Introductory note

The Project. It cannot be denied that in India very little care and attention have been paid in preserving and utilising the valuable materials of learning and useful knowledge. It is a pity that such materials are lying scattered all over India beyond the knowledge of inquisitive learners. This humble endeavour is to bring to the notice of everyone, what materials are available in India and where they are to be found ?

A new extensive dimension of collecting the writings of others was opened with the growth of printing by movable types in the 15th century. Some of these materials are preserved with great care at the renowned centres of learning of the world. But the number preserved in India will probably not be very large as the printing did not create social enthusiasm here before the latter part of the 18th century. Accumulation of printed materials started from that time mostly by the Christian Missionaries and European Orientalists. The object of this compilation is to trace the existence of early imprints in the leading repositories of India. Collection of reading materials and their preservation were utterly neglected in the earlier years and are still to receive the serious attention of the concerning authorities. A good number of printed materials are surviving at different centres in India.

Union Catalogue. Many scholars feel deeply the absence of any catalogue giving informations about the early imprints. Our plan is to remove this want by bringing out the union catalogue of early imprints available in India. We are aware that the task is a gigantic one, but it is desirable that instead of waiting helplessly and indefinitely for some high power initiative a modest beginning should be made for a limited period.

Incunabula and early imprints are very rare in India. The National Union Catalogue of Incunabula and Early Printed Books in India, volume one, came out in 1981 by the Bibliographical Society of India; listed the books chronologically and arranged alphabetically.

It was the pioneer effort, ever done in this country. The present project of the Incunabula and Early Imprints holds about five thousand entries arranged in alphabetical sequence. About one hundred libraries and their printed catalogues have been consulted. This endeavour will make aware the librarians, scholars & bibliophiles about the rich, rare and valuable collection scattered in the various libraries in the country.

Obligations. I am really grateful to Dr. Mahadev Saha whose initiative encouraged me to proceed with the project. Dr. Asim Kumar Dutta, Mr. M. N. Nagraj and Mr. Avinasi Lal took keen interest and helped me in the process of compilation. My hearty thanks are due to my wife Thakura Devi and daughter Sandhya Singh who made me free from the domestic affairs and provided me ample time to proceed with the project; to Dr. Gauri Shankar Singh who made enthusiastic efforts in editing and printing; to Mr. Ashok Singh, Advocate, who managed the process of printing; to Mr. Indra Bahadur Singh, convener, Bibliographical Society of India for shouldering the responsibility of the publication; to Sarvesvari Press for the printing; the Bhingaraj Anathalay for the guardianship; to the National Library, Calcutta; the British Museum, London; the National Biblitheque, Paris; the Library of Congress, Washington; the New York Public Library, New York and to the librarians and scholars who helped me by their valuable suggestions. Hope this publication will create interest in the minds of the Librarians, Institutions and the Governments to come forward and take initiative in the compilation of the union catalogue in the country.

APPENDICES

1 — CLASSICS

Anthologia, the term anthology originally denoted a garland or collection of flowers (Gr. anthologia, Lat. florilegium), and hence a selection of choice pieces tastefully arranged as in the Garland of Meleager, compiled in the early part of 1st century B. C. In Latin there is nothing quite comparable to the Greek anthology.

Annals, Ecclesiastical --The historical literature of the Middle Ages may be classed under three general heads. Chronicles, annals, and lives of Saints. The term annals, though often confused with chronicles, nevertheless indicates a different class. Like chronicles, they are chronological records, but taken down successively, registering from day to day the events of each year.

Antiquae, a term meaning "old". Formerly it referred only to the remains of the classical cultures of Greece and Rome; gradually decorative arts, courtly bourgeois and peasants of all past eras came to be considered antique.

Apology, a short work by the Greek philosopher Plato probably written in the 390's B. C. It purports to be the speech delivered by Socrates, Plato's mentor, in his own defense at his trial in 399 B. C. The Apology falls into three parts. The first section contains Socrates' arguments. The last two parts of the Apology deal with Socrates' condemnation to death. He takes leave of the jurors without fear. "No evil can happen to a goodman, either in life or after death."

Benefice, a revenue-producing endowment that is permanently attached to a church office. The churchman who is appointed to such an office becomes the legal recipient of all the accrued revenues in exchange for performing the required ecclesiastical functions. The system originated in the 6th century as a result of several factors.

Bible, The term Bible is derived, through the Latin Biblio, literally "the books" with the word (sacred) expressed or understood. From beginning to end Bible is concerned primarily with the acts of God for Man's salvation. The Jews have a Bible consisting only of the books of the Old Covenant, or Old Testament, whereas Christians have a Bible made up of the books of both the Old and the New Testament.

