MEMOIRS

OF THE

Count de FORBIN,

COMMODORE

In the NAVY of FRANCE

AND

Knight of the Order of St. Lezus.

CONTAINING

His pleasant NARRATIVE of the Voyages he made to the East-Indies, &c. and of the great Honours paid to him at the Court of Siam, where he was preferr'd to be the King's High-Admiral, Generalissimo of his Troops, and Governor of the Tower of Bancock?

His particular Account of the Battle at La Hogue, and other Fights that he was engag'd in, during Forty-four Years that he spent in the Sea-Service:

And his SECRET HISTORY

Of the Chevalier de St. GEORGE'S Expedition in 1708; from Dunkirk to Scotland; in which he had the special Charge of the Chevalier's Person.

Translated from the FRENCH.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

LONDON:

Printed for J. Pemberton, at the Golden Buck against St. Dunstan's Church in Fleet-street.

M.DCC.XXXI.

MEMOIRS

OF THE

Count de FORBIN,

COMMODORE

In the NAVY of FRANCE

AND

Knight of the Order of St. Lezus.

CONTAINING

His pleasant NARRATIVE of the Voyages he made to the East-Indies, &c. and of the great Honours paid to him at the Court of Siam, where he was preferr'd to be the King's High-Admiral, Generalissimo of his Troops, and Governor of the Tower of Bancock?

His particular Account of the Battle at La Hogue, and other Fights that he was engag'd in, during Forty-four Years that he spent in the Sea-Service:

And his SECRET HISTORY

Of the Chevalier de St. GEORGE'S Expedition in 1708; from Dunkirk to Scotland; in which he had the special Charge of the Chevalier's Person.

Translated from the FRENCH.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

LONDON:

Printed for J. Pemberton, at the Golden Buck against St. Dunstan's Church in Fleet-street.

M.DCC.XXXI.

ŝ

.

MEMOIRS

OF THE

Count De Forbin, &c.

HE Motive that influences 1675. The most Writers to publish their Memoirs being a View only Why many to their own Praise, wonder that Truth has feldom much tleof Truth thare in their Compositions. Their Fondness to set off their own Characters to Advantage, and their Defire to please and captivate the Reader by furprizing Narrations, put them upon frequent recourse to Adventures that are meerly fictitious, or such at least as are stuff'd with so many false Circumstances, that 'tis scarce possible to distinguish the Truth, where 'tis so confounded with its contrary.

THERE's another fort of Writers Whyothers who don't run quite into this Extreme, are to triand whose Veracity may be depended on in all other respects; but yet when they come to touch upon any Part of. their own Conduct that has been defective, they han't the Resolution to mention it without some Gloss to palliate it. From hence it happens, that both the one and the other deviate almost alike from what ought to be the Aim of a judicious Writer, and that instead of publishing Works of Use to Mankind, they abuse the Credulity of the Reader, who, very often, for want of being better instructed from other Hands, swallows Fiction for Truth, or else forms wrong Ideas in his Brain concerning many Incidents which would have been worth his Knowledge, if they had been truly convey'd to him. Thus, when a Man ought rather to have employ'd the Time in perusing a Work of solid Instruction, he finds he has no more Advantage to boast of, than if he had been reading a triffing Romance.

MEMOIRS of the

Our Aupartiality.

As there is no Crime which a Man thor's Im of Honour would fcorn more than to impose thus upon the Publick, it was my chief Resolution to write nothing in these Memoirs but what was strictly true, not only in my Account of Matters, where I was an Actor and an Eye-witness; but in the Discovery of my own Faults, which, the Reader will

will have several Opportunities of ob- 1675. ferving, I have exposed, without the least Partiality in my own Favour. I hope he will not think the worse of me for being so just, and that while he reaps Instruction from any Good or Harm that I have done, he will, for the Sake of my Sincerity, forgive any Error in the Stile of a Warrior not used to the Pen, and whose only Aim is to be understood, without being incumber'd with the Ornaments of Diction.

I was born August the 6th, Anno 1656. His Birth at Gardanne, a Village of Provence. I and Great shall not detain you with an Account of my Family; the Name of FORBIN being very well known, because of the many Gentlemen of that Name who have distinguish'd themselves, not only in the Church, but by the Sword, and at the Bar.

If the Actions of a Child are, as His unlucthey fay, an Indication of what he will ky Pranks be at Years of Maturity, 'tis certain Child. that they who were then about me, must imagine I was destin'd to give and take abundance of Blows; for my natural Temper being lively, turbulent and impetuous, I play'd a Thousand unlucky Pranks, was apt to domineer over my Play-fellows, and if they made ever so little Resistance, we were fure to lug one another by the B 2 Hair,

Hair, and go to Fighting. When I cou'd not gain my Point by Boxing and Kicking, I fell to throwing of Stones, and scarce a Day passed over my Head, but the Relations of the Striplings I had beat, made heavy Complaints against me, though all Chastisement was thrown away upon me, for Severity only render'd me the more untractable.

His Hehahaviour Father con-£n'd him.

ONE Day that my Father shut me up in a Chamber for I know not what Fault, after I had quite tired my felf with bawling and thundering to no Purpose at the Door, I was in such a Rage that I pluck'd off a good deal of my Hair, and knock'd my Head against the Wall to such a Degree, that when they came and open'd the Door, they found me all over bloody, my Head almost bald, and full of Bumps.

HisFather's Death.

In those early Days, before I scarce knew my Father, I lost him; so that being the younger Brother of a numerous Family, I had no Chance left, when I came to Years of Discretion, but to find out the Means of supporting the Honour of my Birth with the Advantages which Fortune then deny'd me.

Encounters Dog.

I HAD no Hopes to attain to this with a Mad Point, but from that Fund of Courage

and

and Intrepidity which stood me in 1675great stead afterwards upon several Occasions, and which at Ten Years of Age sav'd me from a kind of Death that wou'd have been equally Cruel and Tragical: For a Mad Dog, which was the Terror of the whole Neighbourhood, came up to me on Tay foaming at the Mouth, but without flinching I stood my Ground, and holding out my Hat to him, which I let go that very Moment, I took him by one of the Hind-Legs, and with a Knife instantly ripp'd up his Guts, in presence of a great Number of People that were come to my Rescue.

I was not a little elevated with the Robs his fine Things that were faid of me after Mother and I make a many. so bold an Adventure; and by extolling my Courage beyond the Compais of my Age, I found my Heart glow with an Ardour which I had never yet experienced. At the first Blaze of it, I took the Freedom to tell my Mother, my Fondness for Arms, and that as I was defirous to humour my Inclination, I hop'd she wou'd not oppose it; adding, that all I wanted of her was a Child's Portion, which would enable me to go to the Army. The Propofal was so ill received, that she immediately gave me a flat Denial, and when 1675. when I offer'd to insist on it, I met with a proper Chastisement. This Proceeding stung me so to the Quick, that I refolved to leave the House, and go and complain to my Brother, who liv'd four Leagues from Gardanne, at a Place call'd St. Marcel. He shew'd just as much Regard to my Complaints as they deserved, that is to say, none at all; upon which finding that he had Thoughts of fending me back again, I refolv'd to prevent him. To this end I stole some Pieces of Plate, and run away to Marseilles, with a Design there to list myself a Soldier, and to turn my Plunder into Money; but, as ill Luck would have it, one Romieu a Hugonot Goldsmith, to whom I apply'd to convert my Prize into Cash, finding the Arms of the Forbin Family upon it, advertised it, which occasion'd my being taken up and carried back to my Mother, who fent me to board with a neighbouring Priest.

Escapes to

My Head being so full of warlike Marseilles. Notions, 'tis natural to suppose that I did not long conform to that Constraint. One Day, as the Priest was going to correct me for some trivial Fault, I threw my Inkhorn at his Head; upon this he made up to me with fuch an angry Countenance, that dreading what might be the Confe-

quences

quences of his Resentment, I threw 1675. myself headlong from a Terrass above ten Foot high, being resolved to venture the breaking of a Leg or an Arm rather than undergo the Mortification of submitting to a Punishment which I did not think I deferved: But a Heap of Dung that lay under the Terrate. . fav'd me from the Dangers of 10 bold a Leap; and improving the fair Opportunity, I took to my Heels and ran with all the Speed I cou'd make to Marseilles, to my Uncle Forbin GARDANE, who having the Command of a Galley, receiv'd me with pleasure, and having put me in the Habit of a Cadet, carry'd me aboard his Vessel, where I began to be called the Cheva-LIER DE FORBIN.

When a Man enters the Service fo His Renyoung as I did, and with fo much Fire with a Cain his Blood, he is very apt to be fur-det. prized into a false and dangerous Delicacy on the Point of Honour. This Rock, so fatal to all young Men, I cou'd not avoid, for in the very first Compaign I made, while the Gallies lay at Cioutat, I drew my Sword for a very Trifle, upon one Coulon a Cadet. The Rencounter was so much to my Advantage, that I disarm'd my Man; and this first Victory made me so vain, that I did not doubt but my Comrades B 4

1675. rades wou'd be very circumspect and cautious for the future of provoking me.

HisReward for it.

This Trial of my Manhood was highly pleasing to my Uncle; and the Marshal de Vivonne who commanded, making Allowance for the Vivacity oung Man full of Mettle, who is a single be outragious when he thinks. himself affronted, was so far from calling me to an Account for it, that he gave me the Flag as a Reward for my Courage. I ferv'd on board the Gallies feveral Campaigns, which I shall pass over in Silence, for fear lest I should tire my Reader, by detaining him too long on the first Stage of my Life.

In the Year 1675, the Marshal de Vivonne having Orders to command the Naval Army that was to go to the Relief of Messina, carry'd the Company of Guards to Toulon, where they stay'd till all things were ready for their Departure. During this Interval, I had a Quarrel with one of my Comrades call'd VILLECROSE. We drew our Swords, and in this fecond Duel I had all the Advantage again, without any bad Consequence. Some Days after, playing at Mall, I had a Skirmish too with Bido, another of the Marine Guards. He was a Man every thing to do.

His fecond Duel,

every Inch of him, and, after some 1675. high Words had pass'd betwixt us, he put on a disdainful Look, and chuck'd me under the Chin, as if he meant to treat me like a Boy. Being nettled at this Affront (for I could not bear to Knocks a fee my Youth despised) I gave him such Man down a terrible Blow on the Head with the tha Mal Mallet, that he drop'd down at my Feet, and, had it not been for one of my Comrades that wrested the Mallet out of my Hand, I should have difpatch'd him at one Blow.

'Tis worth remarking by the Way, The ill Es. that both these Quarrels were the Effect Idleness, or of the idle Life we led at Toulon. From having Nohence it appears, that they who have the Care and Management of young Officers, cannot find them too much Employment; for tho' the King in his great Wisdom and Goodness seems to have made sufficient Provision for this Purpose, by appointing Academies in all Places, yet, notwithstanding all the different Exercises we were put to, they who only study'd out of Compulsion, and without any Taste, which was the greatest Number, had many idle Hours upon their Hands, as will be seen by what I am going to relate.

WHEN our Academical Exercises Gaming & were ended, Gaming was the common Quarrels. Recreation, which gave Birth to a

B 5 thousand.

He lends

Gamelter.

proken

Money to a

1675. thousand Quarrels every Day, among the Guards. St. Pol, one of my Comrades, play'd at Piquet one Day with the Chevalier de Gourdon, and won 20 Crowns of him; but the Difficulty was how to get the Money from him, for the Chevalier had not a Sous in his Pocket, and M. Pol infifting strenuously on Satisfaction, they had like to have drawn upon one another. But to prevent it, I put my Hand in my Pocket, and paid the 20 Crowns for the Chevalier, who promised to let me have them again forthwith. But he was not as good as his Word; and whether it was for Want of Money or Honesty, I know not, but he faw me again and again, without taking the least Notice of it. My Patience being tired at his Silence, which I took as a Sort of Affront, I ask'd him more than once for my Money, but was always put off with forry Excuses, and fruitless Promises. At length, after a great many Delays, and being press'd by Necessity, (for, Thanks to the Fate of younger Brothers, I was often out of Cash) I resolved to bring His Strata the Affair to a speedy Issue. For this gem to get End I put on a Sword by my Side which had a Hilt of Iron, and, thus accouter'd, went to the Chevalier and asked him, if he had any Thoughts of paying me. He still endeavour'd it again.

to put me off with the usual Answer, 1675. upon which I laid hold on his Silverhilted Sword, and giving him mine in Exchange for it, I told him, I would restore bim his Sword, when he paid me the Money.

Bur I am obliged to declare the whole Truth of the Matter. The Chevalier de Gourdon was very young when this Adventure happen'd, nevertheless it made fuch a Noise, that his Uncle the Count de Beuil the Captain of the Galley, complained of it to the Governor of HisRebut Gardanne who reprimanded me severe- for it. ly, and obliged me to return the Sword; but, strange that Officers of their Understanding should be guilty of such an Error! they never took Care for the Payment of the 20 Crowns, and much less for reconciling us, which was atsended with very fatal Confequences, as we shall see in its Place.

EVERY Thing being ready for the siege and Departure of the Fleet, we failed for Famine at Messina, which, the Spaniards having besieged by Sea and Land, was reduced to the utmost Extremity, insomuch, that the People, after having spent the little Stock of Corn they had left, were glad to eat Shoe-Leather, or other Things still more shocking to Nature. In short, being able to hold out no longer, they were just going to surrender Engage. Relieving of it.

1675. render when we appeared in Sight, with a great Number of Transports laden with Corn, under the Convoy of nine Men of War. At our Arrival, the ment at the Enemy came out of the Fare and attack'd us; whereupon a bloody Battle enfued, during which, the Chevalier de Walkiella who commanded Six of the King's Ships, and who had been blocked up in the Harbour, by the Enemy, ever fince the Beginning of the Siege, sailed out and join'd us.

The joyful Reception of M. de Vi-Town.

As foon as the Spaniards perceiv'd it, they fled, and if M. de Vivonne had purwonne in the fued them, they had been infallibly destroyed, but the Marshal considering how much the Town wanted Relief, suffered them to make the best of their Way, after having taken only one of their Men of War. He was received by the Town as it were in Triumph, amid the Acclamations of all the numerous Inhabitants, who, with a loud Voice proclaim'd him their Deliverer, and in Acknowledgment of so great a Favour, paid him the Title and Honours of a Viceroy, all the Time he staid there. Messina being thus freed from its Blockade by Sea, the next Thing was to raise that by Land: For this End the Marshal obliged the Guards of the Standard to buy Horses, that they might be able to keep up with him, him, after which, having chosen the 1675. Flower of the Citizens, he caused a vigorous Salley to be made, drove the A sally Enemy from all their Posts, and set the Siege the Town entirely free. Not many raised. Days after this, M. Duquene Liqutenant General was detach'd with some Ships and Galleys to attack the Town of Aosta: The first Thing he did was cannonading it for several Days, after Aosta atwhich, the Troops being put on Shore, taken. we storm'd and took the Place. The Forts surrender'd three Days after, almost without making any Defence; and thus ended the Campaign, upon which, the Guards of the Standard were difbanded.

Not being able to bear the Thoughts Our Anof that idle Life I was like to lead for thor's Admission into Want of Employment, I wrote to the a Company Bailiff de Forbin, who commanded the of the Mus-Musqueteers, that he would please to admit me into his Company; he consented with all his Heart; but, as I had never ferved any where, except at Sea, I was a miserable Rider, and knew nothing at all of a Horse; so that the Company must needs think I was a young Man that wanted Discipline. My Horse had the Missortune to have the Strangles, and one Day when he was ty'd up with the rest of the Brigade, Prully, one of the Musqueteers, a noted

His Sku-

his Horse

loofe.

one of them

1675. noted Braggadocio, unty'd him, and out of Spite, or some other Motive, let him run loose about the Stables. ·When I return'd, and found my Horse out of his Rank, I could not help letting fall some bitter Words against the Man who had play'd me fuch a scurvy Prank. Whether Prully despised my Youth, or whether he did it to try my Mettle, he laid his Hand upon my Hat. At mith with for turning that very Instant, not considering that it was a Crime to fight where I was, I drew my Sword, and we made feveral Passes at one another, but were soon parted by feveral of the other Mufqueteers, one of whom acquainting Prully that the Bailiff was my Kinsman, he thought it his best Way to go and ask his Pardon for what had passed.

1676. Hisfirft Acquaintance with his Count de

THE Year following, the Troops had Orders to go to Flanders; the King, who commanded them in Person, being resolved to open the Campaign Friend the with the Siege of Conde. It was during this Siege, that I first became acquainted with the Count de Luc; we both ferved in the same Company, and the Friendship we then contracted was so solid and intire, that it has never been interrupted fince, and in all Probability, The Sieges will last to the Grave. In the mean time the Siege was carried on with fuch Vigour, that, after eight Days open Trenches, of Conde, Beauchain, and cAire.

Trenches, the King gave Orders for a 1676. Storm, in which the Musqueteers were the first that attack'd, and the Place was taken. From Conde we marched to Bouchain, which was carried in the same Manner, and with the Siege of Aire the Campaign concluded, after which the King returned to Paris, whither the Musqueteers had Orders to follow him. The rest of this Year we The frelay very quiet, only I was often clapt quent Conup in Prison for the Sallies of my our Author Youth, for which, the Bailiff gave me for his Pranks. no Quarter.

THE next Year chang'd my Destiny, 1677. for I was again entered into the Sea-Service, made Ensign on board a Ship, and ordered to the Station at Brest. Before I fet out, I was very desirous to make a Tour to Provence, and, to say the Truth, I had great Need of it, my finall Equipage being quite out of Repair. I should not have been in a Condition to have undertaken the Journey, if the Abbot de Luc (now the Bishop of Aix) had not generously relieved me out of Trouble, and put Money in my Pocket. Just as I was setting out, who should I see, but a poor Kinsman of mine, who, having no Money to carry him home, came to let me know his forrowful Case: I had such a Concern for his Misfortune, that I said to him, Cousin,

His Journey to Pro: vence on Foot, for Want of Money.

Mar feilles

Shame.

1677. Cousin, there's all the Money I have, I am forry there is not enough to carry us both in the Post-Chaise; but what then? Rather than abandon you, I will foot it all the Way with you, in which Case, the Sum I have will be sufficient for us both. Upon this, we took a Couple of Shirts in our Pockets, and with each a long Stick in his Hand, which look'd like the Staff of a Pilgrim, Rides Post we set out for Provence. We continued from Aix to together till we came to Aix, where I for Fear of took Post for Marseilles, because I should have been quite ashamed to have entered the Town on Foot. My old Comrades, after embracing me, naturally ask'd, How I came from Paris?

> to which I answered (without the least Hesitation) that I rode Post.

AFTER having recruited a little, I was resolved, before I went to Brest, to go to Toulon, to take Leave of one of my Brothers, and an Uncle. The very next Day after my Arrival, who should I meet there, but the Chevalier de Gourdon, who was now an Ensign of the Marine, and, as Time had ripened his Courage, he remember'd how I had affronted him by taking his Sword from him, and was resolved to have Satisfaction. We fought before the Bishop's Palace: I gave him one Thrust in the Belly, and another in the Neck, where,

His Rencounter with the Chevalier de Gourdon.

where, by a Parry, my Sword rested. 1677. Being thereby disarmed, I received a Wound in my Side, which made me retreat a few Paces, and, just at that Instant, my Sword, which was thrust in the Chevalier's Neck, dropping to the Ground, he took it up, and, as I was rushing in upon him, he presented the Points of both Swords to me; bidding me keep off; you are disarm'd; there, take your Sword; you bave run me through; but I am a Man of Honour. He had no sooner spoke these Words, but he fell down dead; upon which I immediately thought of nothing else but how to get off, by making my way thro' the Populace that were affembled.

As much disturb'd in my Mind as I His Rewas at that Juncture, I cou'd not help fection on the Cheva. admiring the Generosity of the Cheva-lier's Genelier, who spar'd my Life when it was sparing his in his Power to have taken it; and who Life. had so much Honour as to moderate his Passion in his last Moments. And as I now write this in cool Blood, I actually think it so gallant an Action, that it doubles the Concern I always had for having taken away the Life of so generous an Enemy, tho' in Defence of my own.

Tho' this Duel made too great a Noise for me to expect that the Law wou'd good Forfecution.

1677. wou'd take no Cognizance of it, yet there was an apparent Disposition to fa-The Count's vour me; for in the Information which tune in c- was granted to prosecute the Murderer, feaping Pro- my Name was not mention'd, but a Person unknown was accus'd of committing it. The Chevalier de Gourdon's Father, who was extremely afflicted for the Death of his Son, sent a Gentleman to the Spot to inform himself of the Truth of the Fact, and being convinc'd that we had done nothing irregular, he enter'd no Process. Here I cannot but reflect, that if they who made me restore the Chevalier's Sword, had taken the wife Precautions I mention'd before, this Misfortune wou'd never have happen'd.

🖰 His Jour-, neytoBrest, and fudden Escape ofrom it, upof a Warrant to apprehend him.

WHEN my Wound was cur'd, I went to Brest, thinking the unhappy Asfairwas entirely hush'd; but as a Man is an Advice seldom without some Enemy he does not dream of, one Burgues, a Man to whom I never did Good nor Harm, wrote to M. Colbert, that I had fought a Duel with the Chevalier de -Gourdon, and kill'd him. The Minister, in pure Complaisance to the Bailist de Fourbin, acquainted him of the ill Office that had been done to me; and faid, that he cou'd not avoid giving Orders to take me up. The Bailiff, however, obtain'd the Favour of him to defer issuing his Warrant till the 1677. next Post, to give time at least for the Bailiff to advertise me of it, which he did accordingly; and by the same Post I receiv'd 20 Letters upon that Account from as many different Persons; which were all in this Stile: Upon Receipt of these Lines, be gone from Brest, and change your Name; for Orders are given to apprebend you. I took the Hint, and fet out Post for Paris.

As the King never pardon'd Duelists, His Trial I wrote to my Brother in Provence, to at Aix, with cause fresh Articles to be exhibited demnation, against me, and to bring on my Trial. ment and What I desir'd, was obtain'd without Pardon. much Difficulty; the Parliament of Aix condemn'd me to lose my Head; and it appearing by the Process, that I had not fought a Duel, I easily obtam'd a Pardon, which I pleaded after a few Hours Imprisonment at Aix, whither I immediately set out; and thus my Affair was ended. As foon as I was at Liberty, my Family, who had their Reasons for my not staying in the Country, furnish'd me with a little Mule; after which I was oblig'd to think of returning forthwith to settle myself in my former Employment.

BEING at Lyons, I fell in with the Carrier going to Paris, who goes that Road so often, that Travellers are glad of his Company. A Canon of Chartres was along with him also, who came from Marseilles, and had given him his Portmanteau to carry. The Canon being mounted on a very pretty, black Mare, I rode up to him, and when I found from whence he came, we soon for and Acquainteness.

His Departure to Paris in Company with an Ecclefiaftick.

scrap'd Acquaintance.

We travel'd all three together two Days, and lay at the same Inn; but being always very meanly lodg'd, and forc'd to pay extraordinary for what we had; the Canon and I resolv'd to quarter by ourselves at Night, and keep Company with the Carrier by Day. In this we found our Account considerably, for we not only far'd better, but cheaper.

Their Adventure with a couple of Gentlemen of the Road.

When we arriv'd at Coni, we found two Gentlemengoing into the Inn, both in the same Dress, like Officers of the Army. We all din'd together, when they took an Opportunity to ask us whither we were bound; and hearing that the Abbé had left his Portmanteau with the Carrier, they offer'd him, very courteoully to take Charge of it for him; saying, that one of them wou'd carry it behind him; that they perfectly knew the Road to Paris; that they were exceeding well mounted; and that if we wou'd but keep up with them, we shou'd be the sooner at our Journey's End. The Canon thank'd them them for their kind Offer; but as we 1677. were resolv'd to go on in the Pace we had begun, they kept Company with us, and we all lay together at Briare. Next Day we din'd at Nogent, and determin'd to sup at Montargis, having left the Carrier a pretty way behind, not able to travel so fast as we did, because he had the Care of several laden Beasts. We were almost within a League of Montargis, when the two Gentlemen propos'd a By-Road to us thro' a Wood, which, they faid, wou'd cut off a great deal of Ground. We acquiesc'd, without the least Mistrust of any thing; but had not gone far, when one of them, while the other jogg'd on with the Abbé, stop'd behind, and turning his Head about, I faw, thro' the Wood, that he was examining the Prime of his Piftol.

finell a Rat; and seeing him advancing my Way, I turn'd a little out of the Road, and also took out my Pistol, pretending to see if it was in order. He ask'd me what I was doing; upon which I said, that while we were in a Wood, it was highly necessary to be upon our Guard. We rode for some time Side by Side; but when I saw that he was endeavouring to get before me, I put on my Mule, and calling to the 1677.

Canon,

Canon, I spoke to him softly, 'M 'l'Abbé, faid I, we are in bad Com ' pany; for these two Companions o ours have certainly Mischief in thei · Hearts; which, I take it, concern ' you more than myself, who have no ' great Matter to lose; however, hap ' pen what will, examine your Pistols ' mine are in good Order; take Cou rage, and let us not be off of ou Guard, if there be Occasion.' The Canon, who was a hen-hearted Soldier being frighted out of his Wits at wha I had been faying, took out his Pistol trembling, and survey'd them in a man ner as if he scarce knew what he wa doing; infomuch, that had it been a a more favourable Time and Place, shou'd have laugh'd heartily to see how pale and wild he look'd. I did all tha was in my Power to hearten him. Sau I, 'Let us keep these two Sparks be fore us; if they attack us, then w ' will make the best Defence we can. When the Gentlemen perceiv'd that w mistrusted them, they were full of thei Jests upon it. In the mean-time, w were got out of the Wood into th High-Road, and arriv'd at Montarg in very good time.

ONE wou'd have thought there had been an End now of this Adventure but notwithstanding our Suspicions, ou unknown Companions were so far from 1677 being re-buff'd, that they offer'd to lodge with us. At Supper they renew'd their Banters upon our pannic Terror, and made an Offer again to the Abbé to carry his Portmanteau for him, which he cou'd not pertiade himself by any means to trust them with. At last, Bed-time being come, we were all four put into one Cnamber with three Beds in it, where I fnor'd foundly; but the Canon was so terrify'd, that he cou'd not fleep a wink.

unknow

Two Hours after we were in Bed, when they might naturally think we were both afleep, one of our Highwaymen (for fuch they actually were) struck Fire; upon which the Canon hawk'd and spit, to let them know he was awake; and they asking him whether he was asleep, How was it possible, said he, I can de sleep, when you make such an outrageous Noise all Night? The good Abbé, half dead with Fear, call'd out feveral times to awake me, but finding that wou'd not do, he got out of Bed; and when he had rous'd me, Let us go back, said he, and meet the Carrier; for these two Men intend us no Good. When they faw that we fully knew what they were, they did not push the Point any farther: So that early next Morning they left us, and in four Days we arriv'd at Paris;

1677. Their happy Delive- Arrival at 🤄 Paris.

Paris; where we embrac'd one anothe upon our happy Deliverance, and the each went his way about his own Af fairs.

IT happen'd, that the King was a that time in the Army, and all his Mini sters with him; particularly the Mini ster of the Marine: And the worst on' was, that I had not Money enough to fubfist me till he return'd. But Bo N TEMS, the King's First Valet de Chambre, who was my special Friend undertook to restore me to my Employ ment, and to get my Name put dowr for the Station at Toulon; withal, affu The Count ring me, that I might return to Pro their Com. vence, and leave the Care of it to him panions ex- Upon his Promise, I made Money o my Mule, and prepar'd to be gone The Night before I went, as I was pasfing thro' the Greve, three Highway men were going to be broke upon the Wheel; and stopping to see the Execution, I presently discover'd among those Wretches, one of the two Fortune hunters with whom the Canon and ] had so lately fallen in Company. The Caitiff was a very remarkable Person for his Jaw was sadly batter'd and bruis'd, which I remember he told us upon the Road, was owing to a Musket-Shot he receiv'd at a Siege. I then plainly faw the Danger we had escap'd; for I heard, that

fees one of ecutedthere

that those two Miscreants belong'd to 1677 a Gang of 36 more of the same kind. I sought after the Abbé, to tell him what I had feen, not doubting, that he wou'd be very glad to find that he came off so well; but I cou'd not hear of him, and have never feen him since.

WHEN I was proposing to return to Thoulon, as Bontems and I had agreed, my Family, in order to do a Pleasure to the Chevalier de Gourdon's Father, He goes to and to make him some Kind of Satis- Breft, as Enfaction, in Acknowledgment of his Ci- fign of the vility to me, thought fit to fend me to Brest, in the Place of one of my Brothers an Ensign of the Marine, whose ill State of Health disabled him from Serving. We were, within a Trifle, both of the same Age and Stature, so that the Exchange was not minded, and I was admitted, in his Place, without any Difficulty. As foon as I arrived I was imployed in exercising the Marines, which, as painful as it was, I acquitted myself with so much Circumfpection that our Commanders quickly perceived it, and publickly declared their Satisfaction.

AFFER a little more than two Years Stay, at Brest, I was fent to the Station at Rochefort, where I went on Board His Voyage the Squadron commanded by the Count to the And d'Estrees Vice Admiral, which sailed to Mands. Vol. I. the 1680. the American Islands. We visited the Coasts of New Spain, and touch'd at Curassaw, St. Martha, and the City of Carthagena: We were then at Peace with the Spaniards, and the Marquiss d'Estrees Son to the Vice Admiral having a Mind to go ashore, to visit the Governor, I was named to be one of his Retinue. Theirnoble The Governor gave us a very magnificent Repast (tho' a bad one for a Carthagena. Fish Day) infomuch that it would have been difficult to have made an Addition to the Profusion with which we were served; but every Thing being dress'd after the Spanish Mode, we cou'd not relish it.

Entertainment at

WE were surprized at the Form of their Spoons and Forks; for one Piece served for both, supplying a Spoon at one End, and a Fork at the other, so that we were obliged to turn them up and down in our Hands, as Occasion TheReason requir'd. What was more singular than why the Go- all, was to see we were served in such the Spanish massy Plate, that one single Dish would West-Ladies easily make four of the strongest, after fuch heavy the French Manner. I was so curious as to ask a Spaniard why their Plate was so heavy, and he gave me for Anfwer, that the Viceroy and other Governors in the Indies, were forbid to return to Spain with Coined Money, but, having the Liberty of carrying away as much much.Plate as they pleased, they never fail'd to make it turn to Account.

Plate.

While we stay'd upon these Coasts The Storm we observed every Evening about four and Lighto' Clock, such Clouds gather round the ning com-Horizon, darting Lightning, and fol-those Parts low'd with terrible Claps of Thunder, and how they are dis as always made great Havock in the perfed. Town over which they broke. The Count d'Estrees who was no Stranger to these Coasts, and who, in his several Voyages to America, had been exposed more than once to these Storms, had found a Way.to disperse them by the Firing of Cannon. By the same Method he dispersed those we saw, which the Spaniards perceiving, and, that at the second or third Discharge, the Clouds were intirely scatter'd, they thought it fuch a Prodigy, and were at fuch a Loss to account for it, that they feemed to be both surprized and terrified, so that we had much ado to con-

it more than what was natural. FROM Carthagena we failed for Petit Their Den Guavas a Colony belonging to the parture to French, or Buccaniers in the Isle of St. go, and Die Domingo. When we arrived in this great Road, we found Twenty five French Wreck of Merchant Merchant Ships aground Fifty Paces Ships. from the Shoar, having been drove thither by a Hurricane, which was so  $C_2$ violent vince them that there was nothing in

of Thunder

Frequent

there.

1680. violent that, out of the whole Fleet, there was only one fingle Frigate of the King's, commanded by M. de Quoins, which, having good Cables and Anchors, was not drove ashore, as the rest were, but sustain'd the Fury of the Storm till it was beat to Pieces and funk. Hurricanes, generally speaking, are so violent upon all this Coast, that Hurricanes we observed most of the Trees had lost Branches, and the Roofs of many Houses built with Stone, were quite blown away.

caille.

mander's

great

The Bucca. In this Island we found a Company erof Mare- of Buccaniers, who had been plundering the Town of Marccaille in New-Spain, from whence they brought an immense Booty, especially in Pieces of Fight, of which every Man had his Load. The best Part of our Time was spent in making merry with them; TheirCom- and one Day Gramont their Commander playing at Passage with the Marquiss Wealth and d'Estrees, set him 10000 Pieces of Light, ger offered and made him quit the Dice; for the the M. Marquis, tho' a considerable Lord, the Game of did not think himself an equal Match for a Gamester, who, perhaps, had 200000 Pieces of Eight in his Chest.

Crocodilehunting by

PasTage.

WHILE we lay in this Road, we and aFryer. faw a Cahiman, which is a Sort of Crocodile, skimming along the Surface of the Water. My Desire to pursue it, made me jump into a Canoe, and the 1680. Chaplain of the Ship, who was a Recolet Friar, would needs go with me; but he had Reason to repent of it very foon, for as we were pursuing the Crocodile among a Parcel of Shrubs that grow in the Sea, we were horribly stung with Muskettoes, whose Bites, in that Part of the World, are venomous. The The Fryar poor Friar, who had only a Gown on, is hunted and stung without Drawers, became, in a Moment, to Death al. the Prey of Thousands of these Insects, musk toes. which stinging him from Head to Foot with all their Rage, he was so swell'd, and in such a lamentable Pickle, that, while he was groaning under intolerable Torture, I carried him aboard again, where he was blooded, bath'd all over with Brandy, and, with much ado, fet upon his Legs again, after he had kept his Bed a whole Fortnight. I believe therefore he has Cause to remember the Hunting of the Cahiman as long as he lives: And for my own Part, I did not come off without some Stings in my Face and Hands.

made

THE Count having set sail, we re- Their Returned from Petit Guavas to the Coasts turn to of New-Spain. When we arrived there, we were furprized to find that the Winds which commonly blow there at East, chopp'd about all on a sudden to the South West, so that taking the Opportunity

frighten'd

ashore by

Monkeys.

1680. of so fair a Wind, while the Current ran to the East, we coasted along till we came to Cape del Draco, where is a fine large Bay, in which we cast Anchor. The Spaniards, who are Masters of the Country, tho' we were at Peace, did not care to let us land, or to furnish us with the necessary Refreshments. The Sloops and Canoes being at a neighbouring Island for Hunting and Fewel, above Thirty Officers of us went ashore and shot at some Fowl: At the Report of our Guns, there was such a They are frightful Noise in the Forest, as if an Army was marching against us. We kept together in a Body, not imagining what should be the Matter, but as the Noise grew stronger and seemed nearer, after a little Deliberation what Course to take, we resolved to retire, and were actually returning aboard with great Precipitation, when an American Officer who was hard by, tho' we did not see him, lifted up his Voice, laugh'd at us for being in such a Terror, and when his Laughter was over, Follow me, Gentlemen, says he, the Noise which has so much terrified you, is only the Chattering of a Company of Monkeys. He told us the Truth.

Their Engagement with the Monkeys.

Being hearten'd by what he said, we advanced into the Forest, where we actually found above a Thousand of those.

those Monkeys, which we attack'd, 1680. without any Ceremony, kill'd about a Hundred of them on the Spot, and all the rest sled quite off, or else shelter'd themselves in the Wood. I have scarce ever seen larger Monkeys than The Description of these were: They had red Hair, a those Anggreat Face, and a long Beard, weighed mals near Sixty Pound apiece, and the Seamen eat them with a Gust. While And of a ? we were ashore, a Snake, which was great Snake that got into ten Foot long, and half a Foot in one of their Canoes. Thickness, climb'd up, by the Rudder, into the Canoe of the Chevalier de FLACOURT LE BRET; tho' it his'd a long Time in the Master's Ears, he took no Notice of it, or troubled himfelf from whence the Noise came. But when we were embark'd again, and the Chevalier perceived it, he made his E1cape with a great Outcry, as did the whole Crew, except the Master alone, who stood his Ground, and, with a great Hook, belonging to the Vessel, struck the Monster such a Blow as kill'd him.

THE Season being at this Time, too TheReturn far advanced for that Sea to be tenable dron to Mar. much longer, the Squadron returned tinico, and to Martinico, and sailing from thence to France. to France, we put into Rochefort to un-rig. I foon after obtained my Furlough, and went to Court, to solicit my Advancement, spending the rest of that C 4 Year,

Year, and all the following, partly at Court, and partly at Rochefort, without any Employment.

1682. THE Year after that, I had Orders to return to Toulon, where I found my TheCount's worthy Friend the Abbé de Luc, Ne-Toulon, &c. phew to the Bishop, and his Grand Vicar, by whom I was received in the most cordial Manner that could be. Nothing would serve him, but I must lodge with him, and he always treated me as if I had been his Brother.

HisVoyage went to bombard s Algier.

rines fue

deftroy d

himfelf.

the King

I EMBARK'D that same Year, with Fleet that the Marquiss de la Porte, on Board the Fleet that went to bombard Algier, under the Command of M. Duquene, ·which no fooner came before the Place, but we began to make the Algerines feel our Bombs. The continual Fire we made upon the Town put the Inhabitants The Mge- into such a Consternation, that the King for a Peace, fearing they would Mutiny, begg'd a which is ob- Peace in all Haste, but his Proposals ftrucked by were not hearken'd to, nor the Hosti-Turk, who lities suspended, till the Algerines had restored Four hundred French Slaves, and fet up whom at several Times they had taken Prisoners. All the other Articles being settled on both Sides, a Turk named MEZAMORTE, who had a Cottage in Algier, was the only Man that hinder'd the Peace: He began with engaging the Taif or the Soldiers in his Party, and then then raising the Populace, he seiz'd 1682. the chief Posts of the City, cut off the Head of the King BABAHASSAN, and put himself in his Throne. The Truce being broke by this Revolution, which was brought about in one Day, the Attack was renewed with more Fury than ever. The new Bombs that play'd The Barba-incessantly upon the Town, so enrag'd Besieged, those Barbarians, that to be reveng'd, who charge their Bombs they seiz'd the French Consul, put him & Cannon into one of their Mortars, and shot him with living off instead of a Bomb: Nor did their Cruelty stop there, for in the same Manner they treated several French Slaves, whom they bound to the Mouths of their Cannon, so that the Limbs of those poor Christians were shot aboard us every Day, which was fuch a Spectacle of Inhumanity, that nothing but African Barbarism is capable of.

IT being too late in the Year to The Return carry on the Siege any longer, the of the Fleet Fleet return'd to Toulon, where while a fecond Armament was preparing for Algier, I had Orders to exercise the Marines and Grenadiers. The Court. being resolved, cost what it wou'd, to have Satisfaction of the Algerines, the Marquis de Segnelay, the Minister of the Marine, came to Toulon to give the Orders in Person, on purpose that 1682. there might be nothing wanting in this new Armament. His Stay here gave occasion to the Commanding Officer of the Port to shew him the Method of training the Soldiers to the Exercise of the Grenado.

An Exercife of the Grenadiers the French. Minister.

To this end having order'd a fort of Well to be made, form'd of Planks there for the set Ridge-wise, he caus'd a high Covert Diversion of to be rais'd, from whence the Minister might easily see the Exercise, without being exposed. Major Raymondis and I were at the Edge of the Well, without any Shelter, from whence we gave our Orders to the Soldiers who were in a Trench. A clumfy Dog of a Grenadier threw a Grenado, which pitch'd just by Raymondis, who for Shelter, leap'd to the other Side, and the very next Moment another Grenadier having also miss'd the Well, threw a second Grenado just at my Feet, which I took up with my Hand, and going to throw it, the Shell burst in the Air, infomuch that my Head narrowly mis'd being wounded by one of the Splinters, which made a Hole in the Brim of my Hat. A third Grenadier, who was as awkard as the other Two, mis'd the Mark likewise, his Granado falling a good Distance from Raymondis, who being asham'd that he had run away from the first, and that I had the Courage to take up the Shell 1682 which pitch'd just by me, ran and took up the last, and threw it into the Well. The Minister was well pleased with this Emulation, but he ordered a Stop to be put to the Sport, and said, that if it held any longer, the two young Gentlemen would infallibly be kill'd.

BEFORE we fet out for Algier, several Officers presented their Projects Projects proposed for for the ensuing Campaign; that given next Camin by the Commadore de Levi, was ap-paign. prov'd at first Sight. Two monstrous Bombs were made, which held fourscore Quintals of Powder, and were to be put on board two Tartanes. It was reckon'd they wou'd cause such a Shock when they fell, as wou'd make the Mole tumble down, and thereby render the Descent less difficult, after which it wou'd be easy to burn all the Ships in the Harbour. But Duquene, who commanded the Troops, made fo many Exceptions against this Project, that it was dropp'd.

THE Troops were embark'd at 1683. Toulon, and the Soldiers of the Port, the Grenadiers and supernumerary Officers, had Orders to follow. I went Expedition on board the Ship of M. Duquene, Son to Meier. to the General. The King's Gallies commanded by the Bailiff de Noailles, of one of which the Count de Luc was 1683. Captain, had Orders also to be gone and join the Squadron before Algier. As the Project above-mentioned for the Descent was quash'd, the supernumerary Officers had little or nothing to The Au- do. That I might keep myself in thor's fond. Action, for I shou'd have been alham'd ness for to be at my Ease and Security, while fo many of my Comrades were in Motion and Danger, I desir'd Major Raymondis, who acted Night and Day upon Occasion, to give me Leave to accompany him. Besides the keeping of myself employ'd, my chief View was to learn the Art of War, and to inure myself to Danger. Raymondis, who was my particular Friend, granted me whatever I pleas'd, so that I never left him.

C 6

367

THE Count de Luc being charm'd to see my good Disposition, and knowing that I had but mean Sustenance aboard my Ship, took Care to fend his Felucca for me every Morning to Cheer on give me good Cheer. Having observ'd account of that he lov'd to know what was doing, Humour partly to divert him at Table, and in some fort to acknowledge his Goodness to me, I us'd to give him a Narrative of what Engagements I had been in the Day before, and was so particudar in my Detail, as to tell him the exact Number of the Kill'd and Wound-: Wound-

His good his good Wounded. Two Officers of the Galley 1683. who were present at these Stories, whether they doubted of the Truth of what I told them, or whether they were willing to fee how it was with their own Eyes, defir'd me to take them along with me: That I will, said I, with all my Heart; be you ready to Morrow.

Mean time our Bombs did great Algier Execution: M. Duquene, who came bombarded. thither only to force the Algerines to beg a Peace, caus'd their Town to be bombarded in the Day-time, and for that End had posted the Bomb-Gallies so as to be out of the Reach of Cannon Shot. At Night I fent to the two Officers who had defired me to take them along with me, to put them in mind of their Promise; and to assure. them that they might expect me next Day in a Canoe, and that they shou'd have an Opportunity to be satisfy'd, They came accordingly; and that they might pay for their Curiofity, I presently put them on board the Galley which was most expos'd to the Enemy's Fire. When we came into the Cabbin we found the Officers of the Bome bardiers, for all the Noise of the great Guns, and the Whizz of the Bullets about their Ears, breaking their Fait very calmly upon a Gammon of Bacon, 1683. I sat down and took a Slice with them. Mean time the Fire of the Cannon, ಆಂ. was doubled, upon which my two Gentlemen (the Officers of the Galley) soon repented of their Curiosity, which I immediately perceiv'd; but having a Mind that they shou'd speak first, I did not seem to have the least Suspicion of it, till at length being tir'd of this Frolick, and scar'd beyond measure; We bave had enough on't, said they, let us return; our Curiosity is satisfy'd; this is a Place too dangerous for People that have no Business in it.

> Tho' the Bombs which play'd Day and Night made terrible Havock in the Town, yet the Algerines did not seem to be daunted. M. Duquene, in order to force them to Terms, caus'd four Sloops to be Mann'd out in the Form of a Floating Half-Moon, which were cover'd with Matrasses to shelter the Bombardiers and Seamen; and these Stoops were supported by Ten others well arm'd, and by four Gallies.

THE Sloops which were drawn out in the Shape of a Half-Moon, had each a Mortar charg'd with a Carcass, i.e. a Sort of Bomb with Holes in it, and fill'd with Combustibles. They had Orders to advance within Musket-Shot of the Mole: It was not doubted that the Carcasses falling upon the Enemy's Ships wou'd set them on Fire. 1683.

my's

The Person appointed for the Direction of the Attack, was Major Raymondis, and, according to Custom, I did not fail to embark with him in his Canoe. Upon the very first Discharge of the Carcasses from our Sloops, the Enemy who were posted upon the Mole, made fo great a Fire from their small Arms, &c. that we had five Men kill'd and wounded in our Canoe, which had no Breast-work nor Covering, and our Seamen were fo frighten'd, that they all crept down in the Hold of the Vessel, and we were not able to rouse them, fay what we cou'd, insomuch that we were forc'd, with Sword in Hand, to threaten the Lives of those who refused to obey. The Fear of present Death having render'd them more pliant, I took to the Steerage; for the Master was kill'd, and all Hands being employ'd, we work'd the Ship fo well, that we were quickly out of Danger. Raymondis never fail'd to tell me afterwards how much he was oblig'd to me for the Resolution I shew'd upon this Occasion. Our Sloops with the Carcasses did so little Execution, and were besides so gall'd by the Enemy's Fire, that M. Duquene thought fit to call them off from that Servise.

ALL the rest of this Campaign the numerous Bombs rattled over the Town like Thunder, during which there perished an infinite Number of poor Christians, whom the Barbarians continually shot out of the Mouths of their Cannon. This Inhumanity gave Occasion for a generous Action which I think ought not to be omitted. The Captain of an Algerine Corsair, which the Chevalier de Levi had formerly taken in some cruising Voyage, and to whom he had been very civil, as had all his Officers, happened to be at Algier, and was witness of the Barbarity with which the Christians were treated. It fell out that Chaifeail, one of the Chevalier  $d\varepsilon L\varepsilon vi$ 's Officers having the Misfortune to be taken Prisoner; was condemn'd to undergo the Destiny which had put an End to the Lives A noble in Of formany others. Just as he was ftance of the going to Execution, the Turkish Capof a Turk to tain discovered him, and being moved: Frenchman with Pity, for the Misfortune of a Perfon who had formerly done him a Pleasure, he lest no Stone unturn'd to save him from Death; but not being able to prevail for his Pardon, and feeing him ty'd to the Cannon, whatever he coa'd say or do in his Favour, he ran to him like a Man in Desput, embrac'd him closely, and turning faith the, since I can't save my Benefactor, I'll the with him.

turp and to the Gunner, Fire the Cannon, 1683.

The King, who was an Eye-witness of this, relented, and pardon'd the Officer; so the is it, that there's no Chinate where Virtue, especially when 'tis exerted in the highest Degree, will not gain Respect, and triumph in the Conquest of the most insensible Hearts. Choiseuil returning afterwards to France, serv'd there a long time in Quality of a Subaltern, and it was he himself that entertain'd me with the Instance I have mention'd, which wou'd certainly be a great Honour to the most civiliz'd Nations.

keep the Sea, the Fleet fail'd away, to france. leaving the Town full of Murders, Ruin, and all the horrible Consequences of a tedious and bloody Expedition; so that the Algerines, notwithstanding the Resolution they had shewn during the Bombardment, were in the Main struck with such a Consternation, that fearing a third Attack, they prepar'd The Algerines to prevent it, by imploring the Clethe King mency of the King, of whom they for a Peace. humbly begg'd Peace by a solemn Embassy, which I shall not insist on, it being foreign to my Subject.

1683.

THE Fleet being arriv'd at Touron, and unrigg'd, the Officers thought of nothing more than how to make themfelves amends for the Fatiguss of the Campaign by the Pleasure's of the Winter. For my own a art, I had a great Desire to go to Court, to mend my small Fortune; but Want of Money, the eternal Bar to all my Projects, had prevented me in this too, had not the Count de Luc stood my Friend. When he was inform'd of my Condition, Cousin, said he, embracing me, don't TheCount's trouble your self about the Expence of the Journey to Journey, I'll pay your Charges. We Court, and fet forwards, and I had not been long at Court before I was made Lieutenant of a Ship.

> I receiv'd Orders at the same Time to repair to Rochefort, to fit out a Vessel to carry the Marquis de Torcy to Portugal, whither the King was fending him to compliment the new King Don Pedro on his Accession to the Crown.

His Jour-

ment.

I travell'd Post in extraordinary ney to Bloir cold Weather, so that when I came within Six Leagues of Blois, I found the Roads fo damag'd by the Ice and Cart-routs, that my Horse tumbled with me often, tho' without any Harm, till the last time of all, when falling upon his Nose, the Head-stall of the Bridle broke. Being unwilling to alight, I bad

I had the Postillion dismount to set it 1683. to Nights; but the Brute said, Since I fell so often, I might do it myself. I was His Treatment from stung with this insolent Answer; but saucy Postilbecause I cou'd not well do without lions. him, I concitated my Resentment, and said to him, Friend, do me the Favour to alight and mend the Head-stall; I have no String, or else I wou'd save you the Trouble. This courteous Intreaty prevail'd on him to consent to what I desir'd of him; tho' as foon as he had done me that Service, I drew my Sword and chastis'd him as his Insolence deserv'd: But when he remounted his Horse, he gave me foul Language, and threaten'd that I should pay for it when we came to Blois. With that I instantly drew my Sword again, saying, There was no Occasion to go so far, I love to pay my Scores upon the Spot, and gave him a fecond Lesson to the same Tune. He pretended to defend himself with his Whip, upon which I renew'd my Attack, and having taken good Aim where to prick him, I gave him a flight Wound in his Side, after which he was as mute as I cou'd wish.

