616914

BRITAIN'S ROLL OF GLORY.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR

For Glory and Renown.

With Eight full-page Illustrations

CASSELL & COMPANY LIMITED LONDON

"SPURRED FOR THE RIVER . . . HOTLY PURSUED BY THE ENEMY" (p 237) Frontispiece

Britain's Roll of Glory

OR

The Victoria Cross

ITS HEROES AND THEIR VALOUR

FROM PERSONAL ACCOUNTS, OFFICIAL RECORDS, AND REGIMENTAL TRADITION

D. H PARRY

AUTHOR OF "FOR GLORY AND RENOWN," ETC

WITH EIGHT ILLUSTRATIONS BY STANLEY L WOOD

CASSELL AND COMPANY, LIMITED

LONDON, PARIS & MELBOURNE

1895

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

CONTENTS.

A List of Victoria Cross Campaigns and Actions

By Way of Introduction

CHAPTER I

The Crimean War

CHAPTER II

The Alma Crosses of the Welsh Fusiliers 13

Captain Edward William Derrington Bell and Sergeant Luke O'Connor

CHAPTER III

The VC Heroes of the Balaclava Charges, 25th October, 1854 17

Grieve, Parkes, Dunn, Berryman, Malone, Farrell, Ramage, Mouat, Wooden

CHAPTER IV

The Gallant Guardsmen in the Crimea 33

Russell, Palmer, Ablett, Goodlake, Stanlock, Strong, Lindsay, McKechnie, Reynolds, Knox, Percy, Craig

CHAPTER V

Our Bold Bluejackets and Royal Marines 44

Buckley, Burgoyne, Roberts, Cooper, Peel, Daniels, Hewett, Sullivan, Sheppard, Lucas, Dowell, Prettyjohn, Wilkinson, Harding (1882)

CHAPTER VI.

PAGE

IN THE DEAD OF NIGHT' 58
Day, Commerell, Rickard.

CHAPTER VII

THE SILENT HEROES—THE ROYAL ENGINEERS 69
Graham, Ross, Lindrim, Pene

CHAPTER VIII

THE GALLANT GUNNERS IN THE CRIMEA 82
Henry, Dixon, Arthur, Dickson, Davis, Cambridge, Teesdale, Miller

CHAPTER IX

THE TALE OF THE TRENCHES 87
Prosser, Norman, Elton, Wright, Cuninghame, Bourchier, Wheatley, McGregor, Humpston, Bradshaw, Gardiner

CHAPTER X

THE FIRST PRESENTATION OF THE CROSS TO THE CRIMEAN HEROES BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, FRIDAY, JUNE 26TH, 1857 96

CHAPTER XI

ON TO THE BAYONETS'—OUR LITTLE PERSIAN WAR 103
Wood, Moore, Malcolmson

CHAPTER XII

THE INDIAN MUTINY 108

CHAPTER XIII

HOW THEY BLEW UP THE DELHI MAGAZINE 114
Forrest, Raynor, Buckley.

CHAPTER XIV.

PAGE

OUR GALLANT GUNNERS IN INDIA . 120

Tombs, Hills, Diamond, Connolly, Roberts.

CHAPTER XV

KOLAPORE KERR—AN EXCITING INCIDENT 126

Lieutenant Kerr

CHAPTER XVI

A CHARMED LIFE 132

Lieutenant Havelock, V.C., afterwards Lieut.-Gen. Sir H. M. Havelock-Allan, Bart., K.C.B.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE CASHMERE CAT AND WHAT THEY DID THERE 136

Smith, Hawthorne, Lance-Corp Smith, Home, Salkeld

CHAPTER XVIII

THE LUCKNOW CROSSES OF THE ROSS-SHIRE BUFFS, AND THE HEROES OF "DHOOLIE SQUARE!" 142

Macpherson, McMaster, Hollowell, McManus, Ryan, Ward, Home, Bradshaw, Joe

CHAPTER XIX.

LUCKNOW KAVANAGH 159

CHAPTER XX

PEEL'S BLUEJACKETS, AND THE 93RD HIGHLANDERS 168

Salmon, Young, Hall—Stewart, Paton, Dunley, Mackay, Grant, MacBean, Munro

CHAPTER XXI

A LANCER'S STORY 176

Corporal Goate.

CHAPTER XXII

PAGE

SOME CAVALRY CROSSES WON IN THE MUTINY 181

Blair, Watson, Gough (H. H.), Banks, Heneage, Ward, Hollis, Pearson, Gough (C J. S), Champion, Evelyn Wood, Fraser, Anderson, Monaghan.

CHAPTER XXIII.

PLUCK ! 191

Shaw (S.), Butler, Davis

CHAPTER XXIV

A SHORT OUTLINE OF THE WAR IN NEW ZEALAND, AND THE STORY OF SOME CROSSES WON THERE IN THE BUSH AND THE PAHS 195

Lucas, McKenna, J Ryan, Mitchell, McNeill, Manley, Temple, Pickard, F. A. Smith.

CHAPTER XXV

A CHAPTER OF INCIDENTS, IN ACTION AND OUT 208

O'Hea, Hodge, Gordon—Douglas, Murphy, Bell, Cooper, Griffiths, 24th Regiment

CHAPTER XXVI

SOME V C MEN OF THE AFGHAN WAR 213

Cook, Hamilton, Mullane, Collis, Rev J. W. Adams

CHAPTER XXVII

THE WAR IN ZULULAND AND THE V C.—THE DASH WITH THE COLOUR 227

Melvill, Coghill, Wassall.

CHAPTER XXVIII

HOW THEY WON THEIR CROSSES AT RORKE'S DRIFT, ULUNDI, ETC 243

Chard, Bromhead, Williams, Hook, Jones (W), Jones (R.), Allen, Hitch, Reynolds, Dalton, Schiess.

CHAPTER XXIX.

PAGE

MAJUBA HILL ... 260
Farmer.

CHAPTER XXX

IN THE DESERT SAND 264
W M M. Edwards, Corbett, Wilson, Marling, Marshall, T. Edwards, Smith.

CHAPTER XXXI

SURGEON CRIMMIN'S CROSS—AND THE HERO OF MANIPUR 267
Crimmin, Grant

CHAPTER XXXII

THE V C HERO OF CHITRAL 279
Surgeon-Captain Whitchurch

ROYAL WARRANTS 284

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF ALL THE RECIPIENTS OF THE V C, THEIR RANKS AND REGIMENTS, AND THE PARTICULAR ACT OF BRAVERY BY WHICH IT WAS WON 293

VICTORIA CROSS REGIMENTS AND CORPS 366

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

"SPURRED FOR THE RIVER . . HOTLY PURSUED BY THE ENEMY" Frontispiece.

PAGE

THE VICTORIA CROSS xv

"SABRED HIM OUT OF THE SADDLE" 31

"HE TOOK THE FIRST LINE OF BAYONETS LIKE A FENCE" 106

"WITH ONE TERRIFIC ASH ACROSS THE FACE ROBERTS KILLED HIM ON THE SPOT" 125

"THEY LIFTED ARNOLD OUT, THE SEPOYS FIRING VOLLEY AFTER VOLLEY" 153

"HE RAN ALONG WITH HIS HEAVY BURDEN BESIDE THE HORSE" 179

"AND THOUGH THE DANGER WAS TERRIFIC, HE CARRIED HIM AWAY IN HIS STRONG EMBRACE" 205

"EDWARDS LOADED AND SHOT THE SOUDANEE" 265

VICTORIA CROSS CAMPAIGNS AND ACTIONS.

And the number of Crosses won in each.

Campaigns	Date
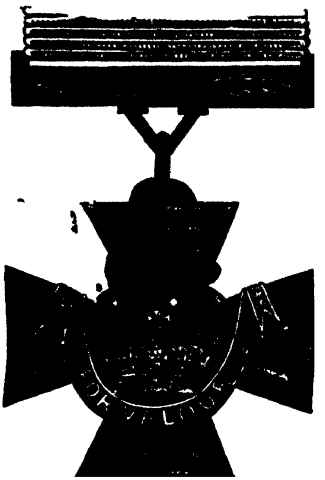
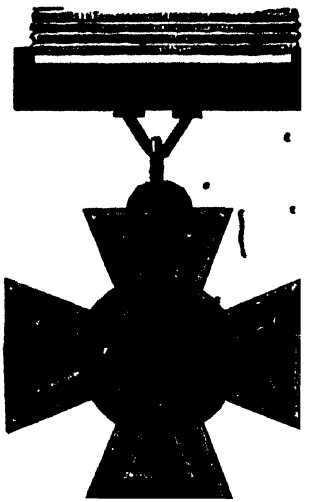
CRIMEA AND BALTIC	1854 6
PERSIA	1856 7	3
INDIAN MUTINY	1857 9	182
CHINA	1860-2	8
NEW ZEALAND	1860 6	15
INDIA (Umbeyla, N W Frontier)	1863-4	2
JAPAN	1864	3
INDIA (Bhootan, N E)	1864 5	2
CANADA (not in action)	1866	1
AFRICA (Gambia River)	1866	1
ANDAMAN ISLES (Bay of Bengal)	1867	5
ABYSSINIA	1867-8	2
INDIA (Looshai)	1872	1
ASHANTEE	1873-4	4
PERAK (Malay Peninsula)	1875-6	1
QUETTA (Beloochistan)	1877	1
AFRICA—SOUTH (Kaffir)	1877-8	1
AFGHANISTAN	1878-80	16
AFRICA—SOUTH (Zululand, etc)	1879-81	29
INDIA (Naga Hills) ...	1879-80	1
AFRICA (Boer—Transvaal)	1880-1	6

	1882	3
Soudan	1884	4
Nile Expedition	1885	1
Burma	1889	2
Manipur	1891	1
India (Hunza-Nagar)	1891	3
Africa (West Coast)	1892	1
Burma	1893	1
Chitral	1895	1
	Total	412



THE VICTORIA CROSS



BRITAIN'S ROLL OF GLORY;

OR,

The Victoria Cross

ITS HEROES AND THEIR VALOUR

BY WAY OF INTRODUCTION

A LITTLE Maltese-cross of bronze, intrinsically worth fourpence halfpenny, cast from cannon taken at Sebastopol, upon it a crown surmounted by a lion, and underneath the words "For Valour," the whole dangling by a Roman V from a piece of ribbon, crimson if the recipient is in the army, blue if he be a naval man—that is the proudest decoration a British subject can wear, the coveted prize of the soldier and sailor, the legion of honour of our service, the famed VICTORIA CROSS.

It is not handsome—few of our medals are—and at the time of its foundation a wag wrote of it, with much truth—

> "Here's Valour's Cross, my man, 'twill serve,
> Though rather ugly—take it
> John Bull a medal can deserve,
> But can't contrive to make it,"

but up to the present time (August, 1895) 412 of these unassuming trinkets have been awarded, and each has been won under circumstances of the deadliest peril to its owner, a stirring and terrible romance hanging round them all!

Some have been gained in the fury of the charge, to the music of thundering hoofs and the hissing of the grapeshot, when man and horse were mad with wild excitement and the trumpet call to return was heard unheeded, others, in the silence of night, when there was no human eye to see the heroism, when the trampled snow lay in the trenches, or the Black Sea's waves lapped the sandy shore, some when the rustle of the jungle grass beneath an Indian moon told where the rebel patrols were marching. Under every conceivable condition, in every month of the year, surrounded by comrades, or alone with the darkness and the danger, officer and private, doctor and divine, white man and black have done the deed of fame and earned the rank of HERO.

One Cross figures on the breast of a clergyman, three have been given to civilians, three to men of colour, and eighteen to officers of the medical profession.

The first to gain the honour was a naval officer, the last an army doctor. The 9th Lancers head the cavalry roll, with thirteen, the 24th, now the South Wales Borderers, that of the infantry, with sixteen. Eight Irish regiments have counted V.C. men among their ranks, nine Scottish, and each of our three Welsh corps, while the Artillery, Horse and Field, come out strong, as do also the Royal Engineers, those busy bees who, when asked on one occasion how it was that so few of them died in spite of the risks they ran, replied that "they hadn't time!"

The marines have not allowed themselves to be forgotten, and the Colonial forces are represented; but no Crosses have as yet been given to the gallant Sepoys and Sowars of our Indian army, although Jemadar Runjeet Sing and Hooper Lall Khan were recommended after the Persian War; and if ever man were worthy, that man was the brave Mahratta, Gumpunt Row, whom you will read of farther on.

Still, though many may have been unavoidably passed over, it is certain that, without exception, every recipient gazetted has deserved it, for the distinction is most jealously guarded, and is perhaps the only British institution where no undue favouritism can be displayed.

The Cross confers on all below commissioned rank an annuity of £10, with an additional £5 for each extra clasp or bar, but no such clasp has as yet been granted, in spite of the statement to that effect which appears in most books hitherto published on the subject. I have the highest authority for this assertion, including the personal denial of a gallant officer (Major Berryman) who is credited by many writers with the possession of a V.C. bar.

With stern old soldiers of the Colin Campbell type the Victoria Cross found little encouragement. Those warriors of the Wellington day had marched and fought and bled without much recognition of individual bravery in their time, and they viewed with alarm the growing tendency to plaster the soldier's tunic with medals and stars. In that opinion many of us share, but the V.C. stands alone as a brilliant exception—no one begrudges it, and all unite to do it honour.

Strange, too, that it should have had its prototype in one of the three now forgotten badges given by Colonel Belson to the 28th, after Badajoz. a crown, worn on the sleeve above the chevrons, for gallantry in the field; a star, for steady good conduct in quarters; and the letters V.S., which denoted "valiant stormer."

An officially authenticated list of every recipient, and the Royal Warrants relating to the Order, will be found in this volume, with a short account of each act of bravery, the date, and place where that act was performed; and, without exalting one particular action above another, a number of incidents have been described at length, the details in many cases having been obtained from the men themselves or their surviving relatives.

In conclusion, one cannot but be struck with the large proportion of Crosses that were won in attempting to succour the wounded under circumstances of terrible danger, and the words come forcibly back to our memory, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

CHAPTER I

THE CRIMEAN WAR

THE reader of these pages wants no grim array of mystifying figures, neither will he care to wade through a course of cold-blooded tactics, and dry professional jargon, but to attempt a rational understanding of the startling incidents which follow without a slight outline of the different campaigns in which they took place would be to proceed after the fashion of a habit, very common, very reprehensible, and unutterably lazy, namely, that of reading history without a map!

The British army had rested on its Peninsula and Waterloo laurels since 1815, and during that time great changes in its composition and equipment had gradually taken place.

In India, it is true, we had had some hard fighting, and also at the Cape, but no European war called us to arms, and there are many writers who have not hesitated to say that in the forty years of peace which elapsed before we sailed for the Crimea, we had forgotten nearly everything so dearly learned by former generations, and had to master it over again—all but our British pluck—that goes without the telling!

The whole Crimean affair had its origin in certain unseemly squabbles between the monks of the Greek and Roman Catholic Churches as to who had the prior right to the guardianship of numerous shrines, and so-called "Holy Places" in Palestine

The Sultan of Turkey tried to settle matters by issuing a firman, or decree, and the Catholics having obtained the key of the Church of Bethlehem, Nicholas of Russia marched his troops to the frontier of Moldavia, to protect the interests of his fellow religionists, the Greek monks

English politicians at once scented the possibility of Russia increasing her territory and took fright The French Emperor, who, according to some, had obtained his throne by force and fraud, saw a glorious opportunity of gratifying his military people by a brilliant campaign, and so the two nations combined to help the Turks

Fleets sailed to the Baltic and to the Sea of Marmora, and after many delays and a good deal of incomprehensible dilly-dallying, the allied armies reached Varna on the Black Sea, and went into camp at the end of May, 1854.

In July and August a scourge of cholera decimated many of the regiments, and cost us some valuable lives among officers and men, but on the 14th of September the armies finally reached the strange and lovely land they had come to conquer, and disembarked near Eupatoria, the first Englishman ashore being Mr E. Ball, R N, who landed with a hawser from the Circassian tug

The Crimean peninsula possesses scenery of the most romantic and most varied character. It ranges from high hills, whose rocky cliffs plunge down, thousands of feet, to the blue waves at their base, jutting out in endless succession of perspective as you view them from the sea; to low, marshy, unhealthy swamps, the abode of ague, malaria, and countless water-fowl

Dense forests cover portions of it; in other places green swelling grounds are under cultivation, flowers of every kind gem the sunny valleys and pleasant glades, and the rivers teem with fish; while overhead soar hawks and the Alpine vulture

Towns and villages nestle in the land-locked bays, their red roofs and the green-painted domes and cupolas of the handsome Greek churches glistening under a fierce sky for a good part of the year, and telling dark and sombre when long winter flings a grey and snow-flecked mantle over everything

It is a country that has had many rulers the Greeks and the Milesians, the Romans, Goths, and Huns have all been there and left traces of their occupation, in 1237 Genghis Khan and his Mongols overran it, to be succeeded by Venetians, Genoese, and Turks, afterwards it fell into the hands of numerous native chiefs, until the Russians finally took possession in 1783, and retained it as part of their empire by the treaty of 1792

Ten years later it was divided into eight governments, and on the approach of the Allied Forces in 1854 Russia poured thousands of troops and immense stores into it, determined to resist the invaders to the last gasp

The British army was badly equipped stiff stocks, tight uniforms, heavy accoutrements, and inferior boots were considered good enough for our men in those days, and we owe many of the necessary reforms since adopted to that war

One name will ever stand out in its histories that of a fearless Briton, who dared to expose the jobbery and shameful mismanagement of certain departments and individuals, and who, from his position as correspondent of the Times, could reveal to those at home the exact state of affairs at the front That name is William Howard Russell, whose pages read like a romance were it not for the terrible reality underlying them

Once landed, our troops started slowly along the coast and soon fell in with the foe

A sharp prelude took place at Bulganak between our light cavalry and the Russians, and as an instance of the spirit of the men, I mention one little incident recorded of a sergeant of the 11th Hussars, who came riding back to the doctors "just to have his leg seen to!" The bone had been completely shattered, and his foot was dangling by a strip of flesh and skin.

On the 20th of September took place the passage of the Alma. The heights beyond the river were stormed, and the total loss of the allies was about 3,400

Six days afterwards we occupied Balaclava, and three days after that Marshal St. Arnaud, who had come out a dying man, expired, General Canrobert eventually succeeding to the command of the French.

We commenced the siege of Sebastopol on the 17th of October, and it lasted until we finally took it on the 8th September of the following year, but great events were to happen in the meantime

On the 25th of October occurred the dashing Charge of Balaclava, when the Light Cavalry was almost annihilated through a never-to-be-explained mistake; the "Thin Red Line" and "Scarlett's Three Hundred" being added to our annals on the same day.

Many an exciting incident was wired to England by the electric cable—a novelty first experienced by us in that campaign—between then and the 5th of November, and on that immortal date Inkerman was fought—the "Soldiers' Battle," perhaps the most heroic hand-to-hand fight of any age!

A terrible storm devastated the camp in November, and wrecked many vessels in the Black Sea. Turkish troops came to swell our numbers and excite our derision, Sardinia sent a brave contingent to the seat of war, the Russian Emperor, Nicholas, died on the 2nd of March, 1855, and Canrobert was succeeded by General Pelissier, or "Palliser," as our soldiers called him

Desperate things were done in the trenches and rifle pits, sorties were made and repulsed; and the fleets carried the war still farther into the enemy's territory, by entering the Sea of Azov to bombard and to burn.

One feature of the war was the shocking brutality of the Russians towards the wounded, who were often mercilessly slaughtered in full view of their comrades, this being due largely to the fact, that to the ignorant soldiery the campaign was a species of Crusade—a strong religious element having been introduced by their priests, who blessed the armies in gorgeous robes, as they went into action, and then took themselves off to the rear at the first British shell.

Courtesy was not wanting, though, in the higher ranks, as a story will show.

It was their custom to forward letters to the English prisoners after first examining them, and one sent to an officer was from a young lady at home, in which she requested him to take Sebastopol quickly, and Prince Mentschikoff with it, and to be sure to let her have a button from his coat as a memento!

Meanwhile the officer had been made prisoner, and with the opened letter he received a polite little note from the Prince himself, saying how much he regretted that he could not comply with the lady's two first requests, but that he had great pleasure in sending the enclosed button, in order that the third one might be gratified.

The siege progressed slowly; matters were complicated by our brave French allies, and Lord Raglan found many difficulties to be overcome.

The Whiteworks and Mamelon Vert were taken on the 7th of June, but an attack on the Mamelon Tower and the Redan failed, after great loss, on the 18th, ten days after which the army was plunged into deep grief by the death of their gentle leader from cholera, assisted by anxiety, the attacks of the Opposition in England, and the miseries of his men, which he was powerless to prevent

Born in 1788, Raglan had fought at Busaco, stormed Badajoz, lost an arm at Waterloo, and been deservedly beloved by those under his command.

Having alluded to the miseries of the troops, it is proper to observe here that when they left for the East, singing "Cheer, boys, cheer!" full of wild enthusiasm, they constituted perhaps the worst equipped army that ever sailed from our shores

Stores were not distributed when men were starving, because there were "no orders;" drugs were absolutely necessary for the surgeons ashore, but they were in too many cases not forthcoming; stoves were wanted to warm the icy wards of the wounded on a certain ship, and stoves there were in plenty on another vessel, but they could not be obtained, because there were "no orders."

When the great coats were issued, very late, fresh discomforts ensued, and we hear of a stout major vainly trying to worm himself into the small coat served out to him, which he had very much needed!

The "green coffee"—the noble exertions of Florence Nightingale—the unfortunate squabbles between Cardigan and other officers—these and many other well-known circumstances need not be dwelt upon.

The winter, the mismanagement, the prevalent sickness, and the bullets of the enemy, thinned down the army to a frightful extent

One January day there were only thirty men fit for duty in the 46th, and seven in the 63rd, while the cavalry were in similar case, the 13th Light Dragoons having only three horses reported fit on one occasion —and Dr Russell says that he saw men of the Guards walking about in the snow with no soles to their boots

On the 8th of September the French took the Malakoff, and we failed again at the Redan after enormous slaughter and glorious heroism, but the Russians retired to the North Forts, and the Allied Armies entered Sebastopol

The war was practically over before that city fell, although several other important events had yet to take place, such as the capture of Kinburn, the capitulation of Kars after a gallant defence, and various smart affairs with the defeated enemy.

Sir William Codrington assumed command in place of General Simpson in November, 1855 thus, our leadership had changed hands three times, as that of the French army likewise.

Peace was finally settled and signed at Paris on the 30th of March, 1856, and on the 9th of July we evacuated the Crimea, after one of the fiercest wars it has ever been our bad fortune to engage in.

We lost in killed and wounded something like 3,500; of cholera, 4,244; and from various other diseases, about 16,000; while the National Debt was increased by more than forty-one millions!

The French losses were rather more than 63,000, and those of the Russians about half a million officers and men!

A distinguished military writer, whose father had wielded his Highland claymore in Spain and at Waterloo, once said to me with a sigh, "Ah! the Peninsular War—it is almost like speaking of the Crusades now." Forty years have passed since the Crimea, few of the veterans of Inkerman and Balaclava are with us, and even of these few every now and again one drops from our sight and another link is broken. Search them out, reader, while they are here, and learn from their own lips the tale of Britain's glory.

CHAPTER II.

THE ALMA CROSSES OF THE WELSH FUSILIERS

CAPTAIN EDWARD WILLIAM DERRINGTON BELL AND SERGEANT LUKE O'CONNOR *

THE 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers are well known for two things—their gallantry and their goat, which latter, I have heard it stated, was under fire in the same battle that won the regiment its first Crosses

It is no part of my programme to give you a detailed account of the storming of the heights of the Alma It was a very sanguinary affair, and cost many precious lives. It was a fight under a sunny sky across ground golden with crocuses, through tangled vineyards where the grapes were hanging, and up rocky slopes, so steep that one officer was shot through the entire length of his backbone as he scrambled towards the batteries above; and when the ascent was made there were redoubts to storm, and strong entrenchments, full of cannon and howitzers, which had to be taken at point of bayonet.

The French attacked on the Allied right, and the 23rd formed one of the regiments of the left wing, the conflict being one continuous climb under a murderous fire, and a death struggle at the top!

While the Zouaves were commencing the battle, our infantry lay down in their order, and at half-past one Captain Nolan dashed along in his 15th Hussar uniform with word to advance.

"Forward!" was the cry, and we made for the

* The names at the head of each chapter are given in the order of their gazetting

ford with colours waving, splashed through somehow and mounted the steep bank on the other side, Lieutenant Anstruther, a lad of eighteen, carrying the Queen's colour of the Royal Welsh, Butler the Regimental one Lord Wolseley has said that "the general who would condemn anyone to carry a large silk colour under close musketry fire ought to be tried for murder." Certain is it that poor Butler was soon bowled over and the pole smashed by a ball, and that it was given to Sergeant Honey Smith by General Codrington, as no officer could be spared, and borne by him through the rest of the day.

Not long afterwards, when within forty yards of the Russian earthwork, Lieutenant Anstruther, who was waving the crimson folds in one hand and his sword in the other, rather in advance of his men, fell, shot through the heart, his blood welling out over the silken banner, and staining a small Testament in the pocket of his scarlet coat

A Welsh private named William Evans took the staff from his fingers and held it up to show that the 23rd were first to mount the height, and then passed it to Corporal Luby, who in his turn gave it to Sergeant Luke O'Connor, just tottering wounded to his feet, having fallen about the same moment as Anstruther, shot in the breast

Lieutenant Granville, seeing him badly hit, urged him to go to the rear, but he refused, and wherever the Royal Welsh went that day, Luke O'Connor was to be found brandishing the Queen's colour, which had twenty-six holes through it at the close of the action!

Arrived at the redoubt after a fearful carnage, the Russians were seen to be removing their guns, one brass twenty-four-pound howitzer alone remaining in position, for first possession of which our fellows fought with one another, Donovan, of the 33rd, being supposed to have scratched his name on it before anyone else, and while that was going on, Captain Bell, of the Royal Welsh, saw a Russian artillery driver whipping up his team in rear of the redoubt and trying to save a sixteen-pounder

Leaving his company, the captain ran, revolver in hand, and came alongside the Russian, who slipped off his saddle and bolted, Bell seizing one of the horses and checking the gun.

The first cannon taken in the war was undoubtedly a prize, and assisted by Private Pyle, of the Royal Fusiliers, the lucky officer turned the team round and led them towards the rear. When passing the shoulder of the parapet, he chanced on his commander, Sir George Brown—whose fiery temper had not been improved by being rolled in the dust with his grey horse a moment before, and who was then in the act of shouting, "Hurrah for the Royal Welsh! I shall remember you!"

The veteran, who had entered the Rifle Brigade as far back as 1806, and served through the Peninsular War, waxed furious

"What the dickens are you doing there? Where's your company, sir?" he roared. "Why in the name of thunder have you left your company?" and, amid a storm of language as sulphurous as the fire that raged round them, poor Bell relinquished his conquest and returned through the smoke to head his men in charge after charge, and finally to bring the regiment out of action, all the superior officers having fallen three sergeants and forty men slain outright; and nine sergeants and 143 rank and file hit, but when the shattered fragment marched into camp with colours flying after it was all over, Captain Bell had the satisfaction to learn that the gun was still in our hands, the horses serving for long afterwards in our famous "Black Battery," and the gun itself being taken to Woolwich.

The Royal Welsh lost during the three hours eight officers killed and five wounded, one mortally;

It is recorded that the French very coolly sent a team over to our side after the battle and tried to walk off with it, but were luckily prevented by an officer.

Luke O'Connor received his ensigncy, and distinguished himself at the Redan, where he was shot through both thighs, but that calamity did not interfere with his subsequent promotion. He gained the V.C. upon its institution and the Sardinian war medal, which latter was also bestowed on Corporal Luby, and the fortunate sergeant is still living, a major-general, having survived, by several years, his old companion in arms, Captain Bell, who died a major-general also, covered with orders and decorations, and who, after great gallantry at Inkerman and Sebastopol, received his V.C. when the war was over, living to wear it at Lucknow.

In 1888, Major Walker, of the 3rd Middlesex Rifle Volunteers, received a handsome illuminated address from the officers of the 23rd, then at Lucknow. When on a visit to the Crimea, the major came across the original memorial stone to the Alma dead of the regiment about to be used for road repairing, and, rescuing it from its ignoble fate, he presented it to the Royal Welsh, by whom in the future it will be reverently preserved.

CHAPTER III.

THE V.C. HEROES OF THE BALACLAVA CHARGES, 25TH OCTOBER, 1854.

GRIEVE, PARKES, DUNN, BERRYMAN, MALONE, FARRELL, RAMAGE, MOUAT, WOODEN.

AFTER the name of Waterloo, there is perhaps no name so thrilling to an Englishman as Balaclava.

The Death Ride of the Six Hundred was so gallant and so disastrous that it has eclipsed very largely an equally brilliant exploit that occurred a little before on the same day, when three hundred British dragoons cut their way through close upon three thousand Russian horsemen in what is known in history as the Charge of the Heavy Brigade.

The entire affair was due to the prompt action of its leader, Brigadier-General Yorke Scarlett, of the 5th Dragoon Guards, who was in action there for the first time, although he had entered the 18th Hussars in 1818

Bearing an order from Lord Raglan to advance to the support of the "Thin red line," he was passing down the South Valley with two squadrons of the Greys, two of the Inniskillings, and two of his own regiment, having the 1st Royals and 4th Dragoon Guards behind him, when his aide-de-camp, Lieutenant Elliot, suddenly pulled in and pointed to the Causeway heights on their left.

An immense crowd of Russian cavalry appeared on the undulating range of hills which separated the South from the North Valley, where the Light Brigade was waiting, and with one swoop every soul in the South Valley seemed on the point of annihilation How it happened that the enemy had been allowed to gain that position is another matter; there they were, and that was all he knew about it.

"Left wheel into line!" cried the General, and as the order was obeyed, he followed it with another, to "take ground to the right," to clear a vineyard, and allow the rest of the brigade to form up alongside, facing the enemy; but by some slight misapprehension they moved more as supports, thus the two squadrons of the Scots Greys, with one of the 6th Inniskillings, remained alone, somewhat in advance, 300 sabres in all, to bear the brunt of what was to follow.

On the ridge the crowd of Russian horse grew larger and more menacing. Tall fellows, with overcoats of a drab mud colour and flat-topped caps, for the most part, the bright sun flashing on a forest of lances and sword blades.

All at once the mass extended right and left, far overlapping the little group of red coats, brass helmets, and black bearskins, and seeming about to pour down and overwhelm them

Scarlett—who, in the meantime, had exchanged a few words with Lord Lucan—Lieutenant Elliot, a trumpeter, and orderly Shegog, were some way ahead, the General on a very tall bay horse.

"Sound the charge!" he called, and instantly moved off straight for the heights at a trot which broke into a gallop, the squadrons following a short distance behind.

Scarlett was first man in, Elliot and the two others soon joined him. For a moment the quartette were alone, fighting for their lives; then came Dalrymple White, of the Inniskillings, outstripping his squadron, and after him Major Clarke, of the Scots Greys, without his headpiece, the three hundred dashing in on their heels, the Irishmen cheering madly, the Greys, as at Waterloo, with a "low, eager, fierce moan of rapture."

Oh, the pluck of it! Three hundred troopers in the midst of a perfect sea of foemen—no mere figure of speech, but actually surrounded, swallowed up, lost to view—and their presence only known to the anxious spectators by the surging heave of the drab-grey Russians, until our lads had opened them out a little; and then the brass helmets glanced in the press, and here and there a grey horse might be detected as it plunged madly forwards uphill!

It was but for a moment, such things cannot last long, and fresh cheering arose as the Royals, the first Inniskilling squadron, and Scarlett's own men went in to their comrades' aid

Inside the combat was terrible; from without the onlookers saw nothing but that surge and sway, and then, to their astonishment, the horde of Russians galloping, retreating and broken, back up the heights. It was later that they learned of Elliot with his fifteen wounds, of Williams, weak and ill from fever, who led the second squadron of the Greys, and who cut his way clear without a scratch from groups of six, three, two, and four foemen in succession, only to die at Pera a month afterwards; or of Private Hope, of the 11th Hussars, who, confined in the guard tent to get sober, was awakened by the noise, and followed the Greys on a spare horse, his sleeves rolled up and minus a jacket, dismounting to take a bearskin and sword from a wounded soldier, and spurring into the thick of it!

On that band of heroes only a couple of Crosses were bestowed; and though the details are official, and consequently meagre, we know their gallantry was far above the common.

Both of them belonged to the Scots Greys. Sergeant-Major Grieve rescuing an officer surrounded by the enemy, who were slashing at him in the duly approved cowardly fashion of the Muscovite troops, the sergeant-major killing one by slicing off his head at a blow, and driving off the others; while his comrade-in-arms and valour, Sergeant Ramage, saved the life of a trooper (Private Gardiner), dispersed seven Russians who were on the point of slaughtering another (Private McPherson), and, not satisfied with these two acts of especial bravery, dismounted and took a prisoner rather later in the valley!

Grieve was one of the first batch of recipients, but both he and Ramage are now dead.

Well might Colin Campbell, stern, practical soldier, who had rebuked his own men for their eagerness to engage, ride up to that regiment whose motto is "Second to None," and, cap in hand, exclaim, with eyes afire: "Gallant Greys! I am sixty-one years old; and if I were young again I should be proud to be in your ranks!" Another story is recorded of him, when a Russian, to whom the Highland kilt was a strange and mystifying garment, asked him who those troops in the petticoats were? "The wives of the men on the grey horses!" he replied grimly.

But we must pass to the northern slope of those gory heights, and tell with more minuteness how seven other Crosses were nobly won, when "Into the Valley of Death rode the Six Hundred!"

The famous Light Cavalry Brigade consisted of five regiments, under the Earl of Cardigan, who, like General Scarlett, saw service for the first and last time in the Crimea; but so decimated were they by hardship and sickness that the whole five put together only mustered some 670 sabres, or thereabouts!

The 17th Lancers paraded 140 strong, according to Captain Morgan, since Lord Tredegar, who numbered it off thirty-four after the action, and wore then, as now, a dark blue uniform with white collar and cuffs and oilskin cap covers. The 4th and 13th Light Dragoons had a similar costume, with scarlet and buff facings respectively, and wore oilskin cases over their square shakoes.

Of the 8th and 11th Hussars, both in blue, heavily braided with yellow, the 11th had their loose pelisses buttoned on as an extra jacket, a fact persistently ignored by many a military painter, and were very conspicuous from the crimson trousers that formed part of their handsome equipment; the pelisses of the 8th were at the bottom of the sea.

Major Morris, who commanded the 17th, rode the charge in "staff undress"—i.e. frock coat and forage cap; Cardigan in full hussar uniform of the 11th; Captain Nolan in that of the 15th; while Lord George Paget had a pair of Wellington boots outside his overalls—which details, trivial as they may seem to some, will help others to realise better the scenes which follow.

Drawn up at the mouth of the North Valley, at the other end of which the discomfited Russian cavalry had re-formed behind a battery of brass cannon, an order was received for the Brigade to advance and carry the guns, that disputed order whose real meaning will never be known, although it is now generally believed to have had reference to a battery on the Brigade's right of the valley, and not the thirty pieces immediately before it.

There was an undignified squabble afterwards among the brave men who led, over the exact tenour of the message; but we have nothing to do with that. The trumpets sounded the advance, the squadrons got under weigh, and "cannon to right of them, cannon to left of them, cannon in front of them," they charged up the grassy hollow for a mile and a half in the teeth of a fiendish fire.

Pages might be written of the gallantry displayed during the advance and at the guns, but it is more particularly my mission to describe how the Crosses were won.

Nolan, who brought the order, was killed by the first shell, and so firm was his grip in the saddle that he remained upright, though dead, with arm lifted, until his horse turned and carried him back some distance towards our lines, when the shattered body fell and was dragged in the stirrup, to be buried afterwards by an officer, now General Sir John Adye.

A Shakesperian reciter named James Melrose, in the ranks of the 17th Lancers, called out as they neared the guns, "What man here would ask another man from England?" the next discharge from the double-shotted guns slaying him and a score of comrades. An officer of the 4th Light Dragoons is also said to have raised his hand to his mouth and sent a loud "Tally ho!" ringing on the wind.

There was a feeling among our cavalry after the Alma, at which they were mere spectators, that their services had been slighted; and they were bent on making the most of the present opportunity.

Captain Winter, of the 17th, the first man of the Brigade ashore on Turkish ground, was last seen laying about him furiously among the guns. Cornet Cleveland's horse was hit twice before he reached them, and when he did so a dismounted gunner lamed the animal so severely that it could hardly trot, in which condition he was attacked by three Russians, the first of whom he wounded, the second piercing his cartouch box, and the third bruising him on the ribs.

He was only twenty-two, possessed of a princely fortune, and fell at Inkerman by the bursting of a shell.

Cornet Montgomery, of the 13th Lights, killed four men, defeated two others, and rushed back to help some of his own fellows before he was slain, Major Low, of the 4th, killing thirteen gunners, and living to command the regiment in after years.

Only one other instance, actually apart from the subject of the Victoria Cross heroes themselves, must I stop to notice—that of Charles Wykes, an ex-policeman, who, riding with the 4th, was hit severely when cutting his way through a knot of nearly twenty Russians, once on the head, once in the breast by a lance thrust, again in the leg, and a fourth time by a ball in the body, notwithstanding which, he survived to see Lord Cardigan's historic leap over a gun, and to assist in rescuing a sergeant from the enemy.

He had a narrow shave then; for, plunging his sword through a Russian, he could not withdraw it, and but for the help of Lord Bingham he would have been killed.

He was nursed by Miss Nightingale at Scutari, and though he eventually recovered, his wounds unfitted him for further service—somehow I have always wondered why the V.C. never dangled on his brave breast

Major Berryman, then Troop Sergeant-Major 17th Lancers, is the first decorated hero whose particular exploits I shall recount. Reaching the battery, deafened by the sudden discharge close to him, he felt his mare, a bright bay with black points, stop short, her off hind leg being broken, and himself slightly wounded; he had dismounted, and was considering whether to shoot the poor beast, when Captain Webb rode up, asking him if he were hit

He replied, and inquired if the officer had escaped, to learn that he also had been struck in the leg, and what had he better do?

"Keep to your horse, sir, and get back as far as you can," said Berryman, the captain taking his advice and going to the rear, while the sergeant-major caught a loose charger and got on him.

He was down again almost at once, his fresh mount having the brass of his breast-plate driven into his chest, and seeing no hope of rejoining the regiment, he moved aside to escape the rush of the 11th Hussars, who closed in a little to let him pass through the two squadrons, and noticing that Captain Webb had halted not far off, he ran up to find that he could ride no farther, his wound being acutely painful.

Lieutenant George Smith coming along, unhorsed, stood at the charger's head, while the sergeant-major lifted his captain out of the saddle and laid him carefully on the trampled grass, which was already sullied by the blood of many a brave man and gallant steed

While the lieutenant rode away to get a stretcher on Webb's horse, Berryman remained beside him under fire, the guns opening again, and his position becoming one of extreme peril.

He sang out to half-a-dozen Lancers who had gathered in a group not far off, but the warning came too late; a shell dropped into the middle of them, and he believes that they were all killed

"What do you think the Russians will do, sergeant-major?" said the wounded captain.

'They are sure to pursue, sir, unless the Heavy Brigade comes down," was the alarming reply.

The officer entreated him to seek his own safety, urging that possibly they would only take him (the captain) prisoner; but Berryman had his own opinion on the subject, and knew what a splendid mark the prostrate man would make for a Cossack lance or a dragoon's sabre!

"All right, sir, if they do we'll go together," said the sergeant-major, and seeing Sergeant Farrell going by, he called out to him

"Who is it?" shouted Farrell, and on hearing he came over.

You must remember that all this time, in their immediate vicinity, the guns were pounding, and the fight raged with great fury.

The 11th Hussars had passed beyond the battery, and were hand to hand with, among others, the 11th Russian Hussars, higher up the valley.

Clouds of cavalry poured down on the struggling remnant of the Light Brigade, and matters were very serious, as we were in full retreat ; it was only a case of a few moments before our troopers would tear by for our own lines, hotly pursued by thousands of semi-barbarians, who spared no one !

"We must get him out of this," said the sergeant-major, and making a chair of their hands the two courageous fellows carried the wounded officer about 200 yards between them, enlisting the aid of Private Malone, of the 13th, to hold the captain's legs

Sir George Wombwell, mounted on Colonel Morris's horse, passed by on his way to the rear.

"What is the matter, Peck ?" he said, using Captain Webb's nickname

"Hit in the leg, old fellow. How did you escape ?" replied the wounded man.

Sir William Gordon passed also, bleeding profusely from a cut on the head, and carrying his dress cap in his hand ; he made the same inquiry, and by that time the bearers had reached the rear of the Greys, from a young officer of which the sergeant-major borrowed a tourniquet , getting a stretcher at last from two infantry band boys

Berryman screwed the tourniquet on to the captain's right thigh, Dr Kendal afterwards telling him that he could not have done it better himself, and they carried their burden for another fifty yards, when the celebrated French General Morris touched Berryman's shoulder.

"Your officer ?" he said, pointing to the half-unconscious lancer, deadly white from pain and loss of blood.

"Yes"

"Ah ! and you sergeant ?" looking at the chevrons on his sleeve.

"Yes."

General Morris took in the position at a glance; he saw the corpse-strewn valley with our remnant straggling in, he knew what that slow march of mercy had been to the bearers, the shells bursting, the earth spirting in clouds as round shot buried themselves here and there, or rose again and went on, tearing long furrows through the grass, the anxious halts, when the canteen would be raised to the sufferer's lips, with many a backward glance over their shoulders to see if the Russians were upon them; all that appealed strongly to the heart of one of the bravest men in the army of Napoleon III., where heroes were plenty, and he spoke out with a thrill of enthusiasm for the pluck of those before him.

"Ah! If you were in the French Service, I would make you an officer on the spot!" he exclaimed, and standing in the stirrups, waving his arm towards the valley, he made use of that phrase which is now historic, "Mon Dieu, it was grand!—it was magnificent!—but it is not war!"

When they reached the surgeons, Captain Webb's boot was cut off, and the terrible nature of his wound discovered, the shin bone being completely shattered.

Sickened by the spectacle, Farrell made an involuntary exclamation, and they motioned Berryman to take him away, the sergeant-major getting a spare horse belonging to the 4th Light Dragoons, and going back to see the end of it.

When he had time to examine his own hurt, he found that a small piece about the size of a shilling had been cut clean out of his calf, filling his boot with blood, and as he got scurvy into it, it was a long time healing.

With his Victoria Cross and medals, Major Berryman [he retired a commissioned officer out of the 5th Lancers] is still a conspicuous figure at the annual Balaclava dinner, but Malone, V C, and Farrell, who was not gazetted until 20th November, 1857, have both followed Captain Webb across the "shadowy river," for, unfortunately, that officer's wound proved mortal, in spite of the surgical aid which came too late.

More lucky was Major Morris, who led the 17th in the charge.

Lying badly hurt, in a terribly exposed position, Sergeant-Major Wooden, of his regiment, came to his assistance.

Expecting every moment to be killed by the firing, or ridden down by the raging Russian dragoons, the brave fellow stuck by his chief, and presently obtained the help of a surgeon of the Inniskillings, now Inspector-General James Mouat, C.B., V.C., who, conspicuous in his scarlet shell-jacket, braided with gold, went boldly over to the Major, and dressed his wounds in presence of the enemy

The details obtainable are not so ample as those connected with Captain Webb's rescue, but between them they brought the officer through, and both gained the Cross for their gallantry, Major Morris surviving the Crimea to die in India in 1858, a colonel and C.B.

Before we dismiss the doings of the 17th Lancers at Balaclava—and space has forbidden us to more than touch upon them—one little incident deserves especial mention here: it was that of the regimental butcher.

He had finished his work of slaughtering for the day's consumption, and with sleeves rolled up, and arms smeared with the traces of his unpleasant calling, got an inkling somehow that a fight was probable.

The idea was too much for him; he mounted, just as he was, joined his troop, where he had no business to be, and, after selecting a keen sabre, lit a short, black pipe, and went in when the trumpets sounded.

He was seen at the guns in the very thick of it, slashing right and left at the gunners, six of whom he killed with his own hand, and when it was over, he carved his way back, running the gauntlet of the crowds of Russians who swarmed across the valley to intercept our retreat, and calmly rode up, his pipe in full blast, without a scratch on him!

The 8th Hussars alone of all the regiments won no Cross at Balaclava, though they played as brave a part as any, and it was their misfortune, not their fault; but they made up for it a few years afterwards by gaining five during the Mutiny.

The last Balaclava man of the 8th whom I knew personally was Private Newett, and for many years he carried a sandwich board for Madame Tussaud's Exhibition.

When he died the papers announced that he was in the employ of the Marylebone Vestry, which was a gentle way of saying that he died either in the workhouse—the last home of too many survivors of the gallant "Six Hundred!"—or that, at any rate, he was in receipt of parish relief!

We now come to Private Samuel Parkes and his exploit. Parkes, a determined-looking man, standing six feet two in his stockings, with a brown Crimean beard, was in the 4th Light Dragoons, orderly to Lord George Paget, and he saw Trumpet-Major Crawford's horse go down when they were in the middle of the enemy.

The place was alive with Cossacks, dragoons and lancers. From one who was there, we learn that many of the Russians wore broad-topped shakoes of red felt, with a brass, double-headed eagle in front, the whole covered with oilskin.

Beneath their drab overcoats were dark green jackets, laced with coarse orange worsted braid, and sky-blue trousers piped with a red seam; and it is estimated that our Light Brigade had to encounter more than 5,000 of these gentry, to say nothing of the guns

Well primed with liquor, they usually attacked in small parties, and Private Parkes saw two Cossacks bear down on the prostrate Crawford, who was unarmed and helpless.

Flinging himself on to them, he laid about him right gallantly, and for some time stood between death and the trumpet-major, whom he rescued and got on his feet again.

Parkes was unhorsed, and lost his shako, but he cleared off the cowardly rascals, and was attacked by six more when he and Crawford were going to the rear.

These he faced resolutely, until his sabre was broken by a shot, but he protected his unarmed comrade so pluckily that, even in the scurry of it all, his conduct was noticed and remembered, and he lived to wear the well-won reward of his unselfish bravery. He and Crawford remained prisoners a twelvemonth and a day before they re-joined, sharing their captivity with, among others, Dryden, of the 11th, who had thirty-six wounds, and Cooper, of the 13th, who had eighteen!

"SABRED HIM OUT OF THE SADDLE" (p. 31).

The last Balaclava V C was gained by a man whose career was singularly stirring and romantic, and who was the only officer of the Light Brigade so decorated

The gallant 11th, whom I mentioned as having advanced beyond the battery, were returning at a hand-gallop under a galling rifle fire from the Fedioukine Hills on their right, when a non-commissioned officer, mounted on a slow and jaded horse, fell behind, unable to keep up with the rest, and several voices shouted, "Sergeant Bentley's cut off!" regarding him as lost to a certainty

Without a word, and none of the men knowing what he was about to do, Lieutenant Alexander Roberts Dunn, who had entered the 11th in 1852, turned his charger, one of the most notorious kickers in the regiment, and rode back towards the belated sergeant, who was endeavouring to parry the blows of three Russian dragoons, the rest of the 11th passing on, unconscious of the death struggle about to take place in their rear

The lieutenant knew his risk They were the last of the brigade, except the dead and dying, left in the heart of the enemy's ground, besides which, he was a wealthy man, already about to retire from the service. The Cross had not then been instituted, and he had nothing to gain, but he saw Bentley alone, facing fearful odds, and he deliberately chose to hazard life and all in the effort to save him.

Setting his teeth under his fair moustache, he spurred straight for the first dragoon, and sabred him out of his saddle, allowing Bentley time to recover his legs, after which he turned his attention to the other two.

The noon sunshine fell full upon them as they closed, and hacked, and circled round and round, Dunn's charger now and then lashing out and almost unseating him, blood mingling with the foam that flecked rider and steed.

In the end he killed them both, and afterwards slew a Russian hussar who was attacking Private Levett, of the 11th, losing his horse, and escaping on foot to our lines through the heart-rending débris of the Brigade, among which more than one red-coat was numbered when the Heavies cut in to their relief.

Almost immediately after Balaclava, Mr. Dunn sold out, and went to his estates in Canada, where he was largely instrumental in raising the 100th Prince of Wales's Royal Canadians, in 1858, in which he served as lieutenant-colonel, afterwards exchanging into the 33rd, Duke of Wellington's.

During the advance on Magdala, in the Abyssinian War, Colonel Dunn was killed by the discharge of a sporting gun, and his Victoria Cross, medals, and portrait, painted by the Chevalier Desanges, were sold at Sotheby's Rooms, in 1894, for £155.

It is interesting to record that one man who rode with the 11th Hussars in that charge, Quartermaster Henry Kauntze, had served in the same regiment as far back as the siege and capture of Bhurtpore, 1825-6, under Lord Combermere, the Stapleton Cotton of Peninsular days, who was also spared to witness the first presentation of the Crosses, but, of the nine heroes whose claim to the honour of the V.C. we have vindicated in this chapter, Major Berryman and Surgeon-General Mouat alone are living at the present time.

CHAPTER IV.

THE GALLANT GUARDSMEN IN THE CRIMEA

RUSSELL, PALMER, ABBETT, GOODLAKE, STANLOCK STRONG, LINDSAY, MCKECHNIE, REYNOLDS, KNOX PERCY, CRAIG

EACH of the three regiments of Foot Guards sent its quota to the great Crimean War No troops returned with a prouder record, and each regiment won several Crosses.

The length of time that had elapsed since Waterloo made some people sceptical when it became known that the Guards were to embark. Their officers, possessed of privileges and incomes that set them on a species of pinnacle above the line, were regarded as dandies who were only good for parades and levées, and such imposing duties as trooping the colours, and so forth, but those who saw them out in the east wrote home a different tale Alma, Inkerman and Sebastopol owe much of the romantic halo that surrounds them now to our Guards, and their spirit, when the war broke out, cannot be better illustrated than by one instance on record of the Scots Fusiliers, several corporals of which, finding themselves over and above the number required to complete the draft, requesting to be reduced to the ranks and thus be able to march as privates!

Following my endeavour to narrate the incidents in this volume as far as possible in their true chronological sequence, I shall begin with the Scots

Fusiliers, whose Crosses were won at the battle of the Alma

A brief outline of that sanguinary affair has already been given in a preceding chapter. The steep heights had been almost gained, the 23rd had already planted its colours on the battery at the top, when the Russians redoubled their fire and the regiment was obliged to fall back.

The ground was sloping, and the Royal Welsh would seem to have very naturally gathered some speed as they went rearward to re-form, the consequence being considerable disorder in the Fusilier Guards at a very critical moment, helped in addition by the order given to the 23rd.

"Fusiliers, retire!" was shouted, and many of the Scots Guards, who were drilled as "Fusiliers," began to act upon the command, thinking it applied to them

At the moment the regiment was about thirty yards from a battery firing grape and canister point blank, and a strong Russian battalion, to quote an officer who just then lost all his teeth by a bullet, "letting drive as hard as they could into us"

The regiment was forced out of its formation and became something like a huge triangle with one corner pointing towards the foe, and at that angle Lieutenant Robert Lindsay was waving the Queen's colour, which had the pole smashed and twenty bullet holes through the silk

By a tremendous effort the confusion was quelled to some extent, principally by the bold bearing of the lieutenant, who fearlessly exposed himself in all the glory of a brilliant scarlet coatee and a display of gold epaulette and lace to match; and of Sergeants

Knox and McKechnie, and Private Reynolds, who were particularly distinguished in encouraging the men, dressing the ranks hastily, and rallying them round the colours.

The regiment again advanced and suffered heavily, being ordered to retire in earnest shortly afterwards, though why I have never been able to discover, the Guards' bayonets being able and willing to bite as deep as those of any regiment in the service

Lieutenant Annesley, the officer who lost his teeth, was shouting "Forward, Guards!" when he was wounded, and a letter he wrote to his mother gives a vivid and soul-stirring description of the battle, in which he says that the Russian fire was so hot that one could hardly conceive it possible for anything the size of a rabbit not to be killed

Yet Lindsay, now Lord Wantage, so well known for his exertions in connection with the Volunteer movement, was not touched, in spite of the huge silk standard he carried and the cool way in which he went forward at the head of the two-deep line

The Scots Fusilier Guards had come out in the Simoom, twenty-nine officers and 935 non coms and men, averaging five feet ten inches in height, and at the Alma fourteen officers were wounded, every one belonging to No 5 company being hit.

Lord Chewton, in particular, was noticed for his attempt to restore order, and there is little doubt that had he lived he would have shared the honour of the Victoria Cross with his comrades—Lindsay, Knox, McKechnie, and Reynolds, but it was ordained otherwise.

Waving his bearskin, he shouted, "Come on, my lads, we'll beat them and gain the battle!" but he was hit above the left knee by a ball which shattered the leg, and when in that condition was severely mauled by two Russian privates

Removed after a time down hill to the hospital, he was found to have been wounded by shot or bayonet in every part of his body except the left hand and arm, and, powerful man that he was, he passed away quietly in his sleep on the 8th October

On the 18th of June, 1855, Sergeant John Knox, then promoted into the Rifle Brigade, distinguished himself still further in the most plucky attempts he made with a ladder party when we tried to take the Redan and failed, and where he stayed out in the open until he was twice wounded, trying to get the stormers to face the appalling fire On his retirement as Major he possessed the esteem of all his comrades, which atoned in some degree for the arm he lost in action, which had to be amputated close to the shoulder

Another man of the Scots Fusilier Guards, Sergeant Craig, won the V C by volunteering to find and bring in a wounded officer under the guns of the enemy, eventually carrying the corpse into camp, being dangerously wounded himself, receiving an ensigncy in the 3rd Battalion Military Train, and being personally presented with the Cross by Her Majesty, November, 1857, in company with Lieutenants Teesdale and Symons and Sergeant Malone, the Balaclava man

But now the Grenadier Guards impatiently claim our attention, and we must pass on to that Sunday morning when the grey fog crept over the heights of Inkerman and the grey Russians crawled stealthily up through the welcome curtain of the fog.

The battle of Inkerman was one long struggle between our fellows, surprised in the November dawn, and a tremendous force of Russians strongly posted on the heights above our camp

The relative numbers show how bravely we must have fought the British having 7,464 men, 38 guns, and, later in the day, the pitiful remnant of the Light Brigade, numbering 200, the French, 8,219 men, 24 guns, and, with our cavalry, about 700 chasseurs d'Afrique, while, including the troops told off to guard the Sebastopol Road, the enemy mustered 271 guns and 71,841 men, inflamed by raki, a fiery spirit that turns the human being into a raging beast for the time, and still further worked up by that religious enthusiasm which is a marked feature of the Russian people.

The camp was sleeping, and so stealthy had been the movement of the enemy, that our outposts were almost surrounded before they discovered their approach

In the darkness of the drizzly morning flashes and reports came from the heights above our tents, and the army rushed out to find an engagement in progress in the gloom that shrouded the Russians from view

"Stand to your arms!" was the cry, and as regiment after regiment mustered, stumbling over tent ropes, cold, stiff, and dazed by the unexpected awakening, it went quickly to the front, guided by the roar of the firing and the gleam of red and yellow, as the tongues of flame darted from the mouths of the brass cannon and huge shot came crashing into camp from the rocks and ridges, and even from the town of Sebastopol itself

Hastily getting into their cape-coats and bear-skins, the brigade of Guards hurried away to the hills, covered in places with dense undergrowth, where Russian riflemen were concealed, and for the rest of the day the Grenadiers, Coldstreams, and Scots were busy with the bayonet among the batteries

When daylight broke and the mist lifted, affairs were seen to be very serious, the enemy had ensconced himself strongly and in great force on the heights, his guns were in position, the various entrenchments and redoubts were well garrisoned, and from each point of vantage he would have to be dislodged in detail, the chief part of the work, as at Alma, being decidedly uphill.

Round what was known as the Sandbag Battery the Guards' fight principally took place, and the work was taken and retaken many times during the day

Fortunately the Russian bayonet exercise was very defective, and when it became a case of hand to hand, the British Guardsmen had a decided pull At one period their ammunition ran short, and they defended the battery with stones, the enemy following suit, until a perfect rain of rocks whizzed backwards and forwards

While we had possession of the Sandbag on one occasion, Captain Sir Charles Russell, of the Grenadier Guards, offered to clear the Russians from a ledge near by, one of his men saying that if an officer would lead them they would charge.

Springing out of the left embrasure, waving his Colt's revolver, he cried, "Come on, my lads; who will follow?" and behind him sallied Sergeant Norman and Privates Anthony Palmer and Bailey.

Firing his revolver at a Russian, the first chamber missed, owing no doubt to the damp, but with the second barrel he believed the man fell, Palmer saying a moment later, "You were nearly done for."

"Oh, no," said Sir Charles, "he was some way from me," but the private alluded to another who had got behind the captain "His bayonet was almost into you when I clouted him over the head," said Palmer, grimly. Sir Charles inquiring his name and promising that he should not be forgotten if they both came out of the affair alive

Sir Charles was of slight build, but he wrenched one of the long black-stocked muskets away from a foeman, and kept it all day; and wearing no overcoat, he was a prominent mark for the enemy, who made a point of picking off the officers

They cleared the ridge, and both captain and private acquitted themselves so well, then and during the long conflict afterwards, that they were selected for the Victoria Cross when the order was instituted, the private, moreover, being made corporal on parade next morning His comrade Bailey was killed, and there exists no record of Sergeant Norman Another private, named John Pullen, has come down to us for a quaint saying in the heat of the action, when he declared he would shoot nothing less than a general, and forthwith adjusted his sight to three hundred yards.

One other hero must be mentioned here, Bugler Thomas Keep, 3rd Battalion Grenadier Guards, a boy of ten, who, although he never won the Victoria Cross, had as high a claim to it as any to whom it has been granted.

The plucky little chap, while the battle was raging and the shells were bursting about him, set to work to build up a huge fire, gratefully appreciated by all who felt its warmth in the keen bitter wind which stiffened their limbs; and making tea, he carried it hither and thither among the wounded, under fire; a ball entering his jacket and coming out through a trouser leg, his red coat being well remembered by many an Inkerman veteran, as he knelt fearlessly with his pannikin beside the maimed soldiers who had dragged themselves out of the fight, the Russians still continuing to fire on them, after their cowardly and unnatural custom

Keep, known for the rest of his life as the "Boy Hero," retired with medals and a pension in 1878, and was a packer at the Army and Navy Stores for some years, serving as sergeant in the 4th Middlesex Rifle Volunteers with great zeal and energy. His medals, bugle, and drum were laid on the coffin at his funeral, which took place on the 16th of July, 1894.

Lieutenant-Colonel Percy, afterwards aide-de-camp to the Queen, also gained his Cross at Inkerman, when he charged some way ahead of his men into the Sandbag Battery through one of the embrasures

At one moment during the action he found that, together with about fifty men, partly of the Guards and partly belonging to various regiments, he had gone too far, and their ammunition ran out as they were surrounded by the enemy.

Colonel Percy was wounded, but with great tact, having also some knowledge of the ground, it is said, he extricated his little party and led them past the Sandbag again, from which the Russians who happened to be in at the moment poured a heavy fire.

The detachment eventually procured fresh ammunition and went back to the front, through the colonel's exertions, the Duke of Cambridge witnessing the affair and praising him highly.

The Duke himself, Commander of the Guards, was at one time in great danger, and owed his life to Dr Wilson, of the 7th Hussars, who rescued him, sword in hand, with a few men he had collected, for which he was mentioned in despatches, the fact being also recorded on his tombstone in the cemetery at Stranraer

The last hero of the Grenadier Guards whom we have to mention fought also at Inkerman, but his act of valour had been performed two months before that, and was of a different nature, entirely to those of his comrades

Private Alfred Ablett, 3rd Battalion, was doing duty in the trenches on the 2nd of September, 1854, when the sentries shouted, "Look out there!" and a live shell dropped plump into the middle of some ammunition cases

Pulling it away, the deadly thing rolled between Ablett's legs, and he had just time to pick it up and hurl it out of the trench when it burst, knocking him over and covering him with gravel and earth.

Sergeant Baker picked him up and found that he was unhurt, although severely shaken, and the affair was reported to the captain in charge of the party, who on coming off duty duly reported it to his commanding officer, with the result that brave Ablett was promoted corporal and then sergeant, and received in addition from the hands of his chief a silk necktie made by Her Majesty, who also pinned the V.C. to his breast at the first presentation.

And now for the gallant Coldstreams and their

Crosses, one of which, from the similarity of incident with the one we have just narrated and the absence of anything beyond the bare official statement, we must dismiss with a word: Private George Strong tackled a live shell and pitched it over the trenches in September, 1855, but Captain Goodlake and Private Stanlock merit a lengthier notice.

Captain Goodlake had organised a number of his men into a body of sharpshooters, and was generally to be found well to the front among the rocks and brushwood, harassing the enemy.

On the 28th of October, 1854, he held Windmill Ravine, below the Piquet House, against a strong assault of the Russians on the occasion of the historic sortie against our Second Division.

By dint of tremendous energy and coolness, he repulsed the "Russkies," and by their well-directed fire his little party killed thirty-seven men and an officer, and took another officer and two men.

Later, when the grey overcoats had been patched and mended, and the white-bound fatigue caps had lost their pristine beauty, if they ever had any, he stole one night upon a picket of the foe at the bottom of the ravine.

Then it was, I believe, although the official account is a trifle obscure, that Private Stanlock crawled up to the Russian sentry in the darkness, and by preventing his giving the alarm enabled the others to pounce upon the startled picket and bear their knapsacks and rifles back to camp triumphantly.

It was risky work being on outpost duty for either side before Sebastopol; there was so much of that stealthy creeping forwards to take one unawares, and often enough, when two bodies would be fighting it out undisturbed in a hollow, with a fair field and no favour, the gunners on the ramparts would join in with a shower of shells, as regardless of their own side as they were of ours; sending us skurrying back, leaving many a good fellow in some hole or corner to die undiscovered, unless a comrade chanced to see him and brought him in at great risk.

CHAPTER V.

OUR BOLD BLUEJACKETS AND ROYAL MARINES

BUCKLEY, BURGOYNE, ROBARTS, COOPER, PEEL, DANIELS, HEWETT, SULLIVAN, SHEPPARD, LUCAS, DOWELL, PRETTYJOHN, WILKINSON, HARDING (1882)

TO the Royal Navy belongs the proud distinction of the first Victoria Cross ever won, and, by a strange coincidence, the last they have gained up to the present time (August, 1895) was bestowed for an identical act of valour, although performed in a slightly different way; and yet again, strangest fact of all, these two, out of the naval total of 39 Crosses, are the only ones bestowed for valour on shipboard

The Crimean War afforded glorious opportunities for the gallant Jack Tars. The Baltic fleet had a busy time in the north, while their messmates were ferreting out and destroying Russian stores, bombarding towns, and making themselves generally useful in the Black Sea and the Sea of Azov

Ashore, the Naval Brigade did splendid service with the troops. If they did steal ponies and imbibe too freely at odd moments, they worked the big guns to splendid advantage, hauled huge Lancasters up hill and down dale, volunteered for ladder parties, and altogether won the admiration and envy of all concerned in a way that atoned largely for their other delinquencies.

A story that shows their spirit was well known at the period, when Captain Lushington, after they had been working for hours in the seamen's battery, said to his men, "Now go and have a lark;" and, never heeding the balls that came whizzing past, often plumping with a thud into the sandbags, up they sprang on to the parapet to have their fun there in full view of the foe.

On the 22nd of April, 1854, the combined British and French fleets bombarded Odessa, firing red-hot shot into the town to bring the Russians to reason, and in the June following the bombardment of Bomarsund, on one of the Åland Isles in the Baltic, was begun by three British vessels, the tars fighting in nothing but trousers and sleeveless vests

What a contrast! Those curious paddle-steamers with tall funnels, and the now obsolete three-deckers, pounding and roaring in their efforts to destroy, and the picture written by an officer who was there during one of the later bombardments, from which I take a few lines

"The Åland summer was at its height The sun shone brightly on the calm broad basin of the Lod Sund and the rocky islets which studded it, throwing a sparkle on the waters, and striking out strange lights from the dark foliage of the pines. The scene was peaceful and pretty A cosy villa, or farmhouse, with its large outbuildings, peeped out from green pleasant nooks along the shore, and far down, in quiet coves, market and fishing boats were lying on the beach."

We threw 100-lb. shells and 96-lb. balls into the place, but though our loss was practically only four men, it might have been far greater but for the prompt action of Midshipman Lucas, now Rear-Admiral.

Of all the engines of war a shell is probably the most terrible. It comes hurtling through the air, and falls, hissing and fizzing gently with an apparently innocent purr of warning It may continue to fizz for a few seconds—a minute perhaps It may go out altogether and no harm done, but there is no knowing Once let the fuse burn down until it reaches the powder, and a fearful explosion is the certain result, death or mutilation being scattered far and wide.

Sometimes one will enter the body of a horse, shattering it to atoms, and never injuring the rider This happened to an officer close to Lord Raglan at Inkerman, and to several men in Napoleon's wars.

On the other hand, another exploded at Inkerman amidst a magnificent team of chestnut gun-horses, throwing them down, one only rising again; from all of which it may be seen that a live shell is not to be trusted, and that when one fell on the deck of the Hecla and the middy sprang upon it and seized it in his hands, he was doing a service of no common kind.

In a moment of indescribable suspense to all who witnessed it, he ran to the side, pitched it over, and it disappeared beneath the waves

He has had many imitators, and as the risk must be realised to prompt the action, whether it arises from a sudden impulse or not, it is genuine heroism of the highest order, and but for the obvious similarity of the incidents I should have devoted a whole chapter to Heroes of the Live Shell.

I am tempted to introduce the last incident of the kind here, although it is out of place in chronological order.

On July 11th, 1882, our fleet bombarded Alexandria, and among the vessels so engaged was H M.S. Alexandra, first-class battleship of 9,490 tons displacement.

About nine o'clock in the morning a 10-inch spherical shell entered the port side, tore through the Torpedo Lieutenant's cabin, struck the combings of the engine room, and rolled along the main deck as though looking for a snug place to burst

Somebody sang out, "Live shell just above the hatchway!" upon hearing which, Gunner Israel Harding rushed up the ladder from below, saw the fuse was burning, and flung some water over it, afterwards coolly picking it up and carrying it to a tub that stood near.

Harding, who was promoted chief gunner after the action, had served in the Baltic in the Cressy during the war of 1854-5, as also in South America and Ashantee.

The shell now belongs to H.R H the Princess of Wales

One of the foremost heroes of the Naval Brigade was a young captain of thirty, William Peel, third son of the celebrated Sir Robert Peel

Danger seems to have had a positive fascination for him, and fear he did not know

His resolute, clean-shaven face was always to be found at the front, and his name then, and for long afterwards, was a byword with the bluejackets.

Upon his Cross three dates are engraved, 18th October, 5th November, 1854, and 18th June, 1855, but they do not represent one tithe of the valorous actions he performed.

On the 18th of October ammunition was wanted by the Diamond Battery, and in spite of whip and spur the horses attached to the waggon would not face the Russian fire.

In vain they tried to rush them at the slope and gain the cover of the earthworks, and at last volunteers were obliged to run out to the waggon and carry the cases back at great risk

While the ammunition was still littered about inside the battery, and willing hands were busy stowing it in the magazine, a shell dropped into the middle, and the men scattered with a warning shout.

With one bound Captain Peel was upon the terrible intruder, and hurling it over the parapet, not a moment too soon, it burst in the air about four yards from his hands, and expended its force uselessly.

It is also recorded of Peel that on another occasion when a shot broke the staff of the Union Jack on the Diamond Battery, he sprang on to the earthworks with it and waved it again and again amid a rain of bullets, a portion of the flag being still in the possession of Herbert Roberts, Esq

There was a gallant midshipman, named Daniels, who had been active in the work of clearing the waggon, and at the battle of Inkerman he volunteered as aide-de-camp to Captain Peel, following him on a pony.

At a critical moment Peel threw in his lot with the officers of the Grenadier Guards, hard pressed in the Sandbag Battery, and his blue uniform was very much in evidence among the grey coats and scarlet, fighting shoulder to shoulder in defence of the colours.

This procured him the second date mentioned above, and also told to the subsequent advantage of Mr. Daniels, who was associated with his officer on the 18th of June following, when Captain Peel led a ladder-party against the Redan, and was bowled over while helping to carry the first one with his own hands.

Then in the range of the hurricane of iron and lead which swept the open, the midshipman stuck to his wounded chief, and bandaged his head under a fire so murderous that, as described in another place, it made British troops hesitate, and inflicted a severe repulse upon us.

Mr. Daniels shared the honour of the V.C. with his friend and commander, and we shall meet with William Peel farther on, under Indian skies, where he was destined to win more glory and find a grave.

We now come to the record of a Yorkshire lad, William Nathan Wrighte Hewett, known in the Navy as "Bully Hewett," who died in 1888, an Admiral, K.C.B., K.C.S.I., etc., etc., as was only to be expected of one who could show such pluck and determination at twenty.

The day after Balaclava young Hewett, who was acting-mate of H.M.S. Beagle, was in command of the A Lancaster Battery before Sebastopol, and found himself and his men in an uncommonly warm corner

A savage assault was made upon us by the enemy, and a strong force of Russians came up Careening Ravine past the flank of the battery, their skirmishers getting within 300 yards of it and picking off several sailors with their Minié rifles.

In spite of the bravery of the trench-guards, a large body of the enemy approached, and it seemed absolutely certain that in a few minutes they would be through the embrasures and into the battery.

An infantry officer called out, "Spike the gun and retire!" but Hewett raised his powerful voice and made manly reply—

"No orders from Captain Lushington to spike this gun or to retire either—we don't leave the gun, men!" And they did not!

In buttoned-up pilot coat, with a gold-banded cap on his brown curls, he jumped on to the parapet facing the Russians, and, shouting to his sailors to help him, began wrenching away the gabions and demolishing the top.

With many a "Yo,ho," "Heave ho," they bowsed round the huge 68-pounder towards the enemy, and, laying the gun himself, Hewett sent a conical shell into the adjoining rocks.

Bursting with a fearful report it maimed several of the advancing foe, and, with a coolness seldom exceeded, they reloaded and fired round after round, Hewett laying the Lancaster each time.

