

Here are two remarkable works, that not only deserve but demand notice, encouragement, and reward. Both treat of one matter, yet the mode of handling is as opposite as the poles. Mr. Cunningham gives us the framework of his book, the anatomy, the bones; Mr. Hunt says of the flesh, the muscle, the complexion—in a word, the breathing form. The titles of the books are sufficiently characteristic of their respective contents. We can conceive no companion more welcome to an enlightened foreigner visiting this metropolis than Mr. Cunningham, with his laborious research, his scrupulous exactness, his alphabetical arrangement, and his authorities from every imaginable source. Upon the other hand, we will allow no higher enjoyment for a rational Englishman than to stroll leisurely through this marvellous town arm-in-arm with Mr. Hunt. As a piece of severe, complete, and finished structure, the "Handbook" is not to be surpassed; but for a specimen of exquisite and most recommendable us to the "Town." The function which we would draw between these two works Mr. Cunningham himself performs in the first lines of his preface:—

"This work on London is now offered to the public with some diffidence, because it has not only engrossed much of my thought and anxiety, but has cost me a very painful amount of minute labour, and among unexamined papers often difficult of access, and never very clear or legible, the chance of opening a new source of intelligence."

We can easily believe it; even the title of the book is a trouble and commends the perseverance; but precisely what Mr. Cunningham's undertaking has been, to him, the other undertaking has not been to Mr. Hunt. The author of the "Town" takes upon us to say, has made no such apprenticeship of his leisure as here indicated; he suffered no wear and tear of intellect and spirit in the gathering of his rich materials; has never enjoyed the painful satisfaction of hoarding up the small contributions wrung from dull vestrymen and their duller records. The charm of Mr. Leigh Hunt's book is, that not an hour's drudgery is disclosed from beginning to end. What he gives us are the outpourings of a mind enriched with the most agreeable knowledge; and he has strolled in love and happy idleness along the golden shores of literature. In walking through London fresh from his book, not Mr. Hunt was amazed to find so much that he knew of streets and sites, and was presented to the eye. Beyond the possession of such knowledge there is but one greater delight—to communicate it freely.

For author or reader there are few occupations more satisfactory than the contemplation of the manners and customs, the transactions and the actors, of the past. The best feeling of man alone engaged in dwelling upon the varied movements, good and evil, of the human breast, of which there survives for us simply the transmitted record. As we think kindly of the departed foe, so we reflect tenderly over the buried past, however discordant its elements may have been with those which constitute the living present. It is astonishing how much bigotry in those who have preceded us will be tolerated by those who are merciless against even the remotest intemperance on the part of their contemporaries. In this consists the fascination of volumes like those before us. Time has dissipated the passion which agitated the generations of the great, and left behind it a calm, upon which the men of every era sit side by side, and may go on until the cities and grow renowned of long ages. Mr. Leigh Hunt is no exception.

He is a man, who has taken up age after age, and it reassumes its natural state; by one would have been a man had he moved amongst the men whose names he has fancied. It is difficult to repress a smile as here and there we light upon a reverent attempt to excite in our unscrupulous progenitors the faults which, if performed to-day, would be denounced, without mercy, by the same well-meaning and ingenious pen. Mayday was a glorious holiday for the people in the time of the Cavaliers. Puritanism, as we all know, put an end to it. What Mr. Hunt and his friends would have said to the late Sir Andrew Agnew, or to any other gentleman, is not to be doubted upon highly conscientious grounds. To curtail the pleasures of the world is a task which a tolerably shrewd guess.

This very agreeable writer, in his mind, draw good from evil, and, in his pen, between Peters, dead, gone, and publicly recognized living member of our own society. He acknowledged that the civil wars have saved the healthy and harmless amusement of the population; but we are warned that "we have many advantages by the thoughtfulness of those times to quarrel with their mistakes, and must have no doubt that the progress of knowledge to which they gave an impulse will bring back advantages they omitted by the way." He said, Mr. Hunt, and we will not do less, whilst you challenge consideration, and let us all learn moderation towards each other.

Justice to Mr. Hunt's book must be rendered by a passing notice of its contents. It consists of upwards of 600 pages, and of the whole number there is not one which does not glow with interest and will not bear transcribing. The production itself is a series of dissolving views, all pictures from the life, and representing scenes in which every inhabitant of the metropolis has an interest far greater than he suspects till he is taught it. Wordsworth, in one of his simplest and most touching poems, speaks of the effect produced upon a countess by the notes of a thrush chirping from its nest at the corner of Wood-street, Chesham. In a similar instant the girl is transported to the home of her childhood, and reassumes her early innocence. Something analogous to the feeling is conveyed to the companion of Mr. Hunt, when, by a touch, fills Whitehall with the grandeur of the days of Wolsey, or transforms the city and into a pleasant way between the city and Westminster, with no meaner habitations than the inns of Bishops, who "ventured to live by the water side, because they were held sacred persons whom nobody would hurt." The spirit of the looker-on is with London in its infancy, and is amused and instructed by all the novelty revealed. Let us travel with Mr. Leigh Hunt through a well-known street or two, and say whether it be so or not. A minute or two takes us to St. Paul's.

Mr. Cunningham, with that admirable particularity for which his "Handbook" is remarkable, is careful to acquaint the ignorant on such points as the cost of admission to our great cathedral is as follows:—

To view the monuments and body of the	s. d.
Whispering gallery and the inside gallery	0 2
Bar	2 6
Library	1 6
Model room	1 0
Clock	0 2
Crypt and Nelson's monument	1 6

Total
The informed reader, naturally shocked at such a bill of charges for such a place, thinks at once to put and wonders what would be the consequence? Mr. Leigh Hunt enables us to go to St. Paul's, says that gentlemen, "through the whole period of its existence, at least reign of Henry III., was a thoroughfare and a 'den of thieves.' In the reign of Edward III. the King complains to the Bishop that 'the eating room of the Canons had become the office and workplace of fustians and the resort of shameless women.' In the reign of Queen Mary the Common Council passed an act subjecting all offenders to divers pains and penalties; for not only by this time were beer, bread, fish, flesh, and porters' loads sacrilegiously carried through the church, but mules, horses, and other cattle availed themselves equally of the same sort out. How effectual the statute in question proved may be gathered from the fact that in the reign of Elizabeth 'Idlers and drunkards were indulged in lying and sleeping at the choir door, whilst other usages, too nauseous for description, were also frequent.' 'The middle of St. Paul's,' continues Mr. Hunt, 'was the Bond-street of this period, and remained so till the time of the Commonwealth. The loungers were called Paul's walkers.' Bacon, in his youth, was such a buck. 'To complete these urbanities the church was the resort of pickpockets. Bishop Corbet, a poetical wit of the time of Charles I., sums up its character as the

"Where all our Brittain sinners weave and walk."

Only one reformation had taken place in it since the complaint made by Edward III.; no woman was to be found there, at least not in the crowd. The practice of 'walking and talking' at St. Paul's appears to have revived under James II., probably in connexion with Catholic wishes; for there was an act of the 1st of William and Mary, by which transgressors forfeited 20*l.* for every offence; and what is remarkable, the bishop threatened to enforce this act so late as the year 1725; 'the custom,' says Mr. Malcolm, 'had become so very prevalent.'

Such are the changes wrought in time. A hundred years ago the dignitaries of St. Paul's threatened the public with a p^unal action because the latter fail in respect to the sanctity of the cathedral. To-day the same public visit the dignitaries with their pious indignation because the latter degrade the holy institution committed to their keeping to the level of a theatre, a show-house, and a twopenny exhibition. "Dining with Duke Humphrey" is a familiar proverb. Not so familiar, perhaps, is its origin. "The proverb," Mr. Hunt tells us,

"Has survived to the present day, owing to a supposed tomb of Humphrey, the good Duke of Gloucester, which was popular with the poorer frequenters of the place. They had a custom of strewing herbs before it, sprinkling it with water. The tomb, according to Stow, was not Humphrey's, but that of Sir John Beauchamp, one of the House of Warwick. Men who strolled about for want of a dinner were familiar enough with this tomb, and were therefore said to dine with Duke Humphrey."

We have scarcely space sufficient to give a glimpse here and there of the scenes evoked by the pen of Mr. Hunt. For a full view the reader must refer to the volumes themselves. He will not regret the trouble. Before we leave St. Paul's, however, it is worth while to glance at the preaching going on there during the reign of the Tudors.

"In that reign," writes Mr. Hunt, "Paul's cross was the scene of a very remarkable series of contradictions. The Government, under Henry VIII., preached for and against the same doctrines in religion. Mary furiously attempted to revive them, and they were finally denounced by Elizabeth. Wolsey began in 1521 with fulminating, by command of the Pope, against 'one Martin Lutherus' (Luther). The denunciation was made by Fisher (afterwards beheaded for denying the King's supremacy) but Wolsey sat by, in his usual state, ceased and caparped with the Pope's ambassador on one side of him, and the Emperor's on the other. During the sermon a collection of Luther's books was burnt in the churchyard, which ended my Lord Cardinal went home to dinner with all the other prelates. About 10 years afterwards the preacher at Paul's cross received an order from the King 'to teach and declare to the people that, under the Pope, nor any of his predecessors, were anything more than the simple Bishops of Rome.' On the occasion of Mr. Hunt's discourses were ordered to veer directly round, which produced two attempts to assassinate the preacher in sermon time; and the moment Elizabeth came to the throne the divines began recommending the very opposite tenets, and the Pope was finally rejected."

Elizabeth afterwards attended here a thanksgiving sermon for the defeat of the Armada; on which occasion a coach was first seen in England—the one she used. The last sermon attended there by the Sovereign was during the reign of her successor; but discourses continued to be delivered up to the time of the civil wars, when, after being turned to account by the Puritans for ascent at the pulpit was demolished by order of Parliament.

What a lesson in a score of lines! Take it to heart, Orangemen and Ribandmen, Exeter-hall and St. Jarlath's, the Rev. Dr. O'Sullivan and the Rev. Dr. M'Hale! Remember upon what slender threads the truth has hung of old, and seek to establish it by ceasing to war like furies, and by aiming to commune like reasonable men, able to quarrel and needful of much mutual forbearance. What a mockery of Christianity is this exhibited by our forefathers in God's name at St. Paul's cross! What think you candid posterity will think and say of us? We have not thought, it may be, of the matter. It is time to do so.

We might linger for hours about St. Paul's, but we are called to Fleet-street, where, in Bolt-court, no smaller a personage than Doctor Johnson himself awaits us. How the Doctor loved Fleet-street, selecting his residences for the greater part of his life in snug nooks leading out of it, which afforded him all the quietness he needed for intellectual purposes, and enabled him as it were with a bow to meet the tide of humanity, along which it was an intense delight to be borne. Fetter-lane, Boswell-court, Gough-square, Inner Temple-lane, Johnson's-court, and Bolt-court—such are the names of the Doctor's places of abode. He would have pined at Brompton and Putney; he was in Epsom in sight of his coffee-house, and jostling with the crowd.

We have been much too apt to associate the notion of overbearing tyranny with the name and character of the great lexicographer. It was a capital joke of one of the Doctor's contemporaries to assert the great man's claims to a pension as soon as Doctor Shebbeare had secured his grant. "What had been given to the she-bear," it was said, "could hardly be denied to the he-bear." Another of Johnson's contemporaries was nearer the mark, when he declared that the man had nothing of the bear but his skin. In truth, the gentle heart throbbed beneath the rugged, uncouth mass. A thousand instances make known the fact. There is nothing more graceful in Mr. Leigh Hunt's book than his vindication of this literary chieftain, with whose views in many respects the republican spirit of Mr. Hunt refuses to sympathise.

"As to Johnson's pompous manner," says our author, "the most excusable part of it originated, doubtless, in his having decided opinions; the rest may have been an instinct of self-defence, arising from his shaggy figure, not without a sense of the dignity of his calling. He certainly lost nothing by it on the whole. At all events, one is willing to think the best of what was accompanied by so much excellence. Affectation it was not; for nobody despised pretension of any kind more than he did. Johnson was a sort of born bishop in his way, with high judgments and cathedral notions lordling it in his mind, and ex cathedra he accordingly spoke."

Boswell tells us that at his very first interview with his idol at the house of Davies the bookseller, "He was satisfied that though there was a roughness in his manner there was no ill-nature in his disposition." Ill-nature, indeed! Why then, if not in this very Fleet-street that he took up a poor forlorn girl in his bulky arm, put her to bed in his own house, and restored her to health and her friends, "an action sufficient," as Mr. Hunt affirms, "to redeem a million of the asperities of temper occasioned by disease and to stamp him, in spite of his bigotry, a good Christian?" Was it not in Fleet-street that beggars stood, interposing the good man's way between his house and the tavern at which he dined, knowing well enough that to the last expence they would receive the silver in his pocket?

Whilst he was living in Gough-square he wrote part of his dictionary; he was very poor at the time; but, if we are to believe his servant, "Although he had little for himself, he frequently sent money to Mr. Shiel's when in distress," Mr. Shiel being one of the helpers in the dictionary. Illwill could not possibly exist in the bosom of the man who nursed, according to Mrs. Thrale, "whole nests of people in his house, where the lame, the blind, the sick, and the sorrowful found a sure retreat from all the evils whence his little income could secure them." It was the habit of the Doctor, during his intimacy with the Thrales, to spend the middle of the week with his friends at Streatham, keeping his protégés upon a settled allowance in Fleet-street.

"Every Saturday," says Mrs. Thrale, "he would return to his numerous family, giving them three good dinners and his company before he came back to us on the Monday night, and treating them with the same or, perhaps, more ceremonious civility than he would have done by as many people of fashion; making the Holy Scripture thus the rule of his conduct, and only expecting salvation as he was able to obey its precepts."

It was a theory of the Doctor's, that a man who could not make himself happy in a tavern could be happy nowhere. His reasoning was unanswerable. In a private house, he contended, let the folks be as friendly as they please, there must always be some care and anxiety; at a tavern there is none.

"You are sure you are welcome; and the more noise you make, the more trouble you give, the more good things you call for; the welcomer you are. No servants will attend you with the slowness which waiters do, who are incited by the prospect of an immediate reward in proportion as they please."

Dr. Johnson accordingly knew every tavern and coffee-house in Fleet-street. One is named after him, but it was probably his experience at the Mitre, which he chiefly visited, that induced him to pronounce "a tavern chair the throne of human felicity." It was at the Mitre that Boswell first passed a tavern night with his hero. "We had a good supper," says Boswell, "and port-wine, of which he then sometimes drank a bottle." They sat till between 1 and 2 in the morning. He told Boswell that "he generally went abroad at about 4 in the afternoon, and seldom came home till 2 in the morning. I took the liberty to ask if he did not think it wrong to live thus, and not to make more use of his great talents. He owned it was a bad habit."

What use Johnson did make of his talents, however, has never been more happily described than by Mr. Hunt in his present work. "He advanced," says our author,

"By the power of his conversation, the strictness of his veracity, and the respect he exacted towards his presence, what may be called the personal dignity of literature. The consequence has been not exactly what he expected, but certainly what the great interests of knowledge require, and Johnson has assisted men with whom he little thought of co-operating, in setting the claims of truth and beneficence above all others."

To do even as much as this were worth living for.

Where Farringdon-street now stands, at the bottom of Ludgate-hill, the River Fleet formerly ran, and was navigable.

"In Fleet-market is Seacoal-lane, so called from the barges that landed coal there; and Turnagain lane, at the bottom of which the unadvised passenger found himself by the water compelled to retrace his steps."

A hundred years ago the channel was partially built over, but a fetid ditch (of which more anon) at that time ran from Fleet-market, and emptied itself into the river. In the market, and before the Fleet-prison, which has been removed within the memory of our youngest reader, there was an exhibition at the time we speak of, perhaps unrivalled in the metropolis at that or any other time; viz., a louging establishment for unemployed clergymen. Passengers were invited to walk into the prison in order to be married, just as travellers at Ramsgate or Dover are invited to follow the inviter to the Blue Dragon or the Cat and Gridiron.

The passengers entered, the ceremony was performed, and the whole party retired to a neighbouring gin shop in order to behave handsomely by the rev. gentleman. A sign board was on the wall near the prison representing a man and woman with joined hands, and bearing the inscription, "Marriages performed here." The touters were of the lowest order, the parson, as may be supposed, not of the highest. He is described by one who complains of having been often molested on his road with, "Will you please, Sir, to walk in and be married?" as "a squalid, profligate figure, clad in a tattered plaid nightgown, with a fiery face, and ready to couple you for a dram of gin or roll of tobacco." It was stated on evidence that between the 19th day of October, 1704, and the 12th of February, 1705, 2,954 marriages were celebrated after this fashion in the Fleet-prison, besides others of which no register remained. "The neighbourhood," our present chronicler states, "at length complained, and the abuse was put an end to by the Marriage Act, to which it gave rise."

Mr. Peter Cunningham is full of interesting matter with respect to this locality, concise and condensed as is his custom. From him we learn that of the eminent persons confined at various times in the Fleet-prison, are to be noted Lord Surrey, the poet, who described his gaol as "a noisome place, with a pestilent atmosphere;" Bishop Hooker, the martyr; Dr. Donne, for marrying Sir George More's daughter without her father's knowledge; Lord Viscount Falkland, "for sending a challenge;" William Prynne, for writing his Histriomastix; Wycherley, the poet; and Penn, the founder of Pennsylvania. Of the great folks who married here are to be reckoned the son of Lady Mary Wortley Montagu, and Churchill, the poet.

The Fleet-ditch in former days furnished a subject for poetical demonstration, as it supplies even at the moment of our writing matter for every indignant prose. "At a time"—writes a correspondent as recently as the 2d of the present month—

"When deadly sickness is attacking the lives of numbers in this metropolis, I offer no apology for endeavouring to direct attention to the exposed condition of the Fleet-ditch, in the neighbourhood of Saffron-hill. I am certain that many of your readers will scarcely credit that at the present time, this gigantic sewer is permitted to pursue its poisonous course for some distance (uncovered) through one of the most dense populations in London."

We are certain that many of our readers will be very much surprised to learn, that there is a Fleet-ditch at all. Vile as is the nastiness which flows underground in the neighbourhood referred to on its wholesome and purifying march to the Thames, the good citizen knows nothing of the sickening misery to which his forefathers were liable from the existence of the same nuisance under much more disgusting circumstances. "Fleet-ditch," says Mr. Cunningham,

"Was that part of the town-ditch in front of the city-wall between Bridewell-dock and Holborn, so called from the Fleet, abourne or brook which runs into the town-ditch, by, I believe, Fleet-lane, and so by Bridewell, into the Thames at Blackfriars-bridge."

