomenes, the "Adonis" of Nicophon, and the "Pasiphaë" of Alcæus. The Greek Scholiasts frequently assert that our present text is the first Plutus. This view is in decided contradiction to the play itself, which contains numerous allusions to the times of the Archon Antipater. The opinion of later philologists, which has been sanctioned by the great authority of Hemsterhuis, represents our present text as a riffacimento of the two editions. But recent investigations have completely refuted this position. We therefore may confidently assume that the Plutus we have before us is just in the state in which Aristophanes in the latter years of his life brought it on the stage." Droysen. See the Scholiast on vs. 173. The argument is simply this:—Chremylus, a poor, but just man, consults the Delphic oracle about his son, whether he ought not to be instructed in injustice and knavery, and the other arts whereby worldly men acquired riches. The god answered him nothing plainly, but merely told him he was to follow whomsoever he should first light upon on leaving the temple. The first person he meets with is a blind old man. This turns out to be Plutus, the god of riches, whom Jupiter had deprived of his eyesight in order that he might no longer distinguish between the just and the unjust. By the help of Æsculapius, Plutus is restored to the use of his eyes. Whereupon all the just are made rich, and the unjust reduced to indigence. In an artistic point of view, the Plutus must rank as by far the lowest of the existing works of Aristophanes. In its absence of personal interest, and its sparingness of personal satire, it approximates more nearly to a whimsical allegory than a proper comedy.

CHREMYLUS and his servant CARIO.

CARIO. How troublesome¹ a thing it is, O Jupiter and ye gods, to be the slave of a crazy master! For if the servant should happen to have given the best advice, and it should seem fit to his master not to do this, it must be that the servant share the evils;² for fortune suffers not the natural owner to be master of his person, but the purchaser. And so much for this.³ But Loxias⁴ who prophesies from his tripod of beaten gold I censure with this just censure, because being a physician and a clever soothsayer, as they say, he has sent away my master melancholy-mad,⁵ who is following behind⁶ a blind man, acting contrary to what it became him to do; for we who see lead the blind; whereas he follows him, and compels me besides; and that too without even⁷ answering a syllable⁸ at all. Therefore it is not possible for me to hold my tongue, unless you tell me, master, for what in the world we are following this man, but I'll give you trouble; for you will not beat¹ me while I wear the chaplet.

CHR. No, by Jove, but if you trouble me in any way, I'll do it when I have taken away your chaplet, that you may grieve the more.

CA. Nonsense! for I will not cease until you tell me who in the world this is; for I ask it, being exceedingly well² disposed to you.

CHR. Well then, I will not hide it from you, for I do believe you to be the most faithful of my domestics, and—the arrantest thief.³ I, though a religious and just man, was unprosperous and poor.

CA. In truth I know it.

CHR. While others, sacrilegious persons, demagogues, and informers, and villains, were rich.

CA. What then did Phœbus proclaim from amongst his chaplets?²

CHR. You shall hear: for the god told me this plainly; whomsoever I should first meet with³ on going out,⁴ him he bid me⁵ never let go, but prevail on him to accompany me home.

CA. And whom then did you first meet with?

CHR. With this man.

CA. Then did you not understand the meaning of the god, when it directed you, O most stupid, in the plainest terms, to educate⁶ your son after the fashion of the country?

CHR. By what⁷ do you judge of this?

CA. It is evident that even a blind man fancies he knows this,⁸ that it is very advantageous to practise no virtue in these times.

CHR. It is not possible that the oracle inclines to this,⁹ but to something else of greater moment. But if this fellow tell us who in the world he is, and on account of what, and in want of what he came hither with us, we might understand what our oracle¹⁰ means.

PLU. What do you say? do they sacrifice to him through me?

CHR. Certainly. And, by Jupiter, if there be any thing magnificent and beautiful or agreeable to men,² it is through you: for all things are subservient³ to riches.

Pamphilus had been sent at this time to Ægina as general. Being closely hemmed in by the Spartans, he prayed for assistance. The expense of such an expedition hindered the carrying out of the decree which had been made for his relief, and it was not till five months afterwards that assistance came to him.” Droysen.