The range was so short, and the aim so true, that every report spread death and mutilation among the skirmishers, who, after a thrilling moment for the handful of seamen, ran back for shelter and the battery was saved.

The assault having been repulsed in other quarters, many of the retiring troops joined the baffled skirmishers and advanced again; but it was little use arguing with a Lancaster shell, and as the main body came marching by on their way to Sebastopol, the big gun hastened their steps and hurried them on with scant courtesy, until they fled in disorder to the protection of their own forts.

Singularly enough, the brave fellow had a similar opportunity on the Sunday evening of Inkerman, when the Russians fell back along the same road, and he plied them severely with shell, his commanding officer, Captain Lushington, recommending him to Lord Raglan with the words, "I have much pleasure in again bringing Mr. Hewett's gallant conduct to your notice."

It is a relief to turn from this catalogue of destruction for an instant to recount a most amusing incident which took place between two brave admirals during the progress of the war.

Admiral Dundas resigned the command of the Black Sea Fleet and was succeeded by Admiral Lyons.

Dundas had no opinion of his younger comrade, who belonged to a newer school of naval tactics, and Lyons on his side looked down on Dundas as a slow old fogey, so that there was not much sympathy between them.

When Dundas was sailing for England, however, leaving his rival to prosecute the war, he ran up the parting signal, "May success attend you!"

It fluttered out, was read on Admiral Lyons' vessel, the Agamemnon, and reply was duly made; but what must peppery old Dundas have thought when he saw the astonishing legend, "May hanging await you"!

It should by rights have been "happiness," but the mistake had occurred; every eye in the fleet had read it, and a thousand apologies would never remove the impression of an intentional insult from his mind.

What Admiral Lyons said to his yeoman of signals is fortunately not recorded.

John Sullivan was a young boatswain's mate on board H M.S. Rodney, and when the Naval Brigade was formed for service ashore he was appointed captain of one of the guns furnished by H.M.S. Terrible.

He enjoyed the distinction in that capacity of making the first breach in the formidable Malakoff, and was afterwards removed to the well-known Greenhill Battery.

The position of some Russian guns was hidden from our men by a knoll, and a volunteer being called for to go out and plant a flag to mark the place that we might get the range, Sullivan stepped forward

The ground was every inch of it under fire, and he formed a conspicuous mark for the enemy's sharp-shooters, but, flag in hand, he went on and gained the mound; looked right and left to find the exact position, while his comrades held their breath and expected every moment to see him fall, dug a hole with his heel to receive the staff, and having fixed it, collected stones which he piled up to make it secure, and then returned unhurt, wonderful to relate, although he noticed one Russian in particular who fired three times in quick succession full at him, and many others were making him a target the whole time.

He was for years boatswain at Portsmouth Dockyard, and a well-known figure, with his V.C., Legion of Honour, Medal for Conspicuous Gallantry, Sardinian, Turkish, Humane Society's, and Crimean Medals, the last having clasps for Inkerman and Sebastopol.

As a general rule the Marines and Bluejackets are the best of friends, but in the old days the relations were sometimes strained, and dubious compliments often exchanged.

"Go on, leather-neck!" quoth the seaman, with a powerful adjective, to the marine in his scarlet coatee and stiff stock.

"Go on, you flat-footed nigger!" replies the marine to the bluejacket, with a stronger substantive than was parliamentary, and a longing to bring down the butt of his gun on Jack's bare toes, as he passed him at his work; which sample of fo'cs'l courtesy I received from an ancient mariner who sailed in the "old wooden walls" long before turret-ships were dreamed of.

At the present moment the "Jollies" are one of the crack corps in the service and one of the most popular.

"Per mare, per terram"—"by sea, by land"—is their motto, and though the bulk of their time is spent on shipboard, they are equally at home on both elements; in fact two out of their three Victoria Crosses have been won on shore.

At Inkerman, Colour-Sergeant Prettyjohn, of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, resolutely stuck to an advanced position and behaved with great gallantry, shooting four Russians under circumstances that won him the distinction when it was founded, and Bombardier Thomas Wilkinson, Royal Marine Artillery, who died at York September 22, 1887, the year also of Prettyjohn's decease, displayed the skill and courage of a sapper on the 5th of June, 1855, when, in the advanced batteries, in spite of a deadly fire, he worked at the sandbags to repair the parapet. The Legion of Honour was awarded him, as well as the V.C.; but the most distinguished of the three is the still living Lieutenant-Colonel George Dare Dowell, who carries us back again to the Baltic and the bombardment of the forts about Viborg, July 13, 1855.

He was then a lieutenant in the Royal Marine Artillery, a corps raised in 1804, and while on board the Ruby, alongside which his own boat was receiving a supply of rockets, he saw that a rocket-boat belonging to the Arrogant had got a Russian shell aboard which exploded and inflicted considerable damage.

Without hesitation he jumped into the Ruby's quarter-boat, with three men, and, taking the stroke oar himself, pulled hard for the sinking craft.

All round them as they rowed the water rose in spouts as grape and musket balls fell into the waves, but they lay to it with a will, and with many a swish and a splash, and a narrow escape from being swamped, hauled three sailors into their little skiff and also towed the disabled cutter away.

We have most of us pulled through a running sea when the slanting rain has driven about us, hissing into the swell alongside. Turn those rain drops into a shower of screaming slugs, with here and there a whistling bullet to tear off a splinter from the gunwale, or "plop" viciously near the blade of our oar, and we can realise something of the pluck of that action, and why the letters V.C. appear after Colonel Dowell's name in the blue-bound Navy List.

A brave fellow was John Sheppard, R.N., boatswain's mate of the St. Jean d'Acre, a wooden 81-gun ship.

On the 15th of July and the 16th of August, 1855, he ventured out alone, in a punt, with exploding apparatus, to blow up Russian men-of-war in Sebastopol harbour, and it was not his fault that he had no success.

The first time he was frustrated by a long procession of boats conveying troops from the south to the north side, and had to return; the second attempt proving also futile, although he passed the enemy's steamers; but the pluck was so great that the V.C. was his, and the French Legion of Honour, the Admiralty also granting him a medal and a gratuity of £15 for his conspicuous gallantry.

The number of our soldiers and sailors who received the French Cross and the Military Medal, with its pretty striped ribbon, showed how marked a change had come over the feelings of the two nations since the Great War.

Lord Raglan had lost his arm at Waterloo fighting against Napoleon, Prince Napoleon, son of the First Emperor's youngest brother, held a command in the Crimea; Admiral Sir Charles Napier, whose youth had been spent in fighting the French, sailed to the Baltic and made common cause with one-handed Barraguay D'Hilliers, son of one of the great Emperor's most unfortunate generals, and a hundred instances might be cited of a similar nature, for both armies were still full of veterans of former days

On the 29th of May, 1855, a plucky and highly successful attempt was made on the Russian stores at Genitchi.

It was of the greatest importance that the enemy should be kept short of provisions, and the enormous stores collected at various points on the shores of the Sea of Azov attracted the attention of our fleet.

In the lovely Crimean May, when the cliffs and valleys were bright with spring flowers, Captain Lyons bombarded the town of Genitchi, after previously demanding all the Government stores and corn by a flag of truce.

The Russians had six field-pieces in position, and about 200 artillerymen, a battalion of infantry, and some Cossacks, strongly posted to resist any landing, and under the guns of the battery were a large number of vessels, gone in to avoid the Swallow and Wrangler, which had made their appearance the night before, and captured three.

Our ships were only able to get to long-range distance, as the water was shallow; but while they shelled the place, the boats pulled into the strait, under Lieutenant Mackenzie, and, under the very nose of the Russians, burned seventy-three vessels and lighted the corn-stores

Two hours after they had returned the wind shifted, the black smoke rolled away, and they saw that several of the magazines had not caught, so, renewing the bombardment, the boats pushed off again, and while Mackenzie turned his attention to a few vessels that had escaped the flames, three brave men volunteered to fire the stores, and landed alone for that purpose.

They were Lieutenant Cecil W Buckley, of the Miranda, Lieutenant Hugh T Burgoyne, of the Swallow, and Mr. John Robarts, gunner, of the Ardent; and, lighting portfires from their cigars, they accomplished their purpose, narrowly escaping the Cossacks as they ran back to their boat, all three receiving the Cross.

Captain Lyons, in his despatch, says: "Since the squadron entered the Sea of Azov, four days ago, the enemy has lost four steamers of war, 246 merchant vessels, also corn and flour magazines to the value of at least £150,000."

A few days later, June 3rd, Lieutenant Buckley was again to the front, in a four-oared gig, with Mr

Henry Cooper, boatswain third class. The two landed repeatedly at Taganrog, which was garrisoned by 3,000 Russians, very much on the alert, and only kept in check by the fire from the boats. Here they set light to numerous magazines and Government buildings, the long range of stores, where there were large quantities of tar, grain, planks, etc, being in a blaze by three p m, Cooper deservedly winning his V C

These incidents only show what a few resolute men may do in spite of enormous odds against them.

CHAPTER VI

IN THE DEAD OF NIGHT!

DAY, COMMERELL, AND RICKARD

FEW men have won their Victoria Cross with greater honour than those whose exciting adventures in the dead of the night I am about to describe

In the north-eastern part of the Crimea there is a low-lying swampy series of lakes and inlets known as the Putrid Sea, a narrow passage, the already-mentioned Strait of Genitchi, leading into it from the Sea of Azov, and forming the only entrance

Across this marshy tract the Russians poured their stores, chiefly by the bridge of Chingan, and the naval expedition was endeavouring to destroy this bridge at all risks.

A tongue of land, seventy miles in length, and varying in width from half a mile to three miles, known as the Spit of Arabat, lay along the Sea of Azov, its nose forming one side of the Strait; behind the Spit were the Russian stores, and opposite to the town of Genitchi itself four gunboats, which commanded the channel, the Spit being strongly garrisoned by Cossacks and horse artillery.

To cross that tongue, evade the wary Russians, reconnoitre the position of the bridge, the batteries, and the gunboats, was the task Lieutenant Day set himself, well knowing the tremendous risk he ran, and the fact that a French officer, Captain L'Allemand, of the Mouette, had been killed with several of his men in a similar attempt about a month before.

Day was stationed off the entrance to the strait in the Recruit, a paddle-steamer, with two white funnels, the first iron vessel built for our navy, in 1846; and, believing that the enemy's forces were less numerous at the moment than usual, he sent two gunboats to explore, found from their report that his surmise had been correct, and prepared himself for the dangerous undertaking.

From the masthead of his vessel he took the bearings of the Russian gunboats, which he could just see, and also the guard-houses placed at intervals along the Spit, and when the night drew down he went into his cabin to get ready, perhaps for the last time.

Some matches, a pocket-compass, his glasses, and a revolver were soon stowed away, and to guard against the possibility of being hanged as a spy, he put his commission in the breast of his uniform, climbed over the side of the ship into a small boat manned by two bluejackets, and was pulled noiselessly towards the land

The shallow waters of the Sea of Azov broke with a low ripple on the shore of the Spit as the boat's nose grounded, and they crouched to listen.

All was still. no Cossacks were to be heard, although they patrolled the place night and day; nothing was audible but the moaning of the wind among the caper bushes and the gentle lapping of the unseen waves.

The long Spit loomed like a darker bank of cloud against the night between him and the inland waters where the gunboats were lying, and getting cautiously out, he whispered his final instructions to the two sailors in the boat.

"Back water until you're out of gunshot, and lie to abreast of this spot," he said. "My life depends on your keeping quiet and pulling in as hard as you can when I hail."

"Aye, aye, sir," was the reply, breathed rather than spoken, followed by a solemn "God bless you, sir," as they left him alone with the darkness and the danger.

Bending down, he ran across the strip of beach, and cowered on his face among the scanty shrubs that fringed the higher ground, where he could feel the breeze on the hillside; while far out behind him the masthead lights of his own ship shone over the black waste of water that lay between him and security.

Although he was an experienced deer-stalker, he knew that he had undertaken no ordinary task; the whole Spit swarmed with the enemy: Cossacks whose eyes and ears were trained by daily and nightly habit, whose horses would whinny if they smelt him; wild riders, knowing every inch of the ground, and against whom he had no chance if he were seen

Two other perils lay in wait for him—perils of a curious kind The Crimean peninsula was covered with an aromatic herb, which exhaled a strong odour when crushed; should he chance upon a clump of it, it would be sufficient to betray him And the second peril arose from the quantities of wild fowl that frequented the reedy marshes, among which he might at any moment have to find shelter, sending them clattering into the night to bring a bullet or a lance-thrust for the adventurous sailor.

Small wonder that he lay for some time, every nerve strained to fathom what the darkness might conceal, and then crept slowly forward, now through the rustling bushes, now over the sandy soil; sometimes avoiding a pitfall, sometimes rolling into a hollow, and waiting breathlessly, with one hand on his revolver, lest he should have been heard.

The Spit undulated; but rather than run the risk of his body being seen by those keen eyes, to whom every knoll was so familiar, he made long detours, often knee-deep in the stagnant pools.

At times the tread of a horse caught his ear, and he flattened himself to the earth, getting a momentary glimpse of a dark outline against the sky—an outline of a man riding with short stirrups, bent over the pommel of his saddle, lance in hand, like some prowling creature of the night, and long after the Cossack had gone by, he would wait, before he ventured to leave his hiding-place.

He could hear the patrols challenging, and found that the sentinels were pretty far apart; and when he had passed one line of posts, he breathed more freely until he began to approach the next.

It was touch and go with him; had they only had dogs with them, his mission would have terminated tragically; as it happened he got through, after hours of silent crawling, and saw the welcome glow of watch-fires reflected in the water of the Putrid Sea.

What little could be noted on a dark night he stored up carefully in his memory; the gunboats were lying close into shore, and did not seem likely to move from their position; they were slightly armed, and it occurred to him that they might be taken by surprise.

He marked the position of each guard-house, and could see the sentries passing to and fro across the patch of wavy light, sometimes pausing to warm themselves, for the autumn night was chilly; and when he could learn no more he took his bearings, by the wind, as best he could, and crept away on his return journey.

For seven long hours he retraced his steps; the same slow progress over the open ground, the same wary descents into hollows, where he could straighten himself for a moment; again, he would chance on a bed of rushes, marking a treacherous swamp, and disturb a wild duck, many a time he held his breath as the black outlines passed in silent procession across the hillocks, sometimes bending down to peer in his direction as though they had heard the beating of his heart, which he could not still, and how loud it seems at times to us we all know; but fortune favours the brave, and at two o'clock in the morning he gained the shore again, and was taken on board by the anxious seamen.

The next day his commanding officer, Captain Osborn, arrived, and entered warmly into Day's plan for a surprise, but being called away shortly afterwards, the thing was left in abeyance until his return, and while our hero was cruising along the Spit during Captain Osborn's absence he detected, or thought he did, an increase in the number of troops on shore.

He was haunted by the responsibility; if the garrison had been reinforced, and the expedition were attempted, the disaster would lie at his door, and, anchoring off his old ground, he determined to reconnoitre a second time, preferring to sacrifice his own life rather than the lives of a ship's company.

Sunset crimsoned the waters of the tideless Azov, and again the boat pulled in for shore; for the second time he whispered his parting instructions to the men in her; and on a bitter night, so dark that he had to grope at every step, the intrepid fellow crawled up the bank and faced the peril for duty's sake.

Before he had gone far, he fancied that he was on the wrong track, and every yard he traversed increased the belief, the ground was strange; deeper hollows and broader tracts of swamp stopped him; a frog began to whistle its weird cry, and unseen things went rustling away through the grass as he advanced on hands and knees.

After a long detour he struck the path he had taken before and came unexpectedly on a Cossack patrol.

They went on towards the shore, talking among themselves, the switch of their long horse tails dying away down the little valley; it was a narrow shave, but the darkness had befriended him, and he stole on, shivering with the cold that made his teeth chatter.

A little farther he had to turn aside, as voices came on the wind, and another patrol passed close to the whin-bush behind which he lay

"They are thick on the ground to-night," he thought, carefully picking his way where the tufts of rank herbage hissed as he wound among them; and again he crouched as still as a stone, for not ten yards off a horse neighed, and the butt of his revolver came half out of his breast, as he waited for the challenge—but the scream of a night-hawk hovering over the neighbouring marsh was all he heard; the sand muffled the tread of the hoofs and the Cossack had gone by, like the others, towards the shore from which he had come

Worming himself up a hillock very cautiously, not daring to raise his head above the level of the ground, he saw a multitude of fires extending along the Spit to the right and left, and heard the guttural call of the sentries, who seemed to have been not only doubled, but trebled in number since his first journey, and he found that, although he had not traversed half the distance, he must turn back with a very small chance of reaching the shore.

Scarcely had he commenced to creep down the mound when a gunshot was fired close by, the ball passing over him, followed by several more reports from different quarters.

Convinced that he had been discovered, a less courageous man would have lost his head and started to run; but Lieutenant Day scrambled quietly into a dell, from which some fowl had risen at the sound, and wading among the reeds he bent down and listened intently for some minutes, hearing the shots repeated farther away, and knowing at once the cause of the alarm.

The Cossacks, following their insane custom, had been discharging their pieces to let any lurking enemy understand they were on the qui vive; but though he breathed freely again, the presence of so many troops told him that the expedition must be abandoned, and if he were to warn his men he would have to redouble his efforts to reach his ship alive.

For nine hours he wandered, numb with the cold; tumbling into quagmires, and repeating his experiences of the first night's work with infinitely more hazard surrounding him.

Covered with mud, wet to the skin, his hands torn and frozen—escaping detection by a hair's breadth every few paces—he at last reached the beach abreast of the Recruit, and went up to his middle into the water to hail the boat.

Bending until his mouth was on a level with the surface, that the sound might travel farther, he sent a stifled shout over the waves, and waited for the welcome sound of oars, but no sound came.

Again and again he called, and there was no reply—the sailors waiting hour after hour believed that he was taken, and had pulled sorrowfully back to the ship with heavy hearts!

Wild with despair, Day drew his revolver and fired, his heart sinking as he realised too late that it would bring the Russians down upon him; and there still being no response from the sea, he tottered back to the beach again to meet his fate, and fell, half dead with fatigue and cold, praying to the Almighty for daylight.

Strange to say, the Cossacks did not come; possibly they thought one of their own sentries had fired—that being the impression on board the Recruit, where they saw the flash and heard the report distinctly.

For an hour the brave sailor lay exhausted, expecting death with every puff of wind that whisked the sand along the shore, until Mr. Parker, rowing on a final, almost hopeless quest, just before the dawn broke, found him, where he had fallen, and carried him off in triumph to his ship.

Captain Osborn visited him next day, and he soon recovered from the physical exposure that would have killed a man of weaker constitution, to be thanked in a letter from the Admiralty, and ultimately receive the V.C. for his midnight bravery and pluck.

He was promoted Commander, November, 1855, Captain 1861, and died in 1877, the worthy possessor of a host of war medals and orders, including among others the Bath, the Legion of Honour, and the Medjidie.

The following exploit is well worthy to rank with the foregoing, and for fearless gallantry is hard to beat.

Lieutenant Commerell, of the Weser, had learned from some fishermen that large quantities of corn and forage were stored on the Crimean shore of the Putrid Sea, and he determined, if possible, to effect their destruction.

The Spit of Arabat, mentioned more fully in the narrative of Lieutenant Day, lay between them and the inland waters; the Spit still teemed with Russians, and there was nothing for it but to make a night attempt.

Leaving his vessel in charge of the second master, he, Mr. Lillingstone the mate, Quartermaster Rickard, two seamen, and a party of bluejackets, hauled a small prize boat across the Spit, launched on the Putrid Sea, and the five adventurers after a stealthy pull grounded on the opposite shore at four a.m.

It was the 11th of October; a long tramp of two miles and a half lay between them and the stores they had come to destroy, and leaving Mr. Lillingstone and a seaman in the boat, Commerell, Rickard, and George Milestone, A.B., started away into the enemy's country on a desperate errand.

The Kara-Su and Salghir rivers had to be forded; the land lay silent and dark before them, while behind, over the water, stretched the Spit, with its Russian guard-houses, whose garrisons would be on the alert for their return.

The success of the expedition rested largely on its almost incredible impudence, and the certainty that such an attempt would never be expected; with the first flame, however, the Russians would muster, and one must ever feel the profoundest admiration for those British sailors who dared to attempt a seeming impossibility.

They found the grain and forage stacked on the bank of the Salghir, near the towing-paths, evidently awaiting transmission by water, and in a very short time 400 tons were blazing merrily, as out came the guard, and down swooped about thirty Cossacks from a neighbouring village.

It has been in my experience to see the night sky of a foreign country suddenly grow crimson; to hear the jangle of alarm bells in the church tower and the galloping of hoofs on the road, to listen to the clamour and shouting of the peasantry, and catch the glint of the fire on steel scabbards, while beyond the circle of light the wind came moaning from the sea, fanning the flames and adding to the weird romance of it all.

Such a scene the three sailors left behind them as they made for the boat, and their chance of reaching it must have seemed small when those galloping hoofs meant pursuit by the wild horsemen of the Czar who spared no one.

A most exciting chase ensued; the rivers were scrambled through, and a considerable distance of the return was got over, when Milestone began to exhibit signs of giving out.

The last two hundred yards plunged them into deep mud, and, difficult as it was to pass, it saved them.

The Cossacks slackened and opened fire, which was briskly replied to by Mr. Lillingstone and his companion from the boat; ball after ball splashed about them, and with the enemy barely forty yards behind, Milestone sank utterly exhausted.

Then brave Rickard stopped and went back to him; worn out himself, he saw a messmate in mortal peril, and hauling him up out of the ooze, struggled with him in his arms to the water's edge, where they were dragged in a helpless state on board the boat.

The danger was not over; the Putrid Sea had to be crossed, and the Spit traversed; but they accomplished it in safety, and at eight a.m. stood once more on the deck of the Weser

Captain Commerell, afterwards Admiral Sir John Edmund, G.C.B., and Quartermaster William Rickard, both received the V C, and were both awarded the Cross of the Legion of Honour.

CHAPTER VII.

THE SILENT HEROES—THE ROYAL ENGINEERS.

GRAHAM ROSS, LINDRIM, PERIE.

THE unobtrusive devotion to duty and the business-like heroism of the Royal Engineers—or Sappers and Miners as they were called previous to 1856—while winning unstinted praise from their comrades in every branch of the service, have kept them comparatively obscure in the general records of campaigns.

One reads that parallels are made, gabions fixed, trenches, saps, barbettes, bastions, and batteries constructed, and a good deal of technical jargon which serves to confuse and worry the average student of military affairs; but there is little said about the conditions under which these things are accomplished —the cold, the discomfort, and the exposure; the shell that explodes in the centre of a working party, strewing the trench with limb and life blood; the betraying light-ball which drops near by and shows the foe where to direct the deadly musketry fire that bowls men over like rabbits, and topples many a stout fellow into the hole he has been digging, where the next shell buries him, perhaps, or where, at any rate, he may sometimes lie helpless until he is discovered, often dying before they do find him.

The excitement of a hand-to-hand fight is seldom theirs; they view the wild charge from a distance, after braving death and mutilation to bring that charge about; and to assist in repelling a sortie among the traverses is an event to be talked over for long enough by the "Mudlarks," as they are playfully nicknamed.

Eight hundred and eighty-seven landed in the Crimea, and of these 152 died of cholera and other diseases, 37 were killed in the trenches, 18 succumbed under their wounds, 6 were drowned, 1 was frozen to death, 4 died of frostbite, one poor fellow—McConnell by name—lost both his feet from the same cause, 2 were found dead, 3 were missing, and 103 others more or less severely wounded—a roll of mishaps which shows, if briefly, the nature of their calling and the risks they ran.

Seven of their 22 Crosses were won in the Crimean War at the protracted siege of Sebastopol, where, in the 337 days and nights of blazing summer and cruel winter during which the siege lasted, they dug nearly 9 miles of trenches, made 42 batteries, and used 20,000 gabions, 4,000 fascines, 340,000 sand and 7,413 bread bags.

Lieutenant Graham, now the gallant and popular Sir Gerald, and Sapper Perie, since dead, are the first of the brave band whose deeds we shall chronicle, and the incident in which they were jointly concerned took place on the disastrous 18th of June, when we tried to take the Redan and failed after terrible losses.

The Redan was a formidable Russian outwork, formed of earth with embrasures full of cannon, and separated from our advance-works by five hundred yards of hollow.

Beyond lay the town of Sebastopol and the blue water, and to the right of the fort, as our fellows looked at it, was the celebrated Malakoff Hill, crowned by a tower of yellow masonry in ruins, behind which lay the harbour, which it entirely commanded; and these two fortifications were ordered to be stormed on the anniversary of that day when French and English had fought so hard at Waterloo.

Green slopes and lines of clay-coloured earth formed the landscape, dimly seen in the grey light of the early morning, as at half-past three, or thereabouts, the right column cleared the quarries and advanced towards the Redan.

The French had been hammer-and-tongs at the Malakoff for some time, and presuming they had met with success it was considered that our turn had come, but unhappily the English columns were hurled against the strong fort in driblets, with a result that might have been anticipated.

The French were repulsed and did not renew the attack, and while our right column was marching to its doom, the left, with which we have particularly to deal, moved out of the trenches and pushed along a cart track, Lieutenant Graham commanding the sailors, who carried the ladders and woolbags, with Sappers Perie and Paul under him, the whole following behind the skirmishers.

"Which of the sappers knows the ground here?" called the Lieutenant.

"I do," said Perie eagerly, and he was ordered to lead them.

When they got under fire the skirmishers faltered; it was so hot that to face it was absolute madness, and there was a nasty pause as they waited for a lull.

Their officer, Murray, of the Engineers, fell with a shattered arm, and died before he got back to the trench, but Graham took his place.

He had previously sent Perie out to Murray with a message, and afterwards spoke of the fearless way in which the man ran into the thick of the fire and returned by a miracle.

But while the skirmishers were lying down Lieutenant-Colonel Tylden rushed to the front, and had just sanctioned a change in the direction of the attack, when a grape-shot passed through both his thighs, Graham being first to pick him up.

The colonel was carried under a ledge of rock and the advance continued, the lieutenant's tall figure conspicuous at its head, but the skirmishers fell back and the ladder-party had to halt every few steps as man after man was shot down.

When the ladders passed to the front of the advanced trench the skirmishers had got away to the left and the party was very much exposed, but full of an eager desire to press forward; the fire, however, continuing so severe that they were withdrawn after standing for ten minutes under a fearful cannonade.

In vain Lieutenant Graham waved the storming party on; in vain a detachment of the 57th came to the skirmishers' assistance; struggling bravely, the sailors, sappers, and troops made desperate attempts to cross the hollow, but all to no purpose; the ground was red with dead and wounded—men were but men, and the storm of shot, grape and shell was irresistible; a few reached the abattis, among them four or five sappers, but there was no use attempting what experience proved an impossibility; and though such as gained the cover fired in reply, collecting the pouches of the dead when their own ammunition failed, a sergeant named Coppin was sent by Lieutenant Graham to tell them to retire.

It was over; the attack had failed, and from no lack of bravery, but simply because an insane task had been set them, to which flesh and blood were not equal; and, leaving a ghastly harvest of slaughter and pain on the grassy valley, the columns returned to shelter to bind their wounds and bemoan their diminished ranks.

The lieutenant, by reason of his height, and the absolute fearlessness with which he exposed himself in his efforts to get the weak column to advance, was one of the most prominent figures in the smoke and scurry; and always at hand to help him was Private Perie, rough and unlettered, but as plucky a fellow as any of whom we have record..

Suddenly, when men peered cautiously over the parapet of the trench, pale and exhausted with fatigue and the hideousness of it all, a naval officer called for help to bring in a wounded man lying under fire in their front.

"I'll follow you, sir!" said Perie to his lieutenant, and the three jumped out and succeeded in their work of mercy; after which, there being no other wounded in their immediate vicinity, they again hazarded their lives to secure some of the scaling-ladders left on the ground, Perie having before that been hit in the right side by a rifle ball.

Lieutenant Graham was himself severely wounded later in the siege, and is credited with saving several lives under fire, and a gallant attempt to rescue men from a shaft at the docks of Sebastopol, where several were injured and one died from poisonous gas caused by an explosion; of his more recent exploits in the Soudan it is neither necessary nor is it our province here to speak.

A remarkably brave man was lance-corporal William T. Lendrim, or Lindrim (his name is spelt both ways), and his gallantry illustrates in a most dramatic manner another phase of the sapper's perilous calling.

His Cross has three dates, but his acts of valour were by no means limited to those occasions only.

On the morning of the 14th of February, 1855, he was told off to a battery held by 150 French chasseurs, and a tremendous fire soon began to knock over the gabions.

Several men were wounded and two of the French killed in the trench, and to renew the breaches was a most dangerous undertaking, but Lendrim pluckily mounted to the task, and, in spite of shot and shell, worked and shovelled, and dragged and dug, until the gaps were filled again, and the French officer reported him with admiration "for his coolness and good example."

On the night of the following March (this date does not appear on the Cross) a sortie had been made by the enemy, and after it had been repulsed the corporal heard someone groaning in agony thirty yards out in front.

Clambering over the parapet, under a hot fire of musketry, he reached the wounded man, who proved to be a Russian, and, aided by two linesmen who had followed him, they carried him as far as the parapet, where, putting him down a moment to rest, he died, and they got back into the works, with a proud consciousness of having done a humane action, even though it had proved of no avail.

On the 11th of April (so says the record, although the historian of the corps gives it as the 12th) a live shell struck the roof of the magazine in the Twenty-one Gun Battery, and ignited the sandbags.

Captain Peel called for some sailors to extinguish the flames, but the firing seems to have given them pause, whereupon he pointed out the danger to the sappers, two of whom, Corporals James Wright and our gallant Lendrim, sprang on to the roof, although the shot was whizzing about them, and, tearing the bags away, piled fresh ones in their place. Captain Peel himself assisted, always to the front where risk was to be run, and the fire was stayed, the lives of every soul in the battery being saved. A moment afterwards a ball covered the sappers with earth as it rushed on its path of destruction, showing how completely they carried their lives in their hands.

Later in the day as Lendrim was about to clamber into an embrasure to extinguish another burning bag, the petty officer in charge of the gun there asked him to wait until they had fired, and while he stood aside a young middy came up and asked him why he delayed, and in spite of his explanation sprang out himself

This nettled the corporal, who told him that "he'd better finish the job as he'd done so much;" but the middy, seeing he had hurt his feelings, drew back, and Lendrim continued the work, quenching the sandbag with water handed out to him by a private, and patching up the breach as best he could.

"I wouldn't have touched it had I known you were one of the 'Old' Sappers," said the middy approvingly, and the corporal smiled as he went off to his duty elsewhere.

"Old Sappers" was a term of high commendation in that war, and none deserved it better than Lendrim.

The last of his exploits which I shall narrate was the destruction of a screen erected by the Russians to conceal their rifle pits, which happened in the grey of the morning of the 21st of April (the record says the 20th).

The evening before, he with three other sappers had crept into the trench to reconnoitre, and lay watching the enemy strengthening their defence for some minutes.

An Irishman of the 88th was sentry there, and one of the sappers, named Harvey, wondered why on earth he did not pick off a particular Russian who was very conspicuous in his efforts, greatly to the Irishman's disgust, as he was under orders not to fire.

Hearing that the screen was to be attacked in the morning, however, he took a pot shot at the enemy, and they replied with an energy that lost us many men, for our fellows, unable to restrain themselves, seized the rifles of the wounded and a smart exchange of compliments ensued.

Before dawn broke, however, a working party of twelve men, including Lendrim, sallied out against the screen, covered by 100 of the trench guard, and, with instructions to use the bayonet only, sped over the ground at the charge.

Luckily the firing of a few hours previous had scared the Russians and the screen was deserted, our men quickly demolishing it and carrying back some of the old casks and sails as trophies to the trenches.

Harvey won a medal for the exertions he showed, and the coolness of our corporal on that occasion caused it to be engraved on his Cross as the third of the incidents for which it was granted to him.

One little circumstance I am tempted to narrate here, as showing how slight a thing might upset all the calculations of an army in warfare. The incident happened to the Sappers and Miners who laid the telegraph down on the Kazatch line during the campaign.

The current became interrupted, and for a long time the cause could not be discovered, until, after a provoking search, it was found that the wire had passed through the nest of a tiny field-mouse, who, objecting to the disagreeable intruder, had actually bitten it completely through.

Corporal John Ross merits a lengthy description of his valour, three separate and distinct acts of devotion and heroism being recorded on his Victoria Cross.

It was necessary to connect the fourth parallel with an old Russian rifle-pit, and after night had fallen on the 21st of July, 1855, he was sent out with a working party of 200 men, each carrying an entrenching tool and a gabion, and a couple of privates to assist him in tracing out the connection.

The night was very dark, but the enemy were firing heavily the whole time, and halting his party in the parallel, he crept forward with his two sappers and traced the work they were to construct with pegs and cords, luckily returning unhurt.

Leading them out in single file, the first man laid his gabion in position, where it was staked by one of the sappers, the next then depositing his burden, and so on until the huge baskets were placed in a row, the last touching the rifle-pit.

The ground was solid rock, but Corporal Ross was equal to the emergency, and sending back for baskets to the depôt, earth was carried from a distance of sixty or seventy yards, the gabions were filled, and a long line of perfect cover was formed before morning revealed to the enemy, only forty yards away, what the busy moles had been about.

Ross was mentioned in brigade orders, and General Simpson gave him two pounds, but hardly had a month elapsed before he was brought into notice for a still more hazardous undertaking.

A new approach had been commenced towards the Redan by some sappers and a party of the 1st Royals, and the next night, the 23rd of August, the corporal was again to the front with four sappers and a hundred men.

Captain Wolseley, of the 90th Perthshire Light Infantry, afterwards Field-Marshal Lord Wolseley, was in charge of the advance works, and telling Ross to distribute his party to the best advantage, our corporal told off half the number to fill bags, which the other half were to carry forward as they might be wanted.

Posting his covering-party without noise, and warning them of the fireballs which every now and then came circling through the night, he went out cautiously with his sappers and began operations from the vent of the zigzag, the Malakoff and Redan showering grape over the trenches, and Minié balls whistling dangerously close to their ears.

There was something peculiarly exciting in that stealthy groping in the darkness, and Captain Wolseley came again and again to encourage them, and each time the long dim line of gabions had extended farther and farther towards the Russian position, as Ross laid them in their places, and the sappers shovelled in earth and sand.

Now and again there would be a crash, a gabion would be hurled several yards away, and the earth showered round them. The party shrank breathless under cover, and they knew a shot had been in their midst, but after a moment's pause they were at it once more, a fresh gabion took the place of the other, and the work continued.

Not unfrequently a light-ball fell close at hand, the rugged sides of the sap were lit up, and rolling over into any corner they could find, the corporal and his men waited until the dangerous visitor had gone out, often enough extinguished by one of them, who braved the musketry for that purpose.

With interruptions such as these, and the possibility that at any time a sudden sortie might be made on them, Ross laboured away through it all, steady, persevering, cool, and when the "morning drum" rolled from the infantry lines, and the shrill bugles awoke the besieging army to another day of expectation and labour, twenty-five gabions had been fixed and filled, a trench opened behind them, and the work of the previous night greatly strengthened and improved.

It had not been accomplished without loss, for four men of the 77th were wounded in the zigzag, and there were two who never heard the drums at all.

Two of the sappers had also been hit, but the work was done, and our corporal again found himself richer this time by three sovereigns from General Simpson.

His last exploit was of a very different nature, though like the others it was performed at night, that of the 8th of September following.

The terrible final assault of the Redan and Malakoff by the allies had taken place, and silence fell over the gory ground.

The groaning wounded usurped the place of the guns that had crashed and thundered; and though explosions occurred every now and then as the magazines and mines blew up in the Russian forts, there was an ominous quiet, and an absence of human sound in and about the Redan itself, which set Ross a-thinking as his party mended the embrasures of the quarry-battery.

Two sappers were missing, left behind when we fell back, and under pretence of searching for them the corporal set out alone for the great fortress, which had cost us so many lives.

The night was mild and starlight; the sappers were seldom interfered with by outposts and sentries, and Ross soon left the fifth parallèl, and picked his way through the wounded who had crawled back into the trench.

"Have you seen any wounded sapper lying outside?" he asked; and the reply came, "One straight to the front under the abattis."

It was about a quarter past twelve when he left the sap and took his way across the open, and on nearing the abattis he paused as another explosion boomed loudly in the fort.

Creeping on again after a time, among every species of horror that an assault leaves in its wake, he eventually came across a comrade, Private Carswell, and a sergeant of the Rifles, both badly wounded.

They told him, what he had already surmised, that the enemy's outposts had been withdrawn, and leaving them his flask of rum-and-water, he said, "I'm going into the Redan, and if all goes right I shall be back directly, and have you taken into camp."

"God speed you!" they replied, and soon he was crouching on the edge of the ditch, listening with all his ears.

Groans, the crackling of buildings burning in the distance, sudden explosions, to which the brave fellow was well accustomed ; these and a number of similar sounds he heard, but nothing more, and he crawled to an embrasure and looked in.

There was the smell of charring timber, and the crash of falling beams, but the gun stood empty—the place had been deserted

Back ran the corporal—no easy task over ground torn and furrowed by months of cannonading, and littered with ghastly heaps of mangled red-coats—but an hour after he started he was telling his tale to Captain De Moleyns, of his own corps, who would not credit it.

With Lieutenant Dumaresq, Sergeant Landrey, and some sappers and linesmen, they returned to verify the startling story, stopping to cover Carswell with Ross's coat, and the Rifle sergeant with Mr. Dumaresq's pea jacket ; Ross and a Line sergeant going first and jumping through an embrasure, where the sergeant captured a solitary Russian.

The little party remained in their strange situation about ten minutes, and finding Ross's report correct and the place evacuated, went back, as the explosions were very frequent.

Picking up Carswell, Ross carried him in, Landrey doing the same by the other wounded man, and at dawn the terrible Redan was occupied quietly by our troops instead of the assault being renewed as had been intended.

As an additional honour Corporal Ross was awarded the French War Medal.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE GALLANT GUNNERS IN THE CRIMEA.

HENRY, DIXON, ARTHUR, DICKSON, DAVIS, CAMBRIDGE, TEESDALE, MILLER.

OUR Artillery had a terrible rôle to perform during the war, and performed it then, as ever, very gallantly.

The dashing horse brigades had perhaps less opportunity, from the nature of the campaign, than their heavier comrades of the field batteries, and the latter won all the Crosses that were gained there by their arm of the service.

They suffered like the rest of the army from mismanagement and want of matériel, but they made up for it by their perseverance and the energy they displayed.

At Inkerman the Russians reached our guns, and a tremendous defence was made by the Artillery.

"Draw swords, and charge!" shouted Lieutenant Miller, as the grey-coated horde came on, dashing spurs into his horse and darting out to meet them; and his example was followed at C Battery, 2nd Division, by Sergeant-Major Andrew Henry and Gunner James Taylor.

Drawing their weapons they sprang forward, and the enemy found they had a hard nut to crack, for our men used anything they could lay their hands on, rammers, swords, and even fists—one noted pugilist being seen hitting hard in the mêlée.

Taylor fell, stabbed to death, but Henry was more fortunate, although his wounds are fearful to read of,

Tearing a bayonet away with his left hand he attacked several Russians with the sword in his right, until another pierced him in the chest, and almost lifted him off the ground on the weapon—others stabbing him in the back and arms at the same moment.

It was not until he lay prostrate, with twelve ghastly holes in him, that the sergeant-major gave up; but wonderful to relate, he subsequently recovered, was given the V.C. and a commission in the Land Transport Corps, and died years afterwards, a captain.

Henry was spared the anguish of seeing the capture of the guns, as he was unconscious at the moment from loss of blood, but they did not remain long in Russian hands.

An equally gallant instance of British pluck was that of Captain Dixon, R.A., whose battery was blown up by a shell, which burst in the magazine, and did tremendous damage, about two p.m. on the 17th of April, 1855, before Sebastopol.

The parapet which protected the men was blown away, ten of the gunners were killed or wounded, five guns were completely disabled, and a sixth was buried under a mound of earth.

The wreck was perfect. Most men would have retired and been justified; but Captain Dixon had other ideas on the subject, and before the Russians, who had jumped on to their parapets, had finished cheering their lucky shot, he had disengaged the remaining gun, and reopened on them.

In that dismantled condition, the blood and brains of his little party sprinkled over the ruins, he fought the piece until sunset, to the admiration of his neighbours in the other batteries, sending round-shot after round-shot to teach the enemy a lesson they learned very thoroughly in the Crimea, that the "island curs," as they called us, "never knew when they were beaten!"

Gunner and Driver Thomas Arthur has two acts of valour recorded of him, 7th and 18th of June, 1855.

On the first of those dates he was officially reported to have been in charge of the magazine of the left advance batteries of the right attack, and when the quarries were taken, to have carried infantry ammunition to the 7th Fusiliers several times during the evening under fire. On the second occasion, he volunteered for a spiking-party at the Redan, and behaved with equal gallantry.

Now, with respect to the first incident, there is another story told, which I had from a comrade of Arthur's who served in the same battery with him in after years, and who himself went through the Zulu War, which story I give without comment.

It seemed that Arthur was suddenly taken unwell while his battery was in action, and he left it without leave, returning to find, to his horror, that the guns were gone.

He was in a very serious predicament, and at his wits' end what to do; but luckily for him, he saw that an infantry regiment in front had run short of cartridges, and knowing where to find some, he ran to a magazine, shouldered as many as he could carry, and staggered off to the front with them, a ball every now and then tearing up the grass close to him.

Arrived at his destination, the welcome supply was received and distributed among the men, and the gallant gunner was promptly marched away in custody by the picket for being where he had no right to be.

Fortunately, the colonel of the infantry had been watching him through his glasses; and when it was a case of court-martial for absence from his gun, up came that officer in the nick of time, and the dereliction became an act of noble heroism, which it actually was, and won, together with his subsequent behaviour at the assault, the V.C. for our gunner.

Another brave fellow was Sergeant Cambridge, who volunteered for a spiking-party on the 8th of September, 1855, and persisted in remaining with it, although badly wounded.

Later in the day, his wounds roughly bandaged, he sallied out of the advanced trench and brought in several poor wretches who were lying helpless under the fire of the enemy; and again the plucky sergeant got badly hit, but lived to wear his Cross in the veteran ranks of the Yeomen of the Guard. These are the type of men that make our army, although so small in numbers, so glorious in the field.

On the same day, Captain Davis, R.A., who led the party, risked his life in the most gallant manner to help a wounded officer of the 30th, whose leg was broken, and several other men; traversing ground rent with shot, under a fire which the official record describes as "murderous," for which he, too, received the Cross of Valour.

Lieutenant Collingwood Dickson also displayed tremendous heroism in helping to carry ammunition from the field-waggons under fire, in the October of the previous year, to a battery of the right attack, winning the V.C. for his pains; a risk which can be better estimated when it is remembered that a sapper standing near a store on one occasion when a chance shell fell among the powder, vanished for ever from mortal ken, nothing but one of his hands being found to show that he had ever existed!

Of Lieutenant Christopher Teesdale pages might be written. His sphere of action was the defence of Kars in Asia Minor, under the celebrated Fenwick Williams—a defence which will live as long as history has existence.

A handful of Turkish troops, led by Fenwick Williams, who had a few British officers to help him, of whom Teesdale was one, held out for months against a Russian army, and only gave in when starvation stared them in the face.

On the 29th of September, 1855, Aide-de-camp Teesdale volunteered to take command at the most advanced works, where the Russians attacked in force; sprang boldly into the middle of them, and by his fearless example gave the Turks heart, and so cleared the redoubt of the enemy.

With all the spirit of a British artilleryman, he rallied the Turkish gunners at their cannon, and after leading a brilliant charge, which won the day, he saved many of the Russian wounded from the barbarous infidels who were slaughtering them, at the great risk of his own life—the Russian general, Mouravieff, witnessing his valour and pointing it out to his staff.

He died on the 1st of November, 1893, sadly missed by a host of friends, his gallantry being equalled by the charm of his personality.

CHAPTER IX.

THE TALE OF THE TRENCHES.

BROSSER, NORMAN, ELTON, WRIGHT, CUNINGHAME, BOURCHIER, WHEATLEY, MCGREGOR, HUMPSTON, BRADSHAW, GARDINER.

THE tale of the trenches is sad and thrilling. It is a story of watching and waiting in the snow and the mud; of dark hours of sentry-go when the lives of the many depended on the eyes and ears of the few; when, too often sick, the private took his musket and paced backwards and forwards, far from the hum of the camp, a mere handful of comrades cowering behind a wall of earth, the only ones to aid him if the foe crept up; nothing to relieve the monotony of the darkness but the red flagstaff lamp at Lord Raglan's headquarters, or the green one of the general hospital away behind the third and fourth divisions. Often enough from his position he could see neither; and for company, there was perhaps the low grating of the sappers' spades in a traverse somewhere invisible, or far off within the walls of Sebastopol, the sound of the Russian bands playing "God Save the Queen," as they did at times.

Their church bells jangled now and again, and if there was much ringing, and band-playing, and distant shouting, the trench guards kept wide awake, as such discord generally prefaced a sortie.

There was another side to the story, with less of loneliness but more of death in it—the sudden surprises, the sallies among the enemy's rifle pits, the reconnoitrings, and such like; or those terrible attempts on the Redan which left the wounded out in the open, near enough for their piteous cries to reach the watchers, and far enough to win many a Cross for the gallant fellow who could stand it no longer, and rushed through the fire to stagger back with his bleeding burden

Sometimes he did not get back at all, but added one more heap to the others that represented so much that was true and precious of Britain's manhood, out among the spent shot, and the live grape, on the ghastly Crimean hillside.

I cannot pretend to narrate more than a few examples of the heroism which duty in the trenches gave rise to, but the incidents are varied, and speak eloquently for themselves.

The first man I shall mention was Private Francis Wheatley, Rifle Brigade, 1st battalion, who, when in the trenches, 10th of November, 1854, tackled a live shell that fell in the midst of the party, and after vainly endeavouring to knock out the burning fuse with the butt of his rifle, picked it up and flung it over the parapet, where it immediately exploded. He became lodge-keeper at Bramshill Park, the residence of a former officer of the Rifles, Sir William Cope, and died there on the 21st of May, 1865.

The next incident illustrates a different phase of trench life, and we must picture a little band of 200 riflemen, with three officers, Lieutenants Tryon, Bourchier, and Cuninghame, and four sergeants, waiting for the dark on the 20th of November, 1854.

Up on the hill not far away were the enemy's rifle pits, and Tryon had told his men that he "intended to drive the Russians out, and that he was sure they could do it."

Quickly the wintry dusk descended, veiling the sombre uniforms of the party, and blending trench and ground and all in mystery.

Then they moved out and went down a slight incline, afterwards creeping stealthily up the hill, where the foe imagined themselves secure, and breaking irresistibly among them, bayoneted the grey Russians out of their holes.

Lieutenant Tryon fell dead, but Bourchier and his brother officer were not to be gainsayed, although the enemy's guns poured grape on to them, after a heavy column had tried to dislodge them and failed.

All night they held their post, continually attacked, sometimes in force, at others by sudden surprises; but Bourchier and Cuninghame, like Chard and Bromhead in after years, were equal to the occasion, and next day they were relieved by a fresh detachment of their regiment, and the dangerous pits were ours.

Canrobert issued a special order to the French army, so struck was he with the gallantry of the affair, and both surviving officers were awarded the V.C. for their distinguished part in it.

The following December, a brave private of the 7th Fusiliers, named William Norman, was posted in front of the advance sentries of an outlying picket in the White Horse Ravine, with the Russian picket 300 yards away.

Three of the enemy, in those grey overcoats which made it difficult to distinguish them until they were close at hand, came creeping forward to reconnoitre through some brushwood, but Norman saw them, and fired his rifle to alarm the post.

"Stand to your arms!" was the cry, but without waiting for his comrades to come up, the fusilier jumped almost on to the top of the three Russians, one of whom bolted off to his own lines.

Not so the other two, for Norman seized them, and alone in the slush of the trench he collared both after a struggle, and brought them in, prisoners.

It is probable that an attack would have been made on the position there but for his vigilance, and his prompt action saved the picket, and won him the V.C.

This time it is a daylight assault we have to notice, when the pitiful driblets marched out of the trenches on to the Redan on the 18th of June, 1855, and were mowed down by hundreds.

Colour-Sergeant George Gardiner, of the 57th regiment, had previously distinguished himself during a night sortie in the previous March, when, orderly-sergeant to the field officers of the trenches, he gallantly rallied the covering parties and drove the Russians out again; but his second exploit was a much more perilous affair.

When, on the 18th, the attack was staggering under the hurricane of iron and lead, and the grassy hollow was scooped into holes right and left by the bursting shells, the sergeant took his rifle, and jumping into one of them, opened fire on the parapet of the great earthwork, shouting to others to do the same.

Never was it more gloriously exemplified that "Practice is better than precept." The brave fellow's example was followed by a number of men at a time when nearly half the officers and a third of the rank and file of the regiment were being shot down, and dragging the corpses of their comrades to form cover, they thinned the Russians on the parapet until their ammunition was exhausted.

These two acts of heroism were worthily rewarded by the Cross.

On the night of the 22nd of March, 1855, three columns of the enemy came suddenly on our men in the advanced trenches between eleven o'clock and midnight.

The whole of the Russian front was lit up at intervals by flame. Hissing shells curved through the sky above, and the noise was tremendous.

It was the night Hedley Vicars, and many a good man and true, was killed, and Private Alexander Wright, 77th Regiment, was noticed, even in the darkness and confusion, bayoneting, butt-ending, loading and firing in a most vigorous way.

With cross-belts over his great-coat, and the ugly forage cap of that period jammed down tight on his head, Wright was in the thick of it, and his name was remembered particularly in a corps which was reported for its especial gallantry that night.

In the attack on Egerton's Pits (19th of April) he was again distinguished and wounded, and also when the Russians attacked the sap on the night attack on the 30th of August—small wonder that his name is engraved in the annals of our glory!

On the 22nd of April a curious incident occurred, which was the ultimate means of three men winning the Cross.

A bandsman of the Rifle Brigade, who was a universal favourite, went out to a well in front of the advanced trench near the quarries, and was killed by a ball from a rifle-pit near.

This so enraged the men that, without orders, and practically acting in defiance of all authority, a party of them rushed for the pits, which Bradshaw, Humpston, and McGregor were the first to reach, and, after a sharp tussle, they killed the bulk of the enemy concealed there, only a few escaping

Only the other day I saw Bradshaw's Cross and medals—a goodly row, too—exposed for sale at Messrs. Spinks's, of Piccadilly!

That same month the Rifles received new clothes—partly coatees, partly tunics—and not before they were needed, for their record tells us that they were in sad case; great-coats were always worn during the winter months; they ate—when there was anything to eat—lived, marched, slept, fought, and too often died in them—patched, frayed, and filthy

In summer life had not been so intolerable to the trench parties, although the heat was intense; the infantry could doze, with backs to the parapet, in red coats, forage caps, and white belts; but in winter things were otherwise; if one sat down then the result was a thorough soaking in the deep mud; if one walked about to keep warm there were bullets to risk; in fact, there was no escape from the misery of that duty either for officer or man, and the shout of "Shell, and count four more!" was continuous.

Another variety of incident that fell within their experience was that of deserters going over to the Russian camp, a thing that was more common than is generally believed.

Private Prosser, of the 1st Royals, on the 16th of June, 1855, saw one of the rascals making off and gave chase; every yard bringing them nearer to the enemy, with a cross-fire from two points raking the ground all the while.

He got him, though, and brought him back to the trench.

Sometimes our sentries shot the sneaking scoundrels as they went stealing away, but Prosser preferred trusting to his legs, which also served him in good stead on the 11th of August, 1855, when he left the most advanced trench to help a poor wretch of the 9th Foot who was unable to move, and, with assistance, got him in, also under a very heavy fire; the two actions winning a Cross for that corps, whose antiquity caused it to be known in a former century as "Pontius Pilate's Body Guard"

The trench parties suffered greatly from thirst, and what little water there was to be had was very indifferent.

Men got used to the perilous situation after a time, and often when a shell dropped among them the sergeant had to rouse the dozing guard and tumble them into the traverse before it burst.

The officer, picking his way among their legs as they tried to snatch a little sleep, would sometimes, nay, very often, meet a party carrying something on a stretcher.

"Who has been struck?" he would inquire; and the answer in a low tone would be: "Corporal So-and-so, sir, blown to pieces. We're going to bury him;" or, "Lieutenant ——, both legs gone, sir. We're taking him up to the hospital."

One night, it is reported by an officer of the 14th Regiment, three privates climbed over the parapet to sleep outside where the ground was drier, and not one of them awoke again in this world.

Towards the end of the siege the casualties in the trenches increased, and averaged from six to fifteen killed or wounded in a night, while the French, who had more men in their works, would sometimes lose a hundred in the twenty-four hours.

Worthily won were those Crosses gained on that duty, and sad has been the fate of many a brave fellow whose deeds were well remembered at the time, but who was not fortunate enough to get the distinction.

I know of such a one who may be seen any day, with the medal ribbons on the breast of his shabby overcoat, holding horses not a stone's throw from the British Museum, who was wounded in the trenches before Sebastopol, and is now thankful for any odd job that will help to keep body and soul together, a task which every winter renders more difficult.

Captain Frederick Cockayne Elton, of the 55th Westmoreland, stands out head and shoulders above the majority of his comrades for gallantry in the trenches.

It was said of him on one occasion that "not another officer in the British army would have done what he did that night"—the night of the 4th of August, 1855, when he commanded a working party in the advanced works in front of the quarries, the fire from the Russians being simply appalling.

In spite of it, however, to encourage his men, he went into the open, where the risk was greatest, and, with his own hands, plied pick and shovel, the air alive with shells and shot.

Another time he volunteered for one of those forgotten scrimmages with a small party, when the Russians were demolishing some detached works—one of those hand-to-hand affairs with the bayonet in which our men distinguished themselves so often, but whose memory is only preserved in regimental annals.

As was generally the case when they got at them, our fellows sent the Russians packing, and Captain Elton took one of them prisoner himself; and again, during the night of the 7th of June, 1855, he had been the first to leave the trenches at the head of his men, rallying them several times within the quarries

It is a brave record—a V.C record—but death has since removed him from among us, and the voice which rang above the firing, and could have told us such a tale of heroism, is hushed for ever.

CHAPTER X

THE FIRST PRESENTATION OF THE CROSS TO THE CRIMEAN HEROES, BY HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN, FRIDAY, JUNE 26th, 1857.

At seven o'clock on a lovely summer's morning, a light breeze stirred the leaves and rippled the surface of the Serpentine, as thousands of spectators wended their way to Hyde Park, in London, to witness a very historic ceremony.

It was "Queen's weather," and as the day advanced it became hotter than had been known for many previous years, but all the world turned out—a world in huge crinolines and tall hats, that we should laugh at now, just as half a century hence they will laugh at our stupid costume, and be quite right too.

Under the command of that splendid old Scottish soldier, Sir Colin Campbell, G.C.B, a brilliant body of troops had been drawn up—the Life Guards, gay with whisking plumes and steel cuirasses, the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, fresh from the Crimea, with bright brass helmets and yellow facings; the 11th Hussars, proud of their immortal deeds at Balaclava, Lord Cardigan at their head, in full uniform, on the charger that bore him through the Death Ride; a troop of gaily-laced Horse Artillery, two field batteries, a company of Royal Engineers, and a detachment of Bluejackets showed where the Foot Guards stood at ease: 1st Battalion Grenadiers, 2nd Battalion Coldstreams, 1st Battalion Scots Fusilier Guards—now Scots Guards,—the soul-stirring names of Alma, Inkerman, and Sebastopol freshly embroidered on their silk colours.

A line of scarlet, topped with black bearskins,

The Royal Marines, the 79th Cameron Highlanders,—unique in our army as the only corps with one battalion, the 2nd Battalion of the sombre Rifle Brigade, and a detachment of the Military Train closed the list, to which many people felt that other Crimean regiments then at Aldershot might, and should, have been added.

In the old Portman Barracks, now done away with, but where Platoff's terrible Cossacks had been quartered in 1814 to the astonishment of the Londoners, the sixty-two brave fellows about to be decorated had mustered early—men of all ranks and arms, each with a loop of cord attached to the left breast, red or blue, according to the colour of the uniform he wore.

Under the command of Lieutenant John Knox, of the Rifle Brigade, formerly sergeant, Scots Fusilier Guards, the little compagnie d'élite marched down to the Park, and drew up opposite Grosvenor Gate, amid a storm of cheering, to be regarded with a critical eye by the Chelsea pensioners, many of them veterans of Waterloo and the Peninsula, and the boys from the Duke of York's School, all soldiers' sons, who feasted their eyes on the pageant before them, and perhaps made bold resolves for the future—who knows?

In and about the uncomfortable galleries erected for their reception were all the grand folk of Court and Society; the Lords Lieutenant of counties, in uniform; the foreign attachés, and a number of Continental generals, turning their glasses on to the throng in the fierce sunshine, to pick out Fenwick Williams, of Kars, in his artillery dress, and other notable men of the late war.

At ten minutes to ten, as the twenty-first gun of the Royal Salute boomed over the Park, to the intense disgust of the water-fowl, Captain Sayer and a detachment of the Blues arrived at Hyde Park Corner, behind them riding her Majesty the Queen on a favourite roan horse, between Prince Albert on a magnificent bay, and Frederick William of Prussia in full cuirassier uniform, not long afterwards to marry our Princess Royal, and become in later years the "Unser Fritz" of the German people.

Her Majesty had donned a species of military garb in honour of the occasion. a round hat, with a gold band, and a red and white feather on the right side; a scarlet bodice, open at the throat, crossed by a gold-embroidered scarf, worn officer-fashion over the left shoulder, and a dark-blue skirt—all the Royal family and the staff having crape on the left arm.

In Scottish caps and tartan trews, the Prince of Wales and Prince Alfred rode on ponies, and the royal party reached their station, loudly cheered, the troops saluting amid a burst of martial melody

Although a dais had been prepared for the Queen, she remained on horseback, by a little table covered with a scarlet cloth, on which lay the Crosses, designed and executed by Messrs. Hancock, of Bruton Street, who had been supplied for the purpose with a captured cannon from the Arsenal at Woolwich.

The line of heroes approached, one by one, as Lord Panmure, Secretary of State for War, read out the names.

Most were in uniform, but five or six officers wore mufti, Lieutenant Dunn, notwithstanding that he had left the service, appearing in his brilliant 11th Hussar dress, with the pelisse dangling from the left shoulder, and the crimson trousers distinguishing him from the rest, of the men, one wore the three-cornered hat and old-fashioned garb of an enrolled pensioner, another—Shields, late 23rd, remarkable for his flowing Crimean beard—a park-keeper's green livery, and Walters, formerly sergeant in the 49th, marched up in the tall hat and blue uniform of a police constable, 444, R division, the sailors being in blue guernseys and white trousers

As each name was called, the recipient stepped forward saluting, the sailors taking off their hats, her Majesty received a Cross from Lord Panmure, and bending from the saddle, pinned it to the loop of cord with her own hand, Prince Albert, on that day known for the first time as Prince Consort, saluted, and the happy man retired amid tremendous cheering, while another took his place.

The actual ceremony of presentation lasted ten minutes, Lieutenant Lucas, the senior winner, coming fourth on the list, it being remarked that the Queen noticed young Hewett most particularly, the popular hero of the day being, however, John Knox, with his empty sleeve.

When the last Cross had been pinned, the decorated were drawn up about fifty yards from the Royal Party, and a review took place, the troops marching in slow time between the heroes and their Sovereign to the admiration of all beholders, the Guards' band playing, "See the Conquering Hero Comes," the Highlanders "Auld Lang Syne," the Rifles their celebrated march, and the Marines "Rule Britannia."

The cavalry and guns then went by at the trot, and afterwards at the gallop—the 11th Hussars recalling vividly the "charge of the Six Hundred," as they tore past with Cardigan at their head, and many a Balaclava man still among them.

After that the whole force was drawn up in line; the infantry presented their arms, the Life Guards, Hussars, and Dragoons their flashing sabres, three hearty cheers were given for "Queen Victoria," and the Royal cortège left the ground.

Then came a rush to shake hands with the heroes It was impossible that every one of the hundred thousand spectators said to be present could do so, but such a surging crowd surrounded the gallant "Sixty-two," that they were fain to cry in desperation, "Preserve us from our friends."

The troops returned to barracks; the bands died away in the distance, the dust settled down once more, and all was over.

More than forty of that first brave batch have since joined the great majority, but their names are enshrined in their country's roll of honour, and will be found below in the order in which they received their Crosses, with their ranks at that date, the asterisk denoting those who are still alive.

*Raby, H J.	Commander	Royal	Navy
*Bythesea, J.	,,	,,	,,
Burgoyne, A T	,,	,,	,,
*Lucas, C D	Lieutenant	,,	,,
Hewett, W. N W	,,	,,	,,
Robarts, J.	Gunner	,,	,,

Kellaway, J.	Boatswain .	Royal Navy.
Cooper, H	,,	,, ,,
*Trewavas, J	Seaman	,, ,,
Reeves, T	,,	,, ,,
*Curtis, H	Boatswain's Mate	,, ,,
*Ingouville, G.	Captain of Mast	,, ,,
*Dowell, G D.	Lieutenant	Royal Marine Artillery
Wilkinson, T	Bombardier	,, ,, ,,
Grieve, J.	Sergeant-Major	2nd Dragoons (Scots Greys)
Parkes, S	Private	4th Light Dragoons (Queen's Own)
Dunn, A. R	Lieutenant (late)	11th Hussars (Prince Albert's Own)
*Berryman, J.	Troop Sergeant-Major	17th Lancers
*Dickson, C.	Colonel	Royal Artillery
Henry, A	(late) Quartermaster	,, ,, (then Captain Land Transport Corps)
Davis, G .	Captain	Royal Artillery
Cambridge, D	Sergeant	,, ,,
*Arthur, T	Gunner and Driver	,, ,,
Graham, G .	Lieutenant	Royal Engineers
Ross, J	Corporal	,, ,,
Lindrim, W	,,	,, ,,
Perie, J.	Sapper	,, ,,
*Percy, Hon. H H M	Colonel	Grenadier Guards
Russell, Sir C , Bart	Brevet-Major	,, ,,
*Ablett, A	Sergeant	,, ,,
Palmer, A.	Private	,, ,,
*Goodlake, G. L	Brevet-Major	Coldstream Guards
Conolly, J. A	,, ,,	,, ,, (late 49th)
Strong, G.	Private	,, ,,
*Lindsay, R. J	Brevet-Major	Scots Fusilier Guards
McKechnie, J	Sergeant	,, ,, ,,
Reynolds, W	Private	,, ,, ,,
Grady, T.	Private .	4th (King's Own) Foot
Hope, W	Lieutenant	. 7th Royal Fusiliers
*Hale, T E.	Assistant Surgeon, M D. . .	,, ,, ,,
Hughes, M. . .	Private . . .	,, ,, ,,
*Norman, W . .	,, . . .	,, ,, ,,
Moynihan, A.	. Ensign (late 90th)	8th (The King's) Foot.

*Evans, S	Private .	19th (First Yorkshire North Riding)
Lyons, J		,, ,, ,,
*O'Connor, L.	Lieutenant	23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers
Shields, R	Corporal	,, ,, ,, ,,
Coffey, W	Private	34th (Cumberland) Foot
Sims, J. J	,,	,, ,, ,,
McWheeney, W	Sergeant	44th (East Essex) Foot
Walters, G		49th (Herts, Princess Charlotte of Wales)
*Owens, J	Corporal	,, ,, ,,
Lumley, C H	Brevet Major	97th (The Earl of Ulster's) Foot
Coleman, J	Sergeant	,, ,,
Clifford, Hon. H H	Brevet-Major	Rifle Brigade
Wheatley, F	Private
Cuninghame, W J	Captain
*Knox, John.	Lieutenant	,, ,, (late Sergeant Scots Fusilier Guards)
McGregor, Roderick	Private	Rifle Brigade
Humpston, R.	,,
Bradshaw, J.	,,
Bourchier, G F	Brevet-Major

CHAPTER XI

ON TO THE BAYONETS!—OUR LITTLE PERSIAN WAR.

WOOD, MOORE, MALCOLMSON

As a species of connecting link between the great Crimean struggle and the terrible Mutiny, there took place a fiery little campaign in Persia during the latter part of 1856 and the beginning of 1857.

As far back as 1828 the army of the Shah had been disciplined and organised on English lines by some British officers who went to Persia for that purpose, the result being that we found a well-equipped force to oppose us, brave to a fault, armed with flint-locks manufactured for the most part in England, and lacking only in generalship.

English weights and measures were used by their artillery, and their infantry, of which they had eighty-two regular regiments, had each a grenadier and light company, and eight battalion companies, numbering 1,190.

Their artillery wore dark blue; some of their cavalry light blue; and the infantry, which were called "serbaz," were dressed in loose linen breeches, jackets of brown or blue, with collars and shoulder-straps of various colours, and cross-belts precisely as our own, high leather boots, and the national lambskin cap of the country.

Like us, too, they had three regiments of Guards the 1st, Bahaderan Khasa, composed of Christians; the 2nd; known as the "Old Guard;" and the 3rd, the Guard of Karamania.

Persia, despite the intense heat of its climate, is a fine land, alternating from mountain to plain, green and rose-grown in some parts, arid and intolerable to Europeans in others, and our operations falling chiefly in the inhospitable portion, we suffered greatly from dust, heat, rain, and mosquitoes; but won three Victoria Crosses nevertheless, for which reason the war is still remembered and has not sunk into that oblivion which is the fate of so many of these little affairs of ours, gallantly fought in unknown corners of the world, and forgotten almost before the soldiers' wounds are healed.

In defiance of a treaty, Persia advanced on Herat, known as the key of Afghanistan, and we sent out ships and men to teach her a sharp lesson.

At the attack on Bushire, a town of mud houses on a sandy spit jutting out into the Persian Gulf, Captain John Augustus Wood, of the 20th Bombay Native Infantry, a corps with yellow facings, raised in 1817, led the grenadier company against the fort.

Clambering up, he was the first man to gain the parapet, and received a heavy volley from a large force concealed only a yard or two away.

Seven bullets struck him, and made him stagger for an instant, but he flung himself, bleeding as he was, on to them, and ran the leader through the body with his sword.

His grenadiers, close behind, charged the Persians furiously with their bayonets, and animated by their captain's example, lodged themselves firmly on the ramparts; but so severely was he hit that he had to leave the force for a time, although he afterwards returned to duty with his hurts still open.

No one grudged him the V C which he thus gained after seventeen years' service, and he died some years ago with the rank of colonel, having been through the Afghan War of 1842, and the battle of Hyderabad, 1843, previous to his Persian campaigning.

A very brilliant feat was performed about two months later at the battle of Kooshab, February 8, 1857, by two officers of the 3rd Bombay Light Cavalry, then a comparatively young regiment, having been raised in 1820, but bearing the glorious names of "Ghuznee," "Cabool," and "Hyderabad," upon its standard, to which several more have since been added.

The feat was a rare one in history, the breaking of a square by horsemen.

The little force, under Outram, had marched inland, and carried all before it; the Persians broke up and fled at our approach, leaving us to destroy their camp and stores, and on the 7th of February we were marching in the direction of Bushire again, when the rear-guard was attacked about midnight, and in the darkness of the night troops of the enemy's horse circled round us with a tremendous roar of shouting

Our 64th and 78th, and the Bombay regiments of the expedition, drove them off, although the long hours were constantly illuminated by the flash of our Enfield rifles; but towards dawn, when a heavy fog lay about us, the enemy retired, and it was not until the mist rose that we saw them strongly posted with their right resting on a village, afterwards found to be Kooshab.

A heavy cannonade now began, and Outram advanced rapidly, but unfortunately fell on his head when his horse was shot under him, and remained unconscious until the close of the action.

The Persians made a poor stand, the long range of our Enfield rifles terrifying them, but one body, the 1st Regular Regiment of Fars, remained in square after the rest of their army had melted away, and against that square, which stood brown and formidable, with glistening bayonets, and fierce bearded faces glaring under the black lambskin caps, rode the Poonah Horse and 3rd Light Cavalry.

When Forbes gave the word to charge, he placed himself alongside Lieutenant and Adjutant Moore, in front of No. 6 troop of the 3rd Bombay, Malcolmson, Spens, and Moore's brother—an eighteen-stone man, nearly six feet seven in height—riding knee to knee behind them, with the sowars in their rear.

Arrived at the square, the adjutant's horse swerved, but, letting his sword dangle from the wrist, he seized the reins in both hands, pulled his head straight, and, ramming in the spurs, took the first line of bayonets like a fence, leaping, in light blue-grey shell-jacket faced with white, into the midst of the astonished serbaz.

Down went his charger, dead; snap! the sabre broke close to the hilt, and as the troopers rode through and out on the other side to re-form for a second charge, Moore was battling for life, astride of the horse, with pistol in one hand and sword-hilt in the other.

A moment or so, and it would have been all over, a throng of wild fellows surrounded him, and in the smoke that shrouded the broken square the 3rd Bombay had their own work to do—hard work they found it. Many a saddle was empty; Forbes, their leader, was down; Frankland, the Brigade-Major, lay dead or dying, shot through the nose into the brain, after cutting down three men, but Lieutenant Malcolmson saw his comrade's danger, and rode up with a rush.

"HE TOOK THE FIRST LINE OF BAYONETS LIKE A FENCE" (p 106).

Like a meteor in the morning sunshine, he flashed among the Persians, here and there; his white pugaree whisking about his face, his long sword red, his horse in a lather, and when he had broken the group, he gave the dismounted man a stirrup, and dragged him out, his gigantic brother slashing his way clear on foot in another place.

Of the 500 that composed the square, about twenty escaped, the Highlanders and infantry pressed the others hard, the Persian line was completely overthrown at ten o'clock, and shortly afterwards our troops bivouacked in the rain, which lasted several days.

Both officers are still living, and one, Lieutenant Malcolmson, sports the old-fashioned scarlet tailcoat and handsome gold epaulettes of a Gentleman-at-Arms.

CHAPTER XII

THE INDIAN MUTINY

THE Indian Mutiny forms perhaps the reddest page of British history, and in a few sentences we shall sketch its cause, progress, and suppression.