After the great fire the ditch was converted into a creek, and called "the New Canal." In good time the creek became stagnant, and received every description of garbage and offal. All attempts to clean it out were ineffectual. Boats and barges had formerly unloaded their cargoes at Holborn; now, according to Ben Jonson, the

"The hounds, houghs, entrails, and the hides of dogs" stopped the way. It was not until the time of Cromwell, whose practical good sense seems to have communicated itself to his subjects in more than one direction, that an order was issued for the cleansing of the sewer, and for removing all the obstructions that made it noisome and intolerable to the people. Till the time of the great fire, however, the nuisance continued, though in an abated form. After that event the ditch was deepened between Holborn and the Thames, and barges once more found an unimpeded way to the former place. The "New Canal" was a grand affair after its kind. Its sides were built of stone and brick; wooden railings protected it, and wharves and landing places gave a business-like air to its otherwise improved appearance. Moreover the speculation cost 27,777*l.*, besides the money given for the ground upon which the wharves were built. The concern, nevertheless, was a failure; the toll was high, the traffic small, and the "New Canal" quickly degenerated again into the foulest of common sewers. We had an intimation just now of the contents of the Fleet-ditch in Ben Jonson's time. We are sorry to trouble the reader with a sight of the contents in the later days of Swift. "Sweepings," says the Dean—

"—from butchers' stalls, dung, guts, and blood,
"Drown'd puppies, stinking sprats, all drench'd in mud,
"Dead cats and turnip tops come tumbling down the flood."

Since there was nothing to be done with the Fleet-ditch as an open channel, it was wisely resolved, before the erection of the present Mansion-house, to shut it up; not altogether, we are sorry to say, as appears from the correspondent's letter already noticed. Where the Lord Mayor now magnificently entertains politicians of every order formerly stood Stocks-market. Stocks-market made way for the Mansion-house, the Fleet-ditch made way for Stocks-market, Stocks-market again retires to give place to the broad and healthy street of Farringdon, and we have now only to hope that the city authorities, whoever they may be, will educe the moral for which this brief and dirty history is mainly given, and, in the words of a sufferer, remove the last "of the abominations of the place," and not allow for another hour "a huge sewer which receives nearly the whole of the refuse of the northern portion of London to remain uncovered" in the presence of the danger with which the city is environed.

Our space is drawing to a close; but we cannot shake hands with the reader on such a spot as this. We will pay a brief visit together to a quaint and cleaner place or two, and then part company for the present. In Fleet-street, between the market and Shoe-lane, once lived Hardham, the keeper of a snuff shop. He is worth a call.

"He was numberer at Drury-lane Theatre, that is to say, the person who counted the number of people in the house, from a hole over the top of the stage, a practice now discontinued. Whether this employment led him to number snuffs, as well as men, we cannot say, but he was the first who gave them their distinctions that way. Lovers of "The pungent gains of titillating dust"

"are indebted to him for the famous compound entitled 37. 'Being pasciopately fond of theatrical entertainments,' says his biographer, 'he was seldom without embryo Richards and Hotspur strutting and bellowing in his dining-room, or in the parlour behind his shop. The latter of these apartments was adorned with heads of most of the persons celebrated for dramatic excellence; and to these he frequently referred in the course of his instructions.'"

Hardham had once failed in business, but his integrity was unimpeachable. "He was often entrusted with the care of paying little annual stipends to unfortunate women, and others who were in equal want of relief." He continued such annuities long after they had been stopped by the death or caprice of those who first supplied them, although the receivers were persuaded to the last that the original channel was still flowing. Hardham died in 1772. By his will he bequeathed the interest of 20,000*l.* to a female acquaintance, and at her death he ordered that the principal should go to the poor of his native city, Chichester: Well done old numberer! Such spirits as thine animate the scene long after they have quitted it. Happy we who are permitted to record thy works of love and charity!

In Surrey-street, Strand, once dwelt another spirit, a man who had something to do with theatres also, and who made his will too before he died. Reader, look in! You see a fine gentleman finely dressed, a man of the world, and a foolish lover of rank and fashion although he has a knowledge of mankind, and a sense of wit that should hold him high up above such vanities. Hush! He has a visitor, evidently a foreigner, a small man with a lean body—a face full of angles and lines—but an eye that admits of no doubt. You have heard of him before. The host is Congreve, the guest Voltaire. Listen! Congreve speaks of his works as of tricks that are beneath him, and hints to his visitor that he must visit him on no other terms than upon that of a gentleman, who leads a life of plainness and simplicity. Mark and enjoy the noble answer of Voltaire! "Had you been so unfortunate, Mr. Congreve, as to be a mere gentleman, I should never have come to see you." Are you not stronger, reader, for the lesson and the sight?

One moment longer. After years of blindness and gout, Congreve, the man of fashion, dies—the ruling passion strong in death. He lays in state in the Jerusalem Chamber, he is buried in Westminster Abbey, and a monument is erected there to his memory by Henrietta, Duchess of Marlborough. What could the man of fashion wish more? It was a costly monument, however, for it cost poor Congreve 10,000*l.* His vanity induced him to leave his substance to a fine lady who did not want it, although the relations whom he left behind him were in positive distress. The Duchess bought with part of the money a diamond necklace that came to 7,000*l.*, and for this Congreve had through life scraped his shillings together with what Johnson calls a most "attentive parsimony;" his nearest kin meanwhile starving! We think of the aforesaid Hardham, and take consolation! The brilliant plays of Congreve have a cold lustre of heartlessness upon them that charm whilst they fail to warm you into admiration. They reflect the heartlessness of his own soul. "Everybody, however," finely and humanely says Leigh Hunt, "is innocent in some corner of the mind, and has faith in something;" and Congreve, who could not feel for his own blood, wept in serious verse over queens and marquises, and left elegies for the rich if he left not a sixpence to the poor.

THE SITE OF ANCIENT LONDON.—When Sir Christopher Wren began to build the new St. Paul's, in digging for a foundation, he came to a layer of Saxon graves lined with chalk, some in stone coffins; and at some distance below, the bodies of the British, only lapped in woollen shrouds, fastened with pins of hard wood, most probably box-wood. In the same row, yet deeper (this was 13 feet and more), were the ashes of the Romans, in urns—Britons and Romans together—the conquerors and the conquered, both vanquished. Lower than those graves stood the foundation of old St. Paul's, resting on very close pot-earth; and still lower, nothing but dry sand, sometimes mixed unequally, but mostly so loose that it would pass through the fingers; then water and sand mixed with periwinkles and other sea shells—this was about the level of low-water mark. The gradual rise of the site of London by the formation of shoals, &c., will be readily understood by the above account. It grew by natural causes, and at the time of the arrival of the Romans was probably a rude British stronghold, defended by earthworks, and backed by thick woods towards the north, and surrounded on other sides by an immense extent of water, amid which the present course of the Thames could scarcely be defined.—The Builder.

BRITISH ARCHAEOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.—Yesterday the members of the association paid a third visit to the city for the purpose of inspecting some of those records of past ages of which we are very much accustomed to conceive by faith alone in some Handbook of London, instead of judging for ourselves by ocular demonstration. The place of meeting was Crosby Hall, which still, in the heart of the busy city, shames the debased architecture of the present day. The great hall, the council and throne rooms, now alone remain of this magnificent building, which has alike been the silent spectator of the machinations of the Protector Richard for the throne and the philosophic musings of the great Sir Thomas More, though degraded since to a wool warehouse, but is happily now again restored to somewhat of its pristine beauty. When the company were assembled Mr. Pettigrew introduced Mr. Bernal, who is president this year, and that gentleman in a few sentences gracefully expressed the pleasure he felt at the compliment paid him. The Rev. Thomas Hugo, senior curate of St. Botolph, then read an interesting paper on Crosby Hall and the historical associations connected with it; and after seeing the council room and the throne room, which have also been very well restored, the party went through a hard day's work in fulfilling the programme sketched out for them. First on the list came the church of St. Helen's, hard by Crosby Hall. This singular church consists of two in one—one being on the site of a church built in honour of Helena, the mother of Constantine; and the other the sacred edifice belonging to a priory of Benedictine nuns founded in 1212 by William Fitzwilliam, a goldsmith. A niche is shown in one of the walls of the church with a row of open arches, which communicated with the crypt or cells below, by which means it is imagined that the nuns, when undergoing punishment by incarceration, heard mass in the church above. Here lie buried, under a stately monument, with effigies of himself and his wife, Sir John Crosby, and also Sir William Pickering, whom rumour assigns to be one of the numerous suitors for the hand of the Virgin Queen. The Rev. J. E. Cox, vicar of St. Helen's, performed efficiently the part of Cicerone. The church of St. Andrew Undershaft, so called from the may-pole which was annually raised in the street near, was next visited. The principal interest is centred in the monument of Stowe, the quaint, but, par excellence, the chronicler of London. The church was newly done up last year, and its glorious east window, containing full-length portraits of the Kings and Queens from Edward VI. down to Charles II., its gilded roof, frescoed walls, and fine proportions, form a brilliant and imposing coup d'œil. St. Botolph church contains little worthy of notice except a picture of Charles I., reported to be by Vandyke, in which the King resembles very much the glorious picture by that artist of him on his white horse. The day was concluded by burrowing down below the surface of the earth into a very beautiful crypt, under a cabinet-maker's shop at the corner of Leadenhall-street. It very much resembles the one under Gerrard Hall which has been sacrificed for the city improvements, but it is thought by some to be of rather an earlier date. Various origins are assigned to it—either that it was merely a domestic crypt, as was the one at Gerrard Hall, or that of a church dedicated to St. Michael. It is still very much choked up with rubbish, but the accumulation of years had been dug away from one of the pillars to the base to show where the floor once was. There is every indication, also, of the vault having been more extensive, but enough is visible to show that it must have been a noble undercroft, and we hope that it may long be spared the devastating effects of city improvements.

MEMORIAL TABLETS IN LONDON.—The Council of the Society of Arts have just erected six new memorial tablets on houses which are of historic interest, as having been occupied by celebrated men. The residences of an Emperor, two statesmen, a philosopher, and two artists have been thus distinguished. These china plaques will now be found on front of 15, Buckingham-street, Strand, where Peter the Great lived for a short time; on 25, Arlington-street, for many years the residence of Sir Robert Walpole; on 14, Savile-row, where Sheridan lived; on 35, St. Martin's-street, Leicester-square, for some time Sir Isaac Newton's home; on 36, Castle street, Oxford-street, where James Barry, the painter, received the statesman Burke; and on 30, Leicester square, a new building occupied by Archbishop Tennyson's School, which stands on the site of Hogarth's home.

M. Chair-staining in time-jug.
S. Boys falling.

M. Temple Gardens, with account of people looking over the walls.

Half-way House.

E. Road from London.
E. Road from London—Booth.

THE THAMES FROZEN OVER AT RICHMOND.

RESTORATION OF THE ANCIENT THOROUGHFARE FROM WESTMINSTER TO LONDON.

62. H. 12

L O N D O N.

EDITED BY CHARLES KNIGHT.

VOLUME I.

PUBLISHED BY CHARLES KNIGHT & CO., LUDGATE STREET.

1841.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME I.

WITH

THE NAMES OF THE AUTHORS OF EACH PAPER.

	Page
INTRODUCTION	C. KNIGHT 1
I.—THE SILENT HIGHWAY	" 1
II.—CLEAN YOUR HONOUR'S SHOES	" 47
III.—PAUL'S CROSS	G. L. CRAIK 33
IV.—THE TABARD	J. SAUNDERS 57
V.—LONDON BRIDGE	G. L. CRAIK 73
VI.—MIDSUMMER-EVE	C. KNIGHT 97
VII.—ST. MARY OVERIES	J. SAUNDERS 113
VIII.—STREET NOISES	C. KNIGHT 129
IX.—ROMAN LONDON	G. L. CRAIK 145
X.—THE OLD SPRING-TIME IN LONDON	J. SAUNDERS 169
XI.—THE PARKS	W. WEIR 185
XII.—THE PARKS	" 205
XIII.—UNDERGROUND	J. C. PLATT and J. SAUNDERS 225
XIV.—SUBURBAN MILESTONES	C. KNIGHT 241
XV.—LAMBETH PALACE	J. SAUNDERS 257
XVI.—THE ROMAN REMAINS	G. L. CRAIK 281
XVII.—PICCADILLY	W. WEIR 297
XVIII.—CROSBY PLACE	J. SAUNDERS 317
XIX.—OLD WHITEHALL	" 333
XX.—NEW WHITEHALL	" 349
XXI.—BEN JONSON'S LONDON	C. KNIGHT 365
XXII.—BEN JONSON'S LONDON	" 381
XXIII.—RANELAGH AND VAUXHALL	J. SAUNDERS 397
XXIV.—STREET SIGHTS	C. KNIGHT 413
XXV.—THE MONUMENT	J. SAUNDERS 429

In the Introduction, or rather Prospectus, of 'LONDON,' we have said—"If the encouragement of the public should enable this work to be carried forward to something like a general completeness, its miscellaneous character may be reduced into system by chronological and topographical Indexes." That encouragement has been bestowed; and the Editor ventures therefore to hope that the plan which he conceived of producing a new work on London, "wholly different from any which has preceded it," has been carried out in a manner which may enable him to look to its completion within moderate limits, when its "miscellaneous character" will appear not wholly without a plan. In the mean while, the following Analytical Table of Contents will be of some assistance to those readers who may desire to use the volume for reference.

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS.

I.—THE SILENT HIGHWAY.

	PAGE		PAGE
Gower the Poet's Meeting with Richard II.	1	Royal Processions on the Thames	9
Illuminated Manuscript in the British Museum, with ancient Representation of London	2	The Works of John Taylor, the Water Poet	10
William Fitz-Stephen's 'Description of London'	3	John Taylor's Quarrel with William Fennor	11
The Thames	3	The Bankside	11
Water Quintain	4	Taylor's Complaint of the Introduction of Coaches	12
Water Tournaments	4	D'Avenant's Frenchman's Description of the Thames	13
John Lydgate's 'London Lyckpeny'	5	Fishing in the Thames at London	14
London Bridge	5	D'Avenant's Englishman's Description of the Seine and its Conveyances	15
Watermen of London	6	Voyage from Shades Pier to Hungerford Market	15
Songs of the Watermen	6	The Steam Boat	15
The Thames the Common Highway of London	6
Palaces on the Thames	8

ILLUSTRATIONS.

Frontispiece.—View of Old London, looking eastward from the Strand. On the left foreground is the entrance to Covent Garden; on the right the rookery of Durham House; onward the Palace of the Savoy; the Strand Inn; the Temple; to Blackfriars; Castle Baynard; Old St. Paul's, &c.; London Bridge. On the Surrey side—St. Mary Overies; Bishop of Winchester's Palace, &c.	Designers.	Engravers.
Title.—Exterior of St. Paul's	W. H. PYNE	JACKSON
1. Richard II. and Gower	PRIOR	JACKSON
2. Water Quintain	DICKES	MURDON
3. Water Tournaments	ANLAY	E. JEWITT
4. Procession of James I.	FAIRHOLT	WRAGG
5. Palace-Yard Stairs, 1641	TIMBRILL	HOLLOWAY
6. London and Westminster Steamers	ANLAY	KIRCHNER
	TIMBRILL	E. JEWITT

II.—CLEAN YOUR HONOUR'S SHOES.

The Last of the Shoe-blacks	17	Stow's Description of the Introduction of Coaches	25
Superiority of the Shoe-black over the Author	18	Coaches for Hire	26
Gay's Episode of the Black Youth in 'Trivia'	18	Inconveniences of Coaches	26
Pavements of London	18	First Hackney-coach Stand	27
Gay's Description of Walking in London	19	Proclamation against Hackney-coaches	27
Mob round the Pillory	20	Sedan-chairs	28
D'Avenant's Frenchman's Complaint of the Streets of London	21	Original use of the Hammer-cloth	29
Shooting at Butts in Cheapside	22	Gay's Lines descriptive of Street Accidents in the days of Anne	29
Shoes of the time of Elizabeth	22	Hackney-chairmen	30
Progress of Henry IV. and other Sovereigns through the City	23	Glass Coaches	31
Saddle-horses	24	Decay of Hackney-coaches	31
Horse-litter	24	Cabriolets	32
The Vehicles that preceded Coaches	25	Omnibuses	32

ILLUSTRATIONS.

7. London Shoe-black, 1750	Designers.	Engravers.
8. Foot-ball in the Strand	FAIRHOLT	ANDREW
9. Proclamation of Accession of Edward VI.	MELVILLE	J. QUARTLEY
10. Palace Yard	ANLAY	MURDON
11. Sedan, 1638	ANLAY	GOSEWAY
12. Old Hackney-coachman, 1680	TIFFIN	NOBENT
13. Cabriolet, about 1780	B. SIV	F. SUTTER
	TIFFIN	GRAY

III.—PAUL'S CROSS.

	Page		Page
Space round the Cathedral—chief Burying-ground	33	Tortures and Burning of James Baynham	46
Presbyterium found by Sir Christopher Wren	33	Confessions at Paul's Cross of the Holy Maid of	46
Graves of the Romans and Saxons	34	Kent and Richard Master	46
First Enclosure of Paul's Churchyard	34	The Wonderful Roof of Boxley in Kent	47
Summons of a Folkmote at Paul's Cross	35	The Imposture of the Spirit in the Wall	48
Meaning of Folkmote	36	Confession of Elizabeth Croft	48
Bull of Pope Urban read at Paul's Cross	37	Penances at Paul's Cross in 1555	48
Clocher, or Bell Tower	37	Last Anathema pronounced at Paul's Cross	49
Walling round of the Churchyard	37	Publication of the Pope's Sentence against Luther	49
St. Paul's Churchyard the Forum of the Londoners	38	Preaching at Paul's Cross in the time of Henry VIII.	50
Sermons preached at Paul's Cross	38	Latimer and Ridley's Sermons from Paul's Cross	51
Fund for Loans in the Treasury of the Cathedral	38	Latimer's Sermon of the Plough	51
Earliest Sermon preached at Paul's Cross	40	First Use of the Book of Common Prayer	53
Stow's Account of a Penance in Paul's Church	41	Sermon preached by Dr. Bourn	53
Recantation of Reginald Pococke	42	Account from Stow's 'Annals' of Sermons delivered from Paul's Cross	54
Shaw's Sermon from Paul's Cross to prove the Justice of Claims of Richard III. to the Crown	43	Visits of James I. and Charles I. to Paul's Cross	55
Penance of Jane Shore	44	Paul's Cross pulled down	56
Penance of James Baynham	45

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.
14. Elm Tree in St. Paul's Churchyard	FAIRHOLT	LEONARD	33
15. Roman Antiquities	"	ANDREW	34
16. Henry III.	"	SLADER	35
17. James Baynham doing Penance (from Fox's Martyrology)	"	MURDON	45
18. Latimer	"	HOLLOWAY	51
19. Paul's Cross	ANELAY	F. SMYTH	56

IV.—THE TABARD.