Bible, translation of the, dates back more than 2,000 years to the Septuagint, a translation of the Hebrew Bible into Greek beginning in 3rd century B. C. About A. D. 1450 the time of the invention of printing, the number of translations was 33, and by about 1800 the number had risen to 71. By the end of 1971 parts of the Bible had been published in 1,457 languages and the entire Bible in 253 languages. In the early Christian church, the most important translation was the Latin version known as the Vulgate, by St. Jerome. It is the official Latin Bible of the Roman Catholic Church and has been the basis for translations into many other languages, including the Douay version (N. T. 1582; O. T. 1609-10), the only authorised Bible in English for Roman Catholics until the 20th century. The first complete English version of the Bible dates from 1382 and was credited to John Wycliffe and his followers. All previous English translations culminated in the King James Version (1611; known in England as the Authorised version), prepared by 54 scholars appointed by King James I. In Europe, the outstanding Protestant translation was that of Martin Luther. (N. T. 1522, complete Bible 1534), the first complete translation from the original Hebrew and Greek into a modern European language.

Chronicle, records of noteworthy events both natural and cultural arranged in chronological order, represent a more detailed and sophisticated form of annals. St. Jerome gave the name chronicon to the Hebrew book entitled "Events of the times". In Rome chronicles were called Annales maximi.

Chronica, chronicles, records of noteworthy events both natural and cultural, arranged in chronological order. Chinese principalities—the state of Lu (722-481 B. C.) have survived probably because they were edited by Confucius. In Greece the example of Hellanicus of Lesbos who composed the chronicle of events from 683 to 404 B. C.

Concordantiae, literally "agreement", "harmony". Concordances were first made for Bible. The first, authentic Latin concordance 'Concordantiae Sacrorum Bibliorum' by Conrad of Halberstadt.

Commentari, Roman memoranda, which were often used as source material by historians. Initially in Roman Republic commentarii were informal, personal written materials that served as an aid to the memory. But with their development as memoirs by such men as Sulla and Cicero in the 1st century B. C., the commentarii began to be more than merely records of the facts. This trend reached its logical conclusion with the writings of Caesar, who called his works on the Gallic and civil wars "commentaries". In the Roman Empire a record of daily occurrences in court, commonly called the commentarii diurni, was kept and there was also a record of the official decisions of the emperors and the accusations brought before them, the commentarii principis.

Conciliar theory, a concept in theology that holds that a general or ecumenical council is the supreme authority in a church. The term usually is specifically applied to the Western historical development of the 13th and 14th centuries. During this period the western schism (1371-1417) divided the Catholic church into factions supporting different claimants to the papacy. The conciliar theory thus gained widespread popularity as the solution to the schism.

Ecclesiastical History, the primary source for the history of Christianity from the time of the Apostles until A. D. 324. It is essentially an apologetic work that demonstrates the victory of the Christian church over her enemies. Probably first completed about A. D. 303. It consisted of seven books, but it was enlarged in successive editions to 10 books, which included contemporary events.

Epistolae, the word epistola, usually the public utterances of Great men such as Plato, Demosthenese, Aritotle and Cicero. The ten books of Symmachus Epistolae (4th century) are in the line connecting Cicero's letters.

Gospels, the first four books of the New Testament, attributed to St. Matthew, St. Mark, St. Luke, and St. John. The English term "Gospel" (from Anglo-saxon god. spel, "good spell") translates the New Testament Greek evangelion, meaning good news, joyous message.

Hecuba, is a tragedy by Euripides, first produced in Athens, probably about 425 B. C. The scene is the Thracian coast, where the Greek fleet, carrying Hecuba, widow of king Priam of Troy, and other surviving members of Priam's house, has been mysteriously becalmed on its way home to Greece after the sack of Troy. The main action of play centers on Hecuba and the principal theme is the disintegration of her character under the impact of terrible injustice.

Historia naturalis, English; Natural History, by Pliny the Elder, the Roman savant of the first century A.D.; it is a scientific work in 37 books, covering much of the human knowledge of Roman times but lacking in critical scholarship.

Herbal, an ancient manual facilitating the identification of plants for medicinal purposes, were known in India before the Christian era, and the Chinese have a compilation, still authoritative, of about 1000 ancient herbals.

Herbarium, a collection of dried and pressed plants preserved and mounted to illustrate as far as possible their characters. Of the major herbariums, the one at Kew Gardens, England has about 4,000,000 specimens and is the largest in the world. Other herbariums with 3,000,000 or more species are at Leningrad, Paris, Geneva, Florence, Washington, New York, etc.