³ Of Philonides little is known, except that he was a native of Melita, and a rich and profligate character. Athenæus (xiii. p. 592) says expressly that Ναῖς ought to be read in place of Λαῖς in this passage (ὑπακρίων Ναῖς, καὶ οὐ Λαῖς); and from Lysias (c. Philonidem, Frâgm. 130, p. 33, ed. Reiske) we learn that Philonides' mistress was Nais, and not Lais, and that the relations of Nais employed Lysias to conduct a prosecution against him for using her ill. The commentators state that Lais would at this time be only fourteen years of age. But chronological arguments are of little avail with our present text of the Plutus, as what we now possess is merely a rifacimento of the two editions.

CA. Of lentil-broth.²

CHR. But of you³ no one has ever at any time been sated. But if any one get thirteen talents, so much the more does he desire to get sixteen. And if he accomplish this, he wishes for forty, or he says his life is not worth⁴ living.

PLU. In truth you appear to me to speak exceedingly well; but one thing only I fear.

CHR. Tell us, what about.

PLU. How I shall become master of this power which⁵ you say I have.

CHR. Yes, by Jove, you shall! But even all say¹ that wealth is a most² timid thing.

PLU. By no means; but some housebreaker has calumniated me. For having once crept into the³ house, he was not able to get any thing, having found every thing locked up; so then he called my forethought cowardice.

CHR. Let nothing trouble you⁴ now; for if you be a zealous man yourself in the business, I'll make you more sharp-sighted than Lynceus.

PLU. How then will you be able to do this, mortal as you are?

CHR. I have some good hope from what Phoebus himself told me, having shaken the Pythian laurel.

PLU. And was he then privy to this?

CHR. Certainly.

PLU. Take care!

CHR. Do not be at all concerned, my good sir; for I, be well assured of this, will accomplish this myself, even if I must die for it.

CA. And I too, if you wish it.

CHR. And many others⁵ will be our allies, as many as had no bread, though they were just.

PLU. Deary me! you tell us of miserable allies.

CHR. Not so, if they become rich again as before. But do you [to Cario] go and run quickly——

CA. What am I to do? Tell me.

CHR. Call my fellow-labourers,—and you will probab'y find them working hard in the fields,—that each, being present here, may share an equal portion with us of this Plutus.

CA. Well now, I am going. But let some one of the servants from within take and carry in this small bit of meat.⁶

CHR. (taking the meat). This shall be my care: but run quickly.¹ [Exit Cario.] And do you, O Plutus, most excellent of all gods, go in this way with me; for this is² the house which you must to-day fill with riches, by fair means or by foul.³

PLU. But, by the gods, I am exceedingly loth to be always going into other people's houses. For I never at any time got any good from it.⁴ For if I chance to go into the house of a miser, he immediately buries⁵ me deep in the earth: and if any good man, his friend, come to him asking to get some small sum of money, he denies that he has ever at any time even seen me. But if I chance to go into the house of a mad fellow, I am exposed to harlots and dice and driven out of doors naked in a moment of time.⁶

CHR. Yes; for you never at any time met with⁷ a moderate man. But I am somehow always of this character.⁸ For I both take pleasure in saving, as never man did, and again in spending,⁹ whenever there is occasion for it. But let us go in; for I wish both my wife to see you¹⁰ and my only son, whom I love most of all—next to you.

PLU. I believe you.

[Exeunt Chremylus and Plutus.]

CA. Oh you who have often eaten of the same thyme¹ with my master, his friends, and fellow-tribesmen, and lovers of labour, come, make haste, hurry, since the time does not admit delay, but it is at the very crisis at which you ought be present² and lend your aid.

CA. Have I not then, I ween, been telling you this long while? It is you yourself that don't hear. For my master says that you shall all of you live pleasantly, freed from your dreary and unpleasant mode of life.

CHO. But what, pray, and whence, is this thing which he speaks of?

CA. He has come hither with a certain old man, ye wretches, who is filthy, crooked, miserable, wrinkled, bald, and toothless; and, by heaven, I think he is circumcised,⁵ too.

³ The account of Polyphemus, as given in the Odyssey, is well known. In the time of Dionysius, the tyrant of Syracuse, there was living in that city a courtesan, named Galatea, of whom the king was enamoured; but being jealous of Philoxenus of Cythera, the dithyrambic poet, also an admirer of his mistress, he banished him to the stone quarries, whereupon Philoxenus revenged himself by a satirical poem, entitled, "The Loves of the Cyclops," which is mentioned by Aristotle, in his treatise on Poetry. In this he represented Dionysius under the character of Polyphemus. The word threttanelo has no meaning in itself, but was coined by Philoxenus to imitate the sound of the Cyclops' cithara.