The Borough	57	The Knight	66
The Grave of Massinger	58	The Prioress	66
High Street of Southwark	58	The Wife of Bath and the Squire	67
The Talbot Inn	59	The Monk, the Friar, and the Parson	68
Chaucer and the other Pilgrims	59	The Sumpnour and the Pardoner	69
Description of the Talbot in 1841	60	The Miller	69
The Pilgrims' Room	62	The Merchant	69
Notice of the Site of the Tabard in a Register of the Abbey of Hyde	63	The Sergeant of Law and the Doctor of Physic	69
The Abbot of Hyde at the Battle of Hastings	63	The Franklin	70
Fire of Southwark in 1676	63	The Manciple, the Shipman, and the Cook, &c.	70
The Tabard partly destroyed	64	The Clerk of Oxenford and the Poet	70
The Poet-Pilgrim	66	The Supper	71
The Host	66	The Host's Proposition	71

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.
20. Border.—Supper of the Canterbury Pilgrims	Buss	MURDON & SMYTH	57
21. Court-yard of the present Talbot, from the Street	ARCHER	JACKSON	60
22. Exterior of Tabard Inn, from Urry's Chaucer, 1720	TIFFIN	"	64
23. Court-yard of the Tabard, from a Drawing in the British Museum about 1780	PRIOR	"	72

V.—LONDON BRIDGE.

Bridges over the Thames	74	London Bridge burnt down in 1188.	79
Mention of a Bridge over the Thames in the year 44 by Dion Cassius	74	Stow's Assertion that the Bridge was rebuilt in 1163.	79
Bridge of King Alfred on the Thames	75	First London Bridge of Stone	80
Battle of London Bridge	75	Peter of Colechurch	80
Canute's Canal	76	Chapel of St. Thomas	81
Stow's Account of the Original Foundation of London Bridge	77	Nonsuch House	81
Earliest Historic Notice of London Bridge	78	Fire in 1212	81
		Fire in 1683	81

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ix

	Pics		Page
Houses on London Bridge burnt by Fire of London in 1666	83	Passage of Arms waged between Sir David Lindsay and Lord Wells	90
Old Traitors' Gate damaged by Fire in 1725	83	Processions of King Richard and his Queens	90
Water-works	83	Reception of Henry V. on London Bridge	91
Corn-mills	84	Entry of Henry VI. into London	91
Pennant's Description of the Street on London Bridge	85	Pageants at London Bridge at the reception of Margaret of Anjou	91
Danger to Foot Passengers	86	Eleanor Cobham	91
Shops on London Bridge	86	Assault of London Bridge and Burning of Southwark Gate	92
Signs on London Bridge	86	Jack Cade	92
Chapel of St. Thomas à Becket and Nonsuch House converted into shops and dwelling-houses	87	Entrance into London of Catherine of Arragon	92
Fish Pond under the Chapel of St. Thomas	88	Procession of Cardinal Wolsey over London Bridge	93
Eminent Names associated with London Bridge	88	Rescue of the Daughter of Sir William Hewet	93
Traitors' Heads exposed on London Bridge	88	Wyatt's Insurrection	93
Eleanor of Provence attacked from London Bridge	89	Return of Charles II.	94
Wat Tyler	90	Repairs of London Bridge	94
		Building of New London Bridge	95
		Old London Bridge pulled down	96

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.
24. London Bridge about 1616	MELVILLE	REMBAULT	73
25. London Bridge just before the Houses were pulled down in 1760	"	SEARS	80
26. Upper Chapel of St. Thomas	MASTERS	SMYTH	81
27. Lower Chapel or Crypt of St. Thomas	MELVILLE	MURDON	81
28. Approaches to London Bridge on the Southwark side	WELLS	HEAVISIDE	82
29. Water-works	B. SLV	SLADER	84
30. Hogarth's View of Old Houses on London Bridge	MELVILLE	ANDREW	85
31. Chapel of St. Thomas converted into a House or Warehouse	FAIRHOLT	SEARS	87
32. London Bridge in 1827	"	"	95
33. Opening of New London Bridge	ANELAY	NICHOLLS	96

VI.—MIDSUMMER-EVE.

Henry VIII. incognito with Wolsey and Brandon	87	Glass Lights	105
Cross in Westcheap	99	Defoe's Plan for Lighting and Guarding London	106
The Marching Watch	99	Robberies in the Streets of London	106
Richard Niccol's Lines on Cresset Lights	99	Address to the King from the Lord Mayor and Aldermen	106
Roule of the Marching Watch	100	Mohocks	107
Hanging of Thieves in the time of Henry VIII.	101	Description of a Bully in Johnson's 'London'	108
Marching Watch put down	101	Flambeaux	108
Watchmen	101	Link-boys	109
Mode of Lighting Streets	102	Gay's Lines on Link-men	109
Bellman of Milton's 'Il Penseroso'	103	Oil Lamps	110
Bellman's Verses in Herrick's 'Hesperides'	103	The Old System of Watching	110
Watchman of the time of James I.	103	The Lighting of London by Gas	111
Lanterns	104
Boileau's Description of the Streets of Paris	105

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.
34. The Marching Watch	MELVILLE	J. QUARTLEY	87
35. Watchman of 1869	ANELAY	NICHOLLS	102
36. Watchmen, from Dekker, 1616	"	"	103
37. Watchman of the time of James I.	FAIRHOLT	"	104
38. Lantern-maker, from Hans Schoppes	"	"	104
39. Footman with Flambeau	MELVILLE	SEARS	105
40. Link-boy, from Bottard	ANELAY	NICHOLLS	109
41. London at Night, 1760	FAIRHOLT	SLADER	110
42. Lamp-lighters of 1866	ANELAY	"	111

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS.

VII.—ST. MARY OVERIES.

	Page		Page
Mary Overy	118	Trial of heretics in St. Mary Overies	121
Foundation of St. Mary Overies	114	Edmund Shakspeare buried in St. Mary Overies	122
Benefactors of St. Mary Overies	115	Aubrey's description of the death of Fletcher	123
Priory damaged by Fire in 1212	116	St. Mary Overies in 1713	123
Origin of St. Thomas's Hospital	116	Site and appearance of St. Mary Overies	123
State of the Priory in the Fourteenth Century	116	Churchyard of St. Mary Overies	123
The Boy-bishop	116	Interior of St. Mary Overies	123
Restoration of St. Mary Overies	117	Effigy of the Knight Templar	124
The Poet Gower	117	Prospect from the Tower of St. Mary Overies	123
Gower's Monument	117	Epitaphs in St. Mary Overies	125
Marriage of the Earl of Kent	118	Monuments in St. Mary Overies	126
Cardinal Beaufort	119	Effigy of Dr. Lockyer	126
Marriage of James I. of Scotland	119	Inscription on the Monument of Richard Humble	126
Murder of James I.	120	The Lady Chapel	127
St. Saviour's	120	Design of pulling down the Lady Chapel, and its preservation through the interference of a few public-spirited artists	127
Fosbroke's account of a religious procession	121	Bishop Andrews	128
Narrow escape from destruction of St. Mary Overies during Wyatt's insurrection	121

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.
43. General View of the Church from the South	ARCHER	JACKSON	113
44. Norman Arch	"	"	115
45. Gower's Monument	"	"	117
46. The Choir	"	"	124
47. Effigy of a Knight Templar	"	"	125
48. Lady Chapel	"	"	128

VIII.—STREET NOISES.

Ben Jonson's 'Silent Woman'	129	The Water-carrier	133
London Cries	130	The Milk-carrier	137
Cries at the Door of Westminster Hall	131	'Water-crosses'	138
Cries of Feeding	131	Flower-girls	139
Shopkeepers' Cries	131	Smallcoal-man	139
Orange-women	132	The Working Trades	139
Tempest's 'Cries'	132	Venders of Food	140
'Cherry ripe'	133	Coffee-shops	140
Fish-wives	134	Hogarth's Enraged Musician	140
The Costard-monger	134	Hornmen, Dustmen, and Muffin-men	141
Oyster-wives, Herb-wives, &c., denounced in the seventh year of Charles I.	135	De la Serre's praise of Street Music	142
Bavarian Broom-women	136	The Cittern	142
'Old Shoes for some Brooms'	136	Street Music, now, and in the last century	143

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.
49. The Enraged Musician, from Hogarth	DICKES	W. QUARTLEY	129
50. Orange-woman, from Tempest's 'Cries of London'	TIMBRILL	"	132
51. Orange-woman, 1841	"	MINNS	133
52. "Four for Sixpence, Mackerel." Tempest	WELLS	HOLLOWAY	134
53. Costard-monger, 1841	TIMBRILL	SLADER	135
54. "Old Shoes for some Brooms." Tempest	WELLS	ROE	136
55. Conduit in West Cheap	TIPPIN	JACKSON	137
56. "Bucklersbury in Simple Time"	FAIRHOLT	GOSWAY	138
57. "Pots to Mend." Tempest	"	SMYTH	139
58. Hornmen—"Great News"	TIMBRILL	SLADER	141
59. Muffin-man, 1841	"	MINNS	142
60. Beal-ward, from Hogarth	FAIRHOLT	SHARR	143
61. Street Music, 1799, from Day's Picture of Grosvenor Square	TIMBRILL	WATNEY	144

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xi

IX.—ROMAN LONDON.

	PAGE		PAGE
Occupation of Britain by the Romans	145	Fortifications of London	154
Camden's Supposition of the Descent of the Britons	146	London designated Augusta	154
Site of London	146	Streets of Roman London	154
Embankments of the Romans	146	London Stone	154
The Ancient Mouth of the Thames	147	Evidences of the extent of Roman London	156
The Thames an Estuary	147	Roman Burial-grounds	156
Junction of the Thames with the Sea	148	Stow's Description of the Discovery of a Burial-place belonging to Roman London	156
Derivation of the word London	148	Roman Antiquities discovered in Camomile Street in 1707	158
London an unimportant Town in the time of Caesar	148	Roman Sepulchral Remains found in various parts of London	158
The London of the Britons	149	Old City Wall	160
Probable extent of London in the time of the Britons	149	The Gates of London	160
Earliest mention of London	150	Foundations of the City Wall	160
London and Verulam chiefly peopled by Romans	150	Woodward's Account of the Upper Part of the Wall	161
Dion Cassius' Account of the Outrages perpetrated by the followers of Boadicea	151	Towers on the City Wall	161
Druidic Fanes	151	Circuit of the City Wall	162
London supposed to have been Burned by Boadicea	151	Destruction of part of the Wall in the time of Richard I.	162
Sir J. Henniker's Account of the Appearance of the Soil in Lombard Street in 1786	151	Fragments of the Wall still existing	163
Vestiges of Fire discovered in London	151	Recent Disinterment of part of the Roman Wall	163
The Horrors and Termination of Boadicea's Revolt	152	Line of the Wall traced	164
Mention of London by Ptolemy in his Geography	152	Extension of the Wall in 1276	165
London a Town of the Cantii	153	Vestiges of Roman Dwelling-houses	167
Plunder of London by the Franks in the year 297	153	General Level of Roman London	167
Deliverance of London by Theodosius	153	Excavations on the Site of the late Royal Exchange	167
		Roman Remains found in Princes-street	168

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.
62. Vases, Lamp, &c., found after the Great Fire	FAIRHOLT	SEARS	145
63. London Stone	"	SLY	156
64. Plan of Roman London	"	WELCH	157
65. Part of the Roman Wall of London recently excavated behind the Minors	"	NICHOLLS	164
66. Urns, Vases, Bead, and Fragment of Pottery found in Lombard Street, 1785	"	SLADER	168

X.—THE OLD SPRING-TIME IN LONDON.

The First of May	169	Degeneracy of Archers	177
The Eve of May-day	170	Satire on the Finsbury Archers from D'Avenant's 'Long Vacation'	178
Hall's description of Henry VIII. joining in the 'Maying'	170	Last effort of the Archers	178
The May-pole	171	Bowling-alleys	178
The Lord and Lady of the May	172	Quarter-staff, and other Old English Sports	179
"Eve of May-day"	172	Stow's account of an Amusement of the old time	179
Grudge against Foreigners	172	Wrestling	180
Sir Thomas More and the Rioters on May-day	172	Stow's description of a Wrestling-fray	180
Hall's account of the scene between the King and the May-day Rioters	173	Foot-ball	181
May-pole or Shaft destroyed	174	Tennis-balls	181
Restoration of the famous Strand May-pole in the time of Charles II.	174	Pall-mall	181
Revival of Archery	174	Bull and Bear-baiting, and Cock-fighting	181
Fraternity of St. George	174	Decline of Old English Sports	182
The King and 'Foot in Bosom'	174	Shooting-matches	182
Duke of Shoreditch	175	Bowls, Skittles, and Cricket	182
Knights of Prince Arthur's Round Table	176	Single-stick and Prize-fights	182
Short duration of the golden age of Archery	176	Picture of a Prize-fight in London in the last Century	183
Archery-grounds enclosed	176	Challenge of a Pugilist	183
Great Archery-grounds of London	177	Places and Walks opened to the Public	183
Archers' marks	177

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.	Page
67. Henry VIII. Maying at Shooter's Hill	ANELAY	JEWITT	169
68. May-pole before St. Andrew Undershaft	FAIRHOLT	WITBY	171
69. Arthur's Show	BUSS	SEARS	176
70. Bowling-alley	BRANDARD	"	178
71. Quarter-staff	BUSS	NICHOLLS	179
72. Playing at Bucklers—Maids Dancing for Garlands	ANELAY	W. QUARTLEY	184

XI.—THE PARKS.

1.—GENERAL VIEW OF THE PARKS.

	Page		Page
Mountstuart Elphinstone's Account of a Practice common among the Citizens of Kabul	185	Blackstone's explanation of the words chase and park	187
Custom of opening Royal Gardens to the Public ancient and universal	186	Proclamation of Henry VIII.	187
First Enclosure of the Parks	186	Encroachments on the Royal Hunting Reserves	188
Fondness of early English Sovereigns for the Chase	187	Different character of the Parks	188

2.—ST. JAMES'S PARK.

The Green Park	189	The Mall	194
Beauties of St. James's Park	189	The Decoy, and Rosamond's Pond	195
St. James's Palace, Westminster Abbey, &c.	189	Birdcage Walk	195
Water-fowl in St. James's Park	190	First Enclosure of the Green Park	196
The three epochs in the History of St. James's Park	190	Anecdotes of Charles II.	196
St. James's Park in the reigns of Elizabeth and the first two Stuarts	190	Evelyn's Account of a Stroll in the Park with Charles II.	196
The Tilt-yard	191	Coke's Anecdote of Charles II.	197
Spring Garden	191	Pepys's Account of a Court Cavalcade in the Park	197
Garrard's Description of Spring Garden	191	The Duke of York	198
Bowling-green in Spring Garden put down	192	Introduction of Skating	198
Spring Gardens re-opened	192	Crowds attracted to the Mall	198
Spring Gardens closed by Oliver Cromwell	192	Swift a frequenter of the Park	199
Spring Gardens re-opened at the Restoration	192	The Park patronised by Ladies	200
The Mulberry Garden	192	Horace Walpole's account of a party of pleasure in the Mall	201
Importation of Silkworms	192	Resort of persons of all ranks to the Park	201
St. James's a favourite lounge	192	Extracts from the 'Annual Register'	202
Improvements in St. James's Park in the reign of Charles II.	193	Alterations in the Park in the reign of George IV.	203
Notices in Pepys's Diary of the Alterations in St. James's Park	193	The "Silent Sister"	203
Aspect of the Park in the reign of Charles II.	194	Neglect of the Green Park	203
		St. James's Park the scene of many exciting incidents	203

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.	Page
73. The Ornamental Water in St. James's Park	SHEPHERD	F. SMYTH	185
74. The Tilt-yard	ANELAY	NICHOLLS	191
75. View in St. James's Park, temp. Charles II.	FAIRHOLT	SEARS	194
76. The Game of Pall Mall	BRANDARD	NICHOLLS	195
77. Rosamond's Pond, 1752	TIFFIN	GRAY	204

XII.—THE PARKS.

3.—HYDE PARK AND KENSINGTON GARDENS.

Hyde Park and Kensington Gardens originally one	205	Description of Kensington Gardens in the 'Spectator'	210
Patents and grants relating to Hyde Park	206	Additions and Improvements to Kensington Gardens by Queen Caroline	210
The sale of Hyde Park	206	Ha-ha!	211
Boundaries of the Park	206	Recent Alterations in Hyde Park and Kensington Gardens	211
The pools in Hyde Park	207	Hyde Park on May-day	212
General appearance of Hyde Park 1852	208	Amusements of the Lord Protector, from the 'Moderate Intelligencer'	213
Extent of Kensington Gardens in 1690	209
Improvement in Kensington Gardens in the reign of Anne	209

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xiii

	Page		Page
Accident to Cromwell in Hyde Park	214	Hyde Park generally resorted to previous to 1653	218
The Ring	214	Kensington Gardens open to the public on Saturdays	218
Reviews in Hyde Park	215	Anecdotes of George II.	219
Hyde Park the rendezvous of the troops of the Commonwealth	216	Kensington Gardens entirely thrown open	219
Duels in Hyde Park	217	Most eligible mode of entering Hyde Park	219
Highway Robberies in Hyde Park	217	The Serpentine	220
Narrative of the principal Witness in the Trial of William Belchier	217

4.—THE REGENT'S PARK.

Situation of the Regent's Park	222	Bowling-green in the Park in the reign of Anne	223
The rivulet Ay-bourne or Tybourne	222	Duke of Buckingham at Marybone	223
Manor House of Marybone	222	Marybone Gardens open to the public previous to 1737	223
Boundaries and extent of the Regent's Park	222	Marybone Gardens finally closed in 1777	223
Zoological and Botanical Gardens, &c.	223

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.
78. Lodge in Kensington Gardens	TIFFIN	KIRCHNER	205
79. Humane Society's Boat-house	"	BASTIN	211
80. Old Elm	"	ROWE	220
81. The Serpentine	"	GRAY	220
82. Plan of St. James's Park, temp. Charles II.	FAIRHOLT	ROWE	221
83. Marylebone House	TIFFIN	SLADER	224

XIII.—UNDERGROUND.