Hercules (Greek Heracles), the most famous Greek legendary hero. Its probable meaning "glorious gift of hero". In Homer's Iliad, Heracles fights and wounds Hades. In mythology Heracles is probably concealed a real man, perhaps a chieftain vassal of the Kingdom of Argos. His legends give him divine parentage.

Hesperides "daughters of evening", in Greek mythology, clear-voiced maidens who guarded the tree bearing golden apples which Earth gave Hera on the occasion of her marriage to Zeus. They were usually supposed to be three, or four, or seven in number.

Horatii, Three brothers (triplets), who were the heroes of the 7th century B. C. Roman historical legend. The Romans and the people of Alba, one of the neighbouring cities, to the south, were in conflict. The Curiatii from Alba killed two Horatii, the third slew his opponents one by one. On his return to Rome his sister Horatia recognized the Curiatii, her brother drew his sword and stabbed her. The authorities sentenced him to death but he appealed to the populace, and the penalty was commuted to a formal acknowledgment of guilt.

Iliad (the poem about Ilios), it follows from its beginning in a quarrel over captive women between Achilles, the greatest warrior and Agamemnon, the commander-in-chief, of the Achaean army. This poem covers the whole course of Trojan War.

Itinerarium, a late Latin word denoting the roadbooks and route maps of the Roman empire, which were in common use both by private individuals and by officials.

Microcosm (little world), a philosophical term designating man as being a "little world" in which microcosm or universe is reflected. Lotze took Mikrokosmos as the title of his major work on the theory of knowledge and reality.

Odyssey, tells a wider ranging story than the Iliad. Its formal subject is the home-coming of Odysseus from Troy. His wife Penelope and his son Telemachus, who had been a baby in arms when Odysseus left home for Troy nearly twenty years before. The Iliad and Odyssey give a more favourable picture of Helen than is found elsewhere.

Opus, in ancient Greece the chief city of the Opuntian Locrians. It is mentioned in the Iliad of Homer among towns of the Locrians, who were led by Ajax. By the 5th century B. C. Opus was important.

Oriando Furioso, (The Raging Roland) a romantic epic in ottava rima, by Ludovico Ariosto, is probably the most brilliant literary achievement of the Italian Renaissance in the 16th century. The masterpiece of the great Ferrarese poet was begun about 1506. and was first printed in 1516. Originally in 40 cantos, constantly revised by the author in its final form in the edition of 1532, published one year before Ariosto's death, it contains 46 cantos. Between 1536 and 1560, one editor alone brought out 30 editions of the Furioso.

Pantheon, a building for the worship of all the gods revered in a certain locality. The Roman pantheon was begun by M. V. Agrippa in 27 B. C. and was rebuilt by Hadrian in 120 A. D. in the circular form

Psalter, sol'ter, the Book of Psalms. The term also refers to a book containing the Psalms separately printed, and specially to the version of the Psalms in the English Book of Common Prayer.

Sermon, a religious address delivered to the congregation at a service of worship. Examples are found in several religions, but chiefly in Judaism and Christianity. Many of the recorded addresses of the Old Testament prophets were sermons. Many of the Christian church Fathers have left collections of sermons, notably St. John Chrysostom in the East and St. Augustine in the West.

Theater, derived from the Greek theatron (a place for seeing). As used to mean the art of presentation, the term became current in English late in the 17th century. From the 15th through the 17th century indoor performances were given in halls or tennis courts (in France) converted temporarily or permanently into theatres.

Theologia, "The science of things, divine" (Richard Hooker). The earliest use of the word 'theology' in Greek referred to the critical interpretation of the classical myths. In Thomas Aquinas, for example, "Sacred science" is the common term for theology.

Thesaurus, the Latin word for "treasury" or "store house" is a book of information about words or concepts. It is most commonly applied to dictionaries of synonyms.

Tragedy, a term derived from the Greek tragoidia or "goat song", which was associated with ancient ritual dance and song honoring the fertility god Dionysus presents a plot or story (mythos) involving a highly renowned "man who is not eminently good and just, yet whose misfortune is brought about not by vice or depravity, but by some error or frailty" (hamartia), traditionally called the "tragic flaw". Poetics libri septem (1961 : Poetics) by Julius Caesar Scaliger (1484-1558) argued that the action of tragedy should be more consistent with our understanding of reality.

Zend-Avesta, ancient Iranian language (modern Pahlavi). The Avesta is a work of moderate compass (comparable to the Iliad and Odyssees taken together). The Avesta is only a fragment of old priestly literature of Zoroastrianism, zend (i.e. interpretation).