The origin of our Empire in the East is familiar to everyone. Three ships set sail for the unknown land of Hindostan in 1591 ; one of them only reached it, and, after a voyage of three years, its captain returned to England with information that led to mighty results. Merchants set out, charters were granted, and from a series of commercial enterprises at the commencement, we gradually began to acquire land until troops were required to protect our possessions, and by one means and another, sometimes by purchase, often, it is said, by fraud, and every now and then by war with a nabob or rajah who objected to be hustled by strangers from across the sea, we gained large tracts of the country and became firmly established as visitors that meant to stay.

We thrashed the French and everybody who attempted to interfere with us, humbled mighty native princes who ventured to assert their claims, and consented to overlook the insult to the British flag for sundry lacs of rupees and more acres ; so that, to condense the not very reputable proceedings of nearly three centuries into a single paragraph, by the year 1857 we owned sway over a very large portion of the country, and had clipped the wings of many once powerful sovereigns, who were then either tributaries of England or professedly friendly towards her.

There is just this to be said—the native rulers were most of them cruel and depraved; we were slowly (very slowly) improving the land and introducing reforms amongst the people, and if we treated the natives harshly, their own chiefs had treated them worse. But, for all that, we were intruders, neither Hindoo nor Mussulman. Our officers looked upon the lower classes as dirt, and the higher grades would have been glad to see the backs of us, so that they might continue their ancient feuds, rob and torture one another, and conduct themselves without let or hindrance in the good old barbaric Oriental fashion.

As time went on, we had a strong force of civil and military functionaries there, with their wives and families, many British regiments were quartered in the various states, and the native corps in the pay of the East India Company were officered by Europeans.

A storm had been gathering and burst suddenly. The old story of the greased cartridges and the native caste has been long since exploded That was only the excuse raised for rebelling; it was really far more serious, for the conspiracy had been well planned, and several of the Indian princes and rajahs were at the bottom of it, fanning the flame and spreading it through the sultry land.

It began with mutinous disturbances in some of the native regiments in Bengal, nearly all of which were dressed in scarlet on our own model, and according as the disturbance was sternly suppressed, or treated at the outset with mistaken lenity, so the flame was either extinguished or shot up higher.

At Meerut, near Delhi, our greatest mistake was committed, an outbreak occurring on Sunday, the 10th of May, which might have been instantly stopped; but those in authority not only allowed the natives to murder many ladies and children and several of their officers, but let them go scot free to Delhi, which thenceforward became the rebel headquarters, and continued in their hands until the 14th of September, when we assaulted it and took it finally on the 20th after a long siege.

In the meantime, terrible things had been happening. By the end of June the following places were in open rebellion, and at some (those marked by the letter m) women and children had been massacred with atrocious cruelty:—

Meerut (m), Delhi (m), Ferozepore, Allyghur, Roorkee, Murdaun, Lucknow, Cawnpore (m), Nusseerabad (m), Neemuch (m), Hansi (m), Hissar (m), Jhansi (m), Mehidpore, Jullundur, Azimghur, Futtehghur, Jaunpore, Bareilly (m), Shahjehanpore, and Allahabad (m).

In India, as is well known, Europeans seek the shade of their houses by ten o'clock in the morning, and do not venture out again until evening. But the mutiny was no respecter of persons, nationality, custom, or necessity; delicate ladies fled along the white roads in the blaze of an Indian noon, night saw them hurrying deep into the jungle with their children, often without them and ignorant of their fate

In one village a pair of little shoes was found with a child's tiny feet in them slashed off by a tulwar.

There is no sentiment of one's nature that is not harrowed up by that rising at some part or other of its progress.

Every crime and horror possible to be committed by man or fiend was committed then, and when stern but necessary measures were taken to prevent that foul plot from spreading, there were people in England—far from all danger—who raised their hands in holy awe at what they were pleased to consider the barbarity of our proceedings.

The only pity was that the measures had not been taken earlier, as, indeed, they were in some provinces, with the result that mutiny and murder were checked; but, for all that, India was turned upside down, and the suppression of the revolt gave opportunity for some of the most brilliant military deeds ever known, 182 Victoria Crosses being won, to say nothing of unrecorded acts of valour whose name was legion.

To detail the atrocities and the vengeance that followed would fill many volumes.

Brigadier-General Havelock marched from Allahabad with a weak column of about 2,000 men in the hot season, defeated the execrable Nana Sahib, and entered Cawnpore, too late, alas! to rescue the women and children, who had been murdered under circumstances so awful that the true details have never found their way into print.

"Cawnpore!" became the war-cry of the soldiers. It was written up on every blank wall they passed. "Remember Cawnpore—remember the women and the children!" and some terrible deeds were perpetrated by our men, maddened at the recollection of what they had seen there, when even the stern Highlanders wept and swore vengeance.

After inflicting nine defeats on the rebels, Havelock was obliged to retire to Cawnpore again without having reached Lucknow, where a slender garrison was besieged by an immense army of mutineers.

His men fell, stricken by sunstroke and cholera, and it was not until the 19th of September, 1857, during the monsoon season, that he and Sir James Outram crossed the Ganges and again advanced on the beleaguered city.

They fought their way into it, but were too weak to escort the defenders back to safety, and were in their turn besieged with the others, until Sir Colin Campbell, who had come out from England as Commander-in-Chief at a moment's notice, advanced in November and relieved them.

Havelock, greatly beloved and respected, an old Charterhouse boy, and the veteran of many wars, died of dysentery on the 24th of November, his death being one of the thousand sad incidents of that time.

Neill had been busy with fire and sword in other places, and had died in action at Lucknow. Nicholson, a distinguished Indian soldier, had also vanished from the field of his glory, leaving a great name; but other hands took up the work, and gave the mutineers no rest.

Delhi fell after a long and exciting siege in September, 1857. Sir Colin defeated the Gwalior rebels, and those at Futtehghur. Rose, Roberts, Inglis, and Grant were all victorious, and the Lucknow position being still strongly held by the enemy, Sir Colin marched upon it again, and took it finally in March, 1858.

Then came Kotah, Jhansi, Calpee, and a host of other victories, but the rebels fought with great resolution, and from their enormous numbers, recruited from all castes and provinces, there were constantly fresh attempts made to oppose us.

Tantia Topee gave great trouble, but was overthrown at last and hanged, after being deserted by his troops; and though thanksgivings were held in England for the pacification of India on the 1st of May, 1859, there remained a great deal to do, and many isolated actions took place in various parts before the revolt was finally put down. Some of the Company's troops were taken into our service. The Company itself, whose misrule had been the prime cause of much that had happened, ceased to have any political power, and was finally dissolved. Stern justice was meted out to the rebels, and peace once more reigned.

To other books you must turn for a picture of that gorgeous land, and the struggle for life and death that took place there. The following are a few only of the deeds of valour done in defence of our Indian Empire, but they are deeds that will live, although many of the actors have gone from our midst.

CHAPTER XIII.

HOW THEY BLEW UP THE DELHI MAGAZINE.

FORREST, RAYNOR, BUCKLEY.

ON a rocky ridge rising above the sandy plain by the river Jumna stands the ancient city of Delhi—a city of mosques and palaces, built chiefly of red granite inlaid with coloured marbles, and surrounded by a red wall, pierced by seven gates and crowned with a loopholed parapet.

It was once the capital of Hindostan, and at the outbreak of the Mutiny possessed one of the largest magazines of powder and arms in India.

Thirty-five miles to the north-east lie the town and cantonments of Meerut, where one Sunday evening, May 10, 1857, a body of 2,357 natives was allowed to rise and murder some thirty Europeans under the noses of 2,028 British troops.

The shameful incapacity of the major-general commanding there, and some others in authority, in not only permitting the excesses, but afterwards letting the rebels go, flushed with triumph to spread disorder, and take Delhi, was one of the chief causes of the fearful atrocities perpetrated in that city, and cost the lives of many brave men before the place was finally subdued.

Early next morning a body of the revolted 3rd Bengal Light Cavalry came galloping down the Meerut road towards the bridge of boats, their standards bearing the honourable names of Leswarree, Deeg, Bhurtpore, Afghanistan, Ghuznee, Aliwal, and Sobraon, their swords then red with the blood of massacred women and children.

The seven gates were closed, but not before the troopers had got in, to go tearing through the streets, yelling and slashing, mad with bhang.

They overtook Commissioner Frazer in his buggy and slew him, shot Captain Douglas at the Palace guard, butchered the chaplain before his daughter's eyes, and then cut the poor girl to pieces.

All this was a foretaste of what was to follow, and the heroism of the eight, some say nine, British soldiers in the magazine stands out all the brighter that they knew the odds against them, and still resolutely stuck to their post

Sir Theophilus Metcalfe went with Lieutenants Willoughby and Forrest to a small bastion on the face overlooking the river to see whether it would be practicable to place a couple of guns to command the bridge, but the Delhi side was already in possession of the cavalry, and the scarlet-trains of rebel infantry were even then pouring over

Sooner or later an attack would be made on the magazine. The native portion of the establishment was not to be depended upon, and the English officers were in a terrible position

To consider their own safety meant the enormous stores falling into the hands of the atrocious mutineers, to attempt to defend the stores was tantamount to self-destruction, but they chose the latter course without hesitation, and began to barricade the gates.

Inside the gate that led to the park two six-pounders were placed, loaded with a double charge of grape; Sub-Conductor Crow standing beside one, Sergeant Stewart by the other, the lighted matches ready in their hands.

Behind the principal gate, chevaux de frise and two more guns waited in eloquent silence, another couple commanding the gate and bastion as a further precaution, while in front of the office were three six-pounders and a twenty-four-pound howitzer, all doubly charged with grape-shot.

From the chief powder store a train had been laid to a large lime tree in the yard, and Conductor Scully volunteered to take charge of it, arranging to fire it when Conductor Buckley should raise his hat

Meanwhile the natives and gun-lascars had been mustered, and arms served out; but they showed great insubordination, and refused to obey—more especially the Mussulman portion. And all that time the rebels had been entering Delhi through the palace, which was thrown open to them, and through which they passed cheering, their shouts and firing being heard by the handful in the magazine.

Presently some of the Palace Guard came down and demanded the instant surrender of the place to the King of Delhi; soon after a subadar of the Magazine Guard told the lieutenants that scaling-ladders were being sent by the king, which proved to be true; and as soon as they were reared, the whole of the native garrison scurried out to join the rebels, leaving Willoughby, Forrest, Captain Raynor, Sergeants Edwards and Stewart, Conductors Buckley, Scully, and Sub-Conductor Crow, to defend the place alone.

Overhead the kites were hovering, and there was a hush within the walls; in the city, where the yells and tumult increased, they were cutting babies' throats with broken glass, and murdering defenceless women with the refinement of Oriental barbarity.

A dramatic scene was taking place at the famous Cashmere Gate, where the 54th Native Infantry abandoned their British officers to fifteen sowars of the 3rd Cavalry, who cut them all down in detail. And presently black faces, surmounted by shakoes and turbans, peeped over the wall of the magazine, and a howling mob clamoured at the gate. Stewart exchanged a low "Ready" with his comrade Crow, and they applied their matches.

A double report boomed out, and the white smoke rose in a cloud; a horrible hissing rent the air, and next moment the grape scattered into the mob, rolling them over with shrieks and screams of agony.

The two artillerymen ran back to the main part of the magazine, as had been arranged, and each time the rebels appeared in force there was another puff, another murderous whiz, and the pile of corpses outside the wall was increased, the wounded staggered squealing into the city

Outside all was noise and shouting, with the incessant crack of musketry, at forty yards' range, until it seems little short of a miracle that one of the defenders survived; inside there was a terrible quiet, broken only at intervals by the discharge of a gun, as each man carried out his allotted task as calmly as if on parade.

For five hours those eight brave fellows kept their post; rammer and sponge were applied with almost monotonous regularity, again and again the short word "Fire!" was given; a glance along the piece to see if it were laid true, the match kissed the touch-hole, and another score of mutineers were blown to eternity. But all things must end. Before deserting, the natives had hidden the principal pouches; ammunition was running short, Forrest had two bullets through his hand, and no help arrived; the last charge had been rammed home; for the last time the red flame darted from the iron muzzle, they could hold out no longer, and though even then they could have escaped with their lives, they preferred to risk them rather than abandon the stores they had defended so long and so nobly.

Buckley being down with a ball above the elbow, Lieutenant Willoughby gave the final signal about half-past three, and Scully fired his train.

A lightning flash whipped across the yard from the solitary lime tree—a dull crash told what was coming—a column that was flame, flash, smoke, shot, shell, stones, and every species of débris blended into one terrible mass, rose in the air, high above the city, shaken to its foundations. The magazine was blown up, the cartridge barrels half sunk in the earth were torn from their places, and their contents flung far and wide in a leaden shower; and as the high wall fell, crushing nigh on a thousand rebels, the four survivors of the gallant garrison, stunned and scorched, gained a sally-port, and reached the Jumna

For hours the black cloud hung above Delhi. They heard the explosion distinctly at Meerut, where Forrest, Raynor, and Buckley arrived to tell their story; but brave Willoughby, all bruised and wounded, was set upon in a village on the way to Kurnaul, and mercilessly slaughtered. His three comrades won the Cross for their valour, but while

"India rang with his praise, and England echoed back the applause, he was not to hear or receive the reward of his heroism"

He died hard, though, as we learn from one whose duty it was to ferret out the particulars and bring the murderers to justice

With Lieutenants Butler, Angelo, and Osborne, of the 54th Native Infantry, an officer named Hyslop, and a Mr. Stewart, of the Delhi College, he got away from the doomed city on the 11th, and reached the village of Negpore, where they were well treated, and fed in a grove of trees

Osborne, who was badly wounded in the thigh, had to be left there, and the rest pushed on, with a few regulation swords and an empty carbine, across country, to be met, when near Koomhera, by a swash-buckling Brahmin, who demanded their weapons as a present

They were in a bad district, and it was necessary, if possible, to ride the high horse, so one of them, believed to have been Lieutenant Willoughby, having loaded the carbine with a copper Mussooree pice, shot the insolent ruffian through the chest.

At his agonised screams, five neighbouring villages turned out, and the story ends with a horrid, unequal struggle on the banks of a canal cutting, every one of the little band being barbarously done to death!

CHAPTER XIV.

OUR GALLANT GUNNERS IN INDIA.

TOMBS, HILLS, DIAMOND, CONNOLLY, ROBERTS

ONE of the most gorgeously dressed regiments in the Indian army was the Bengal Horse Artillery.

On State occasions they appeared in a blue uniform, heavily laced with gold, and a Roman helmet encircled with leopard skin, and adorned with a whisking plume of crimson horse-hair.

On service they usually wore white, with a pith helmet, and afterwards, when that colour was found unsuitable for parades, owing to the dirt and grime of action, they went into the serviceable khaki now so familiar to us all.

Unlike our own mounted batteries, every horse in the team had a rider, and they were famous for the bold way in which they bumped their guns across country, making light of hedge and ditch in an astonishing manner.

Added to the Bengal army about the beginning of this century, they played an important part in the suppression of the Mutiny, and there are few records of greater heroism than that displayed by Gunner William Connolly at Jhelum on the 7th of July, 1857.

Lieutenant Cookes galloped his half-troop forward at dawn, and unlimbering, opened on the rebels at musket range.

One of the sponge-men having been shot, Connolly took his place, and after two rounds had been fired, he reeled and fell with a ball through his left thigh

At the same moment the battery retired to take up another position, and, streaming with blood, the gunner mounted into the saddle of his horse in the team, and rode with the gun until it was again unlimbered.

In vain his comrades pressed him to go to the rear, for he was then in great pain; he refused, and after a little rest resumed his post, in spite of the increasing heat, and was sponging away about eleven o'clock, when another ball struck him in the hip, almost causing him to faint.

Connolly's officer, seeing how badly the man was wounded and how terribly he was suffering, ordered him to be carried out of action, but Connolly knew that his post was at his gun, and struggling to his feet somehow, said, "No, sir, I'll not go there whilst I can work here," resuming his place, sponge in hand, soon after.

All through that day he kept to it, as the short words were given, and the gun was fired again and again, his overalls stiff with blood, and his strength at times on the point of giving out; but another trial was to befall him, for, late in the afternoon, when the mutinied sepoys of the 14th Native Infantry were blazing away from the walls of a village at a hundred yards' range, picking off many a smart man among the guns, and Connolly was still sponging pluckily, after encouraging another wounded gunner to hurry up with some fresh ammunition, a third bullet tore through his right leg.

Six times was the charge rammed home after that, six times did he hear the sharp word "Fire!" six times did his sponge pass down the heated barrel of the field-piece and was recovered smartly amid the applause of his comrades Then will broke down, and exhausted nature gave way as he sank unconscious into the arms of Mr. Cookes, and was placed on a waggon, which carried him from the scene of his splendid pluck.

He charged no breach ; he cleft no foe from brow to chin, as some have done who wear the Cross of Honour ; he just stuck to his duty when every man was wanted at his post, in spite of increasing agony and excruciating torment ; and he was a hero.

Sergeant Diamond, also of the same corps, won the distinction for the gallantry with which he worked his guns at Boolundshuhur, and cleared the road of the enemy, when Greathed defeated the rebels there in September ; but perhaps the best-remembered exploit placed to the credit of the gunners during that war was that of Major Tombs, and his subaltern, Lieutenant James Hills, of the Bengal Artillery, afterwards Lieut.-General Sir James Hills-Johnes, K.C.B., before Delhi.

Hills was on piquet-duty with a couple of guns on a mound to the right of the camp, and there was a rumour about an hour before noonday that the enemy's cavalry were coming down upon him.

He ordered his men to the position they were to take up in case of alarm, but before the guns were formed up, he saw the rebel sowars close upon them.

Without hesitation, after a hasty command to the sergeant, he rode straight into them, single-handed, and the accounts of what followed are as confused as was the mêlée itself.

Some say he fired four shots and dropped two men, knocking a third out of his saddle with the empty revolver. Others tell us that he cut the first two down, and was then ridden over, together with his horse. The official record proceeds with a soul-stirring description of two mounted scoundrels and one on foot dashing down on him, unarmed and defenceless, but he must have found his weapons in time, for he shot the first, caught the second's lance in his left hand, and drew blood with his sword, after which he cut the first down who had returned bleeding and furious, and then tackled the rebel who was on foot

There is a whisper of a smashing blow full in the rascal's face from Hills' fist, but the stern despatch from Colonel Mackenzie says the man wrenched Hills' sword away, and, tripping, the lieutenant fell, exposed to instant death, but for the timely arrival of Major Tombs, in his gold-laced blue shell-jacket, cuffed and collared with scarlet, who had rushed from his tent when he heard of the encounter, and sped for the spot.

By a long shot, he saved his subaltern, and the two went together to look after their wounded, when a sowar rode by with Hills' pistol in his hand.

He cut at the lieutenant, who parried the stroke, and also at the major, who did the same, but a third terrific slash sent Hills reeling, badly hit on the head

Then Major Tombs, a very dark man of thirty-three, with slight moustache and bushy side-whiskers, one of the finest fellows in the Indian army by general consent, closed with him, and ran him straight through the body.

Both were decorated, and Tombs died a Major-

General, Knight, and K.C.B., having had many horses killed under him in action.

One of our most popular generals is Field Marshal Lord Roberts, of Candahar renown, and he, too, started his military career in the Bengal Artillery, to which he was gazetted on the 12th of December, 1851.

Few men have seen more service, and up to 1876 he had been already mentioned twenty-three times in despatches.

When a lieutenant, D.-A.-Q.-M.-G. of Artillery, he was with Sir Colin Campbell during the advance on Futtehgurh, and after the slight engagement at Khodagunge, before they reached that place, he saw two sepoys hastening away with a colour belonging to some Mahomedan Khan, and spurred off to overtake them.

Dressed, as Lord Roberts has himself informed me, in a blue patrol jacket, bedford cords and brown boots, with a turban encircling his khaki-coloured helmet, and mounted on a bay charger, he was seen to come up with them on the outskirts of a village, and turning at bay, they threw their muskets forward and covered the slim figure.

One of them fired, but those faulty old percussion caps had luckily a habit of snapping, and the young lieutenant cut down the rebel with the colour, and captured it.

On the same day he was again distinguished in a different manner; for, during the pursuit, he came upon a loyal sowar, or native horse-soldier of the 5th Punjab Cavalry, engaged with a rebel sepoy of the 41st Bengal Native Infantry, on foot, and, as is generally the case with "sword mounted, versus bayonet dismounted," the rebel was having it his own way.

'WITH ONE TERRIFIC SLASH ACROSS THE FACE ROBERTS KILLED HIM ON THE SPOT" (p 125).

Riding up to the trooper's assistance, never heeding the fixed bayonet of the desperate sepoy, with one terrific slash across the face Roberts killed him on the spot.

The vision of that scene, and the death-blow which ended it, came to my mind when I saw a slight, undersized gentleman, walking quietly through Trafalgar Square, not long after the last return of Lord Roberts from India.

The silk hat, the frock coat, and the neatly-folded umbrella, were not indicative in any way of heroism, and the thin bronzed face with its white moustache alone told of sojourn in tropical climes, how inevitably one associates the brawny limb and the mighty muscle with deeds of daring and valour, and what strange surprises would await us if every one of the four hundred odd Victoria Cross men could stand before us in the flesh!

Such a muster would show all sorts and conditions of heroes—Wadeson, so benevolent-looking; Hartley with the determined chin; Gunner Arthur, tall as a guardsman, Hook, short and heavy, Adams, the chaplain, a little dark man; that other chaplain, Smith (who ought to have got the Cross), thin, with a red beard—few that one would select from a crowd as heroes from their personal appearance alone, proving how little the outside of a man matters, provided the heart is right within.

CHAPTER XV.

KOLAPORE KERR—AN EXCITING INCIDENT.

Lieutenant Kerr

THE following story reads like a romance, and shows what pluck and determination can accomplish in the face of tremendous odds

There was a gloom over the mess table at Sattara one July evening, in the eventful year 1857.

News of the sepoy rising had come, and it was gravely feared that the revolt would spread into the Presidency of Bombay, the European officers well knowing the disaffection of the people, and the very doubtful loyalty of the native troops

There was only one present who had any confidence in his men, Lieutenant William Alexander Kerr, of the Southern Mahratta Irregular Horse, whose position as adjutant had won him the respect of his green-coated sowars, from the firmness and strict justice he had always shown them

He had just been stating his conviction that they would ever remain "true to their salt" when an orderly came in with a telegram, which was handed with a salute to the commanding officer, and as he perused it, the others saw his face change.

When the servants had withdrawn and the mess-room door closed, the message was read aloud amid a deathlike silence which lasted for some minutes.

It had come at last—the 27th Bombay Native Infantry had risen suddenly at Kolapore, seventy-five miles from Sattara, murdered every officer they could find, and were besieging the others in the Residency, where, from want of provisions, they could not hold out long.

Luckily the mutineers had not cut the telegraph wire, and the beleaguered were able to send the brief message imploring instant help

"By gad, gentlemen," said the chief in a low voice, "this is a bad business, I cannot trust my fellows, and you are all in the same boat. What is to be done?"

Kerr raised his tall figure and bent over the table, where the candles were allowed to gutter and the wine was left unheeded.

"I can trust my men," he said impressively, with a slight Scottish accent, "and I'm ready to go now." And in half-an-hour fifty troopers, all that could be spared, with Kerr at their head, filed away into the darkness and the rain

Setting their faces due south, in the terrible monsoon season, with the water out over the country, the troop splashed on, swimming their horses over five rivers, and crossing seven swollen nullahs, stumbling through paddy fields sometimes knee deep in liquid mud, and at last arriving in sight of Kolapore within twenty-six hours of the start

The young lieutenant found the mutineers had defeated the Kolapore Light Infantry and were then occupying a fortification near the town, a position strengthened by circular bastions, and only to be entered by low doors of thick teak-wood, behind which the cowards had built up stones

Kerr at once rode off to the Rajah, who lent him a couple of old guns, and with these he attempted to breach the wall at thirty yards' range while the yelling rebels fired on him and his weary sowars, but after all their trouble they had to abandon the guns, which were found to be useless and not unlikely to burst; the red glow in the sky betokened the approach of night, and if anything was to be done it must be done quickly, as he felt his discouraged, worn-out troopers might not be in the same mind next morning; so without hesitation he ordered them to dismount, and arming himself and a faithful Mahratta, named, curiously enough, Gumpunt Row Deo Ker, with iron crowbars, he led a portion of his party against one of the doors, the rebels blazing away at them from the top of the wall.

The heavy blows fell unheard on the wooden beams amid the sharp rattle of musketry, and Kerr escaped injury by a miracle, the door giving at the lower part until there was a hole sufficiently large to admit one man at a time in a stooping posture.

Through the aperture he darted like a terrier into a rat-hole, deafened for the moment by the crash of more than twenty muskets, which he dodged by remaining bent down; and then rushing on the mutineers, followed by Gumpunt Row and sixteen dismounted sowars, he attacked them furiously with his sword.

A tremendous combat was waged in the coming dusk; Kerr's blood was up, the blood of a stalwart Scotsman, whose ancestors had figured in many a Border raid, and so well was he backed by his faithful Mahrattas that the sepoys were slaughtered in heaps, and the remnant at last compelled to take refuge in a house near the other entrance to the pagah or fortification, where, barricading themselves, they opened a heavy fire through the loopholes.

"Round this way," cried Kerr. "Burn the beggars out," and they set fire to the building, roasting several of the defenders, the rest retreating behind a gateway, which they closed and strengthened.

Other mutineers from the bastions joined them, and reinforced, they again opened with their muskets on the attacking party.

Kerr was to the front immediately with his crowbar, Gumpunt Row, his high boot covered with blood from a wound in the foot, plying heavy blows beside him, and for the second time an opening yawned, through which the lieutenant crawled, luckily escaping the whizzing bullets that starred on the walls.

The frantic rebels aimed wildly, and, though very superior in numbers, had desperate men to deal with.

Still, they made a bold stand. Kerr's helmet chain was cut by a ball, and the edge of his sword turned by another, Gumpunt Row saved his officer's life by shooting a rebel in the nick of time, but he had a narrow shave, for a musket was fired so close to his face that he was blinded for a moment.

When his smarting eyes recovered their vision, Kerr rushed at the man and pierced him through with such force that he could only withdraw his sword by a great effort, and while he was tugging at it, another mutineer came behind him, and felled him with the butt end of his musket.

A cowardly fellow crept up to despatch him as consciousness wavered, but watchful Gumpunt again pulled his trigger, and the wretch went to his last account, Kerr struggling to his feet at the same moment and killing another.

Smoke filled the air, the Mahrattas and their valiant leader hitting at random. Several green coats lay dead, and every man of the stormers had been more or less wounded by ball or bayonet, but they ferreted the rascals out of their corner and sent them flying into a temple for refuge.

The ground was slippery with blood, and strewn with spent cartridges, Kerr and his men were terribly exhausted and badly hurt, but the indefatigable fellow was soon thundering on the door of the rebels' last stronghold with his iron bar.

This time he could make no impression, and the balls were whistling past, he had only seven sowars on their legs, and the thing seemed impossible until, looking round with something like despair in his face, he saw a pile of hay not far off, and in a moment he was staggering back with an armful, his men following suit, while Gumpunt Rao lighted the heap, and a bright flame shot up, filling the darkness with a myriad sparks.

Higher rose the pile, the heat became intolerable, and they withdrew out of danger, listening to the crackling of the door, which was burning merrily, and the mad shouts of the murderers inside, who knew their time had come.

Cuts were roughly bound, wounds staunched, and the red swords grasped again. "See, sahib, we can go in now," said Gumpunt, pointing to the charred planks; and they went in, through the sparks, and the smoke, and the fiery embers, into the dark temple; and when they came out the red swords were redder, and they brought with them, cowed and bleeding, the very few who remained alive of the thirty-four mutineers that had garrisoned the pagah.

Of Kerr's seventeen dismounted Mahrattas, eight were killed on the spot, and four more died of their wounds, while he himself and the five survivors were every one hit.

Thus, by sheer pluck and strength of character, he vindicated the loyalty of the Southern Mahratta Irregular Horse and won the V.C., and it is to be regretted that a few years later his name disappeared from the pages of the Army List, although it has since figured on the title-pages of several excellent little volumes on riding and driving, one published as recently as 1891.

Though Kolapore saw some hard fighting at the end of '57, the rebels received short shrift in that part of Hindustan, for we read that seventeen of them, including some influential men detected in a plot to murder all the Europeans at the Hills and in Sattara, were executed on the 8th of August, six being blown from the guns, five hanged, and the remainder shot, an example that might have been followed with advantage in other places.

CHAPTER XVI.

A CHARMED LIFE.

LIEUTENANT HAVELOCK, V.C., AFTERWARDS LT.-GEN SIR H. M HAVELOCK-ALLAN, BART., K.C.B.

THE name of Havelock is one inseparably connected with our Indian Empire.

Sir Henry Havelock joined the Rifle Brigade a month after Waterloo was fought, and, exchanging into the 13th Light Infantry in 1823, went out to India with the regiment, and spent the greater part of his days there.

A sincere Baptist, he was not ashamed to own it, at a time, too, when religion was almost universally scoffed at in the army; and he showed by his life and example that a soldier can be a good Christian, and a Christian may make a good soldier.

Henry Marshman Havelock was his son, born in 1830 at Chinsurah, in Bengal, and at the outbreak of the Mutiny he was lieutenant and adjutant in the 10th Regiment.

When Brigadier-General Havelock marched with his famous column of relief from Allahabad in July, 1857, his son was his aide-de-camp, and soon found plenty of opportunity for distinguishing himself.

The execrable Nana Sahib, whose death, by the way, has never been satisfactorily proved, came out of Cawnpore to make a hot fight of it, taking up a strong position commanding five villages, with numerous entrenchments, behind which there were said to be 13,000 rebels.

Havelock's force on leaving Allahabad mustered, including 700 Sikhs, about 2,000; but there was no time to be lost if life and honour were to be spared.

Exhausted as our men were, an engagement took place, and four villages and seven guns were captured at the point of the bayonet, when the rebels planted a twenty-four-pounder on the Cantonment Road, round which they began to rally.

It was of the greatest importance that the gun should be carried, and young Havelock was sent to the remains of the 64th Staffordshire, lying down to escape the fire, to order them forward to take it.

Up sprang the gallant 64th, and off they started on their road to glory, but Major Stirling, whose horse had been wounded by a shell, was on foot at their head, and seeing no mounted officer, the aide-de-camp volunteered to lead them on his own responsibility, riding forward under a shower of shot, which turned to grape when he neared the field-piece.

The regiment rushed the gun in fine style—Havelock very conspicuous in front; but though the attack was successful and the rebels retreated to Bithoor, leaving us that awful discovery of the well and slaughter chamber of Cawnpore to madden our men, the lieutenant's action gave rise to a most unfortunate unpleasantness, which has become matter of history

Unknown to his son, General Havelock recommended him for the V C, and the officers of the 64th, feeling that it somehow reflected on their credit, forwarded a letter commenting strongly on the aide-de-camp's usurpation of a post which their own commanding officer was filling in an honourable and soldierly way.

Colin Campbell, biased as he was against the new decoration, had something to say about it, and, like most of his remarks, his utterance on that occasion was strong and to the point. As a matter of fact, everyone did his duty, young Havelock rather more, and if proof were wanting of his worthiness it is to be found in every subsequent campaign in which he was engaged.

At the Charbagh Bridge, Lucknow, where our slender column met with a terrible resistance, young Havelock rode forward with the Madras Fusiliers, now the 102nd, and when the smoke drifted away they saw him, sitting calmly in the saddle waving the rest to advance, almost the sole survivor of the party, whose members lay riddled with shot in the September morning.

From the flat roofs of the houses a deadly fire was poured, but he went through it untouched for some time, save for a bullet through his helmet, afterwards superintending the passage of the wounded and waggons, when the 78th kept the bridge-head, and the tide of war had rolled away in the narrow lanes of Lucknow as the column fought on towards the beleaguered Residency.

Sir James Outram strongly urged his recommendation again for the Cross, and it was duly sent home by his delighted father; but in the meantime the first application had been granted, and it was a source of regret and annoyance to the "Bayard of India" that the lieutenant got no clasp for the Charbagh.

Adjutant Havelock had just ordered the 78th to follow the column after a three hours' struggle, more fully described in the notice of the "Ross-shire Buffs," when a bullet struck him in the left elbow-joint, and he fell insensible.

We shall meet with him again with the doctors of the 90th, under sadly different conditions. Suffice it to mention here that he was invested with the Cross by her Majesty on his return to England in 1859, being then a captain in the 18th Royal Irish, and a brevet-lieutenant-colonel But the father was not destined to see the son's distinction, and had long been lying in his quiet grave beside a spreading tree, on whose bark loving hands had carved the letter H

CHAPTER XVII

THE CASHMERE GATE, AND WHAT THEY DID THERE

SMITH, HAWTHORNE, LANCE-CORP. SMITH, HOME, SALKELD

IN the whole catalogue of heroism, there are few incidents more stirring than that which immediately preceded the storming of Delhi.

Two columns were ordered to rush the breaches, and the third, consisting of 250 men of the 52nd Foot, 250 of the Qumáyn Battalion, and 500 of the 1st Punjaub Infantry, was to await the blowing up of the Cashmere Gate, and then go in with the bayonet.

The explosion party mustered in the full light of a fine morning for their desperate work, and advanced across the broken bridge under a fire from the picked marksmen at the wicket that renders it little short of miraculous that one returned to tell the tale

They were Lieutenants Duncan Charles Home and Philip Salkeld, of the Bengal Engineers, Sergeants Smith, Carmichael, and Corporal Burgess of the same corps; a havildar and eight privates of the Bengal Sappers and Miners; and Bugler Robert Hawthorne, of the 52nd, an Irishman from Londonderry, whose duty it was to sound the advance when the gate was blown in.

The air was full of uproar and confusion, our artillery pouring on the city and being briskly replied to by round shot, rockets and shells from the rebels inside, and while the third column halted on the high road, the explosion party went steadily forward under a heavy shower of balls.

Each carrying a twenty-five-pound bag of powder, Lieutenant Home and four men passed through the Barrier-gate and crossed the ditch boldly, making straight for the object of their mission, the enemy closing the wicket in obvious alarm, and suspending their fire for a moment in sheer astonishment at the audacity of the Feringhee officer, thereby giving him time to place his bags and jump down into the ditch in safety

Salkeld, Carmichael and Burgess next followed through the barrier, but four of the sepoys lingered behind it, refusing to go any farther, and Sergeant John Smith laid his bag down and handled his rifle grimly

"If you don't advance, you fellows, I shall shoot you!" he said, and, as Lieutenant Salkeld ran back to find out the delay, he took in the situation at a glance.

"Why don't you come on?" he shouted "Shoot them! Shoot them!" And as Smith raised his gun slowly to the "present" to give them time, two of the cowards thought better of it, and passed on

"Don't shoot!" cried the lieutenant again. "There will be enough with your own bag," and Smith, picking up his dangerous load, was immediately under fire.

Home and the bugler were crouching in the ditch; they had done their work. Salkeld and Burgess were there and busy; but Carmichael lay dead where he had fallen from the broken bridge, his bag in sight before a wicket through which the rebels were furiously blazing away.

Smith laid his own bag, and dragged the sergeant's powder, at terrible risk, until it was added to the pile; and, under a heavy fire from the wicket and the top of the gate, he calmly arranged the fuse, and reported all ready to his officer.

Salkeld stooped to apply the quick-match, but, putting out his foot, he was shot through the thigh, and fell into the ditch, passing the slow-match to Smith as he did so, and telling him to fire the charge

Burgess, who stood next to the wounded lieutenant, snatched the match, and Smith called to him to keep cool and fire it

All the while the bullets and slugs were hailing down upon them. The fresh September morning was alive with shouts and tumult And below, in semi-security, Home and the bugler waited and wondered, as well they might.

"It's gone out, sir!" exclaimed Burgess, thinking he addressed Lieutenant Salkeld "It won't go off!"

Sergeant Smith handed him a box of matches, but they dropped back into his hand as the corporal tumbled over into the ditch also, shot through the body And then all apparently depended on one man!

He crouched close to the charge to avoid the wicket, and had struck a light, when the treacherous portfire in the fuse, which had not gone out after all, fizzed in his face, and he sprang into the ditch with his rifle.

Before he reached the ground the explosion took place; and, amid the thunder of a deafening report, with stones toppling from the gate and raining round on every side, a volume of choking powder-smoke filled the air, and the plucky sergeant groped for the wall.

Stunned by the noise, and nearly stifled by the pungent cloud that clung round him, he felt someone, who proved to be Lieutenant Home, the bugler being also near.

"Has God spared you, sir? Are you hurt?" asked Smith. To his great relief, the officer replied in the negative, the three men waiting anxiously for a few moments until the dust cleared away a little and the masonry ceased to thud from the shattered gate.

Opinions vary as to the time that elapsed before the shrill bugle-call rang out to summon the stormers, but it was repeated three times before they heard it amid the row and rattle; and, as the column, led by the gallant 52nd, dashed over the bridge, the survivors saw Salkeld and the corporal in the middle of the ditch covered with dust, and just clear of the stones that had fallen in the few yards' space that divided them from each other.

Sergeant Smith went over to the lieutenant, both of whose arms were broken, and called Hawthorne to help carry him under the bridge, as the fire was finding them out, but the poor fellow would not be moved, and after begging Home to get out of the range of the sepoys' guns, as he could do no good, Smith put a powder bag under the wounded man's head—a fitting pillow—and went to look at Burgess, who was dying fast.

The Havildar Pelluck Singh lay under the bridge shot through the thigh, and to the three sufferers

Smith gave a draught of brandy from Lieutenant Home's flask, leaving the bugler in charge of them, while he went to the rear in search of stretchers, and Home scrambled out to follow the column.

After some difficulty the brave fellow procured three stretchers, and was returning with them, when an officer of the 60th Rifles took one, the sergeant got the others to the ditch, having to defend them with his drawn sword, for in the confusion of an action it is "first come first served," and men with a wounded comrade on their hands are no respecters of persons.

Lieutenant Salkeld, bound roughly, but tenderly, with the bugler's pugaree, was carried off to the rear, with instructions to Hawthorne not to leave him until in the hands of a surgeon, while the native corporal who helped to carry Burgess returned a few moments afterwards to say that his charge was dead.

The column was meanwhile battling its way towards the famous Chándni Chauk, or Street of Silver, where it met with such a resistance as to cause Colonel Campbell, who commanded it, to retire, and hold the Begam Bágh for an hour and a half, after which he fell back to the church and posted his sadly diminished men for the night in the church itself and the houses round it, with guns pointing up the two streets that led to the interior of the city

It was during that retrograde movement that Lance-Corporal Henry Smith, 52nd Regiment, carried a wounded comrade off under circumstances of such gallantry that the V.C. was eventually given to him.

But of the explosion party who made the way for the column four only survived, and of these Lieutenant Salkeld only lived a few days.

When he was dying, half in the hope that it might stimulate him, General Archdale Wilson sent his aide-de-camp with a piece of red ribbon as a temporary substitute for the Cross, but he had only strength left to say, "It will be gratifying to send it home," and long before the news reached the quiet Dorsetshire rectory the sandy soil had closed on the remains of a brave man.

His comrade Home was killed on the 1st of the following month, strangely enough by another explosion, at Malagash, so that Sergeant Smith and Bugler Hawthorne alone lived to wear the distinguished order

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE LUCKNOW CROSSES OF THE ROSS-SHIRE BUFFS, AND THE HEROES OF "DHOOLIE SQUARE"

MACPHERSON, MCMASTER, HOLLOWELL, MCMANUS, RYAN, WARD, HOME, BRADSHAW, AND JEE.

THE gallant 78th Highlanders, (amalgamated in 1881 with the 72nd, under the title of Seaforths, its individuality gone like its cherished buff facings) won six Crosses at Lucknow out of a total number of eight gained by the regiment.

It is with the first attempt to relieve the plucky little garrison that we have to do just now, when a small force under Brigadier-General Havelock, C.B, was marching upon it, after helping to avenge the ghastly massacre of Cawnpore.

Fighting its way in the sultry Indian July, cholera thinning the ranks at every stride, they routed the rebels successfully until their own numbers became diminished and they were obliged to fall back across the Ganges and return to Cawnpore, but the advance had had this result, that a body of mutineers had been drawn away from the beleaguered city, enabling the garrison to make a dashing sortie and secure a further supply of provisions.

Nevertheless, the defenders were in bad case, and something must be done for them. Accordingly, Sir James Outram joining with a flying column on the 16th of September, and chivalrously putting himself under Havelock's command, although he was his superior officer, the two comrades set out with a meagre column of 2,500 men, determined to relieve Lucknow or die in the attempt.

The flat land of Oude was soaked and its rivers were swollen. Large sheels or lakes lay out over the country, rendering it very difficult to get the guns along, but the brave band found itself at last near the Alum Bagh Gardens, four miles from the Residency where their anxious countrymen and women were awaiting them

Havelock fired some heavy cannon to warn them that relief was at hand, but the well-worn old story of Jessie Brown and the bagpipes is, I fear, a myth. It first appeared in the Pays, our papers got hold of it, a song was written, Goodall painted the subject, and the Scottish maid-servant, whose ears are supposed to have caught the distant pibroch, became a historical character

Owing to a terrible scourge of cholera in 1845 which carried off two officers, 496 men, forty-seven women, and 124 children of the Ross-shire Buffs in six months, there were many English and Irish in the regiment during the Mutiny, the Scots being too wary to enlist, but it did things at Lucknow and elsewhere of which any Scottish corps might well be proud, and as they reached the beautiful gardens and found a strong force of mutineers drawn up there, well posted, the men who had seen the wall of Cawnpore, and whose cry was, "Remember the women and children," felt their hands close tighter on their Enfield rifles as they came into action.

A hot fight took place. The advancing column captured a large gun with a shout, although sixty officers and men fell under the fire from the garden walls; the Irregular Horse and Volunteer Cavalry took five more guns, the infantry another couple, and the rebels drew back, pursued by Sir James Outram, through the flooded fields towards the city.

On the 25th of September an assault was ordered, the Charbagh on the outskirts was carried, in spite of a determined resistance, and the Madras Fusiliers rushed a bridge, over the canal which encircled Lucknow like a moat.

"We have taken that position, at all events, at the point of the bayonet," cried Lieutenant Havelock, aide-de-camp to his father, the general, riding up with a ball through his solar topee, to Surgeon Jee, who had dismounted to tend an officer, whose life he found had ebbed out. Some soldiers pulled the gallant doctor inside the bastioned gateway of the Charbagh Palace, as the round-shots whanged by in quick succession, and the 78th were ordered to advance along the Cawnpore road to cover the passage, while guns were pitched into the water, and the main body threaded the narrow lanes towards the Residency.

For three hours the kilted laddies held their post at the head of the street, charged repeatedly by the rebels, and under a murderous fire from the white houses on each side; but they piled the ground with corpses, and sent the linen-clad mutineers howling back.

The principal force had penetrated far into the city, and there was a slight lull, when a message arrived from two companies which occupied a pagoda some little distance off, that "The guns were coming, with a great multitude of rebels," and a dull clatter was heard by the regiment, reduced by one fourth, with ten officers killed, as two brass nine-pounders were dragged forward and pointed at them.

Meanwhile, Assistant-Surgeon McMaster had been fearlessly exposing himself—binding and dressing the wounded as coolly as though the death-stricken street had been a quiet hospital ward, and winning his V C. under the eyes of his comrades, in what always seems to me to be one of the most plucky of the many ways by which it may be won; but anticipating the ghastly lanes which would be ploughed through the shattered band at the first round, word was given to charge Lieutenant Macpherson, their popular adjutant, beloved in the regiment which his father had commanded for many years, sprang forward with a shout, claymore in hand, and sped on foot straight for the muzzles of the cannon, followed by the Highlanders, close at his spurred heels.

A short snarling scrimmage took place as they met the sepoys, over, under, and round about the guns they surged, bayonet and native sword, a slashing, hacking, prodding mob of redcoats and mutineers, here a panting fiend turning at bay, to read his doom in the bloodshot eye of a brawny private, there a group of dark-skinned rascals, chopping at a wounded sergeant, and the lieutenant descending on them with his gleaming claymore.

Like Cardigan at Balaclava, Macpherson was first at the guns, which he never left until strong arms had trundled them to the brink of the canal, and hurled them over with a ringing cheer, surrounded all the while by the mutineers, who fought with the fury of hate.

In a few minutes Surgeon Jee had between twenty and thirty wounded to tend, and while he was busying himself with the work, they told him that the regiment had passed on, and that it was death to remain in the open, as the rebels were potting at him from the street corner.

But it was not in his nature to desert his charge, and sending a messenger to the colonel, asking for some men to carry the wounded on their backs, Jee stuck to it, binding a poor fellow's head, whose lower jaw had been carried off by a round shot

Captain Havelock turned up, badly hit in the arm, when conveying the order for the 78th to follow the column, and Jee managed to get him into a dhoolie, a mortally wounded lieutenant of the Highlanders being tenderly lifted into another, and the rest into six bullock-carts—with which sad train the brave surgeon hurried on to join the regiment.

Not long afterwards, the narrow road became blocked by an overturned hackery full of round-shot, and the occupants of the carts were cut to pieces in sight of their comrades, one man, Private Farmer, holding out his watch, and begging someone to take it ; but the risk was too great.

At last the doctor and his dhoolies reached the regiment, and Captain Halliburton took charge of them with his company ; but a guide led them into an enemy's battery, where they again suffered great loss.

Among the suburbs, shelled from the other side of the Goomtee river, the doctor and his little escort wandered, trying to find the Residency, and running a gauntlet of musket-shot from the streets as they jolted down them in their fruitless quest, until at length they took shelter in a square courtyard called the Motee-Mahul, with two large gateways, and sheds all round it.

Nor even then were their troubles over; the place was tightly packed with camp-followers and camels; the groaning wounded required attention, and Surgeon Jee had his hands full.

The native gongs sounded the hours through a night of horror. No one knew how far, or how near, the Residency might be, and during the long spell of darkness a terrific firing crashed and boomed, mingled with shouts and cheering, which might mean anything, from a successful rush to the death-cry of valour battling against overwhelming odds.

Men who had been with the advance found their way to the courtyard, bringing the alarming, but happily false, news that all the 78th had been killed. The Motee-Mahul was so crowded that movement was almost impossible, camels and horses squealed, and added a new danger by their frightened plunging, and the dawn came slowly to the anxious surgeons and the miserable, moaning wretches under their care

At daylight, Brigadier Cooper managed to get them some tea—the first food that had passed their lips since the previous morning—and the escort began to loophole the walls.

Soon afterwards the brigadier was shot through one of the holes, from the outside, and fell over Surgeon Jee, who had constantly to cross a gateway raked by bullets in order to reach his wounded, although warned by his apothecary, De Soura, of his risk; but the gallant fellow volunteered to try to find his way to the Residency with the sufferers, and send relief to Hallibjirton, who held the Motee-Mahul.

Unhappily the details of the journey are meagre, yet we know, from Dr. Jee's own words, that, as the mournful little train proceeded, they found Colonel Campbell lying on the ground with a wounded leg, from the amputation of which he afterwards died; and Jee got one of his men to take him on his back and carry him along, the man being subsequently killed, it was supposed, for when search was made for him to be recommended for the Cross, he could not be found

Under the fire of guns from the Kaiser Bagh Palace, they floundered through a shallow stream, and, after several exciting adventures, were hailed by a European sentry at a gate in a high wall, by whom they were directed to the Residency, towards which they wended their way, keeping under the wall to avoid the flying bullets which, in spite of the precaution, killed a great many of them, their bones being seen outside the palace when we took it later during the siege

Dr. Jee lost his white horse, but afterwards recovered it, wounded in the chest by a large bolt, which was extracted with great difficulty, the animal being eventually sold as a very valuable charger for £160.

I shall now tell of further heroism on the part of our brave army surgeons and their feeble escort, under circumstances of even greater peril, during the same day and the night of horror that followed it.

We have just seen how Surgeon Jee fared with his wounded, and we will now follow the tragic fortunes of another convoy of maimed and miserable men who underwent some extraordinary adventures on their way to the Residency.

During the night of the 25th September, Lucknow was in an uproar; but though the streets were full of mutineers, exasperated by the success of the relieving column, the wounded of the 90th, together with a large sprinkling from other regiments, somehow escaped notice, as they lay in their dhoolies in a passage before the Motee Munzil Palace.

A dhoolie is a square covered palanquin of bamboo, with curtained sides and a razzi, or quilted coverlet, upon which the occupant lies, and the whole thing is carried by four bearers, who form a particular caste of their own, hailing chiefly from lower Bengal.

Morning dawned, and the attack they had been momentarily expecting all night came at last, shot and shell whistling into them and killing a great many.

They were practically abandoned to their own resources for a time, as the column had pushed on to the Residency; but the slender escort behaved with great valour, and every inch of the way was hotly contested

The surgeons, especially, were worthy of the highest praise, one of them belonging to the artillery, who had just been speaking of his wife and children in the Residency, and how he looked forward to meeting them, asked a brother officer to help him with an operation, and they went to the spot under a heavy fire.

"I wish I could see my way out of this," said the officer, gazing hopelessly on the long train of helpless men who depended on their exertions for their lives.

"Pooh, there is no danger whatever!" replied the surgeon; but even as he spoke a ball struck him, and his earthly troubles were over.

It was certain death to everyone to remain where they were, and a start was made under the guidance of a plucky young civilian, Mr. J. B. Thornhill, who had come from the Residency at great hazard to help them ; so collecting the dhoolies they set out, Surgeon Home, of the 90th, taking charge, and Major Simmonds, of the 5th Fusiliers, commanding the weak escort of 150 men.

We have all of us seen the tender care with which our constabulary lift the victim of a street accident into the ambulance cart, and wheel him gently away in the soft-running, well-hung conveyance, amid the sympathetic murmurs of the crowd. The scene in Lucknow was the reverse of this . the numerous dhoolies full of wounded and groaning men are borne by natives waiting an opportunity to drop them heavily and bolt. Instead of a sympathetic crowd there is a mob of howling savages, filling the street end, and occupying windows and house tops, from which they send bullet after bullet. Here a narrow lane has to be threaded , there they must run across an open space, jolting and shaking those fractured limbs cruelly , for a moment they are partially sheltered by the high wall of a white building , but the mob is increasing behind them, and they cannot stay. Now and then a rush is made, and the bayonets of the escort are red when they hurry on after the train ; they do not all hurry on either, for several lie face down in the sun, and before their comrades have turned yon corner, the ground is hideous with mangled fragments, and the rebels are richer by several of the coveted Enfield rifles, with which they follow up the pursuit ; while, in the despatch sent home to England, Privates Whatever-you-will, Nos. four-thousand-and-something, are returned "missing"—that dubious word that carries grief into many a quiet village, and hides a world of misery nevertheless.

A march of forty yards under the fire of a battery on the other side of the Goomtee brought them to the partial shelter of a building known as Martin's House; but the round shot found them out, and after a halt of half an hour they set off again in safety until they reached a large nullah several feet in depth, the grape hissing among them as they waded through it, killing several bearers and drowning some of the wounded there.

Across the nullah they passed down a street where the fire did not reach them, but at the other end their guide made a fatal mistake which ultimately cost him his life, for leading them into an oblong square lined on three sides with sheds, they were shot down like sheep, and the leading bearers refused to go farther.

It seemed as though the end of all things had come for them. The rebels held the sheds and opened fire from every side. Thornhill's suggestion to go back was useless, the bearers in front were either killed or had bolted, and the dhoolies stood there as targets for the cowardly brutes who did not neglect the opportunity.

Surgeon Bradshaw and an apothecary went off to the rear of the train, which was still in the street, and compelled the bearers to return with them by the path Mr. Thornhill should have taken, and they eventually reached the Residency; but the rest remained exposed in what is known to this day as "Dhoolie Square," while Home and a handful of brave fellows took shelter in a covered archway and cast about for the best way to defend themselves and their charges.

One gallant incident occurred as Private Henry

Ward, a Norfolk man of the 78th Highlanders, was escorting the dhoolie that contained Lieutenant Havelock.

When the bearers of several others took to their heels, Ward compelled his to remain, and knowing the fate that awaited him if taken, a private of the escort named Pilkington, who was badly hit, threw himself inside on to the wounded officer.

The natives were about to drop the double load, but Ward would have none of that, and sticking to the dhoolie he forced them to continue, by means which we can readily imagine for ourselves, until the dhoolie was carried to a place of safety and Lieutenant Havelock's life was saved.

Ward afterwards became that officer's servant, a rare, if not unique instance of master and man both wearing the Victoria Cross.

From the archway under which the others had sought a very indifferent shelter they witnessed a horrible scene, as the mutineers rushed into the square and began murdering the wounded.

With Surgeon Home were Swanson of the 78th, Captain Becher, 40th Native Infantry, three wounded men, and nine soldiers, the remnant of the escort as yet unhurt, and their struggle for life, and the lives of those poor fellows out in the open, is absolutely Homeric.

They got into a house through an open door in the arch, and for half an hour one man kept the yelling crowd at bay, while the others shouted in chorus to make the rebels think they were more numerous.

He was Patrick McManus, an Irish private of the 5th Northumberland Fusiliers, and from a pillar

"THEY LIFTED ARNOLD OUT, THE SEPOYS FIRING VOLLEY AFTER VOLLEY" (p. 153)

he shot sepoy after sepoy, cool and collected, and seldom missing, until at last the sight of his muzzle was enough to send them flying

"Why don't you come into the street?" was the derisive shout of the rebels, to which McManus replied by a Minié bullet, and in spite of all the efforts of their leader, an old fiend with sword and shield whose white garb was girt with a red cummerbund, it would be some time before they ventured on again

While McManus stood behind his pillar, the others barricaded themselves as best they could, and a pile of corpses lent their ghastly aid to protect those fifteen heroes, but through the shutters they saw the brutes firing into the dhoolies, about forty of our wounded being killed in that way

Close to the house lay Arnold, of the Madras Fusiliers, who had been shot in both legs on the Charbagh Bridge, and Private Ryan begged them help him rescue one of the bravest fellows that ever drew sword

McManus had been hit in the foot, but he volunteered, and making a rush through a storm of shot they found the dhoolie was too heavy for them

They lifted Arnold out, the sepoys firing volley after volley, but although they carried him back between them unhurt themselves, the unfortunate captain received another ball in his thigh, from which he afterwards died in great agony.

Again they sallied from the house and brought in a wounded man who was crying piteously for help, and again they were untouched, their burden being hit twice and dying before they regained the barricade.

Surgeon Home was the only unwounded officer in the house, and his time was divided between dressing the others and taking his turn to fire, finally a man was posted at each window and three in the doorway, and through a bullet hole in the shutter the surgeon saw a rebel creep within three yards of him

He promptly killed him with his revolver, and Private Hollowell, of the Ross-shire Buffs, picked off another very neatly, after which there was a long pause, the ominous calm before the storm

Hollowell had been Home's right hand all the time, and had already shot the old man with the red cummerbund; and during the hour or so that elapsed before the attack was resumed they broke down a plaster wall to gain an outer room; but suddenly there came a dull rumble from the square that brought them all to their feet in an instant.

"It's now or never, men," shouted the surgeon "Outside with us; they're bringing up a gun."

It was already past noonday, and relief had not arrived. There was no question of surrender, that would have meant a long lingering agony, as the sepoys spared none, and delighted in the most diabolical tortures when they got the chance There was nothing for it but to die like men

The rumble eventually resolved itself, not into a field-piece which would have finished them, but a large screen on wheels with which the rebels closed up the door, shutting the besieged up in a trap, as they hoped, to be burned out by blazing straw flung down through the roof.

The house caught fire; the smoke rolled in in choking volumes, and the heat became unbearable, but there was another door opening on to the square, and through that they resolved to make a last dash.

Taking up three of their number who were the most badly hurt, they charged out and made for a shed ten yards away on the north side, but, strange to tell, the wounded alone were struck again, all three subsequently dying, while their comrades reached the shed unhurt, though more than five hundred of the surprised rebels are said to have fired at them as they ran.

Panting, they counted their numbers in that new retreat, and there were only six left who could bear arms, the other four being unable to do more than keep a look-out at the loopholes which riddled the shed's side.

Dangerous as the place was, being loopholed, with such an insufficient garrison, they were destined to hold it for more than twenty-two hours before help came, and though this incident reads like a romance, it is terribly true, every word of it

They were uncertain whether Havelock's column existed any longer: a whisper had come down to the 78th the evening before that it had been destroyed, but the cowardly hounds crept noiselessly up to the holes in the wall and fired in, giving them little time to speculate on the fate of others when their own seemed so near at hand.

By placing a wounded man at each embrasure to give the alarm, they prevented any serious casualty, but an awful thing occurred which froze the very blood in their veins.

When in the house at the archway their rifles had to some extent protected the miserable wounded still lying in their dhoolies in the square, but now they were left powerless, and the sepoys stealing up to the farther side of each palanquin began slowly to murder them with knives and bayonets, even burning some alive!

The screams were heartrending; men called in agonising voices for help, but the hideous work went on until the ground reeked like the floor of a slaughter-house.

One officer, Lieutenant Knight, of the 90th, Home's own regiment, escaped, literally nerved by the energy of despair, for, though wounded in the leg, as the sabre of a sowar flashed in at one side of his dhoolie, he sprang out at the other, and fled.

In spite of a hot pursuit and fifty bullets that went after him, two hitting him again in the legs, he got away, to carry the news to the rear guard, who, however, had their own hands too full to come to the others' assistance.

Now came a fresh peril to the surgeon and his men in the shed, for too craven to attack in front where the rifles of McManus and Hollowell, and Home's revolver were waiting at the loopholes, a tramping overhead told them that the enemy were breaking in the roof to fire down upon them.

An especial Providence would seem to have held those heroes in keeping, for though the muzzles of the mutineers' muskets were within four feet of them, none were seriously wounded, and as the little garrison could tell by the stamping where the rebels were, many a sepoy rolled off into the square, howling with pain, or fell heavily, and lay motionless where he fell.

Still the handful found it too hot to stand, and they broke a hole into the courtyard, from which, when darkness came to their aid, Surgeon Home and one of the men crept to a large mosque thirty yards away, into which the doctor climbed by getting on to his comrade's shoulders.

The mosque was empty, and returning to the man who had remained on guard they beckoned to the others to follow.

There was some hesitation, and the sepoys on the roof detecting Home, opened fire again, but though the two had to return post haste, they brought with them a chatty of fresh water, which proved a veritable Godsend.

They had suffered burning thirst all day, their faces were black with powder from biting cartridges, the wounded had implored the rest to shoot them when those appalling screams rent the air, but the water gave them all a little gleam of hope, and posting sentries at various parts of the shed they prepared to pass the night of horrors, with the babble of several who were delirious in their ears, and the catlike tread of the murderous scoundrels above them

More than one false alarm disturbed the silent hours, but the sepoys eventually left the roof, and Lucknow seemed to be sleeping.

One man proposed to rush out and attempt to escape, and two others offered to join him, but the rest declined to leave the wounded, and about two o'clock in the morning they heard the sound of heavy firing not far off.

Madly they shouted with what voice was left to them, thinking it was a relief, but the firing died away again and bitter disappointment followed.

At last they became unanimous in an effort to fight their way to the Residency, though no one knew exactly where it was, and they left the shed with seven cartridges among six men, only to shrink back again as they saw a fire in the archway where McManus had piled up so many corpses, and a large body of sepoys clustering round it.

Hope then died out; most of them cared little whether they lived or died, until, soon after dawn had flushed the domes and cupolas of the city, more firing was heard, and Private Ryan shouted, "Boys, them's our own chaps."

"Cheer together, men," exclaimed Surgeon Home, as they distinguished the well-known ring of the Enfield rifles, and they cheered together—a cheer with more than one sob in it—but a cheer that was answered by another and another as our fellows charged into that ghastly "Dhoolie Square," and swept it of its rebel garrison, the rescued handful also firing their remaining shots as they rushed out to join their deliverers.

Of the four officers who saw that morning break, three died of their wounds, but Home, McManus, Hollowell, and Ryan won the Cross for their never-exceeded heroism, Sir Anthony Home, K.C.B, being now the sole survivor.

CHAPTER XIX

LUCKNOW KAVANAGH

THE year of grace 1821, which saw the death of the great Napoleon, witnessed also the birth of a son to Bandmaster Kavanagh of the 3rd Buffs, at the town of Mullingar, in County Westmeath, Ireland

That child, who was christened Thomas Henry Kavanagh, was frequently told by a facetious uncle, that "he was born to be hanged," but fortune preserved him for a very different fate, and, entering the office of the Commissioner of Meerut, while yet in his teens, he passed through various stages of advancement until he became Superintendent of the office of the Chief Commissioner of Oude, and in that capacity was stationed at Lucknow with his wife and family, when the Mutiny broke out

All through the siege he behaved with great bravery, dividing his time between the guns and the trenches, often sitting for hours below ground, rifle in hand, while the mutineers were countermining our works, and waiting patiently until they broke into the tunnel, and a black head popped through the wall of earth to be as quickly shot at by the wary Superintendent.

When Havelock's slender column forced its way into the city, Kavanagh shared his last bottles of beer among the parched soldiers, and never spared himself in his exertions during that trying time.

His good wife was wounded, and they both suffered great hardships, although the good things of life were not wanting in some quarters, for there were votaries of "caste" within Lucknow, just as there were outside, if all we hear is true.

Havelock's relief was only partial, he and Outram were not strong enough to rescue the besieged, and the garrison had to await the arrival of Sir Colin Campbell, who reached the white tower of the Alum Bagh about four miles from the Residency, at the beginning of November.

The road into Lucknow was circuitous, and would be fiercely defended, the various passages and buildings en route affording splendid vantage posts for the rebels. Havelock's men had suffered severely from an imperfect knowledge of the way, and it was of the utmost necessity that Sir Colin should have a guide well acquainted with the country, but the girdle of mutineers rendered the very thought of such a thing absurd.

During the early part of the siege, Kavanagh had been very ill, but his strength had returned and he was at the time of his exploit, a strong man with dark hair and a red beard, speaking Hindustani fluently.

A native spy named Kunoujee Lal, a very handsome fellow, was returning to the Alum Bagh on a certain night, and after gaining his confidence and consent with difficulty, for the risk was enormous even to a native, Kavanagh went to Colonel Napier (afterwards Lord Napier of Magdala), Chief of Outram's staff, and informed him that the spy was willing to guide him to Sir Colin's camp, and that he, Kavanagh, was ready to undertake the journey.

The colonel was amazed, and pointed out in forcible language the fate that would befall him if he were detected, but Kavanagh persisted, and was taken to Sir James Outram.

Outram, thick set, with a slight roundness in his shoulders, a man of stainless honour, and absolutely without fear, refused to listen to him. To traverse the rebel camp in the dead of night, when eyes sharp as those of the lynx were on the watch, when keen distrust prevailed among the mutineers themselves, and every stranger was closely questioned, was a trial to which he would subject no man, Kunoujee Lal, himself, would find it as much as he could manage to get through, and for a European, the thing was impossible.

The Irishman persisted, however, and gained his point. It was decided that if Sir James were satisfied with the disguise he proposed to assume, he should go, and Kavanagh left him to make his preparations.

He has told us of the revulsion of feeling that came over him before he started, his wife and little ones were uppermost in his thoughts, and he was within an ace of throwing up the whole affair, but the recollection of those fearful stories that Havelock's men brought with them from Cawnpore weighed strongly with him, and accordingly, at six o'clock he left the two rooms where they were then living, Mrs. Kavanagh supposing that he was going on duty as usual at the mines.

In a quiet corner of the slaughter-yard that brave Irishman darkened his face and neck with lamp-black, put on a pair of tight silk trousers, a muslin shirt, and a short yellow silk jacket, concealed his hair with a cream-coloured turban, bound a white cummerbund round his waist, slung a yellow chintz mantle from his shoulders, and slipped his feet into a pair of native slippers, turned up at the toes and painfully tight, as he found to his sorrow, and then went to see Colonel Napier, with amusing results.

Natives were not allowed to enter a European's dwelling with their shoes on, nor to sit down, uninvited, and to test his disguise, Kavanagh did both.

The officers present were indignant to see a swaggering fellow, evidently a badmásh, or worthless character, as the name implies, in their midst, conducting himself with insolent familiarity, and after an angry altercation in Hindustani, Sir James Outram came into the room, only to be completely deceived like the rest.

The disguise was perfect, and Kavanagh was free to go.

Cigar in mouth, Sir James touched up his face by candle-light, Captain Sitwell gave him a double-barrelled pistol—to use upon himself if he were taken—and after an eloquent hand-shake all round, at half-past eight Captain Hardinge accompanied him and Kunoujee Lal, to pass them through the picket on the river bank.

"I would give my life to do what you are doing," he said, as he gave him a last grip "Noble fellow! you will never be forgotten!"

The night was dark, and the great vaulted dome overhead without a cloud, as they stripped and waded through the Goomtee, and stole up a trench for three hundred yards, to a little grove beside a silent pool, where they stayed to dress again

A man came down to wash, and they had a narrow escape from detection; and farther on they met a sepoy, with a matchlock, to whom Kavanagh spoke of the night.

"Yes, it is very cold," said the rebel, who appeared to be uncommunicative, for without further parley he went his way along the river bank

At the Iron Bridge a cavalry picket challenged, and Kunoujee Lal advanced.

They had come down from Mundron, he said, naming a place held by the mutineers, and the picket allowed them to proceed.

Crossing the stone bridge farther on, they entered the streets of the city, and then all their nerve was required, for they were full of rebels, but sauntering on, they traversed the main thoroughfare and reached the outskirts in safety, satisfying a native watchman, and breathing more freely as they found themselves among the woods and groves that covered the plain on that side of Lucknow.

Kavanagh plucked a carrot, and ate it with a keen relish, but after a long tramp, they discovered that they had mistaken the road, and were in the beautiful Dilkoosha park, the "heart's delight" of the Kings of Oude, far out of their way, and still close to the city

The park was swarming with rebels, whose horses neighed and answered each other under the trees, bivouac fires lit up the darkness here and there, and poor Kunoujee Lal was in despair, imploring his companion to forgive his blunder.

They had been four hours on their way, and were not clear of Lucknow. If daylight overtook them before they gained the Alum Bagh it would be the last sunrise they would see, and Kavanagh was already almost lame from the tightness of his shoes.

An old countryman, watching his crops in a field, declined to help them, and another, whom they spoke to soon afterwards, fled shouting, to alarm a village not far off.

"Now for it," said Kavanagh, and they ran along the canal bank for dear life, happily leaving the shouts behind them.

Their troubles, however, were not nearly over; several villages they roused, and the barking of the dogs continued long after the two strange companions had stumbled out of earshot—over paddy fields, and along irrigation cuts, where Kavanagh more than once received a most unwelcome ducking

Crawling into a miserable hut, his hand encountered a sleeping woman, who proved a friend to them, when she recovered from the fright, and who pointed out the way, along which they hurried as the moon was rising.

Up it came, silvering the still country, showing each clump of trees, and the white, unhealthy haze that lay above the water, as they neared the Alum Bagh, round which a strong body of mutineers were posted to resist the advance of Sir Colin.

"It is impossible to get through," whispered Kunoujee Lal "There are scores of pickets, and rifle-pits full of men; we must go round by Bunnee," and round they went, shortly coming on another cavalry patrol, to which they walked up boldly Confidence helped them, and they soon left the unsuspecting sowars in the rear, but about three o'clock in the morning, when moving cautiously through a mango grove, a sepoy on sentry, singing at the top of his voice to keep his courage up, gave the alarm, and the guard of twenty-five men surrounded them, all clamouring at once.

Poor Kunoujee Lal lost heart, and threw away the despatch he carried, but the Irish badmásh kept his in his turban, and palavered so cleverly that the rascals believed his tale.

They were then "two poor men walking to the village of Umzoula on a sad errand, namely, to inform a friend that his brother had been killed by a ball from the British entrenchments at Lucknow," and the guard showed them the route they must follow.

It was the most serious rencontre they had had, but at the end of half an hour they met with another misfortune, for they tumbled into a marshy jheel, and were up to their waists in reeds and water for two hours, sometimes to their necks, Kavanagh being thoroughly exhausted when they scrambled out, as he had to support the spy, who was much shorter than he, and washed the black from his hands in so doing.

At the other side of the swamp he lay for a quarter of an hour before he could continue the walk, and they then reached the village, to find a number of men sleeping near the chubootra, or native office

Rousing one of them, they told him they were spies, sent to discover the numbers of the Feringhees, but the man was surly, and would tell them nothing, and they had to run the gauntlet of two strong pickets, drowsing round their fires, three hundred yards apart.

That they accomplished, and several other narrow shaves they had, Kavanagh at last insisting, in spite of the warnings of the spy, in sleeping for an hour in a grove, after they had passed some natives who told them that they were fleeing from the English.

It was good news, and about four in the morning when, absolutely weary and footsore, they struggled on again, a voice called, "Who comes there?" and they knew their mission had ended.

The commander of the Sikh patrol sent two men to guide them, and when in the camp, Lieutenant Goldie, of the 9th Lancers, lent Kavanagh dry stockings and trousers, and pulled him together with a draught of brandy, Captain Dick mounting him on his Burma pony, and walking beside him to Sir Colin Campbell.

That stern soldier could not restrain his admiration, nor the overwrought civilian his tears, and, as Kavanagh lay down to snatch some well-earned rest, Sir Colin busied himself in excluding the daylight from the tent with his own hands, making such a clatter that he defeated his kindly object.

The signal of Kavanagh's safe arrival should have been hoisted at once on the Alum Bagh, and cruel anxiety was felt in Lucknow at the delay that took place, but meanwhile, unable to sleep from excitement, the hero of the hour was seated at the general's table at eleven o'clock, consuming vast quantities of eggs and bacon, marmalade, and, what was to him a long forgotten luxury, coffee with milk and sugar.

His subsequent adventures were worthy of the man. He guided the advance on the city when, leaving the baggage at the Alum Bagh, Sir Colin fought his way past the Martinière College to the Dilkoosha Park, and day by day drew nearer to the Europeans in the Residency.