London below the soil	225	Mr. Roc's experiments on the best mode of cleansing sewers	233
Ancient mode of supplying London with Water	226	Summary of the statistics of the gas works	233
The Wells	226	Sir Hugh Middleton	234
Clerkenwell	226	Conduits	234
The River of Wells	227	Conduits flowing with wine	235
The course of the Wall-brook	227	Imperfect supply of water afforded by conduits	235
The Walbrook entirely arched over	227	Print in the British Museum, headed 'Tittle-tattle'	236
The origin and course of the Fleet River	227	Removal of chief conduits after the Fire of London	236
Putrid exhalations arising from the Fleet	228	Fountains	236
The decline of the Fleet	229	Peter Morris's "Artificial Forcier"	237
Roman Remains discovered in the bed of the river	229	Grants for raising water in the time of Elizabeth and James	237
Improvement of the Fleet	229	Commencement of the New River	238
Bridges over the Fleet	229	Difficulties encountered by Sir H. Middleton during the progress of the cutting of the New River	238
Channel of the Fleet filled up	229	Procession and verses in honour of the opening of the New River	238
Inconveniences to the inhabitants of London from the former want of underground drainage	230	Quantity of water daily supplied to London	240
Gradual improvement in drainage since the reign of Henry VIII.	230	Capital expended on water-works	240
Chief features of the system of drainage	230
The number and length of the sewers in London	231
The Fleet Sewer	231

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.
34. Opening a Sewer by Night	TIMBRILL	NICHOLLS	225
35. Fleet Ditch, 1749	FAIRHOLT	HOLLOWAY	228
36. Fleet Ditch, 1841, back of Field Lane	ARORER	JACKSON	230
37. Bayewater Conduit	TIFFIN	"	233
38. Plug in a Frost	"	"	236
39. Conduit at Leadenhall	FAIRHOLT	SLY	237
40. Tittle-tattle	TIFFIN	NICHOLLS	240

XIV.—SUBURBAN MILESTONES.

	PAGE		PAGE
Jedediah Jones	241	Extract from 'Grand Concern of England Ex-
Milestones	242	plained'	230
Hicks's Hall	242	Advance of rents	231
Whittington's Stone	243	Lines from 'The Playhouse to Let' of D'Avenant	231
The Standard in Cornhill	245	Influx of Scots and French to London	231
St. Giles's Pound	245	Sir William Petty's calculations of the popula-
Systems of measuring the roads	246	tion of London	252
Tyburn Turnpike	246	Sir William Petty's theory of its ultimate in-
Hyde Park Corner	246	crease	252
Difficulty of determining the confines of London	247	Letter from Fleetwood the Recorder to Lord
Plan in the Preface to the 'Population Returns'	247	Burghley	253
Exaggerated old accounts of the populousness of		London rogues	253
London	247	The supply of food to London	254
Proclamations of Elizabeth forbidding the erec-		Evils of discouraging building in the suburbs	254
tion of new buildings within three miles of		Contemplated road from the east end of Oxford
the City gates	248	Street direct to Holborn	254
Proclamation of Charles I. to forbid building, &c.	248	The Rookery and the Holy Land	254
Decrease of population during the Plague	249	Example of the dense population of St. Giles's	255
Howel's comparison of the populousness of Lon-		Mr. Smirke's scheme for providing lodging and don with other cities	249	houses for the poor	255
"Scrutiny" of the inhabitants of the City in 1631	250	Present lodging-houses	255
Extension of the suburbs of London	250	Dormitories	256

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.
91. Islington, one mile from the spot where Hicks's Hall formerly stood	ANELAY	BASTIN	241
92. One mile from the Standard in Cornhill	"	HEAVISIDE	244
93. Eight miles round St. Paul's	B. SLY	C. SMITH	247
94. Bayswater, One Mile from London *	ANELAY	ANDREW	256

XV.—LAMBETH PALACE.

Westminster Hall	257	Pictures in the Gallery	267
Somerset House	257	The Guard-room	268
The Monument	258	Portraits of the Archbishops	268
Matthew Paris's account of the origin of Lam-		Lewis's account of Wickliffe's defence	269
beth Palace	258	Archbishop Arundel and the fiery stake	269
Manor of Lambeth previous to the building of		Archbishop Chicheley	270
'the Palace'	259	Reginald Peacock	270
Lambeth occasionally occupied by the Arch-		Craumer, and the marriage of Henry VIII. with bishops of Canterbury	259	Anne Bullen	271
Cause of the Archbishop's removal from Canter-		Oath of succession administered to exclude the bury and the building of Lambeth Palace	260	Princess Mary	271
Sitting of the Council to consider the legality of		Anecdotes of Sir Thomas More	271
Henry I.'s marriage with Matilda	260	Various meetings in Lambeth Palace	271
Maude the Good	261	Earl Cassilis	272
Gateway of Lambeth Palace	261	Cardinal Pole	272
Money and bread given to the poor	262	Fuller's story of Pole's election to the Popedom	272
Bounty of Archbishop Winchelsey	262	Archbishop Parker	272
Archbishop Tenison and the Stationers' Com-		Parker's treatment of prisoners committed to
pany	263	his charge	272
The Water Tower	263	Bishop Thirby's body	273
Lollard's Tower	263	Elizabeth and Parker's wife	273
Exterior of the Great Hall	263	Grindall	273
Manuscript-room	263	Death of Whitgift	274
Caxton's Preface to 'The Notable Wise Dictes		The "Nine Articles of Lambeth"	274
and Sayings of Philosophers'	264	Archbishop Abbot	274
Archbishop Chicheley's Missal	264	Extracts from Laud's Diary	275
The Court	264	Archbishop Juxon	276
Cardinal Pole's fig-trees	264	Lambeth Palace used as a prison	276
Entrance Hall	265	Sale of Lambeth Palace during the Common-
The Great Hall	265	wealth	276
The Hall pulled down during the Common-		Various portraits in the Guard-room	277
wealth	265	The Chapel	277
The Hall rebuilt by Archbishop Juxon	265	Epitaph on Archbishop Parker	278
The Painted Window	266	Archbishop Parker's body disinterred	278
High-table at the Archbishop's Palace	266	Restoration of Parker's remains by Archbishop
Description of the order of a dinner in Arch-		Santroft	278
bishop Parker's time	266	The Post-room	278
History of the Library	267	The Lollards' Prison	279

* By an oversight this is described as Knightsbridge under the engraving.

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xv

ILLUSTRATIONS.		Designers.	Engravers.	PAGE
95. View of Lambeth Palace from the River		ARCHER	JACKSON	257
96. Gateway		"	"	262
97. Great Hall		"	"	265
98. The Guard-room		"	"	268
99. The Chapel		"	"	277
100. The Lollards' Prison		"	"	270
101. Lambeth Palace—Garden View		"	"	280

XVI.—THE ROMAN REMAINS.

		PAGE			PAGE
No Roman structures standing in London		281	Iron instruments, &c., found in Lothbury		291
Modern corruptions of old British names		281	Various antiquities dug up between Lothbury
Camp of Julius Cæsar		282	and London Bridge		291
Stukeley's account of Cæsar's encampment on			Description of earthen vessels discovered in
Greenfield Common		282	Coleman Street		291
Origin of Cæsar's invasion		283	Mr. Smith's description of earthen pans found
Stukeley's description of the camp at St. Pancras		283	in Bread Street		292
Brill		284	Silver Harpocrates found in the bed of the
Principal Roman remains underground		285	Thames		292
Stone monument discovered by Wren		285	Various bronzes found in the Thames		292
Pennant's description of sepulchral stone found			Stone altar found under Goldsmiths' Hall		293
at Ludgate		286	Pavement discovered near Sherbourn Lane		293
Prætorian camp on the site of St. Paul's		286	Walls and pavements dug up near the Post
Coins, &c., found on the site of the Ordnance			Office		293
Office		287	Various fragments of walls, &c., found in
Sepulchral monument dug up at the back of the			Lombard Street		293
London Coffee-house		287	Gold coins, pottery, &c.		293
Tessellated pavements and mosaic work		288	Fluted pillar found in the Wall of the Grey
Description of tessellated pavement found in			Friars' Monastery		294
Leadenhall Street		288	Roman materials used for the erection of new
Tessellated pavement found in Lothbury		289	buildings		294
Tessellated pavements discovered in various places		290	Old books found in the vaults of Verulamium		295
Roman antiquities found between London			Destruction of Arthur's Oven on the banks of
Bridge and Moorgate		290	the Urron		295
Earthenware vessels, &c., found near St. Leo-			Roman London probably built of brick		295
nard's Church		291

ILLUSTRATIONS.

		Designers.	Engravers.	PAGE
102. Altar of Apollo, and Vases		FAIRHOLT	ROE	281
103. Plan of Cæsar's Camp at St. Pancras Church		"	CROWE	284
104. Sepulchral Stone found at Ludgate		"	SLADEN	285
105. Tessellated Pavement		SLY	BRANSTON	289
106, 107, 108, 109. Coins and Fragments		"	"	294
110. Statue of Harpocrates, &c. &c.		FAIRHOLT	ROE	296

XVII.—PICCADILLY.

The White Horse Cellar	297	Evelyn's description of Lord Berkeley's house	307
The Achilles	298	Streets built in Berkeley Gardens	308
Aggas's Map of London	298	Devonshire House	308
Stow's account of Wyatt's Attempt on London	298	Burlington House	308
Surrender and execution of Sir Thomas Wyatt	299	The Duke of York and Lady Denham	308
Piccadilly in the early part of the reign of Mary	300	Death of Lady Denham	308
No mention of Piccadilly in reigns of Elizabeth		The Earl of Burlington	309 and James	300	Piccadilly at the close of the seventeenth and
Mention of Piccadilly by Lord Clarendon and		beginning of the eighteenth centuries	310
Garrard in the reign of Charles I.	300	Bond Street	310
Piccadilly House	300	Rank of the inhabitants of Piccadilly and the
Limits of Piccadilly	301	neighbouring streets	311
Derivation of the name Piccadilly	301	Clarges House	311
Name of Piccadilly extended to Portugal Street	302	Hamilton Street and Apsley House	311
Building and improvements in the streets near		The Hercules' Pillars	312
Piccadilly	302	The Triumphant Chariot	312
Goring House	303	The Terrace	313
Extracts from Pegge's Diary	304	May Fair	313
Villas built opposite Goring House	304	Breaking up of May Fair	314
Clarendon House	304	Building in May Fair	314
Extracts from Evelyn's Diary	305	Bath House	314
Hub at Clarendon House	306	The Ranger's house	315
Lines on Clarendon from a MS. poem	306	The Park Wall	315
Lord Clarendon and Evelyn	308	St. George's Hospital	316
Evelyn's account of the fate of Clarendon House	307

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.	PAGE
111. Clarendon House	FAIRHOLT	ANDREW	297
112. Burlington House	"	SLADER	309
113. Watering House, Knightsbridge, 1841	TIFFIN	NUGENT	312
114. Entrance to Ranger's Lodge, Green Park, Piccadilly, 1841	"	"	315
115. St. George's Hospital, about 1750	FAIRHOLT	HOLLOWAY	316

XVIII.—CROSBY PLACE.

	PAGE		PAGE
Sir John Crosby	318	Crosby Place leased to William Roper	324
Mission entrusted to Sir John Crosby	318	Various proprietors of Crosby Place	324
Building of Crosby Place	318	Alterations in Crosby Place	324
The Duke of Gloster and the Lady Anne	318	The "Rich Spencer"	324
Deposition of Edward V. determined on in Crosby Hall	319	Letter from Sir John Spencer's daughter to her husband	324
Arrest of Edward V. and execution of Lord Rivers	319	Sully entertained at Crosby Place	326
Crosby Place the residence for some time of Richard III.	319	Letter from the Duke of Sully	326
Sir Thomas More's account of the proceeding after the arrest of the young King	320	Sir Philip Sidney's sister a tenant of Crosby Place	327
Defeat and death of Richard III. and accession of Henry VII.	320	Ben Jonson's Epitaph on the Countess of Pembroke	328
German ambassadors lodged at Crosby Place	320	Fire in Crosby Place	328
Causes of the embassy from Germany	321	Crosby Hall converted into a Presbyterian meeting-house	328
Crosby Place purchased by Bartholomew Read	321	The houses in Crosby Square built on the ruins of the old mansion	328
Crosby Place sold by Sir John Rest to Sir Thomas More	322	Crosby Place a packer's warehouse	328
Probability that Sir Thomas More's 'Utopia' was written in Crosby Place	322	Reparations and rebuilding of Crosby Place	328
Extract from the Preface to the 'Utopia'	322	Description of Crosby Place	328
Crosby Place sold by Sir Thomas More to Antonio Bonvisi	322	Exterior of the hall	329
Part of a letter written by Sir Thomas More in the Tower	323	Council-chamber or dining-room	329
Execution of Sir Thomas More	323	The Throne-room	329
		The Great Hall	330
		Armorial bearings on the painted windows	330
		The Minstrels' Gallery	331
		Mr. Taylor's remarks on the musical memories of Crosby Place	331

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.
116. Exterior of the Hall of Crosby Place	SHEPHERD	JARVIS	317
117. The Great Hall	ARCHER	JACKSON	321
118. Tomb of Sir John Crosby	"	"	332

XIX.—OLD WHITEHALL.

The Banqueting House	333	Elizabeth's reply to the deputation	341
Henry VIII. and Wolsey	334	The Duke of Anjou	341
Magnificence of Wolsey's establishment	334	Banqueting House on the south-west side of Whitehall	342
The Gift and the Council Chambers	334	Preparations for Elizabeth's marriage	342
The dress and appearance of Wolsey	334	"The Castle or Fortress of Perfect Beauty"	342
Banquets and masques given by Wolsey to the King	335	Tourneys in the Tilt-yard	342
Account of the arrival of Henry VIII. at Whitehall in a mask	335	Arrival of the Duke of Anjou at the Court	343
Anne Boleyn first seen by Henry VIII. at Whitehall	336	Elizabeth's determination not to marry	343
The fall of Wolsey	338	The death of the Duke of Anjou	343
The name of York Place changed to Whitehall	338	Hentzner's description of the Queen and Whitehall in 1598	344
Private marriage of Henry VIII. with Anne Boleyn	339	Death of Elizabeth	344
Alterations made by Henry VIII. at Whitehall	339	Proclamation before Whitehall of James I.	344
Reveries in Whitehall	339	Number of persons knighted by James I. in Whitehall	344
Gate-house	339	Interrogation of Guy Fawkes at Whitehall	344
Anecdotes of Henry VIII. and Holbein	340	Festivities in Whitehall in honour of the visit of Christian IV. to England	345
Death of Henry VIII.	340	James's Speech at Whitehall to the Houses of Parliament	345
Whitehall in the reigns of Edward VI. and Mary	341	Base intrigues set on foot in Whitehall	346
The reign of Elizabeth the poetical era of Whitehall	341	The Countess of Essex and Lord Rochester	346
Deputation sent to Elizabeth at Whitehall	341	Sir Anthony Weldon's account of Bacon's conduct during the visit of James I. to Scotland	347

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xvii

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.	PAGE
119. Presence Chamber, York Place	HARVEY & PRIOR	JACKSON	333
120. Wolsey and his Suite	FAIRHOLT	REMBAUT	335
121. Wolsey surrendering the Great Seal	"	MEAD	338
122. Holbein's Gate	SARGENT	JACKSON	348

XX.—NEW WHITEHALL.

	PAGE		PAGE
Old Banqueting House pulled down and the new one erected	349	Meeting of Little or Barebones Parliament at Whitehall	359
Fire in the Banqueting House	349	Cromwell made Lord Protector	359
Inigo Jones	350	Plots against the life of Cromwell	359
Sumptuous masques at Whitehall	350	Regal Crown offered at Whitehall to Cromwell	359
Inigo Jones's designs for a new Palace	350	Cromwell's refusal of the Crown	360
Building of the new Banqueting House	350	Accident to Richard Cromwell at Whitehall	360
Proclamation of Charles I. at Whitehall	352	Domestic habits of Cromwell	360
Marriage of Charles I.	352	The friends of Cromwell	360
Henrietta Maria	352	Illness and death of Cromwell at Whitehall	361
Dismissal of Henrietta Maria's French servants	353	Whitehall occupied by Richard Cromwell	361
Marshal Bassompierre's audience with Charles at Whitehall	353	Design of the Rump Parliament of selling Whitehall	361
Charles I.'s encouragement of the arts	353	The return of Charles II. to Whitehall	361
The Cartoons of Raffaele	354	Charles II. and the Duchess of Portsmouth	361
The amusements of the Court of Charles I.	354	Evil cured by Charles at Whitehall	362
Hostility of the Scots provoked by Charles	354	The Chapel Royal	362
The Earl of Loudon and the Duke of Hamilton	355	Passage from Evelyn's Diary	362
Parliament at the Banqueting House	355	Death of Charles	362
Parliament dissolved	356	James II. and Catherine Sedley	362
The Long Parliament summoned	356	Tendency towards Popery of James II.	362
Whitehall guarded	356	James II.'s departure from Whitehall	363
Removal of the King and Court to Hampton Court	357	Destruction of Whitehall by fire, with the exception of the Banqueting House	363
Whitehall seized by the Parliament	357	The Banqueting House used as a Chapel	363
Sale of the pictures in Whitehall	357	Dr. Waagen's description of the ceiling in the Banqueting House	363
Account of the execution of Charles I.	357	Statue of James II. at Whitehall	364
Cromwell's residence at Whitehall	358

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.	PAGE
123. Banqueting House, from the Inner Court	FUSSELL	JACKSON	349
124. The Front towards Charing Cross	POYNTER	"	351
125. The Front towards the Park	"	"	351
126. The "George"	FAIRHOLT	F. SAYTH	358
127. Whitehall, as it appeared before the Fire in 1691	"	BURROWS	364

XXI.—BEN JONSON'S LONDON.

Chancery Lane and Lincoln's Inn	365	Gifford's description of the Club at the Mermaid	372
Ben Jonson employed on the wall in Chancery Lane	365	Robert Greene	373
Jonson's studies under Camden	365	Verses by Jonson over the door of the Apollo Room in the Devil Tavern	373
Jonson at Cambridge	365	Leges Conviviales	374
Aubrey's account of Jonson's going to College	366	Paul's	374
Jonson in the army	366	Bishop Earle's description of Paul's in his 'Microcosmographie'	374
Jonson a player and a writer for the stage	366	Passage from Dekker's 'Gull's Horn-Book'	375
Jonson's duel with Gabrell	366	Jonson at Paul's	375
Description of Jonson	367	Extract from Lyly's 'Midas'	375
Comparison of the Comedies of Shakspeare and Jonson	367	The Exchange	376
Resemblance between Benjamin Jonson and Samuel Johnson	368	The "Pawne"	376
Jonson's thorough knowledge of London evident from his works	368	The Theatres	376
Good produced by the works of Jonson and Shakspeare	369	Extract from Jonson's Induction to 'Cynthia's Revels'	377
Literary quarrels of Jonson	370	Country squires in London	377
Lines by Jonson, probably intended for Shakspeare	370	Lines from the 'Old and Young Courtier'	378
Lines from Jonson's 'Apologetical Dialogue'	371	Jonson's rules for making a town gentleman out of a country clown	378
Fit combat between Shakspeare and Ben Jonson	372	Extract from 'The Devil is an Ass'	378
Ben Jonson's Epistle to Jonson	372	Lines from Jonson's 'Alchymist'	378
		The projector in 'The Devil is an Ass'	380

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.	PAGE
128. Ben Jonson	ANELAY	F. SMYTH	365
129. The Fortune Theatre, Golden Lane, Barbican, as it remained in 1790	FAIRHOLT	HOLLOWAY	371
130. Beaumont	"	MURDON	372
131. Paul's Walk	ANELAY	NICHOLLS	380

XXII.—BEN JONSON'S LONDON.