II — CLASSICAL AUTHORS

(Before Christ)

Alexander, Called the Great (356-323 B.C.), King of Macedonia, who overthrew the Persian empire, carried Macedonian arms to India and laid the foundations for the Hellenistic world of territorial kingdoms. From age 13 to 16 he was taught by Aristotle. In 336, he succeeded the throne. In 326, crossing the Indus, Alexander entered Taxiles and fought his last great battle against his rival Porus. His army mutinied, refusing to go further and returned back, Alexander received a severe wound which left him weakened. He died on June 13, 323 BC in the age of his 33rd year.

Anacreon (b. 570 B. C.), after Archilochus, the most important writer of personal lyric poetry in the Ionic dialect of Greek. His language and metres are alike smooth and simple in anacreontics metre. Anacreonticas, are poems written in the metre and form, the supposed outlook of Anacreon in the Greek metre. Greek Christian writers such as Clement, Gregory, Sophronius, wrote religious verse in the Anacreontia. The Anacreontea also had an influence on Italian and German literature.

Archimedes (c287-212 B.C.), Greek mathematician and inventor. He was the son of Pheidias, an astronomer. The water screw which he invented is used even now in Egypt for the purpose of irrigating fields. The extant treatises are On the Sphere and Cylinder, The Measurement of the circle, Centres of Gravity of Planes, The Method, ect.

Aristophanes (b. c. 450 B. C.—d. c. 388 B. C.), the greatest representative of ancient Greek comedy. Only 11 of some 40 plays by the Athenian playwright survive virtually intact. The Acharnians, The Knights, The Clouds, The Wasps, The Peace, The Birds, Lysistrata, The Thesmophoriazusae. The Frogs, Women in Parliament, and The Plutus. These plays and ancient notes on them supply nearly all available data on his life, Aristotle (b. 384 B. C.), Stagirus, Macedonia d.322 Chalcis, Greece), Greek philosopher, logician, and scientist who, perhaps more than any other thinker, has characterised the orientation and content of all that is termed Western Civilization.

Caesar, Gaius Julius (100-44 B.C.), Roman general, dictator, and statesman. Caesar's most amazing characteristic is his energy intellectual and physical. He prepared his seven books on the Gallic war for publication in 51. Anticato, on civil war, he wrote in the hectic years between 49 and 44 B.C.

Catulus, Gaius Valerius(84-54 B.C.), the greatest lyric poet of Rome. The best manuscripts of the poems is called simply Catulli Veronensis liber.

Cicero, Marcus Tullius (b. 106 B. C., Arpino, Italy—d. Dec. 7, 43, Caieta), statesman, scholar, lawyer, writer, and staunch upholder of republican principles during the civil wars that destroyed the Roman Republic, is remembered as Rome's greatest orator.

Confucius (551-470 B.C.) China's most famousman, was a teacher, philosopher and political theorist whose ideas have deeply influenced the civilization of all the eastern Asia. His family name was King, largely self-educated, but was diligent. Humanity was central in his philosophy. The truly virtuous man, Confucius said 'desiring to be established himself, seeks to establish others'

Democritus (470 360 B.C.), the greatest of the Greek physical philosophers, one of the founders of the atomic theory. Democritus was the Aristotle of the 5th century. His three books on zoology and physiology are recorded.

Demosthenes (384-322 B.C.), the Athenian statesman, was a professional speech-writer. Demosthenes' supremacy among the Greek orators was acknowledged in his own days. His 61 speeches are found and printed.

Diodorus Siculus. (fl. 1st century B. C., Agrigum Sicily), Greek historian, the author of a universal history Bibliotheca historia. He lived in the time of Julius Caesar and Augustus and his own statements made it clear that he travelled in Egypt during 60-57 B. C. and spent several years in Rome.

Euclid (in Greek Eukleides), Greek mathematician (fl. 300 B.C.) whose text was one of the great success of world literature. Euclid's great work is Elements in 13 books. The first extant Latin translation of the Elements was made (about 1120) by Adelard of Bath.

Euripides (485-407 B.C.), was the youngest of the three great Greek tragedians, following Aeschylus and Sophocles, 19 plays of Euripides have survived as compared with seven each from Aeschylus and Sophocles. Hippolytus is the only surviving play of those produced in the poet's life time that is known to have won a first prize.

Entychides (3rd cent. B. C.), Greek sculpture. His most noted work was a statue of "Fortune" which he made for the city of Antioch (founded 300 B. C.). The goddess who embodies the idea of the city was represented seated on a rock, with the Orontes river at her feet.

Firmicus Maternus, Julius (fl. 4th century A.D.) Roman senatorial convert to Christianity, wrote an attack on the old religions (c. A.D. 346) calling on the emperors Constantius and Constans to suppress them and composed Metheseos libri, the most comprehensive ancient textbook on astrology.