He witnessed the awful slaughter at the Secundrabagh, where the 4th Sikhs, 53rd Shropshire, 93rd Sutherland Highlanders, and a battalion of detachments bayoneted two thousand rebels in three hours, until the place reeked with blood, and the cry, "Remember the ladies and babies! Cawnpore—Cawnpore!" echoed through the loopholed walls

He saved a wounded soldier there, under fire, and slept beside Sir Colin; helped at the storming of the Motee-Mahul, or Pearl Palace, where Surgeon Jee won his V C. the September before, and was received with three cheers by Sir James Outram and his staff, who had never expected to see him alive again.

He led Sir James through a shower of bullets to Sir Colin Campbell, and, to quote Sir Colin's despatch, speaking of his heroism, "his escape, at a time when the entrenchment was closely invested by a large army . . is . . . one of the most daring feats ever attempted."

He left Lucknow when the Commander-in-Chief retired with the rescued ones on Cawnpore, after forty sepoys had been blown from the guns, and accompanied him again to the final suppression of Lucknow.

After a long list of surprising adventures, which would be incredible as happening to one man if they were not well authenticated, he returned to civil life, every now and then starting off on some expedition against the rebels

It will hardly be believed that the authorities attempted to ignore his claim to the Victoria Cross, trying to put him off with the Medal instead, but in the end he received it, in 1859, and survived to wear it for twenty-three years, dying at Gibraltar in November, 1882.

CHAPTER XX.

PEEL'S BLUEJACKETS, AND THE 93RD HIGHLANDERS

SALMON, YOUNG, HALL,—STEWART, PATON, DUNLEY, MACKAY, GRANT, MACBEAN, MUNRO.

WHEN the British fleet was on its way to China, and Lord Elgin awaited reinforcements at Hong Kong, he received alarming intelligence of the spread of the mutiny in India, and an urgent request to send all the help possible there.

He promptly set off for Calcutta with 1,500 sailors and marines, chiefly belonging to the steamers Pearl and Shannon, and these were formed into naval brigades, to act on shore, with the same gallantry they had displayed in the Crimea.

Captain Peel, whom we have seen in the trenches before Sebastopol, started up the Ganges with ten huge 68-pounders and 400 bluejackets, known as the "Shannon brigade;" but progress was terribly slow, and it was not until the 30th September that he reached Benares with 286 men.

Hastening on to Allahabad before the rest came up, he arrived at that place three days later, and when the others joined him, on the 7th October, they found, to their dismay, that the big guns must be left there, as there was no means of transport for them across country.

At Allahabad Peel consequently remained, until the 28th, organising siege-trains of 24-pounders, and despatching them on to Cawnpore under the charge of the tars, and ultimately following himself, to do good service in a score of places.

It meant business when Peel was off to the front, with hunting-spurs peeping from beneath his white trousers, and the three gold bands that denoted his rank of post-captain on the cuff of his blue undress frock coat.

Few leaders have been more deservedly idolised by their men; and few thought, as they saw him start from the ancient city at the junction of the Ganges and the Jumna, where, a few months before, the sepoys had murdered their officers while the band played "God save the Queen," that he was going on his last campaign

From Cawnpore, after several smart engagements, the Naval Brigade, reduced to 250 men, accompanied Sir Colin Campbell on his march to Lucknow, and when the 93rd Highlanders marched into the camp at the Alum Bagh, Peel's fiddlers played them in, the rest of the bluejackets lining the road, and cheering lustily.

After pounding at the walls of the Secundrabagh, which was a large square enclosure with turrets at the angles, and a garden inside with kiosks and summer-houses, Peel's guns were ordered on to the Shahnujjif Mosque, a fine domed building within a serai, loop-holed, and strongly garrisoned by sepoys in every variety of costume.

Gay turbans clustered behind the embrasures. A sprinkling of red coats proved the presence of mutinied native infantry. The dark-faced scoundrels, with their munzies, or jackets, buttoned on the left breast were Mussulmans; those who fastened them on the right, Hindoos. And, although covered by the Highlanders fresh from terrible work in the gory Secundrabagh, Peel's tars were exposed to a rattling fire from the mob over the wall.

To quote Sir Colin's words, "Captain Peel behaved very much as if he had been laying the Shannon alongside an enemy's frigate" And he was not the only one who was remembered in connection with the Shahnujjif.

Hand-grenades fell among them, but Lieutenant Young and William Hall, A B, a man of colour, ran the 24-pounder, which the sailors had christened the "Shannon" after their vessel, close to the masonry, and fired round after round point blank at it, behaving with a courage that was even above the average of British seamen, high as that average always is

There was a large tree near the walls of the mosque, and up among its leafy branches swarmed Lieutenant Nowell Salmon (afterwards Rear-Admiral), a crack shot, and a fearless fellow.

He could see the interior of the courtyard, and quietly proceeded to pick off rebel after rebel from his concealment, a private of the 93rd loading rifles behind the tree trunk, and handing them up to him

Eventually the place was stormed and cleared by the soldiers and bluejackets, and, when honours were distributed, Young, Salmon, who was badly wounded, and seaman Hall added each a Victoria Cross to the record of the Navy.

In that blazing March following, when Campbell completed the fall of Lucknow, Peel's men were again to the fore.

Very similar in many respects was the procedure of the column to what it had been during the second relief, and piloted once more by brave Kavanagh, who rode Dr. Russell's vicious white mare, a cloudless sky of blue overhead, and the pipers of the 93rd playing "Castles in the Air," they advanced for the last time upon the Dilkoosha Park, which had such stirring memories for many of them.

Step by step, they carried all before them, battering the grotesque Martinière again, and capturing the Badshahbagh, or King's Great Garden.

Peel had just heard that he was now Sir William, and was in high feather, but Sir Colin, who about the same time received intelligence of his own elevation to the dignity of Lord Clyde, only shook his head sadly, as he thought of his dead comrades of other days, saying in a mournful voice, "It is too late; there is nobody alive now to whom I care to tell the news."

He had mounted the breach at Badajoz, and before that had held the colour of the 9th Regiment over the corpse of Sir John Moore, when "he lay like a warrior taking his rest," on the ramparts of Corunna.

Poor Peel was not destined to enjoy his honours long, for in one of those several actions fought before our men crossed the Goomtee on a bridge of beer barrels, a bullet lodged in the muscles of his thigh, and was extracted with great difficulty by Surgeon Munro, of the 93rd. In all likelihood he would have recovered, but at Cawnpore, on his way to Calcutta, smallpox seized him, and to the unutterable regret of the whole army, the gallant sailor died on the 27th of April.

The words of Outram at a banquet to the Naval Brigade, when he spoke of "the hearty, jolly, smiling faces of some of you Shannon men who were pounding away with two big guns at the palace," are well known; but those hearty faces were woefully sad when the news of their commander's early death reached them, and there were tears in many an eye that had laid the 24-pounders truly at Lucknow, as well as in the Crimea, and that had glistened brightly when its owner had asked for leave "To have a day's shooting ashore with them 'ere red coats," and got it too.

The 93rd Highlanders won no less than seven Crosses in and about Lucknow.

They were sworn friends with the Naval Brigade, and were long associated with them, for which reason I have included them in this chapter, confident they would choose no more fitting place for their grand and glorious record

The regiment had sailed for the Crimea with the 44th Foot, full of superstitious forebodings on that account, as they had previously accompanied the "Little Fighting Fours" to the disastrous American Campaign of 1814-15, where the 93rd suffered severely, but its achievements at Balaclava and elsewhere during the Russian War had added considerably to its honour and renown

It was a decidedly Scottish corps, and in 1853 it is said there were only about thirty men belonging to it who were not natives either of Sutherland, Inverness, or Ross, while in 1854 there was only one English private on the roster.

Gaelic was largely spoken in the ranks at that time, they wore the feather bonnet during the Mutiny, and their pipers had been put into green coats at the close of the Crimea.

"Forward, Ninety-third!" was the word, and they rushed on the Secundrabagh until a dead wall stayed them.

"In at the roof, Highlanders, tear off the tiles," cried Sir Colin from his saddle, and they needed no second bidding.

Brawny arms broke an opening, and Corporal Dunley is said to have been first in, the others following quickly, as man after man sprang down through the dust with knees bleeding and bayonet ready.

The rest of the regiment entered through a breach in the main building, and were soon hard at work, with their good comrades the 4th Sikhs, in the awful slaughter that took place

There was no quarter for the mutilators of women and children in every sense of the word it was a death struggle, and, as such, it recalls that terrible moment when the French gained the courtyard of La Haye Sainte and exterminated the remnant of Baring's Hanoverians

In the fury and rush Private Mackay took a colour, not without a hard tussle for it; Grant killed five of the sepoys in defence of an officer who had got possession of that or another ensign, for the account is vague, Munro, a colour-sergeant, rescued a wounded officer and carried him out, severely wounded in doing so, and still they had not finished in the nooks and corners of that charnel house—not until they left two thousand dead to be gathered in a pile to pollute the air for days, as we learn from one who was present.

All four won the Cross, and a few months before, at that other storming, their comrade Paton founded his claim when he reconnoitred the neighbouring Shahnujjif, under fire, and found the hole through which they poured, with their fierce slogan, on the same day, too, that Captain Stewart led straight for the guns which commanded the Mess House, took them, and was elected by his brother officers for the little bronze trinket he wears at the present time.

But all these heroes pale before one other wielder of the basket-hilted claymore, the late mighty MacBean, as unassuming in manner as he was irresistible in war.

Nearer and nearer the British troops had drawn to the doomed stronghold of the mutineers; kites had actually been seen flying, high up in the sky, while our guns boomed loudly, but there came a moment when the self-satisfied rascals had no time to think of amusements, and one of those moments was when the 93rd stood at ease near the Begum Bagh palace, waiting in a remarkable silence, to repeat their Secundrabagh experience.

A strange little incident occurred of a soldier's presentiment of death, for one of the privates took off his Crimean medal, and handed it to his brother, who was a sergeant, saying, "Here, John, send this to our mother. I shall be killed to-day," and within half an hour he was a corpse.

When the word was given, a curious angry cry rose from the ranks, rather a snarl than a cheer, and almost immediately the tartan kilts were battling in the breach.

Then was Adjutant MacBean observed, hewing right and left, tremendous was his onslaught, and before he sheathed his sword the blood of eleven sepoys encrusted it, all slain single-handed!

Some time afterwards, at a regimental parade, William MacBean stood forward, and General Sir

R. Garratt pinned the Cross on his breast with the words.—"This Cross has been awarded to you for the conspicuous gallantry you displayed at the assault of the enemy's position at Lucknow, on which occasion you killed eleven of the enemy by whom you were surrounded; and a good day's work it was, sir"

"Tutts," said MacBean, in his simplicity forgetting altogether where he was, "it didna tak' me twenty minutes."

This remarkable hero, who rose from the ranks to be a Major-General, died quietly in his bed many years afterwards, tended by his friend Munro, the regimental surgeon, and his old soldier servant, who was sent over to nurse him by Colonel Knollys, then commanding the 93rd, himself a Crimean man of the Scots Fusilier Guards, and a voluminous writer on the Victoria Cross which they poured, with their fierce slogan, on the same day, too, that Captain Stewart led straight for the guns which commanded the Mess House, took them, and was elected by his brother officers for the little bronze trinket he wears at the present time.

But all these heroes pale before one other wielder of the basket-hilted claymore, the late mighty MacBean, as unassuming in manner as he was irresistible in war

Nearer and nearer the British troops had drawn to the doomed stronghold of the mutineers, kites had actually been seen flying, high up in the sky, while our guns boomed loudly, but there came a moment when the self-satisfied rascals had no time to think of amusements, and one of those moments was when the 93rd stood at ease near the Begum Bagh palace, waiting in a remarkable silence, to repeat their Secundrabagh experience

A strange little incident occurred of a soldier's presentiment of death, for one of the privates took off his Crimean medal, and handed it to his brother, who was a sergeant, saying, "Here, John, send this to our mother. I shall be killed to-day," and within half an hour he was a corpse.

When the word was given, a curious angry cry rose from the ranks, rather a snarl than a cheer, and almost immediately the tartan kilts were battling in the breach.

Then was Adjutant MacBean observed, hewing right and left; tremendous was his onslaught, and before he sheathed his sword the blood of eleven sepoys encrusted it, all slain single-handed!

Some time afterwards, at a regimental parade, William MacBean stood forward, and General Sir

R. Garratt pinned the Cross on his breast with the words —"This Cross has been awarded to you for the conspicuous gallantry you displayed at the assault of the enemy's position at Lucknow, on which occasion you killed eleven of the enemy by whom you were surrounded; and a good day's work it was, sir."

"Tutts," said MacBean, in his simplicity forgetting altogether where he was, "it didna tak' me twenty minutes"

This remarkable hero, who rose from the ranks to be a Major-General, died quietly in his bed many years afterwards, tended by his friend Munro, the regimental surgeon, and his old soldier servant, who was sent over to nurse him by Colonel Knollys, then commanding the 93rd, himself a Crimean man of the Scots Fusilier Guards, and a voluminous writer on the Victoria Cross

CHAPTER XXI

A LANCER'S STORY

CORPORAL GOATE.

IF you go, almost any morning, to the north-east corner of Trafalgar Square, where a strip of flag pavement runs along the end of the hideous National Gallery, you will see ten or a dozen martial figures, more or less gorgeous according to the condition of their uniforms, strolling aimlessly up and down as if the world were excessively pleasant and belonged exclusively to them.

The long legs with the broad yellow stripe under a scarlet shell jacket indicate that one of her Majesty's gallant dragoon regiments could do with "a few likely lads," as the old notices used to have it, the two narrow stripes down a similar long leg that jingles a musical spur on its heel, tell one that if you have any sneaking fondness for a hussar saddle, or would like to don the heavy lancer helmet, you can be obliged, provided the doctor will pass you; and mingling with these cavalry men are a few representatives of the Line, or, possibly, a guardsman or two, and they are all on the look-out for recruits.

Formerly their great rendezvous was Charles Street, Westminster, when the Hampshire Hog was in all its glory, and thither in the grey November days of 1853 came a smart lad of eighteen, who had grown tired of his quiet life in the sleepy old city of Norwich, where he was employed as groom.

"Taking the shilling" was not a mere figure of speech in those days, and in a short time William Goate found himself richer by that important sum, which had been handed him by a smart sergeant in the handsome blue uniform with scarlet facings of the 9th, Queen's Royal, Lancers.

Accustomed to horses, Private Goate soon found himself at home in the ranks, and was lying at Umballa with the 9th when the Mutiny broke out.

His first taste of fighting was at Delhi, and he had an exciting adventure when on despatch duty at an advanced post, where a picket of lancers had orders to bring up reinforcements when the enemy came out of the city.

Seeing six rebels creeping by the river towards the British camp, he asked the officer commanding the picket to let him take a couple of men and interview the rascals, and leave being granted, the three troopers had a rough scramble to get their horses down the rocks to the water side, the rebels showing fight on their approach.

Three pistols cracked, and three of the mutineers fell, the troopers unslinging their lances and making at the others from the saddle, a battery of the enemy meanwhile opening fire on them.

Goate tackled one of the swarthy fellows, who dodged nimbly round him, and although the corporal declares that he prefers the lance to the sword, he could not get into the scamp at close quarters, charmed he never so wisely, and after slightly wounding Goate's horse, the rebel bolted for the river.

Swinging out of his stirrups, he followed him into the water, and the lance went home through the mutineer's body, which floated away reddening the ripples.

When Goate waded out again he found that his comrades had each killed their man, and being sent by the picket officer with a note to his colonel, the ex-groom was made lance-corporal on the spot

I cannot stay to tell of all his fighting; he helped at the taking of Cawnpore from the Gwalior rebels, and crossed the bridge of boats under a fire that emptied many a saddle, but it was at Lucknow that he gained his Cross.

Sir Colin Campbell, with 30,000 men, was determined to make an end of the rebel resistance there, and on the 6th of March, 1858, Corporal Goate found himself, with his regiment, the 9th Lancers, the 2nd Dragoon Guards or Queen's Bays, who wore their scarlet European clothing, and two native cavalry corps, on the race-course, about to charge a host of rebels that had sallied boldly out of Lucknow to destroy the hated Feringhees

It was the hot season—the time of blazing sky and sudden sunstroke, when fields and gardens were scorched and brown, and Europeans usually lay panting and prostrate during the day, but now they had to fight for their lives in the glare, and not only for their own, but for those of delicate ladies and children, whose fate was truly awful when they fell into the hands of the mutineers.

The enemy, who did not lack bravery, and who had, unfortunately, considerable military knowledge, made a motley show, the silver-grey of the revolted cavalry blending with the brilliant turbans and sashes and the barbaric splendour of the Irregular troops and wild fanatics; but our fellows thirsted to get at them, and reluctantly held in their horses, whose eager plunging swayed the slender brigade as the order was given to charge.

"HE RAN ALONG WITH HIS HEAVY BURDEN BESIDE THE HORSE" (p. 179).

A few rounds from the Horse Artillery heralded the short trumpet notes, and while the smoke was still curling along the sward and dissolving into air, there came the heavy thunder of the hoofs, the low murmur of the men, mad to be hand-to-hand with the fiends The dust cloud gathered as they tore straight on, and then in the cloud came the shock of the meeting, the flashing of sabres and lance points, and a hoarse roar above the clash of steel, honest English shouts of vengeance that drowned the native yells, and as the mutineers' guns began to play on the mêlée, the trumpet's voice sounded the order to return.

It was short, but sharp; the host was broken, and our disordered squadrons came back, sadly weakened, under a heavy shower of round shot and matchlock balls.

Corporal Goate, his gory lance left on the field, was returning close to Major Piercy Smith, of the Bays, who had formerly seen service with the 16th Lancers, when a ball passed through the major's body, and he reeled heavily.

Goate tried to catch him, but he fell, and the corporal—who was only a little over twenty-two, remember—pulled up his charger and sprang down.

Raising the wounded man on to his back, and slipping his arm through the bridle rein of his smart little Arab, he ran along with his heavy burden beside the horse, and had traversed several hundred yards when he heard the enemy's cavalry close behind him.

There was nothing for it but to drop the major, and, what—ride for his own safety? Not a bit of it. Shortening his reins he vaulted into the saddle, and, facing the enemy, shot one, felled another with the empty pistol, drew his sabre, and was in the middle of them.

Knowing that a false move meant death, the gallant fellow kept his head and parried the fierce blows aimed at him from all sides; one man against a crowd, trusting to his superior swordsmanship and nerve to pull him through, turning and twisting his horse this way and that way, knocking a sabre up and getting a neat thrust at a brown throat, in time to ward off a tulwar slash and topple another sowar over with six inches of sharp steel through his cummerbund

To use the corporal's own words "I cannot tell you how many saddles I must have emptied, the enemy didn't seem to know how to parry, taking advantage of this, I settled accounts with a jolly lot."

Determined not to be taken alive, he fought desperately, and when his arm was growing weary and his horse white with lather, some of his comrades luckily came up and finished the business for him.

Even then Goate had not apparently had enough of it, for he went out to look for the major, hoping to find him alive. Alas! that officer had passed beyond all chance of rescue, his headless corpse being brought in next morning by Captain Dillon, Lieutenant Eyre, and ten men of the Rifle Brigade.

After the action, Sir Colin Campbell, Hope Grant, and several others shook hands warmly with the corporal, and there was joy in the 9th Lancers when Goate was deservedly gazetted to swell their roll of honour.

CHAPTER XXII.

SOME CAVALRY CROSSES WON IN THE MUTINY.

BLAIR, WATSON, GOUGH (H. H.), BANKS, HENEAGE, WARD, HOLLIS, PEARSON, GOUGH (C. J. S.), CHAMPION EVELYN WOOD, FRASER, ANDERSON, AND MONAGHAN.

OUR cavalry, both European and native, accomplished great things during the suppression of the sepoy rising.

The Guides, in khaki, with indigo-blue turbans, were ubiquitous, and struck terror wherever they went, the name of "Delhi spearmen," won by the 9th Lancers, was sufficient in itself to create a panic among the rebels, the 2nd Dragoon Guards, with scarlet tunics and white trouser-stripes, made themselves felt, Corporal Anderson and Trumpeter Monaghan saving their colonel with such gallantry that they won the Victoria Cross, and Lieutenant Blair sabreing four men at Boolundshuhur, in a magnificent charge there, which also included him in the Victoria Cross roll.

The Carabineers, put into blue two years before the Crimea, and wearing brass helmets in the hottest months, to the great discomfort of the troopers, did well when they were allowed to go in; and a legendary charge is recorded of the 8th Hussars, at Gwalior, where four brave fellows of the regiment, Captain Heneage, Sergeant Ward, Farrier Hollis, and Private Pearson, were selected, with difficulty, from a host who had done wonders there.

The 8th wore their blue European clothing all through the Mutiny, with wicker helmets.

Troop-Sergeant-Major Champion, of the 8th, was also recommended for his conspicuous bravery in the rocky gorge at Gwalior, and he should by rights have had half a lac of rupees, as the famous Ranee of Jhansi, for whose capture a large reward had been offered, was killed there, but a Bombay staff-colonel disputed his claim, and the money was withheld.

Less than three months afterwards—then acting regimental sergeant-major—when both his officers were wounded and he himself badly hit in the chest by a bullet, he led the troop in hot pursuit of the rebels at Bejapore for three hours, on a fine bay Herat horse, 16 hands high, killing 450 of them with his forty men!

Faint from loss of blood, he brought his party in, losing one killed and eight wounded. They lifted him, reeling, off his horse, and laid him under a banyan tree, where the surgeon, finding that the ball had gone clean through his chest and out at the back, dressed the wounds with the sergeant-major's own shirt-tail, as there were no bandages to be had!

"Never mind, sir," said Champion to his major, who came to commiserate him, "we've given them a good doing!" And so thought Colonel Robinson, who recommended him at once for the V.C., saying, "There never was a better little action fought, and you shall have the order of merit!"

Few men have seen more fighting than Sergeant-Major Champion, whose face, the very ideal of a fine old hussar, is well known at Aldershot, where he now rests on his gallantly-earned laurels, for, besides the V.C., he has the Crimean, Turkish, Mutiny, and Meritorious Service medals, having, moreover, refused a commission on four separate occasions.

The 7th Hussars have furnished us with two stirring Victoria Cross episodes, out of many more that were not rewarded with the decoration, and the officers of the Native Cavalry Corps, that remained loyal, swell the list to considerable length

Hodson's Horse, now 9th and 10th Bengal Cavalry, became well-nigh as famous as their magnificent leader, and carry "Delhi" and "Lucknow" on their standards to-day, as do also the dark green 5th Punjab, but this is not a history of regiments, but of actions.

The brothers Gough would occupy a long chapter if space allowed it

At Khurkowdah, near Khotuck, Captain C. J. S. Gough cut in to the assistance of his brother, who was wounded, and slew two rebels; following up his bravery three days afterwards by leading a troop of the Guides full tilt at the enemy, and killing two more, with one of whom he had a terrific encounter.

Yet again, at Shumshabad, in January, 1858, he tackled the rebel leader in the charge, leaving his sword in him, and was, consequently, reduced to his revolver, with which he shot another couple.

He seems to have dealt with his foes by the brace as a rule, and at Meangunge he cut down a rebel who was carving at Brevet-Major Anson (not the V.C. of that name), and slew another directly afterwards.

What a record of individual pluck! And, indeed, his brother, Hugh Henry, was not far behind him.

At Alum Bagh Mr. Gough took his party of Hodson's Horse splashing through a swamp, and captured a couple of guns, hotly defended, getting his turban slashed to pieces, and his horse twice wounded, when surrounded by three sepoys.

Near Jellalabad, this gallant nephew of the famous Hugh Gough of other days, headed his men for the guns again, and fought sowar after sowar, until wounded in the act of charging two sepoys with fixed bayonets.

He was severely wounded on that occasion, had two horses killed under him, and received a ball through his helmet, and another through his scabbard.

Strange coincidence that "number two" all through the record of these two brave brothers—two guns, two horses, two bullets, twice wounded, and all those rebel sowars slain by twos

On the 14th of November, Lieutenant John Watson, with a troop of the 1st Punjab, and Lieutenant Probyn, with his troop, both wearing red pugarees round their spiked helmets, came upon a body of rebel cavalry, under a stalwart Mussulman ressaldar, or native captain of Irregular Horse.

A scene worthy of the days of chivalry followed, for the ressaldar, picking out half a dozen of his bravest, rode out to meet the Feringhees, Watson, nothing loth, spurring forward towards him

Within a yard, the rebel fired his pistol at Watson's breast, luckily without effect, and the lieutenant ran him through and dismounted him.

Up he sprang, drawing his keen tulwar, and with his sowars, attacked the solitary officer, who, before his party could reach him, received a tulwar slash on the head, one on his right arm, that slit the jacket sleeve, and lost him the use of the limb for some time; another, which severed the chain gauntlet glove that protected his left wrist, a bullet through his coat, and a blow on the leg, that made him limp for several days. One man against seven or eight, and the marvel is he lived!

But in a moment more the ground shook under the hoofs of the Punjab sowars, there was a circling of sabres, a plunging of dark-skinned men with the lust of slaughter in their eyes, and the rebels, trampled under foot, were utterly routed

And now comes a sad, short story of a cornet of Hussars

Again it is the outskirts of blood-stained Lucknow, its glittering mosques dazzling in the fearful March sun-glare, the dust is blinding, and a mob of infuriated Ghazis rush through it on to the guns.

Young Banks, of the 7th, is into them, sword in hand, slashing bravely as best he can, but surrounded, hacked, and overthrown at last, after a fierce struggle, into which his colonel, Haggart, dashes alone to his assistance, in front of his men

Three times the colonel's revolver cracks out; three times he plunges through the raving horde; one man he fells with his sword-hilt, denting it deeply in the process; and when he is clear, and all is over, saddle and horse are cut and torn, his martingale dangles, severed, about the charger's legs, and the silk handkerchief he has used as a sword-knot is divided clean in half, some of the skin going with it; but the cornet—how has he fared?

One leg is lopped off above the knee; the other is nearly severed; one arm is cleft to the bone; the other has gone entirely, and about the body are many slashes Yet, when Dr. Russell goes to see him afterwards, the brave youngster is quite cheerful.

"They tell me, if I get over this I can go yachting," he says. "We'll have some jolly cruises together." But his last voyage was done; and his very name would be now forgotten, were it not that it appears in all lists, as one to whom the Cross of Valour would have been granted had he lived.

The colonel was recommended also, but Sir Colin had no desire that officers of his rank should receive a decoration, which he himself never thoroughly understood or appreciated, and he refused to forward the recommendation.

It seems hard—and it was hard, but Sir Colin Campbell was cast in an iron mould.

When in England, not long returned from the Crimea, he was asked to take the post of Commander-in-Chief in India, on the death of General Anson, and the question was put to him, "When can you be ready to start?"

"To-morrow!" was the startling reply, and sure enough he kept his word.

The second Cross won by the 7th Hussars was gained during the pursuit of the broken and flying rebels, on the last day of the year 1858.

Nana Sahib was known to be with them, and every effort was made to catch him, but they fled from our vengeance with winged heels, and were crossing the swift Raptee river when we came up.

Although the Hussars were fagged by a march of thirty miles, nothing could hold them, and they dashed for the white-coated sowars, who seemed about to offer resistance on our side of the stream; but the river was deep and swift, and though a swoop was made into the middle of it, and sabres flashed as they floundered among the rebels, the Cabul River accident was, in part, repeated, and men and horses, friends and foes, were swirled away on the current, and many drowned

The mutineers across the water, who did not forget their chance, opened a brisk fire, and it was seen that our fellows were in great peril

Wounded severely at Nawabgunge, and not yet recovered, Major Fraser plunged in to the aid of his comrades, and under circumstances that do not fall to the lot of one man in a thousand, brought in Captain Stisted, who was almost spent, and four privates

As it was, one old officer unhappily died before he could be got at, but the plucky major won the V.C., and also received the gold medal of the Royal Humane Society.

"All comes to those who know how to wait," is an excellent saying in its way, but some things, to quote the old Scottish song, are "ower lang o' comin," and Sir Evelyn Wood's Victoria Cross was one of these things not so much in matter of time, but in regard to a number of irritating delays connected with its final bestowal

As is well known, he served under Peel as aide-de-camp in the Crimea when only sixteen, and won the highest praise from all who knew him for his gallantry there

His commander wrote of "his beautiful courage in battery," adding "but his conduct and his manners are as exemplary as his courage."

On the 18th of June he received a grapeshot in the arm, but continued to help with the ladders, and remained before the Redan, having the shot cut out when he returned to camp.

Lord Raglan had him sent to Razatch in his own carriage, and mentioned him in despatches, writing also to his uncle, Captain Mitchell, R.N., a very sympathetic and eulogistic letter.

Captains Peel and Lushington were loud in his praise, the latter recommending him for the Victoria Cross for bravery under a murderous fire, but it was not granted, although Lushington actually remonstrated with the authorities for the omission.

Returning to England in consequence of his wound, young Wood left the Navy, and in 1855 became cornet in the 13th Light Dragoons, purchased a lieutenancy in the same regiment, and afterwards exchanged into the 17th Lancers in 1857.

He was then nineteen, and, embarking for India, he knew more of the native languages in eighteen months, according to General Beatson, than most officers who had spent ten years there, at any rate he passed the examination for interpreter in Hindostani during his stay, and yet for more than a year out of the time he was fighting against the mutineers

Coming as he did from Essex, a hunting county, he was at home in the saddle, and became a dashing light-cavalry officer, volunteering to lead a troop of the 3rd Bombay.

At Sindwaho he went into the enemy almost single-handed, with all the gallantry of the Watsons and the Goughs of the Indian Army, and routed him, winning golden opinions from Brigadier Somerset; but a more romantic and almost as hazardous experience fell to his lot in the depths of the jungle of Sindhora.

The mutineers, beaten on every side, retreated into the dangerous wilds, and lived in freebooter fashion by sallying out and plundering the villages on the outskirts.

A band of them had seized a potail, named Chemmum Singh, and carried him off to be hanged at their leisure, and as the man was loyal to the British rule, Lieutenant Wood determined to rescue him, if possible.

Although wearied by a long march, he set out when he heard of it, with a duffadar and four sowars of Beatson's Horse, and a corporal and six sepoys of the Bareilly levy, and after a ride of twelve miles through the tangled bush, he saw what seemed to be the glare of a camp-fire deeper still in the jungle

It was night, and the place was weird and mysterious; the lemon grass sighed as the breeze whispered through it, they were in the vicinity of men who had played their last card, who knew that they had no mercy to expect if they were taken, and it wanted a strong nerve to face them in their lair; but Wood dismounted, left three sowars to look after the horses, went cautiously forward with the duffadar and the other trooper, and for three exciting miles, the jungle lying lone and melancholy around them, crept forward until, at one o'clock in the morning, they reached a nullah in which the fire was burning

Twenty-six feet away, as they peeped from their concealment, they saw between sixty and seventy sleeping mutineers, five others keeping an indifferent guard over the unhappy captive, who had left all hope far behind him

So far all had gone well, and trusting to his knowledge of the native character, with a word to his companions, they fired a sudden volley and sprang into the middle of them.

With wild cries of terror, the rebels started up to find themselves surprised, they could not tell by how large a force, and seized with panic they fled out of the firelight into the secret depths of the jungle, leaving several of their number bleeding in the nullah, and the wretched potail and his friends if anything more surprised than they.

Sir Richard Shakespeare had something to say about that night adventure in a despatch, and Lieutenant Wood had already found his way into his comrades' hearts, there as in the Crimea, but still the V.C., for which he was again recommended, came not, and shortly afterwards he resigned his position in the Indian service through a disagreement with the same Colonel Shakespeare who had praised him so highly.

On his arrival in England, however, he found that he had been gazetted, September 4th, 1860, and since then he has made a reputation for magnificent soldierly qualities second to none in the service

Many of us who witnessed the review after the Egyptian Campaign can remember the shouts of "Evelyn Wood," as he rode down Parliament Street in his white helmet.

CHAPTER XXIII.

PLUCK!

SHAW (S.), BUTLER, DAVIS

THREE actions rewarded by the Victoria Cross must close the record of Mutiny heroes, for we have the fortunes of our troops to follow in many other lands.

Sir Colin Campbell was besieging Delhi, and one by one the strongholds of the mutineers were falling into his hands, for the last time

Part of his force had crossed the Goomtee, a brave rush had been made on the rebels' guns that commanded our advanced position, and they had been spiked, but our skirmishers were not aware of it

From the white houses and quaint grotesque kiosks, the lane ends, and the palaces, a heavy musketry fire dimpled the brown river, and kept our surgeons busy as man after man was wounded The skirmishers had to be informed of our success, and a young lieutenant named Butler, of the 1st Bengal Fusiliers, made up his mind to do it

Throwing off his blue jacket, and appearing in a shirt, the colour of which had not been improved by action, he entered the river and swam for the opposite side.

Corpses floated on the current. most of the Indian rivers had their burden of dead at that time. The risk was great, but he reached the bank in safety, and scrambling on to the parapet, waved his arms for a signal.

For some time he stood braving the bullets that pinged by him, until our men saw him and understood, and for that deed he was mentioned in general orders and got the V.C.

Action number two reveals a different phase of valour, and was performed by a private of the Black Watch at Ruhiya, in April, 1858

The affair was sadly bungled by the commanding officer there, but James Davis had nothing to do with that; he was a simple private in the light company, and was lying down under one of those magnificent trees that covered the country about the frowning fort.

When there, two engineer officers asked for some men to accompany them while they went forward to find where a breach might be made for the artillery, and Davis was one of the party, under Lieutenant Alfred Jennings Bramley, of Tunbridge Wells

Behind a garden ditch, under the fort walls, the little knot of Highlanders stayed, until the rebels came out to cut them off in force, and, shouting, "Pick off the leader while I run down and tell Macleod," the lieutenant bolted away to the captain of the company for supports.

The mutineers fired heavily, and a bullet entered Bramley's temple, stretching him senseless on the ground, and though one of the Highlanders shot the leader of the sortie, they had to fall back in haste.

"We can't leave him," said Macleod sorrowfully, looking down on the wounded boy, brave to a fault, and a great favourite in the regiment; "who will take him out?"

Private Davis volunteered, asking another man named Eadie to "give him a hand," and, as he was doing so, Eadie was shot in the head, his blood pouring down Davis's back.

A comrade dragged the poor fellow away, and Captain Macleod, seeing the red stain, asked Davis if he were wounded

"I don't think I am," was the reply, the party all the while under heavy musketry.

"Then will you still take him out?" said the captain, and the private answered "Yes."

"Clutch tight round my neck, sir," he said, getting the then conscious officer on to his back again, and starting to run; but on the way the lieutenant's watch dropped out, and though the bullets were flying about, raising dust clouds and ripping off the leaves overhead, Davis sat down gingerly until he managed to reach it, and then continued on his way until he met a man named Dods, who carried Bramley in, only to die during the night

Returning through the fire, Davis helped to bring Eadie back to the company, and, after that, to get his rifle, the party firing a volley before they abandoned their perilous position

I do not think I have come across a more striking instance of perfect disregard of danger in the whole course of my researches

Last comes a hand-to-hand business after the action at Nawabgunge; one of the good old "cut and come again" combats that one scarcely ever hears of now.

In a tope, where the shadow of overhanging branches made the shade more intense, from the fierceness of the sun outside, there stood a Ghazi, or fanatic, one of the most dangerous class of rebels our men ever came to close quarters with, and with his back to a tree he was flourishing a tulwar, keen as a razor's edge, and defying us.

Someone shot at him; the blood spurted, and his fury increased, until Sapper Shaw, 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade, stepped into the lists to tackle him armed with the short sword carried by his rank.

Men round about stood still and looked on. Sam Shaw was a resolute fellow, and if he did not kill the Ghazi, the Ghazi would kill him—that much was certain; and at it they went, Shaw, in his green European clothing which the Rifles were wearing in India at that time, the Ghazi a waving mass of drapery and black lean limbs, active and lithe as a serpent.

Sparks were struck out of the blades; round they circled, hewing and thrusting, Shaw breathing hard, and the fanatic hissing curses

A heavy blow on the head brought the blood streaming down the pioneer's face, and he was ugly to look upon; then, thoroughly exasperated, he flung himself on the Ghazi, grappled him in his strong arms, and literally sawed the life out of him with the serrated back of his sapper's sword

CHAPTER XXIV.

A SHORT OUTLINE OF THE WAR IN NEW ZEALAND, AND THE STORY OF SOME CROSSES WON THERE IN THE BUSH AND THE PAHS.

LUCAS, MCKENNA, J RYAN, MITCHELL, MCNEILL, MANLEY, TEMPLE, PICKARD, F A. SMITH

DURING the year 1860, and for several years afterwards, we were engaged in a series of remarkable campaigns against a brave race of natives, the Maoris of New Zealand, and though in the end we were victorious, the war was protracted from two reasons the determined resistance of the enemy, and the difficult nature of the country itself.

If we would believe the reports of our colonists, in no matter what quarter of the globe, the particular race of aborigines they have to cope with are always the vilest and most bloodthirsty set of wretches unhanged, and after foolishly embroiling themselves, generally from their own faults, they appeal to the mother country to help them with arms and men, and we are drawn into unfortunate wars which never ought to arise.

So it was in New Zealand The Maoris are a fine people, whose natural cruelty is very capable of being toned down if properly handled ; but it was the old story of the settler and the savage, and the actual cause of the war was a small piece of land, one mile square, at the mouth of the Waitara river Taranaki, North Island, purchased from, and paid for to, one Taera, the whole tribe afterwards claiming a vested interest in it, which led to serious complications.

A handful of troops went out to settle matters, and after some minor operations, met with an irritating reverse at the hands of tattooed warriors armed with fowling-pieces and double-barrelled guns, but without a single bayonet or a piece of cannon.

People in England could not understand why our men did not follow through the bush and exterminate the Maoris; but that bush constituted one of the principal difficulties we had to surmount, for, as an officer who knew it well says, "a European, going into it about twenty yards, and turning round three times, is quite at a loss to find his way out again, unless he is somewhat of an Indian pathfinder, and can judge of the points of the compass by the bark of the trees, the sun, etc."

Magnificent forests covered part of the land, where among the luxuriant tropical foliage parrakeets and grey warblers abounded, and the wood pigeon had its nest.

These forests alternated with vast tracts of waving fern and tall green flax, five feet in height, supplejacks and other creepers lying in wait to trip up the unwary; our men held on by each other's coat tails at night time to guard against straying from the path, for to such as did so there often came a cruel death among the thick undergrowth and swamps, some being found without heads, and Captain Ross with his heart cut out.

In the volcanic region of Taranaki, or New Plymouth, as it used to be called, the war was first waged; and, after some desultory fighting, there happened an incident which might have ended very differently but for the action of one man, Colour-Sergeant John Lucas, 40th regiment, a fine, well-set-up fellow with eighteen years' service, and a native of the South of Ireland.

Some thirty men went out, on a March morning, 1861, near the Waitara river to look for the enemy; and when they had filed across an open space and plunged into a ravine clothed with bush and fern, a heavy fire was opened on them from a mysterious and hidden foe.

Captain Richards threw his party into skirmishing order, and they fired wherever a puff of smoke rose from the Maoris' concealment, but they were at a great disadvantage, while the enemy potted them one after another

Lieutenant Rees picked up the rifle of a wounded man, and was aiming coolly, when a ball struck him in the right groin, a most dangerous and most painful spot, and the colour-sergeant sent him to the rear in charge of one of the men

Three wounded lay groaning on the ground, and to cover them until help arrived, the gallant fellow took post behind a tree, and kept up a brisk fire for fifteen minutes with two men who remained with him, the Maoris taking careful shots at thirty yards' range whenever he showed himself, one bullet severing a trailing creeper six inches above his head.

Many of the enemy fell before his deadly rifle, and it is recorded that of the wounded of his party one only survived; but he was eventually relieved by a force from the redoubt, and the moral lesson was not lost upon the foe.

He was made sergeant-major not long afterwards, and presented with the Cross at Auckland by General Cameron in person.

Isolated parties were not always so fortunate in that war; and we read of another sergeant, with twenty-five men of the 40th, who piled their arms in charge of the sentry, and were so busy bush cutting that the Maoris crept up and captured all the rifles except one stand.

Possessed of great imitative powers, the Maoris fired a rifle at sunset each night, after the example set by our gun; and, like the Cossacks, who discharged their pieces to show the enemy how remarkably wide awake they were, the native sentinels could be heard the night through calling at intervals, for the same reason, "I see you, you dogs! Come on and fight! Come on!"

Sergeant McKenna, a Yorkshire man of Irish descent, had been seventeen years in the ranks of the 65th regiment, when he found himself suddenly called upon to take command of a party at a very hazardous moment, his officer, Captain Swift, being mortally hit when attacking a large body of the enemy, who had just murdered three whites and several women and children.

"Are you wounded, sir?" he exclaimed, as he saw his officer and friend lying in a heap among the trees

"Oh, yes, McKenna—very severely! Never mind loading; take my revolver, and lead on the men!" whispered Captain Swift. And shouting—

"Men, the captain is wounded; charge!" the sergeant, mad with grief, ran out at the head of his slender thirty-seven, and drove the Maoris up a hill until they disappeared in the bush and began to fire from a host of secret hiding-places.

There were a couple of hundred of them to be held at bay until the four men under Corporal Ryan, left to guard the captain and Lieutenant Butler, should be rescued by the advance guard somewhere away among the underwood, and McKenna trusted to the reports of their rifles to give warning of the deadly peril they were all in.

Chancing upon a deserted camp of the enemy, they made a breastwork of potato kits and sacking, and held their ground with great determination, picking the Maoris out of the tree tops and from their lairs in the fern, until about six o'clock in the evening, when, as darkness was at hand, retreat became absolutely necessary.

Many wild suggestions were advanced by different men of the party, and when they began to retire by the way they had come, a heavy fire showed that the path was occupied

Several had been wounded, and one or two killed outright, but McKenna did not lose heart, and at a quarter past six he led his little band, carrying the sufferers tenderly, down the hill into some dense scrub on the other side of the valley, finding the splay-footed tracks of the savages on the bank of a clear stream there, in whose tranquil bosom the stars were reflected brightly

Soon afterwards they lost the path, and, ordering them to put on their greatcoats, after a strict caution not to light a pipe, he and his men sat down in square to spend the night in perfect silence—all but two, who had wandered away, and were lost.

Meanwhile Corporal Ryan, with Privates Talbot and Bulford, lay beside Captain Swift, who stifled his own moaning until seven in the evening, when, after saying to the corporal, "Give me your hand," he pressed it, and fell into the sleep of death.

At daybreak they covered the body with leaves to save it from the Maoris, and, luckily, met the rescue-party, who never expected to find one of them alive.

The night wore on, and grew bitterly cold; the fern fronds rustled suspiciously, and the toé-toé grass moved at times as if the stealthy savages were gliding through it; but still Sergeant McKenna sat motionless, listening to the faintest sound, having done all that was possible, and content to leave the rest in the hands of Providence

Away in another place Privates Thomas and Cole watched beside Mr Butler, whose wound was very painful; and not only did they wrap him with their greatcoats, but Thomas added his blue serge frock, and spent the remainder of the time shivering in undershirt and trousers.

It behoves regimental officers, if from only selfish motives, where no higher ones appeal, to win the respect and affection of their men, for, once gained, there is nothing Tommy Atkins will not do for them, while on the other hand, if they render themselves unpopular and obnoxious, they run a good chance of being shot from the rear when in action, the fate of far more in the past than is generally supposed.

At daybreak they all continued their retreat, and arrived in sight of a search-party of the 65th soon after eight; afterwards rescuing one of the missing men, Whittle, who had been sixty hours without food, and finding the body of the other, a private named Bryne, stone dead, with five bullets in his body.

Sergeant McKenna received a commission and the V.C.; Corporal Ryan was gazetted, but was drowned near Tuaken before he got the Cross, when trying to save a drunken comrade; while Bulford, Talbot, Cole, and Thomas gained the Medal for Distinguished Conduct in the field as a reward for their long night vigil beside the wounded and the dead.

"In all this desperate affair, McKenna," said an interviewer to the gallant sergeant, "did you ever think of your wife and children?"

"Not once, sir," he replied. "She asked me the same question the first time we met, and seemed a little put out when I gave her the same answer; but she understood it afterwards In the excitement of an engagement a soldier can only think of immediate duty. When the danger is past, he feels how grateful he ought to be to Him who has preserved his life for those who are dearer to him than life itself."

Captain Swift had been instrumental in organising a corps of Forest Rangers, who did good service under a very brave German named Von Tempsky, himself destined to be shot.

In one action a Maori, hidden in the branches of a tree, fired at a man of the 13th, the ball piercing his Crimean ribbon, and tearing its way to his heart Von Tempsky brought the native down by a good aim; and, seeing that he was not dead, drew the bowie-knife he always carried, and finished him, saying: "There; you vill never kill anoder Englishman!"

At Rangiriri fifty men of the Royal Artillery were called upon to storm the Pah with swords and revolvers, led by Captain Mercer, a magnificent soldier, whom every bombardier would have followed had he taken them to certain death.

Unhappily for the service, a bullet carried awa his lower jaw; and he lay exposed to a terrific fire, enduring agonies too awful for description.

Everyone who attempted to cross the opening in the parapet was instantly shot, except Lieutenant Pickard, R.A., who won the Cross for his devotion to the wounded, and Assistant-Surgeon Temple, R.A., who, with Pickard, went out and rendered every possible attention that skill and friendship could suggest, the on-lookers breathing a sigh of relief as they saw the doctor gain the captain's side, and kneel to dress the ghastly wound under the same fire that had inflicted it.

Temple's action gained him the Victoria Cross, but Mercer was beyond all earthly aid when he reached him, and after it was over, and they brought Mrs. Mercer to him to take a last farewell, he wrote in pencil, for he could not speak, "Do not grieve for me, I die contented, and resigned to God's will"

Resignation and determination were also to be found among the Maoris, and on one occasion, when Captain Greaves had fired at a brown head that peeped above a parapet, he searched for the man inside when the Pah had been taken, and discovered him with a ball between the eyes; his leg broken in a previous engagement having been roughly bound up with flax and a tent peg by way of splint, so that he might go on fighting to the end.

Death was certain to any who fell into the Maoris' hands, and it chanced that Lieut.-Colonel J. Carstairs McNeill, of the 107th Regiment, with his orderly, Private Vosper, of the Colonial Defence Force, came suddenly upon fifty of them on the road from Te Awamuta.

When the ping ping of the bullets began, and their numbers were seen, the officer and his attendant turned to gallop back; but Vosper's horse went down and rolled him into a potatoe-pit hidden among the fern, and the Maoris ran towards him with cries of triumph destined to be short.

Colonel McNeill rode after the horse, and caught it, which Vosper himself could not have done in time, and helping him to mount, they saved themselves with difficulty by a mad gallop, with the dust clouds from the bullets all round them, until they eventually reached an English party levelling an abandoned pah.

Our troops, after sailing round the fine coast of the North Island, were landed in Poverty Bay district, in the Province of Auckland; and across the peninsula of Te Papa the Maoris had built a stockade, known as the Gate Pah, with a long rifle pit extending from their left almost to the sea beach

April, usually so bright and sunny there, showed a dull grey dawn on the 29th, mist shrouding the distant hills and a drizzly rain falling.

From half-past seven until four o'clock in the afternoon our artillery poured a heavy fire upon the Pah, the Maoris seeking shelter in the holes and tunnels with which the place was riddled, and, taking advantage of low-tide the night before, the 68th Regiment and some men of the Naval Brigade, had moved silently round to their left rear unknown to them, with orders not to open fire until the enemy had been driven past them by our storming column.

The Maoris remained so quiet that we thought the shells had slain them all, but a breach having been made, the Fighting Forty-third, and a party of Blue-jackets set out at four o'clock, and as they neared the Pah, a brisk fusilade upon them showed that some of the natives, at any rate, remained alive.

With a rousing cheer we sped on to the breach, stormed it gallantly after crossing the ditch, and with flashing bayonets drove the foe helter-skelter out at the back of the Pah, which they left by its right rear.

So far, all went well. Tars and light infantry mingled in pursuit, and the Maoris were streaming away across the front of the concealed 68th, under Colonel Greer, when suddenly the latter began to blaze away without waiting for the enemy to pass them, as General Cameron had commanded.

The 68th's bullets fell not only into the flying foe, but among our own men, and seeing the loss we were suffering, a naval officer shouted to his party, "Retire," which they did back into the Pah. The Maoris, caught between two fires, and perceiving the momentary confusion, returning and following us in

Then from holes and hidden rifle pits, other natives sprang, tomahawk in hand. The place seemed alive with them, and taken unawares, the storming column rushed out again and tore through the breach back to our lines.

The supports were ordered up, but the tide had turned and everything was in confusion.

Commander Hamilton, of the Esk, sprang forward, crying, "Follow me, men!" and fell dead; Booth, of the 43rd, was down, shot through the spine and arm; two brothers named Glover, the sons of a clergyman, were killed, almost in each other's arms, as one was trying to carry the other away when he was shot, and the only glory gained there that drizzly evening was by a seaman and a surgeon, the former being Samuel Mitchell, captain of the foretop of H.M.S. Harrier, doing duty as captain's coxswain.

"AND THOUGH THE DANGER WAS TERRIFIC, HE CARRIED HIM AWAY IN HIS STRONG EMBRACE" (p. 205).

When Commander Hay fell mortally wounded, Mitchell refused to leave him, in spite of the dying man's orders and entreaties, and though the danger was terrific, he carried him away in his strong embrace, and eventually brought the breathless body safely into camp, to be reported by Commodore Sir William Wiseman, and to be gazetted to the Victoria Cross the following July.

Assistant-Surgeon William G Nicholas Manley, R A., proved himself worthy of the name he bore, for he not only risked his life with Mitchell to save Commander Hay, but voluntarily returned to the stockade again to dress the wounded, being one of the very last to leave the Pah.

He was also awarded the Victoria Cross, and the Humane Society's medal for another deed of mercy later in the war

As for General Cameron, afterwards most unjustly abused by the English papers, he flung his field-glass on to the ground, and strode away to his tent to hide his sorrowful indignation.

Seven officers of the 43rd and some of the Navy remained in the enemy's hands that night, the Maoris yelling and shouting for some time, until a deathlike silence fell over the Pah, and Major Greaves, of the 70th, stole up to find it abandoned.

At daybreak we entered, and one of the first things seen was the tall figure of Colonel Booth, leaning, dying, against the wall.

To save himself from mutilation, he had whipped his fingers into his mouth and drawn off the rings, which were found between his teeth, and a dark whisper was current among the 43rd that the enemy had set him up there for a target.

He was a fine, handsome man, yet very unpopular in the regiment by reason of his unbending severity and the freedom with which he inflicted the lash; but before he died he said to the general, "I endeavoured to carry out your orders, sir. I am sorry I have failed I at least tried to do my duty."

"And you have done so, nobly," was the general's reply.

That is the true story of the disaster at the Gate Pah, and its cause, though many attempts have been made to gloss it over, by blaming the 43rd for the disobedience of another regiment.

Not long afterwards, the 43rd had an opportunity of retrieving their prestige, on the edge of a ravine at Tuaranga, where in half an hour they left 150 dead Maoris to be buried, and Captain Smith, A Company, won the V.C. by springing into a rifle-pit and engaging single-handed among the active foe.

He was colonel of the regiment some years later, but, discipline growing lax in the Light Bobs, he was soon succeeded by a sterner hand.

When Sir Trevor Chute entered into command in New Zealand, the war assumed a very different phase, and his bush fighting was masterly.

He routed the rebels out of one place after another, and was here, there, and everywhere in splendid style, so that, though now and again there have been isolated cases of murder and disturbance, the Maori power was finally broken, their red flag, emblazoned with cross, crescent, and star, hauled down, and the settlers live at peace.

A few years since I met and chatted about that war with a general who had commanded the 50th Regiment out there, and shortly afterwards there came to me from some relatives in New Zealand, a tarnished button belonging to the "dirty half hundred," which button had a history.

For twenty-seven years it had lain in the earth on the mouldering uniform of a dead man; I believe he had been buried on my friends' estate, at any rate they lighted on him after that lapse of time, and it was not a little strange that there should come into my possession a relic of one of the very men whose actions their old colonel had described to me, while relic and man were lying in that lonely grave so many thousands of miles away

CHAPTER XXV.

A CHAPTER OF INCIDENTS, IN ACTION AND OUT.

O'Hea, Hodge, Gordon — Douglas, Murphy, Bell, Cooper, Griffiths, 24th Regiment

On the 19th of June, 1866, an action was performed by a private of the Rifle Brigade which, although not happening in war-time, was of such gallantry that a Supplemental Warrant was enforced, and the V C. most deservedly awarded.

On a siding at Danville Station, near Quebec, a railway van was standing, with smoke curling lightly away through some chinks in the woodwork, and the awful part of it was, the van was laden with several tons of powder and ammunition, thus imperilling the lives of everyone within reach, and threatening any minute to explode and shatter half the town.

While others were helpless and dismayed, Private Timothy O'Hea, with the noblest self-devotion, set to work to break in the door, and those who saw him and realised the chances stood speechless, expecting momentarily to witness his annihilation.

The flames, confined inside the van, were heating the cases; death was very near to that brave Irishman and he knew it; but after a little time he wrenched the carriage door open, and procuring water, eventually got the fire under.

The action was not performed in the presence of the enemy, but it was accounted so plucky, and the service he had rendered was so incalculably great, that Timothy O'Hea broke the record, and became a V.C man. I am not sure whether his valour does not even exceed many a thing done in the heat of battle.

The second man of colour to receive the Victoria Cross was a coal-black negro named Samuel Hodge, a native of one of the West India Islands.

He belonged to the 4th West Indian Regiment, now disbanded, and went on a punitive expedition with his corps against one of the African tribes, on the River Gambia, in 1866.

Led by the Governor of Gambia, Colonel George Abbas Kooli D'Arcy, the 4th stormed a blockaded town, in company with the Gambia Volunteers, and had a very warm quarter of an hour, for the natives fired so vigorously from their palisade that Lieutenants Kelly and Jenkins and four privates were killed, and sixty more badly wounded

Left almost alone in the breach, the colonel raged and roared, and would not retire, and Hodge, who was badly hit, handed him muskets, with which he kept up a return fire until his men rallied and stormed in again

Once inside, the negroes had to face several barriers, which Hodge broke down one after another, the big West Indian was in his element, and he is an awkward animal to encounter when his blood is up.

The stockade was full of smoke from end to end, and through it, dimly seen, the black Zouaves swept their way with fierce low shouts.

Many such a long-forgotten hand-to-hand fight has the swampy mangrove-fringed coast of western Africa witnessed, brave actions only to be unearthed to-day in musty old Army Lists and mildewed memoirs no one ever reads.

Three hundred of the enemy lay dead and dying after the 4th had done, and as they left the place, Colonel D'Arcy presented Samuel Hodge to his comrades, telling them that he was the "bravest man in the corps," which produced a loud cheer.

To the colonel the merchants of Bathurst presented a sword of honour, valued at 120 guineas, inscribed on the shining blade: "For his devoted bravery at the stockaded town of Tubabecolong, and to mark their appreciation of his government," while Hodge received the Victoria Cross, which he wore with true negro pride to the day of his death

As recently as March, 1892, another coloured man won the same honour at Toniataba on the Gambia, when the 1st West India were battering down the gate of the town with a heavy beam.

Major G. Colquhoun Madden, who joined the regiment as sub-lieutenant in 1875, and now wears the gold-and-white enamelled Distinguished Service Order, was superintending the work, and had turned his head for a moment, when from a row of masked loopholes the enemy protruded their rifle barrels, some of them only a few feet from the major.

Corporal Gordon saw the danger, and throwing himself in front of his officer, cried, "Look out, sir, look out," received a bullet through his lungs, which stretched him at the major's feet.

His noble devotion saved that gentleman from almost certain death; and, by tender nursing, the corporal was pulled round, and is alive to-day, as proud of his V.C. as Hodge, his black predecessor.

Another display of gallantry was deemed worthy of the Cross, although it could hardly be said to have taken place in action, and a surgeon and four privates of the 24th Regiment were decorated under peculiar circumstances.

A force had been sent to the Andaman Islands to inquire into the supposed murder of the captain and seven of the crew of the Assam Valley, whose graves, in fact, they discovered there.

The Andamans lie in the Bay of Bengal, wild, surf-beaten islets, on whose shores the waves are always booming with a thunderous roar, rendering the landing dangerous to a degree, and when the party tried to regain their vessel, they encountered that difficulty, Assistant-Surgeon Douglas and the four privates manning the second gig and pulling in to help them.

The boat soon filled, and they had to bale for their lives, but, nothing daunted, they set her nose for land again, and rowed hard

Huge curling breakers foamed on the shingle, sending up clouds of spray to a great height, but they managed to drag five men into the gig and get out with them through the surf in safety

Standing in the bows, to mark the exact moment when to pull, the surgeon worked his boat with great coolness; and, drenched to the skin, they landed within the line of surf a third time, and took the remaining party on board

Heavily laden, with that boiling turmoil between them and the ship, they put her round again, and faced it resolutely, knowing that to capsize meant the drowning of most of them; but so great was their leader's judgment, and so well did they second him, that, after an exciting battle with the furious sea, the boat rode once more in smooth water outside the surf, and the five brave men had saved in all an officer and seventeen soldiers.

So great was the risk, and so gallantly did they encounter it, that each of their names went to swell up the roll, which places their regiment at the head of the list, as the possessor of sixteen Victoria Crosses, one of the five, Griffiths, being afterwards killed at Isandhlwana!

CHAPTER XXVI.

SOME V.C. MEN OF THE AFGHAN WAR.

COOK, HAMILTON, MULLANE, COLLIS, REV J. W. ADAMS.

FROM November, 1878, to September, 1880, with the exception of three months' peace in the summer of 1879, we were engaged in a fierce hill war with the Afghans.

The causes of that war are too complex to enter into here. Russian aggression and the supposed safety of our Indian Empire were really at the bottom of it; and we tried to foist a British resident envoy on the Ameer in his capital.

Shere Ali objected, and welcomed a Russian representative, whereupon we attempted to establish our envoy by force of arms, and succeeded up to a certain point.

Shere Ali practically abdicated in favour of his son, Yakoub Khan, whom he had previously imprisoned for years, and died in February, 1879, after a painful illness.

Relations were not much improved with the new ruler; but eventually he allowed us to settle Sir Louis Cavagnari in his dominions, with a small escort of Guides under Lieutenant W. R. P. Hamilton.

The mission was unpopular both with Ameer and people. One September day Cavagnari was attacked in the Residency, and, after a brilliant struggle, every man of the party was slain.

To avenge this, Major-General Roberts, V.C., left Simla, and took command of a not very strong force, with which, however, he did such great things in one of the most trying lands in which we have ever fought, that his name is now a household word with us, and well-nigh as popular as was Wellington's to a former generation of Englishmen.

We cannot follow him through all the winding valleys, among the stern snow-clad peaks and passes, and over the icy streams that rush madly down their stony beds. Suffice it that he fought his way to Cabul, passing through forests of ilex and sombre woods of pine, by red and yellow cliffs, and gorges whose turf was gay with many flowers, storming the ridges with his kilted Highlanders and active Goorkhas, and eventually standing sorrowfully among the ruins of the Residency at the Bala Hissar

Yakoub Khan abdicated as his father had done, and was taken prisoner; and the general prepared to winter up in the high land of Afghanistan, isolated from all assistance, and to quell the various Sirdars who were turning the country upside down.

After much exciting work, and a stirring march from Candahar by Sir Donald Stewart, the English Government decided to appoint an Ameer to the vacant throne, who should be able to rule his people and be loyal to British interests as well. The choice falling on Abdurrahaman, who was formally accepted by the friendly chiefs, and the British army was withdrawn; a short period of calm ensued, to be rudely broken by the terrible affair of Maiwand in the summer of 1880.

A weak British force occupied Candahar, then recently acquired by us, and the native Governor sent to Brigadier-General Burrows, commanding there, for help against the banished Ayoub Khan, who was coming from Herat to disturb matters once more; and the Governor's army mutinying, Burrows marched out with 2,300 men, and reached the left bank of the Helmund on the 11th of July.

General Burrows had received orders to attack Ayoub, if he felt strong enough to beat him; but, from a delay in leaving Kushk-i-Nakhud, and a combination of mistakes, we got one of the severest thrashings on record on an arid plain, near the village of Maiwand, losing 964 out of 2,476, several guns, and a multitude of followers, being, moreover, pursued in disorderly retreat, and besieged in Candahar

This led to the renowned march to Candahar, when General Roberts led his relieving column of 10,000 men from Cabul to Robat, 303 miles, in twenty days, the thermometer registering 84° to 92° in the shade, the general suffering from fever during the last long leagues.

On the 31st of August he reached Candahar, and fought a battle there next day which ended the war, as far as we were concerned, Abdurrahaman settling Ayoub Khan the following year on his own account, and driving him into Persia.

And now, after this long preamble, we will glance at some of the deeds that were afterwards rewarded by the Victoria Cross.

But first let me mention an instance of coolness, under fire, of one who lived to gain the V.C. in another war, Lord William Beresford, then aide-de-camp to the Viceroy of India, who had obtained a month's leave, and spent it in accompanying Sir Samuel Browne, V.C., up the Khyber Pass; about as lively a holiday as mortal man could wish.

Browne led his brigade against the Ali Musjid along the right hand side of the defile, high up on a rocky ridge; Appleyard led his brigade up the left side, along another elevated path, and between the two lay the gorge, deep down below, with a rushing torrent at the bottom, and a different rushing in the air, for the Afghans in the fort were firing along its length, their shells bursting repeatedly beneath the marching columns

General Browne wanted to communicate with his confrère over on the other ridge as they neared the fort, and Beresford volunteered.

"Very well," said the general. "I want you to get over as quickly as possible; but you'd better make a détour to the rear before you cross the valley."

"All right, sir."

And the aide-de-camp dismounted; but, instead of the détour, he clambered down the almost perpendicular cliff among the exploding shells, as calmly as if he were deerstalking—more so, in fact, and, though frequently hidden by the dust and smoke, sat down on a rock by the stream, took off boots and stockings, waded through, and replaced them on the other side, relacing his boots under a rattling shell hail, and, lighting a cigarette, climbed the opposite hill, remaining to fight there with Appleyard's men after he had delivered his message!

It was a dark December morning as the Kurram Field Force wound into the ravine of the Spingwi Khotal, whose rocky sides were thickly clothed with pine-trees, the 5th Goorkhas leading, under Major Fitzhugh and Captain Cook, expecting every moment to fall in with the enemy, and coming all at once on a stockade of felled timber from which a fire was opened.

"Front form company!" was the cry, and with a Goorkha howl, they stormed the barrier in the barely visible light of dawn.

Out of the first stockade the little black men cleared them and, stimulated by the two officers, who were hewing and slashing in the middle of the Afghans, chased them for eighty yards to another stockade, where the same thing was repeated, amid such a babel of shouts and rifle reports, and screams and scrimmages as has seldom rung through those lonely regions, so solemn in their almost unknown grandeur of primeval deodars and scented pines.

A splendid fight took place at the second barrier, and during its progress Major Galbraith, Assistant-Adjutant-General, was attacked by a powerful Durance Afghan, who aimed at his heart.

Knocking aside the rifle, the major attempted to shoot him, but the revolver failed at the critical moment, and if Captain Cook had not sped up, the major would have been slain on the spot.

Cook instantly closed with the man, who sent his bayonet at his breast, but the officer was too quick for him, and dashing it aside, seized the muzzle with his left hand and plied his sword with the other.

With a grip of iron the man seized the captain's sword arm in his turn, and there followed a struggle in the grey of the December morning between two well-matched brawny antagonists.

Suddenly clutching him by the throat, Cook threw him on his back, and over they rolled many times, until the Afghan bit Cook's sword-arm with his teeth, and hurling him over, shortened his bayonet to give the final stroke, but—there is luckily often a "but" in these cases—a Goorkha came to the rescue and blew out the foeman's brains.

Captain Cook became Major Cook, V.C., but just a year later he was wounded mortally in the leg, and died five days afterwards near Cabul

His last act was to write a few pathetic lines to the Indian Government, asking them to continue to a dearly-loved sister the small annuity he had allowed her out of his pay, and which they did, to their honour be it said.

At Kujja, near Futtehabad, Brigadier-General C. J. S. Gough, V.C, whose valour we have seen in the Mutiny, fought a very smart action, highly creditable to his skill as a commander and to the bravery of the "Invincibles," as his men were called.

During a charge of the Guides, Major Wigram Battye fell, shot twice in the left thigh and then through the heart.

He was one of five brothers, all in the service, and the Chitral expedition completed the roll of four out of the five who have been killed in action.

Greatly beloved by his men, a wild cry of rage went up as his body was seen to fall out of the saddle, and Lieutenant Hamilton of his troop shouted to the sowars to avenge him.

There was a stern rush, and the dark faces grew savage and remorseless under their blue turbans as the khaki line swept into the Afghans.

As Hamilton and a Guide, named Dowlat Ram, bore down on a group of brown-uniformed foemen, standing together in a bold attempt to resist the rush, one fired, and the sowar's Arab fell, rolling over and over in agony, the man's leg getting entangled in the bridle and stirrup-leather.

With a whoop the knot of Afghans were upon him, but Hamilton pulled round in time to jump his charger into their midst and sabre the first within reach of his strong young arm.

Another he killed with his point as he was about to stab the sowar, and a third fired at him point blank, but another Guide chanced to knock up his rifle, and Hamilton got in again with the reeking blade.

Up they hauled the sowar from his dead horse, and catching a riderless one passing at the time, Dowlat Ram joined Hamilton in the charge again, when they pursued the enemy far over the plain, the 10th Hussars, also in khaki, with khaki-covered helmets, and blue puttees, cleaving those who had gathered beyond a ravine.

Although recommended for the V.C., Lieutenant Hamilton was refused, and it was only granted after he had fought the murderous hordes in the Bala Hissar, and been barbarously slain, with Cavagnari and the rest.

It is a startling chapter, that of the burning Residency, and of the little garrison driven by the flames from room to room until they reached the court-yard, beyond whose gates a howling mob, more cruel even than the fire itself, clamoured for their blood.

It is thrilling to read of the gate burst open, and Hamilton with sword and revolver, trying to cut his way through the throng—for what?

Freedom he could not have hoped to win; not one in that city would be a friend to him; they were alone and they had to die, and they wished to die in the open where there was room to breathe for the last time, to strike a last good British blow, and finish bravely.

With sword and revolver he was in the middle of them ; a shot, a thrust, another shot, two of the rascals down, and a third for company.

It was over in an instant, one against a hundred, but he stretched four dead, and in the last rush some others must have dropped ; then he staggered and sank, slashed in almost every part of the body ; and when he was dead and gone he was gazetted V.C.

The Reverend James William Adams, B A., was one of the most deservedly popular chaplains that ever accompanied a British force into action, and there have been many, though somehow very little is heard of them or their deeds, outside the service itself.

He was, and I trust still is, a muscular, fresh-complexioned gentleman, and a keen sportsman , and he went up with the avenging column after the assassination of Sir Louis Cavagnari and the others at Cabul.

At a place called Killa Khazzi we came in contact with a force so strong that there was something very like a rout at one portion of the day, and among others, the gallant 9th Lancers were badly cut up, losing their colonel, Cleland, and several officers.

Again and again they went into the fierce Afghans, but so irresistible was the tide that it was not possible to stem it, and our men were seen fighting in groups for their lives, the gay lance flags torn and bloody, as the flood surged closer and closer to our abandoned guns in the rear.

Chaplain Adams dismounted on seeing a young wounded lancer staggering towards him, and while he was assisting the man, his own horse bolted, and left him to retreat on foot.

After getting the lancer on his way, Mr. Adams returned towards the front, and saw a terrific splashing at the bottom of a deep nullah, where two more lancers lay under their horses, being rolled and crushed to death as the poor brutes struggled to rise.

The Afghans were very close, their shouts were not only heard, but grew louder and louder in an increasing roar, mingled with firing and the busy noise of conflict; it was only a question of minutes before the men in the nullah would be pitilessly slain, so the chaplain sprang into it, and waded waist deep in the water there, when, by dint of pulling and hauling, he got them both clear of the frantic horses, and they managed to crawl, drenched and exhausted, up the bank Mr. Adams (the "fighting parson" they called him out there) is the only clergyman to whom the Cross has been granted, and, as such, is altogether a very unique personage indeed.

We have all seen Caton Woodville's grand picture "Saving the guns at Maiwand," and the recollection of the tremendous "go" in the galloping horses, the ghastly wounded on the jolting limbers, the sergeant reeling with a frightful gash across his brow, and the dramatic slaughter going on in the background, brings us to a couple of Maiwand heroes, and the part they played.

One was Sergeant Patrick Mullane, Royal Horse Artillery, who, seeing Driver Pickwell Istead bleeding on the ground, took him up and placed him on the gun (where he died a few minutes later), at great personal risk to himself; afterwards going into the village during the retreat, and bringing water to the dying men under a heavy fire.

The other, Gunner James Collis, whose own account I shall quote in places, was also a wearer of the jacket, and when he left the army was for a time in the Corps of Commissionaires.

He belonged to E Battery, B Brigade, and was limber gunner when they went into the fatal plain.

"Action front!" was the command, and after a few rounds of common shell had been fired, the Afghans replied briskly, their first ball striking the near wheel of Collis's gun, killing one gunner, wounding another, and injuring Lieutenant Fowler, by way of a start.

A little later, the limber-box was smashed by a shell, which also killed a wheel-horse, and the battery suffered severely, for at the spot where Collis was working, a sergeant and four gunners were killed, several riding-horses destroyed, and two other men so badly hit, that only three were left at the gun.

About half-past one there was a slight panic among some of Jacob's Rifles, and a throng clustered round the battery for protection, some even crawling under the piece itself, but the enemy ceasing to fire, we did the same, and as they had worked round rather too close on our left, General Nuttall led the 3rd Scinde Horse, raised during the Indian Mutiny, in a charge against them, Gunner Smith mounting and riding with them.

When within 200 yards of the Afghans the dark green coats of the native sowars were seen to waver and go about, deliberately shirking it, and leaving their officers and the general alone.

Crying with rage, the general returned, but the gunner, evidently overcome with excitement, went on alone, and met his death, brilliantly, but uselessly.

Some hours after that, when things were going badly with us, the battery was charged by Afghan infantry, in brown with red facings, and there was a tussle among the guns, our fellows using handspikes and anything they could seize hold of, until Major Blackwood gave the word to retire.