(Concluded from XXI.)

	PAGE		PAGE
The Dupe	381	Extract from Jonson's 'Poetaster'	388
Gambling	382	Jonson imprisoned for libel	389
Ordinaries	382	Jonson's mother's design of poisoning herself and her son	389
Story from 'Anecdotes and Traditions'	382	Houses "begged" for manslaughter	389
Stow's account of the putting down of venison-eating in the City	383	Jonson's pictures of scenes at court	389
Master-cooks	383	Jonson's delineations of profligacy and ambition	390
Maitre de cuisine to the Maréchal Strozzi	384	Sidney's dedication of his 'Arcadia' to his sister	391
Tobacco-lovers and tobacco-haters	384	Masques of the courts of Elizabeth and James	392
Charles Lamb's 'Farewell' to tobacco	385	Bacon's Essay 'Of Masques and Triumphs'	392
Aubrey's account of the introduction of tobacco	385	Masques of Jonson in celebration of various events	393
Quarrels in taverns and ordinaries	386	James's desire to knight Jonson	394
Story of Thomas Randolph in Winstanley's 'Lives of the Poets'	386	The masque of 'Time Vindicated'	394
Extract from L'Estrange's papers	386	'Staple of News'	394
Pickpockets and cutpurses	386	Public appetite for news	394
Lines from Jonson's 'Bartholomew Fair'	387	Jonson's attacks upon the Puritans	395
Description of an academy for thieves	387	Jonson's library	396
Fleetwood the Recorder	387	Jonson's later dramas	396
Reprieves	388	Jonson's Ode to revenge himself on the town	396
Begging lands	388	His death, and gravestone in Westminster Abbey	396

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.
132. Inigo Jones	ANELAY	MURDON	381
133. The Professor	MEADOWS	BURNINGS	384
134. A Room, temp. Elizabeth and James	MELVILLE	NICHOLLS	391
135. Masque, from Strutt's Antiquities	FAIRHOLT	SEARS	392

XXIII.—RANELAGH AND VAUXHALL.

Change in the public taste	397	Re-opening of Vauxhall	404
Ranelagh first converted into a place of amusement	398	Decorations of Vauxhall	404
The Rotunda	398	Lines from 'A Trip to Vauxhall'	405
Description of the exterior and interior of the Rotunda	398	Account of Vauxhall Gardens from 'The Champion'	405
Breakfasts and Concerts, &c., at Ranelagh	399	Passage from Fielding's 'Amelia'	406
Dr. Arne	400	Extracts from Goldsmith's 'Citizen of the World'	406
Musical performance at Vauxhall in 1749	400	The Water-works	406
Masquerades at Ranelagh	400	Advertisement in 'The London Chronicle'	407
Extract from the 'Connoisseur'	400	'The Aerial'	407
Business of Ranelagh	401	Prices of admission to Vauxhall	408
Passage from Miss Burney's 'Evelina'	401	Description of the present appearance of Vauxhall	409
Bloomfield's verses on Ranelagh	401	The Grove	409
The Rotunda pulled down	401	The Orchestra	409
Ranelagh entirely given up	401	The Hall of Mirrors	410
Vauxhall	402	The Theatre	410
First mention of Vauxhall as a place of amusement	402	The Italian Walk	410
Sir Roger de Coverley's visit to Vauxhall	402	The extraordinary feats of the Ravel Family	411
Faux Hall	403	Fire-works	411
Different proprietors of Vauxhall House	404	Description of D'Ernst's Fire-works	411
Dr. Samuel Meadland	404	The Tight-rope	411

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xiv

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.	Page
136. Ranelagh Gardens, Rotunda, &c., 1751	FAIRHOLT	HOLLOWAY	397
137. Vauxhall in 1751	"	"	402
138. Ladies of the Reign of George II., from Jeffery's Collection	"	SLADER	404
139. Costume, 1735, Mall in St. James's Park	"	SEARS	406
140. Vauxhall, 1841—The Ballet Theatre and Entrance to the Dark Walk	"	ANDREW	412

XXIV.—STREET SIGHTS.

	Page		Page
D'Avenant's 'Long Vacation in London'	413	Morris-dancers	421
Passage from D'Avenant's poem	413	Will Kemp's account of his dance from London to Norwich	421
The streets of London too busy for street sights	414	Motions, or puppet-shows	421
Tumblers	414	Jonson's puppet-show of 'Hero and Leander'	422
Joseph Clark, the posture-master	415	Punch and the Fantoccini	422
'Balance a straw'	415	Dancing dolls	423
Signor Violante, the slack-rope vaulter	416	Italian boys and monkeys	423
Cadman, the steeple-flyer	416	Beggars	424
Description of steeple-flying, from Strutt's 'Sports and Pastimes'	417	Extract from 'Elia'	424
Samuel Scott, the American diver	417	Raree-show	425
Death of Samuel Scott	418	The Industrious Fleas	425
Conjurers	418	Dancing bears	425
Chaucer's sleight-of-hand man	419	Delights of our ancestors in street sights	426
Chinese jugglers	419	Banks's horse Morocco	426
Conjurer of Cairo	419	Bishop Morton's story of Banks and Morocco	427
Fire-eaters	419	Fate of Banks and his horse	427
Mr. Powell, the fire-eater	419	Jonson's lines on Banks	427
Mountebanks	419	Bear-baiting sanctioned by Royal authority	427
Hearne's description of Dr. Andrew Borde	419	Telescopic exhibition in Leicester Square	428
The Hammersmith mountebank	420

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.	Page
141. Punch, 1841	W. LEE	F. SMYTH	413
142. Joseph Clark, from Tempest's Collection	FAIRHOLT	WRAGG	415
143. Faux, the Conjuror	"	"	416
144. Samuel Scott leaping from an Arch of Waterloo Bridge	ANLAY	MURDON	418
145. Mountebank, from Tempest's Collection	"	"	420
146. Dancing Dolls—Italian	FAIRHOLT	SLADER	420
147. Dancing Dolls—Hogarth's Southwark Fair	"	"	423
148. "Oh Raree Show!" from Tempest's Collection	"	KIRCHNER	425
149. Banks's Horse	"	"	426
150. Telescopic Exhibitions in the Streets, 1841	W. LEE	SEARS	428

XXV.—THE MONUMENT.

London at Sunrise	429	Account of the desolation caused by the Great Fire	436
Lines by Wordsworth	429	The ruin of St. Paul's	436
Description of the ascent	430	Miserable state of the citizens	436
View from the top of the Monument	430	The King's proclamation	436
The Tower, the Mint, and the Custom House	430	Alarm raised of the arrival of the French and Dutch	436
The bridges	431	The amount of destruction caused by the Fire	437
St. Paul's	431	Limits of the Fire	437
The natural basin of London	431	Estimate of the loss of property	437
Pepye's description of the breaking out of the Fire of London	432	Munificence of the King	437
Fairryner's evidence before a Committee of the House of Commons	432	Extract from 'The Conflagration of London Poetically Delineated'	438
Pepye's description of the progress of the Fire	432	Means employed to inquire into the origin of the Fire	438
The peculiar form of the great body of flame	433	Various evidence, taken before a Committee of the House of Parliament	438
Evelyn's description of the conflagration	434	Prophecies of Papists	438
Mr. Vincent's account of the extent of the cloud of smoke	434	The confession of Robert Hubert	438
The course of the Fire	434
Method used to check the Fire	435

ANALYTICAL TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE		PAGE
Evidence relating to fire-balls and other combustible matter thrown into houses	439	Sir Christopher Wren appointed principal architect for rebuilding the City	441
Insufficiency of evidence to prove the existence of a Popish plot for the destruction of London	439	Plan of the new City	441
Execution of Hubert	440	The difficulties encountered in rebuilding the City	442
Charitable conduct of the citizens	440	Wren's first design for the Monument	443
Court of Judicature	440	Inscriptions on the Monument	443
		Present improvements of London	444

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	Designers.	Engravers.
151. The Monument, 1841	SHEPHERD	SEARS	429
152. London during the Fire, from the Bankside, Southwark	FUSSELL	"	433
153. Burning of Newgate—Old St. Paul's in the background	"	NICHOLLS	435
154. Wren's Plan for Rebuilding the City	POYNTER	JACKSON	441
155. Wren's first Design for the Monument	A. POYNTER	"	443
156. The Monument, Eighteenth Century	FAIRHOLT	"	444

LONDON

'I pray you, let us satisfy our eyes
With the memorials, and the things of fame,
That do renown this city.'

It was an afternoon walk for the stranger who thus desired to 'see the reliques of some ancient Dalmatian town, whose Roman monuments covered a few acres. But London! in what time shall we visit her 'memorials,' so as to 'satisfy our eyes?' What amount of labour does it require to become acquainted with her 'things of fame?' A week, or a month, may indeed enable us to see those 'reliques' which every one sees; but 'memorials' as true and as interesting lie perishing or hidden in dark corners; and there are 'things of fame' in the meanest alleys. Their chief value, however, consists in the associations which they suggest; and these do not always lie upon the surface. To comprehend modern London we must 'make a stand upon the ancient way, and then look about us;' to be properly interested in ancient London we must turn from our old Chroniclers, and Topographers, and Poets, and Memoir-writers, and look upon its living scenes, ever changing in their outward forms, but essentially the slow growth of a long antiquity.

We propose in this spirit to produce a NEW WORK ON LONDON; and the principle which we have thus indicated of looking at the Present through the Past, and at the Past through the Present, requires that our Work shall be wholly different from any which has preceded it. It will neither be a 'Survey' of London, nor a 'History' of London. Its arrangement will neither be topographical nor chronological. It will not travel 'with tedious steps and slow' from Portsoken Ward to Westminster; nor begin at the beginning with King Lud, and end at the end with Queen Victoria. Nor will it, in point of fact, be ambitious of any classification. London, which Camden has called totius Britanniae epitome, is too vast a thing to be analysed, and sorted, and labelled,—at least in a book which will endeavour to combine amusement with information. The greatest and the meanest features of such a city lie mingled together, in the same way that the mightiest and the minutest works of Nature are presented to the observing eye. That traveller is to our minds the most faithful, the most entertaining, and perhaps the most scientific, who, whilst he is measuring the height of an Alpine mountain, makes himself familiar with the habits of the little marmot that burrows in its crevices.

The plan of publication which we shall adopt will also, in some degree, determine the miscellaneous character of the proposed work. We shall publish a Weekly Sheet, devoted, for the most part, to some portion of the great total of London which shall be complete in itself. This subject must necessarily be of no abstract nature—no mere disquisition upon remote and lifeless matters—but something which can be seen, and thus copied for the reader's eye, or made more intelligible by the graphic art. OUR LONDON WILL BE PICTORIAL. The several artists of eminence who will be engaged upon this undertaking will labour upon a well-defined principle—that of uniting to the imaginative power the strictest fidelity in every detail of Architecture and Costume. In the same spirit will the writers work. The time is past when it was thought that what was accurate could not be amusing; and in the great subject before us, whether in its modern or its ancient aspects, the truest delineation will, unquestionably, be the most interesting.

Of the probable extent of this work the editor can at present form no very exact notion. It is the less necessary that he should do so, as every number, every part, and every volume, will be, as far as it goes, complete in itself. If the encouragement of the public should enable this work to be carried forward to something like a general completeness, its miscellaneous character may be reduced into system by chronological and topographical Indexes. But, as it proceeds, it will have all the charm of variety. For example:—A Memoir on the Maps of London for three centuries, showing the gradual spread of the great Babel, may fitly be in company with a picture of its locomotive facilities, through all the phases of Wherry, Sedan, Hackney Coach, Cabriolet, Omnibus, and Steam-Boat. We may linger about Smithfield, with its horse-races of the days of Henry II., its tournaments, its wagers of battle, its penances, its martyrdoms, its Bartholomew fairs, and its cattle-market, without feeling that any of its associations are incongruous or unworthy of description and reflection. The Cock-Lane Ghost is a matter of history as much as the records of that fatal Traitor's Gate of the Tower, over which might have been written the terrible words of Dante—

‘All hope abandon, ye who enter here.’

The City Poet, with his tawdry Lord Mayor's state and doggerel verses, belongs to the social history of London as distinctly as the classical inventor of the Masques in which James and Charles delighted. The Christmas revels of the Lord of Misrule in the Temple, and the triumphant entry of Henry V. after the battle of Agincourt, have each had their historians, and they may each form episodes in our pages. Tempest drew from the life the Cries of London in the days of Anne, and they may be found in company with some account of Catnach's ballads in our day. The glorious picture-satires of Hogarth may tell us of a generation that is past, whilst the splendid caricatures of Gillray may slide into the generation that is present.

There are many aspects of Society in London which are not fit to be described; there are scenes, past and present, which are improper to be exhibited to the general eye. Those which a parent would not wish his child to look upon will never be delineated in this book. We shall not, however, from any false refinement, confine ourselves to what is the most agreeable. All reasoning beings should know that there is crime, and ignorance, and suffering, and sorrow, in such an immense city, as well as propriety, and elegance, and comfort, and pleasure.

But, by a careful attention to what we are and what we were—to our improvements, as well as to some things in which we begin to find out we have not improved—we may indirectly show how the condition of every Londoner is to be ameliorated; and how, by diminishing ignorance, we may diminish crime; and, by cultivating innocent pleasures, do something to drive out unlawful excitements.

We have a few observations to add. Such a work as we hope to produce may interest every English reader, whether he be a resident in London or in Australia. It treats of the largest city in the world,—whose inhabitants are in intercourse, commercial, political, or religious, with almost the whole human race,—which has been the scene of the most stirring events of history,—which has been a city of progress from its first foundation,—which has sent forth its literature through four centuries to the uttermost ends of the earth,—and which is full, therefore, not only of material monuments of the past, but of the more abiding memorials which exist in imperishable books. If the Tabard Inn at Southwark is now but a waggoner's yard, with its accompanying liquor-shop and tap-room, we have Chaucer's immortal picture of 'that hostelrie,' and its guests—

'Well nine-and-twenty in a compaignie
Of sundry folk;—'

and he will tell us

'The chambres and the stables weren wide.'

If East Cheap has lost all its ancient characteristics in the improvements of London Bridge, Lydgate will show us that there

'Pewter pots they clattered on a heap;
There was harp, pipe, and minstrelsy.'

If Finsbury and Islington are covered with interminable rows of houses, Ben Jonson shall call to mind 'the archiers' of Finsbury, or the citizens that come a-ducking to Islington ponds.' If Spring Garden be no longer green, Garrard, the gossiping correspondent of the great Lord Strafford, shall inform us of its 'Bowling,' its 'Ordinary of six shillings a-meal, continual bibbing and drinking wine all day long under the trees, and two or three quarrels every week.' If the Devil Tavern, with its Apollo Club, has perished, Squire Western's favourite song of 'Old Sir Simon the King' shall bring back the memory of Simon Wadloc, its landlord, with Jonson's verses over the door of the Apollo Room. If the River Fleet no longer runs across Holborn, Pope shall recall that polluted stream,—

'Than whom no sluice of mud
With deeper sable blots the silver flood.'

If the glories of White's, and Will's, and the Grecian, and the St. James's, have passed away, in the fall of Coffeehouses and the rise of Clubs,—if the stranger can no longer expect to walk without obstruction into a common room where wit is as current as tea and muffins, and a Dryden stands by the fire with a young Pope gazing upon him,—he may yet live in the social life of the days of Anne, and people the solitary Coffeehouses with imaginary Swifts, and Addisons, and Steeles. Such, and so various, are the literary 'memorials' of London; and these literary 'memorials' are, in truth, amongst her best antiquities. As a city of progress, her material remains of the past are comparatively few; but the mightiest of the earth—those who have made our language immortal and universal—have dwelt within her walls, and their records have outlived brick and stone.

To one of observation, and reflection, and adequate knowledge, everything in London is suggestive. In her external features we read the history of her past, and the description of her present social state.

‘The things of fame
That do renown this city,’—

Churches, palaces, theatres, exhibitions, courts of justice, prisons, hospitals,—parks, squares, streets, bridges, wharfs, docks, warehouses, markets, shops, factories, inns,—pavements, sewers, gas-lights, water-pipes,—post-offices, railroads, steam-boats, public carriages—have each their tale of that mighty stirring of Humanity which in its aggregate is a spectacle of real sublimity unequalled in the world. It is the more sublime and the more wonderful that all this mass—with its manifold associations of Government, Municipal Arrangements, Police, Supply of Food, Population, Disease, Mortality, Industry, Wealth, Poverty, Crime, Religion, Charity, Education, Literature, Science, Arts, Amusements, Dress, Manners, Domestic Life—is ever-growing and ever-changing. While we are putting down the figures the facts are shifting. We shall not, therefore, trouble our readers with many figures. But the great aspects of London humanity are written in tolerably permanent characters, whether of the past or the present. It will be our duty sometimes to digest the abiding facts that are not likely to elude our vision or our grasp—sometimes to ‘Catch ere she flies the Cynthia of the minute.’

If what is permanent, and what is fleeting, shall be found equally without attraction, the fault will be in ourselves and not in our subject. The interest of that subject we believe to be universal. The features of such a city, physical and moral, present and antiquarian, if truly and strikingly presented, are to be looked upon with interest and curiosity, by the stranger as well as the citizen who daily hears the sound of Bow-bell. London is not England, as Paris is said to be France; neither is she the head and England the body, as used to be set down, but she is so identified with the whole empire—she absorbs and returns again so much of the general prosperity—that what belongs to her belongs to all. To the British public, then, we offer, in confident hope of their support, our

[Richard II. and Gower.]

I.—THE SILENT HIGHWAY.

ONE of the most remarkable pictures of ancient manners which has been transmitted to us is that in which the poet Gower describes the circumstances under which he was commanded by King Richard II.

“To make a book after his best.”