Gellius, Aulus (fl. 2nd century A.D.) Latin author remembered for his miscellany Noctes Atticae ('Attic Nights'), in which many fragments of lost works are preserved. Written in Athens to beguile the evenings, the work is an interesting source of the state of knowledge and scholarship of his time. In Rome, where he studied literature and rhetoric, and in Athens, where he studied philosophy, his teachers and friends included many distinguished men, anecdotes about whom he included in his book.

Gregory of Nazianzus, St. Father and Doctor of the church called "the theologian", b. Arianus in Cappadocia, c. 330; d. Arianus, c. 390. Orations four in number, are best known literary productions upon which Gregory's principal claim to fame is founded. Gregory's theological productions proved a profound force in the East.

Hanno, a common Carthaginian name or a title, known as the Great (5th cent. B.C.), Hanno conducted a voyage to explore and colonize the west coast of Africa. An account of his voyage was written in the temple of Baal at Carthage and survives in a Greek manuscript of the 10th century A. D., known as Perplus of Hannon.

Herodotus (5th cent. B.C.), Greek author of a history of the Persian wars. His theme in his history is the war between Greece and Persia and its preliminaries. Herodotus was not only the first of Greek, and so of European historians. He was also the first European writer of prose. His true predecessor Homer wrote in verse.

Hesiod (fl. 800 B.C.), Greek poet who created didactic poetry in the Western world, was a Boeotian by birth. The "Theogony", the history of gods, beginning with the emergence of Chaos, Gaea (Earth) and Eros. His other epic poem, The Works and days has a more personal character.

Hesychius of Alexandria (fl. 5th century A.D.), author of most complete Greek lexicon known from antiquity, valued as basic authority for the dialects and vocabularies of ancient inscriptions, poetic text, and the Greek father of the church. Although nothing is known of his life, Hesychius indicated the comprehensive design of his lexicon in a letter prefacing to work entitled Sinagoge pason lexeon kata stoicheion (Alphabetical collection of all words), the lexicon was based on other accessible specialized lexica dating to the 1st century B.C. He included the source of rare words listed.

Homer (6th cent. B.C.), Greek epic poet, the author of Iliad and Odyssey. For Greek writings under the Roman empire he was "the poet" par excellence. The Iliad and Odyssey are still included among the first and greatest work of world literature.

Horace, Quintus Horatius Flaccus (65 B.C.), the celebrated Roman poet. He was friend of Virgil. His work comprises short meditative personal poems with more lyrical qualities of poetry. There are extant 121 lyric poems (Odes, Epodes and Carmen) 41 verse essays (satires, Sermones, Epistle and Ars poetica).

Hyginus, Gaius Julius (fl. 25 B.C.), Latin author and scholar, superintendent of the Palatine library. His two works (1) Fabulae or Genealogiae about 300 mythological legends (2) De Astronomia, treatise on astronomy, connected with stars.

Iamblichus, (c. 250–330) A.D. was a Syrian philosopher of the Neoplatonic school. Born in Chaleis, Coele-Syria, he studied with the philosopher Porphyry in Rome and then established his own school in Syria. Only extracts of Roman major work survive, but some of his lesser writings are extant.

Ignatius, Saint (d. A.D. 110) (Latin Egnatius) a most powerful theologian and church leader who suffered martyrdom in Rome under Trajan (A.D. 98–117). He was thrown before the wild animals. The oldest story of his martyrdom, the so called Martyrium Colbertium is a legendary report from the 4th cent. A.D.

Irenaeus, Saint (b. c. 120/140, Asia Minor—d. c. 200/203, probably Lyons, Fr.), bishop of Lugdunum (Lyons) and leading theologian of the 2nd century. Irenaeus was acquainted with Polycarp, the last known living connection with the Apostles, and was a missionary in Gaul. His work Adversus haereses (Against Heresies), written in about 180, was directed against Gnostic errors.

Isocrates (436–338 B.C.), a famous writer and educationist at Athens, who by the artistic form of his prose set a model which influenced many later writers. He must have been familiar with Socrates. His extant works consist of 21 speeches (logoi) and nine letters. Panegyricus, Philippus deal with Greek unity and war against Persia. In his most famous work Panegyricus, he urged Athens and Sparta to jointly lead Greece against enemy.

Justin Martyr, Saint (c 100–165), the greatest of the early Christian apologists, born in Jordan, Samaria. Justin is the first in the long history of those who have tried to reconcile Christian with non-Christian culture. His Apologia was written in Rome (150). In his Dialogus, Justin tries to prove the truth of Christianity.