Lieutenant Maclaine cried, "Retire ——! Give them another round!" and while the rest limbered up and galloped back about 2,000 yards, Major Blackwood and Lieutenant Osborne, with the plucky Maclaine, remained in front, and, after a few minutes, the latter galloped back alone, leaving two guns in the hands of the enemy and his comrades dead beside them.

"Action rear!" he shouted, and two rounds of shrapnel were sent at the foe, but another officer who rode up, said very wisely to Captain Slade, who, had taken command, "If you stay here you'll lose those two guns, as Maclaine has lost his."

Again it was "limber up," and away they went at a rattling gallop, Collis on his limber, and such of the mounted men as survived riding close round the bounding cannon, as the enemy's cavalry tore down in pursuit.

Half hidden in the huge dust-cloud they raised, the sun blazing down on them, dripping from their violent exertions and lashing the teams furiously, they made for Candahar, a thundering flight, all regardless of the crowd of fugitives that blocked the way, or the sickening bump as a wheel passed over a fallen, perhaps still breathing, man.

There was no time for sentiment. The Afghans were close behind, and every nerve was strained to save the guns.

A flash like lightning, and a sabre has grazed

Collis's left eyebrow; the bearded trooper wheeling round to come at him again

There is a ready carbine tucked away snugly beside him, and Collis fires as the man dashes up within a few yards, knocking him clean off his horse, his money falling out of his turban into the dust, to be picked up by Trumpeter Jones, who dismounts in a moment, and lives to wear the Distinguished Service Medal and a corporal's stripes on his sleeve.

The pace slackened when the enemy had been left well in the rear. The remnant of the troops that stood firm were dying almost to a man, and there was no help for it. The 66th suffered cruelly, and one is obliged to admit that the British army had been out-numbered, out-generaled, and severely beaten there.

The pursuit came up with the guns again after the dusk drew down, and Collis, who had gone to a village well for a much-needed drink, was obliged to attach himself to No 2, his own gun having got ahead in the crowd.

With No 2 he stuck all the way to Candahar, and several wounded did he place upon it, until it was heavily loaded with ten of the old brave "Berkshire," and a colonel whom the gunner did not know

No food, no water, all through the weary night, and dawn did not improve matters, for there were still long miles to traverse before the city walls could give them shelter.

Many died of fatigue along the road, and if they stayed to rest a while, the clatter of hoofs behind in the darkness made them rise and stagger on; it was a lamentable business, disastrous alike to our honour and our arms, but there were many who, like Jim

Collis, kept their wits about them and did good service to those who could not help themselves

About four o'clock in the afternoon of the day following, No 2 gun reached Kokeran, seven miles and a half from Candahar, and Collis procured some water at last for his wounded men, but when returning to the village a second time, he saw some dozen of the enemy's cavalry approaching at a slow pace.

While the others whipped up the jaded team, he lay down in a little nullah with a rifle belonging to one of the 66th, and opened fire between two and three hundred yards

The group halted and returned bullet for bullet, believing as Collis thinks, that there were several men concealed there, and giving him time and opportunity to kill two of their number and a horse, and expend thirty-five cartridges in all.

When they were close to him, General Nuttall arrived with some native cavalry and sent them off, saying to our gunner, "You are a gallant young man What is your name?"

"Gunner Collis, sir, of E of B, R H A.," was the reply, about which there was certainly nothing cut to waste, and it was entered there and then in the general's note-book, after which, Collis followed up the gun that his voluntary action had saved, and arrived with it at Candahar about seven the same night

That was not the only thing he did, though, out of the common; for again, in August, he volunteered to carry a message from the besieged garrison to General Dewberry, in the village, two hundred yards from the ditch. His offer being accepted after some hesitation, the plucky fellow was lowered some thirty or forty feet down the wall, being fired at meanwhile by the enemy's matchlock men not far off.

Landing unhurt, he ran into the thick of it, delivered his message, and was once more a living target as he shinned up the dangling rope, a ball cutting off the heel of his left boot before he reached the parapet, and had a drain from Colonel Burnet's flask, while the officers congratulated him warmly.

Unknown to him, General Roberts recommended him for the Victoria Cross, and, strangely enough, he received it on the first anniversary of the day when, all alone, he stayed behind in the nullah to draw the Afghans' fire on to himself, and give the wounded men on the gun a chance for their lives.

CHAPTER XXVII

WAR IN ZULULAND AND THE V.C.—THE DASH WITH THE COLOUR

MELVILL, COGHILL, WASSALL

THERE is not a page of England's military history, from first to last, more full of stirring heroism and heartrending sadness than that which tells of Zululand and the war of 1879.

All that is best and bravest is to be found there, side by side with appalling disaster, and while it is impossible here to trace every feature of the campaign, I shall attempt a short outline, introducing at their proper places some of the twenty-nine incidents for which the Victoria Cross was worthily awarded.

Separated only by the rushing Buffalo river from our colony of Natal, Zululand was tenanted by a martial race, whose whole organisation was a military one, every man being trained to arms and subjected to the severest discipline.

Black or brown in colour, stalwart and powerful, armed with assegais and clubs, and in some cases rifles—they were justly feared by the colonists; an old Boer farmer remarking at the outset of the war, "God save you, sir, from ever seeing a camp or homestead sacked by Zulus!"

Cetewayo, their king, enlightened in some ways, but nevertheless a bloodthirsty tyrant, assumed an aggressive attitude, and was known to be making great preparations, which boded ill for the inhabitants of Natal.

Certain Zulu women fled for protection into British territory, and were followed by the sons of a chief, Sirayo, who dragged them back, and put them to death, it is said, with horrible tortures; Cetewayo being informed that he must send the offenders back to be tried by the laws of the colony.

An evasive answer was returned and fifty pounds offered to us as compensation, but a series of aggressive acts followed one on another, until the Governor, Sir Bartle Frere, submitted a much-criticised ultimatum, again demanding the delivery of Sirayo's sons, and certain fines for the various offences.

The thirty days allowed for compliance elapsed on the 10th of January, and at daybreak on the misty morning of the 11th one of the four columns destined to invade Zululand forded the Buffalo, and began its disastrous march

It was the 3rd, or left-centre, column; and with it rode the Commander-in-chief, Lord Chelmsford, who had been at the fall of Sebastopol with the Grenadier Guards, in the Mutiny with the 95th, and at the capture of Magdala as Deputy-Adjutant-General, when he was mentioned in despatches for "great ability and untiring energy"

Next day they had a brush with the foe, burning Sirayo's kraals and killing one of his sons among the rest; after which the column marched slowly on, over ground sodden with recent rains, winding its way farther and farther into the country, among stony valleys and grass-grown mountain spurs, until a halt was made on the 19th at the base of a sphinxshaped hill, known as Isandhlwana, or "the little hand"—about eight miles, as the crow flies, from the Buffalo—and in the native district of Isandula.

There a camp was formed, on a spot which Archibald Forbes says "seemed to offer a premium on disaster, and asked to be attacked," and soon the white tents clustered, and the ox-waggons were ranged in a row behind them, the cheerful business of cooking began, and there was nothing to show that in less than three days that camp would be a "camp of death."

After a personal reconnaissance on the 20th, the general sent out two parties on the 21st one of the Natal Native Contingent, under Lonsdale, the other of Mounted Police and Volunteers, under Major Dartnell, to examine the country still further, and during the afternoon a staff-officer came into camp from them, with a request for two or three companies of the 24th, as a large force of Zulus had been seen on the hills to the east

A ration of biscuit was sent out to the bivouac, and next morning, after being roused without noise or lights, six companies of the 2nd Battalion 24th mustered in light marching order, with one day's provisions, and set off silently in the gloom at 4 a.m, under Lord Chelmsford himself, towards the Izipezi Hill, followed by the bandsmen with stretchers, and accompanied by four R A. guns, some mounted infantry, and a corps of Natal Pioneers, leaving the camp in charge of Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel Pulleine, who had ridden post-haste to join the regiment a few days before.

The force at the camp consisted of 30 Mounted Infantry, and about 8 Mounted Volunteers and Police,

70 men of the Royal Artillery, with two guns, five companies of the 1st Battalion 24th Regiment, and G Company, 2nd Battalion; two companies of the 1st Battalion 3rd Natal Native Contingent, two companies 2nd Battalion, and 10 native pioneers, the feeling there being expressed by Lieutenant Melvill (of whom more anon) to a staff-officer, when he said, "I know what you are thinking of, sir, by your face, you are abusing this camp You are quite right These Zulus will charge home, and with our small numbers we ought to be in laager, or, at any rate, be prepared to stand shoulder to shoulder."

The same staff-officer afterwards said, "Never before in my life-time did I experience such a strong presentiment of coming evil as on that day and the following morning, when I left the camp for the front"

The tragic sequel sent a thrill of agony through the length and breadth of every English-speaking land, and although the meagre facts gleaned from the one or two that survived are harrowing in the extreme, there are among them some details of British pluck which could ill be spared, and which gild the red page of Isandhlwana with a never-fading lustre for all time

Colonel Durnford, R.E., who had been summoned from Rorke's Drift, about a quarter of a mile on the Natal side of the Buffalo, to come up to the camp and take command, with all his mounted men and the rocket battery, reached it about 10.30; but before he had arrived, and about 9 a.m., an orderly rode up to the general with a despatch from Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Pulleine, saying, "Report just come in that the Zulus are advancing in force from the left front of the camp," whereupon Lord Chelmsford sent Captain Symonds and a naval officer to the top of a hill, with a telescope, from which they could see the white tents; when, as they reported all quiet, no return was ordered. The men, however, were greatly excited, the orderly having told them, "The camp is being surrounded and attacked!" and to calm their fears, Lieutenant-Colonel Degacher said, "Don't let him chaff you, if it were true, we should all be marching back as hard as we could."

Alas, the report was true! And when Lieutenant-Colonel Harness, with four companies and some guns, retraced his steps, regardless of the general's orders, he was brought back

Brevet-Major Gosset, 54th Regiment and aide-de-camp, was present when a message arrived from Commandant Browne, Native Contingent. "For God's sake, come back with all your men! The camp is surrounded, and will be taken if not helped."

"I'll bet a hundred pounds to a brass farthing the camp is all right," said Gosset. And away he went to Lord Chelmsford, as Lieutenant-Colonel Harness and Major Black persisted in returning to their comrades' help

When they had covered a mile and a half on the way to Isandhlwana, the aide-de-camp overtook them with a command that there was no disobeying to halt, and proceed in the opposite direction. So, with heavy hearts, they turned their backs on the camp, where even then the death struggle was going on.

A little later, about two o'clock in the afternoon, Chelmsford set off for Isandhlwana himself with the Mounted Volunteers, and picked up the Mounted Infantry on the way, a message being received soon afterwards from Browne that "there was a large body of the enemy between him and the camp" But still they did not hurry themselves, and, being joined by Browne's battalion farther on, marched calmly and gently through the grassy land, the mounted men in front.

Then, about half-past three, when five miles or so from the slaughter-ground, Commandant Lonsdale dashed up on the spur, with appalling intelligence.

He had gone back on duty, and, arriving within ten yards of the tents, found them in the hands of the foe, who, dressed in the red jackets of the slain, fired on him, the Commandant escaping by the merest chance

Sending Gosset back instantly for the others, the general advanced, and waited three miles off until his weary infantry joined him, about ten minutes past six, having covered the last nine of a twenty-three mile march in less than two hours

After filling their water bottles at a small stream that wound through the low ground, Lord Chelmsford said—

"Men, whilst we were skirmishing in front, the Zulus have taken our camp. There are 10,000 in our rear and 20,000 in front We must win back our camp to-night, and cut our way back to Rorke's Drift to-morrow."

"All right, sir; we'll do it," was the reply, given with a cheer. And some twenty minutes later they were on the march again.

Had things been as bad as he thought, not one of them would have lived to see the brown torrent of the Buffalo.

It was growing dark, and there was no moon, but when half a mile from the silent camp they saw the outline of the hill against the sky, and halted, the guns opening with shrapnel, to which no reply was made, for there was no living soul to make it! The dead lay where they had fallen, the Zulus had gone; and, after Major Black, with the left half battalion, had occupied a large stone kopje, and cheered as a signal, the rest of the weary, anxious troops, and the timid native levies, who were more trouble than they were worth, stumbled over the corpses and broken débris, and lay down in line between the kopje and the high hill, on the way to the river, where they had several alarms, and saw the Natal border lit up here and there with blazing farmsteads, and another sight, which filled them with foreboding, a great flame bursting out from the spot where the Rorke's Drift post was thought to be, and where, though they did not know it, their comrades left to guard the stores and the ford were battling with three or four thousand Zulus

Meanwhile, on his arrival at the camp, Colonel Durnford, a brave and gallant officer, had detached a portion of the slender force, and proceeded with it for five or six miles up the valley in the direction of the enemy, then said to be retiring, when he reappeared it was before an enormous host, whose overwhelming flood he was striving valiantly, but in vain, to stem

Retiring, in good order at first, before a dense phalanx ten or twelve deep, with supports behind that, he found the rocket battery behind him broken up, and the few remaining men fighting for their lives, Major Russell, R A., commanding them, having been killed, and, collecting the fragments, he continued to fall back to a donga or stream half a mile in advance of the camp, where he made a stand.

About noon our guns, under Major Stuart Smith, were pounding the enemy, but in a short time all was over, and the major, disdaining to fly, remained to spike them, and was slain. The huge Zulu horn overlapped us, and, in the end, got round to the rear, and closed in on every side

Colonel Durnford, whose left arm had been rendered useless by an assegai wound in the elbow in 1873, was cool and collected through it all, laughing with his troopers, and even dismounting to rectify the jamming of their rifles, saying, "Fire away, my boys!" and sending for fresh ammunition, which never came.

After some time, when he had been watching intently, he suddenly ordered them back into camp, where in a few moments the Zulus, who had worked round behind the mountain, broke in and destroyed everything before them

Few of the men of the first battalion of the 24th had time to fix their bayonets before a surging mass of savages was upon them And there was no mistaking it, it was no longer a struggle for life, but a matter of dying with as much honour as possible.

Officers, bandsmen, Basutos, Natal Carbineers, Mounted Police, Buffalo Border Guard, privates of the two battalions of the 24th, a few gunners and engineers, fought and fell, the Zulus themselves telling us how came the countless assegai wounds in our men's backs. they were fighting face to the foe, when their rear was stormed, and that was how it happened!

Then it was that the old quartermaster, James Pullen, who had 'listed in the regiment as far back as '51, cried "Come on, my lads! Follow me, and let us turn their flank!" But neither he nor his twenty men lived to see the sunset.

Then it was that Lieutenants Pope and Godwin-Austen, with eyeglasses fixed and revolvers in hand, met their fate, as described by a Zulu induna.

One fell by a gunshot, but the other grazed the induna's neck on the left side with one bullet, the right side with another, and wounded his leg with a third before an assegai quivered in his breast.

He had almost wrenched it out, when the Zulu fell on him, and, with another assegai, finished the business

On the spot where Mr Pope fell there is an iron cross, the place having been marked by a sergeant with a meat scale

Of Captain Younghusband they tell a gallant story

A bandsman of the 24th who escaped, said he saw him making a desperate stand, with three men of his company he held a waggon, and held it as long as a cartridge lasted.

Their ammunition done, he shook hands with his comrades—an eternal farewell it was to be—and then tried to cut his way out.

A son of Sirayo supplied what are believed to be the final details, when questioned as to the scene at the waggons.

"A very brave man was killed near one of them," he said. "I don't know whether he was an officer or not, for when I saw him after he was killed his coat had been taken off him, but he had a red stripe on his trousers, and he had brown gaiters He was a very tall man, and as we were rushing over the camps, he jumped into an empty waggon with a gun, and kept on firing, first on one side and then on another, so that no one got near him We all saw him, and watched him, for he was high up on the waggon, and we all said what a brave man that was I think he was an officer. All those who tried to stab him were knocked over at once, or bayoneted He kept his ground for a very long time. Then someone shot him."

Then, too, occurred that stirring incident which has brought the affair of Isandhlwana within the scope of the present work—the heroic dash with the colour.

The Adjutant of the 1st Battalion was Lieutenant Teignmouth Melvill (frequently, but improperly, spelt with a final e), an old Harrovian and B A of Cambridge, who, having passed the entering examination for the Staff College, was under orders to return home to join that establishment when war broke out

He served through the Kaffir War, and on the advance into Zululand accompanied the 24th to that fatal camp from which he escaped alive only to fall covered with glory on the Natal bank of the Buffalo river.

An English review, in execrable taste, commented severely on his riding away from his regiment, but the facts of the case are these.

Seeing how things were going, Colonel Pulleine called to him, saying, "Melvill, as senior lieutenant, take the colour, and make the best of your way," and then, turning to the remnant of the battalion, after he had shaken hands with the lieutenant, "Men of the First Battalion 24th Regiment, we are here, and here we stand, to fight it out to the end."

Melvill, with the Queen's Colour cased, pushed his horse out of the press, and spurred for the river, across country, with a handful of fugitives, hotly pursued by the enemy

The way was full of holes and ridges, streams crossed it here and there, and boulders strewed it, it was rough going even at a walk, to gallop was to risk one's neck at every stride, but gallop they did, the handful growing smaller and smaller as the fleet-footed Zulus came up behind and stabbed them with their assegais, or dropped them off here and there by chance shots

Meanwhile, his brother officer, Lieutenant Nevill Josiah Aylmer Coghill, an old Haileybury boy, who had an injured knee, had been sleeping quietly in his tent when Lord Chelmsford left the camp, his part in the attack is not known, and never will be, but in the afternoon he was seen by Captain Young, well mounted and fighting desperately to break through the enemy

He reached the river, and swam his horse across, in spite of the force of the water which swirls and eddies among large rocks there, between high banks difficult to mount, but Lieutenant Melvill, who had plunged into the stream with him, was not so fortunate; and as Coghill scrambled his dripping charger up the Natal side he looked over his shoulder and saw his comrade, who had lost his horse, being washed down stream with the cumbersome oilskin-covered standard in his hand.

An officer of the Natal contingent, who had been badly kicked, was clinging to a rock in the middle, and as Melvill shouted to him to "lay hold," he grabbed at the pole and they were both whirled away to where a patch of still water reflected the afternoon sky, as the Zulus arrived in force on the other bank, and opened fire, especially on Melvill's scarlet patrol jacket

Coghill was comparatively safe, a few bounds and his horse would have carried him out of danger on the long road to Helpmakaar, but he turned round and went down to his comrade's aid, and to death!

Hardly had he splashed into the stream again when his last hope was taken from him, his horse plunged wildly, struck by a bullet, and floated away dead, and in spite of all their efforts, the colour which Melvill had struggled so hard to save, was wrenched by the merciless current, and whirled out of sight.

Exhausted and spent, the three men managed somehow to reach the Natal bank and had breasted a hundred yards of the hill, when Coghill, limping along with his strained knee, shouted, "Here they are after us."

Both he and the adjutant had revolvers, and they turned to face the enemy, firing at thirty paces and killing the two first

"I can go no farther," said Melvill, who was very much done up. "Nor I," said Coghill, and they went no farther.

Higginson, who tells the tale, being weaponless and maimed, made a last effort and got away. He could have done nothing had he stayed.

The history of the next few moments can never be penned; perhaps, years hence, some ancient Zulu —when the cattle are safely housed in the kraal, and the shadows of the African night have shrouded the dreary veldt—will tell his children how the white men died, perhaps there are none alive even now who know the story, for round a boulder some three hundred yards from the river they found a dozen black corpses in a circle, and within it the two heroes sleeping the sleep of death.

Did Melvill think of the young wife he was leaving; I wonder, far away in the Cornish home, and the little son he was never to see again?

Two months after there came another boy to the widow, who was not yet twenty-one

Coghill, had he but lived three days longer, would have reached his twenty-seventh year His comrade was ten years his senior

When the search party under Major Black rode out to the place, they recovered Coghill's ring and the adjutant's spurs, and Mr Harbour, of Lonsdale's Corps, picked up the battered colour in the stream

Farther down, two more of Lonsdale's men found the gilt lion and crown from the pole, and the colour case out of which the silken embroidered folds had been washed by the turbulent river

The London Gazette announced that the Cross of Honour would have been theirs, now a cross of granite marks their last resting-place, and as the wandering horseman draws rein beside that lonely grave, he reads the simple legend, "In memory of Lieutenant and Adjutant Teignmouth Melvill and Lieutenant J A. Coghill, 1st Battalion 24th Regiment, who died on this spot, 22nd January, 1879, to save the Queen's Colour of their Regiment," and on the other side, "For Queen and Country—Jesu, Mercy."

But of the rest, away yonder, when the last Martini had rung out, and the Zulu horn closed round them?

What did we find when the battle-ground was searched, and the dead hastily buried?

Eight hundred men, lying for the most part on their backs, with arms extended and their hands clenched. One had seven assegai stabs in him; another a bayonet jammed to the socket in his open mouth, Durnford's long moustaches still clung to his withered face; Scott was hardly decayed at all.

Colour Sergeant Wolf, of the 1st Battalion, lay with twenty of his men around him, farther to the right, a hundred and fifty, mostly of the 24th, had fallen there, shoulder to shoulder, in one spot a waggon hung almost on end, the horses still dangling in their harness, speared in many places, reminding one of that artillery team found by the divers in Sebastopol Harbour, with the skeleton of a driver held together by his uniform, one foot still in the stirrup-iron

There was Shepstone, shot dead; another, headless; Swift, who had died hard, battered with knobkerries; all—with a few exceptions, and those principally colonials—who had marched into the camp and stayed behind when Chelmsford left it, had fallen—and of the few who got away, most lay dotting the broken ground between that and the river.

Four men of the 2nd Battalion of the 24th alone escaped; and beside some were their sixty rounds of spent cartridges, proving the truth of the Zulus' words, "We could not make way against the soldiers, but suddenly they ceased to fire; then we came round them, and threw our assegais until we had killed them all"

The 1st Battalion lost 411, all told, the 2nd, 176—a roll of death, but also one of honour

In the private records of the 2nd Battalion, to which I owe some of the foregoing details, there is one touching little story which I have not met with elsewhere.

As is well known, the regiment had suffered terribly before the guns at Chillianwallah in 1849, and when at Helpmakaar, just before the passage of the Buffalo, the officers of the 1st Battalion invited those of the 2nd to dine with them, and crack their few remaining bottles of wine

It wanted only a few days to the thirtieth anniversary of that old Sikh battle, and Captain William Degacher and Lieutenant Porteous proposed as a toast, "That we may not get into such a mess, and have better luck this time," which was laughingly drunk by all present.

A few days more, and not one of those officers of the 1st who sat at table that night was alive, five of the 2nd having also fallen with them in the fray

Somewhere about the moment that Melvill and Coghill were fighting for their lives, Private Wassall, 80th Regiment, attached to the Mounted Infantry, rode down to the Buffalo, worn and weary, with the enemy at his heels, and when about to dash into the river saw a comrade, Private Westwood, drowning before his eyes

Leaping from the saddle, he tied his horse to the Zululand bank, and plunging in, swam out to his assistance and brought him back.

Already the fleet-footed savages had appeared on the high rocks; already they were pouring down with shouts of anticipated slaughter towards the panting horse below them, but Wassall, mounted under a dropping shower of bullets, and, supporting the exhausted man he had rescued, began to cross the wide stream doubly burdened—keeping his seat, and landing safely on the Natal side.

It was a great deed. a truly noble action, and well worthy to rank with the foregoing dramatic heroism, for the knowledge of his probable fate must have been present with him when he turned back to face the foe Honour, then, to Private Wassall, V.C., for unto him most certainly is it due!

To my mind there are few more melancholy spectacles than an old standard slowly falling to pieces, dusty and forlorn, in the interior of a cathedral. Inch by inch it crumbles away, the colours fade, the moth breeds in its folds; the shot-holes merge into yawning rents and soon nothing but the bare pole remains.

Often enough it hangs too high for one to read the glorious names of victory that emblazon it, or even the number of the regiment to which it belonged, yet men have died to protect it and have rallied at its waving Has England no museum where her old "red rags" could find a final home, secure from swift, inevitable decay?

CHAPTER XXVIII.

HOW THEY WON THEIR CROSSES AT RORKE'S DRIFT, ULUNDI, ETC.

CHARD, BROMHEAD, WILLIAMS, HOOK, JONES (W.), JONES (R.), ALLEN, HITCH, REYNOLDS, DALTON, SCHIESS.

SOME quarter of a mile or so from the ford of Rorke's Drift, and under the shadow of a conical hill named the Oscarberg, stood a Swedish mission-station, to which large stores of corn, biscuit, and tinned meat had been conveyed from Helpmakaar, a place twelve miles farther into Natal.

The post—used as commissariat depôt and base hospital, and held by B Company, 2nd Battalion 24th Regiment, under the late Lieutenant Gonville Bromhead—consisted of a single-storey dwelling, fronted by a verandah; another building, originally the church, two stone cattle-kraals, and a small cook-house, the whole standing on a rocky platform, and surrounded by a straggling orchard, some black poplars, aspens, and gum-trees, a mealie—or native corn—field, and patches of thick scrub, facing a wild, rolling plain, through which the river wound, hidden by undulations, on its rapid course to the sea.

Tents were standing behind the storehouse; the outspanned waggons from Helpmakaar were disgorging their heavy loads, and the scene was a bright and busy one on that 22nd January, while their comrades were fighting the death fight at Isandhlwana.

Down at the Drift, where the army had crossed on the 11th, Lieutenant Chard, R.E., was engaged with a few men among the ponts, when, shortly after 3 p.m., two horsemen galloped on to the opposite bank and shouted loudly to be ferried across.

The clumsy pontoon was pulled over the river, the engineer officer learned the terrible news of the disaster that had befallen our camp, and that the Zulus were coming on for the Drift, and once on the Natal side, the two horsemen—Lieutenant Adendorff, without coat or hat, his revolver strapped to his arm, and a carbineer, also of Lonsdale's corps—dashed round the mountain and drew up in the centre of the mission-station, where Private Henry Hook was making tea for the hospital patients, in his shirt-sleeves.

After a few breathless words, the carbineer went off at a gallop for Helpmakaar, to warn them there while later the lieutenant who remained to assist the defence rode out along the hillside to watch for the enemy.

Hook ran to the camp some yards away, and the little garrison fell in, Lieutenant Bromhead sending down to the Drift for Chard, who commanded the post in the absence of Major Spalding, the two rows of tents being hastily struck by pulling up the centre poles.

At first it was thought to inspan, pack the waggons, and retreat for Helpmakaar, twelve long miles off, with a stiff rise at the end of the journey, but, happily, that idea was abandoned—thanks to the advice, I believe, of Assistant Commissary Dalton—and the fortification of the place was instantly commenced.

While anxious eyes were strained on the hillside in the direction of Isandhlwana, hands were busy among the mealie-bags, and a long wall four feet high was built from the corner of the kraal to the further angle of the hospital.

The hospital was the living house of the mission, and contained a number of small rooms, its ends being of stone, the outer walls of brick and the partition walls of sun-dried clay, while both it and the other building, which was church, barn, store, and stable, all in one, were roofed with thatch and had originally been whitewashed

It is necessary to state further that while some of the rooms of the dwelling-house communicated with each other, others were entered by a door from the outside only, and had no connection with the rest, notably two that opened on to the verandah, of which we shall have more to say.

The distance between the buildings was about thirty yards, and two waggons, once intended to carry the sick, were utilised to help in a barricade, also four feet high, across the space, a water-cart being dragged into the centre of the square

When the alarm first reached the post there were forty-five men in the hospital, but, as many were not severe cases, they pluckily took their rifles and their places among the defenders, leaving only twenty-three unable to fight, to guard whom six men were told off

There were present at that time, besides B Company, about a hundred of Durnford's Horse, who had bolted from Isandhlwana, and some of the Natal Native Contingent; but the bulk of these "brave fellows" cleared off when the enemy appeared, our men sending some balls whistling after them, one killing a European non-com. of the Contingent, whose body lay just outside the wall all through the action

Captain Stevenson, of the Contingent, also bolted, but a few remained to throw in their lot with the others, notably Sergeant Duncan Campbell Francis Moody, who has since published a very valuable history of our wars in South Africa, and whose rifle did good service behind the mealie-bags

The Rev. Otto Witt and a man in spectacles went up the hill and remained there for some time, but when the Zulus came in sight they mounted and rode away, Witt afterwards bringing a claim against the British Government for the destruction of his mission station, which he had not the courage to help defend. A Natal paper tells us that he was convicted subsequently for pointing a loaded gun at a Kaffir woman who refused to do his family washing

The windows of the hospital had hardly been barricaded by blankets and mattresses, and much still remained to be done to the walls and barriers, when the scouts came in with the news that the enemy were upon us, and round the end of the mountain there, about half-past four on a dull afternoon, twenty black figures appeared, followed by many more, who, led by two fat mounted chiefs, began an attack on the wall between the two buildings, and were received with a heavy fire, half of them swerving round the back of the hospital and trying to rush the bags in front of it.

Private Dunbar picked off one of the chiefs and eight men by as many consecutive shots—but taking possession of a rocky ledge on the hillside above us, they poured in a rattling hail of bullets on our rear, and the post was soon surrounded on all sides.

Luckily the Zulus fire high, but when they hit the wound is a terrible one, as their bullets are large, and, being roughly cast, have a jagged projection at one side.

There was no shouting among us, the officers simply went round with a "Do your best, men!" and everyone there did his best without flinching.

Few recent conflicts have had a more truly British aspect, for the 24th were dressed in thin red jumpers, the regulation blue trousers, and helmets which had once been white, but were then soiled by service, and minus spike and chin chain.

A grey horse, which among others stood tethered to a tree near the hospital, was soon shot, and there were also fowls there, one hen having a brood of little chicks which were nestling under her after it was all over.

But they had little time to notice these things, for there were less than a hundred and fifty behind those flimsy walls, and outside, in the scrub and the trampled garden, and among the rocks and caves, between three and four thousand Zulus to be kept at bay.

A whisper went round among the Warwickshire men, "Poor old 'King' Cole is killed" A ball had gone clean through his head and struck another man on the nose at the front wall, as the enemy swarmed along it and stabbed furiously with their "bangwans," or thrusting assegais, or tried to wrench the bayonets from the Martinis, succeeding even in a few cases, only to be shot for their pains.

A hospital patient named Schiess, of the 3rd Natal, a short, fair man and a Swiss by birth, had his broad-leaved hat blown off by a ball, and springing on to the sacks, he bayoneted the Zulu, jumped back and shot another, and leaped on to the wall again and bayoneted a third, although he had been struck in the instep before that, and refused to leave his post.

It was hand to hand at the front wall, the air rent with cries of "Usutu," and more than one charge with the "cold steel" did Lieutenant Bromhead lead to save the hospital; but fearing that the enclosure was too large for the tiny garrison to hold, an inner line of defence had been formed of biscuit boxes, two boxes high, from the front angle of the store-house to the mealie-wall, and within it a huge pyramid of sacks was afterwards built up to serve as a last resource.

Behind the inner rampart the men retired, through a gap left for that purpose in the centre, about half-past six, and the wounded occupants of the hospital building had to be entrusted to the exertions of the handful who defended them

Not long after the main body were concentrated in the inner square the enemy fired the thatch of the hospital, and it was that flame which the column away at Isandhlwana saw bursting out into the night.

In a small room at the back far end stood the two Williams, Joseph and John, with two wounded men under their charge

From a little window Joseph Williams blazed steadily away, and they found fourteen dead Zulus in his line of fire next day; but he, poor fellow, met his end before long, for their ammunition done, they had to keep the door with their bayonets, and the enemy, making a sudden rush, dragged Joseph Williams out by the hands and put him to death in sight of the three remaining, who managed to get through a hole in the wall into another room, where they found Henry Hook.

Hook, a short, sturdy Gloucestershire man, with a fair moustache, who had served five years in the Royal Monmouth Militia before joining the 24th, had meanwhile been having his hands full

We left him running to camp in his shirt sleeves, but he had since got into his red jumper, and occupied a small room at the front far corner of the building, in company with "King" Cole, who, after bolting an enormous quantity of tea and grub generally, took himself off to the mealie wall, where he was probably the first man killed, as we have already described

Left to himself, Hook turned his attention to a loophole, through which he saw the Zulus in great force, taking advantage of the ant-hills and bush as they approached.

He was a good shot, and was fortunate in having a splendid Martini, a very light weapon, then numbered 152, and with it he picked off several savages, opening at 600 yards.

At 400 yards he hit a Zulu somewhere about the middle of the body as he ran from cover to cover, and, stopped short in his earthly career, the savage turned a complete somersault and then lay still.

At 300 yards he noticed another popping up from an ant-hill every now and then to fire, and after sending a ball just above his head, Hook saw his second bullet spurt up the sand ten yards short, so, sighting a little fuller, he waited for the black spot to show above the ant-heap again, and next morning found the Zulu there, shot through the skull.

Soon, however, the swarm closed round the devoted building, and a fierce crackling overhead told that the thatch was burning; driven out by the heat, he was obliged to leave a wounded man to his fate, and his charred remains were seen there next day, he was a tall private of the 24th, who had broken his leg by falling from a waggon

In the other room were several patients, and he was soon joined by John Williams, a sandy man, of two years' service, who proceeded to smash a hole through the clay wall into the next room and get the patients out.

While he was doing so the door burst in, and in a twinkling Hook was at one side of it, lunging with his bayonet and slipping a cartridge into the block when he could manage it

It was impossible in the heat of the moment to see everything, but he owned to four or five dead Zulus in the doorway, and several more just outside.

An assegai pierced his helmet, grazing the parting in his hair, and several more stuck in the wall at the end of the room behind him, one savage clutched the muzzle of the rifle, and he was fortunately able to press in a cartridge and pull the trigger before another rush was made, and the Zulu sank down, dead, his blood trickling over the pile already heaped up there, but so wary was the private's grey eye, so strong the arm that plied the reddened steel, that seven out of the eight wounded were safely through the hole and into the third room, and one only remained, a tall man like the other, and also suffering from a broken leg.

"For God's sake, don't leave me," he wailed, as Hook, panting from his work, slid backwards into the opening, and, grasping him by the collar of his overcoat, the brave fellow pulled him after him not a second too soon, and broke his leg again as he did so!

Several touching things happened in their progress through four apartments in succession: in one, a wounded Kaffir lay with a shattered thigh, who began to untie the splints when he found himself about to be abandoned, Hook could not save him, and afterwards heard the Zulus talking to him from the next room before they killed him.

Here let me remark that all the wounded in hospital were dressed. There is no truth in the pictures we have seen of stalwart privates gently leading out suffering comrades with thin bare legs and well-starched nightshirts!

While Hook and his comrade were struggling with their helpless burdens, pausing every now and then to keep a door, a window, or a hole in a partition with ball and bayonet, two others were battling bravely at the back of the burning house—William Jones, a dark-complexioned man, with twenty years' service, and a light-complexioned namesake, Robert Jones, who only counted some three or four years with the colours.

When Robert Jones reached the front of the hospital with a wounded volunteer named Mayer, and joined the other, he found a crowd of Zulus there breaking in, and crying, "They are on top of us," the two crossed bayonets at the door, and piled up the dead as fast as they came on.

Robert was wounded three times by assegais, twice in the right side, and once in the left, and, after fighting desperately for some time, unaware that any more remained within the walls, they got away, and crossed the open space between the buildings under a heavy fire, to join in the defence of the square, the roof falling in with a crash as Robert Jones left the hospital.

Volley after volley rolled across the veldt, by the glare of the blazing roof our men directed their fire, and, above some steps leading to a granary, Private Hitch and Corporal Allen kept their post, and by their well-directed aim, cleared the ground to some extent for the patients to cross

One by one the wounded had scrambled out of the end of the dwelling-house, dropped several feet, all maimed and shattered as they were, and while some ran, others crawled painfully over the intervening space, exposed to the bullets of the yelling enemy

One, Trooper Hunter, Natal Mounted Police, a very tall young fellow, was killed as he ran, some were seized by the Zulus and speared there and then, but others, more fortunate, were helped in by the men behind the biscuit boxes, while one or two managed to get away and lie concealed till morning, among them Gunner Howard, R A., who hid himself in the grass, where four dead horses and a pig afforded him a shelter.

Several pigs ran wildly about during the night, and there was pork enough for the men afterwards, as one of them has told me

As the official report says, the odds were nearly thirty to one, but not a man flinched as the night wore on, and the Zulus, after drawing off at intervals, and dancing until the earth seemed to tremble, renewed their ugly rushes from time to time.

Conspicuous for their exertions and the fearless way in which they exposed themselves were Assistant-Commissaries Dalton, Dunne, and Byrne, the last of whom met his death in a tragic manner.

Corporal Scammell, N N. Contingent, was shot through the shoulder and back, and, crawling a short distance, handed up his cartridges to Lieutenant Chard

"I should like a drink of water," said the corporal, through his clenched teeth, and Mr Byrne, who had been using Dalton's rifle after that gentleman was wounded, got him some, and was holding it to his lips, when a ball struck him in the head and he fell lifeless

It is hard to pick out individuals here and there, when every man was a hero, but the thin, spare form of Parson Smith, his red beard shining in the wavering light, was seen and well remembered afterwards busy with the water-bottle, helping the surgeon, ministering to the last moments of more than one who fell, and somehow escaping the V C by a miracle

The mountain side was tinged with the lurid glare, smoke rose in a heavy cloud, and the crackling sparks would have formed a magnificent display, but for the stern reality of that struggle in front of the store-house

Dalton, hit through the right shoulder, still assisted to direct the fire on each side of him, as did Chard and Bromhead, cool and collected, though perhaps realising better than any there the true hazard of their position, had the Zulus been as good shots as they were spearsmen, Rorke's Drift would have been another Isandhlwana

Hitch, badly wounded, and Corporal Allen, also hit, when no longer able to use their rifles, braved the danger all night long and served out cartridges to those at the barricades; but still Hook and Williams and several of the wounded were in that blazing charnel-house out of reach of aid.

As the gallant hospital-cook (who, by the way, had taken that historic tea to the patients ten minutes before the attack began) was hauling his broken-legged man along the floor, an assegai pierced the overcoat, between Hook's hand and the man's neck, and another that stuck in the coat-tail dangled between his legs all the time—two narrow shaves for one or other of them.

At last Williams, by dint of pushing and lifting, got his men out through the window into the open air, and they made the best of their way for the biscuit tins, Hook still sticking to his charge, who must have been suffering untold agonies, until he helped him into the inner line of defence, and quietly took his place there at a spot where three others had just before been shot.

Again and again did No. 152 dart out its tongue of flame; cartridge after cartridge flew back, to be replaced by others, the ground was littered with brown ammunition paper among their feet, and beneath him, shot through the thick part of the neck, lay a soldier in great pain, who kept entreating him piteously the whole night through to turn him first this way and then that, adding to the horror of it all by his screams and cries.

Presently the Zulus were seen mustering inside our first line for a final, overwhelming rush. The fire had burnt itself out by ten o'clock or so, there had been short pauses, and more terrific stampings; and charge after charge had been driven back by the splendid volleying of our men, whose green cuffs were black with smoke and sweat, and who were getting exhausted by the protracted struggle.

Brave as the Zulus were, our still bold front impressed them; the rush resolved itself into more desultory firing, which, to the inexpressible relief of every man there, gradually died away about four o'clock, and, as morning dawned slowly, the defeated impis were out of sight round the south-west corner of the hill.

A patrol went out, and collected some 400 assegais and about 100 guns and rifles, and men had time to look around at the slaughter.

Red coats dotted the space, but they were few in comparison with the black corpses lying among their shields and spears beyond the mealie-bags.

Between the store-house and the smoking end of the hospital building a few of the unhappy wounded lay where they had been shot in that last sad crawl for life, and one man of ours, named Horrigan, still knelt at the barrier of sacks, his rifle pointed at the plain outside.

Hook went up to him and took his helmet off, his brains falling down over his face—he was dead at his post.

Even then the alarm was not over, for when they were removing the thatch from the roof of the store-house another large body of Zulus appeared to the south-west again, and a friendly Kaffir was sent to Helpmakaar for assistance; but about an hour later the column under Lord Chelmsford came in sight, greeted by a wild waving of hats and helmets, and the foe retired.

We had lost fifteen killed outright, and two of the twelve wounded died afterwards, but about 350 of the enemy lay round the post, and when they buried them some were not quite dead

Chard and Bromhead, Surgeon Reynolds, the two Joneses, Williams, Hook, Hitch, and Allen were granted the Victoria Cross, the brave Schiess and Assistant-Commissary Dalton being gazetted five months afterwards.

Chard received his decoration at Fort Elizabeth; Jones and Bromhead theirs at Utrecht, Williams at Gibraltar, and Private Hook almost on the ground where he had won it.

At Fort Melvill, by the river, there was a parade of the Queen's Bays, some companies of the 24th, and troops of Dutch and Basutos, on the 3rd of August, and there, after a few stirring words and a hearty handshake, Sir Garnet Wolseley pinned the Cross on the broad breast of our gallant hospital-cook amid tremendous cheering.

One little item is worthy of record. Hook was a teetotaler at the time, but when the affair at the post was over, and the grog was served out, he went up to the sergeant, who, surprised to see him, said, "What! you here!"

"Well, I feel I want something after that," replied the brave fellow; and he had it, too—good measure, brimming over, returning to his temperate habits for long enough to come.

In the reading-room of the British Museum you may see him every day in his smart uniform; stout and stolid, his face full of bonhomie, and, hanging side by side with the South African War medal, that little bronze bauble to tell you what he has done!

On the same day that Isandhlwana was fought, the 1st Column, under Colonel Pearson, inflicted a crushing defeat on the Zulus at Ingangane, near Ekowe; but on the 12th of March a shameful disaster befell our men on the Intombi river, where a British officer left his men to themselves while he rode away, it was said, for help, Lord Chelmsford signifying pretty plainly his view of the case by his subsequent remarks on the officer's acquittal by court-martial

It led, however, to another V C. being granted; for Sergeant Booth rallied his men, fought the enemy for three miles of anxious retreat, checked their furious rushes, and got off without losing a single private.

After a long wait for reinforcements, the war proceeded with varying results, sometimes we got into a hole, at others we upheld our ancient name and fame.

Many fine officers fell among the kloofs of that difficult country, and the well-known Redvers Buller won the V C. for magnificent gallantry and total disregard of self, after the affair at the Inhlobane Mountain

Three lives did he snatch from the assegais of the enemy: first Captain D'Arcy, who, dismounted, was almost in their hands, then Lieutenant Everitt, whom he carried on his horse out of danger; and lastly, a trooper of the Frontier Light Horse, whose mount could go no farther.

Lieutenant Browne, 1st Battalion 24th, and Major Leet, of the 13th Regiment, were bracketed with him for similar bravery, and the war went on. The painful story of the Prince Imperial came as another shock to the people at home; Evelyn Wood proved himself as brilliant in command of his "flying column" as he had done as a subaltern in India, and as a middy before that in the Crimea; but at last things approached a successful climax, and a powerful square, accompanied by cavalry and guns, drew near to Cetewayo's kraals at Ulundi.

Many Crosses had been gained before that, but did I stop to narrate them in detail I should require another volume; and consequently I must close the Zulu campaign with the mention of a dashing thing which happened before Ulundi, when Lord William Beresford, 9th Lancers, had gone into the long grass with his scouts of the Irregular Horse, and had to fall back before a sudden fire from a Zulu ambush.

Two men were killed outright, but a third lay stunned; and as Beresford looked over his shoulder —the last to retire, as he was ever the first to encounter risk in every form—he saw the wounded non-com. sitting up, dazed and helpless, at the mercy of the savage enemy, who came pouring out of a water-course towards him.

Turning his horse—an active Irish chestnut, I believe—the lancer galloped back to him, and, flinging out of his saddle, told him to mount.

The man, as gallant as his preserver, demurred; why should they both be slain? one might be saved —but the Zulus were close upon them.

Clenching his fist, the impetuous Irishman swore a great oath, and roared, "If you don't get up, I'll punch your head for you!" and following up his words, lifted him on to the horse and mounted in front of him.

To that horse's strength and cunning they both owed their lives, and to a splendid fellow—Sergeant

O'Toole—who rode out to them and shot Zulu after Zulu with his revolver as they came up, and then helped his countryman to support Fitzmaurice, who was weak and reeling.

I hope I am right, and I think I am, in saying that horse was Irish, too; it would complete as gallant an Hibernian quartette as has ever been handed down to fame and posterity!

Lord "Bill" Beresford had not long before slain a fine Zulu induna with his sword, in a short but sharp personal encounter, running him through shield and all, straight to the heart. We have already seen another of his countless deeds of derring-do, in our chapter on the Afghan War, while, to his further credit be it written, he is reported, on good authority, to have said that he could not in honour receive the V.C for that afternoon's work at Ulundi unless Sergeant O'Toole received it as well. And in the end they both got it.

CHAPTER XXIX.

MAJUBA HILL.

FARMER

IT has been my misfortune to touch upon more than one British defeat in this book, and there yet remains another to be briefly described: the baffled attempt of General Colley to surprise the Boer camp at Laing's Neck, and the almost total annihilation of the 600 men under his command.

To criticise the action of one who has done his duty to the utmost of his ability and died in the doing of it, always seems to me to be very much after the principle of "kicking a man when he's down," and I have endeavoured to refrain from such a course.

On a dark night—Saturday, February 26, 1881—Sir George Colley, a veteran of the Cape Frontier wars, China, and Ashantee, marched silently from our camp at Mount Prospect, with men of the 58th, 60th, 92nd Highlanders, and Naval Brigade, carrying three days' provision, filled water-bottles, and eighty rounds of ball cartridge; and, led by a trusty guide, reached the foot of the hill at daybreak, worn by a tramp of six hours in making a long detour over loose and stony ground.

Once on the top—after leaving 200 men to keep up the communication on a commanding point—they could look down into the Boer entrenchments that stretched away to the Buffalo river, and from an elevation of 2,500 feet, could see our own camp, four miles off as the crow flies.

For an hour the troops lay down to rest, while some were helping the sailors haul up the Gatling gun, and soon after sunrise the enemy's mounted vedettes trotted out towards them, all unconscious of their presence up on the mountain top.

Then the pickets fired, and in an instant the Boers' laager was in an uproar, making preparations for a retreat; but the tumult suddenly ceased, and a large body advanced instead to attack us, opening on our position somewhere about seven a m.

Trained to use the rifle as only those who live in constant contact with raiding Kaffirs and wild beasts can, they were foes to be feared as much as the trappers of the American War had been, but our men kept under cover, and only five were hit until eleven o'clock.

At first we reserved our fire, the Highlanders picking off a few now and then, but after a lull they began again with great fury, and, making a rush, drove in our front line on to the main position, in an oblong basin about 200 yards long by 50 yards across.

Our men hurled them back each time with the bayonet, but the shots told, and among others, Commander Romilly was hit by a long-distance ball as he stood by General Colley; then, having mustered strongly at the edge of the slope, the hardy frontiersmen forced a weak spot in our line, and in a moment were pouring into the basin into the middle of us.

To re-form was impossible, and the fire became murderous at a few yards' range; in vain officers shouted, "Rally on your right," for, though they did rally, and clustered about the general, the bullets mowed them down by dozens, and there was no shelter for the wounded.

"Don't forget your bayonets, 92nd," cried Major Frazer; Colonel Stewart shouted to the 58th, and Captain Macgregor to the Bluejackets, but after a stand of ten minutes in a semicircle, the ammunition gave out, and they were practically powerless.

Barely a score held our rear, and a like number the front of the plateau; forty men holding the true front charged with their bayonets and were all shot, save three or four, before they reached striking distance; we were done for, and many broke and fled to the rear down a drop of thirty feet, the Boers still firing on them.

Sir George Colley remained calm and collected; he knew the game was up, and disdained to ask for quarter from a foe who were firing on the wounded. Some say he died by his own hand—surely there was death enough there, quick and inevitable, without that!

Then it happened that Lance-Corporal Farmer, of the Hospital Corps, tried to protect his men by a means ever respected by all but savages.

He was busily engaged with another man, assisting Sir Arthur Landon, A.M.D., to dress the wounded, and when the Boers made their rush was in the act of bandaging a soldier. His comrade, the surgeon, and the man he was helping were all three hit at the same moment, and springing to his feet, Farmer flourished the bandage in the air, naturally supposing that the enemy would respect the fallen; but he was mistaken, and with a ball through the right wrist his arm fell powerless at his side.

"I've got another one," he said, and up went the flag again, until another cowardly ball dealt out the same fate to it also, the second bullet passing through his left elbow joint.

After that he could do no more, and being in great agony, the surgeon, himself mortally wounded injected morphia.

At the present time Farmer holds a situation in Bond Street, and still suffers from the effects of his heroism, the left arm being very much wasted, and the action of the other hand impeded.

Our fellows had died hard, for against three officers and eighty-two men or thereabouts slain, there were 150 Boers lying in the hollow and among the rocks outside; but we lost many prisoners, and a host of wounded, and men shake their heads to-day when they speak of Majuba Hill.

CHAPTER XXX.

IN THE DESERT SAND.

W. M. M. EDWARDS, CORBETT, WILSON, MARLING, MARSHALL, T. EDWARDS, SMITH.

THE Egyptian War of 1882, against Arabi Pasha, striking as it was with its bombardments, its night rides, and the battle of Tel-el-Kebir, only produced three incidents deemed worthy of the Victoria Cross—one at Alexandria, where a sailor won it as described in a previous page; another at Kafrdour, when Private Corbett, 60th Rifles, stuck to his wounded officer, and would not leave him; and the third on the long entrenchments which we stormed and carried at Tel-el-Kebir, when the Highlanders and the Royal Irish disputed the honour of being "first in," and will continue to dispute it until the end of all things, and where Captain Edwards, of the old 74th, sprang almost alone into a battery and slew the officer there

There must have been many a gallant deed performed, nevertheless, in the land of the Pharaohs which never came to light, before the cowardly Egyptian troops were sent flying, and their brave leader, who was worthy of a better following, found an exile in Ceylon.

The Soudan campaign, so fierce and so deadly, and the Nile Expedition, brought five heroes to the front: a gallant officer of the King's Royal Rifles, who is now Captain Marling, 18th Hussars, and who gave up his horse at a critical moment to save a wounded private; a young quartermaster of the "Dumpies" who rescued his badly injured commanding officer at El-Teb; Captain Wilson, R.N., who at the same engagement defended his guns heroically, and saved many men, though armed at one time with nothing but the hilt of a broken sword; Gunner Smith, who protected his officer in the square at Abu Klea; and Thomas Edwards, a private of the 42nd, whose pluck we are able to chronicle more fully from his own account.

"EDWARDS LOADED AND SHOT THE SOUDANEE" (p. 265).

Private Edwards was on transport duty at the battle of Tamai, in charge of two mules loaded with Gatling ammunition for the left half battery; and when at No. 4 gun, with Lieutenant Almack and a bluejacket, the "Fuzzy Wuzzies" made a rush and surrounded them.

Wearing the well-known kilt of the brave "Black Watch," with their familiar red hackle in his pith helmet, he saw the sailor fall under the gun with a spear in his stomach, and at the same moment two fierce Soudanese came at him, and were promptly spitted on his bayonet.

Lieutenant Almack, sword and revolver in hand, charged another savage, and ran him through, but ere he could disengage, a tremendous cut nearly severed his right arm, and he reeled up against the gun.

Edwards loaded and shot the Soudanee, but before he could interpose to save him, three more leaped upon the helpless naval officer and speared him, his revolver dangling empty from the lanyard that fastened it to his wrist.

Edwards received a wound on the back of his right hand when lunging at a native, but one man against a score could do little, and seeing that

Mr. Almack's case was hopeless, he retired with his mules, loading and firing repeatedly on the enemy to keep them back.

He did what he could, and was fortunate in being able to save the ammunition, owing his life entirely to a cool head and a fine nerve, as never in any war had British troops a more desperate and fearless enemy to contend with than in the parched-up, thirsty, horrible Soudan.

The history of our disastrous attempt to relieve Gordon has been told so often that it is well-nigh threadbare now; you all know the glories and the losses of those desert columns, marching under enormous difficulties, attacked at every hand, sometimes proceeding in square with the worn-out camels inside, defending the rough zeribas against the fanatical rush of the Mahdi's wild troops; exposed to heat by day, and bitter cold at dawn; carrying their wounded, losing officers, correspondents, and rank and file innumerable, arriving too late, to find that a great man had already met his doom in the land of the rushing Nile and the prickly mimosa.

Abu Klea, Gubat, Mettemmah, and a dozen other names, recall memories of a very mingled nature, and the rosy morning breaking over the desert sand is streaked with a crimson glow that brings back the memory of Burnaby, Slade, Herbert Stewart, Earle Hicks, Baker, and many more, whose suns set for ever on those desolate plains.

CHAPTER XXXI.

SURGEON CRIMMIN'S CROSS—AND THE HERO OF MANIPUR.

CRIMMIN, GRANT.

SERVICE in Burma was rough work. Dense jungle and plantations of palm-trees afforded splendid shelter for the enemy, and had to be forced by our men; swamps, waist deep, spread out in places, and what with jingal balls, and whizzing dahs, or spears, with much beating of gongs, and shouting of "La hé, la hé, Kwaymaja!"—which, being interpreted, means, "Come on, sons of dogs!"—the sharp little campaigns were arduous and difficult, in spite of the vision of golden pagodas and ruby mines.

It chanced that in an action near Lwekaw, in the Eastern Karenni, when Lieutenant Tighe, 27th Bombay Infantry, charged with four men into a body of fierce Karens, who were moving off from the Karen left flank, two of his companions rolled over wounded and lay in the middle of the enemy.

Out went Surgeon Crimmin, attached to the Mounted Infantry, and Tighe presently saw him kneeling beside one of the men, the enemy firing at him as he dressed his wound.

A Sepoy galloped up to the doctor, and he joined the fighting line, which was soon clearing the Karens out of the bamboo patches; near one of which the Lieutenant again saw Surgeon Crimmin helping a wounded soldier, under fire.

While busy with lint and bandage, the skirmish going on all around, mingling with shots and yells and the crashing of our fellows through the tall canes, several of the enemy sprang out upon him, expecting to find an easy prey.

Jumping up, he ran his sword through one of them and engaged boldly with another, the wounded man watching the contest with eager eyes—it meant so much to him, poor fellow!

Whether or no the doctor killed his second man, has not come down to us, but his determined attack, and a shot from the mounted Sepoy which dropped another, struck fear into the hearts of the Karens, and turning tail, they plunged into the dense brake, and the wounded man was saved.

The medical officers have made perhaps more advance since the beginning of this century than those of any branch of the service.

In Wellington's time our men were terribly butchered by the rough-and-ready surgery practised in the field; nowadays, the ambulance goes to the front with many much-needed comforts; and the doctors themselves risk their lives in a way that calls forth the highest admiration for humanity itself and that most noble of all the humane professions.

Yet their social status in the army is not what it ought to be, and the army surgeon still holds a species of hybrid position, an officer, yet not an officer, having much to put up with in more ways than one—a state of things demanding redress.

Some three hundred miles as the crow flies, east of Calcutta, is the town of Manipur, situated almost in the centre of the little-known tract of the same name, which has Assam lying to the north, and Upper Burma for its southern neighbour.

Few people ever heard of its existence until the Spring of 1891; to-day it is remembered for a very brilliant feat which placed the Victoria Cross on the breast of Lieutenant (now Major) Charles James William Grant, Indian Staff Corps, who, joining the army in 1882, had served in the Burma expedition three years later, and wore the medal and clasp.

The Maharajah of Manipur, Soor Chandra Singh, was a coward, and he and his seven brothers were divided into two factions, four a side, always quarrelling in the most unfraternal manner.

In vain the British Political agent there, the unfortunate Frank St. Clair Grimwood, tried to mend matters The Maharajah, after being fired upon by his brother, the Senaputty, and his faction, fled to the Residency, and abdicated in favour of yet another brother, the Jubraj.

Everything was changed. Soor Chandra Singh departed for Calcutta, carrying his three friendly relations with him; the other four taking up the reins of government which they appear to have handled much better than the Maharajah

It is rather complicated, but, to understand how things stood, all the remaining brothers seem to have "gone up one," the Jubraj becoming Regent in place of the abdicated monarch, and the Senaputty, with whom the late Maharajah had been most "at outs," becoming Jubraj, and so on.

Mr. Grimwood and his clever wife, to whose admirable pen we owe almost all our information about Manipur, continued to live in perfect harmony with the new ruler, and were unconscious that a storm was brewing; but the voluntary exile began to regret the throne from which he had fled in abject cowardice, and to long for the rose-scented groves and gardens, where the heliotrope and a host of orchids grow in rich profusion, and mighty deodars cast a sombre shade across the valleys.

It is a wild land—a country of hill and gorge, with tiger-haunted jungles, and lakes on which the fowl cluster in great numbers.

The ex-Maharajah approached the Indian Government on the subject, and made much complaint of his brother the Jubraj (late Senaputty), with the result that Mr. Quinton, Chief Commissioner, wired to say he was coming to Manipur, without letting the Grimwoods know for what purpose.

When he came, it was to confirm the Regent on the throne, and to arrest the late Senaputty—which unpleasant task was to be performed by Mr. Grimwood himself.

A durbar was held, with all the red druggeting and solemn state possible in that remote quarter of the globe, but the Senaputty, or Jubraj, as he then was called, refused to appear, on the plea of sickness, which was really well founded.

Various means were tried to secure him, which, in the end, led to a Manipuri rising, and a terrible massacre; Grimwood and many more being slain, and the rest obliged to fly.

Ignorant of her husband's fate, slightly wounded, and very heartbroken, Mrs. Grimwood tramped along with the slender sepoy escort, in thin patent-leather slippers, a white silk blouse, and a blue serge skirt, by mountain paths and ways where in the old happy times she and that handsome fellow who was lying dead at the palace behind them had ridden so often together.

Gently had she tended the wounded in the cellar of their ruined home under fire, mourning over the fate of poor young Brackenbury, who a few evenings before had been singing comic songs to his banjo, with the crickets chirping in chorus and the scent of roses everywhere.

After tremendous exertions and great risk they reached security at last, and the brave lady was ultimately awarded the Royal Red Cross, many people still thinking that another Cross should have been hers, while the news of the affair drifted down to the pretty little Burman station of Tummu, where a certain Lieutenant Grant was lying with his men of the 2nd Burma Battalion Punjaub Infantry.

Nothing was said of any escape, and after wiring the intelligence all over Burma, Mr. Grant applied for leave to go up and rescue Mrs. Grimwood and the others, receiving the requisite permit at eleven at night.

At five next morning, 28th of March, 1891, a little column left the village and pagodas of Tummu behind it, and plunged into the teak forests on its way up to the front—fifty of the Punjaub Infantry, each with 160 rounds of ball cartridge; thirty Goorkhas, with sixty rounds apiece, and three elephants; Mr. Grant in command, on an old Burmese steeplechaser named "Clinker."

Winding up among the lofty mountains, they fell in at last with the Manipuris, and drove 150 of them out of one hill entrenchment, and 200 more from Pakel, at the foot of the hills.

There he learned further particulars of the disaster at Manipur; that all had either been killed or had escaped, and that Mrs. Grimwood was in Assam.

Pushing on, the only white man in his party, he reached Thobal on the evening of the 31st, and found that a strong resistance would be made there.

A bridge was burning over the river, and, galloping up to see whether it would be practicable, he was fired on from the mud walls across the water, returning to his men at full speed, firing his revolver at the Manipuris as he rode.

After some rattling volleys, the column rushed the river, fixing bayonets in mid-stream, and helping Grant, who was up to his neck, to get across; the enemy bolting as the Goorkhas and Punjaub Infantry emerged, dripping and eager, to slaughter eight in the trenches and send the rest flying.

Suddenly the lieutenant halted, for before him stretched the Manipur army, more than a mile in length; most of them entirely in white, but some couple of hundred in scarlet jackets, with Martini rifles, the rest having an odd mixture of Sniders, Enfields, and Tower muskets, but still a formidable force of eight hundred lithe natives, to face Grant's tiny handful, isolated up there away from any hope of succour.

The son of an old Indian general who had served for more than forty years, the bold fellow, who had taken this spirited step on his own initiative, now displayed an admirable degree of caution; and, though his men were full of courage, and would have asked nothing better than to go in again with the bayonet, he retired to fortify the compounds by the river, and hold them until he should be reinforced from Burma or the remains of the Manipur garrison should join him.

So far only one of his party had been killed, and Grant himself slightly grazed. He had three days' provisions left, and had used eighty rounds of Snider per man.

Selecting his post (I am quoting from his graphic personal narrative, which I only regret I cannot give in full), they set to work and gathered all the rice and dhal they could, got hold of about a ton of paddy and a quantity of sugar-cane juice, brought the baggage over the river on their heads, and settled down behind the mud walls, which were three or four feet high, to stand what siege the Manipuris might think fit to offer

The nights at that season were very cold, as Mrs Grimwood had found during her flight, but everything remained quiet, and next day the young commander shot an enemy at 700 yards, to the great delight of his Goorkhas.

Then a surprise awaited them, as the Jubraj's guns opened fire with common shell and shrapnel, and Grant admits that he felt alarm, for, with the exception of a dozen or so, his men were eight months' recruits, but they one and all behaved splendidly, and, getting the range, sent the guns off after half an hour's firing.

When it grew dark the lieutenant withdrew his men, sending them one by one back into the compound, to find the walls had suffered a good deal; but their loss had been only one man slightly wounded and a pony killed, and tying white rags round the foresights for night-firing, they settled down again to wait for daylight, the Manipuris keeping up a useless long-range fire.

At 3 a.m. the garrison turned out and strengthened the walls; also constructing five parapets, by filling the ration-sacks, rice-baskets, Grant's pillow-case, and everything they could lay hold of, with clods from the ploughed compound; and towards the middle of the afternoon a Goorkha prisoner came in with a piteous letter from several captive Babus, imploring the lieutenant to retire, as they, fifty Goorkhas and fifty-eight civil prisoners, would be murdered if he advanced.

He replied that he would retire with those who wished to come with him, and that the others might go to Cachar if they liked—writing to the Maharajah, with whom and our old acquaintance, the Jubraj, he had quite a lively correspondence; the Senaputty also informing him, by the messengers, that he had 3,000 men in front of him and would cut him up.

Fertile in resource, Grant wrote all his letters in the name of Colonel Howlett, and even borrowed his subadar's rank badges to impress the envoys.

After a good deal of subterfuge and wily work, the Manipuris attacked once more: our ammunition being reduced to seventy rounds of Snider and thirty of Martini per man, and the lieutenant retiring into his fort in consequence, from which he made several brilliant sallies, and in one of them nearly found himself in bad case.

He had crept out with a havildar and six Goorkhas, under a hedge, until within ten yards of the enemy, and darting out, came on thirty or forty behind a six-foot wall.

Grant had a 16-bore shot-gun and twelve cartridges, six of them ball, and as a head popped up, so he fired until they were all expended, his men following his example to the letter; and then, with a shout, charging the barrier.

He shot one Manipuri clean through the head with his revolver and hit several more, and when they got back to the compound, after killing ten men, the only casualties they had suffered were a ball through the havildar's hand and their khaki rather the worse for wear.

On another day of that plucky resistance, the shells did much damage, wounding two of the elephants and knocking half the house down; but at noon on the 8th, after a long week's work, a white flag appeared, a man laid a letter in the road, and, to Grant's disgust, he found that it contained orders from Burma for him to retire.

At half-past seven on a pitch-dark, rainy night they began their retreat, going a mile an hour, with the wounded elephants, and only able to see each other when the vivid lightning lit up the road for a moment.

Grant himself had to hold on to a sepoy's coat, for he "could see absolutely nothing," and trusted to the eyes of the natives, who are keen-sighted in the dark.

Soaked to the skin, marching perhaps, ten paces forward and then waiting for the next flash to guide them, that brave little band passed on through the silent country; by the dank strips of jungle, sodden and steaming under the rainfall; now through a grove of oaks or of deodars; now nearing a village, and closing up as they went cautiously by the houses, full of troops, yet not one of them daring to show his nose on such a night.

It was a strange procession: the elephants shuffling solemnly; the sepoys, used to danger by that time, nodding as they went; and Grant, the guiding spirit of it all, with plenty to occupy his thoughts, both of past, present, and future.

At last the clatter of hoofs caught the quick ear of one of them, and he said, sleepily, "The party has come"; and at 2 a.m., Presgrave, with 140 men and 40 Mounted Infantry met them—to his own and their relief.

When the daylight came, and they neared Palel once more, about 300 Manipuris bolted off after a few shots, and Mr. Grant went forward with the Mounted Infantry at the trot until they came within as many yards, and the trot merged into a galloping charge.

Straight for a palki and umbrella, which denoted an officer's presence, he rode—the steeplechaser going well until a ball in the fore-leg brought him down all of a heap, and sent Grant flying.

Jumping up—luckily, unhurt—his first care was for the animal, whose wound he stanched with his handkerchief wrapped round a cleaning-rod, and refilling his revolver, he ran on, a savage spectacle, covered with blood that had spirted from his horse's limb.

The mounted men had left their saddles and were engaged; the palki was upset, and forty of the Manipuris lay dead up and down the side of the hill; the men returning after a three-mile chase to join the infantry, who had doubled two miles.

With evident regret, the lieutenant tells us that "Clinker" had to be shot, the large bone being broken.

Towards the end of the month, the hero of this startling narrative was once more to the front in a sharp affair at Palel, where we shelled the fort and then stormed it, the lieutenant meeting with his first real mishap, which might have proved his last.

At the head of his men, he went swarming up he slope, the sepoys firing briskly, when, as they athered on the edge of the fort ditch, a white flag vas shown, and he sang out, "Cease firing!"

It was a cowardly ruse, for the moment the niders stopped, up popped the Manipuris over their arapet and let drive into them, Grant staggering rom a tremendous blow in the neck, and falling or an instant rather under cover

A moment he lay, feeling the spot, and ascertaining hat the wound was not serious, went in again with is trusty revolver.

On examination, a bullet was found to have one through the root of his neck, carrying part f his shirt and uniform collar right out at the ther side—this man of steel soon recovering, to each Manipur and learn from the Manipuris themelves that at Palel alone our men had killed over our hundred.

With a modesty worthy of him, the gallant young fficer says in a letter home, "My luck all through has een most marvellous; everything turned up all ight, and there was hardly a hitch anywhere."

But it was more than luck, if there indeed be such thing, which I strongly doubt. Seldom, probably ever, did one man undertake so hazardous an enterrise, and conduct it with the same degree of excellent eneralship.

From first to last his behaviour was masterly, and or skill and courage combined he has had few equals.

The V.C. and a brevet-majority were his, with the congratulations of past masters in the art of war; and it needs no special gift of prophecy to foretell, that, given the opportunities, Major Grant, V.C., will some day rise to the top of his profession.

CHAPTER XXXII.

THE V.C. HERO OF CHITRAL.

SURGEON-CAPTAIN WHITCHURCH.

THE campaign in Chitral is too recent and too well known, thanks to instantaneous photography, the telegraph, and the lucid despatches of the commanders, to need more than the briefest outline of its cause and progress here.

Chitral is a mountainous state, tributary to the Maharajah of Kashmir, and lies, roughly speaking, north of India, between Peshawur and the much-talked-of Pamirs. Its general features may be summed up in a word, as snow-capped peak and narrow valley, the whole forming one of the most difficult countries in which British troops have ever been engaged.

The natives, who are Mohammedans, are not usually accounted warlike, but that they can fight gallantly upon occasion we have had abundant proof, family squabbles among the numerous descendants of Aman-ul-Mulk, who died in 1892, causing the war which produced our latest Victoria Cross hero, and conferred well-deserved honours on several other officers.

Aman-ul-Mulk's second son, Afzul, usurped the throne, the rightful heir, Nizam, flying to Gilgit for British protection. Their uncle, Sher Afzul, murdered the usurper and seized the chief rule himself. The uncle in his turn was driven out by Nizam, assisted by us; but rather more than two years afterwards, Nizam was murdered by another brother—Amir-ul-Mulk, and Sher Afzul made a second appearance, and being joined by Umra Khan, a chieftain of the Hindoo Koosh, turned the whole country upside down, besieging our agent, Dr Robertson, with his escort, in the fort at Chitral for forty-six days.

Built of wooden beams, filled in with stones, its walls twenty-five feet high and eight thick, enclosing a space eighty yards square with a tall tower at each angle and a fifth on the river bank before the northern face, the fort has something mediæval in its aspect.

Huge chinar trees cluster about it on two sides; sundry walls and outbuildings offer good vantage posts for the enemy; and, to crown all, it is commanded by hills and broken ground almost on every hand.

Our force consisted of six British officers, ninety-nine of all ranks of the 14th Sikhs, 301 of the 4th Kashmir Rifles, and sundry Punyalis, Chitralis, and servants, bringing up the whole number to 543, with whom Captain Townshend, of the Central India Horse, maintained a defence which, in the language of the Governor-General's official announcement, "will ever be remembered as forming a glorious episode in the history of the Indian Empire and of its army."

Two columns started to the relief of Chitral, and encountered tremendous difficulties en route: snow three feet deep, mountain passes and bridle paths at great altitudes, swollen rivers, bridges and roads to be constructed, and a determined enemy that took advantage of every inch of the wild region to oppose their advance—all these retarded the march and left the little garrison to hold its own from the 3rd of March, 1895, to the night of the 18th of April.

At half-past four on the 3rd of March Sher Afzul approached Chitral, and 200 men of the 4th Kashmir Rifles went out to try to check them.

One section, under Captain Baird, dotted the slopes of a nullah and engaged with the white-clad Chitralis, while the rest, under Townshend, had very warm work among the stone walls, hamlets, and orchards, and retired to the fort at night with a loss of twenty-three killed and thirty-three wounded, after expending 15,935 rounds of Snider ammunition.

It was quite dark, and great anxiety was felt for Captain Baird, who had been wounded a mile and a half away, and for Surgeon-Captain Whitchurch, who had gone out to his assistance.

Isolated, and surrounded by a strong force of the enemy, the gallant surgeon did what he could for the unfortunate officer, and then tried to get him to the fort, by the aid of thirteen Goorkhas and Dogras of the 4th Kashmir Rifles who remained with him.

Putting Baird into a dhoolie, they made a start from the orchard, and carried him some distance until three were killed and another badly wounded, after which the surgeon took Baird on his own back and they ran the gauntlet of a heavy fire the whole way, the captain being hit again in two places before they gained shelter.