The good old rhymers,—“the moral Gower,” as Chaucer calls him,—who probably resided in Southwark, where his monument may yet be seen in the church of St. Mary Overies, had taken boat; and upon the broad river he met the king in his stately barge. It was an accidental meeting, he tells us. The monarch, who had come most probably from his palace of Westminster, where even thousands ministered, it is said, to his luxurious tastes, espied the familiar face of the minstrel, and stopped him upon that great highway of London, which was an open road for the meanest as for the highest. He called him on board his own vessel, and desired him to book “some new thing.” This was the origin of the ‘Confessio Amantis.’ But the poet shall record the story in his own simple words:—

“As it befel upon a tide,
As thing which should then betide,
Under the towné of New Troy,
Which took of Brute his firsté joy;

In Thames, when it was flowing,
 As I by boaté came rowing,
 So as fortune her time set,
 My liege lord perchance I met,
 And so befel, as I came nigh,
 Out of my boat, when he me sygh,*
 He bade me come into his barge :
 And when I was with him at large,
 Among other thingés said
 He hath this charge upon me laid,
 And bade me do my business,
 That to his high worthiness
 Some new thingé I should book,
 That he himself it might look,
 After the form of my writing.
 And thus upon his commanding.
 Mine hearté is well the more glad
 To writé so as he me bade."

Nothing can be more picturesque than this description, and nothing can more forcibly carry us into the very heart of the past. With the exception of some of the oldest portions of the Tower of London, there is scarcely a brick or a stone left standing that may present to us a memorial of "the king's chamber"† of four hundred and fifty years ago. There, indeed, is the river, still flowing and still ebbing,—the most ancient thing we can look upon,—which made London what it was and what it is. Nearly all that then adorned its banks has perished; and many of the stirring histories of the busy life that moved upon its waters have become to us as obscure as the legend of "New Troy." But the poet calls upon our imagination to fill up the void.

One of the most ancient pictorial representations of London which exists is of a date some fifty years later than the poem we have quoted. It is found in a manuscript preserved in the British Museum, and represents the captivity of the Duke of Orleans in the Tower. The manuscript itself, which consists of the poems of the royal captive, was probably copied in the time of Henry VI.; but the illumination purports to represent the London of an earlier date, with its bridge, its lofty-spired cathedral, its numerous churches, its gabled houses. Under these walls we may imagine the poet and his patron to have glided, amidst crowded wherries, and attendant barges, and the merry sounds of song and clarion, and the shouts of the people. Often had the "imaginative" king so passed between his palace of Westminster and his Tower of London. But the state was to end in misery, and degradation, and a solitary and mysterious death.

The 'Prologue' of Gower, in the true spirit of the romantic times, tells us of the town which was founded by the Trojan Brute. Here was the fable which the middle-age minstrels rejoiced in, and which History has borrowed from Poetry without any compromise of her propriety. The origin of nations must be fabulous; and if we would penetrate into the dark past we must be satisfied with the torch-light which fable presents to us. We commend, therefore, the belief of the good citizens of London, who, in the time of Henry VI., sent the king a copy of an ancient tract, which says of London. "According to the credit of chronicles it is considerably older than Rome; and that it was, by the same Trojan author, built by Brute, after the likeness of great Troy, before that built by Romulus and Remus. Whence to this day it useth and enjoyeth the ancient city Troy's liberties, rights, and customs:"* This is dealing with a legend in a business-like manner, worthy of grave aldermen and sheriffs. Between Brute and Richard II. there is a long interval; and the chroniclers have filled it up with many pleasant stories, and the antiquarians have embellished it with many ingenious theories. We must leap over all these. One ancient writer, however, who speaks from his own knowledge,—William Fitz-Stephen, who died in 1191,—has left us a record in his 'Description of London,' which will take us back a few hundred years further. The original is in Latin. "The wall of the city is high and great, continued with seven gates, which are made double, and on the north distinguished with turrets by spaces: likewise on the south London hath been enclosed with walls and towers, but the large river of Thames, well stored with fish, and in which the tide ebbs and flows, by continuance of time hath washed, worn away, and cast down those walls." Here, then, six hundred and fifty years ago, we find the river-bank of London in the same state as described by Sir Thomas More in his imaginary capital of Amaurote:—"The city is compassed about with a high and thick stone wall, full of turrets and bulwarks. A dry ditch, but deep and broad, and overgrown with bushes, briars, and thorns, goeth about three sides or quarters of the city. To the fourth side the river itself serveth as a ditch."† The Saxon chronicle tells us that in the year 1052 Earl Godwin, with his navy, passed along the southern side of the river, and so assailed the walls. A hundred and fifty years after, in the time of Fitz-Stephen, the walls were gone. About the same period arose the stone bridge of London; but that has perished before the eyes of our own generation.

Saw.

† Camera Regia; which title, immediately after the Norman Conquest, London began to have.—CAMDEN.

There is another passage in Fitz-Stephen which takes us, as do most of his descriptions, into the every-day life of the ancient Londoners—their schools, their feasting, and their sports:—

"In Easter holidays they fight battles on the water. A shield is hanged on a pole, fixed in the midst of the stream; a boat is prepared without oars, to be carried by violence of the water, and in the forepart thereof standeth a young man, ready to give charge upon the shield with his lance. If so be he break his lance against the shield and doth not fall, he is thought to have performed a worthy deed. If so be, without breaking his lance, he runneth strongly against the shield, down he falleth into the water, for the boat is violently forced with the tide; but on each side of the shield ride two boats, furnished with two young men, which recover him that falleth as soon as they may. Upon the bridge, wharfs, and houses by the river-side,‡ stand great numbers to see and laugh thereat."

The sport, which may be still seen amongst the watermen of the Seine, and of the Rhine, was the delight of the bold youth of London in the days of Henry II. Fitz-Stephen tells us of this amongst the sports of the people generally; and the cir-

* Stow, book i.

† Utopia, b. ii. c. ii.

‡ We give the translation of Stow, but he appears here to have taken a little licence with the original:—"Supra pontem et in solaris supra fluvium."

LONDON.

cumstance shows that they were accustomed to exercise themselves upon their noble river. Four centuries afterwards Stow saw a somewhat similar game:—"I have seen also in the summer season, upon the river of Thames, some rowed in wherries, with staves in their hands, flat at the fore-end, running one against another, and, for the most part, one or both of them were overthrown and well ducked." Of the antiquity of these customs we have evidence in two drawings of a beautiful illuminated 'History of the Old Testament,' &c., of the fourteenth century, in the British Museum. Howel says, "There was in former times a sport used upon the Thames, which is now discontinued: it was for two wherries to row, and run one against the other, with staves in their hands, flat at the fore-end; which kind of recreation is much practised amongst the gondolas of Venice."*

[Water Quintain.]

[Water Tournaments.]

From the time of Fitz-Stephen to that of Gower we may readily conceive that the water-communication between one part of London and another, and between

London and Westminster, was constantly increasing. A portion of London Bridge was moveable, which enabled vessels of burden to pass up the river to unload at Queenhithe and other wharfs. Stairs (called bridges) and Water-gates studded the shores of both cities. Palaces arose, such as the Savoy, where the powerful nobles kept almost regal state. The Courts of Law were fixed at Westminster; and thither the citizens and strangers from the country daily resorted, preferring the easy highway of the Thames to the almost impassable road that led from Westminster to the village of Charing, and onward to London. John Lydgate, who wrote in the time of Henry V., has left us a very curious poem, which we shall often have occasion to refer to, entitled 'London Lyckpeny.' He gives us a picture of his coming to London to obtain legal redress of some grievance, but without money to pursue his suit. Upon quitting Westminster Hall, he says,

"Then to Westminster Gate I presently went."

This is undoubtedly the Water-gate; and, without describing anything beyond the cooks, whom he found busy with their bread and beef at the gate, "when the sun was at high prime," he adds,

"Then unto London I did me hie."

By water he no doubt went, for through Charing he would have made a day's journey. Wanting money, he has no choice but to return to the country; and having to go "into Kent," he applies to the watermen at Billingsgate:—

"Then hied I me to Billingsgate,
And one cried hoo—go we hence:
I pray'd a bargeman, for God's sake,
That he would spare me my expense.
Thou scap'st not here, quoth he, under two pence."

We have a corroboration of the accuracy of this picture in Lambard's 'Perambulation of Kent.' The old topographer informs us that in the time of Richard II. the inhabitants of Milton and Gravesend agreed to carry in their boats, from London to Gravesend, a passenger, with his truss or farthell, for two-pence.

The poor Kentish suitor, without two-pence in his pocket to pay the Gravesend bargemen, takes his solitary way on foot homeward. The gate where he was welcomed with the cry of hoo—ho, ahoy—was the great landing-place of the coasting-vessels; and the king here anciently took his toll upon imports and exports. The Kentishman comes to Billingsgate from Cornhill; but it was not an uncommon thing for boats, even in those times, to accomplish the feat of passing through the fall occasioned by the narrowness of the arches of London Bridge; and the loss of life in these adventures was not an unfrequent occurrence. Gifford, in a note upon a passage in Ben Jonson's 'Staple of News,' says somewhat pettishly of the old bridge, "had an alderman or a turtle been lost there, the nuisance would have been long since removed." A greater man than an alderman—John Mowbray, the second Duke of Norfolk—nearly perished there in 1428. This companion of the glories of Henry V. took his barge at St. Mary Overies, with many a gentleman, squire, and yeoman, "and prepared to pass through London Brigg. Whereof the foresaid barge, through misgovernment of steering, fell upon the piles and overwhelmed. The which was cause of spilling many a gentle man, and other; the more ruth was! But as God would, the Duke himself, and two or three other gentle men, seeing that mischief, leaped up on the piles, and so were saved through help of them that were above the brigg, with casting down of ropes."* But there were landing-places in abundance between Westminster and London Bridge, so that a danger such as this was not necessary to be incurred. When the unfortunate Eleanor Cobham, Duchess of Gloucester, was condemned to do penance in London, in three open places, on three several days, she was brought by water from Westminster; and on the 13th November, 1440, was put on shore at the Temple bridge; on the 15th, at the Old Swan; and, on the 17th, at Queenhithe. Here, exactly four centuries ago, we have the same stairs described by the same names as we find at the present day. • The Old Swan (close to London Bridge) was the Old Swan in the time of Henry VI., as it continued to be in the time of Elizabeth. If we turn to the earliest maps of London we find, in the same way, Broken Wharf, and Paul's Wharf, and Essex Stairs, and Whitehall Stairs. The abiding-places of the watermen appear to have been as unchanging as their thoroughfare—the same river ever gliding, and the same inlets from that broad and cheerful highway to the narrow and gloomy streets.

The watermen of London, like every other class of the people, were once-musical; and their "oars kept time" to many a harmony, which, if not so poetical as the song of the gondoliers, was full of the heart of merry England. The old city chronicler, Fabyan, tells us that John Norman, Mayor of London (he held this dignity in 1454), was "the first of all mayors who brake that ancient and old-continued custom of riding to Westminster upon the morrow of Simon and Jude's day." John Norman "was rowed thither by water, for the which the Watermen made of him a roundel, or song, to his great praise, the which began,

‘Row the boat, Norman, row to thy leman.’”

The watermen's ancient chorus, as we collect from old ballads, was “Heave and how, rumbelow;”

and their burden was still the same in the time of Henry VIII., not forgetting, “Row the boat, Norman.”† Well might the first mayor who carried the pomp of the city to the great Thames, and made “The barge he sat in, like a burnish'd throne, Burn on the water,”

deserve the praises of watermen in all time! We could willingly spare many more intrinsically valuable things than the city water-pageant; for it takes us even now into the old forms of life; and if it shows us more than all other pageants something of the perishableness of power and dignity, it has a fine, antique grandeur about it, and tells us that London, and what belongs to London, are not of yesterday.

We every now and then turn up in the old Chronicles, and Memoirs, and Letters that have been rescued from mice and mildew, some graphic description of the use of the river as the common highway of London. These old writers were noble hands at scene-painting. What a picture Hall gives us of the populousness of the Thames!—the perfect contrast to Wordsworth's

“The river glideth at his own sweet will”— in the story which he tells us of the Archbishop of York, after leaving the widow Harl. MS., No. 565, quoted in ‘Chronicles of London Bridge.’

† Skelton.

of Edward IV. in the sanctuary of Westminster, sitting "alone below on the rushes, all desolate and dismayed," returning home to York Place in the dawning of the day; "and when he opened his windows and looked on the Thames, he might see the river full of boats of the Duke of Gloucester his servants, watching that no person should go to sanctuary, nor none should pass unsearched." Cavendish, in his 'Life of Wolsey,' furnishes as graphic a description of the great Cardinal hurrying to and fro on the highway of the Thames, between his imperious master and the injured Katharine, when Henry had become impatient of the tedious conferences of the Court at Blackfriars sitting on the question of his divorce, and desired to throw down with the strong hand the barriers that kept him from the Lady Anne:—"Thus this court passed from session to session, and day to day, in so much that a certain day the king sent for my lord at the breaking up one day of the court to come to him into Bridewell. And to accomplish his commandment he went unto him, and being there with him in communication in his grace's privy chamber from eleven until twelve of the clock and past at noon, my lord came out and departed from the king, and took his barge at the Black Friars, and so went to his house at Westminster. The Bishop of Carlisle, being with him in his barge, said unto him, (wiping the sweat from his face,) 'Sir,' quoth he, 'it is a very hot day.' 'Yea,' quoth my Lord Cardinal, 'if ye had been as well chafed as I have been within this hour, ye would say it were very hot.'" Between Westminster and the Tower, and the Tower and Greenwich, the Thames was especially the royal road. When Henry VII. willed the coronation of his Queen Elizabeth, she came from Greenwich attended by "barges freshly furnished with banners and streamers of silk." When Henry VIII. avowed his marriage with Anne Boleyn, she was brought by "all the crafts of London" from Greenwich to the Tower, "trumpets, shawms, and other divers instruments, all the way playing and making great melody." The river was not only the festival highway, but the more convenient one, for kings as well as subjects. Hall tells us, "This year (1536), in December, was the Thames of London all frozen over, wherefore the king's majesty, with his beautiful spouse Queen Jane, rode throughout the city of London to Greenwich." The interesting volume of the 'Privy Purse Expenses of Henry VIII.' contains item upon item of sums paid to watermen for waiting with barge and boat. The barge was evidently always in attendance upon the king; and the great boat was ever busy, moving household stuff and servants from Westminster to Greenwich or to Richmond. In 1531 we have a curious evidence of the king being deep in his polemical studies, in a record of payment "to John, the king's bargeman, for coming twice from Greenwich to York Place with a great boat with books for the king." We see the "great Eliza" on the Thames, in all her pomp, as Raleigh saw her out of his prison-window in the Tower, in 1592, as described in a letter from Arthur Gorges to Cecil:—"Upon a report of her majesty's being at Sir George Carew's, Sir W. Raleigh, having gazed and sighed a long time at his study-window, from whence he might discern the barges and boats about the Blackfriars stairs, suddenly he brake out into a great distemper, and sware that his enemies had on purpose brought her majesty thither to break his gall in sunder with Tantalus' torment, that when she went away he might see death before his eyes; with many such-like conceits. And, as a man transported with passion, he swore to Sir George Carew that he would disguise himself, and get into a pair of oars to ease his mind with but a sight of the queen." In the time of Elizabeth and the First James, and onward to very recent days, the North bank of the Thames was studded with the palaces of the nobles; and each palace had its landing-place, and its private retinue of barges and wherries; and many a freight of the brave and beautiful has been borne, amidst song and merriment, from house to house, to join the masque and the dance; and many a wily statesman, muffled in his cloak, has glided along unseen in his boat to some dark conference with his ambitious neighbour. Nothing could then have been more picturesque than the Strand, with its broad gardens, and lofty trees, and embattled turrets and pinnacles. Upon the river itself, busy as it was, fleets of swans were ever sailing; and they ventured unmolested into that channel which is now narrowed by vessels from every region. Paulus Jovius, who died in 1552, describing the Thames, says, "This river abounds in swans, swimming in flocks; the sight of whom, and their noise, are vastly agreeable to the fleets that meet them in their course." Shakspeare must have seen this sight, when he made York compare the struggle of his followers at the battle of Wakefield to a swan encountering a tidal stream:—

"As I have seen a swan,
With bootless labour swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves."

But there were those, during three centuries, to whom the beauties of the silent highway could have offered no pleasure. The Thames was the road by which the victim of despotism came from the Tower to Westminster Hall, in most cases to return to his barge with the edge of the axe towards his face. One example is enough to suggest many painful recollections. When the Duke of Buckingham was conducted from his trial to the barge, "Sir Thomas Lovel desired him to sit on the cushions and carpet ordained for him. He said, 'Nay; for when I went to Westminster I was Duke of Buckingham; now I am but Edward Bohun, the most caitiff of the world.'"[†] But these exhibitions, frequent as they were, occupied little of the thoughts of those who were moving upon the Thames, in hundreds of boats, intent upon business or amusement. In the beginning of the seventeenth century the river was at the height of its glory as the great thoroughfare of London. Howel maintains that the river of Thames hath not her fellow, "if regard be had to those forests of masts which are perpetually upon her; the variety of smaller wooden bottoms playing up and down; the stately palaces that are built upon both sides of her banks so thick; which made divers foreign ambassadors affirm that the most glorious sight in the world, take water and land together, was to come upon a high tide from Gravesend, and shoot the bridge to Westminster."[‡] Of the "smaller wooden bottoms," Stow computes that there were in his time as many as two thousand; and he makes the very extraordinary statement, that there were forty thousand watermen upon the rolls of the company, and that they could furnish twenty thousand men for the fleet. The private watermen of the court and of the nobility were doubtless included in this large number. It is evident, from the representations of a royal procession in the early times of James I., that, even on common occasions, the sovereign moved upon the Thames with regal pomp, surrounded with many boats of guards and musicians :—

[†] Henry VI., part III.

[‡] Hall.

[‡] Londinopolis, p. 493.

[Procession of James I. on the Thames.]