Any Man that faw him, wou'd have imagin'd he had been foundly thrash'd, for he had lost his Hat, and his Face was all over bloody. When we came to our Journey's End, the 1683. Post-Master was so far from weing surpriz'd at the Disorder he saw yo in, that he said to me, 'It looks, feir, as ' if you had had some Controversy with this Rascal. Very siue, said I, but he has no Reasont to complain, he has been paid in ready Money, yet ' he threaten'd to be reveng'd when we came to Blois. Oh! Sir, reply'd • the Post-Master, he is the arrantest Rogue upon all this Road; he is ' perfectly incorrigible, for 'tis not ' two Years ago that a Courier, whom' he had thoroughly provok'd, was forc'd to give him a Rap with his ' Pistol, which broke his Shoulder-'bone.' During this fhort Confabulation, I prepar'd to take Horse, and not dreaming of the Postillion, who I thought was far enough from me, I saw him running in all hafte with a Pitchfork to stick me. I had but time to take out my Pistol, and was just going to shoot him, when the Master ran to him with a Cudgel, and after having disarm'd him, belabour'd him so roughly, that the Rascal thought he had enough. This done, I mounted my Horse, and was turning out of the Stable-yard, when the Fellow, with as much Demureness in his Looks, as if he had known nothing of the Matter, came and begg'd of me to give him fome-

loane ning to drink. I was quite lost 1683. in A dmiration of the Rascal's Stupidity, and Prowing him a few Pieces, There, faid I, wink my Health, thou hast dearly earn'd it.

FROM Blo. I travelled very quietly His Jour. to Poiltiers. But it was determined by Poiltiers. Fate, that I shou'd be plagu'd with Postillions all the Way. As I was mounted and turning out of the Inn, the Post-Master attending, I said to the Postillion, Courage, my Friend, push on. His Answer was, Push on your self, if you are in such Haste.

' Hark ye, Sirrah, faid I with Eyes full of Wrath and Indignation, I ' tell thee here before thy Master, who ono doubt is worse than thy self, for keeping fuch an infolent Fellow, that

' if thou art guilty of the least Imper-

tinence to me, I will break thy ' Head with my Pistol.' This Menace made him very tractable, so that he had some pleasant Story or other to tell me all that Day's Journey. At Mousse, where I was again to change Horses, I was accosted by a third Postillion with great Whiskers cock'd up, a Sabre by his Side, and a Pair of Piftols in his Saddle-Bow: By this Equipage, I imagin'd that we shou'd not part without a Quarrel, and that I shou'd be under a Necessity of fighting with this Man 1683. too. Therefore I took out one of m Pistols, and said to the Fellow, is a as I forefaw we should have an Engage ment upon the Road, it wou'd be be ter to have one Touch before we went but the Master coming to is that Mo ment, put an End to the Noise, di arm'd the Postillion, and then we se out.

He is lost I HAD travel'd about two Stage when the Night surprized us with very cold Fog, fo thick, that I cou' not see my Hand. By this Means w mis'd our Way, and after having tra vel'd for some time, we knew no where, and in Danger of losing ou felves, we were forc'd to alight. don't remember that I was ever in Situation more disagreeable. I was 1 raving mad, that I cou'd have kill' the Postillion for leading me out of the Way; but the poor Wretch answer' me, as often as I threaten'd him, Ala Sir! What if you shou'd kill me? ye wou'd not be a Step the more forwar in your Journey. He was certainly i the right. Mean-time, having conf der'd how to extricate ourselves out a this Perplexity, I bethought myse to bid the Fellow smack his Whip, i hopes that somebody or other migh chance to hear us, and fet us into the Road. I wa

I was not mistaken in my Con- 1683. jecure. At the Noise he made, a Dog bark'd, which I imagin'd wou'd not have been out in such cold Weather, if he had not some Retreat at Hand; therefore, Forder d my Guide to continue making a Noise, till we came within Hearing of some human Voice. After having walk'd in this manner a few Paces, we were stopp'd by a great Ditch full of Water half frozen over, which we follow'd above a quarter of Hour, and cou'd not find a Passage. At last, after a great deal of Fatigue, we came to the Cottage of a Peafant, who being furpriz'd and affrighted to fee us there so late, and in such bad. Weather, shut the Door in our Faces.

ALL my Intreaty cou'd not prevail His Recepupon him to open it, for he wou'd not tion by hearken to Reason; till we threaten'd to break the Door down: Then he open'd it to us, trembling all the while, (for he thought we were Thieves.) I was quite benumb'd with the Cold, and therefore, as soon as we enter'd, I ask'd him if he cou'd not make us a Fire, and let us have a Lodging with him that Night. 'Alas, Sir! you see yourself, ' faid he, I have nothing at all but this forry Bed, which ferves for me and 'my Wife and Children. But if yeu will please to go along with me, continued

∮and by a

Hugonot

continued be, I will carry you to the · House of an honest Hugonot Gen leman, lit two hundred Paces off who will receive you in an agreeable

Manner.

I ACCEPTED his Offer, and about eleven o'Clock at Night, we came to the House of this Gentleman, who indeed receiv'd me very graciously. His Name was M. de la Riviere. He pre-Gentleman. sently order'd a great Fire to be made, which was very acceptable, for I had much need of it; and foon after, a Leg of Mutton was brought in with a Couple of Snipes, and some Wine, which tho' fmall, was very good to drink, and a fresh Loaf, and I made a Repair, which was the more delicious, because I had fasted all Day. From thence I was conducted to a good Bed, where I flept very fweetly, and made myfelf ample Amends for the Toil I had fuffer'd in my Journey. The next Morning, after Breakfast was serv'd up, I thank'd my Host for all his Civilities, told him my Name, and after having offer'd him all the Service in my Power, I set out for Rochefort, where I found my Uncle, who commanded the Ma-I made him very merry, by telling him the Adventures of my Journey; and particularly the Civilities of M. de la Riviere.

His Jeurney to Rochefors.

In ·

n a few Days the Ship, bound for 1683. Portugal, was ready; M. de Vilette (who, was to command her) and the His Voyage to Lisbon. Marquis de Torcy being both arrived, we failed, and had a very good Voyage , to Lisbon. M. de Torcy made his Entry The Audiwith a Magnificence worthy of the ence of the Monarch whom he represented. The nister by the King sat all the Time of the Audience, Portugal, while the Ambassador made his Speech to him standing. All the Lords and Great Men of the Court were standing in like manner bare-headed, only those of the first Quality among them, lean'd against a Wall without Tapestry, or any other Ornament. The Marquis de Vilette was going to lean against the Wall in like manner, when a Master of the Ceremonies came to him very gravely, and told him, that none but the first Rate Grandees of Portugal were permitted to lean in Presence of the King; upon which the Marquis presently chang'd his Posture, but being by Nature somewhat Vainglorious, this fort of Affront which he received before the whole Nation, mortify'd him not a little.

During our Stayat Lisbon, we visited The Abber the famous Abbey of Belem, which is of Belem. but four Leagues off. There we admir'd the Magnificence of the Tombs of the Kings of Portugal, several costly Vol. I. Works 1683. Works of Marble, the vast Buildings which form the Monastry, and the Gardens, which are the finest in the Kingdom. The Prior was exceeding complaisant to us, and after we had extoll'd the Beauty of the Place, we discours'd him about the Fryars that live in it: 'Alas! Gentlemen, said he with a Sigh, this Monastry is very much decay'd from its antient Splendor, and is far short of what it was when I first saw it. When I was a young Fryar there, it was a constant · Rule for Thirty of us to go out every · Night arm'd with a Dagger and a Sword in quest of Adventures; but · now this Military Ardour is so far abated, that you shall hardly find · Ten or Twelve at most, but what · have degenerated and deviated from the Paths of their Ancestors.' At: this Speech we all star'd at one another, not knowing what Answer to make, or whether he spoke in earnest or in jest. We were conducted into a magnificent Hall, where we found a Table very well ferv'd, at which we fat down with those honest Fathers, whom we regal'd in our Turn with an excellent Concert of Musick which we had brought with us, and which play'd inceffantly during the Repast.

I HAVE said more than once already, 1683. that my Purse was commonly very fcanty, which put me every Day to The Author my Shifts, and made me watchful to Meichant. lay hold of every Opportunity that presented to get it. Such a one offer'd before I came from France, when the Farmers of the Duty on Snuff told me, that if I wou'd bring them some Brazil Snuff, they wou'd give me Twenty Sous per Pound for it. I should have been a great Gainer by this Bargain; but how was it possible for me to bind it without Money? In this Distress I apply'd to my Uncle, and acquainted him with the Proposal that had been made to me. I attack'd him at fuch a lucky Minute, turn'd and winded him so many Ways, and said so many Things to convince him, both of my Necessity, and of the Gains which this Affair wou'd bring me in; that though he was naturally very hard-hearted when he was desir'd to open his Purse, yet on my Promise to pay him again at my Return, he generously lent me Money enough to purchase a Hundred Weight of Saffron, which I bought with a View of selling it again to Advantage, and to employ the Produce of it as I had propos'd.

Some Days after my Arrival at Lisbon, I try'd to dispose of what little 1683. Merchandize I had, sold my Sassfron for double the Prime Cost, and laid out all the Money in Snuff. A Week or Ten Days before I came away, I was for putting it on board the Ship that brought us to Lisbon: But M. de Vilette scrupling to receive any Sort of Merchandize on board the King's Ship, I was oblig'd to put it into the Traversier or Ferry-boat, a fort of small Vessel pretty much like a Tartanne, which the Governor took along with him for the Occasions of the Ship's Crew.

His ConlewFamily mom the Indifficion.

EVERY thing being ready for our Departure, we only deferr'd failing till the Minister had his Audience of Leave, which was not many Days ty over a after. Mean time the Merchant to hat efcap'd whom I had fold my Satiron, came to tell me that if I wou'd come with the King's Sloop to take on board a Jew Family, which shou'd be by Ten a Clock at Night at fuch a Place, I shou'd have a Present of Two hundred Pistoles, on Condition that they shou'd be entrtain'd at least for two Days on board the King's Ship, and then remov'd to a little Merchant Ship which fail'd for Bourdeaux. I heard this Proposal with a vast deal of Pleasure, promis'd to return my Aniwer in two Days, and went immediately mediately to impart it to M. de Vilette, 1683. who was so fond of procuring me this Benefit, that he said every thing was at my Service, and that he cou'd deny me nothing. In pursuance of this Answer, the Place of Rendezvous was fix'd, and I went thither with my Sloop.

THE Hour being past, and no Person appearing, I was tir'd with waiting; and leaping a Shore with the Captain of a Ship, we went a few Paces to look out. By the Light of the Moon I advanc'd towards a Street, which was Two hundred Paces from the Shore, and bid the Captain to go to the End of it, and see if any body was coming. He had not gone far His Reng from me, but I saw something ad-che Streets vancing at a few Paces distance, like with a Mada a Ghost. It was a Man in Drawers Moon-light. with a white Cap on his Head, bare legg'd, carrying a Target in his Left Hand, and in his Right, a long naked Spada, who came up towards me quite out of Breath. Wondering what manner of Man he was, as foon as he came within Six Paces of me, I prefented my Pistol to him, and bad him stand; at which Word the Spark tripp'd very nimbly to the other Side of the Street, and went his way without making any Answer.

D 3- BEING

1683.

Being apprehensive that the Captain, who was at the other End, wou'd be scar'd at the Sight of this Spectre, I follow'd close at his Heels. I was right in my Conjecture of what would have happened if I had not gone after him; for the Captain was really affrighted, and bawl'd out to me with all his Strength, upon which I bad him stand his Ground with Pistol in Hand, saying, that I was coming to affist him, at which Words the Rover, who was probably some Mad-man, went on his Way quietly, without speaking one Word.

The Moment after, arrived the Jew Family, confifting of the Father, the Mother, a little Lad, and a pretty Girl. When we had put them aboard, I ask'd them why they made their Escape? They told me, that they were pursued by the Inquisition, and that if they were apprehended, they should run the Hazard of being burnt alive. The Father paid me the Two hundred Pistoles, which was the Premium that we had settled, and I remov'd my Jews into the Vessel, which, after the Time agreed on, was to carry them to Bourdeaux.

As soon as I had pocketed this new Supply, I hasten'd to lay the Money out in Snuff, which I also put on board the the Ship's Boat. I often cast up the 1683. Total of the Profit that I should gain 🛹 by my Traffick, and after an exact Calculation, I found that I should quickly be Master of more Money TheCount's than ever I had in my Life. At Return for length M. de Torcy obtain'd his Au-France. dience of Leave, and we fail'd for France. We had a very favourable Passage at setting out; but a great Storm of Wind separated us at last from the Ship's Boat, so that we lost His Trea-Sight of it, which Disaster was a very by a Pyrate. great Affliction to me; for it had all my Treasure aboard; and I own that I was quite inconsolable, when I heard not many Days after, that a Corfair of Biscay had taken it at Aserrage. My Uncle, to whom I imparted this fad News, was truly concern'd to think how much it would hurt me in the Consequence: Indeed his Generosity, which I did not expect, was some Consolation to me; though, to say the Truth, I cou'd never think of my Loss without abundance of Regret.

Much about the Time of my Re- Execution turn from Portugal, the King being of the Edicta determined to bear with the Hugonots gainst the no longer, renew'd the Edicts which Protestants. had been pass'd against them formerly, with Orders to the Intendants to Tee them strictly put in Execution, without

D 4

1683. out Exception. The punctual Obedience they paid was fuch, that few of the Hugonots escap'd their Severity. One of the first Men that was molested, was M. de la Riviere, who, as I said a while ago, gave me so handsome a Reception, a Man of the first Rank in the Country among those of his Sect, to which he had hitherto shewn the strongest Attachment. Dragoons were quarter'd upon him, who ransack'd his House, so that not knowing what course to take, he came to Rochefort to see M. Arnous, Intendant of the Province, and to endeavour to make him relax.

As foon as I heard of his Arrival, I went to visit him, and always oppos'd his lodging any where but at our House, that is to say, with my Uncle, who receiv'd him very agreeably, in acknowledgment of the Pleafure he had done me. He also interested himself strenuously in his Behalf, but the Orders of the Court were so positive, that after all his Intreaty, he could not obtain any Favour from him, though he was the Intendant's very particular Friend. M. de la Riviere perceiving that he had no other Expedient to try, and that he must either change his Religion or be f speedily ruin'd, and being moreover fway'd fway'd by a Thousand Arguments 1683 which I urg'd to him for the Purpose, \ determin'd at last to make his Abju- M. de lake ration, and I have been told fince, Roman Ca that he continues to be a very good tholick. Catholick, and that, thanks to the Means us'd by the Dragoons and me, he has never once repented of his Conversion.

viere turn

As the King's Service did not require The Count my Stay at Rochefort, for the Season was Provence. now far advanc'd, my Uncle advis'd me to go to Provence to settle some Affairs which I had in that Country: At the same time he order'd me to pass thro' Lyons, and to speak with a Man there who ow'd him some Money. My Road lay thro' Perigord, the Limousin and Auvergne; but the great Snow which cover'd that Country, had render'd it unpassable for a Man who was also an utter Stranger to those Parts. To obviate this Inconveniency, I join'd Company with the Mule-drivers, who go twice a Week from Limoges for Clermont; but their Pace was so slow and tedious, that I thought it a great Misfortune to be oblig'd to keep it. After having jogg'd on with 'em four Days, we arriv'd at an Inn in a plain, open Country; where, as I was charring by the Fire-side with the Landlady, six Men came in, who look'd much more like Banditti, 1683.

Banditti, than any thing else. I ask'd her who they were. They are (said she) Merchants of St. Stephen's, in the Forest, who are just come from the Fair of Bourdeaux: They pass this Way every Year.

Being overjoy'd at this News, I paid them a Compliment. We supp'd together, and I kept Company with them for all the rest of the Journey.. There fell so much Snow that Night, that the Roads were entirely cover'd with it; but these Merchants had travel'd them so often, that steering their Course by the Observation of the Trees, they never rambled out of the Way. At one time a Jay came and perched just before us within Gunshot. One of my Fellow-Travellers, who had a Staff in his Hand, or fomething that look'd like it, causing the Company to halt, and screwing on some Joints which it contain'd invisibly, he made a compleat Gun of it, with which he shot the Bird dead. We were to part Company at Tiers, where I propos'd to strike into the Road to Lyons, and they to take that which led to St. Stephen's. But I cou'd not resist those Gentlemen who invited me so courteoully to go to their Habitation, and To fully gave me to understand, that the Roads from Tiers to Lyons were impassable, passable, by reason of the Snow, especi- 1683. ally without an experienc'd Guide, that I was won by their Reasons and Civilities, which they repeated for five or fix Days, that the bad Weather oblig'd me to spend among them.

From St. Stephen's I went to Lyons, His comiand after having discharg'd the Com- cal Advenmission there which I had receiv'd from with a Lamy Uncle, I continued my Journey to dy and her Chamber-Provence, in Company with two Mer-maid. chants, whom I found at the Inn. Three Days after we arriv'd at Lauriol, where, while Supper was getting ready, a Coach arriv'd with four Horses, in which there was a fick Man, a lufty Woman, middle-aged, but ugly, who had a very pretty fort of a Chambermaid with her, about eighteen Years of Age. Out of Curiofity I went to take a nearer View, when the Lady opening the Door herself, alighted in great haste; and as I was preparing to give her my Hand, she took no Notice of me, but gave her Chambermaid fuch a Box o' th' Ear, as fet her a crying.

As I was young at that time, and had not Courage enough to surmount certain Impressions, I was melted into Pity for the poor Girl, and espousing her Quarrel, more perhaps then Lought, I went to her, and told her how forry Iswas to see her so ill-treated, and that she D 6 deferv'd 1683. deserv'd much rather to be waited on herself, than to pay such a disagreeable. Attendance on others.

THE Girl cry'd incessantly, without answering one Word; and I was continuing my Discourse to her when the Mistress, who went strait out of the Coach into the Inn, came to the Door, and whether she was provok'd that her Maid did not follow her, or whether it was because she had seen me talking to her, she came out again like a Fury, struck the poor Creature several Blows, pull'd off her Coif, and dragg'd her by the Hair of her Head about the Court. It was painful to me to see her thus abus'd, and perhaps too on my Account; however, I pleas'd myfelf with the Thought, that this Instance of Severity wou'd turn to my Advantage.

with her in private; and ask'd her, Whence she came? She said, from Paris. I told her, that it was not convenient for her to stay longer in the Service of that old Hag; and, after I had made her an Offer to carry her back to her Kindred, I added, that if she wou'd trust herself with me, I wou'd take as much Care of her as of myself. She made me and Answer, but by a Smile gave me to understand that she did not reject my Offers.

THIS

This being all I wanted, I went im- 1683. mediately to find out the Inn-keeper, whom I order'd to carry the Girl to a private Chamber, and to give her something to eat; telling him, that I wou'd be answerable. Soon after this, Supper was ferv'd, but being impatient to know what wou'd be the Issue of my Adventure, I soon made an End, and rose from Table long before it was uncover'd. I was hardly enter'd into the Room where I had left the Girl, but her jealous Mistress, who, suspecting something, was at my Heels without my perceiving it, pull'd the Door to her, doublelock'd it, and carry'd away the Key. I was dumb-founder'd at the Noise she made, but seeing a Bolt upon the Door, I immediately shot it; saying, Since they bave lock'd us in, we will bolt them out.

In the mean time, you may imagine what Rumors there were in the Inn; for the Lady made loud Exclamations, and fwore by all the Saints in Paradife, that she wou'd have Satisfaction of me for affronting her. Tho' we heard what a Noise there was, it made little Impression upon me at first; but the young Woman telling me that her Master was a Gentleman of the Law, I did not like to be thus shut in with her, for fear of being prosecuted for a Rape.

· 1683.

I THEREFORE confider'd which way to make my Escape; and judging by the Height of the Window, that the two Sheets of the Bed ty'd together, wou'd let me down, I prepar'd to be gone, charging the Girl to keep her own Counsel, and to go to Bed, after she had put back the Bolt; and with an Assurance, that she shou'd soon hear from me, I bid her Good-night. I was no fooner at Liberty, but I went into the Chamber, where the two Merchants lay. The Servant-Maid of the Inn fmil'd when she saw me, because she and every body in the House thought I had been engag'd elsewhere.

Next Morning, at Break of Day, came the Judge and Recorder with a great Train of Officers. The Lady, who had fent for them, rav'd like a Fury with Complaints against me, and with all the Bitterness of her Soul, demanded Justice; saying, I deserv'd more exemplary Punishment than she cou'd express. Her Husband, who did not talk quite so fast, spoke only in Sentences, quoted abundance of Law and Scraps of Latin; and after a great many forry Pleadings, mov'd that I might be apprehended, and prosecuted according to Law. The Information being drawn up, the Mistress gave the Judge the Key of the Chamber; saying,

ing, 'There, Sir, open that Door, and you'll find the honest Man in Bed with the Whore, my Maid; I hope you will do me Justice.' Upon this, the Judge open'd the Door, and finding the Girl all alone in the Bed, he ask'd her where the Gentleman was that had spent the Night with her.

ABIGAIL, who was no Fool, anfwer'd very innocently, that she did not know what he meant; that she had lain all Night alone; and that if they wou'd not believe her, they need only search the Room, in which there were not so many Holes and Corners, but they might foon be examin'd.

THE Judge himself having peep'd into every Place, and finding nothing, went out, and told the Lady, that she had fent for him to no Purpose; and that he had found nobody in the Chamber but a young Woman in Bed. The Lady, who had waited all the while at the Door for fear, no doubt, lest I shou'd make my Escape, made Answer in a great Rage; What, Sir! (faid she) have you found nothing? I warrant you, Pll find him (continu'd she) the he were a Conjurer: Come on. I saw him with my own Eyes enter the Room, turn'd the Lock upon bim immediately, and barred with the Key out of my Hands one Moment since.

HAVING

1683.

HAVING said this, she enter'd the Room like a mad Woman, taking the Judge by the Hand, and calling her Maid by a thousand hard Names, befides loading her with as many Imprecations. There was no Probability that the Hubbub wou'd end foon; but Abigail, who was by this time half dress'd, faid to her, What, Madam, a'n't you satisfy'd with beating me as long as you pleas'd, but you must disgrace me too? And then, turning to the Judge, Sir, continued the, I appeal to you for Justice; pray order this wicked Woman to pay me the rest of my Wages, and let ber not think any more of my Service; for I wou'd sooner die than live with this Devil any longer.

ISTARTED into the Room that very Moment, and taking up the Cause, I said to the Judge, 'Tis I, Sir, that am the innocent Author of all this Tongue-clack; for being touch'd to the Quick to see the poor Maid abus'd without any Reason, I was willing to know who she was; and being acquainted with her Family, I bid the Landlord take Care of her, and offer'd to pay for what she had: And this is the mighty Offence for which Sir and Madam here have given you the Trouble to come, but to a very wrong Purpose, as you yourself are sensible. The Master and Mistress were going to reply, but Irang

I rang them such a Peal in their Ears, 1683. that they did not think fit to go on. The Merchants who were present, interfer'd in the Matter, and seconded what I had said. In fine, the whole Controversy amounting to just nothing at all, the Judge and his Men sneak'd away, the Gentleman and his Lady rode off in their Coach, and the Merchants, Abigail, and my self set out He carries for Provence: We travel'd together as to Provence. far as Orange, where the Merchants having some Business cut out for a few Days, we parted after a thousand Compliments on both Sides.

As I was desirous of concealing my Puts her in Adventure from the Public, (for not- of a Cadet, withstanding the Passion I began to entertain for her, I should have been ashamed to have been seen with her in Provence) I dress'd her in the Habit of a Cadet, and, taking her up behind me, I carry'd her to Aix, where I alighted at the Inn of Martegues: Next Day I walk'd with her thro' the Town, and nobody so much as suspected the Cheat.

THE Day following, I gave her Leaves her what Money was necessary to bear her at Aix in charge with Expences till my Return, and charg'd the Landla. her, above all Things, to be item in Inn. her Disguise, which she promis'd me, and embracing me with Tears in her Eyes, 1683. Eyes, she seemed in so much Affliction at my Departure, that my Heart perfectly ak'd for her; however, I flung out of her Arms, and, after recommending her to the Hostess, whom I knew full well, and who mistrusted nothing of the Matter, I fet out for Toulon, and St. Marcel.

> I LONG'D so much to return to my Cadet, that I dispatch'd my Affairs as foon as possible, so that I had done. all my Business in less than three Weeks; after which I rode Post to Aix, where I thought it an Age before I arrived, but when I came, I found all my Mystery of Gallantry unravell'd, for my pretended Cadet whose Tears had so affected. me, had been false to me, and her Misbehaviour was the Talk of the Town. Some devout People whom I had nogreat Respect for, at that Time, being inform'd of the Fact, had obliged her to wear the Habit of her Sex. Being provok'd to the last Degree, and asham'd to see all my Craft discover'd, I rav'd heartily against those that had been the Authors of my Mortification.

At the first Sallies of my Indignation, I was going to make the Girl feel the Weight of my Resentment; by, the next Moment I considered the Levity of her Sex, and resolved to treat her only with Contempt. Yet I was not willing to abandon her intirely, and 1683. tho' I thought her very unworthy of my Notice, yet I lest her in the Hands Sends her of a Person I cou'd confide in, with own Relatiwhat was necessary to carry her home ons. to her Relations.

Returns, and finds her in Weman's Ap-L. Det.CT

AFTER what has been faid, I hope that no young Officers or other Perfons, who take the Trouble to read these Memoirs, will imagine that I put this Transaction down as one of the best Things I ever did. When a Perfon writes with Reflection, and at my Age, they have quite different Sentiments of Adventures of this Kind, from what they had when they were young. It was with Regret, that I told it; but I promis'd that I would relate my Bad Deeds as well as my Good ones, and I cannot go from my Word.

HAVING no more Business to do at Hereturns Provence, I returned to Paris, and, going to Court, I found there two Mandarins of Siam, accompany'd by M. le Vacher Priest of the Missions establish'd at Siam. These Mandarins de- An Emclar'd they were fent by the Ministers bany to of the King of Siam, to know what Court, from was become of an Embassy the King their Master had sent, some Time ago, to the Court of France: And that nearing, when they came near our Coasts, that the Ship which carry'd the Ambaffy to the . the King of Siam, caft away.

baffador

1684. bassador and Presents from the King of Siam, had the Misfortune to suffer a Wreck, they proceeded directly to Court, according to their Orders.

> AT feveral Conferences which they had with the Ministers, they gave them to understand, pursuant to their Instructions, that the King their Master had protected the Christians for a long Time, that he was glad to hear mention made of their Religion, that he himself was not very averse to the embracing of it, that he had ordered his Ambassadors to talk about itwith his Majesty, and, in fine, they added, that their Master was so well difpos'd, that he would infallibly turns Christian, if the King did but propose it to him by an Embassy.

Upon these Arguments which they magnified far beyond the Truth, and in which M. le Vacher did not fail to second them, his Majesty being influenced partly by the Advances made by the King of Siam, and his Fondness to make his Court to him, and partly by the Confideration that it was not imposible but that he might embrace Christianity, if he was invited to it by a splendid Embassy, and being moreover rully sensible of the Advantage which would redound to Religion from a Convert whose Example might make many others so, he consented to what was defired of him, and appointed for his Ambassador to Siam, the Chevalier de Chaumont a Captain of his Navy. The The French -King could not easily have pitched King apupon a Person more worthy of a Com- Embassy to mission that seemed of such Importance; Siam to for besides the Advantages of his Birth, and a thousand other personal Qualities, which diftinguish'd him to very great Advantage, he was a Man of such well known Piety, that an Embassy whose principal View was to convert an idolatrous King, and perhaps his whole Kingdom, could not have been trusted with a Person whose Virtues were capable of giving a more exalted Idea of the Religion which he was to recommend. But in Case the Ambassador should happen to die in the Course of so painful a Voyage, and the Embaffy devolve upon some Person incapable of discharging it, the Abbot de Choist was named for the second Man in the Commission, with the Title of Ambassador in Ordinary, supposing it should be necessary for him to make a long Stay at Siam, and that the King should desire to be instructed.

a Convert

1684.

An Offer made to the of the Retinue.

M. DE CHAUMONT, to add the greater State to the Embassy, proposed to have an honourable Retinue; and having cast his Eyes upon a set Number of young Gentlemen that were to accom-Count to be pany him, he proposed the Voyage to me, which was an Offer that I did not reject; but I made him Answer, that as it was to be a Voyage almost to the World's End, I could not engage with him till I had confulted my Family and Friends, with whom I would go that Moment to confer, and that if they thought proper, I would do myself the Honour and Pleasure to attend him.

> THAT very Day I imparted the Proposal which had been made me to the Cardinal  $De \mathcal{F}anfon$  and to M. Bontems, who were both for my accepting it, and thought it would be so far from prejudicing my Fortune, that it was the most infallible Way of making my Court, because the King had this Embaffy very much at Heart; and that as to my own Part, I should run no Hazard in leaving the Kingdom in a Time of Tranquility, when for want of Action, I could have very small Hopes of advancing myself. Upon this Advice I went to wait on M. De Commont, and told him how glad I should be to accompany him, and promised him accordingly. He was in Rapture

Which he accepts.

Rapture upon the Engagements I 1684. entered into with him; and when I acquainted him that for the Sake of having an Opportunity to gratify my Curiosity, I should be glad to be Major of the Embassy, and to perform all the Functions of that Office, he confented to it very willingly.

THE Count  $D\varepsilon$  Luc, whom I had also consulted, and who had approved of my Voyage, spoke of it to Madame Rouillet. This Lady happened to have two Chests of very fine Coral that she had brought from Provence, and wanted to dispose of. The Gentlemen of the India Company, to whom the had offered them to Sale, did not care to meddle with them, and therefore would not give more than Five hundred Livres for both the Chests, which was far short of their Value; whereupon she defired the Count to prevail with me to take them along with me, impowering me to lay out the Purchase-Money in Damask Stuffs, China Cabinets, Japan Ware, and other Rarities of that Country. I voluntarily undertook the Commission, and having settled the few Affairs I had at Paris, I set out in the Beginning of the Year 1685. for Brest, where I had Orders in fit out the two Ships which the King had designed for the Embassy.

1685.

ABOUT

The Embarkment of the Embaffy.

ABOUT the latter End of February, when all Things were ready, M. DeChaumont, and the Abbot De Choisi, fet out for Brest, where they embarked on board a Ship called the Bird, commanded by M. De Vaudricour, and with them the King of Siam's Ambassadors, fix Jesuits, viz. the Fathers de Fontenay, Tachard, Gerbillon, Le Comte, Bouvet, and Visdelou, whom the King sent to China in Quality of Mathematicians, four Misfionaries, of which Number were Messieurs Le Vacher and Du Chailas, and a numerous Retinue of young Gentlemen, who went as Voluntiers, either out of Curiofity, or, as we have faid, with a View to do a Pleafure to the Ambassador.

Room in the Bird, were admitted on board a Frigate called the Malignant, which carried Thirty-three Guns, was commanded by M. Joyeux, Lieutenant at the Port of Brest, and had made several Voyages to the Indies. All being imbarked, we weighed Anchor in the Night-time, and next Morning, which was Saturday the third of March; after the Crews had shouted several times God save the King, we put off apa scered for the Cape of Good Hope.

WE pass'd the Line very happily without being too much incommoded

with

with the Heats, and in a little Time 1685 we began to discover Stars that we had never seen before. Those called the Croisade, which are four in Number, were the first that we observed, af er which we saw the White Cloud, which is placed near the Antarctic Pole. By help of excellent Telescopes, which our Mathematicians used, we perceived that white Cloud to be nothing but a Constellation of a Multitude of small Stars there. At length, after we had been three Months at Sea, we arrived at the Cape of Good Hope, so near the Calculation made by our Pilots, that there was a Mistake only of fifteen Leagues, which is an Error of no Consequence in so long a Run.

THE Cape of Good Hope, which is Description but one long Chain of Mountains, ex-of Good Hope tends from N. to S. and runs out a and Table pretty Way into the Sea. On one Side Bay. of those Mountains there is a vast Bay which opens a great Way into the Country, and has very good Coasting on the Side of the Mountains, but is very dangerous every where else. We did not dare to proceed in the Night, but the next Day, tho' the Wind was contrary, we thought there was no Danger in entring it.

WE were scarce got into the Middle of the Road when the Wind stopped Vol. I.

The Count

isiontair ore

potreatwith

The Dutch

Covernor.

1685. all on a sudden, but while we were driving by the Currents towards the Rocks, so that we were not above a Musquet Shot from them, it returned very luckily and rescued us from the Danger. This was the most perillous Day we had met with yet. At last, after a great deal of Fatigue, we anchored One hundred fifty Paces from the Fort built there by the Dutch, in which they keep a strong Garison. Two Sloops quickly came out to fee who we were, and the next Day I was fent ashore to compliment the Governor, and to treat with him concerning the Salute, and for Refreshments, of which the Crew had great need. I found this Officer in the Fort just mentioned, which is a regular Pentagon very well fortified. I was received with a world of Civility; all that I desired was granted; it was agreed that the Salute should be Gun for Gun, and that we should be furnished with all manner of Refreshments for our Money.

I RETURNED to give an Account of my Negotiations to the Ambassador, who was fo charmed with the good Behaviour of the Dutch, that he caused the Sloops to put off, and we all thought of nothing but to go ashore.

and recreate ourselves after the Fatigue 1685

of so tedious a Navigation.

THE Jesuits were the first that paid their Respects to the Governor, who loaded them with Presents. The Pathers told him, that while they were ashore, they should be very glad to employ their Time in making Observations that might be of use to the Publick, The Govern and for which they could not have her's Civil that Leisure and Conveniency else- French Me where. He gave them Leave in a themativety genteel manner, and for their better Accommodation lodged them in a magnificent Pavillion built in the India Company's Garden. There they made various useful Observations, and fettled the Longitude from the Cape, which till then had only been gueffed at by the Pilots, a Way of Computation which is very suspicious, and liable to many Errors.

While the Mathematicians were making their Oblervations, I was very countofer glad to make mine also, and to inform myself exactly of the State of the Country, of which, as far as I was able to discover during the little Stay we made there, an Account follows.

THE Dutch, who are Masters of this Country, bought it of the chief Inhabitants, who, for a little Quantity of Tobacco and Brandy, confented to  $\mathbf{E}_{2}$ retire Country.

1685. retire farther within Land. Here is a very fine Place for Ships to take in Water, and though the Country is of itself dry and barren, yet the Dutch have a Garden here, which, without Dispute, is one of the largest and finest in the World. 'Tis walled round, and abounds with Herbs of all Sorts, and the choicest Fruits of Europe and the Indies.

> As this Cape is a Sort of Warehouse for all Ships that trade betwixt Europe and the Indies, which call in here to resit and to take in Resreshments, 'tis stock'd in Abundance with every Thing that is defirable. About twelve Leagues from the Cape, the Dutch have fettled a Colony of French Hugo--nots, and given them Lands to cultivate, which they have accordingly planted with Vines, fown with Corn, and which, in short, produce all the Commodities necessary for Life in Abundance.

The Climate is very temperate, and the Latitude Thirty five. The Natives are Caffres (or Hottentots) not quite so black as those of Guiney; well shaped, and very active, but in other respects there is not a more unpolite and brutish People under the Sun. They speak inarticulately, so that no body could ever learn their Language. However they would be capable enough of Education, cation, for the Dutch take several of 168 them, when they are young, make use of them at first for Interpreters, and afterwards they prove sensible Men.

THEY live without Religion, feed upon all Sorts of Infects that they find in the Fields, and go naked both the Men and the Women, with only a Sheep's Skin over their Shoulders, that breeds Vermin, which they eat with-

Out loathing.

ALL the Ornament worn by the Women, is the Guts of Sheep fresh killed, which they roll about their Arms and Legs. They are very nimble Racers, for they besmear their Bodies with the Fat of the Sheep, which makes them loathsome to the Eye, but renders them very supple, and fit for all manner of Leaping. They lie all together, higgledy - piggledy, without Distinction of Sexes, in forry Cottages, and couple with one another indifferently like Beasts, without any Regard to Confanguinity.

A WEEK after we had been at the They all Cape of Good Hope, and taken in suf- from the ficient Recruit, we sailed for the Cape. Streight of Sonde, which is formed by the Isles of Java and Sumatra. The contrary Winds drove us to the Southward, and separated us from the Frigat, so that we lost Sight of her. We had

To the

Sonde.

Streight of 1685. a View of the Southern Coasts, which are unknown to our Pilots. The Soil of it feemed to us to be reddish. We had no mind to go near it, and the Wind coming about more favourable, we changed our Courfe, and discover'd the Isle of Java.

> HAVING no Pilots aboard us that knew the Sonde very well, we resolved to fail according to those excellent Charts we had from M. de Louvois; and after having coasted along the Island of Java for some Time with a fmall Sail, we discovered the Streight, and enter'd it very fafely.

During this Voyage, all the Crew that happened to be upon Deck, fawa Phœnomenon we had never feen before, which furnished our Natural Philosophers with Matter of Debate for several Hours. Though the Sky was very ferene, yet we heard a great Clap of Thunder like the Discharge of a Cannon, which was attended with Lightning that hissed terribly as it fell into the Sea Two hundred Paces from the Ship, and continued histing in the Water to fuch a Degree, that it made it bubble and foam for a great while.

After about two Months fail we arrived the fifteenth of August in Sight of Bantam, where, though we would fain have gone farther, yet the Number of our Sick, the Necessities of the 1685. rest of the Crew, but, above all, the Want of a Pilot that knew the Way to Siam, obliged us to stop. We lay all Night upon our Anchors, and next Morning I had Orders to go ashore to compliment the King on the Part of the Ambassador, and to desire him to let us have the necessary Refreshmients.

Fromthence  $^{\mathfrak{T}}$  to Bantam.

ber

THE Lieutenant of the Fort, to whom I was introduced, denied me Where the every Thing I asked; and notwith- Refresh. standing all my Importunity, I could ments by never get Audience of the King. I remonstrated that I wanted to speak with the Dutch Governor, but I was answered, that he was fick, and had Seen no body for a long time. At last, after having put off all my Requests with forry Excuses, he told me in plain Terms, that I should be in the Wrong to stay there for Refreshments of any Kind, it being the King's absolute Will and Pleafure, that no Strangers should set Foot in his Country.

As I was infifting on the Unkindness of this Refusal, and charging it home upon the Dutch, the Officer The Count gave me to understand, that the State Expostulation with the of Affairs made it by no means con- Durch Co venient for the King to admit Foreigners vernor upd into his Country; that his Subjects, 1685. who were ripe for a Rebellion, only waited for Succours which they expected from France and England, to declare themselves openly; and that whatever I might think fit to fay of the Embassy to Siam, I should find it a hard Matter to persuade them, that our Ship, which was anchoring so near Bantam, was not come with a Design to animate the Javans, and to give them Hopes that the rest of the Squadron was not far behind: That as to the Dutch, I could not in Justice blame them for the Denial that was given me; that as they only served the King in Quality of auxiliary Troops, they could do no less than obey him; that besides, if we were actually going to. Siam, as I had affured him we were, we had nothing to do but to proceed to Batavia, which was but twelve Leagues off; and that the Civilities we should meet with there from the GENERAL of the India Company, would convince us, that the Unkindness shewed to us here, was an Act of mere Necessity.

All that he had said of the Disgust of those People, and of the Necessity of shutting out Foreigners, was true to a Tittle; but he did not tell me that the said Disgust, as well as the Severity I had been complaining of, proceeded from from the Tyranny of the Dutch, which 168 In Thall explain to you in a few Words.

Ir was not above five or fix Years The Real ago that Sultan Agun, tired with the plained by Fatigues of Government, resigned the the Count Crown in Favour of Sultan Agui his Son.

Some Years after his said Resigna- History & tion, whether he repented of that Step; some Reven or whether his Son abused the King Sovereign Authority, he had a View dom of Ban. to replace himself on the Throne. To this End he had secret Conferences with the Pangrans, who are the great Lords of the Kingdom; and after having maturely concerted all his Meafures with them, and every Thing feemed to favour his Design, he declared himself openly, and resumed the Regal Ornaments.

His Subjects had been so happy under his Government, that they came to his Standard with Joy, so that his Army was soon increased to Thirty thousand Men; and thinking himself strong enough to complete what he had begun, he went and besieged his Son in the Fortress of Bantam. The young King being abandoned by every body, had recourse to the Dutch, who hesitated for a while whether they should join with either Party; but being convinced at length, that they could not

 $\mathbf{E}_{-5}$

but

1685. but be Gainers by throwing the Weight into either Scale, they espoused the Prince's Party, and entred the Country. The Javans, affisted by some Macassars, would fain have hindered their Landing, but after a brisk Engagement, the Javans were defeated by the Dutch, who made themselves. Masters of the Citadel, took the young King into their Protection, and not long after surprized the Father in an Ambush, and made him their Prisoner. He was so dear to his Subjects, that the Dutch confined him very close, but the Son being not so well beloved, nor so dangerous, had a little more Liberty, and they let him have the exterior Part of Royalty, while in his Name they made the Subjects groan under Oppression,

THEIR Government was too odious not to be detested, and therefore being in constant Fear of a Revolt, they afways pretended the King's Orders for keeping out Foreigners, whose Entrance into the Harbour might prove favourable to Insurrections. This was the Policy, in Pursuance of which they refused Refreshments to us, and many before us.

I-HAD nothing to do now but to return in my Sloop, and give an Account of the ill Success of my Negotiation.

Count DE FORBIN.

tion. I was scarce out at Sea, but I 1683 espy'd a Vessel, which looked so inconsiderable at a Distance, that I made up to her, and found it was our Frigat, which having had better Winds in her Passage than we, had lain four Days at Anchor under a little Island behind which ourselves anchored immediately. After having expressed our mutual Joy in finding one another again, I learn'd from M. Jayeux and all the rest of the Crew, that the Dutch had served them much in the same manner as they had used us, and that upon the Repulse they met with, they would have sailed for Batavia three Days ago, only they were willing to stay in Expectation of hearing from us.

We both went aboard the Ambassador's Ship together, where the Pleasure we had of feeing one another, made us amends for the Repulse we had met with from the Dutch. Next Day the Wind feeming favourable, and all Entrance being denied us on the Coast of Bantam, we weighed Anchor and steer'd for Batavia. Though 'tis but twelve Leagues from Bantain, as has been ofready said, yet for want of an understanding Pilot, we sounded it all the Way, and were two Days and a half in the Passage. At last we entered the Road, where, by reason of Sand Banks E 6 of it.

Ther Arfival at Ba. tavia.

1685. and Rocks, which cross the Coast in a thousand Places, we were a hundred Times in Danger of being loft.

BATAVIA is the Capital City of the Description Dutch Nation in the Indies, whose Power here is formidable, for they commonly keep in Pay five or fix thousand Men of Regular Troops, composed of different Nations.

THE Citadel, which lies near the Middle of the Road, is built upon Piles of Wood, and confifts of four Bastions, encompassed with a Ditch full of fresh Water. The Town is well built, all the Houses are white, after the manner of Holland; and among the numberless Inhabitants, there are a great many French Hugonots and Catholicks who live there for the Sake of Trade.

The great Powerof the General of the States andra Comp.

THE General of the India Company who resides here, has the Command over all the Dutch Indies, and no King has a Court more numerous and splendid. He regulates all the Affairs of his Nation with a Council, yet he is not obliged to fubmit to their Deliberations, and he may act by his own Authority in Defiance of any of their Refolutions, but then he remains chargeable with the Event, and must answer for it. The Embassies of all the Indian Princes are to apply to him, and he sende Ambassadors to them in the Name of his Nation. He makes Peace and War 1685. at his own Pleasure, without Controul from any Power whatfoever. His Commission is only given him for three Years, but he is commonly continued for Life; so that 'tisvery rare, not to say unparallell'd, for a General of the India Company to be turned out of his Post.

. As foon as we had cast Anchor, I went ashore to make my Compliment to him, and was received at my landing by an Officer of the Port, who conducted me to the Palace. At my Arrival, the common Guard, which was very numerous, stood under their Arms in two Lines, through which I was introduced into a Gallery adorned . with the finest Porcellane of Japan.

THERE I found his EXCELLENCY The Count's (which is the Title always given to the visit tohim. General of the India Company) who heard me all the Time standing with his Hat down to the Ground, a Reception which made me ample Reparation for the Repulse I had suffered at Bantam. The only Language he spoke to me in was French. We could not agree upon the Salute to be Gun for Gun, as I would have had it; therefore I cannot imagine how Father Tachart came by that Account in his Narrative, where he is so particular as to tell how many Guns were discharged; for tis very 1685. certain, that we agreed there should be no Salute on either Side. As for the rest, I had nothing to do but to ask a Favour, and it was granted, the General having affured me, at the very first, in express Terms, that there was nothing but he should be ready to perform, to shew the Ambassador the Veneration he had for his Character. and for his Person in particular.

The General's Prefents to the French Ambaflador, Oc.

I PRESENTLY returned on board full of Joy, and gave an Account of all that had pass'd. Soon after my Return, the General sent a Person to visit M. de Chaumont to make him an Offer of 12 Baskets full of Herbs, and all manner of Fruits, and the next Moment fresh Envoys came to present him with two Beeves and some Sheep. The General continued thus to welcome him every now and then by the chief Men of the City, and to send him all manner of Refreshments every Day, for his own Table, and for the Companies of both our Ships.

WE spent eight intire Days at Batavia, where we received all the Civilities imaginable from the Officers, and before I came away, I fold the two Chests of Coral which I took Charge of at Paris. A Chinese Merchant who bought them, weighed my Coral, and me eight times the Weight in Silver, Silver, amounting to the Sum of Six 1685, thousand Livres, which was told out to me in Japan Money, that is, Little Pieces of Gold. If I had not been so much in haste, I should have made a better Bargain, for it was really worth more; but after all, I thought I had done very well to get Six thousand Livres, for a Commodity, which in France would yield but Five hundred.

HAVING taken in all our Refreshments, and furnished ourselves with a skilful Pilot, we steered our Course for Siam. As the Wind was fair, we fet fail early in the Morning. eleven o'Clock at Night, when it was pretty dark, we perceived a large Ship coming towards us with all the Sail shé could make. By her working we did not doubt but she designed to board us, upon which every Man took Arms. We fired a Gun at her, but the did not alter her Courfe. To prevent being boarded, we failed before the Wind, but notwithstanding all we could do, the Ship run foul of our Stern, and broke part of our carv'd Work. I was posted upon the Quarter-Deck, from whence I fired with Musquet Shot, but could see no body aboard, upon which we bore down upon her with main Force, and made her sheer off. Several of Com-

1685. Company were for pursuing this Vessel, but the Ambassador being unwilling to permit it, we continued our Courfe, and by the Darkness of the Night, foon lost Sight of her.

> THE Crew reason'd variously upon this Adventure. Some would have it to be a Fire-Ship which the Dutch had posted behind some Island to destroy the King's Ships, and to prevent the Embassy to Siam, which they did not like. Others imagined something else, but my Conjecture (which was confirmed afterwards at Siam) was, that this was a Ship whose Crew was most of them drunk, and that the rest being terrified by the Fire of our Gun, were crept under Deck, not a Man daring to shew his Head.

Their Arrival at Siam.

This Adventure excepted, which only alarmed us, we had a very peaceable Passage all the Way to the Bar of Siam, where we anchor'd the Twenty-third of September, about fix Months after we left the Port of Brest.

THE Bar of Siam is nothing but a great Bank of Mud which is thrown up by a River whose Mouth is two Leagues off. The Water is so low at this Place, that at the highest Tides it neyer rises above twelve or thirteen. Foot, which is the Reason that great Since an no farther.

As foon as we had cast Anchor, I 1685. fet out with M. le Vacher to notify the Ambassador's Arrival in the Dominions of the King of Siam. We spent the Night in entring the River, which is one of the most considerable in the Indies, and is called Menan, i.e. The Sea of Waters. The Tide, which flows very high in this Country, being strong against us, we were obliged to He by. As we were going up, we saw three or four little Houses of Canes covered with the Leaves of Palm, M. le Vacher told me that there lived the Governor of the Bar. We went ashore in our Canoe, and found three or four Fellows sitting on the bare Ground in one of those Houses, chewing the Cud like Oxen, without Shoes, Stockings, Hat, or any Thing at all to cover their Body but a Piece of Cloth to hide their Nakedness. Their House too look'd as poor as the Inhabitants, for I saw no Chairs in it, nor any manner of Furniture; upon which I enquired where the Governor was, and one of the Company faid, I am He.

This first Scene very much sunk the Ideas I had form'd of Siam; nevertheles I had a keen Appetite, and asking for Food, the honest Governor made me a Present of some Rice, and which I desired 1685. desired to know if he had nothing else to give me, he answered Amay, which fignifies  $N_0$ .