CHO. Therefore we, having caught you, the Circe, who mixed up the drugs and bewitched and defiled our companions, imitating for delight the son of Laertes, will hang you up² by your testicles, and besmear your nostrils with dung, like a goat's; while you, gaping like³ Aristyllus, shall say, "Follow, like swine, your mother."

CA. But come now, do you now have done with your jests and turn yourselves into another shape;⁴ while I should like now to go unknown to my master and take some bread and meat and eat it, and so afterwards to join in the work. [Exit Cario.]

CHR. Well now, I see also Blepsidemus here approaching: and 'tis plain⁴ from his gait and haste that he has heard something of the affair. [Enter Blepsidemus.]

BL. (talking to himself). What then can the affair be? whence and in what way has Chremylus suddenly become rich? I don't believe it: and yet, by Hercules, there was much talk among those who sat in the barbers' shops,⁵ that the man has suddenly become wealthy. But this very thing is marvellous to me, that he, being well off, sends for his friends. In truth he does not⁶ do a thing fashionable in the country.

CHR. (aside). Well then, by the gods, I'll tell him, without concealing any thing.⁷ O Blepsidemus, we are better off than yesterday, so that it is permitted you to share; for you are of the number of my friends.⁸

² δεινὸν γὰρ (ἀν εἶη), εἰ ὥστιζόμεσθα, παρείην δέ. ὥστιζόμεσθα is an objective actuality, whereas παρείην (the real protasis to δεινὸν ἀν εἶη) is a merely supposed case. See Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 54, 12, obs. 8. Porson (Phœn. vs. 91) thus notices this construction: "Diversos modos jungit Euripides, quoniam ad tempora diversa spectant. . . . Similiter modus variavit Aristophanes, Plut. 310, δεινὸν γὰρ — παρείην, ubi alterum (τὸ ὥστιζέσθαι) revera quotidie fiebat; alterum vero (τὸ παρίεναι τὸν Πλούτον) ex futuri temporis eventu pendeat." Cf. Aves, 1225-7.

³ For this use of the infinitive, see Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 55, 3, obs. 21. The accusative Πλούτον is generally made to depend on λαβεῖν, but Porson (l. c.) very properly construes it with παρείην.

POV. Aye, you who also say that Dionysius is like Thrasybulus. But my mode of life is not thus circumstanced, no, by Jove, nor will it.¹ For a beggar's mode of life, which you describe, is to live possessed of nothing; but that of a poor man to live sparingly, and attentive to his work; and not to have any superfluity, nor yet, however, to have a deficiency.

CHR. O Ceres! how blessed is his life which² you have set forth, if after sparing and toiling he shall leave behind him not even wherewith to be buried.³

POV. You are trying to scoff at and ridicule me, heedless of being earnest, not knowing that I render men better both in mind and body than Plutus⁴ does. For with him⁵ they are gouty in their feet, and pot-bellied, and thick-legged, and extravagantly fat; but with me they are thin and slender, and grievous to their foes.

CHR. For, no doubt,⁶ you bring about the slenderness for them by hunger.

POV. Now therefore I will discourse to you respecting sobriety, and will demonstrate that orderly behaviour dwells with me, but that riotousness belongs to Plutus.

CHR. In sooth it is very orderly to steal and to dig through walls.

BL. Yes, by Jove;⁷ how is it not orderly, if he must escape notice?

POV. Consider therefore the orators in the states, how, when they are poor, they are just towards the people and the state; but when they have become rich out of the public purse, they immediately become unjust, and plot against the commons, and make war upon the democracy.

CHR. Well, you don't speak falsely in any of these things, although¹ you are exceedingly slanderous. But you shall suffer none the less—don't pride² yourself on this—because you seek to convince us of this, that poverty is better than riches.

POV. And you too are not yet able to refute me about this, but talk nonsense and flap your wings.

CHR. Why, how is it that all shun you?

POV. Because I make them better. But you may see it best in³ children; for they shun their fathers who are very well-disposed towards them. So difficult a matter is it to distinguish what is right.

CHR. You will say then⁴ that Jupiter does not correctly distinguish what is best; for he too has wealth.⁵

BL. And despatches⁶ her to us.

POV. Nay, O you who are both of you purblind in your minds with old-fashioned prejudices, Jupiter is certainly poor; and I will now teach you this clearly. For if he was rich, how would he, when celebrating the Olympic games himself, where he assembles all the Greeks every fifth year, have proclaimed as conquerors the victorious athletes, having crowned them with a chaplet of wild olive?⁷ And yet he ought⁸ rather to crown them with gold, if he was rich?