Justinian I (full name Flavius Petrus Sabbatius Justinianus, commonly called Justinian the Great). Roman emperor of the East; b. of Gothic peasant parentage at Tauresium Illyricum, 483 A.D.; d. ~ 65. Justinian commissioned 10 learned civilians to draw up a new code, and the result was the Corpus Juris Civilis, or body of Civil Law. Justinian took great interest in building cities, fortifications and churches.

Lucanus, Marcus Annaeus (A. D. 39-65), Latin poet who wrote the Bellum civile, better known as the Parsalia, a historical epic more remarkable for rhetoric than poetry, though with flashes for poetic fire. It is an epic of war between Caesar and Pompey. The work is imitative of Virgil, his predecessor in Latin epic, but Lucan dismisses the gods from his scene.

Lucian (A.D. 125-140), a satirist notable for his wit and the elegance of his Greek, was born at Somasato in Syria. Lucian follows the lead of Xenophanes, Plato and others in complaining about the absurd beliefs concerning the Olympian gods. Eighty prose works are attributed to Lucian.

Lycophron of Chalcis (fl. 3rd century B. C.), Greek poet and scholar best known because of the attribution to him of the extant poem Alexandra. Invited to work in the Alexandrian library (c. 285 B. C.), Lycophron there wrote a treatise on comedy and numerous tragedies, of which only few fragments survive.

Lysius (c 445 after 380), Greek professional speech-writer at Athens, noted for the charm and purity of his prose. His most famous speeches are Kata Erastosthenous; kata Agoratos. He became model for the plain style of Attic Greek.

Marcus, Aurelius Antoninus (121-180), Roman emperor (161-180). One of the world's famous and influential book is Meditations or "Soliloquies" of Marcus Aurelius, written in Greek, reflects his life, which was noble and self-sacrificing.

Mela, Pomponius, the earliest Latin geographer, who wrote De Chorographia about A.D. 43 or 44. Mela was used by the elder Pliny and is occasionally cited by later writers.

Orpheus (4th cent. B.C.), in the ancient Greek world of legendary hero of the generation of the Argonauts, earlier than the warriors of the Trojan War. He was the son of a Muse and Oeagrus, a Thracian river-god and his home was Thrace. His poems are occasionally quoted by Plato.

Palladius (363 before 431), bishop of Helenopolis and author of the Lausiaca history, a collection of instructive stories of hermits. The dialogue on the life of Chrysostom ascribed to Palladius is generally considered authentic.

Pausanias (2nd cent. A. D.), Greek traveller and geographer was a native of Lydia. His Description of Greece takes the form of a tour starting from Attica. His main interest is in works of art. Pausanias' work is an invaluable guide to the ruins of ancient Greece.

Petronius Arbiter, Gaius (A. D. 66), Roman voluptuary, poet and the reputed author of the Satyricon, the first western European novel. The Satyricon liber "Book of Satyrlike Adventures" is a "Picaresque" romance. It has obvious affinities with the later Greek prose romances.

Phaedrus (fl. 1st cent. A. D.), Roman fabulist of uncertain date, whose work, though ignored by classical Roman writers, was apparently the first of its kind in Latin and attained great popularity in the middle ages. Phaedrus plumes himself on his brevity; for this as for his simplicity he merits praise.

Philo, Judaeus (30 B.C.-A.D. 40), Jewish philosopher, is the most important representative of Hellenistic Judaism, a native of Alexandria. Philo appears to have been the greatest of all Jewish philosophers of the Alexandrian school and has been called "the first theologian". Philo's most important work is the Nomon heiron allegoriari (Allegories of the Sacred Laws), a vast commentary on Genesis.

Philoponus, John, also known as John the Grammarian (fl. 6th century) Greek Christian philosopher, theologian, and literary scholar whose writings expressed an independent Christian synthesis of classical Hellenistic thought. Philoponus's two treatises on grammar were later revised in lexicon form and received wide recognition during the Middle Ages.

Philostratus, Flavius (A. D. 170-245), called "the Athenian". He wrote the Gymnasticus (a treatise dealing with athletic contents); a life of Pythagorean philosopher Apollonius of Tyana, treating both the classical sophists of the 5th century B. C. He wrote Heroicus.

Photius (820-91), Patriarch of Constantinople (858-67), who defended the autonomous traditions of his church against Rome and was the leading figure of the 9th century Byzantine renaissance. His most important work is the Bibliotheca or Myriobiblion, giving criticism of and extracts from 280 works which he had studied.

Pindar (518-438 B.C.), the greatest of the Greek choral lyrists is a poet of high rank of special importance in Greek literature. Pindar's first dated poem, Pythian X, was commissioned in 498 by Thorax, chief of the Aleuadae of Larissa in Thessaly.