A Cone-Abbe de īt,

Having been thus regaled at our Ction of the Arrival, I frankly own, that I have Choist's and wonder'd more than once, how the Account of Abbe de Choist and Father Tachard, who made the fame Voyage, and faw the same Things as I did, should both agree to give such pompous Ideas of the Kingdom of Siam, with so little Foundation. 'Tis true, that as they stay'd there but a few Months, and as it was the Interest of M. Constance, the chief Minister, to cast a Mist before their Eyes, for Reasons which I shall mention in their Place, there was The univer- nothing in this Kingdom capable of imposing on them but what was shew'd to them; though when all is said and done, they must have been strangely infatuated not to see the Misery of the whole Country, which is so visible go where you will, that it is impossible not to perceive it. Having said this, en passant, we return now to our Voyage.

> When the Tide served, we went aboard again, and proceeded in our Voyage up the River, where we failed at least twelve Leagues without seeing either Castle or Village, except a few Huts like those at the Bar, and what

fal Misery of the Country.

what made it still more unpleasant, the 1685. Rains fell; however we made the best of our Way, and by ten a Clock at Night arrived at Bancock.

THE Governor of this Place, who was a Turk, but cut a better Figure than he at the Bar, gave us a very indifferent Supper after the Turkish Mode, and treated us with Sherbet for our Drink; for my own Part I lik'd neither his Food nor his Liquor, but Patience was my only Remedy. Next Morning M. le Vacher took a Balon, which is one of that Country Gallies, and went directly to Siam to notify the Arrival of the French Ambassador at the Bar, while I returned in the Canoe on board our Ship; but before I went, I asked the Governor, if, for my Money, I might not have some Herbs, Fruit, and other Refreshments to carry on board, to which he answer'd No.

As our Company were impatient for my Return, as foon as ever they law me coming at a great Distance, they call'd out to me to know if I brought any Refreshments with me, but I said I had brought nothing except the Bites of Gnats which had persecuted us all the Way.

After we had lain upon our Anchors five or fix Days without feeing any body, two Envoys came on board 1685. board us from the King of Siam, with M. de Lano, Apostolical Vicar, and Bishop of Metelopolis, and the Abbé de Lionne: These Envoys paid their Compliment to the Ambasfador on the Part of the King of Siam and his chief Minister M. Constance. Soon after this, Refreshments came to us, at first in small Quantities, but afterwards in great Abundance, so that we had plenty of Hens, Ducks, Calves, and all manner of Indian Fruits, but very few Herbs.

Prepara-French Am. baffador's try to Siam.

THE Court was a Fortnight in pretion for the paring for the Ambassador's publick Entry, which was order'd in the Manpublick En. ner following. On the Bank of the River were erected at proper Distances, several Houses of Canes lin'd with great painted Callicoes. As the King's Ships could not go up the River for want of Water to carry them over the Bar, Vessels were got ready to serve as Transports.

THE first Entrance into the River was without any Ceremony, only some Mandarins came to receive his Excellency, with Orders to accompany him. We were a Fortnight in our Passage from the Bar to Joudia, or Odia, the Capital City of the Kingdom.

of fome Au-

HERE I cannot help correcting a 1685. Mistake of our Writers of Travels. They tell us every now and then of a A Miftake pretended City, they call it the Capital thors about of Siam, which they make to be very Siam. near as big as Paris, and embellish after what manner they please. But 'tis very certain, that such a City never had any Existence but in their own Imagination, that the Kingdom of Siam. has no other Capital but Odia or Joudia, and that as to the Size of it, 'tis hardly fo big as our Towns in France of the fourth and fifth Rate.

THE Houles that were built of Canes Portable all along were portable, for as foon as Houses for the Ambas. the Ambassador and his Retinue had sador's Releft them, they were taken up and carried forward, so that the Houses. which served for Dinner one Day, ferved for the same Purpose the next Day; and those in which they lodg'd one Night, served for the same Use the next Night. This continual Motion brought us at last near the Capital, where we found a great House of Canes, which was not to be removed, and where the Ambassador was lodged till the Day of Audience. In the mean time he was visited by all the great Mandarins of the Kingdom, and particularly by M. Constance, but he came Incog, because of his Dignity and pigh Rank

1685.

Rank in the Kingdom, of which he was absolute Master.

The first Thing treated of was the Ceremonial, during which there were great Debates after what manner the Letter from the King of France should be delivered to the King of Siam. The Ambassador was for giving it to the King with his own Hand, which was a Pretention directly incompatible with the Practice of the Kings of Siam; for, as according to them, the principal Mark of their Grandeur and Sovereign Power confifts in being always raised higher than shole who appear before them; and as 'tis for this Reason that they never grant Audience to Ambaf-, sadors but thro' a very high Window which looks into the Hall where they admit them, the Ambassador could not have reach'd the King's Hand without. raising a Stage for the Purpose with several Steps, to which they made so many Objections as took us up several Days. At length, after a great many Jaunts backwards and forwards, in which I was generally employed in the Quality of Major, it was agreed, that upon the Day of Audience, the King's Letter should be put into a Cup of Gold, which should have a Foot of the same Metal three Feet and a half in Length, by the Help of which the Difficulties in fettling the Cerenionial of his Audience. Ambassador might lift it up to the 1685.

Am-

King's Window,

Upon the Day of Audience, all the great Mandarins in their Balons, preceded by those of the King and Govern- of the Siament, repaired to the Ambassador's called Ba-House. These Balons, as I have al- lons. ready said, are small Gallies commonly used in this Kingdom, and there's a vast Number of them, otherwise there would be no going abroad, for the whole Country lies under Water six Months in the Year, which is owing partly to the Situation of the Lands, which lie extremely low, and partly to the Rains that fall almost incessantly at a certain Season of the Year.

THESE Balons are form'd out of the Trunk of a Tree made hollow; some of them are so small, that they are scarce big enough for one Person. The biggest are not above four or five Foot wide at most, but they are very long, fo that 'tis no extraordinary thing to find those that have above fourscore Men to row them, nay some have One hundred and twenty. The Oars they make use of are in the Shape of a Shovel, half a Foot broad at the End, which is rounded, and a little above three Foot long. . The Rowers are train'd to observe the Commands of a Guide who steers them, and its surprizing prizing with what Dexterity they obey him. Some of those Balons are very stately, representing often the Figures of Dragons, or some Sea-Monster; and those of the King are all over gilt. Out of the vast Number that brought Company to the Ambassador, there were few but what were very magnificent.

Description

MEMOIRS of the

1685.

THE Mandarins having landed and paid their Compliments to his Excellency, we embark'd in the following Order. The King's Letter was put into a Balon and laid upon a high Throne. The Amhassador, the Abbe de Choisi, and their Retinue, placed themselves either in the King's Balons, or those of the State. The Mandarins returned to their own Balons; and in this Order we fet out with the Sound of Trumpets and . Drums; both Sides of the River, to the Place we were to go ashore at, being lin'd by infinite Numbers of Spectators, invited thither by the Novelty of the Sight, who, as the Balon fail'd by with the King's Letter, made their Obeisance to the very Ground.

Their Arrival at the Place of Audience.

When we came within a certain Distance of the Palace, we went ashore, where a Sort of portable Stage was provided for the Ambassador, adorn'd with Crimson Velvet, and an Arm-Chair

Chair upon it, which was gilt. There 1685. were two other Stages not quite so fine, one for the Abbé de Choist, and the other for the Apostolical Vicar. They were all three carry'd in this manner to the Palace, being accompany'd by the whole Train on Horseback.

THE first Place we enter'd, was a very spacious Court, in which stood a great Number of Elephants rang'd in two Lines, through which we pass'd. There we saw the white Elephant so much esteem'd by the Siamese, standing apart from the rest, for Distinction. Out of this Court we went into a second, where 500 or 600 Men with their Arms painted blue, were fitting on the bare Ground, like those we saw at the Bar. They are the Executioners, and at the fame time the Foot-Guards of the Kings of Siam. After passing thro' several other Courts, we came to the Hall of Audience, which is a long Square with seven or eight Steps to ascend it.

THE Ambassador was plac'd in an The Cero-Elbow Chair, holding the Cup by the mony of Audience, Foot, in which was the King's Letter. The Abbé de Choist was on his Right, but his Seat was lower, on a Stool. On the other Side was the Apostolical Vicar, whose Station was upon a Foot-Carpet laid there for the Purpose, which was neater than the great Carpet

Vol. I. Ŧ with

1685. with which the whole Floor was cover'd. All the Ambassador's Retinue fate in the fame manner on the Ground cross-legg'd. We were charg'd above all things to be cautious of putting out our Feet, that being reckon'd at Siam the greatest Piece of ill Manners that can be. The Ambassador, the Abbé de Choisi, and the Apostolical Vicar, were posted all three in a Line facing the Throne, and we were all rank'd behind them in three Files. On the Left-hand were the great Mandarins, with those of the highest Quality by their Side, and so on successively, those of inferior Dignity, till they reach'd to the Hall Door.

> When every thing was ready, a great Drum was beat; at which Signal the Mandarins, who had nothing on but a Piece of Linen, which reach'd from the Waist to half of the Thigh, a fort of Muslin Waistcoat, and a Basket-Cap on their Heads in Form of a Pyramid, cover'd with Muslin, squatted down upon the Ground, leaning upon their Knees, and Elbows. The Pofture of these Mandarins with their Caps feeming as if stuck in one another's A---ses, made every Frenchman laugh. The same Drum beat again several times, with certain Intervals between; and at the fixth Beat the King

King open'd the Window, and shew'd 1685. himfelf.

He had on a high-crown'd Hat, fuch as they wore formerly in France, but the Brim of it was scarce above an Inch broad; which Hat was ty'd under his Chin with a Silk Ribband. His Habit was after the Persian Fashion, being a Stuff of the Colour of Flame and Gold. He had a rich Scarf about his Middle with a Poniard; his Fingers were adorn'd with a great Number of costly Rings. He was about fifty Years of Age, a very thin Man, of Iow Stature, and no Beard, but on the Leftside of his Chin he had a Wart, from which sprouted two long Hairs like Horse-Hair. M. de Chaumont, after having faluted him with a profound Reverence, made his Harangues sitting, and with his Head cover'd. M. Constance supply'd the Place of Interpreter; after which the Ambassador approaching towards the Window, prefented the Letter to this good King; who, whether the Ambassador did it for the Purpose, or whether the Foot of the Cup prov'd not to be long enough, was oblig'd to stoop very low, and to bend half of his Body out of the Window before he cou'd reach it.

His Siamese Majesty put several Questions to the Ambassador, inquir'd

 $\mathbf{F}_{2}$

into 1685. into the Health of the King and the Royal Family, and ask'd him some other Particulars concerning the Kingdom of France. Then the great Drum was beat, the King shut the Window, and the Mandarins stood up.

A Descrip-Buildings of Siam.

WHEN the Audience was over, the tion of the Ambassador was conducted to the House fitted up for his Residence, which was of Brick, but small and ill-built, yet the best in the whole City; for one must not expect to find Palaces in the Kingdom of Siam, as magnificent as ours in France. The King's indeed, is very large, but forrily contriv'd, without Proportion, and of an odd Tafte. All the rest of the Town, which is far from being neat, confifts only of Houses of Timber or Canes, except one Street that has Two hundred Houses built of Brick, but then they are very small, and only one Story high. They are inhabited by the Moors and Chinese. As to the Pagods or Temples of their Idols, they are built of Brick like our Churches, but the Houses of the Talapoins or Monks of the Country, are only of Wood like the others.

BESIDES the public Audience, the Ambassador had several Conferences with the King; but the Ceremonial of this Country is extremely fatiguing, for never was there a private Interview, without ...

without a thousand Points to settle be- 1685. forehand. In quality of Major, it was my Task to go between them, and to carry what was faid on both Sides; and as to my own Share in the whole Negotiation, of which the King himself was Witness more than once, I had, I The King's know not which to call it, the Happi- Fondness for our Anness or the Missortune to please him. thor. Be this as it will, he was very defirous to retain me at his Court, and actually fpoke about it to M. Constance.

This Minister, who had his particular Views, and for Reasons that I shall mention in their Place, did not care I shou'd return to France, at least for a while, was infinitely pleas'd to find the King so affected, and improv'd the Opportunity which fo fairly offer'd Encourag'd itself without his seeking it. He gave his Mihis Majesty to understand, that besides the Services which I was capable of doing him in his Dominions, it was convenient that, fince he intended to fend Ambassadors to France (for they were actually nominated, and every thing was ready for their Departure) some Person of the Ambassador's Retinue shou'd stay in the Kingdom, in the Nature of a Hostage, to be answerable for the Behaviour of the Court of France to the Ambassadors of Siam.

Theythreaten to keep a Hoftage for the Behaviour of the French Court to the Ambaffadors that were going from Stam.

THESE Arguments, whether good or bad, determin'd the King not to let me go, and M. Constance had Orders him in the to signify his Majesty's Intentions to Country as M. de Chaumont. The Ambassador told the Minister, that he was not Master of my Destiny, and that it was none of his Business to dispose of any one of the King's Officers, especially one of fo diftinguish'd a Family and Rank in the World, as the Chevalier de Forbin. But these Objections did not discourage M. Constance; he renew'd his Importunity, and after a great many Arguments urg'd Pro and Con, he declar'd to the Ambassador, that the King wou'd absolutely detain me in his Country, as a Hostage.

This Declaration aftonish'd M. de Chaumont, who feeing no Prospect of my Liberty to go home, confulted with M. Constance, and the Abbé de Choisi, who was one at all their private Conferences, what Means they shou'd use to persuade me to acquiesce in his Siamese Majesty's Intentions. The Abbé de Choist was pitch'd upon to propose the Thing to me, but I was not at all dispos'd to receive it. I told him, that fetting aside the Dislike I shou'd have to stay behind in a Country so remote, and with a People whose Manners and Customs were so different from those of my native Country, I cou'd never think of facrificing the small Beginnings which I had made of a Fortune in France, and the Hopes of farther Advancement, to stay at Siam, where the greatest Establishments I cou'd expect, were not equivalent to the little I had already.

from

The Abbé de Choist thought what The I said very reasonable, and acknow- Temptas ledging how unjust it wou'd be to offer to prevail any Violenee to me upon this Article, with him he propos'd my Objections to M. Constance; who taking him up very quick, faid to him, Sir, Let not the Chevalier de Forbin trouble himself about his Fortune, but leave that to me. He does not yet know this Country, and the Value of it; we'll make him High-Admiral, General of the King's Armies, and Governor of Bancock, where a Citadel is going to be built forthwith for the Reception of the Troops that are to be sent hither by the King of France.

ALL these fine Promises brought to me by the Abbé de Choist, did not tempt me: I perfectly knew the miserable State of this Kingdom, and still persisted in my Design to return to France. M. de Chaumont was so press'd by the King, and much more by his Minister, that he cou'd not deny him what he so earnestly intreated; and

F 4

there-

1685. therefore, coming one Day in Person, I cannot refuse (said he) bis Siamese. Majesty's Demand of your Person; and advise you, as my particular Friend, to accept of the Offers he makes you; for whether you do or not, the Moment that the King absolutely insists upon it, you will be oblig'd to stay.

His Adto be the King of Stam's Admiral and General.

Being provok'd to fee how warmly I was press'd against my Inclination, I told him, that he argued to no Purpose; and that I wou'd never consent to stay at Siam, unless he laid his Commands upon me in the (French) King's Name. Agreed, (faid he) I command you then, accordingly. Having now no other Remedy left, I acquiesc'd; but had the Precaution to demand an Order of him for it in Writing, which he very civilly granted me. Four Days after this, I was install'd Admiral and General of the King of Siam's Armies, and receiv'd the Sabre and Vest, the Ensigns of my new Dignity, in Presence of the Ambassador and all his Retinue, who came to wish me Joy.

WHILE M. Constance, who had his own Ends perpetually in View, was fetting all those Springs at work to detain me at Siam, he left no Stone unturn'd to give the French a grand Idea of the Kingdom, by making continual Feasts, which were always so well order'd, der'd, that no Preparations were wanting to fet them off. He also took care 🗻 to shew the Ambassador and us Frenchmen, all the Riches of the Royal Treafure, which are truly worthy of a great King, and enough to make one in love with his Court; but he was so cunning The Treatas not to tell us, that this Heap of Gold, fure of the Silver, and precious Stones of immense siam. Value had been rais'd by the Gifts of a long Race of Kings, who had all contributed to augment it; for it is an establish'd Custom at Siam to extol their Kings for nothing fo much as the confiderable Augmentation they make to this Treasure, which they are never permitted to touch, be their Necessities. e'er fo great.

AFTERWARDS he carry'd him to all Their Par the finest Pagods in the Town and Country. This is a Name they give here not only to the Temples of their Idols, but to the Idols themselves. The Temples are full of Images of Plaister, gilded with so much Art, that one wou'd be apt to think them Gold. And, indeed, M. Constance did not fail to hint that they were so; which was the more readily believ'd, because we cou'd not touch them, they being generally plac'd too high to be reach'd, or else inclos'd with Iron Grates, which are never F 5 open'd,

magnifi-

France.

cent Pre-

1685. open'd, and must not be approach'd to within a certain Distance.

THE Minister judging that the Mag-TheCourt's nificence of the Presents intended for the King and Court of France might fents to the contribute much to his Design, he drain'd the Kingdom for the best of every thing that it produc'd. Whoever does but read what Father Tachard and the Abbé de Choisi have writ upon this Head, may truly fay, that he carry'd Things to Excess; since he not only exhausted Siam, but sent also to China and Japan, for what was most Rare and Curious, and was continually loading the King's Ships till they cou'd contain no more.

And to the Ambasiamen.

In a Word, that he might be in no body's Debt, every Man of us had some the French. Present or other, so that there was not a Sailor but had a Taste of his Bounty. These were the Methods by which the Ambassador and all our Countrymen were bubbled by this crafty Minister, who always kept his main Defign in View, and omitted nothing that might concur to the Success of it.

EVERY thing being ready for M. de Chaumont's Departure, he obtain'd his Audience of Leave. As I was not to go Home with him, and as I did not think fit to lay out the Six thousand thousand Livres at Siam, which I re- 1685. ceiv'd for Madam Rouillet's Coral, I put that Sum into the Hands of a Factor of the Indies, from whom I obtain'd a Bill of Exchange, which I sent to that Lady, excusing myself for not having laid out her Money according to her Commissions, because I had not found an Opportunity to do it to Advantage. At last when the Day was come for the Ambassador's Departure, M. Con-The Amstance and I, went to see him aboard, bassador's and from thence after a great many Departure Testimonies of mutual Friendship, we Country. return'd to Louvo.

It is now proper to give some Ac- An Account of the Political Views of M. count of the Constance; after which I will tell the Prime Min Reasons why he so earnestly wish'd nister. to detain me at Siam. This Minister, who was by Birth a Greek, and from the Son of a Vintner, at a little Village call'd Custode in the Isle of Cephalonia, was come to be absolute Governor of the Kingdom of Siam, did not raise himself to that Post, nor maintain himself in it, without stirring up the Envy and Hatred of all the Mandarins, and the Populace too.

The first Service he enter'd into, was that of the Barkalon, i. e. the Prime Minister, who lik'd him very F 6 · well;

d him.

1685. well; for his sweet and engaging Behaviour, and above all, his Genius for Business, which nothing cou'd embarafs, foon introduc'd him into the intire Confidence of his Master, who loaded him with Favours, and prefented him to the King as a Person capable of doing him faithful Service.

THE Prince had not known him long, before he repos'd a Confidence in him too; but from a Principle of Ingratitude which can never be enough His Ingra detested, the new Favourite hating to titude to have a Competitor in the good Graces ceffor that of his Prince, and making ill Use of the Credit he had already obtain'd with him, first render'd him jealous of the Barkalon, and foon after engag'd the King to get rid of a faithful Subject, who had always done him good Services. M. Constance having thus made his Benefactor the first Victim which he facrificed to his Ambition, whole Kingdom.

THE Mandarins and all the Great Men being exasperated at a Proceeding which gave them Reason to sear it might be their own Turn next, held feveral Cabals against the new Minister, and hop'd to root him out of the King's Favour; but it was too late, for he work'd upon the Prince's Passion to

began to render himself odious to the Power with the King,

fuch

attempted to cross him in his Favour, that above Three hundred paid for it with their Lives. He afterwards made such an Improvement of his Fortune, and of his Master's Foibles, that what with his Extortion, and downright Violence, and what with Traffick, And imwhich he had engross'd all into his mense wealth. own Hands, he amass'd an immense Treasure.

So many Outrages, which never- The fecret theless he always colour'd over with Discontents of the Peo- a pretended View to the Publick Good, ple. had set the whole Nation against him; but their Resentment was kept so secret, that not a Man durst declare it; for they hop'd that the King's old Age and crazy Constitution, would bring about a speedy Revolution.

CONSTANCE knew how ill-belov'd he was: He had too much Understanding, and was too sensible of the Injuries he had done them, to think that they cou'd soon forget them. Besides, no Man knew better than himself, what little Dependance there was upon the King's Life, whose weak Constitution was every Day declining. He also foresaw what he was to expect from a Revolution, and was fully convinc'd that he cou'd never save himself, but by the Establishment of some foreign foreign Power in the Kingdom, to '

support and protect him.

His Policy to fecure himfelf by a foreign Power.

THAT in short was the only Card he had to play, and the only thing he had in View. In order to attain to it, his Business in the first Place, was to persuade the King to admit Foreigners into his Dominions, and to trust them with the keeping of a Part of his Territories. M. Constance carried this Point with no great Difficulty, for the King paid fuch a Deference to every thing that the Minister propos'd to him, and the Minister so artfully display'd all the Advantages that wou'd redound from an Alliance with Foreigners, that this Prince gave an implicit Confent to every thing he ask'd: The great Difficulty that remain'd, was to determin what Prince to apply to.

The Reason why he would not trust the ing Princes.

CONSTANCE, who only acted for his own Interest, cou'd not bear the Thoughts of applying to Neighbour- Princes in the Neighbourhood; they being so notorious for Breach of Faith, that he had too great Reason to fear, they wou'd first inrich themselves with his Spoils, and then deliver him over to the Mandarins for Justice, or else make fome Treaty, of which his Head wou'd be the Price.

THE English and Dutch cou'd not 1685. be tempted to Siam with the Hopes of Gain, because it was a Country of no great Trade. For the same Rea- And why he fons he could not prevail with himself courted the to apply to the Spaniards, nor to the than any other Euro. Portuguese; and in fine, when he saw peans. there was no other Remedy, he thought the French would be the most casily deceiv'd. With this View he engag'd his Master to court an Alliance with the King of France by the Embassy, of which we made mention at first; and therefore when he had given it fo particularly in Charge to the Ambassadors to infinuate, that their Master had some Inclination of embracing Christianity, which by the way, his Siamese Majesty never had a Thought of, the Most Christian King in his great Piety thought fit to concur to so good a Work, by fending Ambassadors in his turn to the King of Siam.

CONSTANCE perceiving how well he had succeeded in one Part of his Project, consider'd how to make the remaining Part of it turn to his Advantage. The first Man to whom he open'd his Lips about it, was M. de Chaumont; he gave him to understand, that the Dutch had long wish'd for a Settlement at Siam, in hopes of enlarging their Trade; but that the King knowing the 1685. the imperious Humour of that Nations and fearing they might make themfelves Masters of his Dominions, wou'd never hear the Mention of it; that however if the King of France, whose Faith was more to be rely'd on, was dispos'd to enter into a Treaty with his Siamese Majesty, he would engage that the Fortress of Bancock, a Place of Importance, and as it were the Key of the Kingdom, should be put into his Hands, provided he would fend Troops thither, with Engineers, and all the Money necessary for beginning the Settlement.

The French Miniffers not fo fond of the Pro-Missionaries.

lude the latter,

M. de Chaumont and the Abbé de Choify, to whom this Matter was communicated, not thinking it feafible, ject as their would not undertake it. Father Tachard came into it without much Difficulty. His Eyes were immediately dazzled with the Advantages he thought the King would reap from this Alliance, Advantages which Constance set off at an extravagant Rate, far beyond the least Appearance of The Art of Truth. He was deluded in another the King of siam's Mi. respect by this crafty Minister, this nifter to de-occasional Hypocrite, who pretending a pious Zeal, as a Cloak for all his secret Practices, represented how much Religion wou'd be advanc'd, as well by the King of Siam, who he made him believe would certainly embrace 1685. Christianity, as by the Protection which the Missionaries would be sure of in the Work of the Ministry from a French Garrison at Bancock: He was wheedled also by the considerable Establishment promised for the Jesuits by M. Constance, who engag'd that a College and an Observatory should be built for them at Louvo. In a Word, the credulous Father perceiving nothing in the whole Proposal, but what was for the Advantage of the King, of Religion, and his Society, undertook to negotiate the Affair without any Hesitation, and he was so sanguine in his Expectation of bringing it to pass, that he actually promis'd M. Constance it shou'd be done, admitting that Father de la Chaize would interfere in it, and use his Interest with the King.

him

From that Moment the whole Se- The Secret cret of the Embassy was reposed in why that Father Tachard, and he was deter- Minister was against min'd to return to France, with the Count For-Siamese Ambassadors. Matters being to France. fettled thus far, Constance imagin'd that nothing cou'd be more prejudicial to his Project, than my Return to France; and his Reason for it was this: In the various Negotiations which I had manag'd with him, by Virtue of my Function, as Major of the Embassy,

he

1685. he discovered in me that Openness, that Character of Frankness which render'd it impossible for me to dissemble, or to call Things by their wrong Names. Therefore he was apprehenfive, that as I had no very great Notion of Siam, or of any Commerce that cou'd be settled there, which I had declared very frankly, though I did not, in the least, suspect his Defign; he apprehended, I say, that when I came to France, I shou'd make the fame Declaration as I had done at Siam, and that, by divulging my intire Opinion of this Country, I should, with a Word's speaking, dash that Project in Pieces, on the Success of which he founded all his Hopes.

AND, if I must speak the Truth, he was much in the right to be diffident of me upon this Article; for I shou'd certainly have told every Thing that I knew; having the Interest of my King too much at Heart, to give Way, by my Silence, to an Undertaking of very great Expence, and no Prosit. The Minister searing therefore that I shou'd mar all the Measures which he had hitherto conducted with so much Art, left no Stone un-turn'd to keep me at Siam, as I have already observed.

THESE that I have mention'd were the true Reasons of my being detain'd, tho' I was an utter Stranger to them, 1685. till the Ambaffadors were gone, when I had a long Conference with this Minister, in which he gave me the first Hint of a great Part of what I have related; and the rest I learnt afterwards, partly by private Discourse which I had with Perfons who knew the whole Secret, and, partly by the Contingence of future Events, of which I cou'd eafily trace the Spring, as fast as I saw them occur. I return now to my Life at Siam.

tho'

When the Ambassadors were gone, Description . I went with M. Constance to Louve, of Louve, and the the King of Siam's Country Seat, and Mandarins the Place of his ordinary Residence; there. for he goes to Joudia the Capital City, about Seven Leagues off, but very feldom, and on certain Days of Ceremony. Being introduced into the Palace here, for the first Time, I cou'd not help being extremely surprized at the Situation of the Mandarins. I was before very much concern'd to be left behind at Siam, but what I saw here, made me still more chagrin.

ALL the Mandarins were fitting in Their dark a Circle, upon Mats of small Ofier. Court, and There was but one Lamp to illuminate Candle. the whole Court, and when a Manda-ficks. rin wanted to read or write any Thing, he took a Piece of yellow Wax-Can-1685. dle out of his Pocket, which he kindled at this Lamp, and then put it upon a Piece of Wood, which, turning to either Side upon a Hinge, serv'd for a Candlestick.

> This Decoration, so different from what I ever faw at the Court of France, made me so curious as to ask M. Constance if all the Grandeur of the Mandarins confifted in what I then faw; to which he answered me in the Affirmative; and, perceiving that I was fo confounded, that I had not a Word to fay, he took me aside, and talking to me with more Freedom than ever he had done before, 'Don't be fur-' priz'd, says be, at what you now fee. This, in good Truth, is a poor ' Kingdom; but, however, your For-' tune shall not suffer by it: Leave ' that to me.' And after this, being desirous to discover his whole Mind to me, we had a long Conversation, wherein he let me into all his Views, that amounted to the fame which  ${f I}$  . just now mention'd. This Conduct of the Minister surpriz'd me altogether as much as the Misery of the Mandarins. For cou'd it be imagin'd, that one of his refined Politicks, wou'd have so freely open'd his Breast to a Man, whom he had so lately hindered from returning to his own Coun try, because he was always afraid to 1685. trust to his Discretion?

I WENT to the Palace every Day, TheCount's for two Months together, and cou'd Answer to never, but once, get a Sight of the the King King, but afterwards I saw him oftner. ask'd him This Prince ask'd me one Day, if I how he his was not very glad to stay at his Court? I court did not think my felf obliged to tell him the Truth, but made Answer, that I esteem'd it a very great Happiness to be in his Majesty's Service; yet there was not fuch a Falshood in Nature; for my Vexation that I cou'd not get back to France, increased at every turn, especially, when I saw with what Severity the smallest Faults were punish'd.

THE Person who causes Justice to be executed, is the King himself, who, as I have already faid, has always Four Hundred Executioners with him, for his ordinary Guard. Nobody can screen himself from the severe Punishments he inflicts; for the Sons and Brothers of the Kings are no more exempt than other Men.

THEY commonly slit the Mouths The Punish. to the very Ears, of fuch as don't ments infpeak enough, and sew up theirs who Criminals talk too much. For very trivial Faults, in Siam. they cut off Mens Legs, burn their

Arms with a red-hot Iron, strike them

with

-1685. with a Sabre, over their Heads, or pull their Teeth out. A Man is condemn'd, for nothing at all almost, to the Bastinado, to carry a Cangue, or Yoke about his Neck, or to be exposed bare-headed to the scorching Heat of the Sun; and there's scarce a Subject living, but, at one Time or other, has had the Points of Canes thrust under his Nails to the very Root, or his Feet put in the Cep or Stocks, and other Punishments of the like Kind.

My Surprize to see the great Mandarins exposed to such severe Treatment, made me ask M. Constance if I. had not Reafon to expect the like Fare. He answered in the Negative, and that this Severity did not extend to Foreigners; but he told a Lye, for, as I heard afterwards, he himself was bastinado'd, while his Predecessor was in the Administration.

The Cheap-

To conclude, the King provided a ness of Pro-very little House for me, where I had Thirty-fix Slaves to attend me, and a Couple of Elephants; but the Men are fo temperate in this Country, and Provisions so cheap, that my Housekeeping cost me but Five Sous a Day. As for my own Part, I tabled with M. Constance. My House being but meanly furnish'd, Twelve Silver Plates

Plates were added to it, and Two 1685. large Cups of the same Metal, but none of them very substantial, with Cur Au-Four Dozen of Napkins, and Two niture and yellow Wax - Candles, which were Table. allow'd me every Day. This was the whole Equipage, in short, of the Great Admiral and General of the King's Army.

When the King went to take the Air in the Country, or to hunt the Elephant, he found Provision for all his Attendants. We were ferved at such Times with Rice and Ragous after the Siamese Mode, which went down well enough with the Natives of the Country, but no Frenchman, who was not used to that Sort of Cookery, cou'd fancy them. Indeed M. Constance, who was generally of the Retinue, took Care to have better Food provided; but when special Affairs detain'd him at Home, I had much ado to make a Meal on what was cook'd for the King.

THE King often did me the Honour, HisInterest at Diversions of this Kind, to converse with the with me, and I answer'd him by the Mouth of the Interpreter who was allowed me by M. Constance. As this Prince gave me many Testimonies of his good Will, I ventur'd sometimes to take Liberties which he conniv'd at;

but .

1685. but would have cost another Man very dear. One Day when he was going to have one of his Domestics chastis'd, for having forgot a Handkerchief, I, not knowing the Customs of the Country, and being ambitious to make use of my Favour at Court, to do the poor Man Service, ventur'd to beg a Pardon for him.

His Prefumption upon it-

THE King, who was furpriz'd at my Presumption, was downright angry with me, infomuch that M. Constance, who was prefent, waxed pale, and was afraid I shou'd undergo a severe Punishment; but for my own Part, I had the Presence of Mind to tell the Prince, that the King of France my Mafter, when Mercy was begg'd for Criminals, was charm'd that he had an Opportunity of shewing his Moderation and Clemency; and that his Subjects, in Acknowledgment of those Acts of his Grace, ferv'd him with the more Zeal and Affection, and were always ready to stake their Lives for a Prince whose Goodness render'd him so amiable. The King's Heart being melted by my Answer, he pardon'd the guilty Person, by saying that he wou'd follow the Example of the King of France; but he added, that the fuch Kindness was well bestow'd upon French Men, who are by Nature generous, it wou'd be dangerous to shew it to 1685. the ungrateful Siameje, who were not to be restrained but by the severest Punishments.

This Adventure made a Noise in the Kingdom, and surprized the Mandarins, who expected I shou'd have my Mouth sewed up, for my Rashness; Constance also admonish'd me in private to take Heed for the Future, and greatly blamed me for being so pert and imprudent; but I made Answer, that I did not repent of what I had done, fince it had so well succeeded.

In fhort, it was fo far from hurting me, that I observed, the King, from that very Day, took the more Delight in conversing with me; for I diverted him by telling a thousand Stories, after my Manner, which he seemed to be pleased with. 'Tis true that a little Matter wou'd do it, he being a stupid and very ignorant Prince. One Day when he was hunting a young Elephant, he ask'd me what I thought of all those Preparations, which had really fomething in them that was magnificent. 'Sire, said I to him, The Au.

when I see your Majesty, follow'd thor's Comby all this Train, methinks I behold parison of the King to my Master, at the Head of his Levels XIV.

Troops, giving his Orders, and XIV. ' making Dispositions in a Day of Vol. I. G Battle.

1685. 'Battle.' This Answer, as I guess'd before-hand, pleas'd him hugely. For I knew, that he was fo fond of nothing in the World, as to be compared to Louis LE GRAND.

The Splen-.broad.

And, to speak the Truth, this, dor of the which was only a Comparison between he goes at the outward Grandeur and Magnificence of the two Princes, was not in all respects unjust, there being few Sights in the World finer than when the King of Siam goes abroad in public. For, tho' the Kingdom is poor, and one fees no Token of Grandeur in any Part of it; yet, when the King, who lives a recluse Life in the midst of his Palace, without the Admission of any Body to him, not even of his most intimate Confidents, to whom he never speaks, but thro' a Window; when, I say, this Prince appears in public, he shines in all the Pomp fuitable to the Majesty of a Great King.

A great Inundation here once a Year.

THE Time that he shews himself in the greatest Splendor is when he goes every Year upon the River, to command the Waters to retire. I have already faid, more than once, that the whole Kingdom is overflow'd Six Months in the Year: The chief Cause of it is the Melting of the Snow upon the Mountains of Tartary: But when the Winter returns, and the Thaw ceases, 1683. the Waters begin by Degrees to abate, and leaving the Country dry, the Siamese take that Time to gather in Its plentitheir Harvest of Rice, which grows here in greater Plenty than in any other Country in the World.

the

Ar this Season, after the Waters TheAnnual begin visibly to be diminish'd, the Ceremony King goes abroad for the Ceremony I King's comam speaking of. He appears upon a manding the Water great Throne, all shining with Gold, to retire. plac'd in the Middle of a stately Galley. Upon this Occasion, he is follow'd by a Crowd of great and little Mandarins affembled from all the Provinces, each in magnificent Galleys, accompany'd with a Multitude of others; and, with this Attendance, he goes to a certain Part of the River, where he strikes the Water with a Sabre, and commands it to retire. When they return from this Solemnity, there is a confiderable Reward for the Galley which comes back first to the Palace. Nothing is fo pretty as this Struggle, and to fee the various Arts of the nimble Galleys to get the Start of one another. To return to our Hunting. After Instances of the Elephant was taken, the King the Cuncontinued his Discourse with me; and Elephants, endeavour'd to convince me what a Share of Understanding those Animals

1685. seem to be endow'd with. 'The Beast ' that I now ride on, says the Prince, ' may be brought as an Instance of it. Not long ago, there was a Corna or Groom that used to make him fast, by letting him have but half of the Food which was his usual Allowance. 'This Animal, which had no other ' Way of complaining, but by its Cries, made such a horrid Noise that it was heard all over the Palace. Being ' at a great Loss to think why he cry'd fo much, at last, I mistrusted the ' Cause, and plac'd a new Corna to ' take Care of him, who being more honest, and giving him his whole ' Measure of Rice, without robbing ' him of a Grain, the Elephant parted ' it into two Parcels with his Trunk, and when he had eat just one half, he cry'd out again, plainly hinting ' by it to those who came to see what was the Matter with him, how un-' faithful the former Corna was to him, ' who confess'd his Crime, and was by my Orders severely chastised. THE Prince also told me several other Passages upon this Head, which I shou'd have hardly believed, if they had come from any Body else. But these that follow are Facts which I faw with my own Eyes. When the Elephants are rutting, they grow outrageous, so that, to pacify them, their Keepers are obliged to put a Female along with them, especially when they go to be water'd; at which time the Female goes before, with a Man riding upon her, who sounds a Sort of Horn, to warn People to be upon their Guard, and to retire out of the Way.

rageous,

An Elephant that they were thus leading to Water at Rutting-time, broke loose, and ran into the Midst of the River, roaring and making every Body fly out of his Way. took Horse and follow'd to see what was become of him. I found the Corna's Wife running with her young Child to the Brink of the River, where she reproach'd the Creature, as it were, in these Terms. You want my Husband's Leg to be cut off, do you: For you know that's the common Punishment of the Cornas when they let their Elephants escape; Well then, fince my Husband is to die, there's my Child too, come and kill it. When she had faid this, she laid the Child down, and went her Way. The Child began to cry, upon which the Elephant, feeming to be mov'd with Pity, leap'd out of the Water, took the Infant in his Trunk, and carry'd it to the House, where it lay quiet.

An Elephant's Trinmph over a Taylor.

1685. Upon another Day, I saw another Elephant, that was going to be water'd, which toffing his Trunk from one Side to the other, as it went along the Streets, carry'd it so near to the Face of a Taylor, that he prick'd him with his Needle to make him keep off. When the Creature came back from the River, he had a Mind to have t'other Fling at the Taylor, who prick'd him again, very gently; upon which, the Animal spouted upon the poor Taylor, in an Instant, a Pail-full of dirty Water, which he had brought in his Trunk, to be revenged of him. This done, the Elephant, seeing his Man so fous'd, triumph'd over him, in his Way, as one Man does when he has outwitted another.

THESE Beasts are as useful to the Siamese as if they were Domestic Servants, especially in the Care they take of their young Children; for they fnatch them up in their Trunks when they cry, and carry them to some Place where they lull them afleep, and when the Mother wants to have them, she demands them of the Elephant, who goes and brings them to her.

THE King continued to give me fresh Marks of his Good-Will towards me Day after Day, and admitted me

more

more and more into Intimacy with 1685. him. One Day as he return'd from Hunting, he was taken ill, and next The high Day grew worfe, upon which the Phy- which the sicians were call'd, who advis'd Bleed-Siamese of ing; but there was fome Objection their King. against this Remedy, because the Siamese, who look upon their King as a fort of Deity, never prefume fo far as to touch him. When the Affair was mov'd in Council, one of the Mandarins propos'd, that a great Curtain should be drawn before the King, and that a Slit might be made in it wide enough for his Majesty to put his Arm through it, by which means the Surgeon might bleed him, and not know it was the King.

This ridiculous Hint did not please The Diffe me by any means, and prefuming upon culty of letting him that Freedom with which I was in-Bio dappa dulged, of speaking my Mind, I said, that Hypord that Kings are like Suns, whose Light, by our Autho' obfcur'd by Clouds, is always visible; that do what they would, they cou'd never be able to cast such a Veil over the Majesty of the Prince, as totally to eclipse it; but that if Bleeding was absolutely necessary, there was a French Surgeon at Court, who being a Native of a Country where Kings and Princes, whenever they want it, are blooded without any scruple; G 4

bout the

aame (e

agods.

1685, they need only fend for him, and I wou'd engage that his Majesty would not repent of the Confidence he should think fit to place in him. The King lik'd my Advice; but he recover'd his Health, and had no Occasion to take it.

corrected a-

Much about that Time, an unforefeen Accident happen'd, which discover'd an Affair, wherein M. Constance had grossly imposed upon M. de Chaumont Mistake and his Retinue. I took Notice, that while he was displaying the Riches of Siam to him, he took great Care to shew them the finest Pagods in the Kingdom, and that he affirm'd they were all of solid Gold. Among those Statues there was one like a Colossus, fifteen or sixteen Foot high, which he made them believe was of the fame. Metal. Father Tachard and the Abbé de Choisy, were deceiv'd in it as well as the rest of our Countrymen, and they believ'd it to be fuch a certain Matter of Fact, that they have put it down in their History. By Misfortune the Roof of the Chapel, wherein this Statue was erected, fell in and dash'd the Pagod to pieces, which prov'd to be only of Plaister gilt. The Imposture was discover'd, but the Ambassadors were far enough off; I cou'd not help rallying M. Constance so much upon this Head, that I 1685.

found it made him uneafy.

Soon after this, M. Constance and I had Orders to go to Bancock, to A Fort build a new Fort there, which was to order'd to be be deliver'd to the French Soldiers Bineock that the King of Siam had sent for, for a French and expected by the Return of the Ambassadors. We there drew the Model of a Pentagon. As Bancock is the Key of the Country, the King kept a Garrison there in a little square Fort, of two Companies of Forty Men each, form'd of Portuguese-Creolians, which is a Name they give to those born in the Indies, whose Father is a Portuguese, and whose Mother is a Japonese Christian. This. Garison hearing that I was arriv'd with the Character of a General, and that I was to be their Commander, mutiny'd.

A Priest of their Nation was the A Muting, Author of it; who had no sooner said of PortuMass, but assuming the Air of a Person inspir'd, turn'd to the People, and thus harangu'd them; 'Dear Countrymen, said be, the Portuguese Nation
having always had the Predominancy in the Indies, it wou'd be a Disgrace to have it said, that a Frenchman at this Time, pretends to lord it over

' you. March out then with Courage,

 $\mathbf{G}_{5}$

1685. ' and suffer not such an Affront. Fear , 'nothing; God will bless you as he has always done hitherto; mean · time receive his Benediction; which in his Name I now give.' There wanted nothing more to put them all in Motion.

WHILE Constance and I were employ'd in the Disposition of the Workmen to begin the Ditches of the Fort, a Portuguese Colonel came with News to Constance, that his Soldiers had rebell'd: The Minister asking the Reafon of it, the Colonel reply'd, it was because they wou'd not obey a French Officer.

A T these Words I advanc'd up to one of the Bastions, and saw a Company of Soldiers with their Muskets shoulder'd, marching directly towards the Fort. I acquainted M. Constance of it, and taking him afide; 'This ' Officer, faid I to him, is certainly an Accomplice with the Rebels, be- cause he stay'd till they were actually on the March, before he came to ' give you Notice of it. They have ' a Design upon your Person as well ' as mine. The first thing I'll do, shall be to feize this Colonel, whom I'll ' oblige to fend his Soldiers back again, and if he resist, I'll kill him on the ' Spot.' Then drawing my Sword, I ran at the Portuguese, disarm'd him 1685e with as much Ease as I wou'd a Child, and holding the Point of my Sword to his Breast, I threaten'd to run him through, if he did not call out to the Rebels to return to their Quarters.

CONSTANCE acquitted himself very well upon this Occasion; he sallied out of the Fort with a great deal of Resolution and Intrepidity, and facing the Mutineers, who were not above ten Paces from the Gate, he demanded of them, with a noble Air of Desiance, what they would be at? They answer'd One and All, that they wou'd not have the Frenchman to be their Commander. The Minister, who wanted neither Sense nor Courage, assured them that I was indeed to have the Command of the Siamese, but not of one Portuguese.

This Answer seem'd to pacify them, when one of the Company seeing his. Comrades on the one Hand uncertain what to do, and on the other Hand hearing the Colonel calling out to them with all his Strength from the Top of the Bastion, to obey M. Constance, he laid his Hand upon the Hilt of his Sword, 'To what purpose, sciel he, The Muris are all these Arguments? have we my pacify'd; any Reason to depend upon his

Promites?' Constance, who saw him-felf

1685. felf in danger of having his Throat cut the next Moment, rush'd upon the Villain, took away his Sword, and after having fweeten'd his Comrades with good Words, fent them Home.

As this Attempt might have been attended with dangerous Confequences, : if it had gone off with Impunity, the Colonel was apprehended, as were also the Soldiers and Officers, who had enter'd into the Conspiracy; and by Order of M. Constance, I call'd a Council of War, which in truth was very oddly regulated; but we were in a Country where none had ever been assembled before; however, we condemn'd the Soldier who had laid his Hand upon the Hilt of his Sword, to have his Hand cut off. Two others, who were convicted of having been the Heads of the Conspiracy, were sentenc'd to Death; some of the Officers were banish'd, and the rest of the Soldiers condemn'd to the Gallies: But before they were sent thither, they were chain'd two and two together, like our Galley Slaves, and oblig'd to work on the Fortifications. This Execution being over, and all the necessary Orders given for carrying on the Works, M. Constance and I return'd for Louvo.

And pu-nified.

A т our Arrival, M. Constance found 1685 himself involv'd in a troublesome Assair, which had like to have ruin'd him, and I can truly fay, he wou'd never have got out of the Scrape, if it had not been for me. His Avarice for Gain, brought it upon him, and the Occasion was this: Before we set out for Bancock, he had a Mind to buy a The Mini-Quantity of Sandal Wood, and apply'd fter's Opfor it to the Sieur de Rouan, a French the French Hugonot, who had fent for a great Merchant. Quantity from the Isle of Timor, and made considerable Profit by some Parcels of it which he had already fold. Constance was desirous to take the rest off his Hands; but he wanted it at a low Price, to which the Merchant would never hearken; whereupon a Misunderstanding ensued, the Minister fought to pick a Quarrel with him, and by virtue of his Authority, he caus'd him to be arrested and clapp'd into Irons.

At that very Time we fet out for Bancock. During our Absence, the Factor of the French Eastern Company being inform'd of the Sieur de Rouan's Trouble, and refolv'd to have Satisfaction for the Affront he faid had been put on his Country, went to Louve and fet up the white Flag op- Satisfaction posite to the Palace. The King being demanded fur- for it.

surpriz'd at the Novelty of it, sent a Mandarin to know the Cause of it. The Factor said, he was come to demand Justice for the Wrong done to his Nation: That a Frenchman had been put in Irons, who had been guilty of no Crime; that he demanded Reparation for it, and that otherwise he must beseech his Majesty to give leave to him, and every Frenchman in the Kingdom, to depart it.

THE King, who knew not how far his Minister had a Hand in it, sent to tell the Factor that he might return to his House, and that when M. Constance and I were come back, he would inquire into the Affair, and cause Justice to be done. This Prince, especially ever since the Embassy, was very fond of the French, ready to protect them, and forry whenever they left his Kingdom.

W E were fearce got to Louve, when M. Constance was made acquainted with the Factor's Proceeding, upon which, without Loss of Time, he went to the Palace, thinking by one Word to overthrow all that had been alledg'd against. The King him; but he found himself mistaken, calls his Mi- for the incens'd King gave him hard nister to ac- Words, and threaten'd to have him. punish'd, if he did not clear himself. thoroughly.

CON-

CONSTANCE answer'd in sew 1685. Words, 'That he was so far from a Thought of using the French Nation The Mini. 'ill, that there were no People in the for his Cha-Kingdom for whom he had so much racter to our Respect; that he intreated his Mae jesty to appeal for a Testimony of it to me, who being both by my Birth and Employments, far above f that Factor, it was very likely that ' I should have complain'd to his Ma-' jesty, if there had been Occasion; but that he hop'd it would not be · long before I came in to bear Wite ness to his Innocence, and to certify ' to his Majesty how cautious he always ' had been of doing any thing which ' might give Offence to the French • Nation.

M. CONSTANCE, who went directly from the Palace in quest of me, had no fooner found me out, but he faid, 'Sir, you have now and ' Opportunity of doing me substantial Service. The Factor of the French. ' Company has complain'd against me ' for the Imprisonment of the Sieur ' de Rouan; who you know as well as ' I, tho' by Birth a Frenchman, yet he is ' a Hugonot, and that being therefore ' oblig'd to leave France, he spent ' feveral Years in the Service of the " English, and that he does not belong to the French Company, nor ever ' did: Notwithstanding this, the Factor e protects him with all his Power; and tho' he is not ignorant that the 'Sieur de Rouan is become a perfect • Englishman, not only by his Dee parture from France, but by the Re-' ligion which he professes, yet he declares for him with a high Hand, and is for joining him to the Body of that Nation which he has for ' folemnly renounc'd. No doubt, you are sensible of the Injustice of this · Procedure: I hope you will go with me to the King to justify me, and ' that you will ferve me upon this Occasion, as I would ferve you, were you in my Cafe.