Several walls had to be charged: at one place they were completely surrounded and had to rush it with the bayonet, almost all the little party being wounded before they reached the fort; but the brave fellow, who, by the way, was formerly a student at St. Bartholomew's, brought his man in, though, unhappily, too late to save him.

Captain Baird died next morning, in spite of every effort that could be made, and the army lost a promising young officer who had already seen considerable service, and received his commission out of Sandhurst before he was eighteen.

Surgeon-Captain Whitchurch was recommended for the Victoria Cross in glowing terms, was the eighteenth army doctor gazetted, and received the Cross itself from the hands of Her Majesty at Osborne on July 27, 1895.

At last I have come to the end of my review of Britain's Roll of Glory; and while all men are not heroes, in the foregoing pages I have introduced you to many who undoubtedly were and are.

One may glean from these incidents some little insight into the varied character of a soldier's life—now ranging from irksome monotony to intense excitement, liable at any moment to exchange the dust of the "Long Valley" or the Curragh for active service at the other end of the earth.

Some return to cherish with pride the medals which dangle from their scraps of gay ribbon; others, but only a few, bring back the most cherished of them all—that Chivalric Order to salute which they always turn out the Guard, and of which this book purports to be a history, some, alas! never come back—that is the fortune of war.

Twenty pounds was recently offered to a friend of mine for his Cross by a ravenous collector, and indignantly refused.

I know of only one—and his gallant deeds are recorded at some length here—who has parted with his decoration during life, and now wears a "dummy"; but in the whole of my researches I have not found a single instance of the Victoria Cross being forfeited for the committal of a heinous offence, as it indeed may be if the authorities should see fit to recommend that painful course to Her Majesty; which speaks well for the honour in which it is held, and the "all sorts and conditions of men" who wear it.

ROYAL WARRANTS.

War Department, February 5th, 1856.

THE Queen has been pleased, by an instrument under her Royal Sign Manual, of which the following is a copy, to institute and create a new Naval and Military decoration, to be styled and designated "The Victoria Cross," and to make the rules and regulations therein set forth under which the said decoration shall be conferred.

VICTORIA, by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, etc., to all to whom these presents shall come, Greeting.

Whereas, We, taking into Our Royal Consideration, that there exists no means of adequately rewarding the individual gallant services, either of officers of the lower grades in Our Naval and Military Service, or of warrant and petty officers, seamen and marines in Our Navy, and non-commissioned officers in Our Army. And, whereas, the third class of Our Most Honourable Order of the Bath is limited, except in very rare cases, to the higher ranks of both services, and the granting of Medals, both in Our Navy and Army, is only awarded for long service or meritorious conduct, rather than for bravery in action or distinction before an enemy, such cases alone excepted where a general medal is granted for a particular action or campaign, or a clasp added to the medal for some especial engagement, in both of which cases all share equally in the boon, and those who, by their valour, have particularly signalised themselves, remain undistinguished from their comrades. Now, for the purpose of attaining an end so desirable as that of rewarding individual instances of merit and valour, We have instituted and created, and by these presents for Us, our Heirs and Successors, institute and create a new Naval and Military Decoration, which We are desirous should be highly prized and eagerly sought after by the officers and men of Our Naval and Military Services, and are graciously pleased to make, ordain and establish the following rules and ordinances for the government of the same, which shall from henceforth be inviolably observed and kept

Firstly It is ordained that the distinction shall be styled and designated "The Victoria Cross," and shall consist of a Maltese cross of Bronze, with Our Royal Crest in the centre, and underneath with an escroll bearing the inscription "For Valour."

Secondly. It is ordained that the Cross shall be suspended from the left breast by a blue riband for the Navy, and by a red riband for the Army

Thirdly. It is ordained that the names of those upon whom We may be pleased to confer the decoration shall be published in the London Gazette, and a registry thereof kept in the Office of Our Secretary of State for War.

Fourthly. It is ordained that anyone who, after having received the Cross shall again perform an act of bravery, which, if he had not received such Cross, would have entitled him to it, such further act shall be recorded by a bar attached to the riband by which the Cross is suspended, and for every additional act of bravery an additional bar may be added.

Fifthly. It is ordained that the Cross shall only be awarded to those officers and men who have served Us in the presence of the enemy, and shall have then performed some signal act of valour or devotion to their country.

Sixthly. It is ordained, with a view to placing all persons on a perfectly equal footing in relation to eligibility for the Decoration, that neither rank, nor long service, nor wounds, nor any other circumstance or condition whatsoever, save the merit of conspicuous bravery, shall be held to establish a sufficient claim to the honour.

Seventhly. It is ordained that the Decoration may be conferred on the spot where the act to be rewarded by the grant of such Decoration has been performed, under the following circumstances:—1. When the fleet or army in which such act has been performed is under the eye and command of an admiral or general officer commanding the forces. 2. Where the Naval or Military force is under the eye and command of an admiral or commodore commanding a squadron or detached Naval force, or of a general commanding a corps or division or brigade on a distinct and detached service, when such admiral or general officer shall have the power of conferring the Decoration on the spot, subject to confirmation by Us.

Eighthly. It is ordained where such act shall not have been performed in sight of a commanding officer as aforesaid, then the claimant for the honour shall prove the act to the satisfaction of the captain or officer commanding his ship, or to the officer commanding the regiment to which the claimant belongs, and such captain, or such commanding officer, shall report the same through the usual channel to the admiral or commodore commanding the force employed in the service, or to the officer commanding the forces in the field who shall call for such description and attestation of the act as he may think requisite, and on approval shall recommend the grant of the Decoration.

Ninthly. It is ordained that every person selected for the Cross, under Rule 7, shall be publicly decorated before the Naval or Military force or body to which he belongs, and with which the act of bravery for which he is to be rewarded shall have been performed, and his name shall be recorded in a general order together with the cause of his especial distinction.

Tenthly. It is ordained that every person selected under Rule 8 shall receive his Decoration as soon as possible, and his name shall likewise appear in a general order as above required, such general order to be issued by the Naval or Military commander of the forces employed on the Service.

Eleventhly. It is ordained that the general orders above referred to shall from time to time be transmitted to Our Secretary of State for War, to be laid before Us, and shall be by him registered.

Twelfthly. It is ordained that, as cases may arise not falling within the rules above specified, or in which a claim, though well founded, may not have been established on the spot, We will, on the joint submission of Our Secretary of State for War and of Our Commander-in-Chief of Our Army, or on that of Our Lord High Admiral, or Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty in the case of the Navy, confer the Decoration, but never without conclusive proofs of the performance of the act of bravery for which the claim is made.

Thirteenthly. It is ordained that in the event of a gallant and daring act having been performed by a squadron, ship's company, or detached body of seamen and marines not under fifty in number, or by a brigade, regiment, troop or company in which the admiral, general, or other officer commanding such forces may deem that all are equally brave and distinguished, and that no special selection can be made by them, then in such case the admiral, general, or other officer commanding, may direct that for any such body of seamen or marines, or for every troop or company of soldiers, one officer shall be selected by the officers engaged for the Decoration, and in like manner one petty officer or non-commissioned officer shall be selected by the petty officers and non-commissioned officers engaged, and two seamen or private soldiers or marines shall be selected by the seamen, or private soldiers, or marines engaged, respectively for the Decoration, and the names of those selected shall be transmitted by the senior officers in command of the Naval force, brigade, regiment, troop, or company, to the admiral or general officer commanding, who shall in due manner confer the decoration as if the acts were done under his own eye.

Fourteenthly. It is ordained, that every warrant officer, petty officer, seaman or marine, or non-commissioned officer, or soldier who shall have received the Cross, shall, from the date of the act by which the Decoration has been gained be entitled to a special pension of £10 a year, and each additional bar conferred under Rule 4 on such warrant or petty officers, or non-commissioned officers or men, shall, carry with it an additional pension of £5 per annum.

Fifteenthly. In order to make such additional provision as shall effectually preserve pure this most honourable distinction, it is ordained that, if any person be convicted of treason, cowardice, felony, or of any infamous crime, or if he be accused of any such offence, and doth not after a reasonable time surrender himself to be tried for the same, his name shall forthwith be erased from the registry of individuals upon whom the said Decoration shall have been conferred, by an especial Warrant under Our Royal Sign Manual, and the pension conferred under Rule 14 shall cease and determine from the date of such Warrant. It is hereby further declared, that We, Our Heirs and Successors, shall be the all judges of the circumstances requiring such expulsion; moreover, We shall at all times have power to restore such persons as may at any time have been expelled, both to the enjoyment of the Decoration and Pension.

Given at Our Court at Buckingham Palace, this twenty-ninth day of January, in the nineteenth year of Our Reign, and in the Year of Our Lord, 1856.

By Her Majesty's command,

(Signed) Panmure.

To Our Principal Secretary of State for War.

London Gazette, 10th Aug, 1858.

By a Warrant under Her Royal Sign Manual, 10th August, 1858, Her Majesty was pleased to direct that the Victoria Cross should be conferred, subject to the rules and ordinances already made, on Officers and Men of Her Majesty's Naval and Military Services, who may perform acts of conspicuous courage and bravery under circumstances of extreme danger, such as the occurrence of a fire on board ship, or of the foundering of a vessel at sea, or under any other circumstances in which, through the courage and devotion displayed, life or public property may be saved.

Under the above clause O'Hea and several others have since been gazetted.

The following statement, dated War Office, 6th July, 1859, appears in the Gazette of the 8th July of the same year:—

The Queen having been graciously pleased by a Warrant under Her Royal Sign Manual, bearing date 13th December, 1858, to declare that Non-Military Persons who, as Volunteers, have borne arms against the Mutineers, both at Lucknow and elsewhere, during the late operations in India, shall be considered as eligible to receive the decoration of the Victoria Cross, subject to the rules and ordinances, etc. etc. . . provided that it be established in any case that the person was serving under the orders of a General or other Officer in Command of Troops in the Field; Her Majesty has accordingly been pleased to signify Her intention to confer this high distinction on the undermentioned gentlemen, etc. etc.—Then follows the gazette of Messrs. Kavanagh and Mangles.

The Royal Warrant, 1st January, 1867.

The Queen has been pleased, by an instrument under Her Royal Sign Manual, of which the following is a copy, to direct that the Decoration of the Victoria Cross may be conferred on persons serving in the local forces of the Colony of New Zealand, or who may hereafter be employed in the local forces raised, or which may be raised, in the Colonies and their dependencies generally Whereas by a Warrant under Our Royal Sign Manual, countersigned by one of Our principal Secretaries of State, and bearing date at Our Court at Buckingham Palace, 29th January, 1856, in the nineteenth year of Our Reign, We did constitute and create a new Naval and Military Decoration, to be styled and designated the Victoria Cross, etc. etc. etc. . . . And whereas, during the progress of the operations which we have undertaken against the insurgent native tribes in Our Colony of New Zealand, it has happened that persons serving in the local forces of Our said Colony have performed deeds of gallantry, in consideration of which they are not, according to the strict provisions of Our said recited Warrant, eligible for this high distinction.——Now know ye, that We, of Our especial grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, have thought fit hereby to signify Our Royal will and pleasure, that the said Decoration may be conferred on such persons aforesaid who may be qualified to receive the same, in accordance with the rules and ordinances made, ordained and established by Us for the government thereof, by Our said recited Warrant, and We do by these presents, for Us, Our Heirs and Successors, ordain and appoint that it shall be competent for such persons aforesaid to obtain the said Decoration in the manner set forth in the rules and ordinances referred to, or in accordance with such further rules and ordinances as may hereafter be made and promulgated by Us, Our Heirs, etc. . . . Provided that it be established in any case that the person was serving with Our troops, under the orders of a general or other officer, under such circumstances as would entitle an officer or soldier of Our Army to be recommended for the said Decoration, etc. etc . . . And provided that the said person shall be recommended for it by such general or other officer. And We do further for Us, Our Heirs, etc., ordain and appoint that the said Decoration may also be conferred, etc. . . on such persons as may be qualified to receive the same . . who may hereafter be employed in the local forces, raised, or which may be raised, in Our Colonies and their dependencies, and who may be called upon to serve in co-operation with Our troops in military operations which it may be necessary to undertake for the suppression of rebellion against Our Authority, or for repelling invasion by a foreign enemy.

Given at Our Court at Osborne House, Isle of Wight, this first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven, in the thirtieth year of Our Reign.

By Her Majesty's Command,
(Signed) J Peel.

In 1881 the authorities seem to have realised how complicated and difficult of comprehension was the document of 1856, and consequently there appeared the following concise, soldierly Warrant, whose purport there is no mistaking.

Royal Warrant.—Qualification required for the Decoration of the Victoria Cross.

(This Warrant applies also to the Auxiliary and Reserve Forces.)

Victoria R.

Whereas doubts have arisen as to the qualification required for the decoration of the Victoria Cross, and whereas the description of such qualification in Our Warrant of 29th January, 1856, is not uniform. Our will and pleasure is that the qualification shall be "conspicuous bravery or devotion to the country in the presence of the enemy," and that Our Warrant of 29th January, 1856, shall be read and interpreted accordingly.

It is Our further will and pleasure that Officers and Men of Our Auxiliary and Reserve Forces (Naval and Military) shall be eligible for the decoration of the Victoria Cross under the conditions of Our said Warrant, as amended by this Our Warrant Given at Our Court at Osborne, this 23rd day of April, 1881, in the forty-fourth year of Our Reign.

By Her Majesty's Command,
HUGH C E. CHILDERS

Another Warrant dated 6th August, 1881—given also at Osborne House, in the forty-fifth year of Her Majesty's Reign after recapitulating portions of previous Warrants, especially one given at Windsor, 29th October, 1857, which conferred the Cross on the Naval and Military Services of the East India Company, proceeds to state that members of the Indian Ecclesiastical Establishment are not eligible as holding no military commissions, which excludes them from the eligibility of the British Army Chaplain—and then further proceeds to grant the distinction to the said members, provided they are serving under a general or other officer in command of troops in the field

Under this Warrant the Rev. Mr. Adams was gazetted twenty days later.

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF ALL THE RECIPIENTS OF THE V.C., THEIR RANKS AND REGIMENTS, AND THE PARTICULAR ACT OF BRAVERY BY WHICH IT WAS WON

The first date given in each case is that of the act of bravery, the date in parentheses that of the "London Gazette" in which the act was publicly recorded. the number in parentheses shows the exact order in which each name has appeared in the "Gazette" e g (42) Ablett was the forty-second man to receive the Cross The recipients marked with an asterisk are those given as still living, in the Official Navy and Army Lists of July, 1895

*(42) ABLETT, Private A., Grenadier Guards, Crimea, 2nd September, 1855 For pitching a live shell out of the trench from the midst of some ammunition barrels, the shell bursting on reaching the ground, and throwing him over by its explosion (Immediately promoted Corporal and Sergeant) (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857)

*(381) ADAMS, Rev J W, Bengal Ecclesiastical Establishment (late), Afghanistan, 11th December, 1879. For rescuing two men of the 9th Lancers from certain death at Killa Khazi, near Kabul, under heavy fire, when the enemy were charging, having just before assisted a wounded Lancer. (The only clergyman ever gazetted.) (Gaz, 26 Aug, 1881)

(233) ADDISON, Private H, 43rd Regiment, India, 2nd January, 1859. For gallantly defending a wounded officer and saving his life, being severely wounded himself. (Gaz., 2 Sept., 1859.)

(150) AIKMAN, Lieutenant (late Colonel) Frederick

Robertson, 4th Bengal Native Infantry, India, 1st March, 1858. He commanded the 3rd Sikh Cavalry on the advanced picket with 100 men; having obtained information just as the force marched on the morning of the 1st March, 1858, of the proximity, three miles off the high-road, of a body of 500 rebel infantry, 200 horse and two guns, under Moosahib Ali Chuckbdar, attacked and utterly routed them, cutting up more than 100 men, capturing the guns, and driving the survivors into and over the Goomtee This feat was performed under every disadvantage of broken ground, and partially under the flanking fire of an adjoining fort, the Lieutenant receiving a severe sabre cut in the face in a personal encounter with several of the enemy. He dropped dead at a ball, 1888 (Gaz, 16 Sept, 1858)

(305) AITKEN, Lieutenant Robert Hope Moncrieff (late Colonel) 13th Bengal Native Infantry, India, 1857. For great gallantry during the defence of Lucknow, from 30th June to 22nd November. (1) On three different occasions Lieutenant Aitken went into the garden under the enemy's loopholes in the "Captain's Bazaar." On two of these occasions he brought in a number of bullocks which had been left in the garden. Subsequently, on 3rd July, the enemy having set fire to the Bhoosa Stock in the garden, and it being apprehended that the fire would reach the powder magazine which had been left there, Lieutenant Aitken, accompanied by other officers, went into the garden and cut down all the tents which might have communicated the fire to the powder. This was done close to the enemy's loopholes, under a bright light from the flames. It was a most dangerous service. (2) On the night of the 20th August, the enemy having set fire to the Bailey Guard Gate, Lieutenant Aitken was the first man in the gateway, and, assisted by some sepoys and a water-carrier of his regiment, he partially opened the gate under a heavy fire of musketry, and having removed the burning wood and straw, saved the gate. (3) On the evening of the 23rd September, this officer led on twelve sepoys of his regiment for the purpose of attacking two guns opposite the gate referred to, in order to prevent their being turned on the late Major-General Havelock's second column. Having captured them, he attacked and took the Teree Kotee with a small force (4) On the morning of 26th September, with a small party of his regiment, he assaulted and captured the barricaded gateway of the Furreed Buksh Palace and the Palace itself On this occasion he sprang up against a small wicket gate on the right, and prevented the enemy from shutting it, until, with assistance, it was forced open and the assaulting party was thus enabled to rush in The complete success of the attack was solely owing to this officer's distinguished bravery (5) In a subsequent sortie on 29th September, Lieutenant Aitken volunteered to take a gun which still continued firing, taking with him four soldiers through the houses and lanes to the gun The enemy fired on this party from the houses, but they held their ground until, a stronger party coming up, the gun was upset from the carriage and taken into the Residency Another gun was subsequently taken (Gaz, 16 April, 1863)

(75) Alexander, Private J, 90th Regiment, Crimea, 18th June and 6th September, 1855 For bringing in wounded on each occasion, at Sebastopol, under heavy firing (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857)

(350) Allen, Corporal W, 24th Regiment, Zululand, January 22nd and 23rd, 1879 For gallantry in defending the wounded at Rorke's Drift, and when wounded himself continuing to serve out ammunition all night. (Gaz., 2 May, 1879.)

(302) Anderson, Private C., 2nd Dragoon Guards (Queen's Bays), India, 8th October, 1858. For saving the life of his Colonel from an overpowering force of mutineers. (Gaz., 21 Nov., 1862.)

(169) Anson, Honourable A. H A, Captain (afterwards Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel), 84th Regiment, India, 28th September, 16th November, 1857 (1) For conspicuous bravery at Boolundshuhur. The 9th Lancers had charged into the town, and were re-forming in the Serai The enemy attempted to close the entrance by drawing their carts across it, so as to shut in the cavalry and form a cover from which to fire upon them. Captain Anson, taking a lance, dashed out of the gateway and knocked the drivers off their carts Owing to a wound in his left hand received at Delhi, he could not stop his horse, and rode into the middle of the enemy, who fired a volley at him, one ball passing through his coat. (2) At Lucknow, at the assault of the Secundra Bagh, he entered with the storming party on the gates being burst open He had his horse killed, and was himself slightly wounded. "He has shown the greatest gallantry on every occasion, and has slain many enemies in fight" Extract from dispatch of Sir Hope Grant, to whom Captain Anson was Aide de-Camp (Gaz., 24 Dec, 1858.)

* (34) Arthur, Gunner T., Royal Artillery, Crimea, 7th and 18th June, 1855 (1) For carrying infantry ammunition under fire (2) For volunteering for a spiking party at the Redan. (See account.) (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857)

* (384) Ashford, Private T, 7th Regiment, Afghanistan, 16th August, 1880 For rescuing a wounded comrade from the Afghans, under fire. (Gaz., 7 Oct., 1881)

* (407) Aylmer, Captain (now Brevet-Major) F. J., Royal Engineers, Nile, December 2nd, 1891 For magnificent gallantry at the storming of the inner gate, where he placed the gun-cotton. Though badly wounded in three places, twice in the right arm, he fired nineteen rounds from his revolver, killing many of the enemy almost hand to hand, and remaining, fighting, and encouraging his men, until he fainted from loss of blood. (Gaz., 12 July, 1892.)

(292) BAKER, Lieutenant C. G, Bengal Police, India, 27th September, 1858. For charging nearly 1,000 rebels with a handful of cavalry, one of the most gallant charges of the war. (Gaz., 25 Feb., 1862)

(167) BAMBRICK, Private V., 60th Rifles, India, 6th May, 1858 At Bareilly, for defending himself against three Ghazis, and slaying one of them, although severely wounded himself (Gaz, 24 Dec, 1858.)

(204) BANKS, Cornet W G H, 7th Hussars, India, 19th March, 1858. For charging a body of rebels defending their guns, at Moosa Bagh, Lucknow, the brave fellow dying afterwards from his wounds (Gaz, 24 Dec, 1858)

(68) BEACH, Private T, 55th Regiment, Crimea, 5th November, 1854. For defending a wounded officer at Inkerman from several Russians, and killing two of them (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857)

*(330) BELL, Private D, 24th Regiment, Andaman Islands, 7th May, 1867. For rescuing seventeen drowning comrades (See Cooper, Douglas, Griffiths, and Murphy, also account) (Gaz, 17 Dec, 1867)

(57) BELL, Captain E W D (afterwards Major General), 23rd Fusiliers, Crimea, September 20th, 1854. For gallantry, particularly at the Alma, where he captured the first Russian gun, and brought the regiment out of action, all his senior officers having been killed or wounded. (Gaz., 24 Feb, 1857)

*(340) BELL, Lieutenant (now Brevet-Colonel, C.B), M.S., Royal Engineers, Ashantee, 4th January, 1874. For distinguished bravery and self-devotion at Ordahsu, while serving with advance guard. Always to the front, he urged on and encouraged an unarmed working party of Fantees, under fire from front and rear, without a covering party, an almost unparalleled incident in warfare. (Gaz., 20 Nov., 1874.)

*(361) Beresford, Captain (now Colonel) Lord W. L. De la Poer, K.C.I.E., 9th Lancers, Zululand, 3rd July, 1879. For saving the life of a mounted infantryman before Ulundi, under peculiarly gallant circumstances. (See account.) (Gaz., 9 Sept., 1879.)

(335) Bergin, Private J., 33rd Regiment (Duke of Wellington's), Abyssinia, 13th April, 1868. He was one of the first to enter Magdala. (See Magner.) (Gaz, 28 July, 1868.)

*(31) Berryman, Troop Sergeant-Major John (now Major), 17th Lancers, Crimea, 20th September, 25th October, 5th November, 1854. He served through the whole war, captured three Russian prisoners within reach of their own guns, at "Mackenzie's Farm," was one of the Six Hundred, and stayed under a heavy fire with his wounded officer, whom he afterwards brought out. (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857.)

*(291) Blair, Captain James (now General), C.B., 2nd Bombay Light Cavalry, India, 12th August and 23rd October, 1857. (1) For volunteering to apprehend seven or eight armed mutineers who had shut themselves up in a house at Neemuch. Bursting open the door, he forced them to escape through the roof, and, though badly wounded, pursued them in the darkness. (2) For fighting his way out of a body of rebels who had surrounded him at Jeerum. Breaking his sword on one of their heads, and receiving a severe slash on his right arm, he rejoined his troop, and, with no weapon but the hilt of his broken sword, charged the rebels and dispersed them. (Gaz, 25 Feb., 1862.)

(140) Blair, Lieutenant R., 2nd Dragoon Guards (Queen's Bays), India, 28th September, 1857. For charging a superior force at Boolundshuhur, killing four with his own hand, and making good his retreat without losing a man. (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

(232) BOGLE, Lieutenant Andrew Cathcart (late Major), 78th Highlanders, India, 29th July, 1857. For conspicuous gallantry at Onao, during the advance to the relief of Lucknow, in leading the way into a loopholed house strongly occupied by the rebels, who were pouring a heavy fire on the regiment. He was severely wounded. (Gaz, 2 Sept., 1859.)

* (408) BOISRAGON, Lieutenant Guy Huddlestone, Indian Staff Corps, Nile, 2nd December, 1891 For gallant bravery under a heavy fire at the assault on the fort (Gaz, 12 July, 1892)

* (369) BOOTH, Colour-Sergeant A., 80th Regiment, Zululand, 12th March, 1879 For rallying a few men and covering the retreat of others, thereby saving the whole party (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1880.)

* (128) BOULGER, Lance-Corporal Abraham (since Honorary Lieutenant-Colonel), 84th Regiment, India, 12th July to 25th September, 1857 For distinguished pluck as a skirmisher in the twelve actions between the above dates (Gaz, 18 June, 1858)

(80) BOURCHIER, Lieutenant Claude Thomas (since Colonel), Rifle Brigade, Crimea, 20th November, 1854 Highly distinguished at the Rifle Pits before Sebastopol His gallantry was recorded in French General Orders (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(319) BOYES, Midshipman, D. G., R N., Japan, 6th September, 1864. For carrying the British colours through the thick of the fire at Simono Seki, both his Colour-Sergeants being wounded, the one mortally, and the other severely, the colours being pierced six times by musket-balls. (Gaz., 21 April, 1865.)

(85) BRADSHAW, Private J., Rifle Brigade, Crimea, 22nd April, 1855. For capturing a Russian rifle-pit in broad daylight. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(136) BRADSHAW, Assistant-Surgeon W., 90th Regiment (Perthshire Volunteer Light Infantry), India, 26th September, 1857. Distinguished bravery and devotion to the wounded at Lucknow. (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

(244) BRENNAN, Bombardier J., R.A., India, 3rd April, 1858. For working two guns, supported by natives, under a heavy fire at Jhansi, and compelling the enemy to abandon their artillery. (Gaz., 11 Nov., 1859.)

(345) BROMHEAD, Lieutenant G. S. (afterwards Major), 24th Regiment, Rorke's Drift, 22nd and 23rd January, 1879. Heroic gallantry. (See account.) (Gaz., 2 May, 1879.)

*(263) BROWN, Lieutenant Francis David Millett (now Colonel), 1st Bengal European Fusiliers, India, 16th November, 1857. For rescuing, at imminent risk of his own life, a wounded soldier of his regiment at Varnoul, and carrying him off under a very heavy fire, the rebel cavalry being within fifty yards of him at the time. (Gaz., 17 Feb., 1860.)

*(372) BROWN, Trooper P., Cape Mounted Rifles, Zululand, 8th April, 1879. For carrying water to two wounded men under a severe fire, and being himself severely wounded. (Gaz., 13 April, 1880.)

*(358) BROWNE, Lieutenant E. S. (now Lieutenant-Colonel), 24th Regiment, Zululand, 29th March, 1879. For returning twice towards the enemy under a heavy fire, assisting a soldier to mount his horse and saving his life. (Gaz., 17 June, 1879.)

(300) BROWNE, Captain Henry George (since Colonel), 32nd Regiment, India, 21st August, 1857. For conspicuous bravery at Lucknow, gallantly leading a sortie at great personal risk, for the purpose of spiking two heavy guns. He was the first to enter the battery, which was protected by high palisades. Removing the shutters, he jumped inside, the guns were spiked, and about a hundred of the mutineers killed. (Gaz, 20 June, 1862.)

*(281) Browne, Brevet-Major Samuel James (now General Sir, G.C.B., K.C.S.I.), 2nd Punjaub Cavalry, India, 31st August, 1858 For gallant conduct at Seerporah While advancing on the enemy's position at daybreak with one orderly sowar, he rushed on a nine-pounder, attacking the gunners and preventing them from reloading to fire on our infantry In the hand-to-hand conflict he had a severe sword-cut on the left knee, and his left arm sliced off at the shoulder after cutting down one of the rebels. He is a veteran of Ramnuggur, Chillianwallah, and Goojerat, and has been repeatedly mentioned in despatches (Gaz, 1 March, 1861)

(139) Buckley, J., Deputy-Assistant-Commissioner of Ordnance, Bengal Establishment, India, 11th May, 1857 For gallantry in defence of the magazine at Delhi. (See account) (Gaz, 18 June, 1858)

(1) Buckley, Captain C. W., R.N., Crimea, 29th May, 1855 For twice undertaking the desperate service of firing Russian stores in the face of a large force at Genitchi, and at Taganrog, 3rd June (See account) (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857)

*(355) Buller, Captain and Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel (now Temp.-General Right Hon Sir Redvers Henry, G.C.B., K.C.M.G.), 60th King's Royal Rifles, Zululand, 28th March, 1879 For saving life under terrible circumstances at Inhlobane Mountain. (Gaz., 17 June, 1879)

(2) Burgoyne, Captain H. T., R.N., Crimea, 29th May, 1855. For assisting to fire the Russian stores at Genitchi in the face of the enemy. Captain Burgoyne went down with 471 others in the ironclad Captain, which foundered in three minutes near Finisterre, about 12.15 a.m., 7th September, 1870. A handsome memorial brass in St Paul's commemorates the disaster. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(286) Burslem, Lieutenant N (since Captain), 67th Regiment, China, 21st August, 1860. For being one of the first to enter the Taku forts, after swimming the ditch, in a most gallant manner (See Lane.) (Gaz, 13 Aug, 1861)

*(218) Butler, Lieutenant Thomas Adair (now Major), 1st Bengal European Fusiliers, India, 9th March, 1858 For swimming the Goomtee river, climbing the parapets of a work to inform the skirmishers on the other side, and remaining there alone for a considerable time under a heavy fire until the work was taken by our men (Gaz., 6 May, 1859.)

(247) Byrne, Private James, 86th Regiment, India, 3rd April, 1858 For pluckily rescuing a wounded officer under a heavy fire by which he was himself severely hit. In June, 1893, Private Byrne's Cross was sold by auction by Messrs Sotheby for the large sum of £35 (Gaz, 11 Nov, 1859.)

(72) Byrne, Private John, 68th Regiment, Crimea, 5th November, 1854. For gallant pluck at Inkerman When the regiment was ordered to retire, he went back towards the enemy at the risk of his own life and brought in a wounded soldier. Also on May 11th, 1855, he engaged in a stirring hand-to-hand combat on the parapet of a work he was defending, killed his man, secured his arms, and prevented the entrance of the enemy. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

*(22) Bythesea, Commander John (now Rear-Admiral, C.B., C.T.E), Island of Wardo, Baltic, 9th to 12th August, 1854. For stopping the Russian mails, seizing the despatches from five men, three of whom he took prisoners (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

*(298) Cadell, Lieutenant Thomas (now Colonel), 2nd Bengal European Fusiliers, India, 12th June, 1857. For great gallantry at the Flag-staff Picket at Delhi, when the whole of the picket of H.M. 75th and 2nd Bengal E.F. were driven in by a large body of the rebels Under a most severe fire he brought in a wounded bugler of his own regiment, saving him from a cruel death; and later in the day, when the Bengal Fusiliers were ordered to retire, and it was whispered that there was a wounded man left behind, the brave fellow went back of his own accord towards the enemy with three men and brought in a severely wounded soldier of the 75th, under a terrible fire. (Gaz, 29 April, 1862)

*(262) Call, Lieutenant William Martin (now General), 56th Bengal Native Infantry, India, 15th April, 1858 For carrying away the body of Lieutenant Willoughby, which was lying near the ditch of the fort of Ruhya, with the assistance of privates Thompson, Crowie, Spence and Cook, and for running to the rescue of private Spence, who had been severely wounded in the attempt (See Spence) (Gaz, 17 Feb, 1860)

(94) Cambridge, Sergeant D, R.A, Crimea, 8th September, 1855 For volunteering to spike guns, and remaining with his men when severely wounded, afterwards bringing in a wounded man under a heavy fire (Gaz., 23 June, 1857)

*(242) Cameron, Lieutenant Aylmer Spicer (now Colonel, C B), 72nd Highlanders, India, 30th March, 1858 For conspicuous bravery during the storming of Kotah Heading a small party of men, and attacking a body of armed fanatic rebels strongly posted in a loopholed house with one narrow entrance. He killed three rebels in single combat, and was severely wounded, losing half one hand by a tulwar-stroke (Gaz., 11 Nov., 1859.)

(152) CARLIN, Private P., 13th Regiment (Prince Albert's Light Infantry), India, 6th April, 1858 For rescuing a wounded native on the field of battle and slaying his assailant. (Gaz., 26 Oct., 1858.)

*(253) CHAMPION, Sergeant-Major J , 8th Hussars (King's Royal Irish), India, 17th June and 5th September, 1858 For continuing at his duty at Bejapore, in pursuit of the rebels when severely wounded, having been previously recommended for distinguished conduct in the charge at Gwalior (See account) (Gaz , 20 Jan , 1860)

*(341) CHANNER, Colonel G N (now Major-General, C.B), Bengal Staff Corps, Perak, 20th December, 1875. For jumping into a stockade, shooting one man down, and overawing the remainder, until his men followed him and captured the place. (Gaz., 12 April, 1876)

†(288) CHAPLIN, Ensign John Wortley (now Colonel, C.B.), 67th Regiment, China, 21st August, 1860 For distinguished gallantry at the north Taku fort. He planted the Queen's Colour on the breach made by the storming party, assisted by Private Lane (See Lane) Subsequently he was the first to mount the cavalier of the fort, and planted the Colour there, being severely wounded in so doing. (Gaz , 13 Aug , 1861)

*(344) CHARD, Lieutenant J. R M. (now Lieutenant-Colonel, R.E.), Rorke's Drift, 22nd and 23rd January, 1879 Heroic gallantry. (See account) (Gaz., 2 May, 1879.)

*(383) CHASE, Captain W. St. Lucien, Bombay Staff Corps, Afghanistan, 16th August, 1880. For carrying off a wounded soldier under a heavy fire at Candahar. (Gaz., 7 Oct., 1881.)

(265) CHICKEN, G. B , R.N., India, 4th September, 1858. For charging a number of rebels at Suhijnee, and cutting down five, himself severely wounded. (Gaz., 27 April, 1860.)

(78) Clifford, Lieutenant Henry Hugh (afterwards Major-General Honourable Sir), Rifle Brigade, Crimea, 5th November, 1854. For conspicuous gallantry and courage at the battle of Inkerman, where he led a charge, killed one of the enemy with his sword, disabled another, and saved the life of a soldier (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857)

(236) Clogstoun, Captain H M, 19th Madras Native Infantry, India, 15th January, 1859. At Chickumbah he charged and dispersed a body of rebels with eight men of his regiment, being severely wounded. (Gaz, 2 Sept, 1859)

(198) Cochrane, Lieutenant and Adjutant Hugh Stewart (afterwards Colonel), 86th Regiment, India, 1st April, 1858 For conspicuous gallantry near Jhansi In dashing forward at a gallop, under a heavy musketry and artillery fire, driving the enemy from a gun, and retaining possession of it until No 1 Company came up. He was also distinguished in the attack on the enemy's rear-guard, when he had three horses shot under him in succession (Gaz, 24 Dec, 1858.)

(60) Coffey, Private W, 34th Regiment, Crimea, 29th March, 1855. For pitching a live shell over the parapet of the trench. (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857)

(353) Coghill, Lieutenant N J A, 24th Regiment, Zululand, 22nd January, 1879 For a particularly gallant attempt to save the colours after the terrible disaster at Isandhlwana, losing his life therefor (See account.) (Gaz., 2 May, 1879)

*(301) Coghlan, Colour-Sergeant C. (now Sergeant-Major), 75th Regiment, India, 8th June and 18th July, 1857 For penetrating with three others into a serai at Delhi, which was held by the enemy, and removing a wounded man. Also for encouraging a charge, and returning under a cross fire to rescue the wounded. (Gaz., 11 Nov., 1862)

(77) Coleman, Sergeant J, 97th Regiment, Crimea, 30th August, 1855. For great bravery and coolness in defending a new sap, and carrying in a mortally-wounded officer under fire. (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857)

*(377) Collis, Gunner J, E Battery B Brigade, R H A., Afghanistan, 27th July, 1880 For pluckily drawing the enemy's fire from the wounded on to himself, until they were out of danger, after the disaster at Maiwand. (Gaz., 17 May, 1881.)

*(8) Commerell, Lieutenant J E (now Admiral Sir, G.C.B), Crimea, 11th October, 1855 For crossing the Isthmus of Arabat, and destroying large quantities of forage at terrible risk. He is also Knight of the Legion of Honour (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857)

(151) Connolly, Gunner W, Bengal Horse Artillery, Indhi, 7th July, 1857. Although twice dreadfully wounded at Jhelum, he stuck to his gun, declining to leave it, saying, in reply to his officer, "No, sir, I'll not go while I can work here." Later in the same day he was again shot through the right leg, but still kept on loading his gun, until, fainting from loss of blood, he fell into the arms of Lieutenant Cookes, and was carried unconscious from the field. (See account.) (Gaz, 3 Sept, 1858)

(51) Connors, Private J, 3rd Regiment (The Buffs), Crimea, 8th September, 1855. For conspicuous gallantry during the assault of Sebastopol, where he rescued an officer of the 30th from a number of Russians He also received the French war medal. (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857)

(89) Conolly, Lieutenant J. Augustus, 49th Regiment (retired as Lieutenant-Colonel), Crimea, 26th October, 1854 For tremendous gallantry when commanding a company on the outlying picket, where he came under the observation of Lord Raglan. He was dangerously wounded, praised in General Orders, and promoted into the Coldstream Guards (Gaz, 5 May, 1857.)

(343) Cook, Captain J., Bengal Staff Corps, Afghanistan, 2nd December, 1878. For charging the enemy with great bravery, causing them to bolt, and rescuing an officer at Peiwar Kotal. (Gaz, 18 March, 1879)

(225) Cook, Private W., 42nd Regiment (Black Watch), India, 15th January, 1859. For leading his company in action at Maylah, when all his superior officers had been killed or wounded (See D Miller.) (Gaz, 21 June, 1859)

(4) Cooper, Boatswain H, Crimea, 3rd June, 1855 For gallantry at the firing of stores at Taganrog Knight of the Legion of Honour. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(329) Cooper, Private J, 24th Regiment, Andaman Islands, 7th May, 1867 For helping to rescue seventeen drowning comrades (See Bell, Douglas, Griffiths, Murphy.) (Gaz, 17 Dec, 1867)

(398) Corbett, Private F, 60th King's Royal Rifles, Egypt, 5th August, 1882 For remaining under fire beside a wounded officer, Lieutenant Howard-Vyse, and helping to bring him into camp. (Gaz., 16 Feb, 1883)

(102) Craig, Sergeant J, Scots Fusilier Guards, Crimea, 6th September, 1855 For volunteering himself, and getting others to search, under fire, for an officer Craig was severely wounded, but managed to bring in the body. Promoted Ensign and Adjutant 3rd Batt Military Train. (Gaz., 20 Nov, 1857)

*(365) Creagh, Captain O'Moore (now Lieutenant-Colonel), Bombay Staff Corps, Afghanistan, 21st April, 1879. For conspicuous bravery in defending the village of Kam Dakka with 150 men, against 1,500, saving many lives by his personal exertions. (Gaz., 18 Nov., 1879.)

*(404) Crimmin, Surgeon John (now Surgeon-Major), Bombay Medical Service, Burma, 1st January, 1889 For conspicuous gallantry in attending and defending the wounded, under fire, near Lwekaw. (Gaz, 17 Sept, 1889.)

(103) Crowe, Lieutenant Joseph P H, 78th Highlanders (Ross shire Buffs), India, 12th August, 1857 For being the first to enter the redoubt at Bourze-kee-Chowkee, an entrenched village in front of the Busherutgunge (Lieutenant Campbell was neck-and-neck with him, but died of cholera the day after) (Gaz, 15 Jan, 1858)

*(227) Cubitt, Lieutenant William George (now Colonel), 13th Bengal Native Infantry, India, 30th June, 1857 For saving the lives of three men of the 32nd Foot, at the risk of his own, during the retreat from Chinhut (near Lucknow) He is also a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order (Gaz., 21 June, 1859)

*(79) Cuninghame, Lieutenant W J Montgomery (now Major Sir, Bart), Rifle Brigade, Crimea, 20th November, 1854. For highly-distinguished conduct at the capture of the rifle pits, also mentioned in French General Orders (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857.)

(20) Curtis, Boatswain's Mate H, Crimea, 18th June, 1855 For rescuing a wounded soldier under a terrible fire. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857)

(366) Dalton, Assistant-Commissary J. L., Rorke's Drift, 22nd and 23rd January, 1879. For gallantry in the defence, and saving a man's life (Gaz, 18 Nov, 1879)

(11) Daniels, Midshipman E St J, R N, Crimea, 5th November, 1854, and 18th June, 1855 For bringing powder from a waggon under a heavy fire. Volunteering as A.D C. to Captain Peel at Inkerman, and bandaging his wound under a heavy fire. (Gaz., 24 Feb, 1857.)

*(392) DANAHER, Trooper J., Nourse's Horse (now Private Connaught Rangers), Transvaal, 16th January, 1881. For bravely trying to save a wounded man of the 21st Regiment under the terrible Boer fire at Elandsfontein. (Gaz., 13 March, 1882.)

(363) D'ARCY, Captain C., Frontier Light Horse, near Ulundi, 3rd July, 1879. For gallantly trying to save a dismounted trooper until the Zulus had closed upon them. (Gaz., 10 Oct., 1879.)

(294) DAUNT, Lieutenant John C. Campbell (late Colonel), 70th Bengal Native Infantry, India, 2nd October and 2nd November, 1857. For conspicuous gallantry in action in capturing two guns from the mutineers of the Ramghur battalion at Chota Behar. With Sergeant Dennis Dynon (see Dynon), he rushed at the second gun, and pistolled the gunners, who had already mown down a third of the detachment with grape shot. He was also recommended for chasing the mutineers of the 32nd Bengal N.I. on the 2nd November following, pursuing them with a handful of Rattray's Sikhs across a plain into a rich cultivation, being dangerously wounded in attempting to drive a large body out of an enclosure. (Gaz., 25 Feb., 1862.)

(93) DAVIS, Captain Gronow, R.A. (late Major-General), Crimea, 8th September, 1855. For great coolness and gallantry at the Redan, where he commanded the spiking party. With true British pluck he saved the life of Lieutenant Sanders, 30th Foot, by jumping over the parapet of a sap, and twice traversing the open, under a murderous fire, to help in conveying that officer—whose leg was broken, and who was otherwise badly wounded—under cover. Captain Davis also repeated the act in succouring other wounded soldiers in the same position. (Gaz., 23 June, 1857.)

(222) DAVIS, Private J., 42nd Regiment (Black Watch),

India, 15th April, 1858. At Fort Ruhya, for carrying an officer's body from under the walls to his regiment. (Gaz, 27 May, 1859)

(7) DAY, Lieutenant G Fiott (late Captain), R.N., Crimea, 17th and 21st September, 1855 For great gallantry in making two reconnaissances alone in the dark on the Spit of Arabat. (See account) (Gaz. 24 Feb, 1857)

(264) DEMPSEY, Private D., 10th Regiment (North Lincolnshire), India, 12th August, 1857, and 14th March, 1858 For carrying a bag of powder through a burning village at Lucknow, under fire, in order to mine a passage to rear of the enemy He was the first to enter the village of Jugdispore, and helped to carry a wounded officer in the retreat from Arrah, July, 1857. (Gaz, 17 Feb, 1860)

(113) DIAMOND, Sergeant B, Bengal Horse Artillery, India, 28th September, 1857. For working his gun under a heavy fire, and clearing the road of the enemy at Boolundshuhur (Gaz, 24 April, 1858)

*(387) DICK CUNYNGHAM, Lieutenant W H (now Major), 92nd (now Argyle and Sutherland) Highlanders, Afghanistan, 13th December, 1879 For encouraging his men by boldly exposing himself to the fire of the enemy at the Sherpur Pass. (Gaz., 18 Oct., 1881.)

*(92) DICKSON, Lieutenant Collingwood (now General Sir, G.C B.), Royal Artillery, Crimea, 17th October, 1854 For displaying the greatest coolness and contempt of danger, when the batteries of the Right Attack had run short of powder, in directing the unloading of several waggons, which had been brought up to the trenches, and helping to carry the powder with his own hands under a severe fire. Knight of the Legion of Honour. (Gaz, 23 June, 1857.)

(257) DIVANE, Private J., 60th King's Royal Rifles, India,

10th September, 1857. For successfully heading a charge against the trenches at Delhi He was elected by the privates of the regiment for the distinction. (Gaz., 20 Jan, 1860)

*(32) DIXON, Captain Mathew Charles (now Major-General, C B), R A, Crimea, 17th April, 1855. About 2 p m. his battery was blown up by a shell, which burst in the magazine, destroying the parapets, killing and wounding ten men, disabling five guns, and covering a sixth with earth, nevertheless, he most gallantly opened with the remaining gun before the enemy had ceased cheering, fighting it until sunset, in spite of a heavy concentrated fire Knight of the Legion of Honour (Gaz., 24 Feb, 1857)

(191) DONOHOE, Private P., 9th Lancers, India, 28th September, 1857. For going to the support of a wounded officer, and bringing him in through the rebel cavalry at Boolundshuhur, assisted by a few other men (Gaz, 24 Dec, 1858)

*(390) DOOGAN, Private J, 1st Dragoon Guards, Transvaal, 28th June, 1881 For gallantly dismounting at Laing's Neck, although wounded, and trying to induce an officer to take his horse, receiving another wound while doing so (Gaz, 13 March, 1882)

*(327) DOUGLAS, Assistant-Surgeon Campbell Millis, M D, 2nd Battalion, 24th Regiment (since Brigade-Surgeon), Andaman Islands, 7th May, 1867. For assisting to rescue seventeen drowning comrades. (See Bell, Cooper, Griffiths, Murphy, also account.) (Gaz, 17 Dec., 1867.)

*(25) DOWELL, Lieutenant G. D. (now Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel), Royal Marine Artillery, Baltic, 13th July, 1855 For rowing to the assistance of a disabled boat off Viborg, saving some of the crew, and bringing off the boat under a heavy fire from the batteries. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(315) Down, Ensign J. T., 57th Regiment (West Middlesex), New Zealand, 2nd October, 1863. For gallantly rescuing a wounded man at Pontoko under a close and heavy fire (Gaz., 23 Sept., 1864)

(251) Dowling, Private W., 32nd Regiment (Cornwall), India, 4th and 9th July and 27th September, 1857 For going on three occasions at Lucknow to spike the enemy's guns under heavy fire. (Gaz, 21 Nov, 1859)

(133) Duffy, Private T, 1st Madras European Fusiliers India, 26th September, 1857 For daring skill in saving a gun from the rebels at Lucknow (Gaz, 18 June, 1858)

(333) Dundas, Lieutenant James, Royal Engineers (late Bengal), Bhootan, India, 30th April, 1865. For gallant conduct at the attack on the Blockhouse at Dewangiri. (See Trevor.) (Gaz., 31 Dec., 1867.)

(176) Dunley, Lance-Corporal J., 93rd Highlanders, India, 16th November, 1857 He was the first man of the regiment to enter the Secundra Bagh with Captain Burroughs, whom he supported against heavy odds He was elected by the privates of the regiment (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(30) Dunn, Lieutenant Alexander Roberts, 11th Hussars, Crimea, 25th October, 1854 For returning, after the charge of Balaclava, to save the lives of a sergeant and private by cutting down the Russians. He was the only officer there who won the V.C., and was afterwards killed during the Abyssinian War. (See account.) (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857.)

(295) Dynon, Sergeant D., 53rd Regiment, India, 2nd October, 1857. For assisting to capture two guns which had killed a third of his men at Chota Behar (See Daunt.) (Gaz., 25 Feb, 1862.)

*(402) Edwards, Private T., 42nd Royal Highlanders, Soudan, 13th March, 1884. For coolly defending a gun at the battle of Tamai, and sticking to it, although wounded. (Gaz., 21 May, 1884.)

*(397) Edwards, Lieutenant W. M. M. (now Captain), 74th Regiment, Egypt, 13th September, 1882. For rushing single-handed into a battery at Tel-el-Kebir, and killing the officer in command. (Gaz., 13 Feb., 1883.)

(119) Elphinstone, Lieutenant Howard Craufurd (since Major-General Sir, K.C.B.), R.E., Crimea, 18th June, 1855. For fearless conduct on the night after our unsuccessful attack on the Redan in commanding a party of volunteers who went to bring in our scaling ladders, and for, whilst doing so, rescuing twenty wounded men, all the while close to the enemy. Knight of the Legion of Honour. (Gaz., 4 June, 1858.)

(69) Elton, Captain Fred. Cockayne (since Lieutenant-Colonel), 55th Regiment (Westmoreland), Crimea, 4th August, 1855. When in command of a working party in the advanced trenches in front of the Quarries at Sebastopol, he displayed the most magnificent gallantry in encouraging his men, and when the fearful fire caused some hesitation among the party, he went into the open, and worked himself with pick and shovel. To quote the words of one of the party, "There was not another officer in the British Army who would have done what Captain Elton did that night." In March of the same year he volunteered with a few men to drive off the Russians, who were destroying one of our works, and was successful, taking a prisoner with his own hands. Again, on the night of the 7th June, he was the first to lead his men from the trenches, and to rally them several times in the quarries. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(98) Esmonde, Captain T. (late Lieutenant-Colonel), 18th Regiment (Royal Irish). Crimea. 18th and 20th June.

1855. For repeatedly rescuing wounded under grape and shell fire, and for extinguishing a fire-ball before it betrayed the position of his men, saving them from a heavy loss. (Gaz, 25 Sept., 1857.)

*(91) EVANS, Private Samuel, 19th Regiment, Crimea, 13th April, 1855. For repairing damage to an embrasure under a very heavy fire (Gaz, 23 June, 1857)

(268) EWART, Sergeant R., 5th Northumberland Fusiliers, India, 24th September, 1857. For going to the rescue of a wounded comrade, whose leg had been shot off at Lucknow, and bringing him into camp under a heavy fire (Gaz., 19 June, 1860.)

*(378) FARMER, Lance-Corporal J. J. (afterwards Corporal), Army Hospital Corps, Transvaal, 27th February, 1881. At the tragic affair of Majuba Hill he held a white flag above the wounded, and when his arm was shot through by the Boers he coolly said that he had another. He again raised the flag with the other arm, until that was shot through. (See account.) (Gaz, 17 May, 1881)

(224) FARQUHARSON, Lieutenant F. H., 42nd (Black Watch), India, 9th March, 1858. After storming a bastion and spiking two guns at Lucknow, he was severely wounded the following day. (Gaz., 21 June, 1859.)

(99) FARRELL, Quartermaster J., 17th Lancers, Crimea, 25th October, 1854. For remaining with a wounded officer, and assisting to bring him in, under a fire of shot and shell, after the Balaclava charge. (Gaz., 20 Nov., 1857)

(163) FFRENCH, Lieutenant A. K., 53rd Regiment, India, 16th November, 1857. For distinguished gallantry at the taking of the Secundra Bagh, where he was one of the first to enter, being afterwards elected by his brother officers for the distinction. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(114) FITZGERALD, Gunner R., Bengal Horse Artillery,

India, 28th September, 1857 For working his gun under a heavy fire, and clearing the road of the rebels at Bodlundshuhur. (Gaz, 24 April, 1858)

(289) Fitzgibbon, Hospital Apprentice A. F, Indian Medical Establishment, China, 21st August, 1860. For attending to the wounded, under a heavy fire, on two occasions at the Taku Forts (Gaz, 13 Aug, 1861)

*(371) Fitzpatrick, Private Francis, 94th Regiment, South Africa, 28th November, 1879 For helping to carry a wounded officer out of action, under a heavy fire, at the capture of Sekukuni's Town (See Flawn) (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1880)

*(370) Flawn, Private T., 94th Regiment, South Africa, 28th November, 1879 For gallantly assisting the preceding (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1880)

(214) Flinn, Drummer T, 64th Regiment, India, 28th November, 1857 For gallantry in a charge on the enemy's guns at Lucknow, where, although wounded, he engaged single-handed with two of the Sepoy gunners (Gaz, 12 April, 1859)

(137) Forrest, Captain G, Bengal Army, India, 11th May, 1857 For gallantry in the defence of the Delhi magazine (Gaz., 18 June, 1858)

(322) Fosbery, Lieutenant George Vincent (since Colonel), Volunteer with the 1st Punjaub Infantry (formerly of the 4th Bengal European Regiment), India, 30th October, 1863. The garrison of the Crag Picket at Umbeyla had been driven out by the hill-men, sixty being killed in a desperate hand-to-hand fight, and in the attempt to recapture it, while Colonel Keyes ascended by one path, Lieutenant Fosbery pushed up another, with a few men, among the high rocks, where only one or two could mount at a time. He was the first to get to the top, and when Colonel Keyes was wounded, he (Fosbery) pursued the routed enemy for some distance. (Gaz., 7 July, 1865)

*(395) Fowler, Private E (now Sergeant), 90th (Perthshire Light Infantry), Zululand, 28th March, 1879 For assisting to drive the enemy from a cave, at great risk, during the attack on Inhlobane Mountain. (Gaz, 7 April, 1882)

(276) Fraser, Major Charles Craufurd (late General Sir, C.B), 7th Hussars, India, 31st December, 1858 Captain Stisted and some men of the regiment were in danger of being drowned in the Raptee, while pursuing the rebels under a sharp musketry fire, and Major Fraser, although partially disabled from a severe wound received the previous June when leading his squadron against the fanatics at Nawabgunge, volunteered to swim out and assist them, for which he received the gold medal of the Royal Humane Society in addition to the V C. (Gaz, 9 Nov, 1860)

(192) Freeman, Private J, 9th Lancers, India, 10th October, 1857. For going to the assistance of a wounded officer at Agra, and pluckily defending him against numbers of the enemy. (Gaz, 24 Dec, 1858)

(117) Gardiner, Colour-Sergeant George, 57th Regiment, Crimea, 22nd March and 18th June, 1855 (1) For rallying a covering party which had been driven in by the Russians (2) For remaining under a terrible fire until he had expended all his ammunition in firing at the enemy on an exposed parapet. (Gaz., 4 June, 1858.)

*(149) Gardner, Quartermaster-Sergeant W., 42nd (Black Watch), India, 5th May, 1858. For saving the life of his Colonel (Cameron), who was attacked by three fanatics at Bareilly, Gardner killing two of them. (Gaz., 24 Aug., 1858)

(255) Garvin, Colour-Sergeant S, 60th King's Royal Rifles, India, 23rd June, 1857 For leading a small party and clearing the enemy out of a house at Delhi, and for conspicuous gallantry during the whole of the operations there (Gaz, 20 Jan, 1860)

*(337) GIFFORD, Lieutenant Edric Frederic (now Brevet-Major Lord), 24th Regiment, Ashantee, 1873, 1874 For his gallant scouting operations during the Ashantee War, especially Becquah He carried his life in his hand, and, hanging upon the rear of the enemy, discovered their positions, and with no other white man with him captured numerous prisoners, distinguishing himself particularly at the taking of Becquah, February 1st (Gaz, 28 March, 1874)

(148) GILL, Sergeant-Major P, Loodiana Regiment, India, 4th June, 1857 During the revolt at Benares, where Colonel Spottiswoode (afterwards Major-General), of the 37th Native Infantry, so gallantly distinguished himself, the Sergeant-Major displayed great pluck in helping an officer and his family to come into barracks from an outlying bungalow. He also saved the life of a non-com and twice that of an officer, attacking twenty armed rebels armed only with a sword (Gaz, 24 Aug, 1858)

*(159) GOATE, Lance-Corporal W., 9th Lancers, India After the charge against the rebels on the racecourse of Lucknow he picked up Major Smith, of the Queen's Bays, who was badly hit, and carried him on his back for some distance, then returning to charge the enemy single-handed, and eventually searching unsuccessfully for the Major's body. (See account.) (Gaz, 24 Dec, 1858.)

(306) GOODFELLOW, Lieutenant Charles Augustus (now Lieutenant-General), R.E, India, 6th October, 1859 Seeing a soldier of the 28th Regiment lying shot under the walls of the Fort of Beyt, he rushed through a sharp fire of matchlock balls, and carried him in, the poor fellow, however, proving to be dead. (Gaz., 16 April, 1863.)

(43) GOODLAKE, Captain Gerald Littlehales (late Lieutenant-General), Coldstream Guards, Crimea, 28th October, 1854. For distinguished gallantry in holding the Windmill Ravine against a large force of the enemy, his party killing one officer and thirty-seven Russians, and taking an officer and two men. Again for gallantly surprising a picket of the enemy at the bottom of the ravine, in November, their knapsacks and rifles falling into his hands Knight of the Legion of Honour. (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857)

*(410) GORDON, Lance-Corporal William James, 1st Battalion West India Regiment, Toniataba, West Africa, March 13th, 1892. In saving his officer from certain death at a loop-holed stockade, he was himself shot through the lungs, and for his gallantry on that and other occasions, he received the V C, being the third man of colour to whom it has been awarded. (Gaz., 9 Dec, 1892)

(16) GORMAN, Seaman J H, Crimea, Inkerman, 5th November, 1854 With two others, Reeves and Scofield, he displayed great gallantry in mounting a banquette, under a severe fire, and, collecting the muskets of wounded soldiers, resisted the Russians' advance (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857.)

*(234) GOUGH, Captain Charles John Stanley (now General Sir, K.C B.), 5th Bengal European Cavalry, 15th and 18th August, 1857, 27th January, and 23rd February, 1858. This recipient is one of the most distinguished of the V.C. heroes. (1) At Khurkowdah he saved his wounded brother, and killed two of the enemy. (2) On the 18th August he led a troop of the Guides in a charge and cut down two of the enemy's sowars, with one of whom he had a desperate hand-to-hand struggle (3) At Shumshabad he attacked one of the rebel leaders in a charge, ran him through with his sword, which was carried out of his hand, and then, defending himself with his revolver, shot two more of the enemy. (4) At Meangunge he rode to the assistance of Brevet-Major Anson, slew that officer's assailant, and cut down another of the enemy. (Gaz, 2 Sept., 1859.)

*(189) Gough, Lieutenant Hugh Henry (now General Sir, K C B) 1st Bengal European Light Cavalry, India, 15th November, 1857, 26th February, 1858 This worthy brother of the above-mentioned officer particularly distinguished himself near Alum Bagh, when in command of a party of the celebrated Hodson's Horse, by charging across a swamp and capturing two guns defended by a vastly superior body of the rebels While engaged with three sepoys his turban was slashed through and his horse wounded in two places Again, near Lucknow, the following year, he charged the guns, engaging in a series of single combats, having two horses killed under him, being severely wounded, receiving a ball through the leg while charging two rascals with fixed bayonets, and getting a shot through his helmet and another through his scabbard (Gaz., 24 Dec, 1858)

(90) Grady, Private T, afterwards Sergeant 4th Regiment (The King's Own), Crimea, 18th October, 22nd November, 1854. For repairing works under a heavy fire, assisted by another man, and bravely remaining at the front, when severely wounded, to encourage the weak force in the trenches (Gaz., 23 June, 1857)

*(35) Graham, Lieutenant Gerald, Royal Engineers, Crimea, 18th June, 1855 The present popular General, Sir Gerald, whose subsequent career is too well known to need mention in this place. For determined gallantry at the head of a ladder party, at the assault on the Redan, where, a tall man, he fearlessly exposed himself to encourage his party Afterwards, he brought in a wounded man, with the assistance of others, under a terrific fire, and, still not satisfied, rushed out of the trench again with Sapper Perie, and brought in some abandoned scaling ladders. He was twenty-three years old at that time Knight of the Legion of Honour (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(173) Graham, Private P., 90th Regiment (Perthshire L I.) India, 17th November, 1857 Elected by his comrades for rescuing a wounded man under a very heavy fire at Lucknow (Gaz., 24 Dec, 1858)

*(406) Grant, Lieutenant C J W. (now Brevet-Major), Indian Staff Corps, Burma, March, 1891 For distinguished gallantry in Manipur. (See account) (Gaz, 26 May, 1891)

(178) Grant, Private P, 93rd Highlanders, India, 16th November, 1857 Elected by his comrades for particular gallantry at Lucknow, where he killed five of the enemy with one of their own swords in defence of an officer carrying a captured colour (Gaz, 24 Dec., 1858)

(153) Green, Private P (afterwards Colour-Sergeant), 75th Regiment, India, 14th September, 1857. For rescuing a wounded comrade at the risk of his own life when hotly pressed by the enemy, in force, at Delhi (Gaz, 26 Oct, 1858)

(28) Grieve, Sergeant-Major J, 2nd Dragoons (Scots Greys) Crimea, 25th October, 1854. For riding to the rescue of an officer who was surrounded by the enemy at Balaclava, killing one, disabling and dispersing the others Cornet 1857, Adjutant 1859, Lieutenant 1863, retired about 1865. (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857.)

(331) Griffiths, Private W, 24th Regiment, Andaman Islands, 7th May, 1867 For assisting to save seventeen comrades from drowning He was killed at Isandhlwana (Gaz., 17 Dec., 1867)

(171) Guise, Major John Christopher (since Lieutenant-General, C B.), 90th (Perthshire L I), India, 16th and 17th November, 1857. Elected by his brother officers for conspicuous gallantry at Lucknow (Gaz, 24 Dec, 1858).

(211) Hackett, Lieutenant Thomas Bernard (since Brevet-Lieutenant-Colonel), 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers,

India, 18th November, 1857. He displayed daring gallantry at Secundra Bagh in running with others to the rescue of a corporal who was lying wounded and exposed to a very heavy fire. He exhibited conspicuous bravery in mounting to the roof of a bungalow, also under a heavy fire, and cutting down the thatch to prevent its igniting. (Gaz., 12 April, 1859)

*(88) Hale, Assistant-Surgeon T. Egerton, M.D., 7th Fusiliers, Crimea, 8th September, 1855. He remained in the 5th parallel alone with Captain Jones, who was dangerously wounded, and Lieutenant William Hope, who afterwards endeavoured to rally the men with the help of the gallant doctor. When the regiments had retired into the trenches, Hale cleared the most advanced sap of the wounded who lay there, and carried several wounded men from the open ground into the sap, assisted by Sergeant Charles Fisher, 7th Royal Fusiliers. (Gaz, 5 May, 1857)

*(210) Hall, Seaman W., India, 16th November, 1857 Hall, who was the first negro gazetted to the Cross, displayed great gallantry at a 24-pounder gun at the Shah Nujjiff, Lucknow, under Captain Peel, V C. (Gaz., 1 Feb., 1859)

*(71) Hamilton, Captain Thomas de Courcy (now Major-General), 68th Regiment, Crimea, 11th May, 1855 He displayed daring gallantry in resisting a most determined night sortie from Sebastopol, charging the Russians with a small force, driving them out of a battery, and saving the guns Knight of the Legion of Honour. (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857.)

(362) Hamilton, Lieutenant W. R P, Bengal Staff Corps, Afghanistan, 7th April, 1879 For leading a charge against superior numbers at Futtehabad, rescuing a sowar, and cutting down three of the enemy, being himself unfortunately killed five months afterwards at Cabul. (Gaz., 7 Oct., 1879)

(386) HAMMOND, A G., Captain (now Colonel), Distinguished Service Order, Bengal Staff Corps, Afghanistan, 14th December, 1879 For true British pluck in defending a hill with a rifle and bayonet, covering a retiring party, and assisting to rescue a wounded sepoy under a close and heavy fire. (Gaz., 18 Oct., 1881)

(105) HANCOCK, Private T, 9th Lancers, India, 19th June, 1857. For remaining by General Hope Grant in action and offering him his own horse, the General's having been shot at Delhi (Gaz, 15 Jan., 1858.)

(396) HARDING, Gunner I (since Chief Gunner), Egypt, 11th July, 1882 For picking up a live shell which had dropped on board H M S Alexandra, at Alexandria, and plunging it into a bucket of water (Gaz., 15 Sept., 1882.)

(184) HARRINGTON, Lieutenant H E, Bengal Artillery, India, 14th to 22nd November, 1857 Elected by the officers of his battery for gallantry during the first relief of Lucknow (Gaz, 24 Dec, 1858)

(157) HARRISON, Boatswain's Mate J, R N., India, 16th November, 1857 For climbing a tree under fire, close to the Shah Nujjiff, Lucknow, to fire on the enemy (Gaz, 24 Dec., 1858.)

*(354) HART, Lieutenant R C (now Colonel), R.E, Afghanistan, 31st January, 1879 For running 1,200 yards across rocks, under fire, at Dakkah, to save the life of a wounded native soldier. "I'm going for the V.C. to-day," he had said that morning! Ten years before that he had received the silver medal of the Royal Humane Society for saving life at Boulogne, a similar medal from the mayor of the town, and a first-class medal of honour from the President of the French Republic. He has since received a clasp from the R.H S for saving life in the Ganges Canal at Roorkee, December, 1884. (Gaz, 10 June, 1879)

(267) HARTIGAN, Sergeant H, 9th Lancers, India, 8th.

June, and 10th October, 1857 For rescuing a wounded comrade, who was surrounded by the enemy at Budlé-Ke-Serai, and also for rescuing a sergeant from four sepoys who had crept into the camp at Agra disguised as musicians, being himself wounded (Gaz, 19 June, 1860)

*(382) Hartley, Surgeon-Major E B. (now Surgeon-Lieutenant-Colonel), Cape Mounted Rifles, South Africa, 5th June, 1879 For gallantry at Morosi's Mountain in tending the wounded under heavy fire, bearing a wounded corporal in his arms to a place of safety, and returning again to continue his noble work (Gaz, 7 Oct, 1881)

*(104) Havelock, Lieutenant Henry Marshman (now Lieutenant-General Sir H. M Havelock-Allan, Bart, K C B), 10th Regiment, India, 16th July, 1857 For daring bravery at Cawnpore (See account) (Gaz, 15 Jan., 1858)

(182) Hawkes, Private D, Rifle Brigade, India, 11th March, 1858 For rescuing a wounded man, under a heavy fire, although he was himself wounded, during the final relief of Lucknow. (Gaz, 24 Dec., 1858)

(111) Hawthorne, Bugler R, 52nd Regiment, India, 14th September, 1857 He was one of the explosion party at the celebrated Cashmere Gate of Delhi (See account) (Gaz, 24 April, 1858)

(326) Heaphy, Major C, Auckland Militia, New Zealand, 11th February, 1864 For assisting a wounded man of the 40th under a tremendous fire on the Mangapiko River, the man having fallen in the middle of the enemy (Gaz, 8 Feb, 1867)

*(252) Heathcote, Lieutenant A S, 60th (King's Royal Rifles), June to September, 1857. He was elected by the officers of his regiment for distinguished gallantry during the siege of Delhi, where he repeatedly volunteered for the most dangerous services (Gaz, 20 Jan., 1860.)

(205) HENEAGE, Captain Clement Walker (since Major), 8th Hussars, India, 17th June, 1858 He was selected, together with Sergeant Ward, Farrier Hollis, and Private Pearson, for gallantry in a desperate charge at Gwalior, when a squadron of the King's Royal Irish routed the rebels, rode through the rebel camp, dashed into two batteries, captured a couple of guns, and brought them safely out, under a tremendous fire from the fort and town (Gaz, 28 Jan., 1859)

(32) HENRY, Sergeant-Major A. (afterwards Captain), R A., Crimea, 5th November, 1854 For gallantly sticking to the defence of his battery at Inkerman, where he received twelve bayonet wounds (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857)

(12) HEWETT, Lieutenant W N W, Acting-Mate H M.S Beagle (afterwards Vice-Admiral Sir, K C B), Crimea, 26th October and 5th November, 1854 For pluckily defending his battery with one gun against the Russians, and subsequent gallantry at Inkerman Knight of the Legion of Honour (See account) (Gaz., 24 Feb, 1857.)

*(389) HILL, Lieutenant A. R (now Captain), 58th Regiment, Transvaal, 28th January, 1881 For bringing two wounded soldiers out of action at Laing's Neck under a heavy Boer fire. Before that he had tried to save Lieutenant Baillie, but, as he was carrying him away in his arms, the poor fellow was hit again and killed. (Gaz, 13 March, 1882.)

(172) HILL, Sergeant S, 90th Regiment, India, 16th and 17th November, 1857. For saving the life of Captain Irby, at the Secundra Bagh, Lucknow, for rescuing wounded under heavy fire, and general gallantry during the relief. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

*(108) HILLS, Lieutenant James, Bengal Horse Artillery (now Lieutenant-General Sir J. Hills-Johnes, G C B), India, 9th July, 1857. For the gallant defence of his guns at Delhi against horse, foot, and artillery (See account); (Gaz, 24 April, 1858.)

* (304) Hinckley, Seaman G, China, 9th October, 1862 For carrying wounded men out of danger, under heavy fire, at Fung Wha. (Gaz, 6 Oct, 1863)

* (251) Hitch, Private F., 24th Regiment, Zululand, 22nd and 23rd January, 1879 For great gallantry at Rorke's Drift in the defence of the hospital patients, although wounded himself (See account) (Gaz, 2 May, 1879)

(325) Hodgi, Private S, 4th West India Regiment, West Africa, River Gambia, 30th June, 1866 For distinguished bravery at the storming of the stockaded town of Tubabecolong, where he was terribly wounded (Gaz, 4 Jan, 1867)

(207) Hollis, Farrier G, 8th Hussars, India, 17th June, 1858 For great bravery in the charge of the Hussars at Gwalior (See Heneage) (Gaz, 28 Jan, 1859)

(130) Holloway, Private J, 78th Highlanders, India, 26th September, 1857 For distinguished conduct at Lucknow (See account.) (Gaz, 18 June, 1858)

(129) Holmes, Private J, 84th Regiment (York and Lancaster), India, October, 1857 For volunteering to assist at the guns during the advance on Lucknow, in spite of the significant fact that nearly all the gunners had been shot. (Gaz, 18 June, 1858)

* (135) Home, Surgeon Anthony Dickson, 90th (Perthshire Light Infantry) (now Surgeon-General Sir A D, K C.B), India, 26th September, 1857 For noble conduct at Lucknow in defending his wounded. (See account) (Gaz., 18 June, 1858)

(144) Home, Lieutenant D. C, Bengal Engineers, India, 14th September, 1857. He was one of the Cashmere Gate party at Delhi, and had the Cross provisionally conferred upon him by General Wilson, but, unhappily, died before it was confirmed.' (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

*(347) Hook, Private H., 24th Regiment, Zululand, 22nd and 23rd January, 1879. One of the Rorke's Drift heroes, who so gallantly defended the hospital patients. (See account.) (Gaz., 2 May, 1879.)