Plato (b. c. 428 B. C. Athens ?—d. 348/347 Athens), the second of the great trio of ancient Greeks—Socrates. Plato and Aristotle laid the philosophical foundations of Western culture; developed a wide-ranging system of philosophy. Born of a distinguished Athenian family, Plato had political ambitions until he became convinced that there was no place for men of conscience in active politics. After the execution of Socrates (399 B. C.), he and other Socratic men took temporary refuge at Megara and then spent the next few years travelling in Greece, Egypt, Italy and Sicily. About 387 he founded the Academy in Athens as an institute for the systematic pursuit of philosophical and scientific research.

Plautus (fl. 3rd century B.C.), was the great comic dramatist of ancient Rome. 21 plays, ascribed to Plautus, are based on Greek originals of the New Comedy. Plautus held the stage until the end of the republic. Aelius Stilio, Cicero's teacher, praised his Latinity.

Pliny, the Elder, full Latin name Gaius Plinius Secundus (b. A. D. 23, Novum Comum, later Como, Italy—d. A.D. 79, near Mt. Vesuvius) encyclopaedist remembered as the authority in the West on scientific matters up to the Middle Ages. Pliny studied in Rome, had a short military career, and retired to study and write. Seven works are ascribed to Pliny, of which only the classic "Historia Naturalia" is extant; it contains an enormous account of information, some of which is now known to be incorrect.

Plutarch, Plook tark, Greek philosopher, biographer, and essayist; b. Chaeronea, Boeotia, Greece, c. 46 A.D.; d. between 120 and 127 A.D. He was educated at Athens. His works are commonly divided into two categories the Bioi Parallelai (parallel lives) and the Ethika or Moralia (morals). The Morals are cast in the form of dialogues. The lives are character studies of distinguished Greeks and Romans, of whom 46 are arranged roughly chronologically, in pairs (first a Greek, then a Roman, finally a comparison). Plutarch explains his method in the preface to his life of Alexander. His design, he says, is to write lives, not histories.

Polyaenus (2nd cent. A. D.), a Macedonian living in Rome as a rhetorician and pleader was the author of a work entitled strategica, which he dedicated to the emperors Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus on the outbreak of the Parthian war (162-165). It originally contained 900 anecdotes of which 833 are extant.

Polybius (200-118 B.C.), the Greek historian of 3rd and 2nd century Rome. His original purpose was to narrate the history of the 53 years (220-168 B.C.)—from Hannibal's Spanish campaign to the battle of Pydna—during which Rome had made itself master of the world.

Ptolemy, Latin Claudius Ptolemaeus (fl. 2nd century A. D. and said to have been born in Ptolemais Hermit, Egypt—d. at the age of 78, according to tradition), astronomer, geographer and mathematician, who had a profound influence on future generations. Ptolemy wrote the Almagest, an encyclopaedic work of 13 books on the motion of the Sun, Moon and Planets; Optica, five book treatise on optical phenomena; Harmonica, three book treatise on music; and Geographika hyphegesis (Guide to Geography) eight books of text and maps.

Quintilian, Marcus Fabius (A. D. 35-100), Roman writer, whose work on rhetoric is one of the most valuable contributions of the ancient world to educational theory and to literary criticism. The Institutio in 12 books, exerted its greatest influence during the Renaissance and Reformation.

Sallustius Crispus, Gaius (86-34 B.C.), Roman historian and one of the great Roman literary stylists. The Catilinae Coniuratio appeared in 44 and was followed by the Bellum Iugurthinum, which treated the war with Jugurtha in 111-106; both monographs survive complete.

Sanchuniathon (fl. A. 100), a Phoenician writer who probably flourished before Trojan times. According to Philo Sanchuniathon derived the sacred lore from mystic inscriptions on the Ammouneis, which stood in Phoenician temples.

Sappho (fl. 610-580 B.C.), the celebrated Greek lyric poetess. Her poetry is composed in the local Lesbian-Aeolic dialect. The beauty of her writing had been greatly, and justly, admired in all ages. Her simple, candid, and luminous language compels the listener to recognize his potential in her actual experience.

Seneca, Lucius Annaeus (4 B.C.-A.D. 65), Roman statesman, philosopher satirist, and tragedian, one of the most important Latin writers of the 1st century A. D. His most important philosophical work is the collection of Epistulae morales (A.D. 63-65). Seneca's Apocolocyntosis Divi Claudii is one of the master pieces of Roman satire.

Silius Italicus (25-101), Latin epic poet, was the author of long epic entitled Punica, an account in hexametre verse of the second War of the Romans against the Carthaginians (218-201 B. C.). The Punica is the longest epic in Latin literature, comprising over 12,000 lines. The poem was discovered in a manuscript in 1416.