BEFORE M. Constance left me, the King fent for me; upon which, I went forthwith to the Palace, where I found the whole Council filently waiting the Issue of this Ashir. There was not one of the Mandarins but wish'd for the Ruin of the Minister, which the greatest Part of them reckon'd unavoidable; and they were the more confident of it, because the Complainant being a Frenchman, they did not doubt but I wou'd support the Factor's Plea. But they were disappointed in their Expectations, for I justify'd M. Constance to the full. After having extol'd his Zeal Zeal for his Majesty's Service, I repre- 1685. fented, that the Frenchman who had been punish'd, ought not to be deem'd The Auas a Member of that Nation, because thor's Vinthe King my Master had banish'd him him to the from his Dominions; and if the Factor Council. had known it, furely he wou'd not have interested himself so warmly for a Man who belong'd to the English, and not to France. I declar'd that I wou'd take it upon myself to satisfy the Factor. I added, that I cou'd not express my Gratitude to his Majesty for the Protection he vouchsafed to our Nation, and begg'd him to continue it; affuring him, that the King my Master wou'd not fail to acknowledge it.

My Testimonial in Favour of Con- The King's ftance, was so effectual with the King, Pardon of the Minithat it appeas'd him in an Instant; for ster. turning towards me, he graciously told me, Choca di nacna, i.e. 'Tis enough, I am satisfy'd. I hasted immediately to the Minister, to acquaint him with what had pass'd; for which he hung about my Neck, and embrac'd me a thousand and a thousand times; assuring me, that he wou'd never forget the fignal Service I had done him.

I represented to him, that in order to put a final Issue to this Affair, it The French was convenient to knock off the French-Merchant man's Irons, to fet him at full Liberty, fet at Li-1685. -~ and to restore his Cargo of Sandal-Wood to him, praying him withal, for the suture, to let the French have a free Trade over all his Dominions; and adding, that, upon this Condition, I wou'd easily mollify the Company's Factor. Constance promis'd, and perform'd what I desir'd of him, so that the Affair ended without any ill Consequence.

The Ingratitude of Confiance to our Author. AFTER having done M. Constance such important Service, I might well expect to find him a sure Friend at all times. Yet this same Service was one of the principal Causes of all the Mischiefs he endeavour'd to do me hereafter.

His natural Temper.

CONSTANCE was naturally very jealous and mistrustful. He cast an evil Eye at first upon the King's Goodness towards me; and wish'd from his Heart, that the Prince had not indulg'd me with fuch a Liberty of faying what I pleas'd; yet all this prov'd no more than a flight Alarm to him. But when he faw, that only one Word of mine was fufficient to extricate him out of great Trouble, he began to be afraid of me in good Earnest; and confidering with himself, that some Day or other perhaps, I might ruin him with as much as Eafe as I had protected him, he bethought himself serioufly, riously, which way he shou'd blast a 1685. Man who he imagin'd was already too far advanc'd in the King's Favour; and therefore resolved to ruin me, whatever it cost him.

His Jea. Ioufy of our Author

While he was musing about the Ways and Means to effect his Resolution, he had Reason to be confirm'd in it by a new Favour with which the King was pleas'd to honour me. This Prince order'd him to acquaint me, that he had nominated me to the Dig- A new Dignity of Opra sac di son Craam, which nity conis almost tantamount to that of Marshal Count. of France. This barbarous Name means a Divinity which has all Knowledge, and all Experience for War; at the same time he appointed the Day for my Reception, and commanded him to take care that every thing was made ready. The Ceremony was as follows.

THE Mandarines came to my House, The Cereand conducted me from thence to the mony of his Court-yard of the Palace. When we ment. were advanc'd as far as about one hundred Paces from the Window where the King was, I fell proftrate with my Body to the Ground, as did all the great Mandarins who were with me. We march'd upon our Elbows and Knees for about fifty Paces, preceded by two Masters of the Ceremonies in the same Posture.

1685. Posture. When we were come to a certain Distance from the Place where we set out, we all together made a second Obeisance, which was by rising on our Knees, joining our Hands over our Heads, and striking the Earth with our Foreheads. All this was perform'd with a profound Silence; and, in fine, when we arriv'd under the King's Window, we made our third Prostration; at which time the Prince sent me some Betel, and pronounc'd two Words; which were as much as to fay, I receive you in my Service.

Nut defciib'd.

The Beret. THE Betel, which the King gives upon this Occasion, is one of the most fingular Favours that he can confer upon any Subject. 'Tis a kind of Fruit almost like an Acorn, with a green Rind, full of small Fibres and insipid Liquor. They quarter it, and mix it with Lime made of Shells reduc'd to a Powder, and then wrap it up in a Leaf resembling that of Ivy. The Siamese take a great Pleasure in chewing it, and think 'tis very wholsome.

More of the ≥bove Ceremony.

THE Ceremony of my Installment concluded much in the same manner as it began: We return'd in the same Posture upon our Elbows and Knees, making three Reverences as we went back, the King standing all the time at the Window, and keeping his Eye upon us to the very Place from whence we 1685 started.

We were no fooner come thither, but a Master of the Ceremonies gave me the Bouffette, with its Case, and a red Box to put them in. This Boussette is a fort of little Cabinet of Gold and Silver laid on very thin, neatly engrav'd with several Figures of Dragons represented on the Outside. In this Cabinet are two little Cups of Gold, which are very thin likewise, one for the Betel, and the other to hold the Leaves to put it in. There is also a Gold Case to put the Lime in, a finall kind of Spoon of the same Metal, to apply the Lime to the Betel, and a little Knife with a Gold Haft to cut the Nut.

WHEN all was over, the Mandarins, who accompany'd me, paid me a very fhort Compliment according to Custom, bowing their Heads, with their Hands join'd upon their Breasts, and then reconducted me to my own Habitation. This Ceremony ended, the King being dispos'd to add one Favour to another, fent me two Pieces of India Stuffs with Gold Flowers, which were large enough to make me two rich Suits.

THESE last Marks of the King's Good-will to me, having, as I observid, rais'd the Jealousy of M. Constance to a more violent Pitch than ever, he, without without farther Scruple, resolv'd to leave no Stone unturn'd to get rid of me. As he saw it in vain for him to pretend any longer to disparage me in the King's Esteem, he resolv'd at first to poison me; but I had notice of it from a Friend, which determined me to eat by myself.

The Minifter's Envy of the Count, and his Plot to poison him.

eat by myself.
Tho' this wa

Tho' this was enough to make him mistrust that I had at least some Hint of his Defign, yet it did not alter his Purpose; for one Day when I had an Ague, not knowing my Indisposition, he sent me fome Milk curdled, of which he knew I was not a little fond; tho' if I had been ever so well, I shou'd have been far from touching it, after what I had been told. I happen'd unawares to leave it where my Slaves cou'd come at it, so that four of 'em eat it, and dy'd upon the Spot. I spoke of this Affair to the Bishop of Meletopolis, who told me, that he knew no Remedy for me, but to put my Trust in God, and be always on my Guard.

Another to remove him from the Court.

CONSTANCE having miscarry'd in this first Attempt, contriv'd a Project to remove me at least from the Court; and the State of Assairs soon surnish'd him with an Opportunity to effect it. But being resolv'd not only to remove me, but to pursue me to Destruction, his Brain, which was always teeming with Expe-

Expedients, suggested so many other 1685: Methods to him of getting me out of the way, that he did not doubt but at last I shou'd succumb. I shall now relate the Opportunity he had, and the Advantage he made of it.

ONE of the Princes of the Macassars, The Mawith about three hundred of his Sub- caffars fly to Siam for, jects, having fled from the Oppression Resuge. of the Dutch, had taken Refuge for some time in the Kingdom of Siam. At his Arrival, he address'd himself to the King, who pitying his Misfortune, kindly receiv'd him, and allotted him a Camp according to the Custom of the Country; that is to fay, a certain Portion of Ground, to which he and his Men might retire.

This turbulent, ambitious Macassar Their Prot cou'd not be long at quiet; but con- withomer princes aspir'd with the Princes of Cambodia, gainst the Malacca, and Chiampa, to put the King to Death, and to feize the Kingdom, which they had already shar'd betwixt them. And as they were all Mahometans, they had agreed to make such a Massacre of the Portuguese and Japonese Christians, as not to leave one Man alive. M. Constance being inform'd of the Conspiracy, and of the very Day that it was to break out, had a Conference with the King, and iffued the neceffary

K. of Stam.

1686. cessary Orders for the Safety of the Kingdom.

> THERE could not be a more fair Opportunity to remove me from Court. Bancock, of which I was Governor, was a Place of too great Importance to be abandon'd at fuch a perillous Juncture.

Repair to his Post at Bancock.

The Count's I had Orders therefore, to repair thither forthwith, to see the Fortifications finish'd without Delay, to raise a new Levy of Siamese Soldiers, to the Number of Two thousand Men, and to discipline them A-la-mode de France.

The Mo. ney paid thim from the Treafury.

To defray the Charge of my Post of General, Constance had Orders to pay me One hundred Cati's, which amount to Fifteen thousand French Livres; but I receiv'd no more than One thousand Crowns; the Minister pretending there was not Money enough at that time in the Treasury, so that he only gave me his Note, with an Assurance, that when certain Ships came home, which he expected every Day from China, I shou'd be paid the remaining Twelve thousand Livres.

THE King, that I might have all due Obedience and Respect paid me in my Government, gave me four of his Executioners, for the fake of doing Justice upon Criminals; which, however, extended no farther than a Bastinado or so, none but the King, generally rally speaking, or upon certain Occa- 1686 sions, his Chief Minister, having a Power to pass Sentence of Death.

I SET out without knowing one Tittle of the Conspiracy, or why I was The Minisent to my Government. Constance, ster's Plot who knew the very Day upon which Count's the Rebels were to make their final falling into Rendezvous, concerted his Measures so of the Man well, and timed my Departure so nicely for my falling into their Clutches, that when I knew nothing of the Matter, I found myself in the middle of the Conspirators, who met exactly in my Road, and yet, for what Reason I can't tell, suffer'd me to pass on, their Plot being to break out next Day, or the Day after at farthest.

WHEN I came to Bancock, I ran as Another of great a Risque as I had escap'd before: the Minifor Constance, unknown to me, had no to sacrifice sooner heard of this Conspiracy, but he him to the Portuguese. sent Orders for releasing those Portuguese who had been condemn'd to the Gallies by a Council of War; and had order'd, that Companies shou'd be form'd out of them as heretofore, and that their Officers shou'd be recall'd from Banishment.

To fend me hither in this Manner, without giving me the least Intimation of the Favour intended to the Portuguese, was delivering me, as it were, Vol. I.

for the

1686. bound Hands and Feet to my Enemies. I perfectly understood the Meaning of The Count's it when I arriv'd, and found Men under baffie them. Arms, whom I had but a little before put in Chains. But the Malice of Constance did me no Prejudice; I was upon my Guard in the very Beginning, and I manag'd the Soldiers and Officers fo artfully, by feasting the latter, and by my obliging Carriage to the former, that I won the Hearts of both; and tho' they were Enemies to me when I left them before, I made them now fo much my Friends, that they lov'd me for the future, fincerely and cordially.

Apother of the Minifter's Plots to embroil Chim with The Mi-Kaffars.

M. CONSTANCE, the' fornewhat pleas'd he had remov'd me from Court, yet enrag'd that he had not yet carry'd his main Point, laid a new Trap for me, which he thought cou'd not miss, and which wou'd infallibly have fucceeded, if the Lord had not visibly protected me; but at length I escap'd it so well, that I receiv'd no Damage from it as to my Person, tho' it put me to a great deal of Fatigue in other Respects, and occasion'd the Effusion of much Blood; as will appear from what I am going to relate.

THE Captain of a Galley of one of the Macassars Islands, who came to Siam to trade, was deeply engag'd in the Conspiracy, but finding it had miscarry'd, was

return'd

return'd aboard, refolv'd to go home, if 1686. he faw an Opportunity, or else to sell his Life dearly, if they offer'd to force him. M. Constance, that he might have the fewer Enemies to deal with, wanted to separate him from the rest of the Conspirators, and therefore made him the Offer of a Pass; by means of which he and his Crew, to the Number of Fiftythree Men, might depart the Kingdom in Peace, and go where they pleas'd.

THE Captain was fo fond of the Offer, that he made no Scruple to accept it. M. Constance perceiving then that it was in his Power at the same time both to divide the Enemy, and to ruin me without Remedy, sent a Courier to me, with Orders from the King, to hang out the Chain, and to hinder the Departure of the Ship. He declar'd to me, that the Captain and the whole Crew were Accomplices in the Conspiracy, and order'd me to have no Regard to their Pass, which had only been granted to deceive and weaken them.

THE Order fignify'd likewise, that when the Galley was arriv'd at the Chain, I shou'd go aboard her, take an exact Inventory of all her Cargo, and then make a Seizure of the Captain and all the Crew, and detain thems under Arrest, till fresh Orders: And,

H 2

1685. by a separate Article, I was most exprefly forbid to let any Soul know the Orders I had receiv'd, because certain Reasons of State demanded inviolable Secrecy upon this Head. Thus did he fend me, as it were, to the Slaughterhouse, by prescribing me, time after time, every Step that I shou'd take, to my utter Destruction.

I WAITED a long time for the Arris val of this Galley to the Chain, and amus'd myself in the mean while, by * Exercifing the Troops I had rais'd according to my Commission; which I executed indeed, without much Difficulty; for Levies of this Kind are made at Siam in a very little time, and with a vast deal of Ease, because the King being absolute Master of all his Subjects, the Governors in his Name take up whom they think fit; and the People, who are very tractable, march and obey without Grumbling.

I DIVIDED my new-rais'd Soldiers into Companies of fifty Men each, placing at the Head of each, a Captain, a Lieutenant, an Ensign, two Serjeants, four Corporals, and four Lancepesades. I took so much Care in Exercising them, that with the Help of some Portuguese Soldiers, who understood the Siamese Language, and of a Frenchman whom I made a Serjeant, they were in less than fix Days able to mount and come 1685. off of the Guard, to fix the Centries, and to relieve them, as they do in France.

I HAVE already observ'd, that these People are so wonderfully tractable, that one may make them do what one will; for these Two thousand Men perform'd their Exercise afterwards, and were as well disciplin'd as any Soldiers of the Guards.

I STILL expected the Macassars. As I had no Prison where I cou'd keep them, I caus'd one to be built joining to the Courtain, over-against the New Fort. It was form'd of great Piles; and I made it so strong, that a very small Guard wou'd suffice to keep fifty Prisoners there in safe Custody.

THE Chain had been hung up incessantly Day and Night for three Weeks, for fear of a Surprize, before the Galley (which I had Orders to stop) came in Sight. According to the Plan I had form'd for the furer Execution of my Commission, I deviated in some measure from the Instructions of M. Constance. For as I did not think it confistent either with my Safety or my Dignity to go aboard her, while the Macassars were in Possession of her, I resolv'd to engage them to come ashore; and after I had arrested them, then to H<sub>3</sub>

1686. go on board, and take the Inventory order'd by the Minister. With this View, as foon as ever I cou'd fee them, · I posted Soldiers at certain Places, réady to furround them whenever I fent. Orders.

THE Galley arriving at the Chain, and finding the Passage stop'd, the Captain, with seven of his Men, came ashore to speak with me. He was conducted to the Old Fort, where I receiv'd him under a great square Pavillion, which I had caus'd to be built with Canes in one of the Bastions of the Fort; of which that Side fronting the Neck of the Bastion, was inclosed by a large Curtain.

with the Macaffars Captain.

The Count's As they enter'd in, I made them a Conference Compliment; and desiring them to sit down round a Table where I commonly din'd with the Officers, I ask'd the Captain from whence he came, and whither he was bound. He told me, that he came from Siam, and was returning to the Island of the Macassars; and at the same time shew'd me his Pass. After having made a Shew of examining it, I told him it was a very good one; but I added, 'That as I was a Foreigner, ' and but newly enter'd in the King's 5 Service, I ought to be more punctual ' than another in the Observation of all Orders given to me; and that by reafon ' of of the Rebellion which he had un- 1686. ' doubtedly heard of, I had receiv'd very strict Orders to hinder any Siamese from going out of the Kingdom. The Captain said he had nobody aboard but Macassars. To which I answer'd, that I did not in the least question the Truth of what he said; but that, as I was encompass'd with Siamese, who had a Spy upon alf my Actions, I desir'd him, to the * End that the Court might have nothing to lay to my Charge, to let all his Crew come ashore; assuring him, that after they were known to be

" Macassars, they wou'd have nothing to do but to go aboard again; that * the Chain shou'd be taken away, and that they shou'd be at Liberty to go where they pleas'd.'

THE Captain, without Hesitation, The Mareply'd, With all my Heart; but they shall cassing Crit, or Dagger, come ashore arm'd. Then, looking upon him with a Smile, What, said I, are we in a State of War? No, reply'd he ; but the Crit (Dagger) which I have by my Side, and which is the Weapon we all wear, is such a Mark of Honour among us, that 'tis infamous for us to be without it. This Reason I thought was so unanswerable, that I comply'd, not thinking that a Weapon I then look'd upon H 4 with 1685. with fuch Contempt, wou'd prove so dangerous as I afterwards found it.

This Crit is a kind of Dagger about a Foot long, and an Inch and half broad towards the Hilt: 'Tis wav'd and pointed like an Adder's Tongue, is forg'd out of well-temper'd Steel, and has two Edges that cut like a Razor; they put it into a wooden Sheath, and never lay it aside.

THE Captain sent two of his Men to fetch the rest that were aboard, during which, I treated him with Tea, till I had Word brought me, that they were all landed, at which time I propos'd to send my Orders to apprehend them. As I thought it long before they came, I rose up, and pretending that I had some Order to issue, I desir'd a Mandarin who was present, to supply my Place; adding, that I wou'd return in an Instant.

My Siamese Gentlemen, who were watchful of every Motion, were in great Pain to know for what I design'd the Soldiers that I had posted up and down. As I went out of the Pavillion, I found an old Portuguese Officer, a brave Man, whom I had preferr'd to be a Major, waiting for my Orders. Sir, said I Go and warn such and such to be ready, and as soon as the Macassars bave passed such a Place, which I pointed to him, do you begin to surround them, and then dis- 1686. arm them, and keep 'em under Arrest till I send you Word what must be done with em.

The Portuguese being startled at what I had been saying; Sir, said he, I ask your Pardon; the Thing you propose is not seasible; you don't know the Macassars as well as I do: I am a Brat of the Indies; believe me, they are a People not to be taken; they'll lose their Lives first: And, let me tell you, if you do but offer to lay Hands on that Captain now in the Pavillion, he and the few Men with bim, will kill every Mother's Son of us.

I DID not pay that Attention which I ought to have done to the Advice of the Portuguese; but persisting in my Scheme; which I thought very easy to put in Execution, Go, said I, to him, carry my Orders as punctually as you have receiv'd them; I am persuaded, that before they'll lose their Lives, they'll think of it more than once. The Major went away very forrowful, leaving his good. Advice with me at parting, in these Words: For God's fake, Sir, take beed what you do, they'll infallibly kill you; believe what I have the Honour to tel!

you, 'tis for your Good.

THE Zeal of this Officer put me upon Consideration. That I might run no Risque, I caus'd twenty Siamese Sol-

H 5 diers.

1686. diers (ten of which were arm'd with Lances, and ten with Muskets) to enter into the Neck of the Bastion; then I caus'd the Curtain of the Pavillion to be drawn; and advancing towards the Entrance, I order'd a Mandarin to go and tell the Captain from me, that I was very much concern'd at the Order I had to arrest him, but that he might depend on't, I wou'd in all Respects use him well.

His Encounter with the Macassars when he arreited them.

This poor Mandarin, who ferv'd me as an Interpreter, readily obey'd; but he had no sooner spoke the Word when the Six Macassars throwing their Caps on the Ground, drew their Daggers, and falling on like Devils, kill'd in an Instant my Interpreter and Six other Mandarins who were in the Pavillion. At the Sight of this Slaughter, I retreated towards my Soldiers who were arm'd; I snatch'd the Lance of one of them out of his Hand, and cry'd out to the others to fire.

ONE of these Six Desperadoes rushing upon me with his drawn Dagger, I plung'd my Lance into his Stomach; nevertheless, the Macassar, as if he had no Sense of Feeling, advanc'd upon the Weapon which I held fast in his Body, and made incredible Efforts to come at me, in order to run me through; and he wou'd infallibly have done done it, if the Hilt of the Blade had 1686. not hinder'd him. I found that my best way was to retreat a little, still keeping the Lance in his Stomach, without venturing to repeat my Thrust, till at length I was reliev'd by others of the Lance-men, who laid him dead upon the Spot.

Of the Six Macassars, Four were kill'd in the Pavillion, and the two others, tho' fadly wounded, made their Escape by leaping down from the Bastion. The Boldness, or rather the Rage of these six Men having con+ vinc'd me, that what the Portuguese had told me was true, and that they were indeed Men not to be taken, I began to dread the other Forty-seven who were on the March. Therefore I chang'd the Order I had given for arresting them, and knowing there was no other Remedy, I resolv'd to have them all kill'd, if it were possible. With this View I not only fent, but went in Person to every Place toassemble the Soldiers.

MEAN time the Macassars being landed, march'd towards the Fort, upon which I fent Orders to an English Captain, whom M. Constance had put at the Head of Forty Portuguese, to intercept them and hinder their advancing; and in case they resused, to fire upon them, H 6 adding.

1686. adding, that I wou'd be with him in a Moment, to Support him with all the Soldiers I cou'd get together. Upon the Order which the Englishman sent them to halt, they made a fudden Stop, during which I caus'd my Men to advance in the best Order I cou'd. They were arm'd with Muskets and Lances; but were not much to be depended on, for they were all new-rais'd Soldiers, and by no means fit for Action.

WHEN we were about Fifty Paces Length from the Macassars, we made a Halt. There were several Parleys Betwixt us: I fent them Word, that if they pleas'd, they might return to their Galley; for I imagin'd, that in that Case it would be an easy Matter to kill every Man of 'em with Musket-Shot, because they had none to defend themselves with, Fire Arms being what they never carry. They made Anfwer, That they were very willing to return aboard, but that they wou'd not leave the Shoar without their Captain.

THE English Captain tir'd with all these Delays, sent to tell me, that since they would not hearken to Reason, he would that Moment attack those infolent Scoundrels, and accordingly without staying for my Answer, he

march'd

march'd against them very unad- 1686. visedly.

visedly.

HE no fooner put himself in Motion, but the Forty-seven Macassars, who The Matill then were squatted on the Ground victory. after their Manner, rose up all at once, and rolling round their Left Arms a fort of Scarf, which they us'd to gird themselves with, they form'd a fort of Target with it, and then shielding their Bodies with that Bandage about their Arms, they fell on the Portuguese with their naked Daggers with fo much Fury and Vigour, that they broke their Ranks, and cut them to Pieces almost before we could perceive they had attack'd them. When they had done this, they push'd on immediately towards the Troops under my Command. The' I had above a Thousand Soldiers arm'd with Lances. and Muskets, yet they were so terrify'd. that they were all in Confusion. The Macassars defeated them, and killing 'all they could meet with on the Rightand Left, the Slaughter prov'd very terrible.

So general was the Rout, that they foon push'd us under the Wall of the new Fort. Six of them more bloodyminded than the others, who purfued those that fled, enter'd the false Bray. that faced the River, hard by the Wall 1686. of the little Square Fort, got over to the other Side of the River, and whereever they came, made a dreadful Destruction of Women, Children, and all that came in their Way, without Distinction of Age or Sex.

- In this Disorder the greatest Part of my Soldiers were fo mutinous, that I suffer'd them to make their Escape, and as a Lance was the only Weapon I had, I got to the Bank of the Ditch, being refolv'd if I was pursu'd to leap into it, the rather, because it was full of Mud, which I thought arould hinder them from purfuing me with their usual Agility.

THEY were so busy in killing, that they came within Ten Paces, and did stace perceive me. There was not one of the poor Siamese, but was too much eterrified to face about in his own Defence. At last, when I saw no possibility of rallying them, I made haste to the Gate of the new Fort, which was only form'd of a Barrier, and got upon a Bastion, from whence I order'd some Muskets to be fir'd supon the Enemy, who being Masters sof the Field of Battle, and finding nobody else to kill, retir'd to the Brink of the River.

AFTER having had a short Conference with one another, being drove to our .

the last degree of Despair, and resolv'd 1686. to put themselves under a Necessity of fighting, they went again aboard their Galley, set fire to it, and after having arm'd themselves with Targets and Lances, return'd ashoar with a Design to give no Quarter to any that they; met.

THEY first burnt all the Barracks of the Soldiers, which according to the Custom of the Country, were only built of Canes, and then marching up again by the Side of the River, they attack'd and kill'd all that they found in their Passage without Distinction. Such a Massacre so alarm'd all the Parts adjacent, that the River was equickly cover'd by Men and Women. swimming with their Children on their Backs.

I was so mov'd at this Spectacle, and so provok'd to see so many deady Bodies on the Field of Battle, that I pick'd up Twenty Soldiers arm'd with Muskets, and went aboard a Galley with them, in pursuit of those Desperadoes, whom about a League from the Fort I overtook, and we gave 'em fuch a Broadside, as oblig'd 'em to go farther from the River Side, and to retreat into fome Woods which they found within Land. Having not Men enough to pursue them, and they being above 1686. our Match, I did not presume to endeavour to force them, but chose to return to the Fort.

As foon as I arriv'd there, I had Intelligence that the fix Macassars, who had pass'd to the other Side of the false Bray, had made themselves Masters of a Convent of Talapoins and had kill'd all the Monks, among whom was a Mandarin of some Note, in whose Body one of the Macassars had left his Dagger, which was brought. to me. I hasten'd thither with Fourscore of my Soldiers arm'd with Lances, for as yet they knew not the Use of Fire Arms; and when I arrived at the Place, I found that the Siamese, no longer able to hold out, had been oblig'd to set the Convent on Fire.

I was told that the Macassars were hard by, squatting down in a Field full of thick Grass, almost three Foot in Height. I conducted my Troops thither, out of which I form'd two very close Ranks, threatning to kill the first Man that offer'd to fly. My Lancemen at first did but just move one Foot before the other, but by degrees my Presence made them bolder.

The first Macassar that we came to, rais'd himself on his Feet like a Fury, and lifting up his Dagger, was going to fall upon my Men, but I prevented it, by knocking him on the 1686. Head with a Musket. Four others were kill'd fuccessively by our Siamese, who never once flinch'd upon this Occasion, but stood by one another, and laid on their Lances heavily upon the miserable Wretches, who still fought as usual, chusing rather to meet Death by advancing, than to avoid it by retreating one Step.

WHEN I was proposing to return, I was told that there was a fixth Macassar still behind, who prov'd to be a young Fellow, the very same that had kill'd the Mandarin and left the Dagger in his Body. When we found him among the Grass, I charg'd my Soldiers not to kill him, for I should have been glad to have carry'd him away alive, because he was disarm'd; but they were so exasperated, and gave so little heed to what I said to them, that they stabb'd him in a Thousand Places.

AT our Return to the Fort, I assembled all the Mandarins, to confult with them what Course to take. and it was resolv'd, that we should rally all our Forces and pursue the Enemy as soon as we cou'd Jearn to what Place they were gone. I was defirous then to know the Number, of the Dead, and found that I had loft 1686. on this fatal Occasion Three hundred and fixty-fix Men, and the Macassars but Seventeen, viz. 6 kill'd in the Little Fort, Six in the Talapoins Convent, and 5 in the Field of Battle.

As I was entring my Pavilion for a little necessary Rest, after the Fatigues I had underwent, I was aftonish'd with a Spectacle which was the more difmal, because it was what I the least expected. Besides the Corpses of the Macassars and Siamese which, as yet, we had not found Time to carry away, I found, stretch'd at his Length, by my Bed-side, a young Officer whose Name was Beauregard, the Son. of one of the King's Commissaries at Brest. He was left behind at Siam, and I had made him Major of all the Siamese Troops. When I saw him in this Posture, I thought him dead, and my Heart was ready to break.

Count.

A misacu- PERHAPS what I am now going to mention will not be credited, because indeed it has much more the Air of a Romance, than of any thing else; yet I can affure the Reader, that I shall add nothing to it of my own Invention, and relate nothing but the naked Truth. As I drew near the Bed, and examined the young Man more strictly, I saw that he breath'd still, but he could not speak, and his Mouth

Mouth was all in a Froth; I found 1686. his Belly open, and his very Entrails and Stomach hanging out upon his Thighs. Not knowing what to do to help him, because I had no Remedy nor Surgeon, I ventur'd to manage him in the best Manner I cou'd my-felf.

HAVING, to this End, provided a Couple of Needles and some Silk, I restor'd his Entrails to their Place, and fewed the Wound up, in the Manner as I had before observed, on the like Occasions: I then made a Couple of Ligatures, which I ty'd together, and after having beat the White of an Egg, and mingled it with some Arrack, I try'd it for ten Days together upon the Patient, with fuch Success that he was cured. Indeed Beauregard never had any Fever, or other bad Symptom. I observed that when I replaced his Entrails in his Belly, they were grown as dry as Parchment, and clotted with coagulated Blood, yet it did not hinder the perfect Cure which follow'd in a few Days.

NEXT Morning I was informed that one of the fix Macassars, who had fought in the Pavilion, was not dead; for some of the Siamese Soldiers had seiz'd him, and, for Fear he shou'd make his Escape, they had ty'd and bound him, 1686. him, to that Degree, that he look'd like a Ball of Packthread: I went to fee him to ask Questions, and to get out of him, if possible, some Account, not only of his Comrades, but of the Commotions at Louve and Joudia. This Devil, for it is more than Man can do, and fuffer, had lain all Night in the Dirt, with a Composure of Mind that is perfectly aftonishing, for he had no less than seventeen Wounds in his Body, made with the Lances. I ask'd him fome Questions, but he made me Anfwer that he could not fatisfy me, till Lhad caus'd him to be un-harness'd. There was no Fear of his escaping, fo that I order'd a French Serjeant, who was with me, to unbind him; the Serjeant rested his Halbert against a little Tree, very near the wounded Man, and let it lie there after he had loosed him, because he thought he was in no Capacity to make any Attempt.

THE Macassar was no sooner at Liberty, but he began to stretch out his Legs and Arms, and to feel the Use of them. I perceived that, in his Anfwers to the Questions which I put to him, he turned, and endeavouring to gain Ground, drew by Degrees nearer and nearer to the Halbert, to lay hold of it. I knew his Design, and addreffing addressing myself to the Serjeant, Keep 1686. within Reach of thy Halbert, said I, let us see what this Furioso durst do. As soon as he thought himself near enough, he actually rushed upon it to seize it; but his Strength not being equal to his Courage, he fell, as it were, dead upon his Face, upon which I faw that there was no hopes of him, and therefore I instantly dispatch'd him.

I was so altonish'd at every Action A general I saw perform'd by these People, who Account of the Maras. feem'd to me so different from all the fars. rest of Mankind, that I was curious to know how it came to pass that they had so much Courage, or rather so much Fury. The Portuguese who had been born and bred in the Indies, to whom I put this Question, told me, that they were the Inhabitants of the Island Celebes or Macassar; that they were Schismatical Mahometans, and very superstitious; That their Priests gave them Letters written in magic Characters, which they ty'd to their Arms, and affured 'em that as long as they wore them, they wou'd be invulnerable; That one Thing contributed not a little to render them cruel and intrepid, which was a firm Belief that all Persons whom they kill'd in this World, excepting Mahometans, shou'd be as so many Slaves to serve them in the other. The Portuguese 1686. Portuguese told me moreover, that they are so strongly impress'd from their very Infancy, with what they call the Point of Honour, which with them is never to submit, that it was never yet known that any one of them acted in Breach of it.

> Being full of these Notions, they never beg Quarter nor give it, and ten Macassars, with their drawn Daggers, will attack ten Thousand Men; and no Wonder, for Men who have such Principles ingrafted in their very Nature, are void of all Fear, and are very dangerous People to deal with: They are of a middling Stature, a tawny Complexion, nimble, and very lively. As for their Habit, they wear close Breeches after the English Manner, a Waistcoat of white or grey Cotton, and a Stust Cap border'd with a Roll of Linnen about three Inches in Breadth. Their Legs are bare, but on their Feet they wear a Sort of Slippers call'd Babouches; and they gird their Loyns with a Scarf, in which they hang their devilish Weapon. Such had those I was engaged with, who unhappily kill'd fo many of my Men.

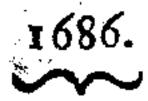

BEAUREGARD whom I had still under Cure, being in a fair Way after I had replaced his Entrails, and beginning to recover his Speech, I had a Mind to know how he came by 1686. his Wound, because while we were fighting with the six Macassars in the Fort, he was without.

a Mind

He told me, that when he saw two Men tumble Headlong from the Bastion, he thought one of them was the Captain, and ran thither to hinder the Siamese from killing him. That the Macassar perceiving it, and counterfeiting as if he was dead, suffer'd him to come within his Reach, and then made a long Arm with his Dagger, and gave him that Wound which I had feen: That in this Condition, not knowing where to go, he made a Shift, with his Intrails in his Hands, to come to the Pavillion, where finding nobody to help him, he fainted, and fell on my Bed, almost in the same Posture I had found him.

I gave an Account of this unhappy Adventure to M. Constance. Tho' his Management was but too manifest an Indication of his ill Will towards me, yet I did not think it proper to let him fee that I resented it, and therefore I wrote to him in fuch a Style, as if I had not the least Suspicion of him. I gave him a very circumstantial Detail of every Thing that had befallen me, and advised him to be on his Guard against the rest of the Macassars who were intrenched in their Camp, and to learn 1686. learn to beware by my Misfortune. When he had received my Narrative, he made fuch a Report to the King as he thought fit; and, as no doubt, the Minister was not pleased that I had behaved so well, he sent me a Letter full of Reproaches, accusing me of Imprudence, and charging all the Massacre on my want of Conduct; and he concluded with an Order, that I should no longer arrest the Macassars, but put all to the Sword that I could meet with.

> I DID not stay for his Instructions upon this Article; for the very next Day after we were routed, I call'd all the Mandarins together again, and distributed Troops among them, with Orders to guard the Avenues on purpose to prevent the Enemy, who were retir'd to the Woods, from returning to spread another Alarm along the River Side, which is the most populous Part of the Country, and the Place where they might be capable of doing most Mischief.

A FORTNIGHT after this, being inform'd that they had been feen two Leagues from Bancock, I hasten'd thither with fourscore Soldiers, whom I put aboard my Galley, the Country being still under Water. I arrived at the very nick of Time to raise the Spirits

Com DEFORBIN.

Spirits of the People, of whom I saw 1686 above Fisteen hundred that fled like fo many Sheep before about Twentyfour Macassars.

AT my Arrival those Furiosos abandon'd some Gallies which they had feized, and betook themselves to swiming: I order'd my Men to fire at them, but they were foon out of the Reach of Mulquet-Shot, and retir'd to the Woods. I rally'd all the affrighted People together, and reproach'd them for their scandalous Cowardice, in flying before such a Handful of Enemies. This fo animated the Cowards, that they pursued them to the Entrance of the Wood, where feeing it was impossible to force them, I returned to Bancock.

WHEN I arrived, I found two of those Watches, who being so wounded that they could not follow the others, were taken Prisoners by our Siamese. M. Manuel, a Missionary, who was in my Company, thinking them Objects worthy of his compassionate Zeal, took so much Pains with them, and argued with them to powerfully, that they were converted, and died a little after they had receiv'd Baptism.

Some Days after this, a third Macassar was brought to me. The Missionary preach'd a great deal to Vol. I. him,

86. him, but to no purpose, for the poor Wretch asking whether his turning Christian would save his Life, and being told no, said, If I am to die, what matters it whether I stay with God or the Devil? Upon this his Head was cut off, and as I was ordering it to be carried away, and exposed at the Top of a Lance, a Siamese desired me not to do it, affirming that one or other would certainly carry it off in the Night-time, to make use of it for Witchcraft, to which this Country is very much addicted. I burst out a Laughing at what he said, and after bantering the Siamese Superstition, I gave Orders that the Head should be set up in some conspicuous Place, as a Terror to others.

In about a Week's time, some Peasants in a great Fright care to tell me, that the Enemy had appear'd upon the Bank of the River, and robb'd a Garden of some Herbs, and a very great Quantity of Fruit.

I went thither with about One hundred Soldiers, arm'd with Lances and Musquets, and found above Two thousand Siamese there, who shew'd me the very Place where the Macassars had eat and slept.

Defeatof the Being tir'd with the Dance which feulking fuch a Handful of Enemies had led me Macaffars.

fo

so long, I resolved to bring it to a 1686. fpeedy End. I divided my Two thoufand Men into two Bodies, which I posted on the Right and Left, and with One hundred Men I set out in close pursuit of those wild Beasts. I followed the Track which they had open'd in the Water through the Grafs. As they were almost famish'd, having had nothing to eat for a Month past but wild Herbs, I saw it was high time to dally with them no longer, especially as I had none but fresh Men with me, from whom I might expect fome Service; I therefore order'd them to double their Pace. After we had march'd adout half a League, we perceived the Enemy, and put ourselves in a Posture to overtake them.

I was very close at their Heels, to avoid which they threw themselves into a Wood which was on the Lest-Hand, from whence they sell on a Company of my Soldiers, who the Moment they saw them, discharged their small Arms at them, though they were out of the Reach of Shot, and then ran away with all the Legs they had. However this did not make me alter my Resolution; I overtook the Enemy, and put my Soldiers in Battle Array. As we were up to the Mid-Leg in Water, where the Macassars 1686. could not come at us with their usual Activity, they got to a little Hill, encompais'd with a Ditch, in which there was Water as high as a Man's Neck.

> I invested them, and when I came within ten or twelve Paces of them, I call'd out to them by the Mouth of an Interpreter to furrender, affuring them, that if they trusted to me, I would engage to get their Pardon from the King of Siam. They were so offended at this Proposal, that they pointed their Lances to us in Token of their Indignation, and then leaping into the Water with their Daggers in their Teeth, they fwam towards us, to attack us.

> THE Siamese, encouraged by what I faid and did, made fuch a proper Discharge at those Desperadoes, that not one of them elcap'd. They were but Seventeen in all, for all the rest had perish'd in the Woods for Want, or else died of their Wounds. I caused fome of them to be stripp'd, and found them all as dry as so many Mummies, their very Bones being ready to start out of the Skin. They had all upon their Left-Arms those Characters we spoke of, with which they think themselves Invincible, upon the Word of their Priests, who, for a a very Trisse, wretchedly seduce them 1686. every Day of their Lives.

Such was the End of this unhappy Adventure, which for a Month subjected me to incredible Fatigues, that had like to have cost me my Life, as it had done so many of my Mens Lives, and which would never have happen'd, had it not been for the Envy of a jealous cruel Minister.

Bur to give a farther Proof of the Injustice of the Reproaches that he cast upon me, when, in Answer to my Letter, he tax'd me with Imprudence, I will briefly relate what pass'd at Siam with regard to the Prince of the Macassars, who after the Conspiracy was discover'd, intrenched himself in his Camp. M. Constance being resolv'd to attack him, had for that Purpose assembled above Twenty thousand Men, under the Command of forty Europeans, viz. French, English, and Dutch. With these Troops he undertook to force the Enemy's Intrenchments. At first the latter seem'd to give Way, which led Constance into an Error; for he thinking them routed, commanded the Siamese to pursue them. His Men first charg'd, and then follow'd them in good Order; but not keeping together in a Body, the Macaffars wheel'd about on a sudden, and fell upon them with

Constance the Minister the Macaffars,

1686. fuch Vigour, that they presently kill'd feventeen of the Europeans, and above One thousand of the Siamese, and M. Constance himself narrowly escap'd defeated by by leaping into the River, in which he would have been drown'd had it not been for one of his Slaves.

> The Number of dead Bodies which floated down the River before Bancock, were the first Couriers that brought us the News of this Overthrow, after which the Minister was not a little embarass'd. He caused several Proposals to be made to the Prince of the Macassars, but he would hearken to none. At last, when he found that nothing elfe would do, he resolv'd to make a fecond Attack, for which he was two Months preparing, and in which he came off with more Honour, because he had concerted his Measures more wisely than he had done before. Experience having shewn him, that he had to do with People whom he could not easily Master by attacking them with open Force, he thought of a Stratagem which succeeded, and to which he was obliged for the Victory.

The Macafed by the . Minister.

As the Country was overflow'd, for far's defeat- that they were obliged to march up to the Mid-Leg in Water, he caused Hurdles to be made of Canes, which were stuck pretty thick with great Nails

Count DE FORBIN.

Nails with three Points, which stood 1686 up half a Foot above the Hurdles. These Machines were carried before the Troops, and hid under the Water, in such a manner, that the Macassars coming furiously, as usual, to make their Attack, and not feeing where they fet their Feet, were so hamper'd for most part, that not being able to advance or retreat, a confiderable Number of them were shot dead standing.

THOSE that escap'd, intrench'd themselves in Houses of Canes, which being burnt about their Ears, they came out half roafted, and fuffer'd themselves to be knock'd on the Head, rather than one Man of them would beg Quarter; nor were the Lives of any spar'd but the Prince's two young Sons, who were carried to Louvo. They afterwards went with Father Tachard to France, and ferv'd in the Navy.

AFTER this short Digression relating The Aug. the manner how Constance extricated thor's Tou himself out of the Broil with the Ma-Governcassars, I return to my Business at Ban-ment. cock. Having no more Enemies to combat, I employ'd myself in advancing the Fortifications, and disciplining my Soldiers, after which I was very defirous to take a Tour through my Govern-I 4

1686. Government, both to make myself known, and to discover the State of the Country.

In order to be received with the Distinction suitable to my Dignity, I did not fail to send notice before-hand to all Places that I came to, fo that the Mandarins, and other Persons of the greatest Distinction, were sure to provide for my Reception in the most elegant Manner they could. They commonly came to meet me, and after having put me in such Lodgings as made the best Appearance, paid me Homage and Obedience as one that represented the Person of the King.

Sometimes it happen'd, that several of them, to curry Favour with me, and to give me to understand that they were Persons of some Note in their Village, declar'd they were akin to AnAccount Baloan. The Baloans are the Catholick Missionaries; but as I did not know what they meant by that Kindred, I defired them to explain themselves. I learn'd from them, that some of our European Missionaries, who pretended to be great Men at Court, and impos'd on the Credulity of the Siamese, a simple People, that loved to be footh'd, made no Scruple, when they were defired by those who courted their Protection, to contract certain fionaries at Siam.

Mar-

Marriages, very customary in the 1686. Country, and attended with this Conveniency, that they last no longer than they can give Pleasure.

I THOUGHT there was something so And of their comical in this unexpected Discovery, unaccountthat I could not help laughing at it riages, heartily. When some that I knew entertain'd these extravagant Whims, came to pay me their Respects, I did. not fail of being merry at their Expence. The Generality of them were really asham'd of their Folly, and there' were one or two of them that needed no other Argument to reclaim them; but it was not so with a Portuguese who I knew had been married in this manner more than once. When he came to pay his Visit to me, I said to him, Father, I find you have a great many Kindred in this Country. My Jest did not dash him out of Countenance, for he made no more of it than a Trifle, and turn'd it off with a Banter.

But I must say, in Justice to the Truth, that the Number of these married People, is very inconsiderable, and that excepting some obscure Priests, all. the other Missionaries, generally speaking, support the Dignity of their Character by extraordinary Virtues, especially the Jesuits, whose Conduct in the Indies, is as unblameable as it is in Europe.

And

1686. And as to those few who deviate from their Duty, no wonder, that in Countries so far off, where they are left to themselves without Superiors to instruct them, and watch over their Conduct, they lose a Taste for Piety by little and little, and then give Way to every Temptation which continually presents itself in one Shape or other to feduce them; for in Europe we fometimes fee, that the Priests and Fryars run into the same Irregularities, in fpite of all the Opportunities they have to guard against them.

to one of Their Tala-Poins.

In my Tour, I pass'd through a thor's Visit Village where they told me that hardby lived a Talapoin (one of their Fryars) who was fam'd all over the Country for his Virtues. His Fraternity had fuch a Veneration for him, that they made him their Superior; so that on account of his Dignity he was a Man of great Note among the Siamese, as a Bishop is in France. I turn'd out of my Road to visit him, and found him to be an old Gentleman, who claim'd Reverence, not only by his great Age, but by an Air of Modesty which grac'd him from Head to Foot.

His Squeamithness in refusing an extraordi nary Cempliment from him.

In order to do me Honour, he put fome Betel into his Mouth, and after having mumbled it a pretty while, presented it to me to chew in like manner; but I was not yet so recon- 1686. ciled to the Nastiness of the Siamese, as to accept of the Favour he design'd me. One of the Mandarins who was with me, faid, that I did not do well to refuse an Honour which was only due to the King and to me. I resign that Honour to you, said I, swallow the Pill yourself if you like it. He did not make two Words of it, but opened his Mouth, and receiv'd the Betel which I had refused, from the Talapoin's Hands, with a great deal of Respect.

man-

This Country swarms with Apes of A Descriptorious Kinds, of which I saw a vast Apes of the Number in my Journey. They love Country. to be near the River, and commonly travel in Companies, with a Leader at their Head, of a much larger Size than the others. When the Tide is out, they feed upon the little Fish which the Water leaves behind upon the Land, and when it returns, they perch upon the Trees, where they stay till the Country is dry. When two different Companies that happen to meet, are advanced within a certain Distance of each other, they feem to make a Halt, and then the great Macous, or Leaders of the two Companies, ad. vance towards one another three or four Paces, chatter, and make fuch Grimaces, as if they confabulated; and then

1686. then wheeling about on a sudden, each goes to join the Company of which he is the Leader, and they go different Ways.

A She-Ape thaftifed by her Leader br Inconinence.

I often took a Pleafure in observing their Ways and Manners. I faw a Dozen of them one Day picking themfelves as they lay basking in the Sun. A Female, that was in the Height of her Lust, rambled from her Company, and was followed by a Male: The great Macou quickly perceiving it, ran after them. The Male was too nimble for him, but he brought the Female back, and, in the Presence of the others, gave her above fifty Blows, by way of Chastisement for her Incontinence.

Worm gought to mr Author is aPrefent.

As I was passing through a Village, where I just stay'd to refresh myself, a Mandarin, who was the chief Person in it, came in a great Hurry to make me a Present of a Worm, about nine Inches long, and as big in Proportion. It was all over white, and in Shape like one of our Silk-Worms, only it was much longer. This honest Man reckon'd he had brought me a dainty Bit, so that I could not help smiling at his Simplicity; and turning towards another Mandarin that accompanied me, I ask'd him if this Worm was good to eat: 'Tis most excellent, said he; upon which I desired him to accept of it, and the Mandarin eat it 1686. alive very greedily. I observed that something like Cream issued out of the Mandarin's Mouth, which made me think the Infect could not be so unfavoury. Had it not been fo unpleasant to the Eye, I could willingly have tasted it. So those who never saw Oysters, if they were to see us eat them raw, would have an Aversion to them: Yet Oysters are very good; by which we may learn, that Custom makes Things more tolerable, and that we ought not to quarrel with People on account of their Tastes.

After having visited my Government, I return'd to Bancock, where I fpent some time in exercising my Soldiers, and forwarding the Fortifications, that went on but slowly, which was partly owing to the following Accident. As the Siamese always go bare-footed, my Workmen, as they were digging, were very often stung by little Serpents, of a filver Colour, Venomous and about a Foot long, whose Bite is Venomous so venomous, that in an Hour's time it throws the Patients into Convulsions, and infallibly carries them off in Twenty-four Hours, if a speedy Remedy be not applied. The Chinese The Chinese have an admirable Antidote for it; Antidote for the Cure they put an artificial Stone to the of their Poi-Wound, fon.

1686. Wound, to which it sticks presently, and soon after the Convulsions cease, the Patient recovers his Senses, and the Stone drops off of its own accord, when it has attracted all the Venom. The same Stone will serve always for the same Purpose, provided it be steep'd for Twenty-four Hours every time, in the Milk of a Woman's Breast.

Our Author try.

Notwitstanding my Employment growsweary at Bancock, I began to be weary of the of the Coun- Place. The Favours with which the King had honour'd me at Louvo, made my Stay in this Part of the World somewhat tolerable; but after my Departure from thence, every Day made it more and more irksome to me to live in a Place where there were no Pleasures, and where I saw no Prospect of advancing my Fortune. I therefore wish'd to return to Court, and wrote concerning it to M. Constance, but he did not desire to see me about the King's Person, and never wanted an Excuse for Non-compliance with my Request.

IT was much about this time that four of the Jesuits, who made the Voyage with us to Siam, came to fee me at Bancock. Father Tachard, as we have already faid, was return'd to France with the Ambassadors. Constance had retain'd Father le Comte with him; and the four others, viz. the 1686. Fathers de Fontenay, Bouvet, Gerbillon, and Visdelou, having the Opportunity of a Passage, sailed to China.

him;

I ENTERTAINED them in the best manner that I could, while they staid; I often talk'd with them upon Constance's Severity to me, and told them every particular Step that he had taken to ruin me. When I related the Macassar's Affair to them, I found that His Confethey were appriz'd of it before in the rence with general; but they were ignorant, or who perfuade at least had received a very confused him to re-Account, of the Order which was sent France. to me, and of the Conduct which the Minister desir'd me to observe.