(87) Hope, Lieutenant W. (late Lieutenant-Colonel), 7th Fusiliers, Crimea, 18th June, 1855. For rescuing a wounded officer in broad daylight under the battery fire. (Gaz., 5 May, 1857.)

(52) Hughes, Corporal M., 7th Fusiliers, Crimea, 7th and 18th June, 1855. For twice carrying ammunition under a heavy fire, and twice rescuing a wounded officer and a wounded soldier. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(84) Humpston, Sergeant R., Rifle Brigade, Crimea, 22nd April, 1855. For capturing one of the enemy's rifle-pits in broad daylight, with the help of a comrade. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(21) Ingouville, Captain of Mast G., R.N., Baltic, 13th July, 1855. For jumping overboard at Viborg, and swimming to a disabled cutter, which had drifted under the enemy's works, and recovering it, although he was badly wounded at the time. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

*(200) Innes, Lieutenant John J. McLeod (now Hon. Lieutenant-General), Bengal Engineers, India, 23rd February, 1858. At Sultanpore he galloped in advance of the leading skirmishers, and secured a gun which the enemy were abandoning. They rallied round another one, which they pointed at our columns; and, quite alone, he rode at it, shot the gunner, and kept the artillerymen at bay until his own fellows came up, a hundred matchlock men firing at him all the while from some huts. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(166) Irwin, Private C., 53rd Regiment, India, 16th November, 1857. Badly wounded and covered with blood, he was the first to enter the Secundra Bagh at Lucknow and was chosen for the Cross by his comrades. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(228) Jarrett, Lieutenant H. C. T. (afterwards Colonel), 16th Bengal Native Infantry, India, 14th October, 1858, For a gallant attempt, with only four men, to seize a house at Baroun, occupied by seventy sepoys. (Gaz., 21 June, 1859.)

(277) Jee, Surgeon J. (now Surgeon-Major Deputy Inspector-General, C.B.), 78th Highlanders, India, 25th September, 1857. For great gallantry at Lucknow when in charge of the wounded. (Gaz., 9 Nov., 1860.)

(185) Jennings, Roughrider E., Bengal Artillery, India, 14th to 22nd November, 1857. For conspicuous gallantry at Lucknow, for which he was elected by his battery. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

*(241) Jerome, Lieutenant Henry Edward (now Major-General), 86th Regiment, India, 3rd April and 23rd May, 1858. (1) For conspicuous gallantry at Jhansi in having, with the assistance of Private Byrne, carried away Lieutenant Sewell, who was severely wounded, from a very exposed place under a terrific fire. (2) For gallant conduct at the capture of the Fort of Chandairee, the storming of Jhansi, and in an action with a superior rebel force on the Jumna, when he was severely wounded. (Gaz., 11 Nov., 1859.)

(23) Johnson, Stoker W., R.N., Baltic, 9th to 12th August, 1854. For assisting to capture the Russian despatches on the Island of Wardo, when he took three of the escort prisoners. (See Bythesea.) (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(141) Jones, Lieutenant Alfred Stowell (afterwards Lieut.-Colonel) 9th Lancers, India, 8th June, 1857. Extract from Sir Hope Grant's despatch: "The cavalry charged the rebels, and rode through them. Lieutenant Jones, of the 9th Lancers, with his squadron, captured one of their guns, killing the drivers, and, with Lieutenant-Colonel Yule's assistance, turned it upon a village occupied by the rebels, who were quickly dislodged. This was a well-conceived act, gallantly executed." Yule was killed before Delhi, both thighs being broken by musket balls, his head pierced just above the eye, his throat cut, and his hands much gashed, as if held up to protect himself. His sword is now in the Museum of the London Guildhall. (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

(97) Jones, Captain H. M., 7th Royal Fusiliers, Crimea, 7th June, 1855. For repeated gallantry in repelling night-attacks, remaining at his post until morning, although wounded. (Gaz., 25 Sept., 1857.)

*(349) Jones, Private Robert, 24th Regiment, Zululand, 22nd and 23rd January, 1879. For great gallantry at Rorke's Drift in defence of the hospital hut. (See account.) (Gaz., 2 May, 1879.)

*(348) Jones, Private William, 24th Regiment, Zululand, 22nd and 23rd January, 1879. Another Rorke's Drift man. (See account.) (Gaz., 2 May, 1879.)

(230) Kavanagh, T. Henry, Esq., Assistant-Commissioner in Oude, I.C.S, India, 8th November, 1857. After bravely assisting in the defence of Lucknow, he volunteered to reach the relieving force, and guided them to the Residency, disguised as a native, in circumstances of the deadliest peril. (Gaz., 6 July, 1859.)

*(290) Keatinge, Captain Richard Harte (afterwards General, C.S.I.), Bombay Artillery, India, 17th March, 1858. During the assault of Chandairee he led a column through the breach, was one of the first to enter, and was severely wounded by the heavy cross-fire. He had discovered a small path leading across the ditch the night before, and thus saved the column great loss. Clearing the breach, he led into the fort, where he was struck down by another dangerous wound. (Gaz, 25 Feb., 1862.)

(6) Kellaway, Boatswain J, R.N., Sea of Azov, Crimea, September, 1855. His comrade, Mr. Odevaine, having fallen, Kellaway returned to his assistance, and laid about him stoutly, but, in spite of their resistance, they were both taken by the Russians. (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857.)

*(194) Kells, Lance-Corporal R. (afterwards Trumpet-Major), 9th Lancers, India, 28th September, 1857. For pluckily defending his wounded officer at Boolundshuhur against a number of rebels, and remaining with him until the danger was over. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(165) Kenny, Private J., 53rd Regiment, India, 16th November, 1857. Elected by his comrades for bravery at the taking of the Secundra Bagh, Lucknow, where he fearlessly risked his own life to bring up ammunition to his company under a severe cross-fire. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(109) Kerr, Lieutenant W A., Southern Mahratta Irregular Horse, India, 10th July, 1857. For splendid gallantry in the storming of a fortification near Kolapore, with seventeen dismounted troopers, and killing or capturing the thirty-four mutineers, after a desperate resistance. (See account.) (Gaz., 24 April, 1858.)

(260) Kirk, Private J., 10th Regiment, India, 4th June, 1857. For assisting to rescue an officer and his family, who were besieged by the mutineers in a house at Benares, and succeeding in rescuing them at the risk of his life. (Gaz., 20 Jan., 1860.)

(82) Knox, Sergeant John Simpson (now Brevet-Major), Scots Fusilier Guards and Rifle Brigade, Crimea, 20th September, 1854, and 18th June, 1855. (1) For great exertions in reforming the ranks at the Alma when they had been broken by a retiring regiment. (2) For gallantry with a ladder party at the storming of the Redan, where he was twice wounded, and lost his arm. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(126) Lambert, Sergeant-Major G., 84th Regiment, India, 29th July, 16th August, and 25th September, 1857. For distinguished conduct at Oonao, Bithoor, and Lucknow. (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

(287) Lane, Private T., 67th Regiment, China, 21st August, 1860. For swimming the ditch at the Taku forts, and forcing an entrance, when he was severely wounded. (See Burslem.) (Gaz, 13 Aug., 1861)

(187) Laughnan, Gunner T., Bengal Artillery, India, 14th to 22nd November, 1857. Elected by his comrades for very conspicuous gallantry at the relief of Lucknow, under Havelock and Outram. (See Harrington.) (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(249) Lawrence, Lieutenant S. H., 32nd Regiment, India, 7th July and 26th September, 1857. During a sortie at Lucknow he was the first to mount a ladder and burst through the window of a house held by the rebels. On another occasion he charged in advance of his company with two men, and seized a nine-pounder. (Gaz., 21 Nov., 1859).

* (368) Leach, Captain E. P. (now Colonel, C B), R E, Afghanistan, 17th March, 1879. For promptly charging a superior force at Maidanah, with a party of the 45th (Rattray's) Sikhs, saving his force from annihilation, and getting severely wounded. (Gaz., 9 Dec., 1879.)

* (356) Lees, Major W. K. (now Hon. Major-General), C.B., 13th Regiment, Zululand, 28th March, 1879. For saving the life of Lieutenant Smith, Frontier Light Horse, under a heavy fire, during the retreat from Inhlobane Mountain. (Gaz., 17 June, 1879.)

(121) Leitch, Colour-Sergeant P., R.E., Crimea, 18th

June, 1855. Under a heavy fire, the brave fellow struggled to form a caponnière, or passage, and ramp, across the ditch of the Redan, by tearing down gabions from the parapet, filling them, and placing them in position, working away until he was disabled by wounds. (Gaz, 4 June, 1858.)

(195) Leith, Lieutenant J. (afterwards Major), 14th King's Light Dragoons (now Hussars), India, 1st April, 1858. For charging alone and rescuing a brother officer at Betwah from a number of rebels. (Gaz, 24 Dec., 1858)

*(36) Lennox, Lieutenant Wilbraham Oates, R.E. (now General, K.C.B.), Crimea, 20th November, 1854. For extreme coolness and gallantry in establishing a lodgment in Tryon's rifle pit at Sebastopol and assisting to repel the enemy, the operation drawing forth a special order from the French General, Canrobert. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(285) Lenon, Lieutenant Edmund H. (afterwards Major), 67th Regiment, China, 21st August, 1860. For gallantry in swimming the ditch at the Taku forts, which he was one of the first to enter. (See Rogers) (Gaz, 13 Aug., 1861)

*(405) Le Quesne, Surgeon-Captain Ferdinand Simeon (L.R.C.P.), Army Medical Staff, Burma, May 4th, 1889. During the attack on the village of Tartun, he remained close to the enemy's stockades under a continuous fire for nearly a quarter of an hour dressing the wounds of Lieutenant Michael, Norfolk Regiment, who afterwards died. The doctor was severely wounded himself soon afterwards in attending to another officer. (Gaz., 29 Oct., 1889.)

(38) Lindrim, or Lendrim, Quartermaster-Sergeant W. J., R.E., Crimea, 14th February, 11th and 20th April, 1855. For particularly plucky conduct in climbing on to a magazine and succeeding in extinguishing burning sand bags and repairing the breach under fire. Also for superintending 150 French soldiers in replacing capsized gabions under a very heavy fire, and volunteering to destroy Russian rifle-pits. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

*(46) LINDSAY, Lieutenant Robert James (now Lieutenant-Colonel Loyd-Lindsay Lord Wantage, K.C B.), Scots Fusilier Guards, Crimea, 20th September, and 5th November, 1854. He carried the Queen's Colour at the Alma with great distinction, assisting to rally his men, the colour receiving twenty bullet wounds. At Inkerman he was also remarkable for his courage, charging a superior force with a few men and repulsing it. His subsequent services to our Volunteers are well known. Knight of the Legion of Honour. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

*(411) LLOYD, Surgeon-Major O. E. Pennefather, Army Medical Staff, Burma, January 6th, 1893 For gallantry and self-devotion during an attack on the Sima outposts. (See account.) (Gaz., 2 Jan., 1894.)

*(24) LUCAS, Lieutenant C. D. (mate) (now Rear-Admiral), R.N., Baltic, 21st June, 1854 He is conspicuous as being the senior winner of the distinction, which he gained off Bomarsund by pitching a live shell overboard that had fallen on the deck of the Hecla. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(282) LUCAS, Colour-Sergeant J., 40th Regiment, New Zealand, 18th March, 1861. For assisting a wounded officer under a very heavy fire, and remaining at his post until help reached him. (Gaz., 17 July, 1861.)

(76) LUMLEY, Major C. H , 97th Regiment, Crimea, 8th September, 1855. He was one of the first to enter the Redan, displaying great bravery on the occasion, and being twice severely wounded. He shot down two Russians; was felled by a stone; recovered and was cheering on his men when he was shot in the mouth. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(56) LYONS, Private J., 19th Regiment, Crimea, 10th

June, 1855. For pitching a live shell over the parapet, when it fell among the guard. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(394) Lysons, Lieutenant H (now Captain), 90th Regiment, Zululand, 28th March, 1879. For great pluck in clearing the enemy out of a cave during the attack on the Inhlobane Mountain. (Gaz., 7 April, 1882.)

*(237) Lyster, Lieutenant Harry Hammon (now Lieutenant-General, C.B.), 72nd Bengal Native Infantry, India, 23rd May, 1858. Under the immediate eye of Sir Hugh Rose, who reported the act, the gallant Lieutenant charged a skirmishing square of the retreating rebels at Calpee alone, broke it, and killed two or three sepoys with his own hand (Gaz., 21 Oct., 1859.)

(179) M'Bean, Lieutenant and Adjutant William (afterwards Major-General), 93rd Sutherland Highlanders, India, 11th March, 1858. At the Begum Bagh, Lucknow, he slew eleven rebels in the main breach. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(70) McCorrie, Private C., 57th Regiment, Crimea, 23rd June, 1855. For pitching a live shell over the parapet (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(380) McCrea, Surgeon J. F., 1st Regiment Cape Mounted Yeomanry, South Africa, 14th January, 1881. For tending the wounded under a heavy fire, although hit himself, and afterwards bearing them to shelter before attending to his own hurts, at Tweefontein, Basutoland. (Gaz., 28 June, 1881.)

(65) McDermond, Private C., 47th Regiment, Crimea, 5th November, 1854. He rescued a wounded officer at Inkerman from a number of Russians, and killed the man who had wounded him. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(261) McDonell, William Fraser, Esq., Bengal Civil Service, Magistrate of Sarun, India, 30th July, 1857. During our retreat from Arrah, he climbed outside a native boat under an incessant fire, and cut the lashings of the rudder, enabling the boat to obey the helm, and saving thirty-five British soldiers from certain death. (Gaz, 17 Feb., 1860.)

(229) McGOVERN, Private John, 1st Bengal European Fusiliers, India, 23rd June, 1857. He was greatly distinguished during the operations before Delhi, and risked his own life under a heavy fire to save that of a wounded comrade. (Gaz., 21 June, 1859.)

(83) McGREGOR, Private R., Rifle Brigade, Crimea, 22nd April, 1855. After crossing the open under fire, he cleared two Russians out of their rifle-pit and calmly occupied it himself, performing a similar act the following July. (Gaz., 24 Feb, 1857.)

(47) McKECHNIE, Sergeant J, Scots Fusilier Guards, Crimea, 20th September, 1854. For helping to rally his comrades round the colours, and behaving with great gallantry at the Alma. (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857.)

(307) McKENNA, Colour-Sergeant E., 65th Regiment (2nd Yorkshire, North Riding), New Zealand, 7th September, 1863. For drawing off a small force through difficult country swarming with Maoris, both his officers being shot. (Gaz., 19 Jan., 1864.)

*(311) M'NEILL, Lieutenant-Colonel John Carstairs (afterwards Major General Sir, K.C.B., K.C.M.G), 107th Regiment, New Zealand, 30th March, 1864. For returning alone under a heavy fire to assist Private Vosper of the Colonial Defence Force, whose horse had thrown him. The Colonel caught his horse and helped him mount, the enemy firing sharply all the time, and being, moreover, so near that the two had to gallop as hard as they could to escape. (Gaz., 16 Aug., 1864.)

(213) McPHERSON, Colour-Sergeant S., 78th Highlanders (Ross-shire Buffs), India, 26th September, 1857. For rescuing a wounded private of his company who was lying in an exposed position, at tremendous personal risk; the Sergeant besides behaved with great gallantry on more than one occasion in action. (Gaz, 12 April, 1859)

(246) McQuirt, Private B., 95th Regiment, India, 6th January, 1858. For a plucky hand-to-hand encounter during the attack on Rowa, where he received six wounds and defeated three rebels. (Gaz, 11 Nov., 1859.)

(284) M'Dougall, Private John, 44th Regiment, China, 21st August, 1860. He swam the ditch at the Taku Forts, and was one of the first men on the walls (Gaz, 13 Aug., 1861.)

(338) M'Gaw, Lance-Sergeant S., 42nd Highlanders, Ashantee, 21st January, 1874 For leading his section through the bush for an entire day, although severely wounded at the beginning of the affair of Amoaful. (Gaz, 28 March, 1874)

(202) M'Guire, Sergeant J., 1st Bengal European Fusiliers, India, 14th September, 1857. For saving many lives at the terrible risk of his own at Delhi by throwing burning ammunition cases over the parapet into the river. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(269) M'Hale, Private P., 5th Northumberland Fusiliers, India, 2nd October and 22nd September, 1857. He was a celebrated character at Lucknow from his marvellous bravery in attacking the mutineers, striking terror into them by his personal prowess. He was twice among the foremost to seize guns under fire. (Gaz, 19 June, 1860.)

(188) M'Innes, Gunner H., Bengal Artillery, India, 14th to 22nd November, 1857. He was elected by his comrades for conspicuous gallantry at Lucknow. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(125) M'Master, Valentine M., Assistant Surgeon 78th Highlanders, India, 25th September, 1857 For tending the wounded during the first relief of Lucknow, under heavy fire. (See account.) (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

(64) M'Wheeney, Sergeant W., 44th Regiment, Crimea, 20th October and 5th December, 1854, and 18th June, 1855. He saved two lives under a heavy fire, and volunteered for the advance guard on the 18th June. During the whole of the war he was never absent from duty. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(120) Macdonald, Colour-Sergeant Henry (afterwards Captain), R.E., Crimea, 19th April, 1855. For gallant conduct when effecting a lodgment in the enemy's rifle-pits in front of the left advance of the right attack on Sebastopol, and for subsequent valour when the command devolved upon him, his officers being wounded, in persisting in carrying on the sap in spite of the repeated attacks of the enemy. (Gaz., 4 June, 1858.)

(336) Macintyre, Major Donald (afterwards Major-General), Bengal Staff Corps, Looshai, India, 4th January, 1872. For gallantry at the storming of a stockade at Lalgnoora under a severe fire. (Gaz, 27 Sept., 1872.)

(177) Mackay, Private D., 93rd Highlanders, India, 16th November, 1857. Elected by his comrades for his conduct at the Secundra Bagh, Lucknow, where he captured the rebels' colours after a gallant struggle. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(131) MacManus, Private P., 5th Northumberland Fusiliers, India, 26th September, 1857. For gallantly defending a party besieged in a house in Lucknow by firing on the mutineers, and remaining outside to do so, using a pillar as protection. He also rescued a wounded officer under a murderous shower of musketry, and was badly hit himself. (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

(124) Macpherson, Lieutenant Herbert Taylor (afterwards

Major-General Sir, K.C.B., K.C.S.I.), 78th Ross-shire Buffs, India, 25th September, 1857. For bravery when Adjutant of the Regiment, in leading his men on a couple of brass 9-pounders at Lucknow, which they captured after a dashing bayonet charge. He died of fever at Prome, October 20th, 1889, leaving a gallant record of distinguished service. (See account.) (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

(63) MADDEN, Sergeant-Major A., 41st Welsh Regiment, Crimea, 5th November, 1854. Leading a party of his battalion at the battle of Inkerman, they captured a Russian officer and fourteen privates, three of whom he took with his own hand. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

*(334) MAGNER, Drummer M., 33rd Regiment (Duke of Wellington's), Abyssinia, 13th April, 1868. He was one of the first to enter Magdala. (Gaz., 28 July, 1868.)

(127) MAHONEY, Sergeant P., 1st Madras European Fusiliers, India, 21st September, 1857. For assisting to capture the colours of the 1st Native Infantry Regiment, which had mutinied at Mangulwar. (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

*(272) MALCOLMSON, Lieutenant John Grant (now retired, Gentlemen-at-Arms), 3rd Bombay Light Cavalry, Persia, 8th February, 1857. For gallantry at the battle of Koosh-Ab, where he rescued Lieutenant Moore. (See Moore, also account.) (Gaz., 3 Aug, 1860.)

(96) MALONE, Sergeant Joseph (afterwards Riding-Master), 13th Light Dragoons (now Hussars), Crimea, 25th October, 1854. For remaining with Captain Webb, who was wounded, after the charge of Balaclava, his own horse having been shot, until help came. (See account.) (Gaz., 25 Sept., 1857.)

(231) MANGLES, Ross Lowis, Esq., Bengal Civil Service, India, 30th July, 1857. Mr. Mangles volunteered to serve with the troops despatched to the relief of Arrah. The force fell into an ambush during the night, and when retreating next morning, Mr. Mangles, although wounded, dressed the wounds of a private of H.M. 37th under a murderous fire, which killed or wounded nearly the whole detachment, and then carried him for several miles in safety to the boats. (Gaz., 6 July, 1859.)

(342) MANLEY, Assistant-Surgeon W. G. Nicholas (since Surgeon-General), R.A., New Zealand, 29th April, 1864. For brave conduct during the assault on the rebel Pah near Tauranga, where he nobly risked his own life to save Commander Hay, R.N., and others. He volunteered to accompany the storming party into the Pah, attended Commander Hay when he was carried out mortally wounded, and, volunteering to return in quest of others, was one of the last to quit the place He has also the bronze medal of the Royal Humane Society for saving life the year following. (Gaz, 23 Sept., 1864)

(400) MARLING, Lieutenant P. S. (afterwards Captain), 60th Rifles, Soudan, 13th March, 1884. For saving the life of Private Morley, 35th Regiment, at Tamai. (Gaz, 21 May, 1884.)

(401) MARSHALL, Quartermaster-Sergeant W. T. (afterwards Captain), 19th Hussars (Princess of Wales's Own), Soudan, 29th February, 1884 For saving the life of Colonel Barrow at El-Teb, the Colonel lying severely wounded and his horse killed. (Gaz., 21 May, 1884.)

(122) MAUDE, Captain Francis Cornwallis (since Colonel, C.B.), R.A., India, 12th July, 1857. Although a third of his men had been killed, he advanced gallantly and bore down the natives, Sir James Outram saying that the attack appeared to him to indicate no reckless or foolhardy daring, but the calm heroism of a true soldier, and that but for Captain Maude's nerve and coolness the army could not have advanced. (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

*(50) MAUDE, Major Frederick Francis (afterwards Sir

F. F., G.C.B., K.L.H.), 3rd Regiment, "The Buffs" 8th September, 1855. For conspicuous and devoted bravery when in command of the covering and ladder party of the 2nd division at the Redan. After entering he held a position between traverses with only nine or ten men, and would not retire until all hope of support was over and he was dangerously wounded. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857)

(297) Mayo, Midshipman A., Royal (Indian) Navy, India, 22nd November, 1857. For heading a charge at Dacca, under a destructive fire, against two 6-pounder guns. (Gaz., 25 Feb., 1862)

(352) Melvill, Lieutenant T., 24th Regiment, Zululand, 22nd January, 1879. This officer is well known for a most heroic attempt to save the colours of his regiment after Isandhlwana, losing his life in so doing. (Gaz., 2 May, 1879)

(226) Miller, Private D., 42nd Regiment (Black Watch), India, 15th January, 1859 For splendid conduct at Mayleh Ghaut, where he went to the front and directed his company, all his officers being killed or wounded. (Gaz., 21 June, 1859.)

(217) Miller, Lieutenant-Colonel F, Royal Artillery, Crimea, 5th November, 1854. During the battle of Inkerman he was seen to tackle three Russians, and defended his battery with distinguished gallantry when surrounded. (Gaz., 6 May, 1859)

*(296) Miller, Conductor J. (afterwards Hon. Major), Bengal Ordnance, India, 28th October, 1857. For going to the rescue of a wounded officer at Futtehpore, and, though himself severely wounded, carrying him out of action. (Gaz., 25 Feb., 1862.)

(310) Mitchell, Captain of the Foretop S., H.M.S. Harrier, New Zealand, 29th April, 1864. For bringing Commander Hay, who was mortally wounded, out of the Gate-Pah, although that officer ordered him to seek his own safety. He was specially recommended by Commodore Sir William Wiseman, Bart., C.B. (Gaz., 19 July, 1864.)

*(303) Monaghan, Trumpeter T., 2nd Dragoon Guards (Queen's Bays), India, 8th October, 1858. For saving the life of his Colonel from a large body of rebels near Sundeela, Oude. (Gaz., 11 Nov., 1862.)

(212) Monger, Private G., 23rd Welsh Fusiliers, India, 18th November, 1857. For great gallantry in rescuing a wounded comrade from an exposed position at the Secundra Bagh, Lucknow. (Gaz., 12 April, 1859.)

*(271) Moore, Lieutenant and Adjutant Arthur Thomas (afterwards Major-General, C.B.), 3rd Bombay Light Cavalry, Persia, 8th February, 1857. For leaping his horse into a square at Koosh-Ab, and, the horse being killed, attempting to fight his way through the Persians with a broken sword. (Gaz., 3 Aug., 1860.)

(360) Moore, Colonel H. G., C.B., 88th Regiment (Connaught Rangers), South Africa, 29th December, 1877. For a desperate attempt to save the life of a soldier who was surrounded by the Kaffirs at Komgha, in Gaikaland, and persisting in his efforts until the man was killed, shooting two of the enemy, and getting severely assegaied. He was ultimately drowned in Ireland. (Gaz., 27 June, 1879.)

(274) Morley, Private S., 2nd Batt., Military Train, India, 15th April, 1855. For saving the life of Lieutenant Hamilton, who was wounded and surrounded by the enemy in force, with the assistance of Private Murphy, near Azimghur. (Gaz., 7 Aug., 1860.)

*(118) Mouat, Surgeon James (afterwards Surgeon-General Sir J., K.C.B., Q.H.S.), 6th Dragoons (Inniskillings), Crimea, 25th October, 1854. For voluntarily going to the assistance of Major Morris, 17th Lancers, who was lying badly wounded in an exposed position after the Balaclava charge, and saving that officer's life by dressing his wounds in presence of the enemy. Knight of the Legion of Honour. (Gaz., 4 June, 1858.)

*(54) MOYNIHAN, Sergeant A., Promoted Ensign, 90th Perthshire Light Infantry, Crimea, 8th September, 1855. For encountering five Russians hand-to-hand and killing them all at the Redan, and rescuing a wounded officer under fire. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

*(376) MULLANE, Sergeant Patrick, R.H.A., Afghanistan, 27th July, 1880. For bringing a wounded comrade out of action. Seeing the man—a driver—fall from his horse, he rushed up, and lifted him on to the limber, mounted his horse, and galloped the gun out of action, the enemy being a few yards off. During the retreat from Maiwand he proceeded to a village, under heavy fire, to get water for the wounded and dying (Gaz., 17 May, 1881.)

(278) MUNRO, Colour-Sergeant J., 93rd Highlanders, India, 16th November, 1857. For rescuing a wounded officer at Lucknow and carrying him to a place of refuge, being severely wounded during the process. (Gaz., 9 Nov., 1860.)

(219) MURPHY, Private M., Military Train, India, 15th April, 1858. For assisting Private Morley to save Lieutenant Hamilton at Azimghur. (See Morley.) (Gaz., 27 May, 1859.)

*(328) MURPHY, Private T., 24th Regiment, Andaman Islands, 7th May, 1867. For assisting to save the lives of seventeen drowning comrades. (See Bell, Cooper, Douglas, and Griffiths.) (Gaz., 17 Dec., 1867.)

*(391) MURRAY, Lance-Corporal J., 94th Regiment, Transvaal, 16th January, 1881. For saving the life of a wounded private of the 21st Regiment at Elandsfontein by carrying him for 1,000 yards, or thereabouts, under a heavy fire. (Gaz, 13 March, 1882)

*(318) MURRAY, Sergeant J., 68th Regiment (Durham Light Infantry), New Zealand, 21st June, 1864. For attacking a Maori rifle-pit at Tauranga single-handed, and clearing out the ten natives who held it, killing or wounding every one of them. (Gaz., 4 Nov., 1864)

(168) MYLOT, Private P., 84th Regiment (York and Lancaster), India, 12th July, 1857. During the first relief of the Lucknow garrison he was the first to capture an enclosure from the mutineers, under terrible fire. He was conspicuous in every engagement that his regiment took part in, and was elected by the privates of his battalion to receive the Cross, being also promoted to the rank of ensign. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858)

*(196) NAPIER, Sergeant W., 13th (Somersetshire Light Infantry), India, 6th April, 1858. For a very plucky action at Azimghur, where he bound up a wounded private after rescuing him from the mutineers, and afterwards carried him out of danger under a heavy fire. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(181) NASH, Corporal W., Rifle Brigade, India, 11th March, 1858. For carrying a wounded comrade out of action at Lucknow in the teeth of the rebels, and under a heavy fire. (Gaz, 24 Dec., 1858)

(160) NEWELL, Private R., 9th Lancers, India, 19th March, 1858. For helping a comrade whose horse had gone down, and rescuing him, under a severe fire, from the rebels at Lucknow. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

*(53) NORMAN, Private W., 7th Fusiliers, Crimea, 19th December, 1854. When on single sentry in advance of the picket in the White Horse Ravine—a dangerous post—he saw three Russians advancing, to reconnoitre, through the brushwood. Firing off his rifle, he jumped into the trench almost on top of them, capturing two, and bringing them into our lines, although the Russian picket was only 300 yards off (See account) (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857)

*(58) O'Connor, Sergeant Luke (afterwards Major-General), 23rd Welsh Fusiliers, Crimea, 20th September, 1854, and 8th September, 1855. At Alma he carried the Queen's Colour after the death of Lieutenant Anstruther, although wounded himself, and displayed great gallantry at the Redan, where he was shot through both thighs. He was promoted Ensign. (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857.)

(273) Odgers, Seaman W, H.M.S. Niger, New Zealand, 28th March, 1860. For his gallantry in being the first to enter a Maori Pah (Gaz, 3 Aug., 1860.)

(324) O'Hea, Private T., Rifle Brigade, Canada, 19th June, 1866. This action was performed in peculiar circumstances, and not in the presence of an enemy. At Danville Station, near Quebec, a railway car containing a quantity of ammunition became ignited, and a fearful explosion was imminent. Opening the door, at the risk of his life, he poured water on the ammunition barrels, and averted the catastrophe (Gaz, 1 Jan, 1867)

*(123) Olpherts, Captain William (afterwards General Sir W, K.C.B.), Bengal Artillery, India, 25th September, 1857. He was known in the army as "Hell-fire Olpherts," for his daring bravery. He won the Cross at Lucknow for charging on horseback with the Perthshire Light Infantry, when, headed by Colonel Campbell, it captured two guns in the face of a heavy fire of grape, the Captain afterwards returning under a severe fire of musketry to bring up horses and limbers to carry off the cannon. (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

*(393) Osborne, Private J., 58th Regiment, Transvaal, 22nd November, 1881. For riding forward towards a strong party of Boers at Wesselstroom, and bringing out Private

Mayes, who was wounded, under a heavy fire. (Gaz., 13 March, 1882)

*(364) O'TOOLE, Sergeant E, Frontier Light Horse, Zululand, 3rd July, 1879 For helping to rescue a sergeant near Ulundi, and holding him upon Lord William Beresford's horse, the Zulus being close upon them at the time. He was also distinguished for his gallantry on many occasions. (Gaz., 10 Oct., 1879)

*(67) OWENS, Sergeant J, 49th Regiment (Princess Charlotte of Wales's), Crimea, 26th October, 1854. For great personal gallantry when at close quarters with the Russians during a sortie, and helping Lieutenant Conolly to repel the enemy. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(250) OXENHAM, Corporal W, 32nd Regiment (Cornwall), India, 30th July, 1857. For saving the life of Mr. Capper, of the Civil Service, from the ruins of a house at Lucknow under a murderous fire. (Gaz; 21 Nov, 1859.)

(41) PALMER, Private Anthony, Grenadier Guards, Crimea, 5th November, 1854 For distinguished bravery at Inkerman when charging the enemy with some of his comrades, and saving the life of Sir C. Russell. (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857.)

(73) PARK, Sergeant J, 77th Regiment (East Middlesex), Crimea, 20th September, 5th November, 1854, 19th April, 1855. This plucky fellow displayed great gallantry at Alma and Inkerman, also at the capture of rifle-pits, and in both the assaults on the Redan, being, moreover, severely wounded. (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857.)

(186) PARK, Gunner J., Bengal Artillery, India, 14th to 22nd November, 1857. For conspicuous gallantry during the relief of Lucknow. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(29) PARKES, Private Samuel, 4th Light Dragoons (Queen's Own, now Hussars), Crimea, 25th October, 1854.

For pluckily defending an unarmed and dismounted non-com. against six Russians during the charge of the Light Brigade, and sticking to him until his sword was shot away (Gaz., 24 Feb, 1857.)

*(175) PATON, Sergeant J, 93rd Highlanders, India, 16th November, 1857. For reconnoitring alone round the Shah Nujjiff Mosque, under fire, and discovering a breach to which he then led the Highlanders, who took the place. Elected by the non-coms of the 93rd (Gaz., 24 Dec, 1858)

*(266) PEARSON, Private J., 86th Regiment (Royal County Down), India, 3rd April, 1858. For charging a number of rebels at Jhansi, killing one and bayoneting two more He also brought in a wounded private at Calpee under a heavy fire. (Gaz., 1 May, 1860)

(208) PEARSON, Private John, 8th Hussars (King's Royal Irish), India, 17th June, 1858 He was one of the regiment elected by his comrades for distinguished gallantry in the charge at Gwalior (Gaz, 28 Jan, 1859)

(10) PEEL, Captain W, R N, Crimea, 18th October, 5th November, 1854, 18th June, 1855 For flinging a live shell over the parapet which had fallen among powder cases close to a magazine He joined the officers of the Grenadier Guards at Inkerman in the defence of the colours, and volunteered to lead the ladder party on the 18th June, carrying one himself until he was bowled over He was very distinguished with the Naval Brigade during the Indian mutiny, and died of small-pox at Lucknow. (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857.)

(86) PERCY, Lieutenant-Colonel Honourable Henry Hugh Manvers (afterwards Lord Percy), Grenadier Guards, Crimea, 5th November, 1854. While the Guards were some distance from the Sand-bag Battery, during the battle of Inkerman, he charged alone into the battery, afterwards extricating men of various regiments who had charged too far and were surrounded by the enemy, all the while under a terrible musketry fire, and themselves without ammunition. Although wounded, he brought them out to where cartridges were to be obtained, thereby saving some fifty of them, and enabling them to renew the combat. He was commended on the spot by the Duke of Cambridge. (Gaz., 5 May, 1857.)

(39) PERIE, Sapper J, R E., Crimea, 18th June, 1855. For conspicuous gallantry when leading a naval ladder party, and rendering invaluable services during the day. Among other things he rescued a wounded man under fire, although he himself was wounded by a bullet in the side. (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857)

(240) PHILLIPS, Ensign E. A L., 11th Bengal Native Infantry, India, September, 1857 This gallant young fellow was very prominent at the siege of Delhi, where he was wounded three times. With a small party of men, he took the Water Bastion from the rebels, but was unfortunately killed on the 18th. (Gaz, 21 Oct., 1859)

(314) PICKARD, Lieutenant Arthur Frederick, R A., New Zealand, 20th November, 1863. At the Rangiriri Pah he crossed and recrossed the parapet to procure water for the wounded when the fire was so heavy that none of the men would venture. (Gaz., 23 Sept., 1864.)

(309) PITCHER, Lieutenant and Adjutant H. W. (afterwards Captain), 4th Punjaub Infantry, Umbeyla, India, 30th October and 16th November, 1863. For great gallantry in both attacks on the Crag Picket, in the last of which he was so badly wounded that he had to be carried out of action. (Gaz, 19 July, 1864.)

*(238) PRENDERGAST, Lieutenant Harry North Dalrymple (afterwards General Sir, K.C.B.), Madras Engineers, India, 21st November, and several other dates, 1857. Several pages would be required to record this officer's gallantry. At Mundisore he risked his life to save Lieutenant G. Dew, 14th Light Dragoons, by attempting to cut down a Velaitee who had covered him with his piece Prendergast was wounded by the discharge, and would probably have been killed if Major Orr had not slain the rebel He was specially mentioned by Sir Hugh Rose when voluntarily acting as his aide-de-camp in the action near Ratgurh on the Beena River, where he exhibited great bravery and had his horse killed Also at the action of the Betwa against Tantia Topee, where he distinguished himself when charging with Need's troop of the 14th Light Dragoons, being again severely wounded. (Gaz, 21 Oct, 1859.)

(26) PRETTYJOHN, Colour-Sergeant J, Royal Marine Light Infantry, Crimea, 5th November, 1854. For occupying an advanced position at Inkerman, and shooting four of the Russians. (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857.)

*(320) PRIDE, Captain of After-Guard, T, Japan, 6th September, 1864. For gallantly seconding Midshipman Boyes, who was carrying the colours at Simono Seki, until Pride was terribly wounded in the chest (Gaz, 21 April, 1865.)

*(142) PROBYN, Captain Dighton Macnaghten (afterwards General Sir, K.C.B., K.C.S.I.), 2nd Punjaub Cavalry, India, 1857 The gallant acts of this officer during the campaign were legion I quote from Sir Hope Grant's despatch. "At the battle of Agra, when his squadron charged the rebel infantry, he was some time separated from his men, and surrounded by five or six sepoys. He defended himself from the various cuts made at him, and, before his own men had joined him, had cut down two of his assailants At another time, in single combat with a sepoy, he was wounded in the wrist by a bayonet, and his horse also was slightly wounded, but, though the sepoy fought desperately, he cut him down. The same day he singled out a standard-bearer, and, in presence of a number of the enemy, killed him and captured the standard.

These are only a few of the gallant deeds of this gallant young officer." (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

(49) Prosser, Private J., 1st Regiment (The Royal Regiment), Crimea, 16th June and 11th August, 1855. Under a cross-fire he pursued and collared a soldier who was deserting to the enemy, and afterwards brought in a wounded private of the 9th Foot, who was lying helpless, under a heavy fire. (Gaz., 24 Feb, 1857)

(106) Purcell, Private J., 9th Lancers, India, 19th June, 1857. For saving the life of Brigadier-General James Hope Grant, C.B., who was unhorsed and surrounded by mutineers, before Delhi. He was assisted by Private Hancock, who offered the General his horse, and by Roopur Khan. (Gaz., 15 Jan., 1858)

(164) Pye, Sergeant-Major C., 53rd Regiment, India, 17th November, 1857. He was elected by his brother non-coms., and afterwards received a commission, for very conspicuous gallantry at Lucknow upon many occasions, particularly for bringing up ammunition under fire. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858)

*(18) Raby, Lieutenant H. J. (afterwards Rear-Admiral, C.B.), Crimea, 18th June, 1855. For rescuing a wounded private of the 57th Regiment who was crying for assistance, and carrying him to a place of refuge under heavy fire. Knight of the Legion of Honour. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857)

(115) Ramage, Sergeant H., 2nd Dragoons (Scots Greys), Crimea, 25th October, 1854. During the charge of the Heavy Brigade he saved the life of a wounded comrade, Private Gardiner, dispersed seven Russians who were surrounding another, Private McPherson, and also dismounted and captured a prisoner. (Gaz., 4 June, 1858)

(138) Raynor, Captain W., Bengal Veteran Establishment, India, 11th May, 1857. For helping to defend the magazine at Delhi. (Gaz., 18 June, 1858).

*(279) Reade, Surgeon Herbert Taylor (afterwards Surgeon General, C B), 61st Regiment (South Gloucester), India, 14th and 16th September, 1857 During the siege of Delhi, while attending to the wounded at the end of a street, a band of rebels established themselves on the roofs of the houses, and began to fire down, but the gallant surgeon drew his sword, and, gathering a few soldiers—about ten in all—rushed up the stairs, under a heavy fire, on to the flat roofs, and dislodged the scoundrels, two of his little party being killed and half a dozen wounded During the assault on the morning of the 16th the fire-eating doctor accompanied his regiment, was one of the first up at the breach in the magazine, and, assisted by a sergeant, spiked one of the guns with his own hands (Gaz, 5 Feb., 1861.)

(15) Rieves, Seaman T, R N, Crimea, 5th November, 1854 He mounted a banquette at Inkerman, under a heavy fire, and, collecting all the muskets of the wounded he could lay his hands on, blazed away at the Russians (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857)

*(199) Rennie, Lieutenant and Adjutant W (now retired Hon. Lieutenant-Colonel, full pay), 90th Perthshire Light Infantry, India, 21st and 25th September, 1857. For conspicuous gallantry in the advance upon Lucknow, charging the rebel guns, under a heavy musketry fire, in advance of his skirmishers, and preventing the mutineers from dragging off a gun, which we captured in consequence. Also at Lucknow in having charged in advance of the 90th column, in the face of a heavy fire of grape, and forcing the enemy to abandon their guns. (Gaz, 24 Dec., 1858)

(215) Renny, Lieutenant George Alexander (since Major-General), Bengal Horse Artillery, India, 16th September, 1857. During a desperate attempt on the part of the rebels to recapture the Delhi Magazine, when, under a heavy cross-fire from the tall houses on the right flank, the Selinghur and the Palace, they tried to light a thatched roof for the second time, Lieutenant Renny mounted to the top of the magazine wall, in the face of almost certain death, and flung several live shells down into the middle of the rebels, which had the effect of frustrating the attempt. (Gaz., 12 April, 1859.)

*(357) REYNOLDS, Surgeon-Major J. H. (afterwards Brigadier-Surgeon-Lieutenant-Colonel), M.B., A.M.D., Zululand, 22nd and 23rd January, 1879. For great devotion to the wounded, under fire, at Rorke's Drift, where he also brought ammunition for the defenders of the hospital hut at imminent risk of his life. (See account.) (Gaz., 17 June, 1879.)

(48) REYNOLDS, Private W., Scots Fusilier Guards, Crimea, 20th September, 1854. For gallantry at Alma, where he was conspicuous in helping rally the men round their colours during the temporary disorder. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

*(245) RICHARDSON, Private G., 34th Regiment (Cumberland), India, 27th April, 1859. Although severely wounded, with one arm disabled, the plucky fellow closed with a rebel at Kewanie, Trans Gogra, who was armed with a loaded revolver, and secured him. (Gaz., 11 Nov., 1859.)

*(9) RICKARD, Quartermaster W. (afterwards Chief Officer of Coast Guard), R.N., Crimea, 11th October, 1855. For great self-devotion in remaining to help a comrade who had sunk in the deep mud, although terribly fatigued himself, and under a heavy fire at the time. Knight of the Legion of Honour. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

*(373) RIDGEWAY, Captain R. K. (afterwards Major), Bengal Staff Corps, Konoma, Naga Hills, India, 2nd November, 1879. For a gallant attempt to destroy a barricade, getting severely wounded in the shoulder. (Gaz., 11 May, 1880.)

(3) ROBARTS, Chief Gunner John, R.N., Crimea, 29th May, 1855. For displaying particular gallantry at Genitchi, when we burned the Russian stores, in circumstances of great peril. Knight of the Legion of Honour. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

*(190) ROBERTS, Lieutenant Frederick Sleigh (afterwards Field-Marshal Lord Roberts, G.C.B., G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E.), Bengal Artillery, India, 2nd January, 1858. For great gallantry in action. When following the retreating rebels at Khodagunge he saw two sepoys getting away with a colour, and, spurring after them, he came up as they were about to enter a village. One of them fired, but the cap snapped, fortunately for the Lieutenant, who cut the standard-bearer down, and took the colour. On the same day he rode to the assistance of a sowar who was engaged with a sepoy armed with musket and bayonet. Dashing up without hesitation, he killed the sepoy with one sword-stroke across the face. The subsequent reputation for gallantry and good generalship gained by the popular "Lord Bobs," as he is known in the army, is second to none in our Service. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

(193) ROBERTS, Private J. R., 9th Lancers, India, 28th September, 1857. For carrying a mortally wounded comrade through the streets of Boolundshuhur, under a heavy fire, by which he was wounded himself. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

*(156) ROBINSON, Seaman E., R.N., India, 13th March, 1858. For extinguishing a fire among the sand-bags of a battery under a hail of balls so murderous that the gallant fellow was himself dangerously wounded. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

*(216) RODDY, Ensign Patrick (afterwards retired Colonel, Bengal Unattached List), Bengal Army, India, 27th September, 1858. His gallantry was very marked, and earned the particular notice of Sir Hope Grant. The action which won him the Cross happened in this wise. At Kuthirga a rebel subadar of the 8th Native Infantry, a powerful fellow of most determined character, was keeping the cavalry at bay, armed with a percussion musket, kneeling and covering them each time they attempted to get at him. Roddy went straight at him, the rebel firing at six yards range and killing the former's horse Before Roddy could disengage himself from his stirrups the sepoy was upon him, but, grappling with him, after a smart struggle he managed to get to his sword and ran the rebel through the body. (Gaz., 12 April, 1859)

(248) Rodgers, Private G., 71st Highland Light Infantry, India, 16th June, 1858 Single-handed at Morar, near Gwalior, this brave fellow tackled a party of seven rebels, who were well armed and strongly posted, and killed one of them (Gaz., 11 Nov, 1859.)

(283) Rogers, Lieutenant Robert Montresor (afterwards Major-General, C.B.), 34th Regiment, China, 21st August, 1860. He was one of three brave fellows who swam the ditches at the Taku Forts, and entered an embrasure in the North Fort during the assault He afterwards commanded the 90th in the Zulu War; and his death is announced strangely enough as I am penning this record of his gallantry. (Gaz., 13 Aug, 1861)

(147) Rosmond, Sergeant-Major M, 37th Bengal, N.I., India, 4th June, 1857 He was remarkable for his plucky exertions during the outbreak at Benares. He assisted Colonel Spottiswoode to fire the native lines, and brought in an officer and his family from a detached bungalow into barracks, afterwards going out and rescuing several more people in circumstances of great danger (Gaz, 4 Aug., 1858.)

(37) Ross, Corporal J., R.E., Crimea, 21st July, 23rd August, 8th September, 1855. This plucky fellow's exploits were all performed at the imminent hazard of his own life. On the first date he displayed great bravery in connecting works; on the second, in placing and filling gabions under a heavy fire, and on the third, for creeping forward to the Redan and reporting its evacuation. (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857.)

* (62) ROWLANDS, Captain Hugh, 41st Regiment (Welsh) (now General, C.B.), Crimea, 5th November, 1854. At the battle of Inkerman he rescued a wounded officer who was surrounded by the enemy, and also held his ground on picket with great pluck during the Russian advance. Knight of the Legion of Honour (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857.)

(162) RUSH, Sergeant-Major David, 9th Lancers, India, 19th March, 1858. This gallant representative of a gallant regiment attacked no less than eight rebels strongly posted near Lucknow, supported by one comrade, and killed three of them. (Gaz, 24 Dec., 1858.)

(40) RUSSELL, Captain Sir Charles, Bart. (afterwards Lieutenant-Colonel), Grenadier Guards, Crimea, 5th November, 1854. He volunteered to take a battery if anyone would follow him, and succeeded with tremendous risk. (See account.) (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857.)

(132) RYAN, Private John, 1st Madras European Fusiliers, India, 26th September, 1857. For extraordinary bravery in defence of the wounded at Lucknow (See account.) (Gaz, 18 June, 1858.)

(308) RYAN, Lance-Corporal J., 65th Regiment, New Zealand, 7th September, 1863. For rescuing a mortally wounded officer, Captain Smith, with the aid of Privates Bulford and Talbot, and staying by his body all night in the bush. Although gazetted, Ryan never wore his honour, being drowned when trying to rescue a drunken comrade. (Gaz., 19 Jan., 1864.)

(203) RYAN, Drummer M., 1st Bengal European Fusiliers (since 101st Regiment), India, 14th September, 1857. For flinging burning ammunition cases over a parapet into the water, saving many lives thereby, and carrying his own life in his hand all the time. (Gaz, 24 Dec., 1858)

(145) SALKELD, Lieutenant Philip, Bengal Engineers, India, 14th September, 1857. For determined gallantry and self-devotion at Delhi during the blowing in of the Cashmere Gate, where he was mortally wounded (See Home, Smith, and Hawthorne.) (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

*(158) SALMON, Lieutenant Nowell (now Admiral, K.C.B.), R.N., India, 16th November, 1857. For gallantly volunteering to climb a tree which commanded the wall of the Shah Nujjiff Mosque at Lucknow, and firing on the enemy from the branches with rifles handed up to him by a man of the 93rd Highlanders. The Lieutenant was severely wounded (Gaz, 24 Dec., 1858)

*(375) SARTORIUS, Captain (now Major-General E. H.), 59th Regiment, Afghanistan, 24th October, 1879. He led a small party at Tazi against an unknown number of the enemy and cleared them out of a strong position on the top of the Shah Juy hill, losing only one man of his own party, but being severely wounded himself. Ten years before, he had won the bronze medal of the Royal Humane Society for rescuing three children from drowning at Broadstairs, 29th June, 1869. (Gaz, 17 May, 1881)

*(339) SARTORIUS, Captain Reginald William (now Colonel, C.M.G.), 6th Bengal Cavalry, Ashantee, 17th January, 1874. For carrying a mortally wounded Houssa Sergeant-Major under a heavy fire at Abugoo. He was also the hero of a remarkably plucky ride through the enemy's country during the war. He is brother to the last mentioned. (Gaz., 26 Oct., 1874)

(367) SCHIESS, Corporal, Natal Native Forces, Zululand, 22nd and 23rd January, 1879. A Rorke's Drift man. He distinguished himself among other ways by creeping along a wall and shooting a Zulu who was firing from the end. He is known to have shot two other dangerous enemies, and was badly wounded. (Gaz., 3 Dec., 1879.)

(17) SCHOLEFIELD, Seaman M., R.N., Crimea, 5th November, 1854. The gallant tar mounted a banquette at Inkerman under a severe fire, and helped to check the enemy's advance by using the muskets of disabled soldiers. (See Gorman and Reeves.) (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857.)

(342) SCOTT, Captain A (late Major), Bengal Staff Corps, then of the 4th Sikhs, Beloochistan, 26th July, 1877. For saving the life of an officer at Quetta by his personal prowess, where he bayoneted a couple of Pathans and closed with a third, who was finally killed by some men of the 4th Sikh Infantry. (Gaz, 18 Jan., 1878.)

*(374) SCOTT, Sergeant R. G. (afterwards Lieutenant), Cape Mounted Rifles, South Africa, 8th April, 1879. He volunteered, with seven others, the night before the attack on Moirosi's Mountain to creep forward and gain a position from which they could fling time-shells among the Basutos at the moment the attack should be made. The third shell shattered his right hand, wounded his left leg, and injured three of the party. (Gaz., 1 Oct., 1880.)

*(321) SEELEY, Seaman W., Japan, 6th September, 1864 For displaying great courage and intelligence at Simono Seki in reconnoitring the enemy's position, and remaining under fire although wounded in the arm. (Gaz, 21 April, 1865.)

(388) SELLAR, Lance-Corporal G. (afterwards Sergeant), 72nd Highlanders, Afghanistan, 14th December, 1879. He was the first to reach the top of the Asmai heights at Kabul, and defeated one of the foe after a furious hand-to-hand struggle, in which he was wounded. (Gaz., 18 Oct., 1881.)

*(323) SHAW, Captain Hugh (now Major-General, C B.), 18th Regiment (The Royal Irish), New Zealand, 24th January, 1865. For risking his own life to rescue a wounded soldier, under a heavy fire, at Nukumaru, and bringing him safely out of the bush, with the help of four privates. (Gaz., 28 Nov., 1865.)

(154) Shaw, Sapper Samuel, 3rd Battalion, Rifle Brigade, India, 13th June, 1858. This brave fellow was the hero of a very furious single combat with a rebel, whom he eventually killed, near Nawabgunge. (Gaz., 26 Oct, 1858.)

(235) Shebbeare, Captain R. H., 60th Bengal Native Infantry, India, 14th September, 1857. For conspicuous gallantry at Delhi, where, after endeavouring to capture a loopholed serai, he re-formed his men under its walls, amid a hail of bullets, and, although he was wounded, conducted the rearguard, when they retired, over a canal. (Gaz, 21 Oct., 1859.)

(14) Sheppard, or Shepherd, Boatswain J., R.N, Crimea, 15th July and 16th August, 1855. For proceeding out into the harbour of Sebqstopol alone in a punt on two occasions in a gallant endeavour to blow up Russian men-of-war. Knight of the Legion of Honour. (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857.)

(59) Shields, Corporal R., 23rd Welsh Fusiliers, Crimea, 8th September, 1855. For volunteering, under a heavy fire, to recover a mortally-wounded officer after the attack on the Redan. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(221) Simpson, Quartermaster-Sergeant John (afterwards Major), 42nd Highlanders, India, 15th April, 1858. For conspicuous bravery and self-devotion during the attack on the Fort of Ruhya, when he volunteered to get within forty yards of the parapet and bring in, first, Lieutenant Douglas, and then a private, both of whom were badly wounded, all the while under a heavy fire. (Gaz., 27 May, 1859.)

(61) Sims, Private J. J., 34th Regiment (Cumberland), Crimea, 18th June, 1855. For great bravery in rescuing wounded men in front of the Redan in broad daylight under a heavy fire. (Gaz., 24 Feb, 1857.)

* (170) Sinnott, Lance-Corporal J, 84th Regiment (York and Lancaster), India, 6th October, 1857. For proceeding, with Sergeants Glynn, Mullins, and Private Mullins, to the rescue of Lieutenant Gibaut, who was mortally wounded, at Lucknow, and carrying him in under a heavy fire. Sinnott was chosen by his comrades as the pluckiest of them all. (Gaz, 24 Dec, 1858.)

* (243) Sleavon, Corporal M., Royal Engineers, India, 3rd April, 1858 For sticking to his post, under a heavy fire, when working at a sap at Jhansi. (Gaz., 11 Nov, 1859.)

* (403) Smith, Gunner Albert, Royal Artillery, Nile Expedition, Soudan, 17th January, 1885. For protecting Lieutenant Guthrie, R A, in the square at Abu Klea. (Gaz, 12 May, 1885)

(317) Smith, Captain Frederick Augustus (afterwards Colonel), 43rd Monmouthshire Light Infantry, New Zealand, 21st June, 1864. For particularly gallant conduct in leading his company at Tuaranga, when wounded, in the attack on the Pah, jumping down into rifle-pits and engaging hand-to-hand with the Maoris. (Gaz, 4 Nov., 1864)

(112) Smith, Lance-Corporal Henry, 52nd Oxfordshire Light Infantry, India, 14th September, 1857. For carrying away a wounded comrade, under a fire of grape and musketry, at Delhi, when we retired from the Chándni Chauk. (Gaz., 24 April, 1858.)

(110) Smith, Sergeant J., Bengal Engineers, India, 14th September, 1857. He was one of the explosion party at the Cashmere Gate at Delhi. (See Hawthorne, Home, Salkeld.) (Gaz., 24 April, 1858.)

(183) Smith, Private J., 102nd Regiment, India, 16th November, 1857. For a gallant display of pluck at the

Secundra Bagh, Lucknow, which he was one of the first to enter, and, although severely wounded in three places, he continued to fight, and remained at his duty all day, being afterwards unanimously elected for the honour by his comrades. (Gaz, 24 Dec., 1858.)

* (489) Smith, Lieutenant John Manners (now Captain, C.I.E.), Indian Staff Corps, near Nilt, Hunza Nagar country, to the north-west of Cashmere, 20th December, 1891 For great gallantry in leading the storming party against the hill-fort. (Gaz., 12 July, 1892.)

* (55) Smith, Corporal P., 17th Regiment (Leicestershire), Crimea, 18th June, 1855. For sallying out into the trenches many times to rescue wounded men, under a fearful fire, before the Redan (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857.)

(161) Spence, Troop-Sergeant-Major D., 9th Lancers, India, 17th January, 1858 For rescuing a wounded man from a throng of rebels at Shumsabad at the risk of his own life (Gaz, 24 Dec., 1858.)

(223) Spence, Private E., 42nd Highlanders, India, 15th April, 1858. For covering the retreat of a party under Captain Cafe, 4th Punjaub Rifles, which was carrying in a wounded officer at Ruhya, under a heavy fire and circumstances of great peril, Spence dying two days afterwards from the wounds he received on that occasion. (Gaz., 27 May, 1859.)

* (316) Stagpoole, Drummer D., 57th Regiment, New Zealand, 2nd October, 1863. For rescuing a wounded comrade, under a heavy fire, at Pontoko. Stagpoole has a medal in addition for distinguished conduct in the field for similar actions. (Gaz., 23 Sept., 1864.)

* (44) Stanlock, Private W., Coldstream Guards, Crimea, October, 1854. For gallantry with Goodlake's sharpshooters when they captured the arms of a Russian picket (See account.) (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857.)

(174) Stewart, Captain William George Drummond (now Sir W. G. D., Bart, retired Major), 93rd Highlanders, India, 16th November, 1857. Elected by his brother officers for distinguished personal gallantry at Lucknow when attacking and capturing two guns, which commanded the mess-house. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858)

(45) Strong, Private George, Coldstream Guards, Crimea, September, 1855 For pitching a live shell out of the trenches. (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857.)

(13) Sullivan, Boatswain's Mate J (afterwards Chief Boatswain), R.N., Crimea, 10th April, 1855. For planting a flag on a mound out in the open to show his battery some concealed Russian guns which were creating great havoc among us He displayed then, as ever, the greatest coolness in the midst of danger. Knight of the Legion of Honour, etc etc. (Gaz., 24 Feb, 1857)

(256) Sutton, Bugler W, 60th Rifles, India, 13th September, 1857 Elected by his comrades for two exploits at Delhi 1st, on August 2nd, when the rebels attacked in force, he sprang forward and killed one of their buglers who was sounding (date not recorded on the Cross), 2nd, for bravery when reconnoitring the breach (Gaz, 20 Jan, 1860)

*(101) Sylvester, Assistant-Surgeon Henry Thomas, M.B, 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, Crimea, 8th and 18th September, 1855. For going out under a heavy fire, close to the Redan, to dress the wounds of Lieutenant Dyneley, who lay there mortally wounded. He was again mentioned in General Simpson's despatch for similar courage also under heavy fire during our disastrous assault. Knight of the Legion of Honour. (Gaz., 20 Nov., 1857.)

(100) Symons, Sergeant G., R.A., Crimea, 6th June, 1855. For volunteering to unmask a battery, under a tremendous fire, which grew hotter as embrasure after embrasure was exposed. The gallant fellow, who was badly wounded, received promotion as Lieutenant, 5th Batt., Military Train (Gaz., 20 Nov., 1857.)

(19) Taylor, Captain of the Forecastle J., R.N., Crimea, 18th June, 1855. For rescuing a severely wounded private of the 57th who was imploring piteously for help, and carrying him, under a heavy fire, to shelter (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(95) Tilsdale, Lieutenant Christopher Charles (afterwards Major General, K.C.M.G.), R.A., Crimean War, 29th September, 1855. For very remarkable gallantry when A.D.C. to the celebrated Fenwick Williams at Kars, Asia Minor. During a night attack he cleared a redoubt of the Russians, rallied the Turkish artillery, and saved many Russian wounded from the infuriated Turks at great personal risk (Gaz., 25 Sept., 1857.)

*(313) Temple, Assistant-Surgeon William, M.B. (since Brig.-Surgeon), R.A., New Zealand, 10th November, 1863. For great bravery under a concentrated fire during the assault on the Rangiriri Pah. His devotion to the wounded, and more especially Captain Mercer, who unfortunately died, was most marked, and associated with him on that occasion was Lieutenant Pickard, R.A. (Gaz., 23 Sept., 1864.)

*(299) Thackeray, Lieutenant Edward Talbot (now Colonel, C.B.), Bengal Engineers, India, 16th September, 1857. For extinguishing a fire in the Delhi Magazine enclosure under close and heavy musketry, his own life being in imminent danger from the explosion of combustibles in the shed. (Gaz., 29 April, 1862.)

(201) Thomas, Bombardier J., Bengal Artillery, India,

27th September, 1857 For rescuing a wounded man in circumstances of peculiar peril, coupled with a heavy fire from the sepoys at Lucknow (Gaz, 24 Dec, 1858)

(220) THOMPSON, Lance Corporal A, 42nd Highlanders (Black Watch), India, 15th April, 1858 For helping Captain Cafe to bring in an officer's body under a heavy fire at Ruhya (Gaz, 27 May, 1859)

(258) THOMPSON, Private J, 60th Rifles, India, 9th July, 1857 This brave man was elected by his comrades for persistent gallantry throughout the siege of Delhi, and more particularly for the rescue of his officer, Captain Wilson, who was surrounded (Gaz, 20 Jan, 1860.)

(107) TOMBS, Major (afterwards Sir H, K C B), Bengal Artillery, India, 9th July, 1857 For brilliant gallantry at Delhi in assisting his subaltern Hills (See account) (Gaz, 24 April, 1858)

(280) TRAVERS, Major James (afterwards General, C B), 2nd Bengal, N I, India, 1st July, 1857 For daring bravery when Holkar attacked the Indore Presidency With five men he charged the guns, drove off the gunners, and saved the lives of a number of fugitives by so doing, his accoutrements being shot through, and his horse hit in three places (Gaz, 1 March, 1861)

* (332) TREVOR, Captain William Spottiswoode (now Major-General), R E (late Bengal), Bhootan, India, 30th April, 1865 For leading an attack on a loopholed blockhouse at Dewan Giri, where he was wounded, in company with Lieutenant Dundas (See Dundas.) (Gaz, 31 Dec, 1867)

* (5) TREWAVAS, Seaman J, R N, Crimea, 3rd July, 1855. For cutting the hawsers of a floating bridge under fire in the Straits of Genitchi. Knight of the Legion of Honour. (Gaz, 24 Feb., 1857

(259) TURNER, Private S., 60th Rifles, India, 19th June 1857. For bringing off a mortally wounded officer during a night struggle at Delhi, being himself severely wounded while doing so. (Gaz., 20 Jan., 1860)

(146) TYTLER, Lieutenant John Adam (afterwards Lieutenant-Colonel, C.B.), 66th (Goorkha) Bengal, N I, India, 10th February, 1858. For dashing alone on horseback in advance of his men at Choorpoorah, and engaging hand-to-hand with the enemy's gunners until our fellows came up and took them, receiving a spear wound in the chest, a bullet through his left arm, and another through his right sleeve, being all the while under a heavy fire of round shot, grape and musketry. (Gaz, 4 Aug, 1858)

*(385) VOUSDEN, Captain W J., 5th Punjaub Cavalry (now Brevet-Colonel), Bengal Staff Corps, Afghanistan, 14th December, 1879. For charging several times backwards and forwards through a body of Afghans at Cabul with only twelve men under him, killing five of the enemy himself (Gaz, 18 Oct., 1881.)

(197) WADESON, Ensign Richard (afterwards Colonel), 75th Stirlingshire, India, 18th July, 1857. For great bravery in the Subjee Mundee at Delhi, where he saved the life of Private Michael Farrell, killing the sowar who was attacking him, and again, the same day, killing another trooper who was about to murder Private John Barry when wounded and helpless. (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

*(116) WALKER, Lieutenant Mark (now General, K.C B.), 30th Cambridgeshire, Crimea, 5th November, 1854 For daring bravery at Inkerman, where, to encourage his men, he jumped over a wall in face of two battalions of Russian infantry, his regiment following and repulsing the foe. (Gaz., 4 June, 1858.)

(293) WALLER, Lieutenant William Francis Frederick

(afterwards Lieutenant-Colonel), 25th Bombay Native Infantry, India, 20th June, 1858 For great personal gallantry and extraordinary coolness at the storming of the Fortress of Gwalior. He and Lieutenant Rose, who was killed, were the only Europeans present, but with a handful of sepoys they climbed to the roof of a house, shot the rebel gunners, stormed the fort, and killed every mutineer in it. (Gaz, 25 Feb., 1862.)

(254) Walker, Colour-Sergeant G, 60th Rifles, India, 14th and 18th September, 1857. Selected by his officers for conspicuous bravery at Delhi in charging and capturing the guns and repulsing a sudden attack on our own. (Gaz, 20 Jan., 1860)

(66) Walters, Sergeant G, 49th Regiment (Princess Charlotte of Wales's), Crimea, 5th November, 1854. For the plucky rescue of Brigadier-General Adams at Inkerman when surrounded by Russians, one of whom Walters killed. (Gaz, 24 Feb, 1857)

* Wantage, Lord (see Lindsay)

(134) Ward, Private Henry, 78th Highlanders, India, 25th and 26th September, 1857 For his cool bravery in protecting Lieutenant Havelock's dhoolie at Lucknow. (See account.) (Gaz, 18 June, 1858)

(206) Ward, Sergeant Joseph, 8th Hussars, India, 17th June, 1858 For his gallantry in the squadron charge at Gwalior. (Gaz, 28 Jan., 1859.)

* (359) Wassall, Private S, 80th Regiment (Staffordshire Volunteers), Zululand, 22nd January, 1879 For saving a drowning comrade in the Buffalo River, under fire. (Gaz, 17 June, 1879)

* (143) Watson, Lieutenant John (since General Sir J., K.C.B.), 1st Punjaub Cavalry, India, 14th November, 1857. For a brilliant attack on the rebel cavalry, which he routed, receiving three wounds. (See account) (Gaz., 18 June, 1858.)

(81) Wheatley, Private F., Rifle Brigade, Crimea, 10th November, 1854. For throwing a live shell out of the trenches before Sebastopol. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(239) Whirlpool, Private F., 3rd Bombay European Regiment (afterwards 109th), India, 3rd April and 2nd May, 1858. This man has a splendid record. He rescued several wounded, under a heavy fire, at Jhansi, and, going to the rescue of a wounded officer at Lohari, received seventeen desperate wounds in his defence, one of which nearly severed his head from his body, in spite of which he survived. (Gaz., 21 Oct., 1859.)

*(412) Whitchurch, Surgeon-Captain Harry Frederick, Indian Medical Service, Chitral, 3rd March, 1895. For great gallantry in bringing in Captain Baird (See account) (Gaz., 16th July, 1895.)

*(379) White, Major G. S. (now General Sir G. S., K.C.B., G.C.I.E., Commander-in-Chief in India), 92nd Highlanders, Afghanistan, 6th October, 1879, and 1st September, 1880. For great gallantry at Charasiah, where he climbed a fortified hill held by a large number of the enemy, with two comrades, and, they being exhausted, he went on alone and shot the leader of the enemy. The second act was a dash at Candahar on to a gun which they captured. (Gaz., 3 June, 1881.)

(27) Wilkinson, Bombardier Thomas, Royal Marine Artillery, Crimea, 5th June, 1855. For remarkably cool bravery in repairing the advanced batteries under a heavy fire. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

*(346) Williams, Private J., 24th Regiment, Zululand, 22nd and 23rd January, 1879. One of the Rorke's Drift men who defended the hospital. (Gaz., 2 May, 1879.)

* (180) WILMOT, Captain Henry (now Brev.-Major Sir H., Bart., C.B.), Rifle Brigade, India, 11th March, 1858. Near the Iron Bridge at Lucknow he found himself, with four of his men, at the end of a street close to a large body of rebels. One of the four (Hawkes), being shot through both legs, became entirely helpless, and two of the others picked him up, the Captain covering the retreat with the men's rifles for a considerable distance (Gaz., 24 Dec., 1858.)

* (399) WILSON, Captain A. K. (C.B.), R.N., Soudan, 29th February, 1884. For a series of single-handed combats with the enemy at El Teb in defence of the guns, saving many of his men, although himself wounded. (Gaz., 21 May, 1884.)

* (275) WOOD, Lieutenant (now General Sir Henry Evelyn, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., Quartermaster-General), 17th Lancers, India, 19th October, 1858. For attacking a body of rebels at Sindwaho almost single-handed when commanding a troop of the 3rd Light Cavalry, and afterwards rescuing a Potail named Chemmum Singh from a band of robbers in the jungle, under dramatic circumstances. Knight of the Legion of Honour. (See account.) (Gaz., 4 Sept., 1860.)

(270) WOOD, Captain John Augustus (afterwards Colonel), 20th Bombay Native Infantry, Persia, 9th December, 1856. For remarkable gallantry at the capture of Bushire. (See account.) (Gaz., 3 Aug., 1860.)

(155) WOODEN, Sergeant-Major Charles (afterwards Quartermaster in 104th), 17th Lancers, Crimea, 25th October, 1854. For assisting to rescue his Major after the charge of Balaclava, under a tremendous fire. (See account.) (Gaz., 26 Oct., 1858.)

* (74) WRIGHT, Private A., 77th Regiment (East Middlesex), Crimea, 1854 to 1856. For conspicuous bravery during the whole war, more particularly, if anything, on the 22nd March, 19th April, and 13th August, 1855. (Gaz., 24 Feb., 1857.)

(209) YOUNG, Lieutenant J. (afterwards Commander), R.N., India, 16th November, 1857. For fearless gallantry with a "Shannon" 24-pounder at the Shah Nujjiff Mosque, Lucknow. (See account.) (Gaz., 1 Feb., 1859.)