POV. You seek to fix upon him a much more disgraceful thing than poverty, if he, though rich, be so stingy and avaricious.

CHR. Well, may Jupiter utterly destroy you, having crowned you with a chaplet of wild olive!

POV. To think of your daring² to contradict me, that your blessings are not through poverty!

CHR. One may learn this from Hecate, whether to be rich or to suffer hunger is better. For she says that those who have property and are wealthy send a dinner every month, while the poor people snatch it away before³ one has set it down. But go and be hanged,⁴ and don't mutter any thing more whatever. For you shall not convince me, even if you should convince me.⁵

CHR. This cursed wretch is gone. But let you and me convey the god as soon as possible to the temple of Æsculapius to put him to bed in it.²

CA. 'Tis your lot to rejoice, whether you wish it or no.

CHO. I will loudly praise Æsculapius blest in his children, and³ a great light to mortals. [Enter wife of Chremylus.]

WIFE. What in the world means the shout? Is some good news announced? for, longing for this, I have been sitting in the house this long while, waiting for this fellow.

CA. Quickly, quickly, bring wine, mistress, in order that you yourself also may drink,—and you are very fond⁴ of doing it, for I bring you all blessings in a lump.

WIFE. Why, where are they?

CA. You will soon learn by what is said.

WIFE. Be quick and finish then some time⁵ or other what you are for saying.

WIFE. By Jupiter, then he was fortunate, an old man washed in the cold sea!

CA. Then we went to the temple of the god. And when our wafers and preparatory sacrifices were offered on the altar, and our cake in the flame of Vulcan,³ we laid Plutus on a couch, as was proper, while each of us began putting his mattress in order.

WIFE. And were there any others also in need of the god?

CA. Yes, there was one Neoclides,⁴ who is indeed blind, but out-does⁵ in stealing those who see: and many others having all sorts of diseases. But when the sacrist⁶ of the god put out the lamps and ordered us to sleep, telling us if any one should hear a noise, he must be silent, we all laid down in an orderly manner. And I could not sleep; but a pot of porridge which was lying a little way off from the head of an old woman strongly affected me, towards which I desired exceedingly to creep. Then on looking up I see the priest snatching away⁷ the cakes and dried figs from the sacred table. And after this he went round to all the altars round about, if any where a cake might be left; and then he consecrated these—into a sack.⁸ And I, supposing⁹ there was great piety in the thing, got up towards the pot of porridge.

WIFE. O most daring¹ of men, were you not afraid of the god?

CA. Yes, by the gods, lest he might get to the pot before me, with his garlands on; for his priest taught me that beforehand.² But the old woman, when she heard my noise, stretched forth³ her hand; and then I hissed and seized it with my teeth, as if I were an Æsculapian⁴ snake. But she immediately drew back her hand again, and lay down, having wrapped herself up quietly, farting for fear more offensively than a weasel. And then I swallowed greedily the greater part of the porridge:⁵ and then, when I was full, I rested.

WIFE. But did not the god come to you?

CA. Not yet. And after this now I did a very laughable thing indeed; for as he was approaching, I farted very loudly; for my belly⁶ had been blown out.

WIFE. Doubtless he was immediately disgusted at you on account of this.

CA. No; but a certain Iaso,⁷ who was following along with him, blushed a little, and Panacea took hold of her nose and turned away her head; for I fart no frankincense.

WIFE. Of stone?²

CA. No, by Jove, certainly not, not³ the little chest.

WIFE. But how did you see, the devil take⁴ you! who say you were wrapped up?

CA. Through my little threadbare cloak; for, by Jupiter,⁵ it has⁶ no few holes. First of all he began to pound up a plaster⁷ for Neoclides, having thrown in three heads of Tenian⁸ garlic. Then he beat them up in the mortar, mixing⁹ along with them gum and squill; and then he moistened it with Sphettian¹⁰ vinegar, and spread it over, having turned his eyelids inside out, that he might be pained the more. After this he sat down beside Plutus:¹ and first he handled his head, and then he took a clean napkin and wiped his eyelids all round: and Panacea covered his head and the whole of his face with a purple cloth. Then the god whistled; then two snakes rushed forth from the temple, prodigious in size.²

WIFE. O ye friendly gods!