I was convinced by what they faid, that I talk'd to Persons who knew M. Constance as well as I did; and tho' the Fathers, in Point of Prudence, did not think proper to tell their Minds publickly, yet after sympathizing with all my Troubles, and comforting me as far as lay in their Power, they advised me to return to France with all convenient Speed. Thus we spent several Days, I in Complaints against the Minister, and they in comforting me; and at last, after a great many very sincere Demonstrations of Friendship on both Sides, we embrac'd with Tears in our Eyes, 1686. Eyes, expecting never to meet again in this World.

Though I had for some time past entertain'd Thoughts of preparing for my Return to France, yet the late Conversation I had with those four Jesuits more strongly confirm'd me in that Design. I was continually reflecting on the miserable State of the Country, for which I saw no Remedy, and on the Treachery of a Minister, to whom I had done all the Good I could, and who, to reward my faithful Services, had not only removed me from Court, but had likewise offer'd to poison me, and attempted to take away my Life many other Ways.

WHILE my Thoughts were intirely taken up about my Return, I had Reason to be confirm'd in my Purpose, by a new Order which I received from Court, which made it very plain to me, that Constance had still Malice against me in his Heart.

An English Ship had been for some time at the Bar, which carried forty Guns, and ninety Men, all Europeans. M. Constance pretended, that the Captain of this Ship had formerly cheated the King of Siam of Merchan-Another of dize to a confiderable Value. Under this fair Pretext, he fent me Orders to against him. go aboard her, with no more than two Men, the Minifter's Plots Men, and to arrest the said Captain 1686. for High-Treason: The very Words of the Order I have preserved, as 'tis written in French, in Father le Comte's own Hand.

I could plainly see, as I have already faid, that this Commission, which was not much unlike that of the Macassars, was nothing more than a new Trap laid for me by the Jealousy of M. Constance. However, I resolved to execute his Orders literally. As I was walking up and down, musing which Way I should accomplish it, M. Manuel, my intimate Friend, perceiving me so contemplative, ask'd me what had put me in such a profound Study? There, faid I, read that Order, which I have just ' now receiv'd.' This honest Missionary perceiving what it was, 'M. Constance, ' said be, does not think of it, and 'tis ' an Order impossible to execute.

'However, I replied, the deep 'Meditations in which you have 'found me so immerg'd, are to find 'out what Course I shall take to put it 'in Execution; for I confess to you, 'that I am stung to the Quick, and 'resolved to consound M. Constance 'for ever, by letting him see, that 'those Projects which he thinks in the 'Main impossible, and which he only 'puts upon me in hopes that I shall 'perish

1686. ' perish in the Attempt, are not be-' yond my Reach.' M. Manuel, furprized at my. Refolution, did all he could to dissuade me from it. 'You

' talk to no Purpose, said I, my Reso· lution is fixed, and I shall not retract

' it were it to cost me my Life. The · Macassars were a late Instance which

'tis good to follow. We should always

· push forward, and never go backwards. However, don't be cast down, I will use Precaution, and I ' still hope to extricate myself happily

out of this wicked Snare.'

Ar these Words I left him abruptly, and went on board my Galley with fourscore Oars. To be revenged on M. Constance, I was so malicious as to take his Wife's Uncle along with me, who was a very honest Man, the Son of an European and an Indian, but no Hero. I chose him for one of my Seconds, because he should run half the Risque, and have an Opportunity of seeing with his own Eyes, what Baseness M. Constance was capable of.

In our Passage from Bancock to that Part of the Road where the Ship lay, the honest Japonese continually asked me whither I was going to carry him? It was yet too foon to let him know it, so I only turn'd off his Questions with a Banter. When we came to the Bar,

there

there was a Necessity for our quitting the Galley, because Vessels of this Sort are only fit for the River: I took a Boat proper for the Sea, and having put eight of my Men on Board, together with the Uncle of Madam Constance, and the Governor of the Bar, we put out a great Way into the main Road.

We were not two Leagues from the English Ship when my Japonese again asked me whither I was carrying him. All the Answer I made him, was producing the King's Order, which I explain'd to him in the Portuguese. frighten'd him out of his Wits. 'What have I done to you, Sir, said he, that 'you should drag me thus to the Slaughter-House; and what Regard do ye think the English Captain will ' pay to the Orders of the King of Siam, whom in this Case he has no Reason to fear, since 'tis certain he will be too hard for him? Sir, said 'I, They who are in the King's Ser-' vice, must obey him in the Letter, ' without confidering the Dangers of it. Our Lives and Fortunes are the ' Property of our Sovereigns, and they ' may dispose of them as they please.'

All those Arguments were so far from convincing the good Man, that they only increased his Terror, which prevailed the more the nearer we drew 1686. to the Ship. To encourage the Coward, 'I'll tell you, Sir, said I, an Expedient I have found for taking this Captain, without running too ' great a Risque either for you or me. ' My Aim is to oblige him, under ' fome Pretext or other, to come on ' board my Vessel. To this End I'll ' go aboard his Ship, and you shall fol-' low me. He will not fail to shew " me a great deal of Respect, to which 'I will make a Return; and, as I ' have contrived it, imagine I shall: ' carry the Point: Mean time, there, take the King's Order, put it in ' your Pocket, and keep it till we have Occasion for it. But arm yourfelf with Courage and Boldness, ' otherwise all our Scheme will infallibly miscarry. But, replied the over-' cautious Man, if it should not succeed as you imagine, what will you do? 'Then, said I, I will act the true ' Macassar, I'll draw my Sword, I'll ' tell the Captain that I have Orders to ' arrest him, and that if he makes the · least Resistance, I will kill him: At ' these Words you shall produce the ' King's Order, and call out to all the ' Crew, that if they resist, his Siamese ' Majesty will cause every one of them ' to be hang'd. Alas! Sir, said be, we han't long to live. 'Tis decreed for for us, said I, to die to Day or To- 1686.

' morrow, what matters it when, pro' vided it be gloriously?'

MEAN time we came up to the Ship; Our Au-I went aboard first, followed by the tagem to Japonese, who was half dead with Fear decoy the and Trembling. The Captain per- Captain of an English ceiving how he shook, asked me what Shipaihore. ailed that Gentleman. Nothing at all, faid I, only he is afraid of the Sea. We then enter'd the Cabbin, where Wine was set before me, and I was welcom'd with the Discharge of a great Number of Cannon. After the Captain had made a great many Excuses for the Dress in which he receiv'd me, for I found him in his Night-Gown and Cap, he asked me what Affairs brought me aboard?

' AFFAIRS, faid I, of very great 'Importance. His Siamese Majesty ' having received Advice, that the · Dutch have made a very confiderable Armament at Batavia, with a De-6 fign to come and burn all the Ships ' in the Road; and being moreover ' informed, that they are actually at ' Sea, I have Orders to assemble all the Captains of Ships, and the ' Masters of other Vessels, that we ' may hold a Conference together, ' and confult what Measures to take, ' that we may not be surprized before

1686. ' we are provided to give them a suit-

'able Reception. As M. Constance

' knew you was here, he order'd me

' to apply chiefly to you, and to pay a · Deference to your Opinion, because he is convinc'd both of your Valour and Experience.

THE Captain believing every Tittle of what I had told him, 'Pll fit my Sloop out to Sea this Instant, faid be,

and fend to give Notice to all the 'Officers in these Parts, to come on board my Ship, and hold a Council

upon an Affair of fuch Importance.

· A very good Thought, faid I, and then making a fhort Pause, as if I had hit upon another Expedient,

But, Sir, continued I, your Ship

being the furthest off, would it not be better for you to go yourself in the Sloop, and then we will go, you one Way, and I another, and bring all the Captains in the Road together?

We need only carry them to the Ship

' nearest the Bar, and when the Council

' is over, every one may return aboard

' his Vessel without going so far

' about.'

THE Englishman had no manner of Mistrust of what I had said to him, and voluntarily acquiesced in the Proposal. Still I fear'd that he would alter his Mind, therefore I said, Let us us improve the Time, I perceive the 1686. Tide is coming in. At these Words I rose up and went into my Boat, but had no sooner seated myself down, when pretending that I had forgot iomething that was very material, I call'd out to the Captain, who, to do me Honour, kept standing on the Side of the Ship to see me put off, 'Sir, said I, ' if you will give yourself the Trouble ' to come into my Boat, I have some-' thing else of Importance to com-' municate to you.' At the same time I bad one of my Rowers keep the mooring Cable in his Hand, and to det it go when I order'd him. The Englishman came on board to me very frankly, and when he was fate down, I spoke softly to my Sailor, and in the Siamese Language, that the Englishman might not understand me, commanded him to let go the Cable. Then laying my Hand on the Captain's Shoulder for the Conveniency of whispering him, that we might not be heard, 'Sir, said I, fince I have Orders from the King of Siam, to follow ' your Advice preferably to any other 'Man's, 'tis convenient that you ' should be here with me, and that · we should also lay our Heads together, that we may be of one Opinion when we are all affembled.'

1686.

As it was a strong Tide, the Englishman quickly perceived it was driving him from his Ship, and ask'd me whither I was carrying him in that Undress; and at the same time, without waiting for my Answer, call'd out to his Crew. Upon that, I order'd my Men to row away lustily to Land, and declaring to the Captain the Order that I had receiv'd, I told him how forry I was that I had been obliged to make use of so much Artifice in the Execution of my Commission, and begg'd him not to be uneasy, assuring him that he should not want Cloaths nor any Thing that was necessary for his Subfiftence.

> Mean time the English Sloop, which was mann'd out in a very short time, began to give me Chase. When I perceiv'd I could not avoid being taken, I went aboard a Portuguese Ship, and taking my Pistol in my Hand, Go aboard that Ship, said I to my Prisoner; if you besitate, you are a dead Man. When we were got aboard, I call'd on the Officer to affist me with all the Hands he had. The honest Fellow put himself in Motion, but he had only eight or ten starving Wretches aboard, a feeble Support against thirty Europeans that were coming towards us, well arm'd, and refolv'd to fight.

> > When

193

WHEN I cou'd think of no other 1686 Expedient to avoid being taken, I said to the Captain, & Sir, command ' your Sloop to return, and consider ' that otherwise your Life is at Stake; ' for if they come near, I will sacrifice ' you first, and then perhaps I shall ' find a Way to defend myself against 'your Men.' I spoke these Words with fuch a resolute Air, that the Englishman was not willing to run the Hazard of it; but order'd his Men to go back, and was instantly obey'd. . When they were got far enough off, I return'd aboard my Boat, after having thank'd the Portuguese Captain, and fail'd to Bancock, where I took care that nothing should be wanting to make my Englishman's Confinement tolerable to him

I DID not delay to give Notice to M. Constance, how faithfully I had executed the King's Commission; but at the same time I thought proper to complain of it, though I did it with Circumspection, for he was above my Match, and I had to do with a dangerous Enemy. I contented myself with remonstrating, that the Commissions which he put me upon, were too mean for one of my Dignity, and that it did not look well to fend an Admiral fuch Orders as wou'd be more Vol. I. fuitable

1686. suitable for Officers of an inferior Rank.

At the same time I sent my Prisoner to Louvo, where he made up his Affair for Ten thousand Crowns, which M. Constance thought fit to put in his Pocket. As for me, this Minister deny'd he had fent me the Order which I acted by, tax'd me a fecond Time with Rashness and Folly, and forbad me in the King's Name, to go beyond two Leagues from Bancock. This was all Enement to the Recompence I had for so dangerous an Expedition, in which I only engag'd in Obedience to the Orders that I had receiv'd.

'ther's Con-Bancock,

> I was so exasperated at this Procedure, that without any more ado, I resolved to go to France, the first Opportunity that offer'd. But as I faw no Hopes of it yet, at least for some time, I chose to dissemble my Chagrin, and to wait with Patience for the happy Moment. To divert myself in this sort of Exile, for since the last Letter I had from this Minister, I look'd upon myself in a State of Banishment, I pass'd away the tedious time in catching of Crocodiles.

The Manner of catching Crocodiles.

THERE's a great Number of them about Bancock. The Siamese have two Ways to take them, of which one is this: They take a live Duck, tye a Piece

Piece of Wood under its Belly, about 1686. ten Inches long, and big in Proportion, pointed at both Ends. To this bit of Wood they tye strong Packthread, to which they fasten Pieces of Bamboe Cane, a light Sort of Wood, which they make use of instead of Cork. Then they throw the Duck into the Middle of the River, which when 'tis fatigu'd by the Piece of Wood, makes a Noise, and beats its Wings to difengage itself. The Crocodile perceiving it, plunges into the Water, rifes up from the Bottom to seize it, and entangles himself by the Piece of Wood which sticks in his Throat. When they perceive he is caught, which they. discover by his pulling and haling, and by the Motion of the Bamboo, they ftrike at the Signal, and bring the Creature to the Top of the Water, notwithstanding all his Struggles to get loofe. When he appears, the Fishermen dart their Harping Irons at him, which are a fort of Darts, with a Head resembling that of an Arrow, fix'd in a Stick of about five Foot long for a Handle. To this Iron, which is split where 'tis join'd to the Socket, they tye a Piece of Packthread, which is twifted round the Handle, and which in floating upon the Water, shews the Place where the K 2 Animal 1685. Animal is. When he has been sufficiently gall'd by the Harping Irons, they draw him to Land, and hew him to Pieces with a Hatchet.

THERE'S another Way of taking them, which is as follows: These Creatures come fome times very near the Houses; but being exceeding timorous, they frighten them away either by their Voices, or by shooting off their Muskets, upon which the Crocodile flies and dives to the Bottom of the Water. The River is immediately cover'd with Gallies, watching to see where he comes up to breathe; for he can't lie above half an Hour under Water without rifing to the Top for the Air: As foon as he pops up his Head, he stretches open his wide Mouth, when the Harping Irons are darted at him from all Sides, and if he receives any in his Throat, in which the Siamese are very dextrous, he is surely taken. The Handle of the Harping Iron which floats, being tied to a Cord, serves as a Signal, whereby he who holds it, knows when the Animal comes up from the Bottom, and advertises the Fishermen of it, who fail not as foon as he appears again, to dart him with fresh Harping Irons, and when he has received enough to be brought to shoar, they drag him out and cut him in Pieces.

THE

THE Flesh of the Crocodile is whitish, much like that of a Sea-Dog; I have tasted it, and think it is not bad: 'Tis Descriptions of the Creek a frightful Creature to look at. There codile. are some in the River from Twelve to Twenty Foot long: They have very flat Jaw-bones, with two great Teeth on each Side, one in the upper Jaw, and the other in the lower, which start out like the Tusks of a wild Boar, that when they bite any thing, 'tis not possible to take it from them.

ONE Day that I return'd from the hunting of the Crocodile, I was perfectly surpriz'd when I came Home, to find the four Jesuits there who set out not long before for China. Those Fathers were in a lamentable Case; they had been shipwreck'd on the Coasts of Cambodia and Siam, and had fuffer'd beyond Expression, being under a Necessity of passing on Foot through Countries in a manner unpassable. I embrac'd them with a great deal of Joy, and did all that lay in my Power to make them some Amends for the Disasters they had met with.

As all the wicked Proceedings of M. Constance lay heavy at my Heart, I shew'd them the Orders I had receiv'd about the English Captain, and the Minister's Answer to the Letter I wrote to him after that Expedition:

 $\mathbf{K}_{3}$

 $\mathbf{As}$

1686.

As cautious as they were of what they faid, they cou'd not help expressing their Indignation, and speaking with more Freedom to me than they did the Time before; they advis'd me, in plain Terms, to withdraw from the Country as soon as I could.

THEY gave it as their Opinion, that the Minister who had taken Umbrage at the Favour I was in at Court, and who wish'd for nothing so much as my Destruction, would pursue me fo often with his Malice, and would at last concert his Measures so well, that I should not be able to escape him. That fince the Lord had preferv'd me hitherto, I ought not to tempt his Providence; but on the contrary to relign, and to withdraw from a Country where my Life was in continual Perils. The Fathers added upon this Head all the obliging Things that can be imagined; I detain'd them as long as I could; but after two Days were over, they were willing to return to Joudia, to wait for another Opportunity of embarking again for China.

As to my own Part, being loth to stay much longer, I resolv'd to return with a Ship of the East-India Company, that came a sew Days before, and anchor'd at the Bar. This Ship came with Merchandize from Pontichery to take up other Goods here, this being 1686. the ordinary Traffick which the Company drives every Year from one Part of the Indies to the other.

take

Court DE FORBIN.

Considering the Employments I The Count had held at Siam, and the obliging Leave to re-Manner in which the King had treated turn to France. me, I did not think it convenient to go away like a Deserter. I wrote therefore to M. Constance, and desir'd him to follicit the King to grant me his License to depart. The Reason I urg'd for it was, that my Health, which was more and more impair'd every Day, did not permit me to flay longer in the Kingdom; and I offer'd to go in Person to Court to desire Leave to retire, if he thought that would be the best Way to obtain it. This was what he was far from consenting to, and as he was now not afraid of my returning to France, he sent me in Answer, that it not being the King's Intention to lay a Restraint upon me, I was at my Liberty to go where I thought fit.

Before I left Bancock, I wrote to a young Mandarin of my Acquaintance, whose Name was Prepi; he had a great Affection for me, for the Service I did him formerly in faving him from a-Bastinado; for tho' he was a Favourite with the King, who lov'd him more than any young Man at Court, he K 4 would would not have escap'd that Chastisement, if I had not interfer'd. I told him when I took my Leave of him, that I was just returning to France, and desir'd him to let me always have a Share in his Friendship, to continue his Love to the French, to the Missionaries, and to the Jesuits, and to protect them all as he had done hitherto.

of Siam's Concernfor Departure.

PREPI, who was forry that I was going away, fpoke of it to the King, the Count's who knew not a Tittle of what had passed, and seem'd surpriz'd at the Tidings. He ask'd his Minister what were the Reasons that oblig'd me to retire, and bad him send for me to Court, that he might inquire himself what Grounds I had for my Disgust. I was inform'd of all these Particulars by Prepi's Answer. Upon this Order, Constance was in a very great Perplexity: He was absolutely bent against my Appearance at Court, and yet the The Mini- Order was positive. To extricate him-Plot to de self out of this Dilemma, he commanded a Portuguese Officer, who was entirely at his Devotion, to come on board the French Ship, on pretence of doing me Honour, and then to conduct me to Court, as by Order from the King.

THE Contrivance of this Snare was too gross to surprize me. I knew that that the King of Siam never sends his 168% Orders by any but the Soldiers of his Guard. The Bishop of Metelopolis, M. Manuel, and the Factor of the Company, who were all present, and heard what the Portuguese said to me, made no Scruple to fignify to me that there was a Snake in the Grass. The Bishop especially, taking me aside, said, Take Care bow you put yourself into the Hands of these Portuguese; I know M. Constance: you may depend on it, these: People have Orders to assassinate you on the Road, and then the Minister will secure himself by getting them hanged, that they may not accuse him, after which: he will tell the King that he caused them. to be executed, to revenge the Death of the Chevalier de Forbin, which this Prince, who only sees with the Eyes of his Minister, will take to be as true as that the Sun shines. Believe me, it will . be your best Way to get out of the Reach. of an Enemy so subtle and so malicious; since you are so happy as to have it in your Power.

I THANK'D him, as in Duty bound, for his good Advice, and then, addressing myself to the Officer, told him, That I shou'd pay no Manner of Regard to the Order he came with; that . his Majesty having given me Leave to withdraw, it was not probable that he K 5 bad.

*687. had alter'd his Mind so soon, or that he was dispos'd to detain me any longer in his Dominions, after all the solid Arguments which I had done myself the Honour to set before him; that he might therefore go whenever he pleas'd, and carry my Answer to M. Constance.

TheCount's Departure Nor France.

I HAD not talk'd in such a high Strain, only I confidered that as I had not long to flay at Siam, I had nothing more to fear from the Malice of the Minister. In short, we set sail the very next Day. I was fo glad that I was leaving this cursed Country, that I already forgot whatever I had fuffer'd in it. As we pass'd thro' the Straits of Malacca, we met with contrary Winds, which oblig'd us to cast An-He meets chor. We went ashore and found exwith Rock- cellent Oysters, which stuck so to the Oysters in the Straits Rock, that we were glad to take out of Mulacca. the Fish and leave the Shell.

WHILE we stay'd in these Parts, I went a pretty Way into the Country, where finding the Haunts of some Fallow-Deer, I advanc'd a little far-. ther in hopes of finding some Game to kill with my Gun. It happen'd that whilst I was looking this Way and that Way, a monstrous Ape came towards me with Eyes, as it were, darting Fire, and fuch an Air of Affurance as wou'd have quite daunted, me if I had not been arm'd; but I 1685. went to meet him, and when we were shout ten Paces distant, I fir'd my Piece, and shot him dead upon the Spot.

His Encounter with a Baboon.

It was really a frightful Animal to look at. It had a Tail as long as a Lyon, was above two Foot and a half from the Ground, eight Foot from the Tip of the Tail to the Head, and had a great long Face deform'd with Pimples like the Vifage of some Drunkard. The Country People assur'd me that I had good Luck to kill it, because, if I had miss'd my Mark, it wou'd certainly have strangled me. I went and call'd our Seamen to carry it aboard, and they protested they had never seen so large an Ape in all the Indies.

From the Strait of Malacca, we A Descrippass'd between the Islands of Nicobar, Nicobar which are inhabited by People perfectly Islands.

Islands, who go stark naked, both the Men and Women, and live only upon Fish and some Fruits which they find in the Woods. For their Islands produce neither Rice nor Pulse, nor any Sort of Grain for their Nourishment. Thirty Leagues from these Islands lies that of Andaman, which we saw at a great Distance: The Inhabitants of it K 6 are 1687. are the cruelest Cannibals in all the Indies.

An Island of Cannibals.

Pontichery describ'd.

Ar length we arrived at Pontichery, one of the most noted Factories belonging to the French East-India Company, who have a Director General, and several Commissioners. Tis the Grand Magazine for Linnens, Muslins, and Goods of all Kinds brought from the Indies. The Company's Ships come every Year from France to buy up these Linnen Goods, and carry them to Port Louis.

The Author's hearty Reception there.

M. MARTIN, who was at that Time Director of the Factory, entertain'd me with the greatest Civility in the World, and was continually heaping Favours on me all the time I stay'd in the Country. It was not in my Power to go away as foon as I cou'd have wish'd, because I was forc'd to stay a pretty while for the European Ships, which came in this Year somewhat later than usual. My ordinary Diversion during my Stay was Hunting. In this Country are a Kind of Foxes which they call Chesnut Dogs, of which I caught some almost every Day with Grey-Hounds that I had train'd up myself, and which were easily form'd for this Kind of Hunting, which is very amusing.

An Adventure happen'd here which 1687. had like to have cost me my Life: The Commissioner of one of the French TheCount's Company's Ships who was lately ar-Danger in Fox-huntriv'd, desired I would take him along ing. with me. After we had hunted some Hours, my Grey-Hounds started one of these Foxes, which, finding himself press'd, ran into a Sort of Coneyburrow. I thought the best Way wou'd be to smoak him out, and, for that Purpose, I got a Bundle of Rice-Straw, with which I fill'd the Hole, and set Fire to it. As I stoop'd down to blow it, a Creature bolted out of it on a sudden, which tumbled me down, bury'd me in Straw, Fire and Smoak, and then leap'd over my Head into a River which was but just by: All this was done in fuch a Trice, that the Animal had plung'd itself into the Water before I was able to get upon my Legs. The Commissioner made no doubt but 'twas a Crocodile or a Cayman. Whatever it was, I was horridly terrify'd, and thought my self well off, that I far'd no worfe.

THE Inhabitants of Pontichery are 1. very black, but not of the Caffre-Kind; tants of Pontichery They have handsome Features, a Complacency in their Looks, and fine lively Eyes; they let the Hair of their Heads grow down to their Waist. Their TheirManners and Customs.

1687. Their Nation is distinguish'd by Casts or Tribes. The Bramins, who are the Priests of the Country, are in greater Veneration than all the others, and next to them are the Shepherds. These People are, above all Things, cautious of matching with any but their Equals, so that a Shepherd may not pretend to claim Kindred to a Bramin. And if it happens that any one of a distinguished Tribe, marries a Woman of an inferior Rank, he falls from his own Rank to that of the Family to which he is ally'd: But the Women lose nothing by mis-matching. Among all these Casts or Tribes, the most contemptible is that of the Shoe-makers, excepting that call'd Paria, which they look upon with Horror, because they don't scruple to feed upon the Flesh of all Manner of Animals.

Their relimonies and Superftition.

THESE People, who are Idolaters, gious Cere; have a famous Temple a League from Pontichery, to which they repair on a certain Day every Year to celebrate a Festival in Honour of their principal Deities. There being a vast Concourse from all Parts, I went out of Curiofity to see it. After a Thousand Ceremonies, of which they gave me a Rehearfal, for I cou'd not enter the Temple, they brought out the God and Goddess to whose Honour they were assembled: These Idols are of a 1687: gigantick Figure, and very well gilt. They plac'd them Face to Face on a Chariot with four Wheels, and the Posture and Attitude of both Deities was fomewhat lascivious. The Chariot was drawn by two or three Hundred Men with Ropes, and the vast Numbers of People that were gather'd together, fell flat on their Bellies to the Ground, while the whole Country echoed with Shouts of Joy; and some of them were simple enough to hang upon the Chariot-Wheels, thinking it a Happiness to be bruis'd or crush'd to Pieces in Token of the Respect they entertain'd for their God.

were

When this Ceremony was ended, I faw both Men and Women rolling on the Ground about the Temple, and stark naked, except a Piece of Linnen which reach'd from the Waist to half way of the Thigh. I ask'd for what Reason they thus mangled their Bodies, and was told, that they were such as had no Children, and hop'd by this Sort of Penance to prevail with their Gods to grant them Issue. This is all I cou'd then learn of the said Festival, there being no Entrance for me, as I before observed, into a Temple where none are admitted but Idolaters.

1687.

Their Temple and

Idols.

However, I was curious to see it, and therefore two Days after I went thither again. I stood at the Door with seven other French Men, who were likewise desirous of Entrance, but the Chief of the Bramins would not admit us, on Pretence that it was not lawful for him to prophane it by letting in Christians. Upon this Denial I said not one Word, but advancing to him, fnatch'd a Ponyard from his Side, presented the Point to him, and threatned to kill him, upon which he fled without bidding. Then we enter.'d, and found it a vast Edifice, but nothing in it besides a great Number of Idols of different Sizes, and all in wanton Postures. While we were amusing ourselves with the Sight of 'em, the Bramin, resenting the Affront we had put upon him, went and alarm'd the Neighbourhood, and came towards us at the Head of above three Hundred Men. But these People, who have actually not a Dram of Courage, were so terrified when they saw us with Fire-Arms, that there was not one of them that had the Boldness to come near.

A SHIP belonging to the India Company being ready to fail much about that Time for Masulipatan, a City samous for Commerce, and the Ships

from.

from France not being yet expected, I 1687. refolved to embark, and thought of travelling from that Town to Golconda, which is but Thirty Leagues from it; for the Place being at that Time befieged by the Great Mogul, I long'd to see after what Manner those People make War, and how they form Sieges and Attacks; but it was not in my Power to gratify my Curiosity, as will appear from what I am going to relate.

WHEN we failed from Pontichery, we were in the Season of the Westerly Wind, that is to fay, in the most favourable Season of the whole Year, so that we had a very happy Passage and a quick one. We were not above Eight Leagues from Masulipatan, when we saw a black thick Cloud come off from Land, which we all thought to be a Storm, and, for Fear of an Accident, immediately furl'd all our Sails. At length the A Storm of Cloud came aboard us with very little Flies. Wind, but attended with a vast Number of great Flies, with Tails of a purple Colour, like those we see in France, which leave Maggots upon our Meat.

The Ship's Company was so pester'd with them, that, for a few Moments, every Man aboard was obliged to hide from 'em. The Sea was quite cover'd with 1687.

with 'em, and we had such Swarms aboard the Ship, that it requir'd above Five Hundred Barrels of Water to cleanse it.

When we were about four Leagues from Masulipatan, we perceiv'd somewhat like a Mist, which cover'd it all over. The nearer we came to it, the more it spread; so that in a little time we saw nothing but the Point of Mountains, which ferv'd as a Guide to the As we approach'd to Land, we saw that this Cloud was nothing but an incredible Multitude of Flies, quite different from the former; for these had four Wings, and resembled those we see about our Rivers, whose Tails are strip'd with Yellow and Black. The nearer we came to the Town, the more we had of these Insects, of which there were fuch Clouds, that we cou'd: not see Land, but were oblig'd to make it by Sounding. When we were in fuch a Fathom, the Pilot gave Direction for casting Anchor; when Delande, one of the Company's Commissioners, who had Orders to visit the Factory, took the Sloop to go ashore, and the Captain and I accompany'd him. The Multitude of these Flies was so great, that we were oblig'd to carry a Compass aboard, that we might not mis the Land,

Swarms of another Sort.

Land, which they hid from us entire- 1687.

ly; but at last we arriv'd.

THERE being no Soul at the Port, The Count's fuch of our Ship's Company as knew Arrival at the Town, were our Guides to the Masulipa-Custom-house. The Office was open, so that we went into every Part of it, but found nobody attending. Being furpriz'd at this uncommon Incident, we walk'd to that Part of the Town where the Office of the Factory of the East-India Company was kept, and cross'd several Streets without seeing Man, Woman, or Child. This defolate Aspect of the whole Town being accompany'd with an intolerable Stench, we A Plague quickly guess'd what was the Matter.

AFTER we had walk'd a great deal of Ground, we came to the Company's House. The Gates were open, and we found the Director dead, tho' we guess'd he had not been long deceas'd, because every Part of him was intire. The House had been ransack'd, and every thing appear'd in Disorder. Being aftonish'd at so frightful a Spectacle, I return'd into the Street, and addreffing myself to the Sieur Delande, Let's go aboard again, said I, there's no Good to be got here. He told me, that his Commission oblig'd him to go farther; and that, as he must give an Account of his Voyage, he wou'd not return

Person capable of giving him a particular Account of the Causes of all this Confusion.

THEREFORE we march'd on till we came to the English Factory, which we found close shut; and tho' we knock'd ready to break the Door down, nobody made Answer. From thence we went to the Dutch Factory, where, out of fourscore Persons, there remain'd but fourteen alive, who look'd more like Skeletons, than Men. They told us, that the Town had been brought to this Pass by a Plague; that most of the Inhabitants were dead, and the rest gone into the Country; that they could give us no News relating to the French Factory; that the English had abandon'd theirs, after having lost the best Part of their Officers; and that as for themselves, they had an immense Treasure in their House, and were forbid, on Pain of Death, to quit it, or else they had not ftay'd.

Considering the present Condition of this miserable Town, there was no Probability of meeting with a Vessel to carry me to Golconda. I was forc'd to drop all Thoughts of seeing the Siege, so that we return'd on board, to tell what we had seen and heard. We set sail immediately for the Port of Mergui;

which.

which belongs to the King of Siam. I 1687. was very loth to return to a Country from which I found it so hard a Matter to escape; but considering, that this Harbour was above an hundred Leagues from the Court; and moreover, that I was on board a French Ship, I thought I shou'd be in no manner of Danger from the Malice of M. Constance.

THE third Day after we sail'd from Masulipatan, some of the Sailors, who went alhore with the Sloop, fell fick. The Cause of their Illness cou'd not be unknown. The Surgeon finding they had a Fever, let them Blood; and next Day I had a Fever myself, but wou'd not be blooded. All the other Sailors, who came in the Sloop, fell fick likewise, and were blooded as well as the others, but all of 'em dy'd in a few Days.

My Fever still continued, and was The Count's accompany'd with fuch an exceffive Sickness & Sweating, as quickly brought me for low, that I cou'd scarce speak. The Violence of my Distemper weaken'd my Eyes too, to fuch a degree, that I cou'd not perfectly distinguish Objects: And, to compleat my Misfortune, Provisions began to fall short, so that there was nothing left aboard to make Broth; for we cou'd take in but very little Provision at Pontichery, where such a Dearth prevail'd,

1687. prevail'd, as was next akin to a Fa-

I NEVER was in greater Distress in all my Life. Not knowing what to do, I order'd my little Siamese Lacquey, who newer car'd to leave me, to bring me some Persian Wine, of which I had a good Stock. I drank about half a Glass, and took a hearty Nap for some Hours, when I awoke all in a Sweat. My Sight seeming to be a little stronger, I return'd to my Remedy, took a double Potion of it, and slept a second time; after which I wak'd again all in a Bath, but found myself much stronger. As the Remedy operated, I took it a third time, sopping a Piece of Biscuit in the Wine, which afterwards I eat. I repeated this for feveral Days, after which my continual Fever chang'd to a double Tertian.

M. DELANDE and the Captain, who were seiz'd with the same Distemper, refus'd Bleeding, after my Example, and wou'd have no Remedy but mine; upon which their Illness abated by degrees, and they recover'd as well as I. At last we arriv'd at Mergui, where, by the Assistance of Refreshments, which we were no longer in need of, we were in a few Days able to walk abroad. Of the seventeen Persons that went ashore in the Sloop, all the fourteen who were blooded, dy'd; and, ac- 1687. cording to all Appearance, M. Delande, the Captain and myself sav'd our Lives only by our refusing to be let Blood; so true is it, that Bleeding is mortal in all pestilential Fevers of this Kind.

We had not been many Days at Mergui, before M. Ceberet arriv'd there with a great Number of Mandarins attending him in his Return from Louvo, to which Place he and M. la Loubere had been sent from France to treat of Commerce, and to fettle all Matters with Constance; for Father Tachard had The Sucfucceeded in the Commission, which cess of Fahe was instructed to negotiate. Father having been dup'd by Constance, gotiations at the as we have already faid, and thinking Court of in good Earnest that he shou'd do a Service both to the Church and State, had left no Stone unturn'd to bring the Court into his Views, and to make the best Use of the Siamese Minister's good Disposition; and accordingly, upon this Jefuit's Promise, the Court accepted of the Project of an Alliance, and actually fent Troops under the Command of the Chevalier Desfarges, who had the Fortress of Bancock deliver'd up to him ac-basty to cording to Agreement.

THE Mandarin, who had been sent Ambassador to France, was one of those that accompany'd M. Ceberet. As foon

This chard's Ne-

1687. The Count meets with an old Friend of his, a Stamese Mandarin that had been in France.

as he perceiv'd me, he ran to me, and his Head being full of the Magnificence he had seen in France, he told me, that I had great Cause to wish for my Return to my own Country; that he had feen all my Family there, and a great Number of my Friends, with whom he had talk'd of me; and after he had extol'd the Court, and every thing which hit his Fancy more than ordinary, he added, in bald French, La France grand bon, Siam petit bon.

M. CEBERET, who came by Land from Louvo to Mergui, dismiss'd all the Mandarins, after having made them considerable Presents, and then embark'd with us on board the Company's. Ship, in which we fail'd for Pontichery. Upon our asking him how his Negodor's Opini- tiation had fucceeded with M. Constance, he publickly declar'd, that he was not pleas'd with him; and that he had trick'd the Court, by promising them mere Trifles, which had not the least Appearance of Reality.

 $\mathbf{M}$ . CEBERET and I were never afunder during the whole Voyage; but our ordinary Discourse was about the Kingdom of Siam, and the Manners, and Customs of the People. He was so astonish'd to find them so poor, and to see the Misery of the Kingdom, that it was unaccountable to him how any Persons cou'd have the Assurance 1687. to give fuch a pompous Narrative of their Wealth and Grandeur.

🐪 mbaffuon of M. Constance.

The French

YET, said I to him one Day, What The Count's you saw was the most they have to boast Description of Siam to of: The whole Kingdom, which is very him, targe, is little more than a vast Desart; for as you advance within Land, you will find nothing but Forests and wild Beasts, the Inhabitants chusing to live on the Banksoof the River, because the Lands there being laid under Water six Months in the Year, produce almost, with little or no Culture, a great Quantity of Rice, which only comes up and multiplies in watry Places. In this Rice the entire Riches of the Country consist; so that as you went up from the Bar to Louvo, you saw every thing that was worth seeing in tae , both with Regard to the People, their Towns, and their Commodities.

ANOTHER time, the Country being and of the still the Topic of our Conversation, he K.of Siam's with'd I wou'd give him some Account of the King's Behaviour in his Palace. As to this Article, I reply'd, 'Tis no easy Matter to inform you. Those without Doors, be they of what Distinction soever, are never admitted into that Part of the Palace where the King resides; and such as once enter it, never go abroad. All that can be said in Particular is, that every thing Vol. I.

1687. is conducted in it with the utmost Secrecy. Every one has not only his particular Employment mark'd out for him, but his separate Quarter, beyond which he is never allow'd to ramble. They who wait in the Chambers which are nearest the Gate, know no more of the Palace, than what bappens in that Place. In the Chambers adjoining to those are Officers, who know no more than the others; and so successively to the King's own Apartment, who generally keeps close to it, and thinks that such Retirement is the principal Part of his Grandeur; for when he confers with his Ministers and his greatest Favourites, he appears at a Window almost a Fathern higher than the Ground; and after a short Declaration of his Will and Pleasure to them, disappears again:

And of the Minuter.

M.CEBERET asking me Questions also about M. Constance, I told him all that I knew of that Minister; and tho' he had a pretty good Guessat his Views and Politicks, I gave him an Infight into many Things which had escap'd him, and which he did not doubt the Truth of, when he was enabled to compare what I told him with what he knew before.

Mis Arrival at Madraspatan, George,

Mean time, we came near to Madraspatan, a Town famous for its Comfor Fort St. merce. There was no Appearance of our returning from the Indies to Europe, without without carrying some of the Stuffs and 1687. Rarities of the Country. Being resolv'd to lay out some Money there, I desir'd the Captain of the Ship to set meashore. The English are Masters of this Place. The Director-General of their Compamy, who was a fworn Enemy to M. Constance, hearing that I lodg'd with the French Capuchins, was resolv'd, at all Events, to take me to his House. He also took the Superior of those honest Fryars to his House, and upon my Account, shew'd him great Civility. These Fathers are settled in the Suburbs, and administer the Sacraments to the Portuguese, or Mistices, who are Roman Catholicks.

He prepar'd a very splendid Din-His Rener for me; during which there was ception by Discharge of a great many Pieces of nor, who Cannon, and we drank the Healths of makes him the Kings of England and France, and Companiboth their Royal Families. Constance was not spar'd at Table; and the Director faid publickly, that he wou'd have him hang'd, if he cou'd but catch him. Mean time we continu'd drinking, till we were every one drunk, the Capuchin as well as the rest; tho' it was not so much his Fault, because he was forc'd to drink almost whether he wou'd or no.

. 1687. Arrival at

WHEN I had bought up what I had a Mind to, the Director gave me a lit-The Count's tle Vessel to carry me to Ponticheri, Ponticheri. which is but twenty Leagues from Madraspatan. At my Arrival there, I found one of the King's Ships that was come to fetch M. Ceberet. It was commanded by M. du Quene Guitton, who deliver'd into my Hands a fine Gun and a pair of Pistols of admirable Workmanship. 'Twas a Prefent which M. Bontems fent me as a Token of his Friendship, and of his Gratitude for some very curious Pieces which I had fent him by the Return of the Ambassadors.

His Depar-· kuic for France.

His Pro-

fent from

M.Bontems

After M. Ceberet had finish'd all his Affairs at Ponicheri, we embark'd and fail'd for France; and during the Voyage, he and I often talk'd about the Kingdom of Siam. He discours'd to me upon the Envy of M. Constance, and the Dangers to which he had so often expos'd me: And tho' he had been inform'd by our Countrymen, at Joudia and Louve, both of my Adventure with the Macassars, and with the English Captain, he wish'd I wou'd relate the whole to him myself.

AFTER a very good Passage, we cast 1688. Anchor at the Cape of Good Hope, and Arrivel at there took in some Refreshments. We the Cape of anchor'd also at the Island of St. Helena, which which belongs to the English, and foon 1688. after at Ascension Island, where we caught a great Number of Tortoises, and other Fish. At length we arriv'd safe in the Harbour of Brest, where we landed to- And at wards the latter end of July, 1688; Breft. which was about three Years and half after I departed thence with M. de Chaumont.

WHEN I had landed all the Merchandize I bought at Madraspatan, I sent the Bales to Paris by the Carrier, who goes thirher every Week. But before deliver'd them, I had the Precaution to declare to him, and to enter into his Book both the Quantity and Qualiey of the Goods, which consisted of . Screens, China Cabinets, Tea, Porcellane Ware, several Pieces of India Stuffs of all Some and a very confiderable Quantity of Stuffs of Gold and Silver; and after I had given the whole in Charge He fets out to him, I fet out Post for Paris, where for Paris, I waited on M. de Seignelay, Minister of and waite the Marine, who receiv'd me very kind- Seignelay. ly, and presented me himself to the King, who gave Orders, that I shou'd be paid all my Salary from the Time of my Departure to that Day.

It was to the Friendship of M. Bon-His Oblitems that I was oblig'd for so favourable gations to a Reception; for M. de Seignelay having M. Bonteme taken it very ill, that I paid that Defe-

1688, rence to the Orders of M. de Chaumont, as not to return to France, had caus'd me to be struck off of the Establishment; but when Bontems heard of it, he mentioned it of his own Accord to the King, who commanded the Minister to make no Innovation upon my Account, but rather to advance me, when Opportunity offer'd, with a Preference to many others.

His Attendance on the King, and the Questions put to him jesty, relating to the Count's

Answers.

I was so transported with the Manner of my Reception, that I waited on the King at Dinner, who did me the Honour to ask me a great many Quesby his Ma- tions relating to the Kingdom of Siam. He ask'd me in the first Place, if the Country was rich: Sire, said I, the Siam; with Kingdom of Siam neither produces nor consumes any thing. That's a great deal faid in a few Words, reply'd the King. And among other Questions which he continued to ask me, he inquir'd what Manner of Government it was, how the People liv'd, and how the King came by all the Presents which he had sent him. I return'd for Answer, that the People were very poor: That there were no Persons of Rank or Figure among them, because they were all born Slaves to the King, and oblig'd to work for him one half of the Year, unless he pleases to dispense with that Service by advancing them to the Dignity of a Mandarin:

Mandarin: That tho' this Dignity raises them out of the Dust, yet it does not screen them from Disgrace by the The Pover-Prince, in which they are easily involved, Slavery of and which is always follow'd with fevere Chastisements: That the Barkalon himself or Prime Minister, who fills the chief Office in the State, is as much expos'd to it as the others: That he only maintains himself in a Post so dangerous, by creeping fervilely before Master like the meanest Subject: That if he happens to fall into Difgrace, the mildest Treatment he can expect, is to be severely punish'd, and then fent back to the Plough-Tail: That the People live only upon Fruits, and Rice, which grows here in abundance: That as they all believe the Their Pro-Doctrine of Transmigration, nobody Doctrine of durst eat any thing that has Life, for Transmifear of devouring some Parent, or other Kindred: That as to the Presents which the King of Siam had fent to his Majefty, M. Constance had drain'd the Exchequer, and been at fo much Expence, that it wou'd not be an easy Matter for him to make it good: That the Kingdom of Siam, which is in a manner but one Peninsula, might be a very conve- The Connient Place of Intercourse to facilitate veniency of the Trade to the Indies, as it is the the Indian Frontier of two Seas, one on the East-Trade.

1688. ~~

side, which looks to China, Japan, Tonquin, Cochinchina, the Country of Labor and Cambodia; and the other on the West Side fronting the Kingdom of Arracan, the Ganges, the Coasts of Coromandel and Malabar, and the City of Surat: That the Merchandize of all these different Countries was brought every Year to. Siam, which is the Place of Rendezvous, and a kind of Fair, where the Siamele make some Profit by the Sale of their Provisions: That the principal Revenue of the King confifts in the Commerce which he carries on almost folely throughout the Kingdom; the only Produce of which is Rice, Larec, of which they make Betel, a little Pewter, some Elephants, which they sell, and some Skins of Fallow Deer, of which the Country is full: That the Siamese going in a manner naked, except a Linen Cloth which they wear from the Waist to the Mid-leg, they have no Manufacture of their own, but some Muslins, of which the Mandarins only have a Right to make themselves a fort of Waistcoats that they wear on Days of Ceremony: That when a Mandarin has been fo Cunning as to raise a little Stock of Money, his best Way is to keep it conceal'd, otherwise the Prince will fend for it: That nobody has a Foot of Land in the Kingdom, to the King; which is the Reason that the greatest Part of the Soil lies fallow, And the only landed hobody thinking it worth his while to Man. cultivate Acres which will be taken from them as soon as they are in a good Case: That, in fine, the People are The good such good Husbands, that a private Husbandry of the People Man, who gets but fifteen or twenty ple. Livres a Year, has more than is necessary for his Maintenance.

The King the only Merchant chere.

THE King ask'd me likewise, what Sort of Money was current in Siam. Their Money, said I to him, is a round Bit of Their Money. Silver like a Musket-Rullet mark'd swith ney.

Silver like a Musket-Bullet, mark'd with two Siamese Letters; and this Bullet, which is the Prince's Coin, is call'd Tical, and worth forty French Sous. Besides the Tical, there's the half Tical, and another Sort of Money call'd Faon, worth about five Sous. As to their small Money, they make use of Shells of the Sea, which come from the Maldive Islands,

NOW, said the King, Let us talk of their Religion: Are there many Chri-The Religion of the stians in the Kingdom of Siam? and does court and the King really think of embracing Chri-Country stianity? Sire, said I to him, That Prince never entertain'd a Thought of it, nor durst any Mortal be so bold as to proand of which, fix Score amount to five pose it to him. 'Tis true, that M. de L 5. Chau-

4688. Chaumont, in the Speech which he made to him at his first Audience, mention'd Religion; but M. Constance, who officiated as an Interpreter, craftily suppressed that Article; and the Apostolical Vicar, who was present, and understands the Siamese Language perfectly, took great  $\cdot$ Notice of it, but durst not speak of it, for fear of incurring the Displeasure of M. Constance; who, if he had but open'd his Lips about it, wou'd never have forgiven him.

THE King, surpriz'd at what I said, heard me very attentively. I added, that in the several Audiences which M. de Chaumont had during his Embassy, he always expatiated upon the Beauty The Craft of the Christian Religion; but that Constance, who was always the Interpreter, cunningly acted in two Characters, by telling the King of Siam what pleas'd him, and by making agreeable Answers to the Ambassador; fo that nothing was refolv'd on the Part of the King, and on that of the Ambaffador, but what M. Constance thought fit to suggest to both: That I had learnt this Circumstance from the Apostolical Vicar himfelf, who was prefent at alltheir particular Conferences; and told it me as a great Secret. Upon this the King smil'd, and said, That it was a great Misfortune for Princes to be

of the Prime Minister.

oblig'd

Count DE FORBIN.

oblig'd to take every thing upon Trust 1688. from their Interpreters, who are often not so faithful as they shou'd be.

Then the King ask'd me whether An Active Missionaries did much Cook at count of the the Missionaries did much Good at court of the Siam; and in particular, whether they ries in Siam had converted many of the Siamese. Not a Soul, Sir, said I; but as the greatest Part of the Inhabitants is a Medley of different Nations; and as among the Siamese there's a great Mixture of Portuguese, Cochinchinese, and Japonese Christians, those honest Missionaries take care of them, and administer the Sacraments to them: They go from one Village to another, and introduce themselves into the Peoples Houses, on Pretence of practising Physick, and distributing small Remedies; yet all their Industry has not yet produc'd any thing in Favour of Religion. The most Service they do, is the baptising of the Siamese Foundlings: For the People being very poor, bring up but few of their Children, and think it no Crime to expose the rest in the Fields; the baptising of which Infants is all the Advantage produc'd by the Missions in this Country.

When I rose from the King's The Counter Table, M. de Seignelay carry'd me into closetted by his Closet, where he put a great many nelay. Questions to me, especially in Matters wherein the King's Interest was concern'd, particularly whether there was an

him Ques-Commerce 🍕 Siam,

any Hopes of establishing a considerable Trade at Siam, and what I thought were the Views of M. Constance, in the Fondness he shew'd for inviting the ing to the French thither. I satisfied him on this last Head, by giving him an ample Account of all that I knew of the Siamese Minister's Views and Designs.

As to the Article of Commerce, I told him, as I did the King, that as the Country produc'd nothing of its own, it could only be look'd upon as a Place of convenient Situation to facilitate the Commerce to China, Japan, and the other Kingdoms of the Indies: That this being the Case, the Establishment begun by fending Troops thither, was absolutely unnecessary, the Company having already there more than fufficient for that End. That as to the Fortress of Bancock, it would remain in the Hands of the French as long as the King of Siam and M: Constance liv'd; but that when either of them happen'd to die, the Siamese, sollicited by their own Interest, and by the Enemies of France, would not fail to dislodge our Troops from a Place, which render'd them Masters of the Kingdom.

Two Days after this, the Cardinal de Janson told me, that Father de la Chaise wanted to discourse me about the

the new Settlement of the French in the 1688. Kingdom of Siam. 'Cousin, said the

' Cardinal to me, take heed what your

' say, for you are going to talk with the craftiest Man in all the Kingdom.

It gives me no Concern, said I, for

' I shall fay nothing but the Truth.' On that very Day I was introduc'd by the Back Stairs, and presented to his Reverence by Fryar Vatable.