The Inns of Court, too, filled as they were not only with the great practitioners of the law, but with thousands of wealthy students, gave ample employment to the watermen. Upon the marriage of the Princess Elizabeth to the Palatine, in 1613, the gentlemen of the Inner Temple and Gray's Inn presented a sumptuous masque at court. "These maskers, with their whole train in all triumphant manner and good order, took barge at Winchester Stairs, about seven of the clock that night, and rowed to Whitehall against the tide: the chief maskers went in the king's barge royally adorned, and plenteously furnished with a great number of great wax lights, that they alone made a glorious show: other gentlemen went in the prince's barge, and certain other went in other fair barges, and were led by two admirals: besides all these, they had four lusty warlike galleys to convoy and attend them; each barge and galley, being replenished with store of torch-lights, made so rare and brave a show upon the water, as the like was never seen upon the Thames."* When Charles was created Prince of Wales, in 1616, he came from Barn Elms to Whitehall in great aquatic state. In 1625, when Henrietta Maria arrived in London (June 16), "the king and queen in the royal barge, with many other barges of honour and thousands of boats, passed through London Bridge to Whitehall; infinite numbers, besides these, in wherries, standing in houses, ships, lighters, western barges, and on each side of the shore."† What a contrast does this splendour and rejoicing present to the scene which a few years disclosed!—"The barge-windows," (says Mr. Mead, the writer of this letter,) "notwithstanding the vehement shower, were open: and all the people shouting amain. She put out her hand, and shook it unto them." The Whitehall, to which the daughter of Henri Quatre was thus conveyed, had another tale to tell in some twenty-three years; and the long tragedy of the fated race of the Stuarts almost reaches its catastrophe, when, in a cold winter night of 1688, the wife of James II. takes a common boat at Whitehall to fly with her child to some place of safety; and when in a few weeks later the fated king steps into a barge, surrounded by Dutch guards, amidst the triumph of his enemies, and the pity even of those good men who blamed his obstinacy and rashness: "I saw him take barge," says Evelyn,—“a sad sight.” But let us turn from political changes to those more enduring revolutions which changes of manners produce.

Howes' Continuation of Stow's Annals, p. 1007.

† Ellis's Letters, vol. iii. p. 196.

We have before us a goodly folio volume of some six or seven hundred pages, closely printed, and containing about seventy thousand lines, for the most part of heroic verse, entitled “All the Works of John Taylor, the Water-Poet, being sixty and three in number, collected into one volume by the Author.”* John Taylor, who made this collection of his tracts in 1630, was literally a Thames waterman, working daily for his bread. He says,

“I have a trade, much like an alchemist,
That oft-times by extraction, if I list,
With sweating labour at a wooden oar
I'll get the coin'd, refined, silver ore;
Which I count better than the sharpening tricks
Of cozening tradesmen, or rich politicks,
Or any proud fool, ne'er so proud or wise,
That does my heedful honest trade despise.”†

The waterman's verses are not so ambitious as those of the Venetian gondolier, Antonio Bianchi, who wrote an epic poem in twelve cantos; but they possess a great deal of rough vigour, and altogether open to us very curious views of London manners in the early part of the seventeenth century. Taylor is never ashamed of his trade; and he cannot endure it to be supposed that his waterman's vocation is incompatible with the sturdiest assertion of his rights to the poetical dignity:—

“It chanc'd one evening, on a reedy bank,
The Muses sat together in a rank;
Whilst in my boat I did by water wander,
Repeating lines of Hero and Leander:
The triple three took great delight in that;
Call'd me ashore, and caus'd me sit and chat,
And in the end, when all our talk was done,
They gave to me a draught of Helicor,
Which proved to me a blessing and a curse,
To fill my pate with verse, and empty my purse.”‡

In one of his controversies—for he generally had some stiff quarrel on hand with wittlings who looked down upon him—he says, addressing William Fennor, “the king's rhyming poet,” “Thou say'st that Poetry descended is

From Poverty: thou tak'st thy mark amiss.
In spite of weal or woe, or want of pelf,
It is a kingdom of content itself.”

Such a spirit would go far to make a writer whose works would be worth looking

* Taylor, after the publication of this volume, printed about fifty more tracts, in prose and verse.

† Taylor's Motto, p. 50.

‡ Ibid., p. 55.

at two centuries after the praise or abuse of his contemporaries was forgotten; and so homely John Taylor, amongst the race of satirists and manner-painters, is not to be despised. "The gentleman-like sculler at the Hope on the Bank-side" (as he makes Fennor call him) lived in a poetical atmosphere. He probably had the good fortune to ferry Shakspeare from Whitehall to Paris Garden; he boasts of his acquaintance with Ben Jonson; and the cause of his great quarrel with Fennor is thus set forth: "Be it known unto all men, that I, John Taylor, waterman, did agree with William Fennor (who arrogantly and falsely entitles himself the King's Majesty's Rhyming Poet) to answer me at a trial of wit, on the 7th of October last, 1614, at the Hope Stage on the Bank-side; and when the day came that the play should have been performed, the house being filled with a great audience who had all spent their money extraordinarily, then this companion for an ass ran away and left me for a fool, amongst thousands of critical censurers." Taylor had taken his waterman's position in a spot where there was a thriving trade. The Bankside was the landing-place to which the inhabitants of Westminster, and of the Strand, and of London west of Paul's, would daily throng in the days of the Drama's glory; when the Globe could boast of the highest of the land amongst its visitors; when Essex and Southampton, out of favour at court, repaired thither to listen, unsatiated, to the lessons of the great master of philosophy; when crowds of earnest people, not intent only upon amusement, went there to study their country's history, or learn the "humanities" in a school where the poet could dare to proclaim universal truths in an age of individual dissimulation; and when even the idle profligate might for a moment forget his habits of self-indulgence, and be roused into sympathy with his fellows, by the art which then triumphed, and still triumphs, over all competition. Other places of amusement were on the Bankside—the Paris

[Palace Yard Stairs, 1641.]

Garden, the Rose, and the Hope playhouses; and in earlier times, and even when the drama had reached its highest point of popular attraction, on the same spot were the "Bear-houses"—places of resort not only for the rude multitude, but to which Elizabeth carried the French ambassador to exhibit the courage of English bull-dogs. Imagine Southwark, the peculiar ground of summer theatres and circi, with no bridge but that of London, and we may easily understand that John Taylor sang the praises of the river with his whole heart:—

"But noble Thames, whilst I can hold a pen,
I will divulge thy glory unto men:
Thou in the morning, when my coin is scant,
Before the evening doth supply my want."*

But the empire of the watermen was destined to be invaded; and its enemies approached to its conquest, after the Tartarian fashion, with mighty chariots crowded with multitudes. Taylor was not slow to complain of this change. In his 'Thief,' published in 1622, he tells us that,

"When Queen Elizabeth came to the crown,
A coach in England then was scarcely known;"

and he adds, "'tis not fit" that

"Fulsome madams, and new scurvy squires,
Should jolt the streets at pomp, at their desires,
Like great triumphant Tamburlaines, each day,
Drawn with the pamper'd jades of Belgia,
That almost all the streets are chok'd outright,
Where men can hardly pass, from morn till night,
Whilst watermen want work."

In a prose tract, published in the following year, Taylor goes forth to the attack upon "coaches" with great vehemence, but with a conviction that his warfare will not be successful: "I do not inveigh against any coaches that belong to persons of worth or quality, but only against the caterpillar swarm of hirelings. They have undone my poor trade, whereof I am a member; and though I look for no reformation, yet I expect the benefit of an old proverb, 'Give the losers leave to speak.'"[†] He maintains that "this infernal swarm of trade-spillers (coaches) have so overrun the land that we can get no living upon the water; for I dare truly affirm that every day in any term, especially if the court be at Whitehall, they do rob us of our livings, and carry five hundred sixty fares daily from us." This is a very exact computation, formed perhaps upon personal enumeration of the number of hired coaches passing to Westminster. He naturally enough contrasts the quiet of his own highway with the turmoil of the land-thoroughfare: "I pray you look into the streets, and the chambers or lodgings in Fleet Street or the Strand, how they are pestered with them (coaches), especially after a mask or a play at the court, where even the very earth quakes and trembles, the casements shatter, tatter, and clatter, and such a confused noise is made, so that a man can neither sleep, speak, hear, write, or eat his dinner or supper quiet for them." The history of this innovation we shall have to recount in a future paper. The irruption of coaches must have been as fearful a calamity to John Taylor and his fraternity in those days, as the establishment of railroads has been to postmasters and postboys in our own. These transitions diminish something of the pleasure with which we must ever contemplate a state of progress ; but the evil is temporary and the good is permanent, and when we look back upon the past we learn to estimate the evil and the good upon broad principles. Half-a-century hence, a London without railroads, that inns and stages might be maintained, would appear as ludicrous a notion as that of a London without carriages, that John Taylor might row his wherry in prosperity, gladdened every day by the smiles of ladies, "whose ancient lodgings were near St. Katharine's, the Bankside, Lambeth Marsh, Westminster, Whitefryars, Coleharbor, or any other place near the Thames, who were wont to take a boat and air themselves upon the water,"—and not have to complain that "every Gill Turntripe, Mistress Fumkins, Madam Polecat, and my Lady Trash, Froth the Tapster, Bill the Tailor, Lavender the Broker, Whiff the Tobacco-seller, with their companion trugs, must be coach'd to Saint Alban's, Burntwood, Hockley-in-the-hole, Croydon, Windsor, Uxbridge, and many other places."* Peace be to honest John Taylor. He was the prince of scullers ; for he rowed in a wherry "that had endured near four years' pilgrimage," from London to York, on one occasion ; made what he calls "a discovery by sea from London to Salisbury," on another voyage ; and passed, "in a sculler's boat," from London to Hereford, on a third adventure. He never bated "one jot of heart or hope," and yet the coaches, and other evil accidents, drove him from his waterman's trade, and he finished his eccentric career as a victualler at Oxford, writing against sectaries and schismatics, and filling bumpers to prerogative, on to a good old age.

* Praise of Hemp-seed.

† The World runs on Wheels.

The revolutions of half-a-century made wonderful changes in the aspect of the Thames. The Restoration found the famous old theatres swept away, and the ancient mansions towards the east invaded by the traders. Wharfs took the place of trim gardens ; and if the nobleman still kept his state-boat, the dirty coal-barge was anchored by its side. D'Avenant has given a description of this state of things, which he puts into the mouth of a Frenchman :—

"You would think me a malicious traveller if I should still gaze on your misshapen streets and take no notice of the beauty of your river ; therefore I will pass the importunate noise of your watermen (who snatch at fares as if they were to catch prisoners, plying the gentry so uncivilly, as if they never had rowed any other passengers but bear-wards), and now step into one of your peascod-boats, whose tilts are not so sumptuous as the roofs of gondolas, nor, when you are within, are you at the ease of chaise à bras. The commodity and trade of your river belongs to yourselves ; but give a stranger leave to share in the pleasure of it, which will hardly be in the prospect or freedom of air ; unless prospect, consisting of variety, be made up with here a palace, there a wood-yard, here a garden, there a brewhouse ; here dwells a lord, there a dyer, and between both duomo comune. If freedom of air be inferred in the liberty of the subject, where every private man hath authority, for his own profit, to smoke up a magistrate, then the air of your Thames is open enough, because 'tis equally free."†

It is easy to perceive that during the progress of these changes—all indicating the advance of the middle classes, and the general extension of public accommodation and individual comfort—the river was every day becoming less and less a general highway for passengers. The streets from Westminster to St. Paul's were paved, after a fashion ; the foot-passenger could make his way, though with some danger and difficulty ; and the coach, though sometimes stuck in a hole, and sometimes rudely jostled by the brewer's cart, did progress through the Strand and Holborn. But the time was approaching when the great capital would find out that one bridge was somewhat insufficient, and that ferries and wherries were uncertain and inconvenient modes of passage from one shore to another. Westminster Bridge was finished about 1750. In sixty or seventy years later, London could number six bridges, the noblest structures of the modern world. Alas, for the watermen ! They were a cheerful race, and Dogget did a wise thing when he endowed the river with his annual coat and badge. But they have gradually dwindled—and where are they now ? They are not even wanted for the small commerce of the Thames. Steam-vessels bring every possible variety of lading up the river, where formerly the little hoys had their share of a coasting-trade ; and the market-cart has entirely appropriated to itself the vegetable burthens of Covent-garden. Steele has given us a lively description of a boat-trip from Richmond in an early summer-morning, when he “fell in with a fleet of gardeners.” . . . “Nothing remarkable happened in our voyage ; but I landed with ten sail of apricock-boats at Strand bridge, after having put in at Nine Elms, and taken in melons.”* Things are changed.

* The World runs on Wheels, Works, p. 238.

† Entertainment at Rutland House, D'Avenant's Works, 1673, p. 352.

Howel, amongst his enumeration of the attractions of the city, says, “What variety of bowling-alleys there are !” And when the idler was tired of this sport, and would turn his back even upon shuffle-board and cock-fighting, he had nothing to do but to step down to Quēenhithē or the Temple, and have an afternoon of such recreation as can now only be found at a distance of five miles from London Bridge. “Go to the river,” continues Howel ; “what a pleasure it is to go thereon in the summer-time, in boat or barge ! or to go a floundering among the fishermen !” Imagine a waterman, in these our days of his decay, tired of waiting for a fare at Westminster, strike out into the mid-stream with his draw-net ! What a hooting would there be from Blackwall to Chelsea ! Or conceive an angler, stuck under one of the piers of Waterloo Bridge, patiently expecting to be rewarded with a salmon, or at least a barbel. Yet such things were a century ago. There are minute regulations of the “Company of Free Fishermen” to be observed in the western parts of the Thames, which clearly show that the preservation of the fish, even in the highway between London and Westminster, was a matter of importance ; and very stringent, therefore, are the restrictions against using eel-spears, and wheels, and “angle-rods with more than two hooks.”† There is a distinct provision that fishermen were not to come nearer London Bridge than the Old Swan on the north bank, and St. Mary Overies on the south. Especially was enactment made that no person should “bend over any net, during the time of flood, whereby both salmons, and other kind of fish, may be hindered from swimming upwards.” Woe for the anglers ! The salmons and the swans have both quitted the bills of mortality ; and they are gone where there are clear runnels, and pebbly bottoms, and quiet nooks under shadowing osiers, and where the water-lily spreads its broad leaf and its snowy flower, and the sewer empties not itself to pollute every tide, and the never-ceasing din of human life is heard not, and the paddle of the steam-boat dashes no wave upon the shore.

* Spectator, No. 404.

† Stow's London, book v.

We have seen a Frenchman's description of our Thames as a highway; and it may be well to look at the same author's picture, in the character of an Englishman, of the Seine, and its conveyances:—

"I find your boats much after the pleasant shape of those at common ferries; where your bastelier is not so turbulently active as our watermen, but rather (his fare being two brass liards) stands as sullen as an old Dutch skipper after shipwreck, and will have me attend till the rest of the herd make up his freight; passing in droves like cattle; embroidered and perfumed, with carters and crocheteurs; all standing during the voyage, as if we were ready to land as soon as we put from the shore; and with his long pole gives us a tedious waft, as if he were all the while poching for eels. We neither descend by stairs when we come in, nor ascend when we go out, but crawl through the mud like cray-fish, or anglers in a new plantation." * London, at all periods, could exhibit better accommodation than this; though D'Avenant's Frenchman complains of the landing at "Puddledock." But we select the description, to contrast the Parisian passage-boat of 1660 with the London steamer of 1841. Our readers will kindly accompany us on a quarter of an hour's voyage from the Shades Pier to Hungerford Market.

We have stood for a few minutes on the eastern side of London Bridge, looking upon that sight which arrests even the dullest imagination—mast upon mast, stretching farther than the eye can reach, the individual objects constantly shifting, but the aggregate ever the same. We pass to the western side, and descend the steps of the bridge. We are in a narrow and dirty street, and we look up to the magnificent land-arch which crosses it. A turn to the left brings us to the river. A bell is ringing; we pass through a toll-gate, paying four-pence, and in a few seconds are on board one of the little steam-boats, bearing the poetical name of some flower, or planet, or precious gem. As the hand of the clock upon the pier approaches to one of the four divisions of the hour, the boat prepares to start. The pilot goes to the helm; the broad plank over which the passengers have passed into the boat is removed; the cable by which it is attached to the pier, or to some other boat, is cast off. The steam is up. For a minute we appear as if we were passing down the river; but, threading its way through a dozen other steam-winged vessels, the boat darts towards the Surrey shore; and her prow is breasting the ebbing tide. What a gorgeous scene is now before us! The evening sun is painting the waters with glancing flames; the cross upon the summit of that mighty dome of St. Paul's shines like another sun; churches, warehouses, steam-chimneys, shot-towers, wharfs, bridges—the noblest and the humblest things—all are picturesque; and the eye, looking upon the mass, sees nothing of that meanness with which our Thames banks have been reproached. In truth, this juxtaposition of the magnificent and the common fills the mind with as much food for thought as if from London Bridge to Westminster there was one splendid quay, curtaining the sheds, and coal-barges, and time-worn landings which meet us at every glance. The ceaseless activity with which these objects are associated renders them even separately interesting. We see the goings-on of that enormous traffic which makes London what it is; and whilst we rush under the mighty arches of the iron bridge, and behold another, and another, and another spanning the river, looking as vast and solid as if they defied time and the elements; and also see the wharfs on the one bank, although the light be waning, still populous and busy,—and the foundries, and glass-houses, and printing-offices, on the other bank, still sending out their dense smoke,—we know that without this never-tiring energy, disagreeable as are some of its outward forms, the splendour which is around us could not have been. But the boat stops. Without bustle, some twenty passengers leave us at Blackfriars Bridge, and as many come on board. The operation is finished in a minute or two. We are again on our way. We still see the admixture of the beautiful and the mean, but in another form. The dirty Whitefriars is the neighbour of the trim Temple. Praised be the venerable Law which has left us one green spot, where trees still grow by our river-side, and which still preserves some relics of the days that are gone! Another bridge, perhaps the noblest, is again passed; and the turrets and pinnacles of Westminster are spread before us, with the smart modern mansions that have succeeded the old palatial grandeur of the seventeenth century. The sight is not displeasing, when we reflect that the ground upon which once stood some dozen vast piles, half house and half fortress, is now covered with hundreds of moderate-sized dwellings, filled with comforts and even luxuries unknown to the days of rushes and tapestry, into whose true sanctuaries no force can intrude, and where, if there be peace within, there is no danger of happiness being disturbed by violence without. But we are at Hungerford-wharf. The greater portion of the freight is discharged, ourselves amongst the number. The boat darts through Westminster Bridge, and farther onward to Vauxhall; and in another hour some of its passengers are miles on the road to Southampton. We are in the Strand as the gas-lights are peeping; and we are thinking of what the Strand is, and what it was.

[London and Westminster Steamers—Hungerford Stairs.]

["The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd."]

II.—CLEAN YOUR HONOUR'S SHOES.