Socrates (469 B.C.-399 B.C.), the great Athenian philosopher, Socrates was a true patriot. Nothing was more marked in his character than an unusually keen sense of humour, an appreciation of the comic in human nature and conduct. He had a strong belief in the soul's immortality. He had neither shoes no shirt.

Sophocles (497 B.C.-406 B.C.), one of the three great Greek tragic poets. Unlike Euripides, he played a distinguished part in the public life of Athens. The most famous Oedipus Rex, the most famous of the seven plays, is surely among the most tense in all dramatic literature.

Statius, Publius Papinius (A. D. 45-96), one of the principal epic and lyric poets of the silver age of Latin literature, was born in Naples. The Thebais (in 12 books), the epic poem, is a more ambitious work describing the struggle of the brothers Polynices and Eteocles for the throne of Thebes.

Strabo (63 B.C.-), Greek geographer and historian whose geography is the only general treatise on the subject surviving from the antiquity. By the 6th century it was already a classic, and its reputation endured for centuries.

Suetonius Tranquillus, Gaius (70-122 A. D.), Roman biographer and antiquarian, is best known for his De Vita Caesarum (Lives of the Caesars), born in Rome. He held simultaneously, the posts—a Studiis and bibliothecis, controlling the Roman Libraries, keeping Archives and advising the emperor on cultural matters. His main works were bibliographical. Above all he is unrhethorical and unpretentious, not shrinking from bald lists of facts where they are appropriate.

Tacitus, Cornelius (56-120), historian whose accounts of first century Roman history are still read for their vividness, irony, and stylistic brilliance. He wrote Germania, an ethnographical study of topical significance and in the Historiae Tacitus treated the period from Jan 1,69 with Galba to the death of Domitian in 96.

Tertullian, in full Quintus Septimius Florens Tertullianus (b.c. 155/160, Carthage, near modern Tunis, Tunisia—d. after 220, site unknown), important early Christian theologian, polemicist, moralist, and initiator of Latin theological words and phrases that were significant in the West for near 1,000 years. Tertullian broke with Montanists and founded his own sect, which lasted until the 5th century in Africa.

Theocritus (310-250 B.C.), Greek poet born in Syracuse, was the creator of pastoral poetry. His poems termed idylls (eidyllia) by the grammarians. Theocritus makes a universal appeal to the modern reader for the reason at his bucolics and mimes reflect human nature.

Thomas, Saint (4th century), one of the 12 apostles. The acts of Thomas was originally composed in Syriac and it represents one of the oldest and most idiomatic monuments of Syriac literature. In the 4th century it was translated into Greek and thence into Latin.

Thucydides (5th century B.C.), son of Melesias, Athenian politician, took over the leadership of the opposition to radical democracy on the death of Cimon (450), to whom he was related.

Timaeus (350–250 B.C.), Greek historian, whose writings shaped the tradition of western Mediterranean history. The olympionikai was possibly a chronological study. He employed a pleasing “Asiatic” style, which Cicero approved.

Valleius Paternulus, Gaius (19 B.C.–A.D. 30), Roman historian whose work is an important source for the principles of Augustus and Tiberius. He wrote a compendium of Roman History from the origins to the A. D. 29, from the death of Caesar to that of Augustus is treated most fully. His style shows distinct characteristics of the Silver Age.

Valentinus (b. A. D. 100), Gnostic teacher who founded the Valentinian sect, was born in Nile delta and received a Greek education in Platonic Alexandria. He founded the Gnostic school in the 2nd century. Only a few fragments of Valentinus’ numerous writings were available until the discovery in 1945 near Nag Hammadi on the Nile of 4th century Papyrus.

Valerius Flaccus, Gaius (fl. 1st cent. A. D.), Latin epic poet, was the author of an Argonautica, an epic poem in hexametre verse and is dedicated to the Vespasian. It was discovered by Poggio at St. Gall in 1417. The first edition was published in 1474.

Valerius Maximus (fl. A. D. 20), was the Latin author of a book of historical anecdotes. His book, Factorum et dictorum memorabilium, was intended for use in the schools of rhetoric. He was a champion of Caesarism and he reproduced the general feeling that the Romans of his day were inferior to their ancestors but greatly superior to the rest of the world.

Virgilius Maro, Publius (70–19 B.C.), author of Eclogues, the Georgics and the Aeneid, was the greatest Roman poet. The publication of the Eclogues brought him recognition as one of the leading poets of the Rome. Virgil’s influence on literature and thought has been greater than that of any other classical poet.