This Reverend Father's Discourse Father de la turn'd almost wholly upon Religion, Chaise's and the King of Siam's Design to retain with our the Jefuits in his Dominions, by build- Author aing a College and an Observatory for Jesuits at them at Louvo. I told him that M. Siam. Constance who was resolv'd, whatever it cost him, to obtain our King's Protection, had promis'd more than he could perform. That the Observatory and the College too would be built, perhaps, during the King of Siam's Life, and that the Jesuits would be maintain'd there; but that whenever this Prince dies, the Government of France would be oblig'd to find out Funds for the Maintenance of the Missionaries, there being little Appearance that a new King would contribute to their Support.

WHEN Father de la Chaise had heard About rame talk thus, Your Account, faid he, ther Tadoes not agree with Father Tachard's. I reply'd,

1688. reply'd, That I had told him nothing but the naked Truth; that I did not know what Father Tachard had faid, nor his Motives for faying it, but that his Friendship for M. Constance, who to attain to his own Ends, had left no Stone unturn'd to beguile him, might very well have blinded him, and consequently render'd his Accounts of Matters suspicious. That during the little Time he staid at Siam with M. de Chaumont, he was intirely in that Minister's Confidence; that upon some Occasions he had actually serv'd in the Quality of French Secretary, and that I myself had seen Warrants of that Father's own Hand-writing, fign'd by my Lord Ambassador, and underneath Tachard. At this the Reverend Father smiled, but instantly resuming that About the Gravity and Preciseness which generally sits upon his Countenance, he ask'd whether the Missionaries made great Improvement in this Kingdom.

Mithonaties,

> I MADE the fame Answer to him upon this Article as I had done to the King, adding, that what most of all retarded the Progress of the Gospel, was the rigid and austere Life of the Talapoins: 'These Priests or Monks;

And the Talapoins.

of the Country, faid I, live in continual Abstinence, having nothing to · substift upon but the Charity which is:

Count DE FORBIN.

' is distributed to them from Day to ' Day: What they receive beyond ' what is strictly necessary, they give ' to the Poor, and reserve nothing for ' the next Day. They never go out of ' their Monastery, but to beg Charity, for which they never open their Lips, but only hold out their Basket, which ' indeed is soon full; for the Siamese ' are very charitable. When the Tala-' poins go through the Town, they carry a Fan in their Hands, which they spread before their Faces, to ' prevent their seeing the Women; for · they live in very strict Rules of Con- tinence, and never difpense with them but when they are determin'd to quit ' the Order and marry. The Siamefe have neither publick Prayers nor Sacrifices. The Talapoins assemble them fometimes in their Pagods, ' where they preach to them; and the ' common Subject of their Sermons is Charity, which is a Virtue highly recommended all over the Kingdom, where you meet with few fo poor as • to be reduc'd to beg their Bread. 'The Women here are naturally The Siavery Chaste; for the Siamoje are mese wo-' pretty honest, and the Children are Children. ' so submissive to their Parents, that ' they fuffer themselves to be sold by ' their Parents, without repining, when they 1688.

' they are forc'd to it for Relief of their Necessities. This being the Case, ' there can be no Hopes of converting ' any Siamese to the Christian Religion: · For besides that they are too stupid to be made easily sensible of the ' Nature of our Mysteries, and think ' their Morality more perfect than ours; they have not a due Esteem for our Missionaries, who do not ' live so austerely as the Talapoins do.

Their filly a Deity and Paradile.

WHEN our Priests go to preach Notions of the Truths of the Christian Religion at Siam, the filly People who are very docide, hearken to them as if they were telling them Fables or 'Tales to please Children. Their · natural Complaifance inclines them to. · approve of any fort of Religion. According to them, Paradife is a ' great Palace, inhabited by the chief Sovereign, which has feveral Gates for all Nations to enter at, to serve the chief Sovereign according to his · Occasions. They compare it to the ' King's Palace, which has feveral · Entries, and where every Mandarinhas his particular Functions. 'Tis the same, say they, as to Heaven, the Palace of the Almighty, to which all Religions open like fo many Gates, because all the Creeds of Mankind, whatever they be, tend 1688.

' Man-

' to honour the first Being, and refer

' to him, in some degree or other, more or lefs. The Talapoins never dif-

' pute with any body about Religion;

' and talk to them of the Christian,

' or any other Religion, they approve whatever you fay of it: But when a ' Man offers to find Fault with their 'Religion, they answer coldly, I have been so complaisant as to approve of your Religion, why do not you then

'approve of mine? As to external

· Acts of Penance, and the Mortifica-fion of the Passions, it would not be ' proper to talk to them on those · Points, because they are in those re-

' fpects exemplary, and furpass our

' most rigid Fraternities by far, at ' least externally.

But, Father, said I, the Jesuits never fail of Enemies in these Missions;

for your Missionaries, who have fu-

· perior Talents, easily ingratiate themfelves with the Princes, and obtain

' their Favour, for the Support of the ' Christian Religion; so that no wonder

' that Envy raises many Cabals amongst

' them not only in Europe, but also ' in the Indies.

WHILE I stay'd at Siam, several

• com∗

' Chinese of great Wit and Learning,

' confess'd to me, that they could not

1688. 'comprehend how People of one and ~~ ' the same Faith, who had left their ' native Country, and made long ' Voyages thro' fuch vast Seas, could f propose to convert Pagans, while ' they themselves were not agreed in ' their Conduct, some living with very ' great Modesty and Charity, and others abandoning themselves ' Malice and Strift, to call it by no worse Name. This was the Language of all the Chinese with whom 'I talk'd. And 'tis a Truth fo con-' stant and notorious all over the Indies, · that I not only thought it my Duty ' to inform you of it, but also to pub-' lish it upon all Occasions.

The Author's Ef. tects feiz'd tom-House Officers.

I HAD been for some Days at Paris, and not feeing the Carrier arrive from by the Cuf. Brest, I began to be uneasy for the Bales I had committed to his Care. In Order to know the Meaning of it, I went to the Office, when I found what I had apprehended true to a Tittle. The Commissioners of the Custom-House at Pontorson had seized all my Effects there, and, not fatisfy'd with the Seizure of them, on Pretence that I had in my Bales India Goods, which were at that Time prohibited, they condemned me to a Fine of Five Hundred Livres, for having contraven'd the King's Orders.

BEING

Being much puzzled what to do, 1688. I at last thought it my best Way to have Recourse to M. Ceberet, who I knew was very well acquainted with the Farmers General. After informing him of the Disaster which had befallen me, I told him, that as I knew nothing of the King's Prohibition, I ought not to be punish'd for the Breach of it; that my Sincerity in my whole Conduct was sufficient to justify me, because I had myself declared to the Carrier the Quality of my Merchandize, and expresly specified the Indian Goods, which I shou'd not have done if I had thought they were prohibited. Ceberet gave me all the Encouragement that was in his Power; for he told me, that he knew the Farmers of the Customs, that they were very honest People, that I might go to them myself when there was a Board, and that he was fure they would give me Satisfaction.

According to his Advice, I waited His Comon those Gentlemen, complain'd of the plaint to the Farmers Condemnation pass'd upon me, and of the Remade the best Use I cou'd of the Ar-venue. guments I had urg'd to M. Ceberet. I insisted chiefly on my Sincerity, and demanded that, on that Consideration, they would order my Bales to be restor'd to me. Upon my Representation, they unanimously condemned what 1688. what the Commissioners had done, with respect to the Merchandize which was not prohibited; but as for the Indian Goods, they said they cou'd not release them, because of the Edict, by which they were prohibited; but that I might apply to the King, who might be prevail'd on by my Interest, and that of my Friends, to give Orders for the Restitution of them.

AFTER this Confultation, I defired those Gentlemen to send their Orders to Pontorson, for the bringing all my Bales to their Office at Paris, and I declar'd that I was ready to pay, not only all the Duties, but the Charges of Carriage: Upon which M. de Lulie, who was President of the Assembly, immediately order'd a Letter to be writ to the Commissioners, and it was fign'd and seal'd in my Presence.

AFTER I went from the Office, I posted immediately to M. Bontems at Versailles, and, telling him what had happen'd, I desir'd him to speak of it. to M. le Pelletier the Comptroller Geheral of the Finances. Bontems stirr'd for me with his usual Zeal. The Minister, who had an Affection for him, faid he cou'd refuse him nothing; but that before he made any Order upon it, he thought it convenient to mention it to the King. His Majesty granted whatever whatever he desir'd of him, whereupon, 1688. the Minister to oblige M. Bontems, procur'd an Order to be dispatch'd for An Order their me, from the King to the Farmers being re-General, enjoyning them to take Care ftor'd. that all the Merchandize which belonged to the Chevalier de Forbin, was restor'd forthwith, without paying any Duty.

I pip not mention the Favour I had receiv'd from Court to any one Person living; but when I heard that my Bales were arriv'd at Paris, I went myself and acquainted M. Lulie with the Order I had obtain'd. He was fo overjoy'd at the Satisfaction it gave me, that he went to the Office and caused every Thing that was mine to be restor'd to me. Thus did this Atfair prove, in the Issue, to my Advantage, for which good Success, I was obliged to the Friendship of M. Bontems, who, to do him Justice, never fail'd to exert himself upon all Occasions that I had to trouble him, as has been already observed, and as will appear, more than once, in the Sequel of these Memoirs.

As to this Friend of mine, I must character take Notice, by the Way, that there of our Author's was scarce a Man at Court, whose Friend M. Protection was so useful, and so much Bontems. sollicited as his, because there were few of the Nobility that had so much Interest. I might here mention a great many Things to his Advantage; but I pass them over in Silence, because they wou'd carry me to too great a Length: But I cannot omit one Thing, which fets him in a Rank above to many others of superior Birth, and that is his Zeal and fincere Attachment to the Person of the King, which had gain'd him fuch a Share of his Sovereign's Confidence, which he possess'd to the Day of his Death, that he obtain'd every Thing he ask'd; and, what is, scarce to be parallel'd elsewhere, he always made to proper an Use of his Favour, that never any Person envy'd him; and he always took Care to employ his Interest to do Service, and never to hurt any Man whatfoever.

1688.

Paris, where, some Months after my Arrival, we had an Account of the Enterprize of the Mandarin Pitracha, upon the Kingdom of Siam. Tho' I was not Witness of it, yet every Thing that pass'd on this Occasion has such a Connection with what has been already said, and so fully justifies, in the Event, all that I had predicted from the Alliance of the two Crowns, and from the Settlement of the French at Bancock, that I am persuaded the Reader will be pleased with a short Account of 1688. what was the Success of this Enterprize, and how our Countrymen were oblig'd to abandon that Place in this Kingdonf which was put into their Hands.

IT was about the Middle of May A Revolu-1688, that the Kingdom of Siam, which siam had been violently disturb'd for some Time, by Commotions that were the more dangerous, because they were concealed, became all at once the Theatre of a Revolution which alter'd the Face of the whole Country, and which, by extinguishing the whole Royal Family, was very fatal to all those who till then had the Management of Affairs, and in a Moment overturn'd every Step that had been taken, in regard to the Alliance with the French.

I HAVE already observed, that tho' every Thing seemed in a profound Tranquillity at Siam, there were but few of the Mandarins, but, from the Bottom of their Hearts, wish'd for a Change of Affairs. I discover'd that they hanker'd after a Revolution, while I stay'd at Siam, and I had the more Reason to be convinced of it, from the Affair of the Sieur de Rouan, in which we observed that the Mandarins were baulk'd in their Expectations, by the Care I took to vindicate M. Constance.

The Character of the tion.

1688. In the Number of those that were capable of making the greatest Disturbance, was the Mandarin Pitracha; a Man of Mandarin Resolution, esteem'd by his Countrywho was the men for his Courage, and respected the Revolu- for the Austerity of his Manners. This very Man form'd a Plot to shake offthe Yoke, and to place himself upon the Throne.

The Meafures he took to efsect it.

This Man, whom I knew perfectly well, was advanc'd in Years, but had all the Vigour of Youth; He conducted himself with so much Prudence, and so artfully managed the People, that, after he had engaged the Talapoins on his Side, he not only brought over the Mandarins, by flattering their Ambition, and promifing them a Share in the Government, but the Populace too, who, being always fond of Novelty, hop'd for a milder Government under another Sovereign.

🤼 Minister,in not piein his Power.

ALL his Wiles, however, were not ness of the so secret, but Constance had a Hint of them; and he might easily have prewhen twas vented the Conspiracy: but whether it was owing to an ill-grounded Scruple that he had, of impeaching and arresting Pitracha, till he had sufficient Proof in his Hands to convict him, or whether he thought himself strong' enough at any Time to suppress the Faction, he suffered the Affair to go on too long. He perceived his Mistake 1688. when 'twas too late, and, in order to retrieve it the best he cou'd, he had His vain Importuni-Recourse to the French at Bancock, ty with the But my Countrymen, upon the false French to affift him. Accounts that were brought them of the Troubles, and of the Commotions at Court, being cautious of engaging in an Affair that might be attended with Confequences fatal to their own Nation, lay still in their Fort, notwithstanding M. Constance sent them Letters and Couriers, one upon the Heels of another, to conjure them to come to his Affiftance.

WHEN I heard this Circumstance, I was so angry at the Behaviour of my Countrymen, that I cou'd not help faying to M. Seignelay, who told me the Story, that if I had been then at Bancock, I wou'd have flown, without any Scruple, to the Affistance of M. Constance, whatever Reason I had to complain of his ill Usage of me in other Respects. And, to speak the our Au-Truth, I have so mean an Opinion of thor's Opinion of the the Siamese Valour, that, I am per-Siamese Vafuaded, if I had gone to Louvo but his own. with Fifty Men of my Garison, the very Sight of me wou'd have been sufficient to have difperfed all the Populace, who wou'd have given up their Leader to me, without striking a Stroke, and been Vol. I.

1688. glad to have appealed the Court by a fpeedy Submission.

The King of Siam Ccur'd, and his Mimitter classpid in Irons

THE Succours there was Reason to expect from the French C. non, not coming in, and every Thing concurring to favour Pitracha's Undertaking, he made publick Declaration of his Design, put himself at the Head of the People, and then made himself Master of the King's Palace and Person. At the very first Rumour of this Step, Constance fled to the King, resolving to die in the Defence of him; but it was too late, for he himfelf was arrested and clapp'd in Irons.

The Unitfoner.

PITRACHA, to render his Usurpaper's Treet, tion the less odious, imagining that the Royal P.i. King, whose Diftemper increased every. Day, had not long to live, not only forbore any Manner of Infult upon the Person of his Prince, after he had made him his Prisoner, but taking upon him higher Quality than that of a great Mandarin, he issued no Order but in the Name of the King, to whom he made no Scruple to leave all the exterior Part of Sovereignty.

As every Thing had hitherto fucceeded to the Usurper's Wish, so the Consequences prov'd altogether as favourable; The several Orders of the State having submitted to his Dominion, nothing remained for him, but to drive

the

the French out of the Kingdom, that 1688. he might reap the Fruit of his Crimes in Peace. He was afraid of none but them, and, in short, they were the only People that were capable of putting a Spoke in his Wheel; but he foon perceived that he had no need to stand in Fear of them. When he was made His Minis fensible how weak they were, and how fer put to little they car'd what became of M. Constance, whose Life he had only spar'd till then, because he did not know how the French were affected towards him, he fiest stript him of all his Treasure, and then, without more ado, rid his Hands of an Enemy that he fo much hated.

WHAT Kind of Death he put him His Beha. to, is not known. They who were at viour under Siam during the Revolution, say, that tunes, and he supported all these Missortunes with racter. the Sentiments of a Christian, and the Courage of a Hero. And, notwithstanding the many ill Turns he did to me, I frankly own that I am inclined to believe their Report. For M. Constance had a Soul that was great, noble, and sublime, and such a superior Genius as enabled him to conduct the greatest Projects to an Issue, with a world of Prudence and Sagacity. Happy Constance! if all these great Qualities had not been clouded over by  $M_{2}$ grofs 1688. gross Defects, especially by a boundless. Ambition, by infatiable Avarice, often even to a Degree of Sordidness, and by a Jealoufy, which, taking Fire on the least Occasions, render'd him harsh, cruel, implacable, infincere, and capable of the most hateful Things in Life.

The King's the Ufurrer.

The French return home.

THE King died in a few Days after the Procla his Minister, and Pitracha was with one mation of Voice acknowledged King of Siam. And, to compleat his Happiness, our Countrymen, after a Siege of some at Bancock Months, in which they funer'd all that Men cou'd do in their Circumstances, were obliged to abandon Bancock; and return with their melancholy Remnants to France, where we faw in what Pickle they arriv'd. This was all our Nation gain'd by that ill-concerted Undertaking, which tho' very expenfive, cou'd be of no Advantage to the Kingdom, and which the Court was meerly wheedled into by Promifes that were specious in Appearance, but had no folid Foundation.

Revoluti in in England.

Soon after this Revolution, there happen'd one in England, which entirely chang'd the Face of Affairs in Europe. Every body knows what pass'd in this great Turn, so that I shall say but two Words about it, just as much as is necessary for the understanding of what I am to take Notice 1688. of hereafter.

ftanding.

THE Protestants of England had for a long time conceiv'd violent Umbrage at the Protection which was granted to the Catholicks by King James the Second. They were afraid that this Prince, after having by degrees abolish'd the several Acts passed at sundry times against the Members of the Romish Communion, wou'd at last make it the prevailing Religion of his Dominions. But being refolv'd to leave no Stone unturn'd to ward off this Blow, they privately sent a Deputation to Holland, to treat with the Prince of Orange, and to offer him the Kingdom of Great Britain, if he wou'd protect them.

This Proceeding cou'd not be kept so secret, but France had Advice of it. The King complain'd of it to the States General, who dissembling the Matter, in order to gain Time, return'd nothing but loofe Answers of no Significance. The Prince of Orange, who had been long contriving a Scheme to make himself King of England, and who saw all his Hopes just ready to be frustrated, because the Queen was big with Child, hearken'd to the Proposals of the Deputies, and made all the ne- $M_{3}$ ceffary

1688. cessary Preparations underhand for his

Enterprize.

As he had need of the Seven United Provinces, and several Princes of Germany to support him, he engaged them so warmly in his Party, that they afsisted him with all their Forces, and were not assaid even to expose their own Dominions to Danger, by sending the Troops which protected them, to his Support. All things being ready, the Prince put to Sea with a numerous Fleet, and hoisted the Flag of England, with this Inscription, For Religion and Liberty.

AFTER some cross Accidents, which only hinder'd his Sailing for a few Days, he landed safely at Darimouth and Torbay; where he was receiv'd by the People as a Deliverer sent them from Heaven. London, the Country, and the Armies both by Sea and Land, all declar'd for him. The King then feeing it dangerous for him to stay, sled from the Storm, and went over to France, waiting for better Days to return to England, and to affert his Right Sword in Hand. Thus was that great Revolution brought about, which occasion'd a War, that was immediately declar'd by the King of France against the Emperor and the Dutch.

By reason of this new War, there were few of the Officers that wanted Employment. I waited on M. de Seigne- The Count lay, who fent me to Dunkirk, where I Dunkirk to had a Frigate of sixteen Guns given chile in the English me to cruise with in the Channel. had been at Sea for some Days, when the Governor of Calais fent me Word, that the Spaniards having declar'd War against us, I might stop all the Ships of that Nation which I met with. Next Day I met with four small Ostenders, in Takes four the Rear of a Fleet of English Mer- Offend chant-men. I stop'd them without any Difficulty; and as they did not know that we were at War with Spain, they suffer'd themselves to be carry'd into Dunkirk, where they were confiscated to the King.

Isail'd again not many Days after with the Sieur John Bart, Captain of a small Frigate of twenty-four Guns. We had Orders to convoy some Ships laden for the King's Account to the Port of Brest., Besides my Crew, which confisted of One hundred and twenty Men, I put on board One hundred Soldiers at Dunkirk, who were also to be carry'd to Brest.

In our Passage, a Dutch Privateer of fourteen Guns came to take a View of us, which I gave Chase to, and overtook. Her Imprudence was the Reafon that she lost above half of her Crew: For when she saw that I was going to board her, she nail'd down her Hatches, to the End that the Crew, having no Hopes of their Escape, might be oblig'd to defend themselves to the last Extremity.

 $M_4$ fon

His Fight with a Dutch Privateer.

We had no fooner boarded her, but one of the most bloody Battles ensu'd that I ever saw. The Fellows sought like Madmen; so that their Deck was instantly cover'd with dead Bodies: At the Sight of which, I leap'd into the Ship to put an end to the Slaughter, else there had not been a Man lest alive, so exasperated were my Men at the Resistance they met with.

HAVING convoy'd our Ships to Brest, we sail'd to Havre de Grace; where we learn'd that War was declar'd against the English. The Orders we had upon this Occasion to attack them, were the Cause of a very bold Action that happen'd not many Days after, in which the Reader will find, by what follows, we had ill Success.

At our Arrival in the Harbour, we found twenty Merchant Ships ready to fail. They desir'd our Convoy, and we readily granted it. When we came over-against the Isle of Wight, we were chas'd by two English Ships of sifty Guns. The Weather was fair, and the Sea very calm, little Wind stirring. When we faw thefe two Ships bearing down upon the Fleet, Bart and I confider'd what Course to take. The furest Way was to abandon the Fleet; and, to speak the Truth, it was hardly possible for us to fave our Ships by any other Means. Nevertheless, in spite of the Danger we ran in facing the Enemy, I thought it by no Means convenient to fly. I represented to Bart, that indeed, our Ships were light, and good Sailors; and that we might therefore easily escape if we wou'd; but that the' this wou'd certainly save us, it wou'd as certainly expose us to the Reproach of Mankind: That we might be sure these two Ships wou'd carry away above half of our Merchantmen: That we shou'd infallibly be call'd to an Account for so unhappy an Event; and, that it wou'd be given out we might have prevented the Loss, by standing in our Defence.

I ADDED, that if he wou'd follow. my Advice, we wou'd run the Hazard of striking a bold Stroke, which wou'd give us a Reputation, and infallibly contribute to advance our Affairs at Court: That the only thing to be done, was to arm two of the biggest Merchant Ships, and to strengthen the Crews, by taking Sailors out of other M 5

- Ships z

1689.

The Author's Engagement

English.

Ships.

with feme

Ships: That with this Reinforcement, we wou'd go and attack the two English Ships, if they continued to give us Chase: That he and I wou'd board the Commodore, while the two Merchant-men kept the other employ'd, by cannonading him: And, in fine, that if we were so happy as to take the Ship that we engag'd, we wou'd make use of her for the Attack of the second, which then cou'd hardly escape us. He approv'd of my Arguments. We attack'd and boarded the English Ship; but by Misfortune, Bart miftook in Boarding her, which I perceiv'd, and faw plainly that we shou'd be taken; but I chose to run the Risque of my Life, rather than fly from my Colours. The Soldiers and Sailors of our Frigates, that cou'd not enter into the Enemy's Ship, ply'd the Head of her with Gunshot and Grenado's.

IFLATTER'D myself for some time with the Hopes, that either the Tide or the Wind wou'd savour our Boarding. But this Remedy quickly fail'd us, by the Cowardice of the two Merchantmen, who abandon'd us, instead of Fighting, as they had promis'd: Upon which, the other Ship came to his Companion's Assistance; so that then we were by no means a Match for them: But tho' we saw very plainly, that it was in a manner impossible for us to 1689. escape, we still fought, that the Fleet might have the more Time to get away, or at least that they might not have altogether so cheap a Conquest.

was 🕆

IT was a bloody Fight for two long Hours; which is much more Time than is requisite to board a Vessel: Two-thirds of my Crew had loft their Lives, and I had receiv'd fix Wounds, which were not so dangerous as they were troublesome; yet we still fought on. I went off of Deck to be drefs'd, for I loft a great deal of Blood. My Valet de Chambre, who thought me dangerously wounded, follow'd me with a great Lamentation, but I threaten'd to break his Head, if he did not get up again upon Deck and fight on, as I wou'd do as foon as my Blood was staunch'd.

THE Crew having nobody to command them, and seeing the Deck strew'd with dead Bodies, thought of nothing but flying. My Footman, who was His Foots by this time got upon Deck, perceiving man runs how they stood affected, and seeing six away from him. Sailors getting off in the Sloop, he follow'd them, and without being concern'd at the Condition he left me in, went with them aboard one of the Merchant Ships of the Fleet, which took him in.

1689.

furrenders.

s ftrip'd.

Carry'd to

WHILE I was thus mortify'd, Bart fared no better. The greatest Part of his Men had been kill'd or wounded, and he himself had receiv'd a Wound in his Head. At last, when we saw it was in vain to hold out any longer, The Count we yielded our two Frigates, and went on board the Enemy's Ship. The Captain of her was kill'd. The Purser took care of my Wounds. I had a handfome Suit of Cloaths on, which with the rest of my Goods, the Crew soon accommodated themselves with, and they strip'd me as bare as my Hand. Instead of a Shirt they gave me a Waistcoat, and a great Pair of Breeches, with a Hole on the left Buttock. A Seaman pull'd off his Shoes to give them to me, and another gave me a forry Cap.

BART had better Luck than I; for because he spoke English a little, they did not strip him. While I was in this fine Trim, we were carry'd to Plymouth, where the Governor made a great Entertainment for us. As my Name was known, notwithstanding the ridiculous Figure I made, I was honour'd with an Elbow-Chair at the upper End of the Room. I can hardly forbear smiling, whenever I think of the Contrast there was between the Post of Honour I was feated in upon that Occasion, and the Garb in which I was equip'd. How- 1689. ever, I was not then so merrily dispos'd; for I was too fensible of the Governor's Unkindness, whose Civility extended no farther than this single Repast.

the

Tho' he saw I was in want of every plaint of his thing, he had not the good Nature fo Usage by much as to give me a Shirt; and the nor, and his Officers who din'd with us, among own Counwhom were several Frenchmen, whose Names I spare to mention, for fear of putting them to the Blush, were as ungenerous as he. I was fo provok'd at this I reatment from the one and from the other, that after having taken a little Food, I gave the Governor to understand, that I wanted Rest more than any thing else, and desir'd him to let me have a Room where I might not be disturb'd. He took such Pity of me, that he fent me with Bart, to a Tavern, where he kept us under a ftrong Guard. As foon almost as I came to the He is visi-Place, I went to Bed, musing upon ted in his Confinemy Misfortune; but I had scarce lain ment by down, when Word was brought that a Goldfinith, Man wanted to speak with me. I rose now a Reup to see who it was, and was imme- Marseiller, diately surpriz'd with a Visit from Romieu the Goldsmith, the very Man to whom, when I was at Marseilles, I gave

His Comthe Gover-

Romieu the fugee from for the fake of Religion

the

the Silver-hafted Forks that I filch'd from my Brother.

THE King's Edicts against the Hugonots, had drove the good old Man over to England. I was overjoy'd to fee him, and call'd him by his Name. He knew me, and with Tears in his · Eyes, said, As soon as I heard you was come bither, I left every thing to come and embrace you. What gives me the greatest Pain is, that I am not able to relieve you in your present unhappy Plight. I have been forc'd to leave Marseilles on account of my Religion. I have lost all my Estate, and am forc'd to serve in a Shop to get my Bread. Don't trouble yourself, said I, I know you are a generous Soul; and what you wou'd do for me if it was in your Power: And I thank you. But since the Disorder of your Affairs does not permit you to assist me with your own Purse, don't you know some Merchant bere that wou'd lend me a little Money upon your Credit? He will certainly be no Loser by it; for I will pay him by a Bill in any Part of France be shall name. After a Moment's Pause, he told me that he

He supplies the Count with Money.

In short, in two Hours time he brought me one Ouvarin, a Merchant, who offer'd to let me have what Mo-

had a Friend to apply to, and that he wou'd fee what he cou'd do for me.

ney I pleas'd for a Bill of Exchange of 1689. the like Sum payable to M. le Gendre at Roan. This was all I wanted; and immediately I drew a Bill for five hundred Crowns upon M. de Louvigny, the Intendant at Havre de Grace; of which Bill I only took twenty Crowns for the Score at the Tavern; and having defir'd the Sieur Ouvarin to bespeak me some Shirts and other wearing Apparel, I receiv'd a Note for the rest.

THE Day after I came to Plymouth, The Count I wrote to M. de Seignelay a full Ac- writestom. count of all that had happen'd, and lay at Paris, as I did not know what Construction the Court might pass upon our Adventure, I took care to omit nothing that might ferve to clear up our Characters.

I HAD so much Time upon my Hands for the greatest Part of the Day, and fometimes too in the Night, that I studied which Way to extricate myself out of my present Condition. I thought that the Protection of the Marshal de Schomberg, who was come over to England on account of Religion, might be of some Service to me. I And to the directed my Letter to him at London, Marshal de and desir'd he wou'd make Interest for at London my being brought thither, that I might be nearer at hand to negotiate my Exchange.

1689.

He sent me for Answer, That he was glad of an Opportunity to oblige me, and that he wou'd speak about it to the King. I know not whether he was so good as his Word; perhaps he did me that Service; but I did not give time for the Effect of it. My Impatience to be at Liberty, my Dread of the Delays that always accompany Exchanges, which are feldom made at the Term fix'd, together with the Hardships we were like to suffer from the Governor of Plymouth, who still refus'd to let us out upon our Parole of Honour, determin'd, both Bart and myself, to contrive some way or other for our Escape.

The Count sont ives this Escape.

A FAIR Opportunity foon presented. An Ostend Seaman, who was related to Bart, having the Steerage of a little Vessel, was oblig'd to put in at Plymouth. He came to see us; we acquainted him with our Scheme, and I offer'd him Four hundred Crowns for my own Part, if he would befriend us. This Sum made him prick up his Ears, and perfectly fecur'd him in our Interest. The first thing he did was of great Service to us, for he brought us a File to saw off the Iron Bars of our Window. I fil'd one of 'em fo cleverly that it scarce held together; and that my Craft might not be detected, I cover'd chew'd Bread which I mix'd with Soot.

In the mean time my Wounds began to heal, by the Care of the Governor's own Surgeon, who was a Fleming, and long'd to go to France, but could not for want of Money; therefore we brought him into our Plot. We also engag'd in our Design a couple of Swabbers that were set to attend us, and who could not fail being of great Service to us, because of the Liberty they had to go abroad whenever they pleas'd.

THERE was nothing wanting now but a Ship to carry us off. The Oftender would have given us his with all his Heart; but the Vessel was not entirely at his Disposal, and what was still worse, was, that we should have been under a Necessity of admitting too many People into the Secret.

While we were confidering what to do next, the Swabbers, who, in hopes of a Gratuity, were very diligent to ferve us, came to tell us, in a great hurry one Night, after we had been Eleven Days in Prison, that it was in our own Power to make our Escape, and that they had provided every thing that was necessary for the Purpose. That they had found a Wherry or Yawl of Norway, with nobody aboard

but

1689. but the Waterman dead drunk, whom they had remov'd into another small Vessel hard by, and then carry'd the Wherry to a certain Nook of the Harbour, where we might embark in the Night-time without being feen. INDEED I thought it was not possible for a better Opportunity to offer, and fo did Bart, upon which without Loss of Time, when the Surgeon came to dress me, I bad him find out the Ostend Pilot, and charge him, from me, to inish the Boat which the Swabber's would shew him, with Bread, Cheese, Beer, a Sea-Compass, a Pair of Compasses, and a Sea-Chart, to prepare every thing without the least Noise, and then to come and give us Notice much about Midnight. For a Signal, he was to throw a Stone at our Window. Every thing was punctually perform'd, and as foon as they had given the Signal, I broke off the fil'd Bar, and tying the Sheets of our Bed together, we made ready to get down.

The Count's Escape.

Before we went, I wrote two Letters which I left on my Table, one for the Governor, thanking him for all his Civilities, and promising to do as much for him when Opportunity ferv'd, and the other for the Sieur Ouvarin, in which after expressing my Gratitude for the good Offices he had done done me, I desired him to pay my 1689. Landlord the Score I had run up at the Bar, to make a Bill of what he had expended for me, and to send it to M. le Gendre, that the whole might be paid off without delay.

WHEN every thing was ready for our Escape, I took leave of my Lieutenant, who was our Fellow-Prisoner, and would have been glad of going off with us; but having only one Arm, and being a swinging great Fellow, he would infallibly have difcover'd us, if he had attempted it: In order to make him easy, I assur'd him that if we were so happy as to get to France, I wou'd use all my Interest to procure his Liberty. When he saw that his Escape was impracticable, he easily consented to tarry, and even favour'd us as much as possible, by amusing our Guards while we made off, and by talking to himself with an audible Voice for a long time after we were gone, as if he was all the while fpeaking to us. When we were got down, Bart and I, the Surgeon and the two Swabbers embark'd in the Yawl.

'Tis such a Satisfaction to a Man when he is got out of a Prison, that the Danger which follows, be it never so great, goes for nothing. We went on board this little Vessel with as much Secu-

Security as if it had been an Admiral's Ship. We found but two Oars in her, or rather an Oar and a Sculler. As my Wounds were still bleeding, I was not in a Condition to row, so that I was Steersman while Bart took the Oar, and one of the Swabbers the Sculler. In this manner we scudded through the Road in the Middle of Twenty Ships, the Men aboard calling out on all Sides to us, Whither bound? to which Bart made answer, That we were Fishermen.

Flight. We fail'd two Days and a Half in the Channel with very fair Weather, and a Mist which favour'd our Escape. Bart row'd all the Way with indefatigable Vigour, hardly giving himself time to take a Morsel of Food; and at last we arrived on the Coast of Bretagne, after having run Sixty-sour Leagues in less than Forty-eight Hours.

His Arrival on the Coast of Bretagne.

EARLY in the Morning we landed fix Leagues from St. Malo, near a Village call'd Harqui. As we went ashore, we were visited by a Brigade of six Men, who were commanded to patrol along the Coast, and to stop those that were slying for Resuge to England on account of Religion. One of those Soldiers who was formerly a Serjeant on board board a Ship, and knew me very well, 1689. came up to me, and after passing a Compliment, said, Oh! Sir, how glad am I to see you! It was reported you was dead. And indeed it was generally believ'd, because my Footman that ran away from me, had given People to understand by his Talk, that I was dead of my Wounds: For my eldest Brother, a Captain of a Ship, that was sent out to get Intelligence, meeting with the Merchant Man that had taken my Mariners on board, did not doubt, from the Report that was made to himof the Condition I was left in, but I was actually dead. The Marshal d'Estrées who then commanded at Brest, would fain have had my Footman punished for thus leaving me: But after his Examination, the Circumstances of his Escape appear'd so favourable, that he was acquitted and difmis'd.

WHEN I arriv'd at St. Malo, several The Fa-Merchants hearing how I had been di- vours done stress'd, came and offer'd me their Purse, him at St, and all the Service they could do me. I thank'd them for their Generosity, and taking only Twenty Lewid'ors from M. Dugue, Commissioner of the Navy at that Station, I fet out Post set out Post for Court: But Bart, who was of a for Paris; timorous Disposition, fearing that our stays be-

Manage-hind.

1689. Management had thrown us under Difpleasure, would not accompany me, but was glad to let me go first to feel their Pulses.

> I TOOK Dunkirk in my Way to Havre de Grace, where I saw M. de Louvigni the Intendant, to whom I spoke concerning the Bill of Exchange I had drawn upon him for Five hundred Crowns, which he promifed me to pay as foon as it was prefented to him. Upon this I went through Roan to fee M. le Gendre, to whom I deliver'd the Pilled Ind from the Sieur Ouvarin, defiring him to fettle every thing to the Satisfaction of that Merchant, who had done me this Service with fo good a Grace. I told him that for this end he had nothing to do but to apply to M. de Louvigni, who would pay him all the Money due according as it had been agreed on by us.

Cardinal Janjou.

From Roan I went to Paris, where my first Care was to wait on the Cardinal de Janson, to know what the Court thought of our Adventure, and of the Loss of two of the King's Ships. The good old Cardinal, who was but just return'd from Versailles, shouted for Joy when he first set his Eyes on me, ran to embrace me, and declar'd how glad he was to fee me come to Life again, again, and deliver'd from my Prison 1680. in England.

I knew by the Reception he gave me, that the Court was not distatisfy'd with us; however, I put the proper Questions to him. 'Cousin, faid he,

'you may go without fear of any thing; M. de Seignelay receiv'd your Letter, and went this very Morning to read it to the King. The Court

' is very well pleas'd both with you and M. Bart: The Sacrifice you

' made of your Porsons, and the Danger you expos'd your selves to be the ' Preservation of the Fleet, have

' charm'd both the King and the whole

Court. You have no need of me.

'Go with Courage to the Minister of the Marine, and depend upon a hearty ' Reception.

TRANSPORTED at this News, I and by M. waited on M. de Seignelay; I was scarce de Seignelay enter'd the Hall, but the Valet de Chambre, who stood at the Door of his Closet to tell his Master the Names of all Comers, ran in a Hurry to acquaint him that I was there. What art turn'd Fool? said the Minister to him, the Chevalier de Forbin is a Prisoner in England, and not in my Antichamber. The Valet assured his Master that he knew me very well, and persisted that I was the Man.

THE Minister, willing to be satisfy'd with his own Eyes, came out of his Closet, and seeing me actually standing before him, From whence came you? faid he; I told him I was come from England: But how the Devil came you away? reply'd the Minister; Through the Window, my Lord, said I, at which he fell a laughing.

Then he was defirous to know the Circumstances of our Escape, of which I gave him a particular Account, and perceiving that the 'Narrative pleas'd that he was highly fatisfy'd with my Conduct, I desir'd him to let me have wherewithal to take my Revenge. At these Words he look'd upon me again with a Smile, and rising up, without making me any Answer, carry'd me directly to the King, who wanted to be inform'd of our whole Adventure.

King.

And by the I HAD scarce made an End of speaking, when the Minister addressing himfelf to his Majesty, said, Sire, the very first Words of the Chevalier, were a Request to me to enable him to take his Revenge. What does he mean by Revenge? faid the King to me. Sire, faid I, what I mean by it is this, that as your Majesty's Ships are superior to the Enemy's, and much better built, if I had had the Advantage to command a Fifty-Gun Ship,

I should have infallibly taken the Two 1689. English Ships which made us Prisoners. This Saying was very pleasing to M. de Seignelay, and could fcarce have made my Court to him in a Manner more agreeable.

NEXT Day I put myself in his Way who adas he return'd from the King; being vances him in his Chair, he order'd his Men to set tain of a him down, and said to me, M. le Che-Ship. valier, the King has made you Captain of a Ship, and gives you Four hundred Crowns as a Gratification to indemnify your Losses. Being charm'd with the good News, I thank'd him for his Protection. which I acknowledg'd the Favour I had receiv'd was owing to: And then I represented to him, that as no Notice was taken of the Sieur John Bart, it look'd as if the Court had forgot him, but that however he deserv'd to be remember'd; that he was my Commander, and that on the late Occasion he had merited as much as I. M. de Seignelay listen'd to me attentively; but after having drawn up his Glasses, went on without making me any Anfwer.

AFTER this last Favour granted me by the King, I was not willing to defer my Acknowledgments, and in order to be introduc'd to his Majesty, I waited on M. de Luxembourg, the Cap-Vol. I

King.

1689. tain of the Guards then upon Duty. When I had acquainted him of the Reason why I wanted to speak with his Majesty, he made a very obliging Offer to accompany me. I represented to him, as we went along, that the Court had forgot to gratify M.-Bart, a Soldier of Fortune indeed, but a Man of diftinguish'd Valour, and who ought not to pass unrewarded. I added, that if he wou'd please to honour him with his Protection, and fecond my Motion, I wou'd take the Liberty to mention ing. The Marshal, charm with my Generosity, embrac'd me, and with a Complaisance in his very Looks, said to me: Jou need only speak one Word in Bart's Favour; I'll do the rest, never fear.

THE King was going abroad that very Morning to Mass. I thank'd him for his Favours, and he made Answer in these Words, You need only continue to serve me, I'll take Care of you. I answer'd, TheCount's with a profound Reverence, Ibeg Leave, Recommen Sire, to acquaint your Majesty, that you dation of Bart to the seem to have forgot the Sieur Bart, a Man of Merit, that deserves to be rewarded, and who, in this last Action, serv'd your Majesty with as much Zeal and Valour as I did. Sire, added M. de Luxemburg, what the Chevalier says, is true, Bart is a Man of good Reputation.

The

The King stop'd, and turning towards 1689. M. de Louvois, who was by him, The Chevalier de Forbin, says he, bas done a Thing that's truly generous, of which my Court scarce affords an Example.

Next Day I waited on M. de Seignelay, who, as foon as he fet Eyes on me, ran to embrace me, saying, Oh! Sir, you have carry'd your Point; The King has order'd me to treat M. Bart and you alike What you did yesterday gave me a sensible Pleasure. Twas even a braver and a nitre generous Attion than when you expos'd your Life for the 1 re servation of the Flect. Then while he HisRecom. was in that good Humour, I pray'd mendation of his Lieu. him to remember my Lieutenant, whom tenant. I had left a Prisoner at Plymouth. I added, that he was a brave Man, that he had ferved his Majesty well, and that he ought not to be passed by. You are a generous Soul, said the Minister to me, you forget nobody. WHILE I was thus making Interest for my Friends, I found generous People that did the like for me, and thought me worthy of their Regard. Madame Madam Rouillet, the Lady whose Coral I Rouillet's fold at Batavia, had been told of my Ad- Generosity venture. As foon as she heard I was Count. at Paris, she came to see me, and offered me Two hundred Pistoles, as a Present, which she wou'd force me to take.

 $N_2$

1689. take. I know, said she, that you are just come out of a Prison, and that you have been stript of all, even to the very Cloaths upon your Back; I beseech you take this Sum; You gain'd Two thousand. Crowns for me by my Coral, which I did not dream of; what I offer you by Fay of Acknowledgment for the Service you have done me, is not too much. I was so charm'd with this Lady's Generosity, that, without offering to touch her Money, which I had no Occusion for, I heartily hand begg'd her begg'd her in her Esteem, assuring her that I shou'd for ever remember the Kindness she did me the Honour to shew to me.

TheCount's ... Departure Behaviour.

ALL my Affairs at Paris being settled to his Post to my Heart's Content, I set out for at Brist, and Brest, to serve there, under my Brother, Seignelay's in Quality of Second Captain; and M. Advice to de Seignelay arriv'd there not long after for their to command the Forces. I had the Satisfaction to find that he propos'd me to the Officers as a Pattern, and publickly applauded the Generofity of my Intercession in favour of Bart, whom the Court had forgot. He defired them all to follow my Steps as Occasion serv'd, and exhorted the Officers to suppress that mean Spirit of Envy, which prevailed so much in the Navy, and which put them continually upon doing one 1689 another ill Offices.

In a few Days after M. de Seignelay's Arrival, the Fleet of the English and Dutch appeared off of Brest; but they soon disappeared upon the Arrival of the Squadron which M. de Tourville brought from Provence. With this Reinforcement the King's Eleet put to Sea, and cast Anchor before Belle Isle, waiting there some Time for the Enemy; but the latter ot appearing, it was agreed to unright School of the Ships retir'd to Brest, and the our Louis and Rochefort.

WHEN I arrived at Brest, I found the Lieutenant whom I left at Plymouth; for M. de Seignelay, at my Request, made no Delay to release him; which I took as a great Obligation. Being desirous to know what passed there after I came away, I went to him for that Purpofe.

HE told me, that after he had drawn A the Sheets into the Window, by which tive of what we let ourselves down, he went to Bed, Phymouth, where he lay very quiet till next Day, when they found that when he was rous'd by the Corporal, the Count who asking him where we were, he was escap'd answered him very coldly that we were in the other Room; whereupon the Englishman going into it, and seeing nobody there, he cried out, They are not.

paffed at 👯

1686. not here, they have certainly made their Escape.

Upon this, continued the Lieutenant, I pretended to be surprized, and complained of your ill Treatment of me, and of your Cruelty in not making me a Sharer of your good Fortune. They ask'd me sereral Questions about you, particulativ whether I did not know which Way you were gone. The treacherous Knaves, said I, told me not a Word of their Design. All I know is, that Bart, as he fitten on a new Pair of Shoes two Dan garan look d upon them were on his Feet, and said they whie special Shoes for a March. The Lieutenant added, that the Governour was so nettled with the Letter I left for him, that he immediately fent Horsemen in Quest of us.

When I beard bim fay this, continued the Lieutenant, I cou'd not belp laughing in my Sleeve at the Simplicity of those credulous Gentlemen, to believe what I told 'em, and to put themselves to the Expence of pursuing you by Land, while you were at Sea. When the Lieutenant had ended his Narrative, I again embraced him, and, for his Part, he thought he cou'd not sufficiently express his Acknowledgments to me, for the Care I had taken, so soon to procure his Return.

As foon as I had un-rigg'd at Brest, 1689. as I said just now, I hated to be idle, and therefore resolved to go a cruising. He goes a I went on Board a Pink named, The Marfeillian, a very good Sailor, and took for my Officers the Sieurs de Beaucaire and Belle-Isle, with whom I went a cruifing to the Mouth of the Channel.

I HAD been scarce two Days at Sea, HisEngage: when I met with an English Merchant an English Ship, which I resolved to make Prize Merchant of. The Sea Twell'd, the Night came on, and the Weather was very foul. Nevertheless, I try'd o Bord ber but the Waves were so bointerout that it was not possible for us to fix our Grappling Irons. We fought a long Time, during which the Enemy suffer'd very much, and lost their Main Top-Mast.

THE Night prov'd so dark that we cou'd hardly see her; however I wou'd not quit her, I resolved to keep close to her till Day-Light, hoping that then the Weather would be calmer, and it would be easy for me to board her. We were in this Situation for some Hours, when I received a Discharge of Hail Shot, in my Face, from a Musket, which, in a Moment, cover'd me all over with Blood; whereupon, turning about to Belle-Isle, who was then upon Watch, Keep this Ship, said I, as N 4 I have.

1686. I have done to this Hour; I only go to bave my Wounds dress'd, and will return after a little Refreshment.

> I know not how that Officer managed it, but the Ship disappear'd; whether she went to the Bottom, which was not unlikely, because she was rery much damag'd, or whether Belle-Isle fuffered her to make her Eseape, which was yet more probable; however it was, I feverely reprimanded my Lieutenant, who made the best Excuse he cou'd, by affuring me hat he did not know how is har benefit.

Takes enc Sngar.

Two Days after this, I took a Ship laden with laden with Sugar, which was bound from Baston, a Port which the English have in Canada. The Storm, and the Continuance of foul Weather, obliged me to put into a Port of Ireland nam'd Waterford, where I refitted and took in fome Refreshments. As foon as the Weather was calmer, I return'd a cruifing, and fent my Prize to Brest. His Danger The stormy Weather to which I was still expos'd for three Weeks, oblig'd me to lie by, so that I was drove by the Tide into Bristol Channel, where, being Windbound, I often found myself but Twelve Hours fail from being aground upon the Coasts of England, and but fix from the same Fate on the Coasts of Ireland.

in Briftol ChannelIt was so dreadful a Sea, that, for 1689. those three Weeks, I did not let the Pot boil; my Crew was quite tir'd out, above half of my Men were downright sick, and the rest not extraordinary well.

WHILE the Sea was thus raging, one Marning about Ten o' Clock, Word was brought me, that the Land was seen to move; I went upon Deck to see whatewas the Matter, and obferv'd, that, this pretended Land was nothing else bue a great Number of Whirlwinds together, which tofs'd the Water into the Air. At Theyry same Moment my Ship received fuch a Shock from the Sea, as split the Main Sail, broke the Long-boat which was upon the Deck in Pieces, fill'd the Ship with Water, and turn'd her Keel upwards, as Vessels lie when they are careen'd. The fick Men, who were between the Decks, were drown'd; the affrighted Crew lamented, and made Vows to all the Saints in Paradise. Seeing them in this Disorder, Courage, my Lads, said He orders I, all these Vows are good; but St. Pump, an Invoca-St. Pump is the Saint you must all ad-Pump. dress to; make no Doubt but he'll save you.

WITHOUT Loss of Time, I order'd the Sieur de Beaucaire to go to the Prow, if he cou'd, and put up a Missen Sail, to 1689. fee if the Ship, which was upon her Side, would recover. This Officer, whose Valour was not shock'd by the Difficulty of the Attempt, did so accordingly, and, being followed by some of the Seamen, a Missen Sail was hoisted, and the Ship turned up in the Manner I wished. Then I caus'd the Deck to be tore up with Crows, upon which, some of the Water ran off, the rest fell into the Hold, and the Ship being fet a little to rights, began to recover her true Motion.

Luan Farce any Provisions left; for the Sait Water had spoil'd all we had. We went before the Wind; I caus'd the Bodies of those who had been drown'd between the Decks to be thrown overboard, and the rest of the Crew being unfit for farther Service, I resolv'd, while it was yet Day, to run my Vessel upon the Coast of Ireland, to the end, that, happen what wou'd, the Crew might not be made Prisoners. For we were not at War with Ireland, and the King's Declaration extended only to England and Scotland.

HOH.