IN one of the many courts on the north side of Fleet Street, might be seen, somewhere about the year 1820, the last of the shoe-blacks. One would think that he deemed himself dedicated to his profession by Nature, for he was a Negro. At the earliest dawn he crept forth from his neighbouring lodging, and planted his tripod on the quiet pavement, where he patiently stood till noon was past. He was a short, large-headed, son of Africa, subject, as it would appear, to considerable variations of spirits, alternating between depression and excitement; as the gains of the day presented to him the chance of having a few pence to recreate himself, beyond what he should carry home to his wife and children. For he had a wife and children, this last representative of a falling trade; and two or three little woolly-headed décrotteurs nestled around him when he was idle, or assisted in taking off the roughest of the dirt when he had more than one client. He watched, with a melancholy eye, the gradual improvement of the streets; for during some twenty or thirty years he had beheld all the world combining to ruin him. He saw the foot-pavements widening; the large flag-stones carefully laid down; the loose and broken piece, which discharged a slushy shower on the unwary foot, instantly removed: he saw the kennels diligently cleansed, and the drains widened; he saw experiment upon experiment made in the repair of the carriage-way, and the holes, which were to him as the "old familiar faces" which he loved, filled up with a haste that appeared quite unnecessary, if not insulting. One solitary country shopkeeper, who had come to London once a year during a long life, clung to our sable friend; for he was the only one of the fraternity that he could find remaining, in his walk from Charing Cross to Cheapside. The summer's morning when that good man planted his foot on the three-legged stool, and desired him carefully to turn back his brown gaiters, and asked, him how trade went with him, and shook his head when he learned that it was very bad, and they both agreed that new-fangled ways were the ruin of the country—that was a joyful occasion to him, for he felt that he was not quite deserted. He did not continue long to struggle with the capricious world.

“One morn we miss’d him on th’ accustom’d stand.”

He retired into the workhouse; and his boys, having a keener eye than their father to the wants of the community, took up the trade which he most hated, and applied themselves to the diligent removal of the mud in an earlier stage of its accumulation—they swept crossings, instead of cleaning shoes.

The last of the Shoe-blacks belongs to history. He was one of the living monuments of old London; he was a link between three or four generations. The stand which he purchased in Bolt Court (in the wonderful resemblance of external appearance between all these Fleet Street courts, we cannot be sure that it was Bolt Court) had been handed down from one successor to another, with as absolute a line of customers as Child’s Banking-house. He belonged to a trade which has its literary memorials. In 1754, the polite Chesterfield, and the witty Walpole, felt it no degradation to the work over which they presided that it should be jocose about his fraternity, and hold that his profession was more dignified than that of the author:

“Far be it from me, or any of my brother authors, to intend lowering the dignity of the gentlemen trading in black ball, by naming them with ourselves: we are extremely sensible of the great distance there is between us: and it is with envy that we look up to the occupation of shoe-cleaning, while we lament the severity of our fortune, in being sentenced to the drudgery of a less respectable employment. But while we are unhappily excluded from the stool and brush, it is surely a very hard case that the contempt of the world should pursue us, only because we are unfortunate.”*

Gay makes “the black youth”—his mythological descent from the goddess of mud, and his importance in a muddy city—the subject of the longest episode in his amusing Trivia. The shoe-boy’s mother thus addresses him:

“Go thrive: at some frequented corner stand;
This brush I give thee, grasp it in thy hand;
Temper the foot within this vase of oil,
And let the little tripod aid thy toil;
On this methinks I see the walking crew,
At thy request, support the miry shoe;
The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown’d,
And in thy pocket gling halfpence sound.
The goddess plunges swift beneath the flood,
And dashes all around her showers of mud:
The youth straight chose his post; the labour ply’d
Where branching streets from Charing Cross divide;
His treble voice resounds along the Mews,
And Whitehall echoes—‘Clean your Honour’s shoes!’”

The cry is no more heard. The pavements of Whitehall are more evenly laid than the ancient marble courts of York Place, where Wolsey held his state, and Henry revelled; and they are far cleaner, even in the most inauspicious weather,

* The World, No. 57.

than the old floor beneath the rushes. Broad as the footways are—as the broadest of the entire original streets—the mightiest of paving stones is not large enough for the comforts of the walker; and a pavement without a joint is sought for in the new concrete of asphaltum. Where the streets which run off from the great thoroughfares are narrow, the trottoir is widened at the expense of the carriage-road; and one cart only can pass at a time, so that we walk fearless of wheels. If we would cross a road, there is a public servant, ever assiduous, because the measure of his usefulness is that of his reward, who removes every particle of dirt from before our steps. No filth encumbers the kennels; no spout discharges the shower in a torrent from the house-top. We pass quietly onwards from the Horse Guards to the India House without being jostled off the curb-stone, though we have no protecting posts to sustain us; and we perceive why the last of the shoe-blacks vanished from our view about the time when we first noticed his active brothers at every corner of Paris—a city then somewhat more filthy than the London of the days of Anne.

He who would see London well must be a pedestrian. Gay, who has left us the most exact as well as the most lively picture of the external London of a hundred and twenty years ago, is enthusiastic in his preference for walking:

“ Let others in the jolting coach confide,
Or in the leaky boat the Thames divide,
Or, box'd within the chair, condemn the street,
And trust their safety to another's feet:
Still let me walk.”

But what a walk has he described! He sets out, as what sensible man would not, with his feet protected with “firm, well-hammer'd soles;” but if the shoe be too big,

“ Each stone will wrench th' unwary step aside ”

This, we see, is a London without trottoirs. The middle of a paved street was generally occupied with the channel; and the sides of the carriage-way were full of absolute holes, where the ricketty coach was often stuck as in a quagmire. Some of the leading streets, even to the time of George II., were almost as impassable as the avenues of a new American town. The only road to the Houses of Parliament before 1750 was through King Street and Union Street, “which were in so miserable a state, that fagots were thrown into the ruts on the days on which the King went to Parliament, to render the passage of the state-coach more easy.”* The present Saint Margaret's Street was formed out of a thoroughfare known as Saint Margaret's Lane, which was so narrow that “pales were obliged to be placed, four feet high, between the foot-path and coach-road, to preserve the passengers from injury, and from being covered with the mud which was splashed on all sides in abundance.”† The pales here preserved the passengers more effectually than the posts of other thoroughfares. These posts, in the principal avenues, constituted the only distinction between the foot-way and carriage-way; for the space within the posts was as uneven as the space without. This inner space was sometimes so narrow that only one person could pass at a time; and hence those contests for the wall that filled the streets with the vociferations of anger, and the din of assaulting sticks, and sometimes the clash of naked steel. Dr. Johnson describes how those quarrels were common when he first came to London; and how at length things were better ordered. But the change must in great part be imputed to the gradual improvement of the streets. In Gay's time there was no safety but within the posts.

Smith's Westminster, p. 261.

† Id. p. 262.

" Though expedition bids, yet never stray
Where no ranged posts defend the rugged way;
Here laden carts with thundering waggons meet,
Wheels clash with wheels, and bar the narrow street."

In wet and gusty weather the unhappy walker heard the crazy signs swinging over his head, as Gulliver describes the Red Lion of Brentford. The spouts of every house were streaming at his feet, or drenching his laced hat and his powdered wig with un pitying torrents. At every step some bulk or shop-projection narrowed the narrow road, and drove him against the coach-wheels. The chairmen, if there was room to pass, occupied all the space between the wall and the posts. The "hooded maid" came sometimes gingerly along, with pattens and umbrella (then exclusively used by women), and of courtesy he must yield the wall. The small-coal man, and the sweep, and the barber, took the wall, in assertion of their clothes-soiling prerogative; and the bully thrust him, or was himself thrust, "to the muddy kennel's side." The great rule for the pedestrian was,—

" Ever be watchful to maintain the wall."

The dignity of the wall, and its inconveniences, were as old as the time of James and Charles. Donne, in his first Satire, describes the difficulties of one who took the wall:—

" Now we are in the street; he first of all,
Improvidentally proud, creeps to the wall,
And so, imprisoned and hemmed in by me,
Sells for a little state his liberty."

The streets, in the good old times, often presented obstructions to the pedestrian which appear to us like the wonders of some unknown region. In the more recent unhappy days of public executions the wayfarer passed up Ludgate Hill with an eye averted from the Old Bailey; for there, as Monday morning came, duly hung some three, and it may be six, unhappy victims of a merciless code, judicially murdered according to our better notions. Then was the rush to see the horrid sight, and the dense crowd pouring away from it; and the pickpocket active under the gallows; and the business of life interrupted for a quarter of an hour, with little emotion even amongst the steady walkers who heeded not the spectacle: it was a thing of course. And so was the pillory in earlier times. Gay says nothing of the feelings of the passer-on; he had only to take care of his clothes:

" Where, elevated o'er the gaping crowd,
Clasp'd in the board the perjurd head is bow'd,
Retimes retreat; here, thick as hailstones pour,
Turnips and half-hatch'd eggs, a mingled shower,
Among the rabble rain: some random throw
May with the trickling yolk thy cheek o'erflow."

People used to talk of these things as coolly as Garrard wrote to Lord Strafford of them: "No mercy showed to Prynne; he stood in the pillory, and lost his first ear in a pillory in the palace at Westminster in full term; his other in Cheapside, where, while he stood, his volumes were burnt under his nose, which had almost suffocated him.”* The cruelty is not mitigated by the subsequent account of Garrard, that Mr. Prynne “hath got his ears sewed on, that they grow again, as before, to his head.”† If the mob round the pillory was safely passed, there was another mob often to be encountered. Rushing along Cheapside, or Covent Garden, or by the Maypole in the Strand, came the foot-ball players. It is scarcely conceivable, when London had settled into civilization, little more than a century ago,—when we had our famed Augustan age of Addisons and Popes,—when laced coats, and flowing wigs, and silver buckles, ventured into the streets, and the beau prided himself on that the great thoroughfares through which men now move, “intent on high designs,” should be a field for foot-ball:

“The nice conduct of a clouded cane,—”

“The prentice quits his shop to join the crew;
Increasing crowds the flying game pursue.”‡

This is no poetical fiction. It was the same immediately after the Restoration. D’Avenant’s Frenchman thus complains of the streets of London:

“I would now make a safe retreat, but that methinks I am stopped by one of

[Foot-Ball in the Strand.]

your heroic games, called foot-ball; which I conceive (under your favour) not very conveniently civil in the streets; especially in such irregular and narrow roads

* Strafford's Letters, vol. i. p. 261.

† Id. p. 266.

‡ Trivia.

side, where, while he stood, his volumes were burnt under his nose, which had almost suffocated him."* The cruelty is not mitigated by the subsequent account of Garrard, that Mr. Prynne "hath got his ears sewed on, that they grow again, as before, to his head."† If the mob round the pillory was safely passed, there was another mob often to be encountered. Rushing along Cheapside, or Covent Garden, or by the Maypole in the Strand, came the foot-ball players. It is scarcely conceivable, when London had settled into civilization, little more than a century ago,—when we had our famed Augustan age of Addisons and Popes,—when laced coats, and flowing wigs, and silver buckles, ventured into the streets, and the beau prided himself on that the great thoroughfares through which men now move, "intent on high designs," should be a field for foot-ball:

"The nice conduct of a clouded cane,—"

"The prentice quits his shop to join the crew;
Increasing crowds the flying game pursue."‡

This is no poetical fiction. It was the same immediately after the Restoration. D'Avenant's Frenchman thus complains of the streets of London:

"I would now make a safe retreat, but that methinks I am stopped by one of

[Foot-Ball in the Strand.]

your heroic games, called foot-ball; which I conceive*(under your favour) not very conveniently civil in the streets; especially in such irregular and narrow roads

Strafford's Letters, vol. i. p. 261.

† Id. p. 266.

‡ Trivia.

as Crooked-lane. Yet it argues your courage, much like your military pastime of throwing at cocks. But your mettle would be more magnified (since you have long allowed those two valiant exercises in the streets) to draw your archers from Finsbury, and, during high market, let them shoot at butts in Cheapside.*

It was the same in the days of Elizabeth. To this game went the sturdy apprentices, with all the train of idlers in a motley population; and when their blood was up, as it generally was in this exercise, which Stubbes calls "a bloody and murdering practice, rather than a fellowly sport or pastime," they had little heed to the passengers in the streets, whether there was passing by "a velvet justice with a long

Great train of blue-coats, twelve or fourteen strong;

or a gentle lady on her palfrey, wearing her "visor made of velvet."† The courtier, described in Hall, had an awful chance to save his "perewinke" in such an encounter; when with his "bonnet vail'd," according to the "courtesies" of his time,

"Travelling along in London way," he has to recover his "auburn locks" from the "ditch" that crosses the thoroughfare.

The days we are noticing were not those of pedestrians. The "red-heel'd shoes" of the time of Anne were as little suited for walking, as the "pantofles" of Elizabeth, "whereof some be of white leather, some of black, and some of red; some of black velvet, some of white, some of red, some of green, rayed, carved, cut, and stitched all over with silk, and laid on with gold, silver, and such like." So Stubbes describes the "corked shoes" of his day; and he adds, what seems very apparent, "to go abroad in them as they are now used altogether, is rather a let or hindrance to a man than otherwise."§ These fine shoes belonged to the transition state between the horse and the coach; when men were becoming "effeminate" in the use of the new vehicles, which we have seen the Water-Poet denounced; and the highways of London were not quite suited to the walker. Shoes such as those are ridiculed by Stubbes as "uneasy to go in;" and he adds, "they exaggerate a mountain of mire, and gather a heap of clay and baggage together."

In asking our readers to look back to the period when London was without coaches—when no sound of wheels was heard but that of the cart, labouring through the rutty ways, with its load of fire-wood, or beer, or perhaps the king's pots and pans travelling from Westminster to Greenwich—we ask them to exercise a considerable power of imagination. Yet London had no coaches till late in the reign of Elizabeth; and they can scarcely be said to have come into general use till the accession of James. Those who were called by business or pleasure to travel long distances in London, which could not be easily reached by water-conveyance, rode on horses. For several centuries the rich citizens and the courtiers were equestrians. All the records of early pageantry tell us of the magnificence of horsemen. Froissart saw the coronation of Henry IV., and he thus describes the progress of the triumphant Bolingbroke through the city:—"And Entertainment at Rutland House.

† Donne.

Stubbes.

§ Anatomy of Abuses.

after dinner the duke departed from the Tower to Westminster, and rode all the way bareheaded; and about his neck the livery of France. He was accompanied with the prince his son, and six dukes, six earls, and eighteen barons, and in all, knights and squires, nine hundred horse. Then the king had on a short coat of cloth of gold, after the manner of Almayne, and he was mounted on a white courser, and the garter on his left leg. Thus the duke rode through London with a great number of lords, every lord's servant in their master's livery; all the burgesses and Lombard merchants in London, and every craft with their livery and device. Thus he was conveyed to Westminster. He was in number six thousand horse.* The old English chroniclers revel in these descriptions. They paint for us, in the most vivid colours, the entry into London of the conqueror of Agincourt; they are most circumstantial in their relations of the welcome of his unhappy son, after the boy had been crowned at Paris, with the king riding amidst flowing conduits, and artificial trees and flowers, and virgins making "heavenly melody," and bishops "in pontificalibus;" and having made his oblations at the cathedral, "he took again his steed at the west door of Paul's, and so rode forth to Westminster."† By the ancient "order of crowning the kings and queens of England," it is prescribed that, "the day before the coronation, the king should come from the Tower of London to his palace at Westminster, through the midst of the city, mounted on a horse, handsomely habited, and bare-headed, in the sight of all the people."‡ The citizens were familiar with these splendid equestrian processions, from the earliest times to the era of coaches; and they hung their wooden houses with gay tapestry, and their wives and daughters sate in their most costly dresses in the balconies, and shouts rent the air, and they forgot for a short time that there was little security for life or property against the despot of the hour. They played at these pageants, as they still play, upon a smaller scale themselves; and the Lord Mayor's horse and henchmen were seen on all solemn occasions of marching-watches and Bartholomew fairs. The city-dignitaries seldom ride now; although each new sheriff has a horse-block presented to him at his inauguration, that he may climb into the saddle as beseems his gravity. The courtiers kept to their riding processions, down almost to the days of the great civil war; perhaps as a sort of faint shadow of the chivalry that was gone. Garrard tells us, in 1635, how the Duke of Northumberland rode to his installation as a knight of the garter at Windsor, with earls, and marquises, and almost all the young nobility, and many barons, and a competent number of the gentry, near a hundred horse in all.* The era of coaches and chairs was then arrived; but the Duke of Northumberland did not hold that they belonged to knighthood. Fifty years earlier coaches were shunned as "effeminate." Aubrey, in his short memoir of Sir Philip Sidney, describes the feeling about coaches in the days of Elizabeth: "I have heard Dr. Pell say that he has been told by ancient gentlemen of those days of Sir Philip, so famous for men-at-arms, that 'twas then held as great a disgrace for a young gentleman to be seen riding in the street in a coach, as it would now for such a one to be seen in the streets in a petticoat and waistcoat; so much is the fashion of the times now altered."† Our friend the Water-Poet looks back upon that to him golden age with a similar feeling.

[From an illumination, Harl. MSS., 2278.—Temp. Henry VI.]

* Lord Berners' Froissart.

† Fabyan.

‡ Liber Regalis, quoted by Strutt in his Manners, vol. iii. p. 422.

Nor was the use of saddle-horses confined to men in the early days. Chaucer thus describes his 'Wife of Bath':—

" Upon an ambler easily she sat,
Ywimpled well, and on her head a hat,
As broad as is a buckler or a targe,
A foot-mantle about her hippes large,
And on her feet a pair of spurrés sharp."

When Katharine of Spain came over in 1501 to marry Prince Arthur, a horse was provided for her conveyance from the Tower to Saint Paul's, upon which she was to ride "with the pillion behind a lord to be named by the king;" but it was also ordered that "eleven palfreys in one suit be ordained for such ladies attending upon the said princess as shall follow next unto the said pillion."‡ The great ladies long after this rode on horseback on ordinary occasions. Elizabeth commissioned Sir Thomas Gresham to purchase a horse at Antwerp; and the merchant-prince writes to Cecil in 1560:—"the Queen's Majesty's Turkey horse doth begin to mend in his feet and body; which doubtless is one of the readiest horses that is in all Christendom, and runs the best."§ Of poor Mary of Scotland, the Earl of Shrewsbury, after conveying her to Buxton, writes to Cecil in 1580:—"She had a hard beginning of her journey; for when she should have taken her horse, he started aside, and therewith she fell, and hurt her back, which she still complains of, notwithstanding she applies the bath once or twice a day."|| The "horse-litter" appears to have formed a connecting link between the saddle and the coach. When Margaret, daughter of Henry VII., set forward for Scotland, she rode on a "fair palfrey;" but after her was "conveyed by two footmen one very rich litter, borne by two fair coursers very nobly drest, in the which litter the said queen was borne on the entering of the good towns, or otherwise to her good pleasure."¶ The litter was, as we here see, a vehicle of ceremony. Hall

* Stafford's Letters, vol. i., p. 437.

† Lives, p. 554

‡ Harl. MS., quoted in Northumberland Household Book, p. 449.

§ Burton's Life of Gresham, vol. i. p. 300.

|| Lodge's Illustrations, vol. ii. p. 232.

¶ Leland's Collectanea, quoted in Markland's valuable paper on the early use of carriages, Archæologia, vol. xx. n. 447.