CA. And these two gently crept under³ the purple cloth and began to lick his eyelids all round, as it appeared to me. And before you could have drank up ten half-pints of wine, mistress, Plutus was standing up having the use of his eyes: and I clapped my hands for joy, and began to wake my master. But the god immediately took himself⁴ out of sight, and the snakes took themselves into the temple; while those who were lying in bed near him, you can't think how⁵ they began embracing Plutus, and kept awake the whole night, until day dawned. CHR. Ha! who is this who approaches?

J. M. A man, formerly wretched, but now prosperous.

CHR. It is evident that you are one of the good, as it appears.

J. M. Most certainly.

CHR. Then, what do you want?

J. M. I have come to the god: for he is the author of great blessings to me. For having received a considerable property from my father, I used to assist those of my friends⁴ who were in want, thinking it to be useful for life.⁵

CHR. And also³ laughed at you, I well know.

J. M. Just so. For the dearth⁴ which was in my vessels ruined me.

CHR. But not now.

J. M. Wherefore with good reason I have come hither to the god, to offer up my vows.

CHR. But what has the threadbare cloak to do with the god,⁵ which this servant is carrying in your retinue?⁶ tell me.

J. M. This also I am coming to the god to dedicate.

CHR. Were you initiated,⁷ then, in the Great Mysteries in it?

CHR. You have come with very pretty¹ presents for the god. [Enter an informer attended by his witness.]

INF. Ah me, unhappy! How I am undone, miserable man, and thrice unhappy,² and four times, and five times, and twelve times, and ten thousand times! alas! alas! with so powerful³ a fate have I been mingled.

CHR. O Apollo, averter of evil, and ye friendly gods! what in the world is the misfortune which the man has suffered?

INF. Why, have I not now suffered shocking things, who have lost every thing out of my house through this god, who shall be blind again, unless law-suits be wanting.

J. M. I imagine I pretty nearly see into the matter; for a man is approaching who is badly off; and he seems to be of the bad stamp.⁴

CHR. By Jupiter, then, he is rightly⁵ ruined.

INF. Where, where is this fellow who singly promised he would immediately make us all rich, if he were to recover his sight again⁶ as before? On the contrary, he has⁷ ruined some much more.

CHR. And whom, pray, has he treated thus?

• INF. Me here.

CHR. Were you of the number of the wicked ones and housebreakers?

INF. You cannot be too² quick in going speedily to the market-place ; for you must there be racked upon the wheel and declare your villanies.³

CA. Then you'll suffer for it.

J. M. By Jupiter the Preserver, this god is of great value to all the Greeks, if he shall utterly destroy the informers, the wretches,⁴ in a wretched way.⁵

INF. Ah me, miserable ! Are you also laughing at me, who are an accomplice ? for whence have you got this garment ? But yesterday I saw you with a threadbare cloak on.

J. M. I care nothing for you : for see ! I wear this ring,⁶ having purchased it from Eudemus⁷ for a drachma.

CHR. But it is not possible to wear one against an informer's⁸ bite.

INF. Is not this great insolence ? You mock me, but you have not stated what you are doing here. For you are here for no good.

CHR. Do you smell any thing,⁵ you poor wretch?

INF. Why, does it not concern me,⁴ you booby, to benefit my own city as far as I be able?

CHR. Then is to be a meddling busybody to benefit it?

INF. Nay, rather, to aid the established⁵ laws, and, if any one do wrong, not to permit it.

CHR. Does not the state, then, purposely appoint judges to preside?

INF. But who is the accuser?

CHR. Any one who pleases.

INF. Then I am he; so that the affairs of the state have devolved on me.

CHR. Then, by Jove, it has a sorry patron. But would you not prefer that,⁶ to keep quiet and live idle?

INF. Nay, you are describing the life of a sheep, if there shall appear no amusement in life.

CHR. And would you not learn better?

INF. Not even if you were to give⁷ me Plutus himself, and the silphium of Battus.⁸

INF. (to his witness). Do you see what he is doing? I call you to witness this.² [His witness runs off.]

CHR. But the witness whom³ you brought is running away.

INF. Ah me, I have been caught alone.

CA. Do you bawl now?

INF. Ah me, again and⁴ again!

CA. Do you [to the Just Man] give me your threadbare cloak, that I may put it on this informer.

J. M. Certainly not; for it has been this long while consecrated to Plutus.

CA. Where then will it be better dedicated than around a knavish man and house-breaker? But Plutus it is fitting to adorn with grand dresses.

J. M. But what shall one make of the shoes? tell me.

CA. These also I will instantly nail fast to this man's forehead, as if to a wild⁵ olive.