A SMALL Glimmering of Light Heruns his from a Ray of the Sun, made me difat Dunca-cover the Mountains of Danguemont, by which I found that we were not above four Leagues from the Port of Duncanon. We follow'd the Coast, and after having found the Entrance 1689. of the Port, we ran ashore there a little before Night. M. du Guestre Munier, and M. Dyun the Commanders of two of the King's Frigates in Waterford River, when they heard who we were, Yent their Long-boat to carry us ashore, and with this Assistance I made the Ship fecure.

and

As foon as I was landed, my first Care was to make Hospitals for my sick Men. Out of Two hundred and thirty Men that I took with me from Brest, I had no more than Seventy-five left, all the rest having dy & The Labour, Fear, or Sickness. Being not able to continue cruifing with fuch a Handful of Men, I scrap'd an Acquaintance with the Merchants of the Country, who loaded my Ship with Hides, Tallow, and Wool, by which Cargo I got Twelve thousand Livres.

In my Return to Brest I took ano-Takes a ther Prize from the Flushingers, which Prize in his I carry'd in with me. When the People Brefi. faw me come into the Harbour, they look'd upon me as a Man risen from the Dead. For, as the Time I had been out, was too long for the Provisions I took with me, and as the Storm had cast away a vast Number of Ships, I was reckon'd in the Number of those that were lost,

THE next Year, that is to fay, in 1690, I was nominated to go to Rochefort to command one of the King's Ships, call'd la Fidele. I carry'd my Ship to Brest, which was the Place of Rendezvous for the Squadron that was to be commanded by the Marshal de Tourvilles The Fleet had been for fome Days in the Channel, when we met that of the Enemy off of the Isle of Wignt to which ours was superior by far; for the two English and Dutch Squadrons join'd together made but Fifty-eight Ships of the Line of Lattle, whereas we had Fourfcorg

Fight be Fleets at Beachyz pead.

M. de Tourville gave the Signal to ween the range the Fleet in Order of Battle. The Confederate Enemy attack'dus: An obstinate Fight enfued, in which a great many Men were kill'd, and, though the English feem'd not to have so great a Share in the Action as the Dutch, it may be faid, that, for above three Hours that it continued, the Two Fleets shew'd a great deal of Valour, and fignaliz'd themselves by Exploits worthy of being recorded in History; and I wou'd gladly mention them, but I ought to remember that I am only writing Memoirs, and not a Narrative of all the remarkable Passages that have happen'd in the feveral Actions I have been engag'd in.

Count DE FORBIN. 277.
But, to say something of it in a 1690. few Words, the Enemy had the Worst on't, and their Fleet was incomparably more damag'd than ours. There were few of their Ships but what were miferably shatter'd; a great Number of em had scarce any Masts or Sails left, in short, their Fleet wou'd have been utterly ruin'd if they had not wisely had Recourse to the only Expedient that could bring them off.

When they saw they were ruin'd, they lay upon their Anchors some Distance from us without any Sail, and rang'd in Order of Battle. The Knowledge I had of the Channel gave me to understand that they were at Anchor, and I foon faw what made them put themselves in that Posture. I told it to my Officers, and, as I was appointed Repeater of the Signals, I had a Mind to make a Signal for our Fleet to drop their Anchors. For we cou'd not frustrate what they were doing, but by casting Anchor ourselves, in order to hinder our Fleet from driving with the Tide so far from the Enemy, as to have it out of our Power to improve the Advantage we had over them.

THE Sieurs de Moisse and Choiseuil (that Choiseuil who had been a Slave at Algier, and whose Adventure I mention'd when I spoke of the second 1690. Bombardment of that Town) both my Lieutenants, made me alter my Resolution, and represented to me, that it was not convenient for me to correct the General. Therefore we did not drop our Anchors. Our Fleet was drove with the Tide as the Enemy foresaw; and therefore taking the Advantage of the Distance we were carry'd from them, they escap'd in the Night-time, without losing more than one fingle Ship, which having no Anchor, was drove upon us, and taken. We pursued their Fleet for some time, but with little Success; for they were too far off, and were for most part got into the Ports of England and Holland, before we cou'd come up with them. Two of the English Ships ran aground on their own Coasts, which we oblig'd to burn one another, but all the rest got safe into the Downs.

Bombard-

For my own Part, I pursu'd a Dutch Vice-Admiral's Ship, which had three Decks, but had loft her Mainmast. I let him run ashore before a little Harbour in the Channel, and hasten'd to carry Advice of it to M. de Tourville. He order'd me to find out the Marquis de Villete, the Lieutenant-General, and to take a Fireship along with me out of the Rear of the main Batallia, and go and set the Dutchman on fire. M. de

Ms de Villete order'd M. de Riberet to 1690. follow me, and we both came in Sight of the stranded Ship; but Riberet, what private Orders he might have I know not, return'd, and carry'd the Fireship back with him. Nevertheless, I pursu'd my Point. I made a Signal to the Fireship to come and join me; but as I was not the senior Officer, he

wou'd not obey me.

THE Chevalier de St. Olere, Lieutenant of a Ship, who commanded the Sloop which M. de Villete had given me for this Execution, went before me, founding the Bottom, to knew exactly what Quantity of Water I had need of to approach the stranded Ship, which fir'd several Volleys of Cannon and fmall Shot; upon which I made a Signal for the Sloop to return, that she might get out of Harm's way. Being not able to do any Execution without the Fireship, I return'd to join the Fleet, which went to cast Anchor in the Road of Chef de Bris before Havre de Grace. In a few Days after this, M. de Relingue was detach'd to cruise Northwards. I was in that Squadron, but the Continuance of bad Weather quickly oblig'd us to return to Dunkirk, where the Squadron was laid up.

Much about the same Time we re- The Death ceiv'd the melancholy News of the of M. Seig-

Death

1690. eter.

Death of the Marquis de Seignelay; which was a confiderable Loss to the His Chara- Navy, in which he had made great Improvement, and wou'd, no doubt have brought it to a farther Degree of Perfection, if he had not been cut off in the midst of his Career. As for my own Part, his Death was a confiderable Loss to me: For this Minister had always honour'd me with his Protection, and I had as great Reason to be fond of him, as I had to complain of his Successor. In the mean time, to confine myself to M. de Seignelay, I will venture to affirm, that as he had an indefatigable Father to form him, and as he was himself a Person of consummate Abilities, France has had few Ministers fo active, fo laborious, and fo vigilant as he was; and whatever Part of his Time he bestow'd upon his Pleasures, it was without Prejudice to his Duties, which he always kept in his Eye, and never postpon'd.

Besides a thousand excellent Qualities, which gain'd him the Esteem of all that had the Pleasure of his Acquaintance; if we consider him as a Minister, he was full of Zeal for the Service of his Sovereign, jealous of the Nation's Honour, whose Glory he had extremely at Heart, and a sincere Friend to Merit, which he never fuffer'd ferid to languish in Obscurity, when- 1690. ever he found it out. I am persuaded the Reader will forgive me this short Digression, and not take it amiss that have deviated for a Moment from my Narration to express my Gratitude.

M. de Pontchartrain, Comptroller- His Suc-General of the Finances, was appoint- cellor. ed to succeed M. de Seignelay. This new Minister made no Alteration in the Navy. Not long after this, the Court order'd three new Ships to be built; one of which call'd the Pearl, was to be under my Command.

When the Season came on for equip- The Dun-ping the Fleet, Orders arriv'd at Dun- kirkers block'd up. kirk for the fitting out of eight great Ships, and I was appointed to go aboard the Pearl. The Armament was finish'd, and the Squadron was in a Readiness for Sailing, but could never get out of the Port, because the Enemy being inform'd of this Armament, befides the fitting up of several Privateers, came with forty Ships and block'd up the Road.

THE little Prospect there was of our putting to Sea this Campaign, put me upon drawing up a new Scheme for an Armament on the King's Account. I communicated my Views to Bart; and The Count's after we had maturely examin'd them, Project for he agreed, that they cou'd not but be a new Ar-

1691. of very great Benefit, and consented with all his Heart, that the whole shou'd be sent to Court in his Name.

I THEREFORE wrote to the Mini/ Iter, and acquainted him, that the Ships fitted out for this Campaign being render d unserviceable by the Enemy's Fleet, which stop'd up the Road; for it was impossible that such large Ships as ours, which cou'd not stir out but in the Day-time, and were oblig'd to make their Way thro' narrow Paflages, shou'd venture to quit the Harbour without evident Danger of being taken. I acquainted him, I say, that Things being in this Situation, I thought it convenient, rather than to leave the Enemy entire Masters of the Sea, that the Court shou'd consent to arm a Squadron of little Ships, to be commanded by myself and other Captains that I nam'd; that with the first fair Wind, we shou'd make our Way out between the Enemy's Ships, without any Difficulty, or running any Risque; and, that when we were out at Sea, we shou'd sail Northward to interrupt their Trade, which they carry'd on now with too little Disturbance.

THE Minister lik'd the Project at the very first Sight of it, and we began to work upon the Armament, which was already far advanc'd, when Bart

receiv'd

receiv'd a very disobliging Letter from 1691. Court, wherein M. de Pontchartrain reproach'd him for having absurdly en- How it was gag'd the King in an Expence which court. wou'd answer no End; that the Scheme which he had fent up, was utterly impracticable; and that he had impos'd upon the Court, or elfe they wou'd never have confented to a chimerical Undertaking so ill digested. He added a thousand other disagreeable things, and concluded with a strict Charge to him not to go on.

This Mortification of M. Bart was owing to the Envy of some ill-dispos'd Officers, who being piqu'd at the Permission he had obtain'd, and the Advantages that wou'd accrue to him from it, if it had taken Place, wrote what they pleas'd to Court; and the Minister, who was not yet very well acquainted with the Affairs of the Navy, giving Credit to their false Suggestions, wrote this Letter in the first Transports of his Anger.

BART, as intrepid a Man as he was, was so intimidated, that he came to me, and addressing me with a Consternation in his Countenance, said to me in the best French he cou'd express himself in, Vous être cause deça; i. e. You are the Cause of this. M. Bart (said I) You don't yet know what good Luck you 1691. may meet with. Are not you sensible as well as I, that our Project is feasible? and that we shall execute it in spite of all. that envy us, if the Court will but give into it?

IF you'll have but Patience, I'll go for you to the Minister; I'll tell him, that when you propos'd this Armament, you thought the Execution of it not only possible, but very easy; that you believ'd it wou'd be advantageous to the King, and prejudicial to his Enemies; that they who had been pleas'd, either by Word of Mouth or Writing, to suggest that you propos'd a Chimæra, are either ignorant, or illdispos'd People. I will add, that all you desire is only that they will repose a Confidence in you, and that you will undertake to answer for all the Consequences that may attend the getting out of the Road. I am persuaded, that upon the Receipt of this Letter, the Minister will be of another Opinion, and that we shall have Orders to go on. The Event anfwer'd my Expectation. M. de Pontchartrain was undeceiv'd, and wrote to Bart in a very obliging Manner, commanding him to proceed.

The Count's Profecution of a Man for Debt.

THE Armament was in a manner compleated, when a Misfortune happen'd to me which retarded our Departure for feveral Days. I had fummon'd a Burgher who ow'd me five hundred Livres, Livres, before the Bailiss of Dunkirk. 1691. After a great many Delays which I was forc'd to bear with, he was at length order'd to pay me in a Week's time. During this, I happen'd to meet him in the Street, where he had the Impu- The Abuse dence to infult me with very ill Lan- be received guage. It was not in my Nature to be the Street, too passive, and being provok'd at the from the Debtor. many abusive Words he gave me, I struck him with my Cane, which only made him more furious; fo that lifting up his Voice in the Hearing of all that pass'd by, he call'd me all the vile Names he cou'd think of. Some of the Officers of the Garison, who were on the Spot, were so incens'd at it, that they cou'd not forbear laying Hands on him, and they curry'd him The Debto fuch a Degree, that he was in a Mo- Treatment ment all over bloody. In short, I was by the Ofafraid they wou'd have kill'd him, Garisson. which oblig'd me to step in between them, and to beg them to leave off.

In the mean time, my Spark com-His Complain'd, and fent an Account of this plaint of the whole Adventure to M. de Louvois, who in-Affair to form'd the King of it. His Majesty the Court. having been impos'd on by a great many Falshoods, there was an Order to apprehend me, and to carry me to the Citadel of Calais, where I remain'd three The Count's Weeks; during which I receiv'd all imprison-

manner

The Terms of his Rc.

leafe.

1691. manner of good Usage from M. de l'Aubaine, the Commander of it.

> As foon as I was made a Prisoner, I prepar'd to justify myself to the Court. I wrote to the Minister, and to Bontem:. The latter espous'd my Cause with so much Vigour, that he obtain'd my Liberty, on Condition nevertheless, that I shou'd go to Dunkirk along with the zCommander of the Marines, and ask the Burgher's Pardon.

The Bur-

gher's Info-

lence to

him.

THERE was no avoiding it. The Order was literally executed, and the Burgher receiv'd me with intolerable Arrogance, giving me to understand very plainly, that I never shou'd have one Soûs of my five hundred Livres. Thus, for a few Strokes with my Cane, was I imprison'd, forc'd to make my Submission, and lost my Money, which the Rascal kept from me, which I never cared to ask him for again, for fear lest I shou'd fall into a Passion like the first, and bring myself into greater Trouble.

The Count

This unhappy Affair being over, fails out of and the Armament finish'd, we sail'd with Bart, in the Night-time. We pass'd without Interruption between the Enemy's Ships, and made fuch Speed, that by Day-break we were got out of their Sight. In the Evening, we perceiv'd four Sail coming our Way. Bart said at first, they were four of the Enemy's 1691. Ships that were detach'd from the Blockade in Pursuit of us; but for my own Part, I was of a different Opinion. I observ'd to him, that as we made a great deal of Sail last Night with light Ships fresh careen'd, infomuch, that by Day-break we were out of Sight of the Enemy, or any Pursuer; and as we had held on the same Course all Day, it was not possible that we cou'd be overtaken in the Evening by Ships that were not near fo light as ours.

THE Ship I commanded being the best Sailor in the Squadron, it was agreed that I shou'd speak with them. I came up with them in the Night, put out a Lanthorn for a Signal, and fir'd a Gun. I came within the Hearing of him who seem'd to be the Commander. We talk'd together; I found 'twas an English Man of War with three Merchant-Ships under her Convoy, and gave out to them, that I was English too. The Captain sent to tell me, that they were bound to Muscovy; and I call'd out to him, that I was come from Flushing. He takes He believ'd what I said to be true; I an English kept near him all Night, and at break War, and of Day I hoisted the white Flag, board-three Merchant Ships ed him, and after a slight Battle, took him. The Ship carry'd fortyfour Guns, and mine but thirty-two.

The

1691. The English lost forty Men in this Engagement, and I but fix. The other three Ships were made Prizes without any Difficulty, and almost without striking a Stroke.

BART's Instructions from Court were to burn all the Prizes he took. But the Intendant of Dunkirk having an Eye to his own Interest, had qualify'd those Orders with respect to him, by giving him to understand, that tho' 'twas the Court's Intention that all Prizes shou'd be burnt, yet considerable Prizes ought to be fav'd.

In pursuance of this Explanation, he had set a Commissioner over him, with Orders to deliver Prizes of a certain-Value to him, and to place them to his Account. As the four Ships we had now taken, were worth above three Millions, after having clear'd them, we sent them under Convoy of a Frigate belonging to the Squadron, to the Port of Berghen in Norway, subject to the King of Denmark, with whom we were at Peace.

Deftroys the Dutch Herring Fleet.

Two Days after this, we met the Fleet of Herring Busses, under Convoy of a Dutch Man of War. We made no Scruple to attack them; I carry'd off the Man of War, and all the rest were made Prizes. After we had taken the Crews on board, we burnt all the Ships which were but of little Va- 1691. lue; and soon after, we set the Prifoners ashore upon the Coast of England.

the

A FEW Days after this, as we were upon the Coast of Scotland, I propos'd to Bart to make a Descent, and to burn fome Villages that we faw; among which was a very fine Palace. I had the better Opinion of this Expedition, because probably it wou'd make a Noise in the Country, and give a Reputation to the Squadron. Bart approv'd of my Proposal, and left the Management of it wholly to me.

AFTER having landed, I caus'd Makes a twenty five Men to be posted in a proper Bescent in Place for covering the Long Boats and Ship Boats, and for favouring our Retreat in case I shou'd be repuls'd by the Enemy. I afterwards advanc'd within Land, at the Head of all my Men, and began my Attack. Villages were burnt and plunder'd, and also the Palace, for which I was very forry; Plunders because I found by the Ornaments which the Seat of were taken out of the Chapel, that the Catholick Seat belong'd to a Roman Catholick.

Upon the Noise of this Expedition, the Scots, who were affembled in the Neighbourhood, hastily form'd a small Body of Horse, and another of Foot, who were but poorly disciplin'd; how-Vol. I. ever,

by Mistakes

1691. ever, I retir'd in good Order as soon as I heard of it. Their Horse attempted to pursue us, and was advancing towards the Marines, but the Officer I had posted to cover them, made a Discharge upon them, and oblig'd them to retire. I lost but one Man in the Expedition, who indeed ow'd his Death to his Avarice; for having loaded himself with more Plunder than he cou'd well carry, he lagg'd behind fo, that he was overtaken by the Horse, and kill'd.

Takes and burns more Ships of the Fiftery.

Before we left this Coast, we took feveral other Fishing Smacks, and burnt One Morning I spy'd a Dutch Ship, and went from my Company to give her Chase. Bad Weather overtook me, and carry'd me so far from the Squadron, that I never faw it again till I came to the Place of Rendezvous, where I arriv'd just as my Stock of Provision was spent, having burnt four English Ships in my Voyage.

🖟 Burns feur  $\in E$ nglijb \$hips

His Prizes the Indolence of  ${\mathcal B}_{art_*}$

THE Squadron having got the Start Danes, thro, of me for feveral Days, when I came to land, I found Things in the poorest Plight that cou'd be. M. Bart, without any manner of Thought, was continually rioting in a Tavern. The Governor, who only took him for a Privateer, had so little Regard for him, that he took the Prizes from him which which we had taken in the Beginning 1691. of the Campaign; so that they were deliver'd up to the Danes, without the least Opposition to it by Bart.

Being provok'd at Bart's Indolence, I told him very sharply how unworthy it was to put up with such scandalous Treatment; and going directly to the Governor, who understood French, and spoke it very well, Sir, faid I, very smartly, What Right, and The Count what Authority had you to seize the Prizes Expostulataken by the King's Ships? The Gover- the Daniff nor faid, in his Excuse, that he did Governor not know those Ships belong'd to the King of France; and that he thought they were but Privateers: That, however, it was not he that seiz'd them, and that I must apply to the Intendant.

Upon this Answer, I went to the Intendant, who, after having heard me very cooly, referr'd me back to the Governor. I faw plainly what they meant by all their Management; and returning to Bart, Since they make their own Game with us, faid I, 'tis our Business to do ourselves Justice. Immediately we mann'd out our Long Boats and Ship Boats, boarded the Prizes, and He takes? turn'd out the Danes that were put in them again. Possession of 'em.

1691.

This being a pretty bold Stroke, I wrote about it immediately to M. de Pruneviaux, the King's Ambassador at the Court of his Danish Majesty, whom I was very glad to preposses with a true State of the Matter, to the End, that if any Complaints were made, he might return for Answer, That we had only committed this Violence upon the Danes, because they had refus'd to do us Justice when we demanded it.

As foon as we had recover'd our Ships, we look'd into every one of 'em; and foon perceiv'd that they had lighten'd 'em very much by their Plunder: Upon which I faid to Bart, that before we took off the Seals, I was of Opinion we shou'd send for all the Clerks and the Commissioners, that they might take an Account of the State of the Prizes, and an Inventory of what they contain'd.

This Counsel being follow'd, we found that half of their Effects had been carry'd off; there being few or none of the Bales but what had been open'd. In the Examination that was made into this Affair, the Commissioner Persons ar- being found guilty, was arrested and put in Irons, and the Captain of the these ships. Frigate that convoy'd the Ships, was also put under Arrest upon Suspicion.

refled for plundering

In the mean time we had scarce any 1691 Provisions left. We expected some every Day from France, when we were informed, that a Ship which was bringing us-a Supply from Brest, was taken His Shift by the Privateers of Flushing. In this for Provisad Plight, having not near Money enough to victual the Squadron, Bart had a Mind to write to France, to defire that a second Ship might be sent with Provisions.

WHAT you propose, said I, is utterly impracticable: Consider that the Season is already far advanc'd, and that before the Provisions can be ready to come away, the Frosts will set in and hinder the Ships from coming out of Port. We have nothing to do but to make the best Shift we can, and to see what Provisions we can raise bere. Bart own'd that I was in the right. We fold one of the Prizes we had taken, and with the ready Money, employ'd all the Ovens in baking Biscuit, the Brewers in brewing Beer: while both Baker and Brewer, taking Advantage of our Necessity, made us pay double Prices for every thing we had.

M. de Pruneviaux, who had receiv'd my Letters, did not expect any Complaints of us. He preposses'd the Court, and complain'd himself to his Danish Majesty of the Treatment we had receiv'd

The Gover-

nor's Sub-

million to

2691. receiv'd in his Ports. This Prince sent thundering Letters to the Governor, who not being able to hide his Chagrin, came to me with Tears in his Eyes, to defire me to excuse him to his Master, otherwise, said he, I am undone without any Remedy. Sir, faid I, 'Tis not in my Power to unsay the Count. what I have writ against you, the rather, because you know very well, that I have writ nothing but the Truth; and all that I can do to serve you, is to write in your Favour, on Condition that you will be-

bave better for the future.

THE haughty Air in which I talk'd both to the Intendant and the Governor, the Reprimand which the latter had receiv'd upon my Account, a very splendid Equipage, and especially a blue Suit which I wore, embroider'd with Gold, very rich, and of a curious Fancy; all these things together, gave the Inhabitants of Berghen a Notion, The Count that I must needs be the natural Son is supposed of the King of France. Those honest French K's Clodpates, who seldom see any Officers that are profuse in their Expences, were so positive it must be so, that it wou'd have been a hard Task to have beat it out of their Noddles.

Bastard.

I LEFT them in their Mistake, because I had done nothing to lead them into it; and because it serv'd to give me a Reputation and Credit. Bart, 1691. who minded nothing but his Diversion, 🛶 envy'd me neither one nor the other. Every thing was left to me, and I had the Care of all the Business of the Squadron, without his giving himself the least Trouble about it.

me

While our Provisions were carry- Two of the ing aboard, two of our Officers being French Officers feiz,d one Night at the Tavern, committed a by the thousand Disorders there. They made Watch for a fuch a Noise, that the City Watch seiz'd bance at a and carry'd them to the Watch-house; Tavern. upon which one of the Sparks, by way of Scorn, let down his Breeches, and shew'd them his bare Buttocks. The Townsmen, nettled at this, fell upon one of him, ty'd his Hands behind him, and them like in to be kill as after disarming him of his Sword, laid for an Inhim on with their Staves, so that they watch. almost kill'd him.

· Being inform'd of this Adventure, just after it happen'd, I said to Bart, that it was his Business to reclaim those Officers, and to demand them of the Burgomaster; for the Governor had nothing to do with that Guard. Bart wou'd not stir one Foot about it, and upon his Refusal, I resolv'd to go my felf. I put on my blue Suit, which made them take the more Notice of me, and I went to the Watch-house, attended with a couple of lusty Footmen.

O 4...

Appear.

AT my Appearance, the Burghers were all drawn up in a Line under The Count's Arms. I spoke to them with a grand Air, and threaten'd they shou'd all be claim them hang'd for presuming to lay their Hands upon the King's Officer; they made the best Excuse they cou'd; I caus'd the Swords to be restor'd, and having order'd the Officer to be unty'd, who was very much asham'd of the Plight I found him in, for his Breeches were still down, I carry'd him with me to the Burgomaster, and demanded Justice of him for what had pass'd.

> THIS Magistrate, who was a Man of very good Sense, made me Answer, that he was very forry he had not Authority enough over the Burghers, to give me the Satisfaction I desir'd; but that he desir'd me to consider the Officers were in Fault for being abroad so late at Night, contrary to the Custom of the Country; that the Watch, which was only establish'd to maintain good Order, wou'd have been guilty of a Neglect of their Duty, if they had not apprehended 'em, when they found them making a Noise in the Tavern; and that if they were ill us'd, it was not till after they had infulted the Watch in a very outrageous manner. He added, that for his own Part, he was very much mortify'd mortify'd at what had happen'd; but 1691. that, as there was no Remedy for the Evil, he beg'd me to lay no Part of it to his Charge.

I ACQUIESC'D in his Reasons, which I thought were very good; and in reality, was not very forry that those two noify Fellows cou'd not obtain Satisfaction, because they had richly deferv'd the Treatment they had met with.

HAVING stor'd all our Provisions, He sails. the Crews went on aboard again, and from Norwe fail'd with our Prizes. Some Days after our Departure, I saw a Privateer of Flushing, which I was resolv'd to give Chase to, but I was overtaken with a Fog, and foon after with bad Weather, which separated me from the Squadron. The contrary Winds kept us so long at Sea, that we were under a Necessity either of starving His Difter with Hunger, or of felling ourselves to for want of the Enemy, my Crew being reduced for a Week together to the Allowance of two Ounces of Bread per Day; and at last, having suffer'd a great deal, I His Arrival arriv'd at Dunkirk, where, to compleat and Summy Misfortune, I found an Order from mons to the King, commanding me to repair to answer for Court, to give an Account of my Conduct. his Conduct

BART, who was arriv'd there a few Days before, had receiv'd the same Order, and only waited for my Coming, that we might confult together how to act. This Difgust which the Court feem'd to have conceiv'd, was owing to the ill Offices done us by the Intendant Patoulet; for we discover'd, that the Commissioner, who was planted upon us only to favour the Intendant. with an Opportunity of appropriating Part of the Prizes, had writ to him against us, and complain'd that Bart, who did nothing without my Advice, had put him in Irons, for fear he shou'd be Witness of all our Robberies. Upon these Informations, the Intendant himself made his Complaint to the Minister, and aggravated every Circumstance that the Commissioner had reported to him.

1691.

We agreed, that, without shewing the least Resentment, I shou'd set out Post for the Court. That Bart shou'd sollow me by short Journeys, and that when we were both come to Paris, he shou'd see no body before he spoke with me. This being determined, I set out the very Day after my Arrival at Dunkirk, and went to wait upon M. de Pontchartrain, to whom I so sully justify'd our Behaviour that the Minister, who had been prejudiced against us, submitted to the Truth, and declar'd, clar'd, that he was satisfy'd with every 1691.

Step we had taken.

BART arriv'd not many Days after, and was receiv'd much better than he deserv'd; for tho' he had little or no share in what had been done; yet to reward him for his Service this Campaign, he had a Thousand Crowns given him, and all, forfooth! because he had the Title of a Commander; whereas I, who bore all the Burden, had no manner of Consideration for it; which mortify'd me not a little.

As Bart was a Man of very great The Count' Reputation, the whole Court was de-Character of Bart. firous to fee him, and I was the Man. that introduc'd him into all Company, upon which the merry Wags us'd to fay in a Banter; Let's, go and see the Chevalier de Forbin, who leads the Bear about with him: And, to speak the Truth, they were not altogether in the wrong. For Bart was a Man of a very mean Genius, and cou'd neither Read nor Write, tho' he had learn'd to make his Name. He was a Native of Dunkirk, and at first but a poor Fisherman, but having signaliz'd himself by his Actions, tho' he had no Patron, nor no Support but his own Merit, he advanc'd himfelf from one Step to another in the Sea-Service till he came to be Commodore.

1691. modore. He was Tall, Robust, and well made, but of a clownish Air, spoke little and bad, tho' his Language was very proper for a bold Action; but was absolutely incapable of any Project that had any Compass of Thought in it.

The Count's Difgust with the Court for being unregwarded;

As I laid it very much to Heart that I had no Recompence at the End of a Campaign, during which I had certainly done good Service; I was very desirous that M. de Pontchartrain shou'd be inform'd of the Part I bore, both in the Project and in the Execution of it. I desir'd Bart to acquaint him of it. I reckon'd he wou'd do me this Service with the more Willingness, because I had done the like for him after we escap'd from our Prison at Plymouth; but whether it was from Brutishness or Timorousness, he never open'd his Lips in my Favour.

And with Commodere Bart gratitude.

This Step, which provok'd me more than all the rest, made me think of tafor his In king Measures to prevent my returning any more to Dunkirk: For I was refolv'd to serve no longer under a Man to do all the Offices, to draw up all the Writings, and make all the Signals and Plans, while he ran away with all the Profit. I declar'd my Sentiments upon this Head to my Friends of the Navy Office, and begg'd them to order order it so, that I might be remov'd 1691, to the Station at Brest, which was granted.

ALL the Time that I stay'd at Court, I went regularly every Day to the Apartments of the Dauphin, whom the King had settled at Versailles, where Monseigneur allow'd very great Gaming. I made one at the Table, which I us'd to frequent in the Afternoons, and won above Two thousand Lewid'ors The Count there to my great Satisfaction at first, good Luck tho' I had reason to repent of it very ing Table. foon; for the King, who had an exact Account of every that pass'd at this Gaming-Table, ask'd Bontems why he fuffer'd me to play so high. There wanted nothing more to subject me to a severe Reprimand; for the Affection which Bontems entertain'd for me, and the Services he had done me, gave him Authority to fay what he pleas'd to me, and he talk'd so sharply to me provid for in the Presence of M. de Fourville and playing of high. the Chevalier de Bethomas, who were both my intimate Friends, that I promis'd him I wou'd never play so high for the future. I kept my Word; and that I might not be tempted to break it, I went to Paris, where I play'd now and then, but was not so lucky there as I had been at Versailles.

-1692. ∜Is a fecond Time appointed to Command the Pearl

Convoy Hogue, to , bring over  $(\mathbf{K}, \mathcal{J}ames)$ and his Forces to . England,

I WENT a little before the End of the Winter to Brest, where I was a fecond time appointed Commander of the Pearl. A little before the Squadron fail'd from thence, I and the Sieur de Ivry, another Captain of a Ship, And fent to were detach'd to St. Malo, to convoy Ships to La several Merchant Vessels which the King had order'd to La Hogue, to take Troops on Board there for the Service of King James, who intended to go over to England.

However, it was as yet a very great Secret, and all the Speculations upon it were but meer Conjectures, which were like enough to be false, the Court having not declar'd what they intended. We had carry'd our Convoy to the Place appointed, and were making the same Course back again, when we were obliged to Anchor before Havre de Grace, that a Man of War, which had been built there, might come out with the more Safety. This is an incommodious Harbour in one respect, because, for want of a sufficient Depth of Water, they can't put out large-Ships to Sea till they have taken out all their Can-His Alarm non. As we lay before Havre, I repearance of ceiv'd a Letter from M. de Louvigne" about Day-break, with these Words: Forty-five of the Enemy's Ships are at Anchor:

xcount of Havre de Grace.

His Ac-

at the Apthe ConfederateFleet off of  $L_a$ Hogue.

Anchor along the Coast, about five 1692. Leagues from you: Save yourself if posfible. Upon this Message, of which I gave Advice to my Brother Captain, I fail'd immediately, and got away without being purfued by the Enemy, who saw me, but let me go off very peaceably.

As I was continuing my Course to Brest, I met a small French Ship which affur'd me she came out of that Harbour with the Royal Squadron, The French under the Command of the Marshal out of Breff de Tourville. The Pilot of this little Vessel acquainting me what Course they had steer'd, I shap'd mine the fame Way, and actually came up with the Fleet that very Evening. I made no delay to acquaint the General of the Intelligence I had receiv'd from the Intendant of Havre de Grace, and I went with my Ship into the Centre of the Fleet, where I found my Station was mark'd. THE Views of the Court, and the K. James Project for a Landing in England, intended Descent. were no longer a Secret, and King James was actually gone to La Hogue with a Design to embark at the Head of above Twenty thousand Men, as foon as he heard of the Success of a Battle which M. de Tourville had Orders to give the English, and, if the Cafe 1692.

Case requir'd, even to hazard it, which indeed was necessary in order to secure the Descent, which nothing cou'd hinder but the Energy's Elect der but the Enemy's Fleet.

'Tis not to be doubted, but if the Enemy had had the worst on't, which probably wou'd have happen'd if their Fleet had been hinder'd from joyning, this Project of a Descent, which was dash'd to Pieces by the Shock that our Navy receiv'd, wou'd have given the English a great deal of Uneasiness and Exercise. But the contrary Winds, which reign'd for three Weeks, and hinder'd us from advancing, gave the Enemy Time to join their Forces, so that instead of Forty-five Ships, as they were computed to be, they made the Number of Ninety-six after they were joyn'd.

The Winds becoming more favourable, the King's Fleet return'd into the Channel. I was detach'd for the Look-out. I met the Enemy's Fleet off of Havre de Grace, where they gave me all the Leifure that cou'd be to view them. I fir'd my Cannon, and, according to my Orders, made the Signals to specify the Number of their Ships. Notwithstanding their Superiority, the Marshal, who, as I have already said, had Orders to attack at all Events, gave the Signal for Battle.

I fell into my Post, which was the 1692. third Ship in the Line of Battle near the Admiral.

THE Enemy expected us in good Battle of Order, and fuffer'd us to approach as near as we pleas'd. The Fight was begun with a great deal of Vigour, and even with some Advantage on our side: But the Wind, which in the beginning of the Action was favourable to the King's Ships, turn'd about on a fudden in favour of the Enemy. In order to improve this Advantage, their Van wheel'd round our Navy, which by that means was between two Fires. Since they were far superior in Number (for we had but Forty-four Ships in all) no doubt but our Fleet had been utterly ruin'd, if they had done as they ought; but their Slowness in attacking, made them lose the Opportunity.

THE Tide, the Night, and a Fog coming on, oblig'd M. de Tourville to cast Anchor. The Enemy suffer'd their Ships that had wheel'd round our Fleet, to be drove with the Currents, and, by favour of the Fog, pass'd between our Lines, from whence they went and join'd the main Body of their Fleet, which occasion'd a new. Battle, more bloody than the former. My Ship was shot thro' with a Can1692.

non Ball. I was boarded by a Fire-Ship, from which I got rid at last, but not without much Dissiculty; for I lost a great many Men, and was my-self grievously wounded in the Knee.

This Cannonading, with which I had been so incommoded, lasted till Eleven o'Clock at Night. Notwithstanding my Wound, which was very painful, I refitted all Night, that I might be in a Condition to fight next Day. For it was plain that we must come to another Engagement. Tho? I wanted above a Third of my Crew, who were the best Sailors in the Navy, I was still in a Condition to make my Defence. At Day-break M. de Tourville made the Signals to put our selves in a Posture for Sailing. I attended him, but the whole Fleet was fo dispers'd, that the General had but six Ships with him, all the rest being hid by a thick Fog.

During this, Major General Raimondis, who was in the Admiral's Ship, where he was dangerously wounded in the Knee, wanted to speak with me, and ask'd if the Chevalier de Forbin was not in Sight. I went on board the General's Ship, where I found my Friend in a pitiful State; he communicated some domestic Affairs to me, for his Life was in Danger, and desir'd me to go on board M. de Anfreville's 1692. Ship, in order to fetch a Surgeon of whom he had a very good Opinion. While I was doing this the Fog difpers'd, the whole Fleet join'd again, and the Enemy, who follow'd us, drew up before us in Order of Battle.

THE contrary Tide having oblig'd the King's Fleet to cast Anchor, the Enemy's was forc'd to do the like. As the frequent Visits I was oblig'd to make to Raimondis had taken up some Time, my Ship not being able to recover her Post, happen'd to be the nearest to the Enemy; for a Dutch Vice-Admiral's Ship was moor'd within Cannon Shot behind me. Thus we pass'd all the Day without Action.

In the Evening there appear'd a Fleet of Forty Sail, which were Merchant Ships going to Havre de Grace under Convoy of one of the King's Ships. The English, who spy'd them as well as we, thought 'twas the Fleet which the Count d'Estrees was bringing from Provence to join ours; which was the Reason that they put themselves again in Order of Battle, expecting another Attack; but when Day broke, we saw they were about seven Leagues off.

1692.

If we had in our Turn, taken Advantage of the Opportunity which offer'd, as it were, of itself, this false Step of the Enemy would have given the King's Fleet all the Time necessary to get away. But we did not improve it, and, for what Reason I cou'd never comprehend, the General resolv'd to go and cast Anchor at the Entrance of Ras Blanchart, instead of sheering quite off, tho' he was not in a Condition to strike a Stroke.

AT last, an unforeseen Accident spoil'd all. The Admiral's and several other Ships slipp'd their Anchors, so that the Tide drove them upon the Enemy. M. de Tourville, who saw all was lost, being unwilling to hazard the whole Fleet, which was ready to follow, and wou'd infallibly have been either taken or sunk, took down his General's Flag, and M. de Panetier the Commodore gave the Signal for rallying, which sav'd the rest of the Fleet.

Those that follow'd the Fortune of the General run themselves ashore at la Hogue, where Fourteen of our best Men of War were unhappily burnt. I sav'd mine, tho' pierced thro' and thro', and following the rest of the Fleet, which was in no better a Condition, we went into the Road of St. Malo, where, after having resitted, and put fresh fresh Men aboard, I put to Sea again with four other Ships, two of which sail'd for the Mediterranean. For my own Part, I and the Sieurs Desogues and d'Ivri had Orders to cruise in the Mouth of the Channel.

We had been some Days at Sea, when we perceiv'd a Dutch Fleet coming from Portugal, under Convoy of Two Ships, carrying each Fifty-two Guns. We attack'd it, I boarded the Commander and took him, while Desogues and d'Ivri took the other. Besides the Commander, I also took three Pinks, laden with Salt. I put all the Sailors I had taken into one of these Three Ships, which I sent away, and carry'd the Two Men of War and the Two Pinks to Brest.

HAVING receiv'd Advice at this Port, that there were some Flushing Privateers at Sea, the Marshal d'Estrees, who commanded in the Place, order'd me to put out to Sea again, and to cruise about Bell-Isle. I did so, but seeing no Prey, I return'd, after a short Stay, to Brest, where, who shou'd I find a Prisoner, but the Ostender, Bart's Kinsman, that help'd us to escape from Plymouth. He had been taken by M. Franc Captain of a Ship, as he was steering a Bark, of which certain Merchants were Owners. I found, that, upon to a Priioner who had help'd him formerly to escape from  $P_{iy}$ . mouth.

1692. upon my Account, he was at first treated with all Manner of Civility; but the The Count's Intendant, to whom he was deliver'd good Office up, had not that Regard for him, but committed him to Prison. The poor Man had done me fo much Service at Plymouth, that I cou'd not but use all my Interest to serve him. I waited on M. d'Estrees, and begg'd him to commit the Prisoner to my Care, adding, that I wou'd be answerable for him. The Marshal, having a Mind to oblige me, remov'd him from Gaol to my Custody.

As foon as the honest Man saw me, he fell about my Neck, and embrac'd me with Tears of Joy. I carry'd him aboard, and gave him good Chear; And I wrote the fame Day to M. de Pontchartrain to petition him for the Liberty of a Man to whom I was oblig'd He obtains for mine. That Minister was so good his Liberty, as to grant me even more than I ask'd; for he not only restor'd my Pilot to his Liberty, but gave him Leave to redeem his Vessel for a Trisle; but he did not lay hold of this last Favour, because, he said, neither the Ship nor Cargo were his, and that he did not know whether the Owners were willing to redeem them. As foon as he had his Liberty, and was going away, I made him a Present of Ten Lewid'ors, besides besides the Four Hundred Crowns, 1692. which I had taken Care to pay to his Wife, after I came from Plymouth.

THE Wound which I had receiv'd The Count in my Knee at the last Battle, was not Leave to go yet cur'd, for the Salt-water hinder'd home to fettle his it from healing; and as the Campaign private Afwas also at an End, I desir'd Leave to fairs. lay up my Ship, and to retire for a while; which having obtain'd, I fet out for Provence, whither I return'd with the pleasing Expectation, not only of feeing my Family again, but of settling some little Domestic Affairs, which cou'd not be done without my being on the Spot. At the Opening Returns to of the Campaign, I return'd to Brest, Brest. and went on board the Pearl. The King's Fleet, confifting of feventy-five Men of War under the Command of the Marshal de Tourville, sail'd for the Straits of Gibraltar, where the Count d'Estrees, with Twenty other Ships from Provence, was to join us. We anchor'd in the Road of Lagos, on the Coast of Portugal. I was commanded Is sent out to go out for Intelligence, and to ex-for Intelligence. amine strictly what appear'd, so that if gence. I perceiv'd a great Number of Ships, I shou'd make it my Business to find out whether they were Merchant Men, or Ships of Force belonging to the Enemy.

THREE

THREE other Captains were detach'd with me upon the same Errand. We all fet Sail, and in a few Days spy'd a Fleet consisting of above One hundred and fifty Sail of Merchant Ships, belonging to the Enemy. Being well affur'd that we were not miltaken, we made haste to join our Fleet, in order to make a Report to the Admiral of what we had discover'd, affuring him they were only Merchant Men, and not Ships of Force. Upon this News he tackled out, and failing before the Wind; for what Reason I know not; he was got above ten Leagues out of the Way.

NEXT Day our whole Squadron difcover'd the Fleet of Merchant Ships, which the General order'd to be chae'd, but the Enemy took the Advantage of the Wind which we loft the Night before by our Working, and made off, so that we did them but very Mis Execu-little Harm. However we took two tion at Sea. of their Men of War of fixty Guns, and burnt thirty of their Merchant Ships, which were run ashore on the Coast of Portugal. I burnt three of 'em myself, and took a fourth, which was all the Loss they suffer'd, and certainly 'twas happy for 'em that they 'scap'd so well; because, had it not been for the false Step I just now mention'd.

tion'd, their whole Fleet cou'd hardly 1694, have miss'd being taken.

AFTER this Expedition the Fleet pass'd the Straits, and enter'd the Mediterranean, where we join'd the Count d'Estrees. But we parted a little after, when M. d'Estrees, with half of the Fleet, pass'd the Straits, and came to un-rig at Brest, and M. de Tourville failed to Thoulon, where he did the like. I had follow'd.M. de Tourville, but my He goes to Wound in my Knee not being cur'd, the Baths the Physicians advis'd me to go to the of his Baths at Digne, which were of fuch Ser- Wound. vice to me, that I return'd, as it were, perfectly cur'd.

I SPENT the Remainder of the Year And to Ton: at Toulon, where, about the latter End lon. of the Winter Seafon, I received Orders to go to Bayonne to command the Marines there.

THE Duke de Grammont, Governor Andto Baye of that Place, was exceeding com- onne. plaisant; he would needs have me lodge in the Town, and, after having told me, in a very obliging Manner, that he wou'd not have me dine any where but at his House, he appointed me a Place at his Table, which was a Seat on his Left Hand.

WHEN I had my Orders to go to Bayonne, I receiv'd a private Instruction, forbidding me, for I know not what Vol. I. Reafon, 1694. Reason, to obey the Duke. I kept this last Injunction very secret, but some Time after my Arrival, upon a Rumour that the Enemy intended to make a Descent at St. Jean de Luz, finding that Twenty-five or Thirty Officers that I had under me, to muster and command the Seamen upon the Coast, wou'd not have been able to have discharg'd their Duty, if there was a Misunderstanding betwixt the Governor and me, I went to him in his Study, and producing my Order from Court, which, as Things then stood, was directly contrary to his Majesty's Service, we agreed to behave for the present, as the Court wou'd have directed, if it had foreseen the then State of our Affairs.

HAVING come to this Determination, I put myself and all my Officers of the Marine, under the Duke's Orders. M. de Grammont, full of Zeal for his Sovereign, embrac'd me tenderly, and made me his Lieutenant-General upon the Coast, where we quickly rais'd a good Number of Seamen, and of the Militia, and erected a great many Batteries, which were to be commanded by the Officers that I had under me. But all these Preparations were needless, for, after we had long waited for the Enemy, nobody appear'd, appear'd, and all the Reports of a Landing being dispers'd, we had no more Business for all those People, and turn'd them off.

MEAN Time, I thought fit to inform the Court of the Step I had taken, in communicating the Orders I had receiv'd from thence to the Duke.

I was afraid that my Conduct wou'd not be approv'd; for the Ministers love to be obey'd literally, therefore I made the worst of our Situation, and represented of how great Importance it was to his Majesty's Service, that I shou'd deviate from my Instructions. The Court approv'd of my Conduct; but I was told, that what I had done was feafonable for this Time only.

THE next Campaign, that is to fay in the Year 1695, I return'd to Toulon, 1695. where I was appointed Commander of HisReturn a Battery of 25 Guns, which was an to Toulou. Employment that I was forc'd to be content with, there being not a better in that Port for Officers. For the Enemy's Squadron, which was gone into the Mediterranean, being in a Condition to hinder the Coming out of any Ships, the King did not fit out one Veffel.

Not long after my Arrival, I loft The Death my Eldest Brother, who was Captain of his Broof a Ship. His Death was a sensible

Affliction

1695. Affliction to me, for we always lov'd one another tenderly; but as great a Loss as it was, it was a Duty to be as eafy as possible under it, as well as under so many other Incidents with which Life is chequer'd.

Upon certain Advice that the Enemy's Fleet was retir'd, I had a Commission to command a Ship called The Marquis. M. Pallas, Captain of a Ship, was affociated with me, and we were order'd to protect Trade, and to give chace to the Flushingers, who had for fome Time past ruin'd it. We had Orders first to convoy a Fleet of Mer-He fails to chant Ships into the Levant. As I was and carries going off, I took on board the Bailiff fome Kts. to of St. Vian, accompany'd with a Dozen Knights, that wanted to go to Malta. Pallas, to whom they apply'd first, refus'd, out of meer Caprice, to take them in. When we came to Malta, I put them ashore, and caus'd some Cannon to be fir'd to do them Honour. Pallas, vex'd that I had taken those Gentlemen on board, after he had rejected them, complained to me of it fadly; but was foon pacify'd, when he saw that I was going to give him a Share of the Refreshments which the Bailiff sent me in Acknowledgment of the Service which I had done him.

the Levant,

From Malta we carry'd our Mer- 1695 chant Men to the Entrance of the Archipelago. When we came near Cerigo, we faw a Sail which feem'd to make towards us. As the was full before the Wind, Pallas and I were both of Opinion that we shou'd immediately make a Feint as if we fled; that when Night came, we wou'd endeavour to find the Ship out, and that the first that discover'd it shou'd let off a Cannon, and light up a Fire for a Signal.

I was more fortunate than my Com- HisEngage, panion; I found the Ship, and made the ment with a Signal we had agreed upon. As I was ship from going to speak with her, she fir'd upon Smyrna. me. Pallas, who came at my Signal, was also approaching to speak with her; but she return'd no other Answer than a Broadside of Cannon, and a Discharge of small Arms, to which he made the like Return. During this, as I was going a little nearer, I receiv'd the same Treatment as Pallas, and return'd the fame Answer. Thus we battled it for Two Hours without knowing with whom. 'Twas a very large Ship, carry'd a great Number of Guns, and made a very great Fire with fmall Arms; from all this, we concluded she might be a Man of War, however we were refolved to keep her in View

1695.

all Night: she was a bad Sailor; and as I was drawing closer to her, because it was a very dark Night, and I was always asraid lest she shou'd escape, she fir'd upon me, and I answer'd with my whole Broad-side, which made her quiet till Morning.

quiet till Morning. When the Firing was over, the Time was spent on both Sides in refiting. As foon as the Day appear'd, we perceiv'd that we had been engag'd with a great Ship which had Three Decks, and carry'd Dutch Colours; upon which I said to Pallas, Sir, I know the Dutch; if we spend our Time in Cannonading, we may fight till to Morrow, and be never the nearer. The only thing we can do, is to board ber. As you are the chief Commander 'tis your Right to begin; but if you won't, I will. Pallas said, that the Sea was too tumultuous, that it wou'd be too dangerous to board, and that if we only continued our Cannonading, the Ship, which was already very much damag'd, wou'd not hold out much longer. I submitted to his Opinion, tho' I did not think it the best. The Fight was renew'd, and lasted above two Hours, but the Victory still remain'd doubtful.

While we thus lost Time in battering one another, the Centinel upon the

Count DE FORBIN.

the Watch spy'd four Ships to the 1695 Leeward, making toward us, and two others to the Windward, which were also advancing at the Report of the Cannon. Upon this Pallas quitted the Engagement, and made a Signal to speak with me.

I HAD been too much batter'd to The Count let my Prize go so easily. I had not Danger only lost near fourscore of my Men, but had like to have been kill'd myfelf by three Cannon Balls, the first of which carry'd off my Breeches Pocket, Lining and all; the second, which pass'd between my Legs, graz'd upon my Stocking, and the third carry'd away one of the Tyes of my Peruke. Being vex'd that I had run all these Risks to no purpose, I did not trouble myself much about the Signal, but order'd my Officers to prepare for

boarding, saying, I wou'd speak with

Pallas after the Ship was taken. I IMMEDIATELY bore down upon He takes the Enemy and boarded him, but not the Ship. 16 without the Loss of more Men; for the Ship held out stoutly for some Time, but, at last, when she cou'd do no more, she surrender'd. Pallas feeing that I had conquer'd her, came to me, and perceiving that the four Ships to the Leeward, which appear'd to be Men of War, were bearing P 4 down 1695. down upon us with full sail, he was for burning this Prize for fear of being taken ourselves.