INF. I'll begone; for I perceive I am much weaker than you. But if I find a comrade, even of fig-tree wood,⁶ I will to-day make this powerful god give me satisfaction, because he singly and alone is manifestly putting down the democracy, having neither prevailed upon the Senate of the citizens nor the Assembly.

OLD WOM. Come then, let me summon⁸ some one of those within. [Enter Chremylus.]

CHR. Certainly not;⁹ for I myself have come out. But you must tell me for what in particular you have come.

OLD WOM. O dearest sir, I have suffered dreadful and unjust things: for since what time this god began¹⁰ to have the use of his eyes, he has made my life to be insupportable.¹¹

OLD WOM. You are mocking me ; but I burn with love,¹ unhappy woman.

CHR. Will you not then quickly tell me what is your love ?

OLD WOM. Hear then ! I had a dear youth, poor, indeed, but, for the rest,² good looking, and handsome, and good. For if I wanted anything, he used to perform every thing for me decently and well, while I assisted him in all his wants in the same manner.

CHR. But what was it he especially wanted of you, on each occasion ?

OLD WOM. Not much ; for he was marvellously respectful to me. But he used to ask for³ twenty drachmæ of silver for a mantle, and eight for shoes ; and he used to entreat me to purchase a tunic⁴ for his sisters, and a little mantle for his mother ; and he used to beg for four medimni of wheat.

CHR. Certainly, by Apollo, this is not much which⁵ you have mentioned ; but it is evident that he respected you.

OLD WOM. And these moreover he said he asked of me, not, on account of lewdness,⁶ but for affection, that while wearing my mantle, he might think on⁷ me.

Suid. ii. p. 328) translates it, "The young man was very obliging." This I do not understand. For τίς, see note on Aves, 924.

OLD WOM. No, by Jupiter, but merely through a desire to hear my voice.

CHR. Nay, rather, for the sake of getting something.

OLD WOM. And, by Jove, if he perceived me afflicted, he used to call me coaxingly his little duck and little dove.

CHR. And then, perhaps, he used to ask¹ you for money for shoes.

OLD WOM. And when any one looked at me when riding in my carriage at the Great Mysteries, I was beaten on account of this the whole day; so very jealous was the young man.²

CHR. For he took pleasure, as it seems, in eating alone.

OLD WOM. And he said I had very beautiful³ hands.

CHR. Aye, whenever they offered twenty drachmæ.⁴

OLD WOM. And he said I smelt⁵ sweet in my skin—

CHR. Aye, like enough, by Jove, if you poured in Thasian⁶ wine for him.

OLD WOM. And that I had a gentle and beautiful look.⁷

CHR. The man was no fool, but knew how to devour the substance of a lustful old woman.

OLD WOM. In this therefore, O dear sir, the god does not act rightly, who professes to succour whoever happen to be wronged.⁸

CHR. Why, what must he do?⁹ speak, and it shall be done immediately.¹⁰

OLD WOM. It is just, by Jove, to compel him who has

CHR. Did he not then repay you every night?

OLD WOM. But he said he would never desert me while I lived.

CHR. Aye, rightly; but now¹ he thinks you no longer alive.

OLD WOM. For I am wasting away through grief, O dearest friend.

CHR. No, but you have rotted away, as it appears² to me.

OLD WOM. Indeed, then, you might draw me through a ring.³

CHR. Yes, if the ring were the hoop of a sieve.

OLD WOM. Well now, see! here's the youth approaching,⁴ whom I have been accusing this long while; and he seems to be going to a revel.

CHR. He appears so: at least he is certainly coming with a chaplet and a torch.⁵ [Enter a young man with a lighted torch in his hand and followed by a band of revellers.]

YOU. I salute you.

OLD WOM. (to Chremylus). What says he?

YOU. My ancient sweetheart, by heaven, you have quickly become gray.

OLD WOM. Unhappy me, for the insult with which⁶ I am insulted!

YOU. (holding the torch close to her face). O Sea-Poseidon² and ye elderly gods, how many wrinkles³ she has in her face!

OLD WOM. Ah! ah! don't bring the torch near me!

CHR. Upon my word she says rightly; for if only a single spark catch her, it will burn her like an old harvest-wreath.

YOU. Will you play with me for a⁴ while?

OLD WOM. Where, wretch?

YOU. Here, having taken some nuts.

OLD WOM. What game?

YOU. How many teeth⁵ you have.

CHR. Come, I also will have a guess; for she has three, perhaps, or four.

YOU. Pay up! for she carries only one grinder.

CA. Tell me, what's the matter?

MER. Jupiter, you rascal, intends to mix you up in the same bowl and cast you all together into the Barathrum.

CA. The tongue² is given to the herald of these tidings. But on what account, pray, does he purpose to do this to us?

MER. Because you have done the most dreadful of all deeds. For since what time Plutus began to have the use of his eyes as before,³ no one any longer offers to us gods either⁴ frankincense, or laurel, or barley-cake, or victim, or any thing else.

CA. No, by Jupiter, nor will he offer them. For you took bad care of us aforetime.⁵

MER. And for the other gods I care less; but I am undone, and am ruined.

CA. You're wise.

MER. For formerly I used to enjoy all good things⁶ in the female innkeepers' shops as soon as it was morning, wine-cake, honey, dried figs, as many as 'tis fitting that Mercury

CA. For you had not an equal share⁴ of the blows with me, whenever I was caught in any knavery.

MER. Don't bear malice,⁵ if you have got possession of Phyle; but, by the gods, receive me as a fellow-inmate.

CA. Then will you abandon the gods and stay here?

MER. Yes; for your condition is much better.

CA. How then? do you think desertion a fine thing?

MER. Yes; "for his country is every country, wherever a man is well off."⁶

CA. What use then would you be to us, if you were here?

MER. Post me beside the door as turnkey.

CA. What a good thing it is to have many² surnames! for this fellow has found out a scant living for himself by this means. No wonder all the judges often seek eagerly to be inscribed in many letters.³

MER. Then shall I go in upon these terms?

CA. Aye, and go yourself to the well and wash⁴ the puddings, that you may immediately be thought to be serviceable. [Exeunt Mercury and Cario.]

PRIEST OF JUPITER (entering hastily). Who can tell me for certain where Chremylus is? [Enter Chremylus.]

CHR. What is the matter, my good sir?

PRIEST. Why, what else but⁵ bad? For since what time this Plutus began to have the use of his eyes, I perish with hunger. For I have nothing to eat; and that too, though I am the priest⁶ of Jupiter the Preserver.

CHR. Oh! by the gods, what is the cause?

PRIEST. No one deigns to sacrifice any longer.

CHR. On what account?

PRIEST. Because they are all rich. And yet, at that time, when they had nothing, the one, a merchant, used⁷ to come and sacrifice some victim for his safety; and some other one, because he had been acquitted on his trial; and some other one used to sacrifice with favourable omens, and invite me too, the priest. PRIEST. Then you tell me all good news.

CHR. We will therefore immediately establish—but⁷ stay here—Plutus where he was before established, always guarding the inner cell⁸ of the goddess. But let some one give me out here⁹ lighted torches, that you may hold them and go before the god.

ACHARN. 430. This ought to have been translated, "I know a man, Telephus the Mysian." See Bernhardt, W. S. p. 51.

ACHARN. 951, πρὸς πάντα συκοφάντην. The correct construction is that mentioned in the note on the passage. See note on Thesm. 532.

EQUIT. 1080. This ought to have been translated, "Hear the oracle which he ordered you to avoid, viz. Cyllene." Κυλλήνην is in apposition to ὃν χρησμόν. See Bernhardt, W. S. p. 55.

"EQUIT. 1376, ἃ στωμυλεῖται, sie mögen schwatzen bei Gelegenheit." Bernhardt.

NUB. 178, διαβήτην λαβών. This ought to have been translated, "Having taken it for a compass." See note on Plut. 314.

"NUB. 179, ἐκ τῆς παλαίστρας φοιμάτων, das zu denkende Gewand in der vorausgesetzten Palästra." Bernhardt.

VESP. 585. The correct ordo is, εἰπόντες τῇ διαθήκῃ μακρὰ κλάειν τὴν κεφαλὴν, and τὴν κεφαλὴν is the Accusativus Respectus after κλάειν, as I have rightly shown in the note on Plut. 612. For the gross error in the text, I was indebted to Bothe's edition, whose worthless book it was my good fortune to be without during the other plays.

"VESP. 933, κλέπτον τὸ χρήμα τάνδρως, der ganze Kerl ist Dieberei." Bernhardt.

AVES. 13 οὐκ τῶν ὀρνέων Φιλοκράτης. This ought to have been translated, "Philocrates of the poultry-market." See Bernhardt, W. S. p. 228, and note on Lys. 557.