My Prize being immediately clear'd, and finding, by the Captains Report, that her Cargo was worth above two Millions, I made answer to Pallas, that I was not of his Opinion: That before we proceeded to such an Extremity, we ought, at least, to stay till we were attack'd: That I wou'd be answerable for the Consequence; and that, if there was a Necessity, we cou'd but burn her at last. I added that the King's Ships wou'd run no Risk; that they were good Sailors, and that we shou'd have Time enough to make our Escape, if the Case requir'd it.

PALLAS, not pleas'd with my Answer, return'd, and in a Moment after, sent me one of his Officers with Orders to burn the Ship immediately. I fent back the Officer, without scarce giving him a Hearing. Go, Sir, said I, and tell M. Pallas that I disobey bim in this Instance, because I am fully persuaded that 'tis for the King's Service.

During this Dispute, the Ships we had discover'd still made up towards us; the two Ships which came at the Report of the Cannon, advanc'd within half a League to the Windward of 1695; us, hoisted a white Flag, and fir'd a Gun. Pallas fir'd a Gun likewise, by way of Answer, and hoisted the Flag of France, upon which the two Ships steer'd off. I guess'd by their working. that they were two small Turkish Corfairs, or Privateers of Flushing. The four other Ships, which were to the Windward, when they faw the King's Flag, after a Confultation, continued their Course.

PALLAS, who still persisted in it that they were English, for, to speak the Truth, they appear'd to be fuch by their Built, sent me a final Order to burn the Prize. I laugh'd heartily at the Message, and addressing myfelf to him that brought it; M. Pallas, faid I, banters both you and me; but return on board, and tell him, that Men of War don't spend Time in Parleying when the Business is to Fight. I own that those Ships appear by their Built to be English Men of War; but by their Working, I am persuaded that they are only Merchant Ships, that feek nothing but to make the best of their Way Home, and which, instead of coming towards us, will be very glad if we don't go to attack them. In fine, tell M. Pallas, that our Prize being shatter'd to Pieces, and without a Rudder, I would have him come

1695. come and bring his Carpenters to try to fave, her.

AT last Pallas, submitting to my Reasons, came to me, when we resitted the Ship the best we cou'd, and tow'd her to the Isle of Gephalonia, where we lest her: For it was not possible for us to carry her to France in that Condition, that is to say, without Masts and a Rudder. I lest an Officer on board, with thirty Men, to take care of her.

This Ship, tho' she had three Decks, and tho' she carry'd Sixty-eight Guns, and Two hundred and sixty Men, Soldiers and Sailors, was but a Merchant Man. She was come from Smyrna, with a Cargo which had cost Fifty-six thousand Pieces of Eight, not reckoning the Contraband Goods which she had taken on board. She was bound to Legborn, and from thence to Amsterdam.

Mis fair Captive. Among the Prisoners we took, was a young Woman, a Native of Geneva, about eighteen Years of Age, one of the prettiest Girls I had ever seen in my Life. She was so terrify'd, that she hid herself, insomuch that it was some time before we cou'd find her. When I saw her drown'd in Tears, her Beauty and her miserable Condition touch'd me to the Quick. I did all I cou'd to raise her Spirits, pro- 1601 mis'd her that she shou'd come to no Harm, sent for her Husband, and gave them a Room to themselves.

Count DE FORBIN.

IMMEDIATELY several Sailors came and acquainted me, that this Woman had Pearls and precious Stones of an immense Value in her Head-dress, which were committed to her Care by some Jews that embark'd with her. They added, that I ought not to neglect this Hint, that there was a vast Booty to be taken, and that they wonder'd I had not already given Orders for the seizing it. At these Words, I said to them, with an angry Frown, If she has any rich Jewels in her Headdress, 'tis either her own good Fortune, or the good Fortune of those who trusted ber with 'em. As for my part, I'd Heprotect bave ye to know, Rascals, that a Man Plunder of my Station can't be guilty of such for- and sets did Actions as you have the Rashness to Cephalini propose. When we arriv'd at Cephalonia, we put our Prisoners ashore, and the pretty Hugonot along with them.

THE Country where we were, put me in mind of M. Constance: I had for a long Time forgot what he made me fuffer at Siam, and his Misfortunes had so reconcil'd my Friendship tohim, for I did not always hate him, that after his Death, for which I was truly forry, I was defirous of nothing fo much, as to do a Pleasure to his Family.

P 6

Me finds Sut a Brother of M. Constance, gine Mini-

I INQUIR'D about them, and was told that he had a Brother left at the Village of Custode. I went in quest eratsiam, of him the very Day after we arriv'd, and after having paid him a Compliment, I told him that there were very considerable Sums at Paris which M. Constance had fent thither by Father Tachard, when he return'd with M. de Chaumont.

> I was very well inform'd of this Article: For I had it from M. Conftance himself, when we were very good Friends; which is a plain Proof of what I have already advanc'd elfewhere, that this Minister had no other View by fettling the French at Bancock, than to obtain the Protection of France, to which Kingdom he even propos'd to retire, if ever the Situation of his Affairs shou'd oblige him to it.

His Brother was perfuaded, by what I had faid to him, to go to France. I took him aboard, and paid him all the Civilities imaginable. He went to Paris, and retir'd from thence with very great Sums; but, as if it had been destin'd that I shou'd never meet with any thing but Ingratitude from com'd to ceet with ngratitude from that Family.

from that Family, he set out for his 1695. own Country, not only without returning me Thanks, but even without doing me the Honour of a Visit.

WE fail'd from Cephalonia to Malta, He fails where twenty Merchant Ships stay'd from C-pha to put themselves under our Convoy. Malia. I there took on board my Ship the Bailisf de la Vieuville, and with him Twenty-fix Knights that wanted Paffage. When we were within fifteen Leagues of Malta, two Privateers of Flushing made up towards the Fleet, to which we gave Chace, and I took Takes a one of them. The Crews strip'd all Privateen. the Prisoners according to Custom; at which Time the Bailiff, a Man of uncommon Goodness, in order to give an Example of Charity to all those young Knights in his Retinue, made a Collection, to which he gave a great deal out of his own Pocket, and with the Money cloath'd all those poor Prie foners.

As we continued our Course off of the Cape of Apulia, I gave Chase for a long Time to a Ship which I thought at first was a Corsair; but when I came within a nearer View she appear'd to be a Venetian that I had feen at Cephalonia. I imagin'd that she was freighted for the English, and therefore resolv'd to oblige her to take

I had lately taken into my Ship, and which I found were a great Incumbrance to me; for they were above One hundred and twenty in Number, and tho' I was not fure whether the Cargo of the Venetian really belong'd to the English, I thought my Doubt of it was sufficient Warrant for me, if not to attack and to make Prize of her, at least to demand the Service of her

I THEREFORE declar'd to her, that if she did not prepare to receive on board a certain Number of Flushing Prisoners that I had, she must make ready for an Engagement; but her fear of being taken and carry'd to France, made her comply with whatever I desir'd.

Besides the Hundred and twenty Flushingers, that I wanted to be rid of, I had also thirty Dutch Seamen on board, belonging to the great Prize, whom I reserv'd to myself, to reinforce my Crew: For, as I said before, I lost sourscore Men in the Engagement, and had left thirty at Cephalonia, to guard the Ship which I had taken.

But I had no longer any need of those thirty Dutch Sailors, I wanted also also to get rid of them, and to put 1695. them on board the Venetian Ship.

WHEN they knew my Resolution, they all fell at my Feet, and desiring me to keep them with me, and to distinguish them from the Flushingers, whom they call'd Robbers and Pyrates, they feem'd to be fo melancholy at the Thoughts of being confounded with People of that fort, that, being charm'd with their Probity, I detain'd them, and carry'd 'em to Toulon.

WHEN I overtook Pallas again, I was very far from telling him that I had got rid of the Flushingers, for he wou'd not have fail'd to have incumber'd me also with half of his Men, fo that we continued our Course without my speaking one Word of the Matter. When we were at Toulon he 1696. landed his Prisoners, and ask'd me why I did not put mine ashore like-His Arri wise; I then told him how I had rid lon. my Hands of mine, at which he smil'd, and own'd that I was not in the wrong to conceal it from him.

AT our Arrival at Toulon, Pallas He is orhad Orders to fit out a couple of der'd for Pinnaces and to return to Caphalonia to Algier. Pinnaces, and to return to Cephalonia to take the Cargo out of the Prize which we had left there. As for me I was order'd immediately to Algier, to obtige those Corsairs to keep the Peace:

For

1696. For fince the Engagements they had enter'd into with Admiral Russel, they had done fome things which gave occasion of Complaint.

I HAD refitted, and was preparing to Sail, when I had Orders to resign my Ship to the Chevalier du Pale, and to carry M. de Ferriol, the King's Ambassador to the Porte. This Order mortify'd me exceedingly: For thus to take away my Ship, and to give me a Commission that wou'd turn to no account, was, in a proper Sense, leaving me to shift for myself. Being vex'd to see myself so ill us'd, especially after a Campaign, in which I had succeeded with Honour, and to the King's Advantage; I complain'd to the Minister, and told him, that I did not expect such Treatment for my good Service.

Besides this Letter, I wrote another to Bontems, wherein I told him how fenfible I was of the Affront put upon me, of the Injustice with which I was treated, and of the Scandal which it reflected on me, it being a thing never known in the Sea Service, to degrade a Captain unless he had fail'd in his Duty. Bontems, who was never idle when he had an Opportunity to do me a Pleasure, acquainted His Majesty of the Wrong that had been

His Complaint of ill Usage on that fcore.

been done me, at which the King 1696, was furpriz'd, and resolv'd to ask the Minister his Reasons for such Usage of me.

INDEED, the Minister was altogether ignorant of this Alteration in the Navy-Office, because it was the Commissioners own Act and Deed; but lest it shou'd be understood that he neglected those Particulars, which it concern'd him to attend to, he made Anfwer, without the least Confusion in Appearance, that, as he had nothing to object against my Conduct, he had not depriv'd me of my Ship to mortify me; and that, so far was he from any Intention to make me uneasy, that he had appointed me for the Command of two Ships.

HAVING thus extricated himself out of this Perplexity, the Voyage to Constantinople was out of the Question. I had Orders to fit out two Ships to cruise in the Mediterranean, to protect the Trade, and to give Chase to the Enemy's Privateers. I mann'd them, but with much ado, because all the Sailors had already been taken up for the general Armament. Nevertheless, I made up my Compliment; and notwithstanding a thousand little Incidents which fomewhat retarded me, I was quickly in a Condition to put to Sea. My two Ships Ships carry'd each fifty Guns. The second had the Count de Hautefort on board. My particular Instruction from the Minister was, to lie at Anchor before Algier, in order to engage those Barbarians to keep the Peace. From Algier I had Orders to repair to Cephalonia, to convoy the Prize, and the two Pinnaces that accompany'd it.

He takes a

In my Course, almost parallel with Sood English Majorca, I took a very considerable English Prize, which I sent to Toulon; and, according to my Orders, I made my Appearance before Algier, from whence several poor Christian Slaves came aboard of me in the Night-time for Re-HisArrival fuge. When they arriv'd, they look'd more like dead Men, than any thing else; for as I was pretty far out in the Road, they were forc'd to swim a great before cAlgier.

Way.

Of the many Fellow-fufferers that try'd to follow them, some were drown'd, and others cry'd out for Help, in fuch a Manner, as cou'd not but raise Pity.

5. His Stratagem to take on of the Chriatian Cap-Tives.

I cou'd not tell what to do to save them, because it was expresly prohiboard some bited by several Treaties of Peace with the Algerines, to put out any Long-Boats to favour the Escape of their Slaves. However, I was not willing to let these perish; and therefore, in order parent Contravention of the Treaties, I caus'd four hundred Fathom of Ropes to be put into my Ship's Boat; and order'd the Master to let out the Cordage at such Places where he heard any Cry; and in case he was discover'd by the Turkish small Crast, which was likely enough, those Barbarians being always on the Watch, and cruising in the Road to hinder the Slaves from escaping; I bad him to put the Oars into the Ship Boat, and to hale himself along by the Cable which he had, while I did the like on board.

1606

IT happen'd as I forefaw it wou'd. The Turks small Craft spy'd the Ship-Boat, and gave it chase. The Master of it, who had already taken several of the poor Wretches on board, finding he was discover'd, work'd the Boat in the manner that I had order'd him, and hal'd himself aboard the Ship, to which he was pull'd by main Force. The Ship Boat was so nimble, that the Turks, with all the Speed they cou'd make, were not able to overtake it; however, they follow'd it aboard, and wonder'd how 'twas possible, that a Vessel that was not navigated, cou'd go faster than theirs.

They complain'd to me, that my The Turki Complaint Long Boat had carry'd off several of of it, and their his Answe 1696. their Slaves, contrary to Treaties. I told them they were mistaken, that my Long Boat was aboard all the while; which tho' it was very eafy to prove, they did not change their Note, but still insisted on it, that they had seen the Boat at Sea; by the same Token, faid they, that it flew like the very Wind, tho' it was not navigated. Then turning it off with a Banter, Surely, faid I, 'twas some great Fish that you faw, for you know as well as I, that a Boat can't make any Way without an Oar. This put an End to the Discourse for that Time, and the Turks turn'd their Boats to Shore.

AnInstance of what a Man will do for Liberty.

Ат Day-break the Watch discover'd a Slave swimming to us, about a League from the Ship. I immediately order'd out the Long Boat to go to his Relief. He found him quite out of Breath, for he had swam above ten Leagues; so great an Ascendant has the Love of Liberty over the Minds of Men, and fo apt is it to put them upon attempting Things that are extraordinary. doubt but this poor Christian wou'd have sunk in the Effort, had it not been for a Piece of Cork under his Breast, and fome Gourds under his Armpits. Mean time, there were great Complaints against me at Algier; several of the principal Men held a tumultuous Affembly

Affembly at the French Conful's House; who, to fatisfy them in some Measure, fent the Drogman, or Interpreter to me with some of that Assembly, who came on board to reclaim their Slaves.

WHEN they demanded their Slaves, The Turks Demand of I told 'em, in short, that I had none their Slaves to restore; and that if I had, they ought not to expect I wou'd give them up; that they knew that the King's Ships, where-ever they came, were such facred Sanctuaries, that those even of The Count's the Turks, who were Slaves among the Expostula-Christians, recover'd their Liberty, them on when they were happy enough to come aboard 'em; that for my own Part, they knew very well, that for fear of giving Uneafiness, I had not been ashore, and that I had even avoided going any farther into the Road; that moreover, fince they were so much concern'd for the Loss they had sustain'd; it was their Business to have prevented it, by taking care, because they knew very well, that nothing in the World is more natural to a Man, than the Love of Liberty, and that he is always ready to encounter any Danger for recovering it. Tho' they had much ado to swallow these Arguments, yet they were forc'd to pass it by. One of the Turks that came aboard, ask'd me, if one of his Slaves, who was wanting, 1696. was not among those that took Refuge with me: I made him answer, that I cou'd not give him any Light upon that Head, and that I knew nothing of what he ask'd me.

He reply'd to me in his Gibberish, You answer me like a Sickle; speak directly to me, and tell me whether my Slave is aboard thy Ship? If he be there, I am not forry for it, 'tis bis good Fortune; but tell me if you know him, I will not seek him any more? I protested to him, that I knew nothing of the Matter; that indeed, I had heard Men calling round the Ship for Help; but that not daring to fend out my Long Bont, for fear of contravening the Prohibitions, they might be drown'd, or might be return'd ashore. This Turk seem'd to be pleas'd with my Answer, and went his way.

I ser sail next Day, and steer'd for Cephalonia. We were about the Middle of the Channel, between the Isles of Majorca and Sardinia, when we difcover'd a little Smack-sail, which was not far from us. We gave her Chase, and when we came up with her, found she was a little Algerine Corsair, with but thirteen Men on board, which had been drove by Stress of Weather from the Coasts of Catalonia.

I TOOK the Master aboard, and examin'd his Pass, and ask'd him whither

he was bound. I don't know, faid he, 1696. Why do you ask? I made answer, Do you pretend to go to Sea, and don't know He takes a bow to sail? The Corsair made me rine Coranswer, that he knew the Coast of Bar- sair. bary was the South, and the Land of the Christians the North; and, that he needed to know nothing more.

I row'd this little Vessel, and promis'd the Master to carry him to the Barbary Shore. With all my Heart, His Confesaid he; but first of all, I have a Fa- rence with the Master, vour to beg of you. What is it? said I, who desir'd You can easily grant me my Request, re- him to assist ply'd he. Help me, for God's sake, to king the take the Christians. I laugh'd at his Simplicity, and told him, that it was an unreasonable Request, because he wou'd not help me to take the Turks, if I defir'd him never so much.

This poor Wretch had above ten Ulcers upon his Body. He was fo filly as to imagine, that my Surgeon cou'd cure him instantly; and therefore, he desir'd me, for the Love of God, to let him do it. His Stupidity rais'd my Compassion. When he and all his Crew had eat heartily, they parly'd some time among themselves, and confulted what they shou'd do: After which, having, no doubt, some Mistrust of me, they desir'd Leave to be gone,

1696. gone, which I granted them with Pleafure.

> THE Algerines have fuch an Itch for Pilfering, that when they were got aboard their little Vessel, they wou'd fain have stole the little Cable by which their Vessel was moor'd to our Ship, but 'twas not in their Power. Wind was very high, and the Sea fo fwell'd, that they foon repented that they did not embrace the Assistance I offer'd them, and defir'd to come on board again; but I was refolv'd to have no more to do with 'em; and making all the Sail we cou'd, we foon lost Sight of 'em.

In the Night-time, a very black Cloud was form'd on a fudden, which was accompany'd with terrible Thunder and Lightning. For fear of a great Storm, I caus'd all the Sails to be furl'd. There were above thirty St. Elmos (the teors call'd Meteors we call Will with a Wisp) about the Ship, and one in particular on the Top of the Fane of the Mainmast, which was a Foot and a half in height. I fent up a Sailor to fetch it down. When the Fellow was got up to it, he faid, that it made a Noise like the Hiss of Gunpowder that is fir'd when 'tis wet. I order'd him to take off the Fane, and to come down; but as foon as he had taken it off, the Fire quitted it, and pitch'd pitch'd upon the Top of the Mast, 1696. where it stay'd a long while, till by Degrees it spent it self. Tho' we so much dreaded a Storm, we had nothing but a heavy Shower of Rain for some Hours, which was succeeded by fair Weather.

The Me-

WHEN I came before Malta, I in- The Count's quir'd about M. Pallas, but he had not Voyage to been feen there; so that I continu'd my and the Course, and arriv'd at Cephalonia, three Fare of Messina. Days after he had been gone. When I found there was no Hopes of overtaking him, I was resolv'd to go and cruise off of the Fare of Messina. I chose that Latitude rather than any other, because the Enemy's Merchant-Ships that trade from the Levant to Leghorn, steer their Course that Way.

WHEN I was upon the Coast of Cala- He forces bria, I spy'd two Privateers of Majorca, two Privateers of Majorca, teers of Ma. one of twenty-four Guns, and the other jorcatorus of eight. I hoisted English Colours, themselves and gave them Chace. They presently faw that they cou'd not avoid being taken, and therefore went and cast Anchor before the Town of Rochel, in the Kingdom of Naples. I went as near to them as the depth of Water wou'd permit, hoisted French Colours, and began to cannonade them. The Town endeavour'd to defend them with some paultry Pieces of Cannon; but I made fuch 1696. such a Fire upon the Privateers, that not being able to hold oblig'd to run their Ships ashore, and then to abandon them, by which Means the Crews escap'd. They had not gone far, when eight Turks of Tripoli, whom the Majorcans had taken out of a French Bark, and left on board, hoisted the white Flag. The Long Boat and Ship Boat were fent aboard 'em, and took both the Ships; in which, except the Turks, they found none but dead and wounded Men, and a Monk clad in white.

He takes a Monk aboard, and fends him as his Ambailador to the Shore.

> During this, the Inhabitants of the Place, who were Friends to the Majorcans, came in a Body to the Port, with Arms. The Sight of 'em gave me fome Uneasiness; I was resolv'd, indeed, to keep my Prizes at all Events, but after I had made myself Master of 'em, I did not care for another Battle; and as the Cafe stood, I thought I cou'd do nothing better, than to fend fomebody ashore with Proposals of Peace.

> For this Embassy, I chose the Monk, and bid him tell the Inhabitants from me, that I had no Design upon them; that all I meant, was to keep the two Ships that I had taken; that it was strange they shou'd take Arms to defend the Corfairs, which far from meriting their their Protection, ought to be consider'd 1696. only as publick Robbers; that in short, if they refolv'd to protect them, I Threatens shou'd be so far from yielding them up, the Town that I must be oblig'd to bombard for protestal and cannonade the Town. The Monk vicers. discharg'd his Commission to Admiration, and a fort of Truce was concluded; during which, we work'd all Night in unlading the two Ships, in order to run them ashore.

NEXT Day, about ten o' Clock in the Morning, a Bark came in Sight, steering, as it were, from Messina, towards this Town. My Defire to take He decovs. this Ship, without being oblig'd to give an English her Chase, made me hoist English Co-false Means easily decoy'd, put up Spanish Colours, and came towards us without the least Mistrust. Indeed every thing concurr'd to deceive her. For, how cou'd she take me for a Frenchman, when the faw two Ships lying to quietly at Anchor before the Town? However, she sent her Long Boat on board me with twenty-five Men, to know who I was. When I saw it approach, I made ready for a good Discharge of finall Arms, and put on a Cap after the English Fashion. As soon as the Long Boat came near enough to be heard, they fall'd out, What News? Good  $Q_3$

to bomba de

1696. News, said I; Come aboard. The Boat advane'd without the least Suspicion, and became an eafy Prey.

THE Bark, which was in full Sight, perceiving the Snare, tack'd about in order to get off; which was no less than Blows her I expected, and therefore I fir'd at her, and one of the Cannon-Bullets falling, as ill Luck wou'd have it, into the Gun-Room, fet Fire to the Powder, and blew her up. It was really a lamentable Sight to see all the Crew trembling in the Air, and falling down in a Moment half burnt, with the Splinters of the Vessel, covering the Sea as it were, with dead Bodies, and the Wrecks of the Ship.

> I was not so happy as to have either the Long Boat or Ship Boat aboard, they being both employ'd in the Guard of the two Privateers that were run ashore; but I immediately fitted out the Long Boat which I had just taken, fent it to the very Place where the Bark blew up, and was so fortunate as to save seven Men that were half burnt, among whom was a Frenchman.

This Vessel came from Naples, was fitted out for a Cruising Voyage, and carry'd One hundred and thirty Men. When my two Majorgans were set assoat again, I caus'd a little Merchant Vessel to be burnt, that Liad taken in the Road,

Road, set Sail, and return'd to Malta, 1696. whither'I heard that Pallas was gone ... with his Convoy.

The Count returns to

I HAD not been at Sea long enough Malta, in to spend all my Provisions; besides, quest of Par as the Season was not too far advanc'd, I refolv'd to go a Cruising off of Cape Corfe, imagining I shou'd meet with fome Prize there, or at least that I shou'd clear those Parts of the Enemy's Privateers. After having stay'd there some time, without perceiving so much as a fingle Bark, I proceeded towards the Barbary Shore, and off of Cape Bon, I spy'd three Ships, to which I gave Chase. I soon found by their Working, that they were French; and left they shou'd be so far intimidated as to run ashore, which was the only Way they had to escape, I gave over the Chafe, and fent my Ship Boat to make them eafy. They came to me with Joy, and faid, there were nine other French Ships behind them richly laden.

THESE are very dangerous Seas for Merchant-Ships, and therefore I was willing to protect them from Infult in the best manner I cou'd. For this End I detach'd the Count de Hautefort, with the two Majorçans that I had taken. He met with them, and the whole  $Q_4$ Fleet 1696. Fleet joining me very foon, I put them under my Convoy, and we went and cast Anchor before Beserti, where I gave to all of them Signals.

Before we fail'd, I fent for the Turks whom I had taken on board the Corfairs of Majorca, and told them, that tho' they had been taken out of an Enemy's Ship, yet, as we were at Peace with the Kingdom of Tripoli, and as they themselves had affur'd me they had been taken by the Majorcans out of a French Ship, I wou'd go, if they pleas'd, and put them ashore in a Country where they wou'd recover both their Liberty and the Exercise of their Religion. My View in it was to let them see that the French were Men of Integrity, exact Observers of Treaties, and grateful to their Friends, where-ever they met with 'em.

THESE eight Turks were so sensibly affected with the Favour I offer'd them, that they fell at my Feet, kiss'd them feveral times, and, in their Jargon, wish'd me a thousand Blessings. I carry'd them myfelf to the Aga, gave them each a Piece of Eight, and then deliver'd them up to that Officer, in Presence of all his Soldiers; who, charm'd at the Generofity of the French, feem'd infinitely pleased with their - Punchality

BOOKS lately printed for J. PEMBERTON, at the Golden Buck against St. Dunstan's Church in Fleet-Street.

FOLIO:

I. HE Works of the most Re-verend Dr. John Tillotson, late Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, in Three Vols. containing Two hundred fifty-four Sermons and Difcourses on several Occasions; together with the Rule of Faith. To which are annexed, Prayers composed by him for his own Use; a Discourse to his Servants before the Sacrament; and a Form of Prayer composed by him for the Use of King William. Together with three Tables to the whole: One of the Texts preach'd upon; another of the Places of Scripture occasionally explained; a third, an Alphabetical Table of Matters. The Ninth Edition: Price 2 1. 15 3.

BOOKS printed for

II. The Works of John Locke, Efq; In Three Volumes; containing, 1. An Essay on Human Understanding. In Four Books. 2. A Letter to the Right Reverend Edward Lord Bishop of Worcester, concerning some Passages relating to Mr. Locke's Essay of Human Understanding; in a late Discourse of his Lordship's in Vindication of the Trinity. 3. Mr. Locke's Reply to the Right Reverend the Bishop of Worcester's Anfwer to his Letter. 4. Mr. Locke's Reply to the Bishop of Worcester's Answer to his Second Letter. 5. Some Considerations of the Consequences of the lowering of Interest, and raising the Value of Money. In a Letter fent to a Member of Parliament, 1691. 6. Short Observations on a printed Paper, entitled, For encouraging the Coining Silver Money in England, and after for keeping it here. 7. Farther Observations concerning raising the Value of Money, &c. 8. Two Treatises of Government. 9. A Letter concerning Toleration. 10. A Second Letter concerning Toleration. 11. A Third Letter for Toleration. To the Author of the Third Letter concerning Toleration. 12. The Reasonableness of Christianity, as deliver'd in the Scriptures. 13. A Vindication of the Reasonableness of dections. 14. A Second Vindication of the Reasonableness of Christianity. 15, Some Thoughts concerning Education. 16. A Paraphrase and Notes on the Epistles of St. Paul to the Galatians, I. and II Corinthians, Romans, and Ephesians. To which is prefix'd, An Essay for the understanding of St. Paul's Epi-Itles, by confulting St. Paul himself. 17. Posthumous Works, viz. 1. Of the Conduct of the Understanding. 2. An Examination of P. Malebranche's Opinion of feeing all things in God. 3. A Discourse of Miracles. 4. Part of a Fourth Letter for Toleration. 5. Memoirs relating to the Life of Anthony, first Earl of Shaftesbury. 6. A new Method of a Common-Place-Book; written originally in French, and translated into English. 7. Some familiar Letters between Mr. Locke and several of his Friends. The Third Edition. Price 2 l. 15 s.

III. A Commentary upon the Historical Books of the Old Testament, viz. Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, I Samuel, II Samuel, I Kings, II Kings, I Chronicles, II Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther. By the Right Reverend Father in God, Dr. Simon Patrick, late Lord Bishop

BOOKS printed for

is added, a compleat Alphabetical Table. Price 2 l. 5 s.

IV. The Civil Law in its natural Order; together with the Publick Law. Written in French by Monsieur Domat, the late French King's Advocate in the Presidial Court of Glermont in France; and translated into English by William Strahan, LL. D. Advocate in Doctors Commons. With additional Remarks on some material Differences between the Civil Law and the Law of England. In Two Volumes. Price 2 l. 2 s.

V. The Works of Flavius Josephus, translated into English by Sir Roger L'Estrange, Kt. viz. 1. The Antiquities of the Jews, in Twenty Books. 2. Their Wars with the Romans, in Seven Books. 3. The Life of Fosephus, written by himself. 4. His Book against Appian in Defence of the Antiquities of the Jews, in two Parts. 5. The Martyrdom of the Maccabees. As also, 6. Philo's Embassy from the Jews at Alexandria to Caius Caligula. All carefully revis'd, and compar'd with the original Greek. To which are added, Two Discourses, and several Remarks and Observations upon Josephus. Together with Maps, Sculptures, and accurate Indexes. The Fourth Edition, Palestine, the Temple of Jerusalem, and the Genealogy of Herod the Great, it taken from Villalpandus, Reland, &c.

Price 1 l. 7 s. 6 d.

VI. The Compleat Geographer; or, The Chorography and Topography of all the known Parts of the Earth. To which is premifed an Introduction to Geography, and a natural History of the Earth and the Elements. Containing a true and perfect Account of 1. Lie Situation, Bounds and Extent. Climate, Soil, Productions, History, Trade, Manufactures: The Religion, Manners and Customs of the People; with the Revolutions, Conquests, and other Changes of all the Countries on the Earth. 2. The several Provinces that every Kingdom or State is divided. into. 3. The principal Cities and most considerable Towns in the World, the Magnitude, principal Buildings, Antiquity, present State, Trade, History, &c. As also the Situation, with the Distance and Bearing from other Towns. Together with all Pieces of Natural Histor ry. The whole containing the Substance of at least an hundred and fifty Books of modern Travels, faithfully abstracted and digested into local Or, der; whereby the present State of the most remote Countries is truly shewn, and the obsolete and fabulous Accounts

BOOKS printed for

of former Writers wholly expung'd. To which are added, Maps of every Country, fairly engraven on Copper according to the latest Surveys and newest Discoveries, most engrav'd by Herman Moll. The Fourth Edition. Wherein the Description of Asia, Africa, and America are compos'd a-new from the Relations of Travellers of the best Repute, especially such as have appear'd within thirty or forty Year last past. Folio. Price 1 l.

VII. Cyclopædia: Or, An Universal Dictionary of Arts and Sciences. Containing the Definitions of the Terms, and an Account of the Things fignified thereby, in the several Arts, both Liberal and Mechanical, and the feveral Sciences, Human and Divine; the Figures, Kinds, Properties, Productions, Preparations and Uses of Things Natural and Artificial: The Rife, Progress and State of Things Ecclesiastical, Civil, Military and Commerical; with the feveral Systems, Sects, Opinions, &c. among Philosophers, Divines, Mathematicians, Physicians, Antiquaries, Criticks, &c. The whole intended as a Course of ancient and modern Learning. Compiled from the best Authors, Dictionaries, Journals, Memoirs, Transactions, Ephemerides, Ec. in several Languages. In Two

J. PEMBERTON.

Vols. By E. Chambers, Gent. Price 4 l. 15 s.

VIII. Mr. Jeremy Collier's Supplement and Appendix to the Two English Volumes in Folio, of the Great Historical, Geographical, Genealogical and Poetical Dictionary. Being a curious Miscellany of Sacred and Profane History, &c. Price of the Two Vols. 3 l. 10 s.

IX. The whole Works of the late Reverend and Learned Dr. Scott. Containing The Christian Life, in Four Parts. As also his several Volumes of Discourses. In Two Volumes. Price 1 l. 12 s. N. B. The Christian Life may be had separate.

X. The Works of the late Reverend and Learned Dr. Isaac Barrow, Master of Trinity College in Cambridge. Being all his English Works. In Three Voss. Publish'd by his Grace Dr. John Tillot-son, late Lord Archbishop of Canterbury. Price 2 l.

XI. An Institute of the Laws of England; or, the Laws of England in their Natural Order, according to common Use. Publish'd for the Direction of Young Beginners, or Students in the Law; and of others that desire to have a general Notion of our Common and Statute Laws. In Four Books, Ru

BOOKS printed for, &c.

Thomas Wood, LL. D. and Barrister at Law. The Fourth Edition, Corrected. Price 1 l. 2 s. 6 d.

XII. The Works of the late Learned Mr. John Selden. In Latin and English. In Six Volumes. To which is prefix'd, the Author's Life, Prefaces, and Index. By David Wilkins, D. D. Archdeacon of Suffolk, &c. Price 7 l. 75.

XIII. The Scripture Chronology demonstrated by Astronomical Calculations. Illustrated with Ten accurate Maps, and Twenty Copper Plates,  $\mathcal{C}_c$ . By Arthur Bedford, M.A. Price 1 l. 5 s.

XIV. The History of England; or, Memorials of the English Affairs, from the supposed Expedition of Brute to this Island, to the End of the Reign of King James I. By Sir Bulstrode Whitlocke, Lord Commissioner of the Great Seal, &c. Publish'd from the Original Manuscript, by William Penn, Esq; Governor of Pensylvania. To which is prefix'd, the Author's Life, and a Preface by James Welwood, M. D. Price

Punctuality in the Observation of Trea- 1696. ties.

THESE poor Turks, who were half naked, were cloath'd next Day by the " Charity of their Countrymen. As for my own Part, I was glad, as I have faid, of an Opportunity of giving those Barbarians at the same time, a good Opinion of our Nation, and of faving the Court the Expence which they must have been at to have fent those Prisoners to their own Country, which wou'd have been the Case unavoidably, considering that they had not been taken from the Majorean Privateers, if they had not been taken before on board a French Bark. My Conduct was so very pleasing to the Minister, that he made me sensible of his Satisfaction.

From Beserti I proceeded with my He arrives Convoy to Marseilles, where we happily with a rich landed. The Arrival of the Fleet, Merchanta which had above ten Millions on Ships at 18 board, was so great a Pleasure to the Merchants, that in Acknowledgment of the Service I had done them, the Chamber of Commerce confulted to make me a Present of Two thousand His Present Livres, which I only accepted as a from the Compliment, after I had obtain'd the Minister's Leave.

MEMOIRS of the

344

Tho' the Baths of Digne, as I have already said, had heal'd the Wound I receiv'd at the Fight of La Hogue, yet a Pain remain'd in my Leg, which at times prov'd very troublesome. I desir'd Leave of the Court to stay ashore fome time for my Cure. M. de Pontchartrain return'd me a very obliging Answer, and granted my Request, on Condition, that when I was in a Caon with the pacity to serve, I wou'd give him Notice of it.

TheCourt's Satisfacti-Count's Econduct.

> The following is a Letter I receiv'd from M. de Phelipeaux, upon the same Subject, a little after the Answer I had from M. de Pontchartrain.

Sir, MY Father must have told you how well the King is satisfy'd with your Conduct, and the Zeal you have discover'd for his Service. I am very forry for your Indisposition. I wish that it does not binder your Return to Sea. In the mean Time you must be careful not to take too much upon you.

Sign'd,

When I was cur'd of my Indispo- 1696. fition, I fent Notice of it to the Mini- 🗻 ster, who gave me the Command of a He has the Ship call'd the Happy Return. Not of another long after this, I had Orders to attend Ship. the Count d' Estrees, who was to to the Siege Command the Naval Army design'd of Barcelefor the Siege of Barcelona, of which the Duke de Vendome had the Direction. This Siege, which was remarkable both for the Vigor of our Attack, and for the furious Sallies which the Enemy made upon us, was very tedious, which oblig'd M. de Vendome to 1697. fend for the Gunners out of our Ships, and for the Officers to command them; and soon after he caus'dall the Soldiers to come ashore, of whom he form'd a Batallion, which mounted the Trenches in their turn as well as the Land Forces.

I REPAIR'D immediately to the Count de Luc, who commanded one of the Batallions of the Galleys. One Morning, the Bailiff de Noailles, who was to command the Trenches in Quality of Lieutenant General, had caus'd a great Breakfast to be prepar'd for the Officers. We were actually at Table HisUncom under the Shelter of the Capuchins at the sall Convent, when a Bomb from the of a Bomb 1697. the Place where we were Eating, and in a Moment every. Man fell flat on their Bellies to the Ground, till the Shell had burst. I was going to do the same, but observing that it fellupon foft Ground, into which it funk, I found there was no Danger, took my Place again very calmly at Table' without their perceiving it, and eat on, as if nothing had happened. When all the Gentlemen rose up again, they wonder'd to see that I had not chang'd my Situation, upon which I banter'd. them for their fruitless Precaution, and the Entertainment concluded with merry Jests upon that Article.

The City

MEAN Time the City was for capitulates. hard press'd, that it surrender'd at tength upon very honourable Terms, of which I shall not relate the Particulars, because 'tis foreign to my Subject. The Marines were put on The Count issent forth board again soon after, and I was sent out to get Intelligence.

He meets a Ship-load of Minim Fryars

Not far from the Coasts of Catalonia I met with a Spanish Ship laden with Minim Fryars, who, to the Number of near Three Hundred, were just come from a Town in Spain, where they had been to chuse their General. Tho? they had Passes, I carry'd them to M. d'Estrees, who said to me with a Smile, Wbat

What the Devil would you have me do with all these Minims? we shan't have Oil enough in the Army to keep them for Two Days. Upon this he order'd me to send them away with all Speed, saying they wou'd be a delicate Prize for the Algerines.

THE Fleet coming not long after to Toulon to unrig, the Marshal d'Estrees made me go on board a Ship call'd, The Trident, with Orders to sail to Genoa He sails to and Legborn, to take the Merchant Ships, which I found there, under my Convoy, and carry them to France. I was but eight Days in my Voyage. That I might lose no Time, I stay'd under sail before Genoa, and sent my Ship-Boat thither with a Letter for the French Conful, to know if there was any thing to be done there for the King's Service; but he sent me word, that there was nothing to do for the present.

FROM Genoa I steer'd my Course for And to Toulon, where I receiv'd an Order from Toulon. the King to go on board another Ship, call'd the Serious, which was the finest Sailor in the whole Navy. M. d' Estrees, who gave me this Order, had receiv'd another, at the same Time, for arming the Vigilant, and to put the Sieur Bidau on board, who was Captain of a Ship.

As

As Bidau was my Senior, and his Ship not so considerable as that to which I was order'd, he left no Stone unturn'd to have another Ship. He feem'd to take fuch Umbrage at it, that when he despair'd of carrying his Point by his own Interest, he work'd underhand, by the Interest of Women, who manag'd fo artfully, that they made the Count d' Estrees his Friend.

This Nobleman wou'd fain have oblig'd me, more than once, to give my Consent to an Exchange; and at last, after several Arguments Pro and Con, which did not promote our Agreement, the Court being desirous to fatisfy M. d' Estrees, made the Alteration themselves, which I all along refus'd, and likewise gave me the Trident, with Orders to Convoy some Merchant Ships as far as Cape Bon, and then to go before Barcelona, to receive the Orders of M. de Vendome.

I set out accordingly, and at my Arrival before Barcelona, found Orders from Court, which, by virtue of the general Peace, forbad me to stop any of the Enemy's Ships. I was also or-To Sardi- der'd to fail to Sardinia, to notify the wia to noti- Peace to the Viceroy, and to stay in those Parts to drive away the Enemy's Privateers. In pursuance of this Order I sail'd to Cagliari, where two Major-

ral Peace.

can Privateers unrigg'd after the News 1697

I brought them of the Peace.

Not far from hence, as I was almost over against the Island of St. kill'd on Peter, Thunder broke upon our Ship, Ship by about four o'Clock in the Morning, with so terrible a Clap, that it made the very Poultry, and the Sheep, cry out. When it was Day we found one of our Sailors stone dead upon the Prow of the Ship, with his Eyes quite open, and his Body in such a natural Attitude, that he feem'd as if alive. After having fearch'd him, and found not the least Contusion upon his Body, I caus'd him to be open'd, and no part of his Entrails seem'd to be out of order, so that undoubtedly he was stifled on the Spot by the Lightning.

WHILE we continued in these Parts, The Count I shot a great Fish, which the Fisher- froots a great Fish. men call Monge, it weigh'd above fourfcore hundred, and my Servants melted the Fat of it, out of which they extracted two Barrels of Oil, which they fold at Toulon for fifty Livres.

Some Days after this, while we were at Anchor with other French Ships, in the Gulph of Palmos, still upon the Coast of Sardinia, one of the Captains, A Captain whose Name was Richard, going in his like to be Ship-boat with a Sail, to take up some the over-

MEMOIRS of the, &c. 3*5*0.

home to Toulon.

1697. turn'd, upon which I immediately sent out mine to help him, so that nobody was drown'd; but the Captain was fo terrify'd, that he had much ado to come to himself. I stay'd in these Parts till M. de Franc, a Captain of a Ship, The Count's brought me Orders to come and lay up my Ship at Toulon, where I arriv'd in a few Days, and went Home to take some Refreshment.

End of the FIRST VOLUME.

BOOKS lately printed for J. PEMBERTON, at the Golden Buck against St. Dunstan's Church in Fleet-Street.

FOLIO.

HE Works of the most Reverend Dr. John Tillotson, late Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, in Three Vols. containing Two hundred fifty-four Sermons and Difcourses on several Occasions; together with the Rule of Faith. To which are annexed, Prayers composed by him for his own Use; a Discourse to his Servants before the Sacrament; and a Form of Prayer composed by him for the Use of King William. Together with three Tables to the whole: One of the Texts preach'd upon; another of the Places of Scripture occasionally explained; a third, an Alphabetical Table of Matters. The Ninth Edition. Price 2 1. 155.

BOOKS printed for

II. The Works of John Locke, Esq; In Three Volumes; containing, 1. An Essay on Human Understanding. In Four Books. 2. A Letter to the Right Reverend Edward Lord Bishop of Worcester, concerning some Passages relating to Mr. Locke's Essay of Human Understanding; in a late Discourse of his Lordship's in Vindication of the Trinity. 3. Mr. Locke's Reply to the Right Reverend the Bishop of Worcester's Anfwer to his Letter. 4. Mr. Locke's Reply to the Bishop of Worcester's Answer to his Second Letter. 5. Some Confiderations of the Consequences of the lowering of Interest, and raising the Value of Money. In a Letter sent to a Member of Parliament, 1691. 6. Short Observations on a printed Paper, entitled, For encouraging the Coining Silver Money in England, and after for keeping it here. 7. Farther Observations concerning raising the Value of Money, &c. 8. Two Treatifes of Government. 9. A Letter concerning Toleration. 10. A Second Letter concerning Toleration. 11. A Third Let-ter for Toleration. 15 the Author of the Third Letter concerning Toleration. 12. The Reasonableness of Christianity, as deliver'd in the Scriptares. 13. A Vindication of the Regionableness of flections. 14. A Second Vindication of the Reasonableness of Christianity. 15. Some Thoughts concerning Education. 16. A Paraphrase and Notes on the Epistles of St. Paul to the Galatians, I. and II Corintbians, Romans, and Epbesians. To which is prefix'd, An Essay for the understanding of St. Paul's Epistles, by consulting St. Paul himself. 17. Posthumous Works, viz. 1. Of the Conduct of the Understanding. 2. An Examination of P. Malebranche's Opinion of seeing all things in God. 3. A Discourse of Miracles. 4. Part of a Fourth Letter for Toleration. 5. Memoirs relating to the Life of Antbony, first Earl of Shaftesbury. 6. A new Method of a Common-Place-Book; written originally in French, and translated into English. 7. Some familiar Letters between Mr. Locke and several of his Friends. The Third Edition. Price 2 l. 15 s.

III. A Commentary upon the Historical Books of the Old Testament, viz. Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, Judges, Ruth, I Samuel, II Samuel, I Kirgs, II Kings, I Chronicles, II Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther. By the Right Reverend Father in God, Dr. Simon Patrick, late Lord Bishop.

BOOKS printed for

is added, a compleat Alphabetical Table. Price 2 l. 5 s.

IV. The Civil Law in its natural Order; together with the Publick Law. Written in French by Monsieur Domat, the late French King's Advocate in the Presidial Court of Clermont in France; and translated into English by William Strahan, LL. D. Advocate in Dostors Commons. With additional Remarks on some material Differences between the Civil Law and the Law of England. In Two Volumes. Price 2 l. 2 s.

V. The Works of Flavius Josephus, translated into English by Sir Roger L'Estrange, Kt. viz. 1. The Antiquities of the Jews, in Twenty Books. 2. Their Wars with the Romans, in Seven Books. 3. The Life of Josephus, written by himself. 4. His Book against Appian in Defence of the Antiquities of the Jews, in two Parts. 5. The Martyrdom of the Maccabees. As also, 6. Philo's Embassy from the Jews at Alexandria to Caius Caligula. All carefully revis'd, and compar'd with the original Greek. To which are added, Two Discourses, and Everal Remarks and Observations upon Fosephus. Together with Maps, Sculptares, and accurate Indexes. The Fosirth Edition, With the Addition of a new Man of

J. PEMBERTON.

Palestine, the Temple of Ferusalem, and the Genealogy of Herod the Great, taken from Villalpandus, Reland, &c.

Price 1 l. 7 s. 6 d.

VI. The Compleat Geographer; or, The Chorography and Topography of all the known Parts of the Earth. To which is premised an Introduction to Geography, and a natural History of the Earth and the Elements. Containing a true and perfect Account of, 1. The Situation, Bounds and Extent, Climate, Soil, Productions, History, Trade, Manufactures: The Religion, Manners and Customs of the People; with the Revolutions, Conquests, and other Changes of all the Countries on the Earth. 2. The several Provinces that every Kingdom or State is divided into. 3. The principal Cities and most confiderable Towns in the World, the Magnitude, principal Buildings, Antiquity, present State, Trade, History, &c. As also the Situation, with the Distance and Bearing from other Towns. Together with all Pieces of Natural History. The whole containing the Substance of at letst an hundred and fifty Books of madern Travels, faithfully abstracted and digested into local Order; whereby the present State of the most remote Countries is truly shewn,

BOOKS printed for

of former Writers wholly expung'd. To which are added, Maps of every Country, fairly engraven on Copper according to the latest Surveys and newest Discoveries, most engrav'd by Herman Moll. The Fourth Edition. Wherein the Description of Asia, Africa, and America are compos'd a-new from the Relations of Travellers of the best Repute, especially such as have appear'd within thirty or forty Years last past. Folio. Price 1 l.

VII. Cyclopædia: Or, An Universal Dictionary of Arts and Sciences. Containing the Definitions of the Terms, and an Account of the Things fignified thereby, in the several Arts, both Liberal and Mechanical, and the feveral Sciences, Human and Divine; the Figures, Kinds, Properties, Productions, Preparations and Uses of Things Natural and Artificial: The Rife, Progress and State of Things Ecclesiastical, Civil, Military and Commerical; with the several Systems, Sects, Opinions, &c. among Philosophers, Divines, Mathematicians, Physicians, Antiquaries, Criticks, & The whole intended as a Course of ascient and modern Learning. Compiled from the best Authors, Dictionaries, Journals, Memoirs, Transactions, Ephemerides, &c. in feveral Languages. In Two Vole

J. PEMBERTON.

Vols. By E. Chambers, Gent. Price 41. 15 5.

VIII. Mr. Jeremy Collier's Supplement and Appendix to the Two English Volumes in Folio, of the Great Historical, Geographical, Genealogical and Poetical Dictionary. Being a curious Miscellany of Sacred and Profane History, &c. Price of the Two Vols. 3 l. IOS.

IX. The whole Works of the late Reverend and Learned Dr. Scott. Containing The Christian Life, in Four Parts. As also his several Volumes of Discourses. In Two Volumes. Price 1 l. 12 s. N. B. The Christian Life may be bad feparate.

X. The Works of the late Reverend and Learned Dr. Isaac Barrow, Master of Trinity College in Cambridge. Being all his English Works. In Three Vols. Publish'd by his Grace Dr. John Tillotson, late Lord Archbishop of Canter-

bury. Price 2 l.

XI. An Institute of the Laws of England; or, the Laws of England in their Natural Order, according to common Use. Pulsish'd for the Direction of Young Beginners, or Students in the Law; and of others that desire to have a general Netion of our Common and Statute Laws. In Four Books

BOOKS printed for, &c.

Thomas Wood, LL. D. and Barrister at Law. The Fourth Edition, Corrected. Price 1 l. 2 s. 6 d.

XII. The Works of the late Learned. Mr. John Selden. In Latin and English. In Six Volumes. To which is prefix'd, the Author's Life, Prefaces, and Index. By David Wilkins, D. D. Archdeacon of Suffolk, &c. Price 7 l. 7s.

XIII. The Scripture Chronology demonstrated by Astronomical Calculations. Illustrated with Ten accurate Maps, and Twenty Copper Plates, &c. By Arthur Bedford, M. A. Price 1 1.5 s.

Memorials of the English Affairs, from the supposed Expedition of Brute to this Island, to the End of the Reign of King James I. By Sir Bulstrode Whitlocke, Lord Commissioner of the Great Seal, &c. Publish'd from the Original Manuscript, by William Penn, Esq; Governor of Pensylvania. To which is presix'd, the Author's Life, and a Presiace by James Welwood, M. D. Price