AVES, 293. "Zweideutig Aristophanes Av. 293, ἐπὶ λόφων οἰκοῦσιν, mit Büschen." Bernhardt.

AVES, 652. The view of the construction taken in the note is remarkably confirmed by the following passage: Xenoph. Cyrop. ii. 1, 5, τοὺς μέντοι Ἕλληνας τοὺς ἐν τῇ Ἀσίᾳ οἰκοῦντας οὐδὲν πω σαφὲς λέγεται, εἰ ἔπονται. The accusative in both of these passages is an example of Accusativus de quo; for which, see note on Plut. 33.

AVES, 1406. The translation given in the text is undoubtedly the only correct one. See Bernhardt, W. S. p. 332.

LYS. 391. The examples cited in the note are nihil ad rem. The position of the article shows that ὁ μὴ ὤρασι is attributive (= the rascally Demonstratus), and cannot be taken as an imprecation. See Bernhardt, W. S. p. 81, and p. 95.

THESM. 394, τὰς οὐδὲν ὑγιές. See Bernhardt, W. S. p. 323.

RAN. 207, βατράχων κύκνων. This ought to have been translated, "frog-swans," after the analogy of the constructions given in the note on Aves, 1154. Cf. Krüger, Gr. Gr. § 57, 1, obs. 1. So Aves, 1059, κάμηλον ἀμνόν, a camel-lamb. Ibid. 169, ἄνθρωπος ὄρνις, a man-bird. See Bernhardt, W. S. p. 50.

RAN. 251. Mr. Mitchell's interpretation is the only correct one. • See Bernhardt, W. S. p. 256.

'A fascinating little edition.'—Notes and Queries.

'A cheap, very comely, and altogether desirable edition.'—Westminster Gazette.

But a few years ago such volumes would have been deemed worthy to be considered éditions de luxe. To-day, the low price at which they are offered to the public alone prevents them being so regarded.'—Studio.

'Handy in shape and ~~the~~ wonderfully cheap, beautifully printed from the Cambridge text, and illustrated quaintly yet admirably by Mr. Byam Shaw, we have nothing but praise for it. No one who wants a good and convenient Shakespeare—without excursions, discursions, or even too many notes—can do better, in our opinion, than subscribe to this issue: which is saying a good deal in these days of cheap reprints.'—Vanity Fair.

'What we like about these elegant booklets is the attention that has been paid to the paper, as well as to the print and decoration; such stout laid paper will last for ages. On this account alone, the 'Chiswick' should easily be first among pocket Shakespeares.'—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Best Practical Working Dictionary of the English Language.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY.

2348 PAGES. 5000 ILLUSTRATIONS.

NEW EDITION, REVISED THROUGHOUT WITH A NEW SUPPLEMENT OF 25,000 ADDITIONAL WORDS AND PHRASES.

The Appendices comprise a Pronouncing Gazetteer of the World, Vocabularies of Scripture, Greek, Latin, and English Proper Names, a Dictionary of the Noted Names of Fiction, a Brief History of the English Language, a Dictionary of Foreign Quotations, Words, Phrases, Proverbs, &c., a Biographical Dictionary with 10,000 names, &c., &c.

Dr. MURRAY, Editor of the 'Oxford English Dictionary,' says:—"In this its latest form, and with its large Supplement and numerous appendices, it is a wonderful volume, which well maintains its ground against all rivals on its own lines. The 'definitions,' or more properly, 'explanations of meaning' in 'Webster's' have always struck me as particularly terse and well-put; and it is hard to see how anything better could be done within the limits."

Professor JOSEPH WRIGHT, M.A., Ph.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Editor of the 'English Dialect Dictionary,' says:—"The new edition of 'Webster's International Dictionary' is undoubtedly the most useful and reliable work of its kind in any country. No one who has not examined the work carefully would believe that such a vast amount of lexicographical information could possibly be found within so small a compass."

Professor A. H. SAYCE, LL.D., D.D., says:—"It is indeed a marvellous work; it is difficult to conceive of a Dictionary more exhaustive and complete. Everything is in it—not only what we might expect to find in such a work, but also what few of us would ever have thought of looking for."

Rev. JOSEPH WOOD, D.D., Head Master of Harrow, says:—"I have always thought very highly of its merits. Indeed, I consider it to be far the most accurate English Dictionary in existence, and much more reliable than the 'Century.' For daily and hourly reference, 'Webster' seems to me unrivalled."