VICTORIA CROSS REGIMENTS AND CORPS

Royal Navy (including Indian)	39
Royal Marine Artillery	2
Royal Marine Light Infantry	1
1st King's Dragoon Guards	1
2nd (Queen's Bays) Dragoon Guards	3
2nd Dragoons (Scots Greys)	2
4th Light Dragoons (now Hussars)	1
6th Dragoons (Inniskillings)	1
7th Hussars (Queen's Own)	2
8th Hussars (Queen's Royal Irish)	5
9th Lancers (Queen's Royal)	13
11th Hussars (Prince Albert's Own)	1
13th Light Dragoons (now Hussars)	1
14th Light Dragoons (now King's Hussars)	1
17th Lancers (now Duke of Cambridge's Own)	4
19th Hussars (Princess of Wales's Own)	1
Royal Artillery (Indian included)	34
Royal Engineers (Indian included)	23
Grenadier Guards	4
Coldstream Guards	3
Scots Fusilier Guards (now Scots Guards)	5
1st Royal Regiment (now Royal Scots, Lothian Regt.)	1
3rd East Kent (now The Buffs, E. Kent Regt.)	2
4th King's Own (now King's Own, Royal Lancaster Regt.)	1
5th Northumberland Fusiliers (now same)	3

7th Royal Fusiliers (now same) 6
10th North Lincolnshire (now The Lincolnshire) . . . 3
13th First Somersetshire, Prince Albert's Lt. Inf (now Prince Albert's Somerset Light Infantry) . . . 3
17th Leicestershire (now The Leicestershire Regt) . . . 1
18th, The Royal Irish (now same) 2
19th, 1st Yorkshire North Riding (now Princess of Wales's Own Yorkshire Regt) 2
23rd, The Royal Welsh Fusiliers (now same) . . . 6
24th, Second Warwickshire (now South Wales Borderers) 16
30th Cambridgeshire (now 1st Batt East Lancashire) . . 1
32nd Cornwall (now 1st Batt. Duke of Cornwall's Lt Inf) 4
33rd, The Duke of Wellington's (now 1st Batt W Riding Regt.) 2
34th Cumberland (now 1st Batt Border Regt) 3
40th, Second Somersetshire (now 1st Batt South Lanc Regt) 1
41st, The Welsh (now 1st Batt Welsh Regt) . . 2
42nd Royal Highlanders (Black Watch) (now 1st Batt. R. Highl) 10
43rd Monmouthshire Lt Inf. (now 1st Batt Oxfordshire Lt Inf) 2
44th East Essex (now 1st Batt Essex Regt) . . 3
47th Lancashire (now 1st Batt North Lanc Regt) 1
49th Herts (Princess Charlotte of Wales's) (now 1st Batt R, Berks Regt) . 3
52nd Oxfordshire Lt Inf (now 2nd Batt. Oxfordshire Lt Inf.) 2
53rd, Shropshire (now 1st Batt Shrop Lt Inf) 5
55th Westmoreland (now 2nd Batt Border Regt) . . 2
57th West Middlesex (now 1st Batt Middlesex Regt) 4
58th Rutlandshire (now 2nd Batt Northamptonshire Regt) 2
59th Second Notts (now 2nd Batt East Lanc Regt) 1
60th, The King's Royal Rifle Corps (now same) . . . 11
61st South Gloucestershire (now 2nd Batt Glouc Regt) 1
64th Second Staffordshire (now 1st Batt N Staffordshire Regt) 1
65th 2nd Yorkshire North Riding (now 1st Batt York and Lanc. Regt) 2
67th South Hampshire (now 2nd Batt Hamp Regt.) . . . 4
68th Durham Lt. Inf. (now 1st Batt Dur. Lt. Inf.) 3
71st Highland Lt Inf. (now 1st Batt same) . . 1
72nd Duke of Albany's Own Highlanders (now 1st Batt Seaforth Highlanders) 2
74th Highlanders (now 2nd Batt. High Lt. Inf) . . 1
75th Stirlingshire (now 1st Batt Gordon Highlanders) . 3
77th East Middlesex (now 2nd Batt Middx Regt) . . 2
78th Highl. (Ross-shire Buffs) (now 2nd Batt. Seaforth Highl.) . 8
80th Staffordshire Volunts. (now 2nd Batt. South Staff. Regt.) . 2

84th York and Lancaster (now 2nd Batt. York and Lanc. Regt)	6
86th Royal County Down (now 2nd Batt. Royal Irish Rifles)	4
88th, The Connaught Rangers (now 1st Batt. same)	1
90th Perthshire V. Lt. Inf. (now 2nd Batt Scott Rifles)	10
92nd Gordon High. (now 2nd Batt. same)	2
93rd Sutherland Highl. (now 2nd Batt Arg. and Suther. Highl)
94th Regt (now 2nd Batt. Connaught Rangers)
95th Derbyshire (now 2nd Batt. Derbyshire Regt.)
97th Earl of Ulster's (now 2nd Batt. R West Kent Regt)
1st Bengal European Fusil. (now 1st Batt R Munster Fusil)
1st Madras E. Fusil. (now 1st Batt R. Dublin Fusil)
2nd Beng. E Fusil (now 2nd Batt. R Munster Fusil.)
107th Regt (now 2nd Batt. R Sussex Regt)
3rd Bombay E. Regt. (now 2nd Batt. Leinster Regt.)
The Rifle Brigade (The Prince Consort's Own)	12
1st Batt. West India Regt	1
4th West India Regt (no longer existing)	1
Commissariat and Transport	1
Military Train	2
Army Hospital Corps	1
*Army Medical Staff, and Indian Medical Service	5
Indian Medical Department	1
Indian Staff Corps and Army	45
Cape and Natal Corps	8
New Zealand Militia	1
Chaplains	1
Civilians	3

* Reynolds, Crimmin, Le Quesne, Lloyd, and Whitchurch; the other Army doctors being given with their regiments, viz —

Bradshaw (90th Regt.)	Home (90th Regt)	Manley (R A)
Douglas (24th Regt)	Jee (78th Highl.)	Mouat (6th Dragoons)
Hale (7th Regt)	McCrea (Cape Mounted Yeomanry)	Reade (61st Regt)
Hartley (Cape Mounted Rifles)	McMaster (78th Highl)	Sylvester (23rd Regt)
		Temple (R A)

THE END.

PRINTED BY CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, LA BELLE SAUVAGE, LONDON, E.C.

A SELECTED LIST

OF

CASSELL & COMPANY'S

PUBLICATIONS.

Illustrated, Fine Art, and other Volumes.

Abbeys and Churches of England and Wales, The Descriptive Historical, Pictorial. Series II. 21s

Adventure, The World of. Fully Illustrated Complete in Three Vols. 9s. each.

Adventures in Criticism. By A. T QUILLER COUCH. 6s

Africa and its Explorers, The Story of By Dr. ROBERT BROWN, F R G S, &c. With about 800 Original Illustrations. Complete in 4 Vols 7s 6d each

Agrarian Tenures. By the Rt Hon G SHAW LEFEVRE, M P 10s 6d

Allon, Henry, D.D. Pastor and Teacher. The Story of his Ministry, with Selected Sermons and Addresses By the Rev W HARDY HARWOOD 6s.

American Life. By PAUL DE ROUSIERS. 12s 6d

Animal Painting in Water Colours. With Coloured Plates 5s

Animals, Popular History of. By HENRY SCHERREN, F Z S With 12 Coloured Plates and other Illustrations 7s 6d

Arabian Nights Entertainments (Cassell's) With about 400 Illustrations 10s. 6d.

Architectural Drawing. By R PHENÉ SPIERS Illustrated 10s. 6d

Art, The Magazine of. Yearly Volume With about 400 Illustrations, 14 Etchings or Photogravures, and a Series of Full-page Plates 21s.

Artistic Anatomy By Prof M DUVAL Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d

Astronomy, The Dawn of. A Study of the Temple Worship and Mythology of the Ancient Egyptians. By Professor J NORMAN LOCKYER, C B, F R S, &c Illustrated 21s

Atlas, The Universal A New and Complete General Atlas of the World, with 117 Pages of Maps, handsomely produced in Colours, and a Complete Index to about 125 000 Names List of Maps Prices and all particulars on application

Bashkirtseff, Marie, The Journal of. Translated by MATHILDE BLIND 7s 6d

Bashkirtseff, Marie, The Letters of. Translated by MARY J SERRANO 7s 6d

Battles of the Nineteenth Century. An Entirely New and Original Work. Illustrated Vol I, 9s

"Belle Sauvage" Library, The Cloth, 2s. (A complete list of the volumes post free on application)

Beetles, Butterflies, Moths, and other Insects. By A W. KAPPEL, F L.S, F E S, and W EGMONT KIRBY With 12 Coloured Plates 3s 6d

Biographical Dictionary, Cassell's New. Containing Memoirs of the Most Eminent Men and Women of all Ages and Countries Cheap Edition 3s 6d

Birds' Nests, British. How, Where, and When to Find and Identify them. By R. KEARTON With Illustrations of Nests, Eggs, Young, etc, from Photographs by C. KEARTON 21s

Birds' Nests, Eggs, and Egg-Collecting By R KEARTON Illustrated with 16 Coloured Plates of Eggs. 5s

Britain's Roll of Glory, or, the Victoria Cross, its Heroes, and their Valour By D H PARRY Illustrated 7s 6d

British Ballads. 275 Original Illustrations Two Vols Cloth, 15s.

British Battles on Land and Sea. By JAMES GRANT With about 600 Illustrations. Four Vols. 4to, £1 16s, Library Edition, Four Vols, £2

Browning, An Introduction to the Study of. By ARTHUR SYMONS 2s. 6d.

Butterflies and Moths, European. By W F. KIRBY With 61 Coloured Plates 35s

Canaries and Cage-Birds, The Illustrated Book of. By W. A BLAKSTON, W SWAYSLAND, and A F WIENER With 56 Fac simile Coloured Plates. 35s

Captain Horn, The Adventures of By FRANK STOCKTON 6s

Capture of the "Estrella," The. By COMMANDER CLAUD HARDING, R N 5s.

Carnation Manual, The. Edited and Issued by the National Carnation and Picotee Society (Southern Section) 3s 6d

Cassell's Family Magazine. Yearly Volume Illustrated. 7s. 6d.

Cathedrals, Abbeys, and Churches of England and Wales. Descriptive, Historical, Pictorial. Popular Edition Two Vols 25s.

Cats and Kittens. By HENRIETTE RONNER With Portrait and 13 magnificent Full-page Photogravure Plates and numerous Illustrations. 4to, £2 10s.

Cavour, Count, and Madame de Circourt. Translated by A. J. BUTLER. 10s 6d.

China Painting. By FLORENCE LEWIS With Sixteen Coloured Plates, &c 5s.

Choice Dishes at Small Cost. By A. G PAYNE. Cheap Edition, 1s.

Chums. The Illustrated Paper for Boys Yearly Volume, 8s.

Cities of the World. Four Vols. Illustrated 7s 6d. each.

Civil Service, Guide to Employment in the Entirely New Edition Paper, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

Clinical Manuals for Practitioners and Students of Medicine. (A List of Volumes forwarded post free on application to the Publishers.)

Cobden Club, Works published for the. (A Complete List on application.)

Colonist's Medical Handbook, The. By E. ALFRED BARTON, M.R.C.S. 1s.

Colour. By Prof. A. H. CHURCH New and Enlarged Edition, 3s. 6d.

Columbus, The Career of. By CHARLES ELTON, F.S.A. 10s. 6d.

Combe, George, The Select Works of. Issued by Authority of the Combe Trustees. Popular Edition, 1s. each, net.

The Constitution of Man. Moral Philosophy. Science and Religion. Discussions on Education. American Notes.

Commons and Forests, English. By the Rt. Hon. G. SHAW LEFEVRE, M.P. 10s. 6d.

Conquests of the Cross. Edited by EDWIN HODDER. With numerous Original Illustrations. Complete in Three Vols. 9s. each.

Cookery, A Year's. By PHYLLIS BROWNE. New and Enlarged Edition, 3s. 6d.

Cookery Book, Cassell's New Universal. By LIZZIE HERITAGE. With 12 Coloured Plates and other Illustrations. 1,344 pages, strongly bound in leather gilt, 6s.

Cookery, Cassell's Popular. With Four Coloured Plates. Cloth gilt, 2s.

Cookery, Cassell's Shilling. 110th Thousand. 1s.

Cookery, Vegetarian. By A. G. PAYNE. 1s. 6d.

Cooking by Gas, The Art of. By MARIE J. SUGG. Illustrated. Cloth, 2s.

Cottage Gardening. Edited by W. ROBINSON, F.L.S. Illustrated. Half-yearly Vols., II., III., V., and VI., 2s. 6d. each. Vol. IV., 3s.

Countries of the World, The. By DR. ROBERT BROWN, F.L.S. In Six Vols., with about 750 Illustrations. 7s. 6d. each. Cheap Edition. Vol. I., 6s.

Cyclopædia, Cassell's Concise. Brought down to the latest date. With about 600 Illustrations. New and Cheap Edition, 7s. 6d.

Cyclopædia, Cassell's Miniature. Containing 30,000 Subjects. Cloth, 2s. 6d., half-roxburgh, 4s.

David Balfour, The Adventures of. By R. L. STEVENSON. Illustrated. Two Vols. 6s. each.

Part 1.—Kidnapped. Part 2.—Catriona.

Defoe, Daniel, The Life of. By THOMAS WRIGHT. Illustrated. 21s.

Dictionaries. (For description see alphabetical letter.) Religion, Biographical, Encyclopædic, Mechanical, English, English Literature, Domestic, (French, German, and Latin, see with Educational Works.)

Diet and Cookery for Common Ailments. By a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians, and PHYLLIS BROWNE. 5s.

Dog, Illustrated Book of the. By VERO SHAW, B.A. With 28 Coloured Plates. Cloth bevelled, 35s., half-morocco, 45s.

Domestic Dictionary, The. An Encyclopædia for the Household. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

Doré Don Quixote, The. With about 400 Illustrations by GUSTAVE DORÉ. Cheap Edition, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

Doré Gallery, The. With 250 Illustrations by GUSTAVE DORÉ. 4to, 42s.

Doré's Dante's Inferno. Illustrated by GUSTAVE DORÉ. Popular Edition. With Preface by A. J. BUTLER. Cloth gilt or buckram, 7s. 6d.

Doré's Dante's Purgatory and Paradise. Illustrated by GUSTAVE DORÉ. Cheap Edition, 7s. 6d.

Doré's Milton's Paradise Lost. Illustrated by GUSTAVE DORÉ. 4to, 21s. Popular Edition. Cloth gilt, or buckram gilt, 7s. 6d.

Dressmaking, Modern, The Elements of. By J. E. DAVIS. Illustrated. 2s.

Earth, Our, and its Story. Edited by Dr. ROBERT BROWN, F.L.S. With 36 Coloured Plates and 740 Wood Engravings. Complete in Three Vols., 9s. each.

Edinburgh, Old and New, Cassell's. With 600 Illustrations. Three Vols. 9s. each, library binding, £1 10s. the set.

Egypt Descriptive, Historical, and Picturesque. By Prof. G. EBERS. Translated by CLARA BELL; with Notes by SAMUEL BIRCH, LL.D., &c. Two Vols. 42s.

Electric Current, The. How Produced and How Used. By R. MULLINEUX WALMSLEY, D.Sc., &c. Illustrated. 10s. 6d.

Electricity, Practical. By Prof. W. E. AYRTON. Illustrated. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

Electricity in the Service of Man. A Popular and Practical Treatise. With upwards of 950 Illustrations. New and Revised Edition, 10s. 6d.

Employment for Boys on Leaving School, Guide to. By W. S. BEARD, F.R.G.S. 1s. 6d.

Encyclopædic Dictionary, The. Complete in Fourteen Divisional Vols. 10s. 6d. each. Seven Vols., half-morocco, 21s. each; half-russia, 25s. each.

England, Cassell's Illustrated History of. With upwards of 2,000 Illustrations. New and Revised Edition. Complete in Eight Vols., 9s each; cloth gilt and embossed gilt top and headbanded, £4 net the set English Dictionary, Cassell's. Containing Definitions of upwards of 100,000 Words and Phrases Cheap Edition, 3s 6d. Superior Edition, 5s.

English Literature, Library of. By Prof. H MORLEY. In 5 Vols. 7s. 6d. each.

English Literature, Morley's First Sketch of. Revised Edition, 7s 6d.

English Literature, The Story of. By ANNA BUCKLAND. 3s. 6d

English Writers from the Earliest Period to Shakespeare. By HENRY MORLEY Eleven Vols 5s. each

Æsop's Fables. Illustrated by ERNEST GRISET Cheap Edition Cloth, 3s. 6d., bevelled boards, gilt edges, 5s

Etiquette of Good Society. New Edition Edited and Revised by LADY COLIN CAMPBELL 1s., cloth, 1s 6d Europe, Cassell's Pocket Guide to Leather, 6s.

Fairy Tales Far and Near Retold by Q Illustrated. 3s. 6d.

Fairway Island. By HORACE HUTCHINSON 3s 6d.

Faith Doctor, The A Novel By Dr EDWARD EGGLESTON. 6s.

Family Physician. By Eminent PHYSICIANS and SURGEONS Cloth, 21s., roxburgh, 25s

Fiction, Cassell's Popular Library of 3s 6d each

The Snare of the Fowler By Mrs ALEX ANDER
Out of the Jaws of Death By FRANK BARRETT
Four and no One, &c By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS
The Medicine Lady By L. T MEADE
Leona By Mrs MOLESWORTH
Father Stafford. A Novel By ANTHONY HOPE
Dr Dumány's Wife By MAURUS JÓKAI
"La Bella," and others. By EGERTON CASTLE
A Blot of Ink. Translated by Q and PAUL MARANCKE 5s
The Avenger of Blood By J MACLAREN COBBAN
A Modern Dick Whittington By JAMES PAYN
The Man in Black By STANLEY WEYMAN
The Doings of Raffles Haw By A CONAN DOYLE

Field Naturalist's Handbook, The By Revs J G WOOD and THEODORE WOOD Cheap Edition, 2s. 6d

Figuier's Popular Scientific Works. With Several Hundred Illustrations in each 3s 6d each

The Insect World | Reptiles and Birds | The Vegetable World.
The Human Race | Mammalia | Ocean World.
The World before the Deluge

Figure Painting in Water Colours. With 16 Coloured Plates. 7s 6d.

Flora's Feast. A Masque of Flowers. Penned and Pictured by WALTER CRANE With 40 pages in Colours. 5s.

Flower Painting, Elementary With Eight Coloured Plates. 3s.

Flowers, and How to Paint Them By MAUD NAFTEL With Coloured Plates 5s.

Football: the Rugby Union Game. Edited by Rev F MARSHALL Illustrated New and Enlarged Edition 7s 6d

For Glory and Renown. By D H PARRY Illustrated 5s

Fossil Reptiles, A History of British. By Sir RICHARD OWEN, F R S, &c. With 268 Plates. In Four Vols. £12 12s.

France, From the Memoirs of a Minister of By STANLEY WEYMAN 6s

Franco-German War, Cassell's History of the. Complete in Two Vols, containing about 500 Illustrations. 9s each.

Fraser, John Drummond. By PHILALETHES. A Story of Jesuit Intrigue in the Church of England Cheap Edition 1s. 6d

Free Lance in a Far Land, A. By HERBERT COMPTON 6s.

Garden Flowers, Familiar. By SHIRLEY HIBBERD With Coloured Plates by F E. HULME, F L S Complete in Five Series. Cloth gilt 12. 6d each.

Gardening, Cassell's Popular. Illustrated Complete in Four Vols. 5s. each.

Gazetteer of Great Britain and Ireland, Cassell's With numerous Illustrations and Maps in Colours. Vols. I and II 7s. 6d each.

George Saxon, The Reputation of. By MORLEY ROBERTS. 5s.

Gladstone, The Right Hon W E., M.P., Life of. Profusely Illustrated 1s.
Gleanings from Popular Authors. Two Vols. With Original Illustrations. 9s. each. Two Vols. in One, 15s.
Gulliver's Travels. With 88 Engravings. Cloth, 3s. 6d., cloth gilt 5s.
Gun and its Development, The. By W W GREENER. Illustrated. 10s. 6d.
Guns, Modern Shot. By W W GREENER. Illustrated 5s.
Health, The Book of. By Eminent Physicians and Surgeons. Cloth, 21s.
Heavens, The Story of the. By Sir ROBERT STAWELL BALL, LL.D., F.R.S. With Coloured Plates and Wood Engravings. Popular Edition, 12s. 6d.
Heroes of Britain in Peace and War. With 300 Original Illustrations. Cheap Edition. Two Vols. 3s. 6d. each; or Two Vols. in One, cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.
Hiram Golf's Religion, or, the Shoemaker by the Grace of God. 2s.
Hispaniola Plate (1683-1893). By JOHN BLOUNDELLE-BURTON. 6s.
Historic Houses of the United Kingdom. With Contributions by the Rev. Professor BONNEY, F.R.S., and others. Profusely Illustrated. 10s. 6d.
History, A Footnote to. Eight Years of Trouble in Samoa. By R. L. STEVENSON. 6s.
Home Life of the Ancient Greeks, The. Translated by ALICE ZIMMERN. Illustrated. Cheap Edition. 5s.
Horse, The Book of the. By SAMUEL SIDNEY. With 17 Full-page Collotype Plates of Celebrated Horses of the Day, and numerous other Illustrations. Cloth, 15s.
Horses and Dogs. By O. KERELMAN. With Descriptive Text Translated from the Dutch by CLARA BELL. With Author's portrait and Fifteen Full-page and other Illustrations. 25s. net.
Houghton, Lord. The Life, Letters, and Friendships of Richard Monckton Milnes, First Lord Houghton. By Sir WEMYSS REID. Two Vols. 32s.
Household, Cassell's Book of the. Illustrated. Complete in Four Vols. 5s. each, or Four Vols. in Two half-morocco, 25s.
Hygiene and Public Health. By B. ARTHUR WHITELEGGE, M.D. Illustrated. New and Revised Edition. 7s. 6d.
Impregnable City, The. By MAX PEMBERTON. 6s.
India, Cassell's History of. By JAMES GRANT. With 400 Illustrations. Two Vols., 9s. each, or One Vol. 15s.
In-door Amusements, Card Games, and Fireside Fun, Cassell's Book of. With numerous Illustrations. Cheap Edition. Cloth, 2s.
Iron Pirate, The. By MAX PEMBERTON. Illustrated. 5s.
Island Nights' Entertainments. By R. L. STEVENSON. Illustrated, 6s.
Italy from the Fall of Napoleon I. in 1815 to 1890. By J. W. PROBYN. 3s. 6d.
Kennel Guide, Practical. By Dr. GORDON STABLES. Illustrated. Cheap Edition, 1s.
Khiva, A Ride to. Travels and Adventures in Central Asia. By Col. FRED BURNABY. New Edition. With Portrait and Seven Illustrations. 3s. 6d.
King George, In the Days of. By COL. PERCY GROVES. Illustrated. 1s. 6d.
King's Hussar, A. Memoirs of a Troop Sergeant Major of the 14th (King's) Hussars. Edited by HERBERT COMPTON. 6s.
Ladies' Physician, The. By a London Physician. Cheap Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 3s. 6d.
Lady's Dressing Room, The. Translated from the French by LADY COLIN CAMPBELL. 3s. 6d.
Lady Biddy Fane, The Admirable. By FRANK BARRETT. New Edition. With 12 Full-page Illustrations. 6s.
Lake Dwellings of Europe. By ROBERT MUNRO, M.D., M.A. Cloth, 31s. 6d.
Letters, The Highway of, and its Echoes of Famous Footsteps. By THOMAS ARCHER. Illustrated. 10s. 6d.
Letts's Diaries and other Time-saving Publications are now published exclusively by CASSELL & COMPANY. (A List sent post free on application.)
Lisbeth. A Novel. By LESLIE KEITH. Cheap Edition. One Vol. 6s.
List, ye Landsmen! A Romance of Incident. By W. CLARK RUSSELL. 6s.
Little Minister, The. By J. M. BARRIE. Illustrated Edition, 6s.
Little Squire, The. A Story of Three. By Mrs. HENRY DE LA PASTURE. 3s. 6d.
Lobengula, Three Years with, and Experiences in South Africa. By J. COOPER-CHADWICK. Cheap Edition. 2s. 6d.
Locomotive Engine, The Biography of a. By HENRY FRITH. 3s. 6d.
Loftus, Lord Augustus, P.C., G.C.B., The Diplomatic Reminiscences of. First Series. With Portrait. Two Vols. 32s. Second Series. Two Vols. 32s.
London, Greater. By EDWARD WALFORD. Two Vols. With about 400 Illustrations. 9s. each. Library Edition. Two Vols. £1 the set.
London, Old and New. By WALTER THORNBURY and EDWARD WALFORD. Six Vols., with about 1,200 Illustrations. Cloth, 9s. each. Library Edition, £3.

Medical Handbook of Life Assurance. By JAMES EDWARD ROLLOCK, M D., and JAMES CHISHOLM. New and Revised Edition 07s. 6d.

Medicine, Manuals for Students of. (A List forwarded post free on application)

Modern Europe, A History of. By C. A. FYFFE, M A. Cheap Edition in One Volume, 10s. 6d., Library Edition, Illustrated, 3 vols., 7s. 6d each

Music, Illustrated History of. By EMIL NAUMANN. Edited by the Rev. Sir F. A. GORE OUSELEY, Bart. Illustrated Two Vols. 31s 6d.

National Library, Cassell's. Consisting of 214 Volumes. Paper covers, 3d , cloth 6d (A Complete List of the Volumes post free on application.)

Natural History, Cassell's Concise. By E. PERCEVAL WRIGHT, M A , M D., F L.S With several Hundred Illustrations. 7s 6d., also kept half bound Natural History, Cassell's New. Edited by P MARTIN DUNCAN, M B., F.R S., F G S Complete in Six Vols. With about 2000 Illustrations. Cloth, 9s. each.

Nature's Wonder Workers By KATE R. LOVELL Illustrated 3s. 6d.

Nelson, The Life of. By ROBERT SOUTHEY Illustrated with Eight Plates 3s. 6d.

New Zealand, Picturesque. With Preface by Sir W. B. PERCEVAL K C M.G Illustrated 6s.

Nursing for the Home and for the Hospital, A Handbook of. By CATHERINE J WOOD Cheap Edition, 1s. 6d , cloth, 2s.

Nursing of Sick Children, A Handbook for the By CATHERINE J WOOD 2s 6d.

Old Dorset Chapters in the History of the County By H J MOULE, M A 10s 6d

Old Maids and Young. By E. D'ESTERRE KEELING 6s

Old Boy's Yarns, An. By HAROLD AVERY. With 8 Plates. 3s 6d.

Our Own Country Six Vols With 1,200 Illustrations Cloth, 7s 6d each Painting, The English School of. By ERNEST CHESNEAU Cheap Edition, 3s 6d.

Paris, Old and New. Profusely Illustrated. Complete in Two Volumes. 9s each, or gilt edges, 10s 6d each Peoples of the World, The. By Dr ROBERT BROWN, F L.S Complete in Six Vols With Illustrations. 7s. 6d each

Photography for Amateurs. By T C HEPWORTH. Illustrated, 1s. , cloth 1s 6d.

Phrase and Fable, Dr Brewer's Dictionary of Giving the Derivation, Source, or Origin of Common Phrases, Allusions, and Words that have a Tale to Tell Entirely New and Revised Edition 10s. 6d

Physiology for Students, Elementary. By ALFRED T. SCHOFIELD, M D., M R C S With Two Coloured Plates and numerous Illustrations. New Edition 5s

Picturesque America. Complete in Four Vols., with 48 Exquisite Steel Plates, and about 800 Original Wood Engravings. £2 2s. each. Popular Edition, Vols. I and II , price 18s each.

Picturesque Canada. With about 600 Original Illustrations Two Vols. £6 6s. the set Picturesque Europe. Complete in Five Vols Each containing 13 Exquisite Steel Plates, from Original Drawings, and nearly 300 Original Illustrations. £21 , half morocco, £31 10s. , morocco gilt, £52 10s. Popular Edition In Five Vols. 18s each Picturesque Mediterranean, The. With a Series of Magnificent Illustrations from Original Designs by leading Artists of the day Two Vols. Cloth, £2 2s each.

Pigeon Keeper, The Practical. By LEWIS WRIGHT Illustrated 3s. 6d

Pigeons, Fulton's Book of. Edited by LEWIS WRIGHT Revised, Enlarged and Supplemented by the Rev W F LUMLEY With 50 Full page Illustrations. Popular Edition In One Vol , 10s 6d.

Planet, The Story of Our By the Rev Prof. BONNEY, F.R.S., &c. With Coloured Plates and Maps and about 100 Illustrations. 31s. 6d.

Pocket Library, Cassell's. Cloth, 1s. 4d. each.

A King's Diary By PERCY WHITE.
A White Baby By JAMES WELSH
The Little Huguenot. By MAX PEMBERTON.
A Whirl Asunder By GERTRUDE ATHERTON

Polytechnic Series, The. Practical Illustrated Manuals. (A List will be sent on application)

Pomona's Travels. By FRANK R STOCKTON Illustrated 5s.

Portrait Gallery, Cassell's Universal. Containing 240 Portraits of Celebrated Men and Women of the Day. With brief Memoirs and facsimile Autographs. Cloth, 6s.

Portrait Gallery, The Cabinet. Complete in Five Series, each containing 36 Cabinet Photographs of Eminent Men and Women of the day 15s each Poultry Keeper, The Practical. By LEWIS WRIGHT. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.

Poultry, The Book of. By LEWIS WRIGHT. Popular Edition Illustrated. 10s. 6d.

Poultry, The Illustrated Book of. By LEWIS WRIGHT. With Fifty Exquisite Coloured Plates, and numerous Wood Engravings. Revised Edition. Cloth, gilt edges, price on application, half morocco, £2 2s.

"Punch," The History of. By M. H. SPIELMANN. With about 120 Illustrations, Portraits, and Facsimiles. Cloth, 16s.; Large Paper Edition, £2 2s net

Prison Princess, A. By MAJOR ARTHUR GRIFFITHS. 6s.

Q's Works, Uniform Edition of. 5s. each.

Dead Man's Rock.
The Splendid Spur
The Blue Pavilions
The Delectable Duchy
The Astonishing History of Troy Town
"I Saw Three Ships," and other Winter's Tales.
Noughts and Crosses.
Stories Studies, and Sketches.

Queen Summer; or, The Tourney of the Lily and the Rose. Penned and Portrayed by WALTER CRANE With 40 pages in Colours 6s.

Queen, The People's Life of their By Rev E. J HARDY, M.A 1s

Queen Victoria, The Life and Times of. By ROBERT WILSON. Complete in 2 Vols. With numerous Illustrations. 9s. each Queen's Scarlet, The By G MANVILLE FENN Illustrated 5s.

Rabbit-Keeper, The Practical. By CUNICULUS Illustrated 3s 6d

Railway Guides, Official Illustrated. With Illustrations on nearly every page Maps, &c Paper covers, 1s., cloth 2s

London and North Western Railway
Great Western Railway
Midland Railway
Great Northern Railway
Great Eastern Railway
London and South Western Railway
London, Brighton and South Coast Railway
South Eastern Railway

Railway Guides, Official Illustrated. Abridged and Popular Editions. Paper covers, 3d. each.

Great Eastern Railway
London and North Western Railway
London and South Western Railway
London, Brighton and South Coast Railway

Railway Library, Cassell's. Crown 8vo, boards, 2s each.

Metzerott, Shoemaker By Katharine P Woods.
David Todd By David Maclure
Commodore Junk. By G Manville Fenn
St. Cuthbert's Tower By Florence Warden
The Man with a Thumb By W C Hudson (Barclay North)
By Right Not Law By R Sherard.
Within Sound of the Weir By Thomas St. E Hake.
Under a Strange Mask By Frank Barrett.
The Coombeberrow Mystery By J Colwall.
A Queer Race By W Westall.
Jack Gordon, Knight Errant. By W C Hudson (Barclay North)
The Diamond Button Whose Was It? By W C Hudson (Barclay North)
Who is John Noman? By G Henry Beckett
The Tragedy of Brinkwater By Martha L Moodey
An American Penman. By Julian Hawthorne.
Section 558, or, The Fatal Letter By Julian Hawthorne.
A Tragic Mystery By Julian Hawthorne
The Great Bank Robbery By Julian Hawthorne

Railways, Our Their Origin, Development, Incident, and Romance. By JOHN PENDLETON Illustrated 2 Vols, demy 8vo, 24s

Red Terror, The. A Story of the Paris Commune By EDWARD KING. Illustrated 3s. 6d

Rivers of Great Britain Descriptive, Historical, Pictorial

The Royal River The Thames from Source to Sea. Popular Edition 16s
Rivers of the East Coast. With highly finished Engravings. Popular Edition, 16s.

Robinson Crusoe Cassell's New Fine Art Edition With upwards of 100 Original Illustrations 7s 6d

Romance, The World of. Illustrated One Vol, cloth 9s

Ronner, Henriette, The Painter of Cat-Life and Cat-Character By M H SPIELMANN Containing a Series of beautiful Phototype Illustrations 12s

Royal Academy Pictures, 1895 With upwards of 200 magnificent reproductions of Pictures in the Royal Academy of 1895 7s 6d

Russo-Turkish War, Cassell's History of. With about 500 Illustrations. Two Vols., 9s. each, library binding, One Vol, 15s.

Sala, George Augustus, The Life and Adventures of By Himself. In Two Vols. 32s

Saturday Journal, Cassell's. Illustrated throughout Yearly Vol., 7s 6d.

Scarabæus. The Story of an African Beetle. By THE MARQUISE CLARA LANZA and JAMES CLARENCE HARVEY Cheap Edition, 3s. 6d.

Science for All. Edited by Dr ROBERT BROWN, M.A., F.L.S., &c. Revised Edition With 1,500 Illustrations. Five Vols. 9s. each.

Science Series, The Century. Consisting of Biographies of Eminent Scientific Men of the present Century Edited by Sir HENRY ROSCOE, D.C.L., F.R.S., M.P Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d each.

John Dalton and the Rise of Modern Chemistry By Sir HENRY E. ROSCOE, F.R.S
Major Rennell, F.R.S., and the Rise of English Geography By CLEMENTS R. MARKHAM, C.B., F.R.S. President of the Royal Geographical Society
Justus Von Liebig His Life and Work By W. A. SHENSTONE.
The Herschels and Modern Astronomy By Miss AGNES M. CLERKE
Charles Lyell His Life and Work. By Professor T. G. BONNEY F.R.S.

Scotland, Picturesque and Traditional. By G E Lyre Lord 6s
Sea, The, Story of the An Entirely New and Original Work. Edited by Q.C. Illustrated Vol I 9s
Sea-Wolves, The By Max Pemberton Illustrated 6s
Shadow of a Song, The A Novel. By Cecil Harley 5s
Shaftesbury, The Seventh Earl of, K.G., The Life and Work of. By Edwin Hodder Illustrated Cheap Edition, 3s 6d
Shakespeare, Cassell's Quarto Edition. Edited by Charles and Mary Cowden Clarke, and containing about 600 Illustrations by H C Selous Complete in Three Vols cloth gilt, £3 3s Also published in Three separate Vols, in cloth, viz The Comedies, 21s, The Historical Plays, 18s 6d, The Tragedies 25s.
Shakespeare, The England of A new Edition By E. Goadby With Full-page Illustrations Crown 8vo, 224 pages, 2s 6d
Shakespeare, The Plays of. Edited by Prof Henry Morley Complete in Thirteen Vols Cloth in box 21s, half morocco, cloth sides, 42s
Shakspere, The International. Edition de luxe
King Henry VIII By Sir James Linton, P R I Price on application.)
Othello Illustrated by Frank Dicksee, R A £5 10s
King Henry IV Illustrated by Herr Eduard Grützner £3 10s
As You Like It Illustrated by the late Mons Emile Bayard £3 10s
Shakspere, The Leopold. With 400 Illustrations and an Introduction by F J Furnivall Cheap Edition, 3s 6d Cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s, roxburgh 7s 6d
Shakspere, The Royal. With Exquisite Steel Plates and Wood Engravings. Three Vols 15s each Sketches, The Art of Making and Using From the French of G Fraipont By Clara Bell With Fifty Illustrations 2s 6d
Smuggling Days and Smuggling Ways, or, The Story of a Lost Art By Commander the Hon Henry N Shore, R N Illustrated Cloth, 7s 6d
Social England. A Record of the Progress of the People By various writers Edited by H D Traill, D C L Vols I, II, and III, 15s each Vol IV 17s
Social Welfare, Subjects of By Lord Playfair, K C B &c 7s 6d
Sorrow, The Highway of. By Hesba Stretton and a well known Russian exile 6s
Sports and Pastimes, Cassell's Complete Book of. Cheap Edition, 3s 6d
Squire, The By Mrs Parr Cheap Edition in one Vol, 6s
Standishs of High Acre, The A Novel By Gilbert Sheldon Two Vols 21s.
Star Land. By Sir Robert Stawell Ball, LL D, &c Illustrated 6s
Statesmen, Past and Future. 6s
Story of Francis Cludde, The A Novel By Stanley J Weyman 6s
Sun, The Story of the By Sir Robert Stawell Ball, LL D, F R S, F R A S. With Eight Coloured Plates and other Illustrations 21s Sunshine Series, Cassell's. In Vols 1s each A List post free on application
Sybil Knox; or, Home Again. A Story of To-day By E. E. Hale 6s.
Taxation, Municipal, at Home and Abroad. By J J O'Meara 7s 6d
Thackeray in America, With By Eyre Crowe A R A Illustrated 10s. 6d.
Thames, The Tidal. By Grant Allen With India Proof Impressions of 20 Magnificent Full-page Photogravure Plates and many other Illustrations, after original drawings by W L Wyllie, A R A Half morocco, gilt gilt edges £5 15s. 6d.
The "Belle Sauvage" Library Cloth 2s each A Complete List of the Volumes post free on application
The Short Story Library 5s each. List of Vols on application
Things I have Seen and People I have Known. By G A Sala With Portrait and Autograph 2 Vols 21s
Thorough Good Cook, The By George Augustus Sala 21s
Tiny Luttrell. By E. W Hornung Cloth. Popular Edition 6s.
To Punish the Czar. A Story of the Crimea. By Horace Hutchinson. Illustrated 3s. 6d
"Treasure Island" Series, The Cheap Illustrated Edition Cloth, 3s 6d. each Treasure Island By Robert Louis Stevenson
The Master of Ballantrae. By Robert Louis Stevenson 6s
The Black Arrow A Tale of the Two Roses By Robert Louis Stevenson
King Solomon's Mines. By H Rider Haggard
Treatment, The Year-Book of, for 1896. A Critical Review for Practitioners of Medicine and Surgery Twelfth Year of Issue 7s. 6d.
Trees, Familiar By Prof G S Boulger, F L S, F G S. Two Series. With Forty Full-page Coloured Plates by W H J Boot 7s. 6d each.
Turner's Little Maid. By G. B. Burgin 6s.

"Unicode" The Universal Telegraphic Phrase Book. Pocket or Desk Edition 2s. 6d each

United States, Cassell's History of the By EDMUND OLLIER With 600 Illustrations Three Vols 9s each

Universal History, Cassell's Illustrated With nearly ONE THOUSAND ILLUSTRATIONS Vol I Early and Greek History —Vol II The Roman Period — Vol III The Middle Ages —Vol IV Modern History 9s each

Vicar of Wakefield and other Works, by OLIVER GOLDSMITH Illustrated 3s 6d cloth gilt edges 5s

Wandering Heath Short Stories By Q 6s

War and Peace, Memories and Studies of By ARCHIBALD FORBES 16s

Water-Colour Painting A Course of. With Twenty four Coloured Plates, by R P LEITCH and full Instructions at the End 5s

Westminster Abbey Annals of By I I BRADLEY (Mrs A MURRAY SMITH) Illustrated With a Preface by Dean FARRAR 63s

White Shield, The By BERTRAM MITFORD 6s

Wild Birds, Familiar By W SWAYSLAND Four Series. With 40 Coloured Plates in each In sets only price 1 applications

Wild Flowers, Familiar By J E HULME, F L S F S A Five Series With 40 Coloured Plates in each (In sets only price 1 application)

Wild Flowers Collecting Book In Six Parts 4d each

Wild Flowers Drawing and Painting Book. In Six Parts 4d each

Windsor Castle The Governor's Guide to By the Most Hon the MARQUIS OF LORNE K T Profusely Illustrated Limp cloth 1s Cloth boards gilt edges 2s

Wit and Humour, Cassell's New World of. With New Pictures and New Text 6s

With Claymore and Bayonet By Col PERCY GROVES With 8 Plates 5s

Wood, The Life of the Rev J G By his Son the Rev THEODORE WOOD With Portrait Extra crown 8vo 3s 6d cheap Edition 1s 6d

Work. The Illustrated Journal for Mechanics New and Enlarged Series Vols VIII and IX 4s each

"Work" Handbooks A Series of Practical Manuals prepared under the Direction of PAUL HASLUCK Editor of Work Illustrated Cloth each

World Beneath the Waters, A By Rev GERARD BANCKS 3s 6d

World of Wit and Humour The With 400 Illustrations Cloth 7s 6d

World of Wonders, The With 400 Illustrations Two Vols 7s 6d each

Wrecker, The By R L STEVENSON and LLOYD OSBOURNE Illustrated 6s

Yule Tide CASSELL'S CHRISTMAS ANNUAL 1s

ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINES

The Quiver*, for Sunday and General Reading Monthly 6d

Cassell's Family Magazine. Monthly 6d.

"Little Folks" Magazine Monthly 6d

The Magazine of Art. With Three Plates Monthly, 1s 4d

Cassell's Saturday Journal. Weekly, 1d , Monthly, 6d

Chums. The Illustrated Paper for Boys Weekly 1d Monthly 6d

Work. Illustrated Journal for Mechanics Weekly, 1d , Monthly, 6d.

Cottage Gardening. Illustrated Weekly, ½d , Monthly, 3d

 Full particulars of CASSELL & COMPANY'S Monthly Serial Publications will be found in CASSELL & COMPANY'S COMPLETE CATALOGUE

Catalogues of CASSELL & COMPANY'S PUBLICATIONS which may be had at all Booksellers or will be sent post free on application to the Publishers —

 CASSELL'S COMPLETE CATALOGUE, containing particulars of upwards of One Thousand Volumes.

CASSELL'S CLASSIFIED CATALOGUE, in which their Works are arranged according to price, from Threepence to Fifty Guineas

CASSELL'S EDUCATIONAL CATALOGUE containing particulars of CASSELL & COMPANY'S Educational Works and Students' Manuals.

CASSELL & COMPANY LIMITED Ludgate Hill, London.

Bibles and Religious Works.

Bible Biographies. Illustrated 2s. 6d each.

The Story of Joseph Its Lessons for To-Day By the Rev GEORGE BAINTON
The Story of Moses and Joshua. By the Rev J TELFORD
The Story of Judges. By the Rev J WYCLIFFE GEDGE.
The Story of Samuel and Saul By the Rev. D C TOVEY.
The Story of David. By the Rev J WILD.

The Story of Jesus In Verse. By J R. MACDUFF D D

Bible, Cassell's Illustrated Family. With 900 Illustrations. Leather, gilt edges, £2 10s., full morocco, £3 10s.

Bible, The, and the Holy Land, New Light on. By B. T A EVETTS, M A. Illustrated. Cloth, 21s.

Bible Educator, The Edited by E. H PLUMPTRE, D D With Illustrations, Maps, &c Four Vols., cloth, 6s each

Bible Manual, Cassell's Illustrated. By the Rev ROBERT HUNTER LL.D Illustrated 7s 6d

Bible Student in the British Museum, The. By the Rev J G KITCHIN, M A Entirely New and Revised Edition, 1s. 4d.

Biblewomen and Nurses. Yearly Vol , 3s.

Bunyan, Cassell's Illustrated With 200 Original Illustrations Cheap Edition 7s 6d

Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress (Cassell's Illustrated) 4to Cheap Edition 3s 6d

Child's Bible, The. With 200 Illustrations. Demy 4to, 830 pp 150*th Thousand* Cheap Edition, 7s 6d Superior Edition, with 6 Coloured Plates, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

Child's Life of Christ, The Complete in One Handsome Volume, with about 200 Original Illustrations. Cheap Edition, cloth, 7s 6d , or with 6 Coloured Plates, cloth, gilt edges, 10s. 6d Demy 4to, gilt edges, 21s.

"Come, ye Children." By the Rev BENJAMIN WAUGH. Illustrated 3s 6d

Commentary, The New Testament, for English Readers. Edited by the Rt Rev C J ELLICOTT, D D , Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. In Three Vols. 21s each

Vol I —The Four Gospels
Vol II —The Acts Romans Corinthians, Galatians.
Vol III —The remaining Books of the New Testament.

Commentary, The Old Testament, for English Readers. Edited by the Rt. Rev C J ELLICOTT, D D , Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Complete in 5 Vols 21s. each

Vol I —Genesis to Numbers
Vol II —Deuteronomy to Samuel II
Vol III Kings I to Esther
Vol IV —Job to Isaiah
Vol V —Jeremiah to Malachi

Commentary, The New Testament. Edited by Bishop ELLICOTT Handy Volume Edition. Suitable for School and General Use

St. Matthew 3s. 6d
St. Mark 3s
St. Luke 3s 6d
St. John 3s 6d
The Acts of the Apostles. 3s. 6d
Romans 2s 6d
Corinthians I and II 3s.
Galatians, Ephesians, and Philippians 3s.
Colossians Thessalonians, and Timothy 3s.
Titus Philemon Hebrews, and James 3s.
Peter, Jude and John
The Revelation 3s
An Introduction to the New Testament 2s 6d

Commentary, The Old Testament. Edited by Bishop ELLICOTT. Handy Volume Edition Suitable for School and General Use.

Genesis 3s 6d.
Exodus 3s.
Leviticus 3s.
Numbers. 2s. 6d
Deuteronomy 2s. 6d

Dictionary of Religion, The An Encyclopædia of Christian and other Religious Doctrines, Denominations, Sects, Heresies, Ecclesiastical Terms, History, Biography, &c. &c. By the Rev WILLIAM BENHAM B D Cheap Edition 10s. 6d.

Dore Bible. With 230 Illustrations by GUSTAVE DORÉ. Original Edition Two Vols. best morocco, gilt edges, £15 Popular Edition With Full-page Illustrations. In One Vol 15s. Also in leather binding (Price on application.)

Early Days of Christianity, The. By the Very Rev Dean FARRAR, D D., F.R.S.
LIBRARY EDITION Two Vols., 24s., morocco £2 2s.
POPULAR EDITION. Complete in One Vol., cloth, 6s., cloth, gilt edges, 7s. 6d , Persian morocco, 10s. 6d , tree-calf, 15s.

Family Prayer-Book, The. Edited by the Rev Canon GARRETT, M A , and the Rev S MARTIN With Full-page Illustrations New Edition. Cloth, 7s. 6d.

Gleanings after Harvest. Studies and Sketches. By the Rev. JOHN R. VERNON, M.A. Illustrated. 6s.

"Graven in the Rock," or, the Historical Accuracy of the Bible confirmed by reference to the Assyrian and Egyptian Sculptures in the British Museum and elsewhere. By the Rev. Dr SAMUEL KINNS, F.R.A.S., &c. &c. Illustrated 12s. 6d.

"Heart Chords." A Series of Works by Eminent Divines. Bound in cloth, red edges, 1s. each.

My Father By the Right Rev. Ashton Oxenden, late Bishop of Montreal.
My Bible By the Rt. Rev. W. Boyd Carpenter Bishop of Ripon.
My Work for God. By the Right Rev. Bishop Cotterill.
My Object in Life By the Very Rev. Dean Farrar, D.D.
My Aspirations. By the Rev. G. Matheson, D.D.
My Emotional Life By Prebendary Chadwick, D.D.
My Body By the Rev. Prof. W. G. Blaikie, D.D.
My Soul By the Rev. P. B. Power, M.A.
My Growth in Divine Life By the Rev. Prebendary Reynolds, M.A.
My Hereafter By the Very Rev. Dean Bickersteth.
My Walk with God. By the Very Rev. Dean Montgomery.
My Aids to the Divine Life By the Very Rev. Dean Boyle.
My Sources of Strength By the Rev. H. E. Jenkins, M.A.

Helps to Belief. A Series of Helpful Manuals on the Religious Difficulties of the Day. Edited by the Rev. TEIGNMOUTH SHORE, M.A., Canon of Worcester, and Chaplain-in-Ordinary to the Queen. Cloth, 1s. each.

CREATION. By Harvey Goodwin, D.D., late Lord Bishop of Carlisle.
MIRACLES. By the Rev. Brownlow Maitland, M.A.
PRAYER. By the Rev. Canon Shore, M.A.
THE DIVINITY OF OUR LORD. By the Lord Bishop of Derry.
THE ATONEMENT. By William Connor Magee, D.D., Late Archbishop of York.

Holy Land and the Bible, The. A Book of Scripture Illustrations gathered in Palestine. By the Rev. CUNNINGHAM GEIKIE, D.D., LL.D. (Edin.) With Maps. Two Vols. 24s. Illustrated Edition. One Vol. 21s.

Life of Christ, The. By the Very Rev. Dean FARRAR, D.D., F.R.S., Chaplain-in-Ordinary to the Queen.
POPULAR EDITION, Revised and Enlarged, extra crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 7s. 6d.
CHEAP ILLUSTRATED EDITION. Large 4to, cloth, 7s. 6d. Cloth, full gilt, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.
LIBRARY EDITION. Two Vols. Cloth, 24s.; morocco, 42s.

Marriage Ring, The. By WILLIAM LANDELS, D.D. Bound in white leatherette. New and Cheaper Edition. 3s. 6d.

Moses and Geology; or, the Harmony of the Bible with Science. By the Rev. SAMUEL KINNS, Ph.D., F.R.A.S. Illustrated. Demy 8vo. New Edition, 10s. 6d.

My Comfort in Sorrow. By HUGH MACMILLAN, D.D., LL.D., &c. 1s.

My Last Will and Testament. By HYACINTHE LOYSON (PÈRE HYACINTHE). Translated by FABIAN WARE. 1s., cloth, 1s. 6d.

New Light on the Bible and the Holy Land. By BASIL T. A. EVETTS, M.A. Illustrated. Cloth, 21s.

Old and New Testaments, Plain Introductions to the Books of the. Containing Contributions by many Eminent Divines. In Two Vols., 3s. 6d. each.

Plain Introductions to the Books of the Old Testament. 336 pages. Edited by the Right Rev. C. J. ELLICOTT, D.D., Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. 3s. 6d.

Plain Introductions to the Books of the New Testament. 304 pages. Edited by the Right Rev. C. J. ELLICOTT, D.D., Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. 3s. 6d.

Protestantism, The History of. By the Rev. J. A. WYLIE, LL.D. Containing upwards of 600 Original Illustrations. Three Vols., 27s.

"Quiver" Yearly Volume, The. With about 600 Original Illustrations and Coloured Frontispiece. 7s. 6d. Also Monthly, 6d.

St. George for England, and other Sermons preached to Children. Fifth Edition. By the Rev. T. TEIGNMOUTH SHORE, M.A., Canon of Worcester. 5s.

St. Paul, The Life and Work of. By the Very Rev. Dean FARRAR, D.D., F.R.S.
LIBRARY EDITION. Two Vols., cloth, 24s.; calf, 42s.
ILLUSTRATED EDITION. One Vol., £1 1s.; morocco, £2 2s.
POPULAR EDITION. One Vol., 8vo, cloth, 6s.; cloth, gilt edges, 7s. 6d.; Persian morocco, 10s. 6d.; tree calf 15s.

Searchings in the Silence. By Rev. GEORGE MATHESON, D.D. 3s. 6d.

Shall We Know One Another in Heaven? By the Rt. Rev. J. C. RYLE, D.D., Bishop of Liverpool. New and Enlarged Edition. Paper covers, 6d.

Shortened Church Services and Hymns, suitable for use at Children's Services. Compiled by the Rev. T. TEIGNMOUTH SHORE, M.A., Canon of Worcester. Enlarged Edition. 1s.

Signa Christi. Evidences of Christianity set forth in the Person and Work of Christ. By the Rev. JAMES AITCHISON. 2s. 6d.

"Sunday." Its Origin, History, and Present Obligation. By the Ven. Archdeacon HESSEY, D.C.L. Fifth Edition, 7s. 6d.

Twilight of Life, The. Words of Counsel and Comfort for the Aged. By JOHN ELLERTON, M.A. 1s. 6d.

Educational Works and Students' Manuals.

Agricultural Text Books, Cassell's (The "Downton" Series.) Fully Illustrated. Edited by JOHN WRIGHTSON, Professor of Agriculture. Soils and Manures By J. M. H. Munro, D.Sc. (London), F.I.C., F.C.S. 2s. 6d. Farm Crops By Professor Wrightson. 2s. 6d. Live Stock. By Professor Wrightson. 2s. 6d.

Alphabet, Cassell's Pictorial. Mounted on Linen, with rollers. 3s. 6d.

Arithmetic. Howard's Art of Reckoning By C. F. HOWARD. Paper, 1s.; cloth, 2s. Enlarged Edition, 5s.

Arithmetics, The "Belle Sauvage." By GEORGE RICKS, B.Sc. Lond. With Test Cards. (List on application.)

Atlas, Cassell's Popular Containing 24 Coloured Maps. 2s. 6d.

Book Keeping By THEODORE JONES. FOR SCHOOLS, 2s., or cloth, 3s. FOR THE MILLION, 2s., or cloth, 3s. Books for Jones's System, Ruled Sets of, 2s.

British Empire Map of the World. New Map for Schools and Institutes. By G. R. PARKIN and J. G. BARTHOLOMEW, F.R.G.S. Mounted on cloth, varnished, and with Rollers or Folded. 25s.

Chemistry, The Public School. By J. H. ANDERSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Cookery for Schools. By LIZZIE HERITAGE. 6d.

Dulce Domum. Rhymes and Songs for Children. Edited by JOHN FARMER, Editor of 'Gaudeamus,' &c. Old Notation and Words. 5s. N.B.—The Words of the Songs in 'Dulce Domum' (with the Airs both in Tonic Sol-fa and Old Notation) can be had in Two Parts, 6d. each.

English Literature. A First Sketch of, from the Earliest Period to the Present Time. By Prof. HENRY MORLEY. 7s. 6d.

Euclid, Cassell's. Edited by Prof. WALLACE, M.A. 1s.

Euclid, The First Four Books of. New Edition. In paper, 6d.; cloth, 9d.

French, Cassell's Lessons in. New and Revised Edition. Parts I. and II., each, 2s. 6d.; complete, 4s. 6d. Key, 1s. 6d.

French-English and English-French Dictionary. Entirely New and Enlarged Edition. 1,150 pages, 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.; superior binding, 5s.

French Reader. Cassell's Public School. By GUILLAUME S. CONRAD. 2s. 6d.

Galbraith and Haughton's Scientific Manuals.

Plane Trigonometry, 3s. 6d. Euclid, Books I., II., III., 1s. 6d.; Books IV., V., VI., 2s. 6d. Mathematical Tables, 3s. 6d. Mechanics, 3s. 6d. Natural Philosophy, 3s. 6d. Optics, 2s. 6d. Hydrostatics, 2s. 6d. Steam Engine, 3s. 6d. Algebra. Part I., 1th, 2s. 6d. Complete, 3s. 6d. Tides and Tidal Currents, with Tidal Cards, 3s.

Gaudeamus. Songs for Colleges and Schools. Edited by JOHN FARMER. 5s. Words only, paper, 6d.; cloth, 9d.

Geometrical Drawing for Army Candidates. By H. I. HILEY, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Geometry, First Elements of Experimental. By PAUL BERT. Illustrated. 1s. 6d.

Geometry, Practical Solid. By Major ROSS, R.E. 2s.

German Dictionary, Cassell's New. German-English, English-German. Cheap Edition, cloth, 3s. 6d.; superior binding, 5s.

German Reading, First Lessons in. By A. JAGST. Illustrated. 1s.

Hand and Eye Training. By GEORGE RICKS, B.Sc., and JOSEPH VAUGHAN. Illustrated. Vol. I. Designing with Coloured Papers. Vol. II. Cardboard Work. 2s. each. Vol. III. Colour Work and Design, 3s.

Hand and Eye Training. By G. RICKS, B.Sc. Two Vols., with 16 Coloured Plates in each Vol. Crown 4to, 6s. each.

"Hand and Eye Training" Cards for Class Work. Five sets in cases, 1s. each.

Historical Cartoons, Cassell's Coloured. Size 45 in. × 35 in. 2s. each. Mounted on canvas and varnished, with rollers, 5s. each. (Descriptive pamphlet, 16 pp., 1d.)

Italian Lessons, with Exercises, Cassell's. In One Vol. 3s. 6d.

Latin Dictionary, Cassell's New (Latin-English and English-Latin.) Revised by J. R. V. MARCHANT, M.A., and J. F. CHARLES, B.A. 3s. 6d.; superior binding, 5s.

Latin Primer, The New. By Prof. J. P. POSTGATE. 2s. 6d.

Latin Primer, The First. By Prof. POSTGATE. 1s.

Latin Prose for Lower Forms. By M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 2s. 6d.

Laws of Every-Day Life. For the Use of Schools. By H. O. ARNOLD-FORSTER, M.P. 1s. 6d. Special Edition on green paper for those with weak eyesight, 1s. 6d.

Lessons in Our Laws, or, Talks at Broadacre Farm. By H F LESTER, B A Part I THE MAKERS AND CARRIERS OUT OF THE LAW Part II LAW COURTS AND LOCAL RULE, &c. 1s. 6d each Little Folks' History of England. By ISA CRAIG-KNOX Illustrated. 1s 6d.

Making of the Home, The By Mrs. SAMUEL A. BARNETT 1s 6d.

Marlborough Books —Arithmetic Examples 3s. French Exercises 3s. 6d. French Grammar 2s. 6d. German Grammar 3s 6d

Mechanics for Young Beginners, A First Book of. By the Rev J G EASTON, M A 4s 6d

Mechanics and Machine Design, Numerical Examples in Practical. By R G BLAINE, M E New Edition, Revised and Enlarged With 79 Illustrations Cloth, 2s. 6d

Natural History Coloured Wall Sheets, Cassell's New Consisting of 17 subjects Size, 39 by 31 in Mounted on rollers and varnished 3s each

Object Lessons from Nature. By Prof L C MIALL, F L S, F G S Fully Illustrated New and Enlarged Edition Two Vols 1s 6d each

Physiology for Schools By ALFRED T SCHOFIELD, M D, M R C S, &c. Illustrated 1s 9d Three Parts, paper covers, 5d each or cloth limp, 6d each

Poetry Readers, Cassell's New Illustrated 12 Books 1d each Cloth, 1s. 6d Popular Educator, Cassell's New. With Revised Text, New Maps, New Coloured Plates, New Type, &c. Complete in Eight Vols, 5s each, or Eight Vols. in Four, half morocco, 50s.

Readers, Cassell's "Belle Sauvage" An Entirely New Series Fully Illustrated Strongly bound in cloth (List on application)

Reader, The Citizen By H O ARNOLD-FORSTER M P Cloth, 1s 6d, also a Scottish Edition, cloth, 1s. 6d

Reader, The Temperance By Rev J DENNIS HIRD 1s 6d.

Readers, Cassell's "Higher Class" (List on application)

Readers, Cassell's Readable. Illustrated (List on application)

Readers for Infant Schools, Coloured. Three Books 4d each

Readers, Geographical, Cassell's New With Numerous Illustrations in each Book (List on application)

Readers, The Modern Geographical Illustrated throughout (List on application.)

Readers, The Modern School. Illustrated (List on application)

Reading and Spelling Book, Cassell's Illustrated. 1s

Round the Empire By G R PARKIN With a Preface by the Rt Hon the Earl of Rosebery, K G Fully Illustrated 1s 6d

Science Applied to Work. By J A BOWER Illustrated 1s.

Science of Every Day Life. By J A BOWER Illustrated 1s

Sculpture, A Primer of. By E ROSCOE MULLINS Illustrated 2s 6d.

Shade from Models, Common Objects, and Casts of Ornament, How to By W E SPARKES With 25 Plates by the Author. 3s Shakspere's Plays for School Use. Illustrated 9 Books 6d. each.

Spelling A Complete Manual of. By J. D MORELL, LL.D 1s

Technical Educator, Cassell's New An entirely New Cyclopædia of Technical Education, with Coloured Plates and Engravings. Complete in Six Vols, 5s each

Technical Manuals, Cassell's. Illustrated throughout. 16 Vols, from 2s. to 4s 6d. (List free on application)

Technology, Manuals of. Edited by Prof AYRTON, F R S, and RICHARD WORMELL, D Sc., M A. Illustrated throughout. (List on application)

Things New and Old, or, Stories from English History By H O ARNOLD-FORSTER, M.P Fully Illustrated. Strongly bound in Cloth. Standards I and II, 9d each; Standard III, 1s., Standard IV, 1s 3d, Standards V, VI, and VII, 1s. 6d. each.

World of Ours, This. By H. O. ARNOLD-FORSTER, M.P Fully Illustrated 3s. 6d.

Books for Young People.

"Little Folks" Half-Yearly Volume Containing 432 pages of Letterpress, with Pictures on nearly every page, together with Six Full page Plates printed in Colours. Coloured boards, 3s. 6d., or cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s.

Bo-Peep A Book for the Little Ones. With Original Stories and Verses. Illustrated with beautiful Pictures on nearly every page, and Coloured Frontispiece. Yearly Vol Elegant picture boards, 2s. 6d; cloth, 3s. 6d.

Beneath the Banner. Being Narratives of Noble Lives and Brave Deeds. By F. J Cross Illustrated Limp cloth, 1s., cloth boards, gilt edges, 2s.

Good Morning! Good Night! Morning and Evening Readings for Children, by the Author of "Beneath the Banner" Fully Illustrated Limp cloth, 1s., or cloth boards, gilt edges, 2s.

Five Stars in a Little Pool. By EDITH CARRINGTON. Illustrated 6s.

Beyond the Blue Mountains. By L. T MEADE. Illustrated 5s

The Cost of a Mistake. By SARAH PITT Illustrated New Edition 2s. 6d.

The Peep of Day. Cassell's Illustrated Edition 2s 6d.

Maggie Steele's Diary. By E A. DILLWYN 2s 6d

A Book of Merry Tales By MAGGIE BROWNE, SHEILA, ISABEL WILSON, and C L MATÉAUX Illustrated 3s 6d

A Sunday Story-Book. By MAGGIE BROWNE, SAM BROWNE, and AUNT ETHEL Illustrated 3s 6d

A Bundle of Tales. By MAGGIE BROWNE, SAM BROWNE, & AUNT ETHEL. 3s. 6d.

Story Poems for Young and Old. By E. DAVENPORT 3s 6d

Pleasant Work for Busy Fingers. By MAGGIE BROWNE Illustrated 5s.

Magic at Home By Prof HOFFMAN Fully Illustrated A Series of easy and startling Conjuring Tricks for Beginners Cloth gilt, 2s 6d

Schoolroom and Home Theatricals By ARTHUR WAUGH With Illustrations by H. A J MILES New Edition. Paper, 1s., cloth, 1s 6d

Little Mother Bunch. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH Illustrated New Edition 2s 6d

Heroes of Every Day Life. By LAURA LANE With about 20 Full page Illustrations. 256 pages, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s 6d

Ships, Sailors, and the Sea By R J CORNEWALL-JONES Illustrated throughout, and containing a Coloured Plate of Naval Flags. Cheap Edition, 2s 6d

Gift Books for Young People. By Popular Authors. With Four Original Illustrations in each Cloth gilt, 1s 6d each

The Boy Hunters of Kentucky. By Edward S. Ellis.
Red Feather a Tale of the American Frontier By Edward S Ellis.
Fritters or, "It's a Long Lane that has no Turning"
Trixy, or, "Those who Live in Glass Houses shouldn't throw Stones."
The Two Hardcastles.
Seeking a City
Rhoda's Reward.
Jack Marston's Anchor
Frank's Life-Battle
Major Monk's Motto, or, "Look Before you Leap"
Tim Thomson's Trial; or, "All is not Gold that Glitters."
Ursula's Stumbling-Block
Ruth's Life Work or, No Pains, no Gains."
Rags and Rainbows
Uncle William's Charge.
Pretty Pink's Purpose

"Golden Mottoes" Series, The. Each Book containing 208 pages, with Four full page Original Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. each.

"Nil Desperandum." By the Rev F. Langbridge, M A "Bear and Forbear" By Sarah Pitt.
"Foremost if I Can" By Helen Atteridge.
Honour is my Guide" By Jeanie Hering (Mrs. Adams Acton).
"Aim at a Sure End" By Emily Searchfield.
"He Conquers who Endures" By the Author of "May Cunningham's Trial" &c

"Cross and Crown" Series, The. With Four Illustrations in each Book. Crown 8vo, 256 pages, 2s. 6d each.

Heroes of the Indian Empire: or Stories of Valour and Victory By Ernest Foster
Through Trial to Triumph or, "The Royal Way" By Madeline Bonavia Hunt
In Letters of Flame A Story of the Waldenses. By C. L. Matéaux.
Strong to Suffer: A Story of the Jews. By E. Wynne.
By Fire and Sword A Story of the Huguenots. By Thomas Archer
Adam Hepburn's Vow A Tale of Kirk and Covenant By Annie S Swan.
No. XIII., or, The Story of the Lost Vestal. A Tale of Early Christian Days. By Emma Marshall.
Freedom's Sword A Story of the Days of Wallace and Bruce. By Annie S. Swan.

Albums for Children. Price 3s. 6d. each

The Chit-Chat Album. Illustrated.
The Album for Home, School, and Play. Set in bold type, and illustrated throughout.
My Own Album of Animals. Illustrated.
Picture Album of All Sorts. Illustrated.

"Wanted—a King" Series. Cheap Edition. Illustrated. 2s. 6d. each Robin's Ride. By Ellinor Davenport Adams.

Great-Grandmamma. By Georgina M. Synge.
Fairy Tales in Other Lands. By Julia Goddard.
Wanted—a King; or, How Merle set the Nursery Rhymes to Rights. By Maggie Browne.

"Peeps Abroad" Library. Cheap Editions. Cloth gilt, 2s. 6d each.

Rambles Round London. By C. L. Mateaux. Illustrated.
Around and About Old England. By C. L. Mateaux. Illustrated.
Paws and Claws. By one of the Authors of "Poems Written for a Child." Illustrated.
Decisive Events in History. By Thomas Archer. With Original Illustrations.
The True Robinson Crusoes.
Peeps Abroad for Folks at Home. Illustrated throughout.
Wild Adventures in Wild Places. By Dr Gordon Stables, R.N. Illustrated.
Modern Explorers. By Thomas Frost. Illustrated. New and Cheaper Edition.
Early Explorers. By Thomas Frost.
Home Chat with our Young Folks. Illustrated throughout.
Jungle, Peak, and Plain. Illustrated throughout.

Three-and Sixpenny Books for Young People. With Original Illustrations. Cloth gilt, 3s. 6d. each.

Told Out of School. By A. J. Daniels.
Red Rose and Tiger Lily. By L. T. Meade.
The Romance of Invention. By James Burnley.
† Bashful Fifteen. By L. T. Meade.
The King's Command. A Story for Girls. By Maggie Symington.
† A Sweet Girl Graduate. By L. T. Meade.
† The White House at Inch Gow. By Sarah Pitt.
† Polly. By L. T. Meade.
† The Palace Beautiful. By L. T. Meade.
"Follow my Leader."
For Fortune and Glory.
Lost among White Africans.
† A World of Girls. By L. T. Meade.

Books marked thus † can also be had in extra cloth gilt, gilt edges, 5s. each.

Books by Edward S. Ellis. Illustrated. Cloth, 2s. 6d. each.

The Great Cattle Trail.
The Path in the Ravine.
The Young Ranchers.
The Hunters of the Ozark.
The Camp in the Mountains.
Ned in the Woods. A Tale of Early Days in the West.
Down the Mississippi.
The Last War Trail.
Ned on the River. A Tale of Indian River Warfare.
Footprints in the Forest.
Up the Tapajos.
Ned in the Block House. A Story of Pioneer Life in Kentucky.
The Lost Trail.
Camp Fire and Wigwam.
Lost in the Wilds.
Lost in Samoa. A Tale of Adventure in the Navigator Islands.
Tad, or, "Getting Even" with Him.

Cassell's Picture Story Books. Each containing 60 pages. 6d. each.

Little Talks.
Bright Stars.
Nursery Joys.
Pet's Posy.
Tiny Tales.
Daisy's Story Book.
Dot's Story Book.
A Nest of Stories.
Good Night Stories.
Chats for Small Chatterers.
Auntie's Stories.
Birdie's Story Book.
Little Chimes.
A Sheaf of Tales.
Dewdrop Stories.

Illustrated Books for the Little Ones. Containing interesting Stories. All Illustrated. 1s. each, or cloth gilt, 1s. 6d.

Bright Tales and Funny Pictures.
Merry Little Tales.
Little Tales for Little People.
Little People and Their Pets.
Tales Told for Sunday.
Sunday Stories for Small People.
Stories and Pictures for Sunday.
Bible Pictures for Boys and Girls.
Firelight Stories.
Sunlight and Shade.
Rub-a-dub Tales.
Fine Feathers and Fluffy Fur.
Scrambles and Scrapes.
Tittle Tattle Tales.
Dumb Friends.
Indoors and Out.
Some Farm Friends.
Those Golden Sands.
Little Mothers and their Children.
Our Pretty Pets.
Our Schoolday Hours.
Creatures Tame.
Creatures Wild.
Up and Down the Garden.
All Sorts of Adventures.
Our Sunday Stories.
Our Holiday Hours.
Wandering Ways.

Shilling Story Books. All Illustrated, and containing Interesting Stories.

Seventeen Cats.
Bunty and the Boys.
The Heir of Elmdale.
The Mystery at Shoncliff School.
Claimed at Last, and Roy's Reward.
Thorns and Tangles.
The Cuckoo in the Robin's Nest.
John's Mistake.
Diamonds in the Sand.
Surly Bob.
The History of Five Little Pitchers.
The Giant's Cradle.
Shag and Doll.
Aunt Lucia's Locket.
The Magic Mirror.
The Cost of Revenge.
Clever Frank.
Among the Redskins.
The Ferryman of Brill.
Harry Maxwell.
A Banished Monarch.

Eighteenpenny Story Books. All Illustrated throughout.

Wee Willie Winkie
Ups and Downs of a Don Kay's Life
Three Wee Ulster Lassies
Up the Ladder
Dick's Hero, & other Stories.
The Chip Boy
Raggles Baggles, and the Emperor
Roses from Thorns.
ith's Father Land and Sea.
oung Berringtons d Left
Tom Morris's Error
Worth more than Gold
"Through Flood—Through Fire"
The Girl with the Golden Locks.
Stories of the Olden Time

"Little Folks" Painting Books. With Text, and Outline Illustrations for Water Colour Painting

The New "Little Folks" Painting Book. Containing nearly 150 Outline Illustrations suitable for Colouring 2s
The "Little Folks" Proverb Painting Book. Cloth only 2s.

Library of Wonders. Illustrated Gift books for Boys. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

Wonderful Adventures
Wonderful Escapes
Wonders of Animal Instinct.
Wonderful Balloon Ascents.
Wonders of Bodily Strength and Skill

The "World in Pictures" Series. Illustrated throughout. Cheap Edition 1s. 6d each

A Ramble Round France
All the Russias
Chats about Germany
Peeps into China
The Land of Pyramids (Egypt)
The Eastern Wonderland (Japan)
Glimpses of South America.
Round Africa.
The Land of Temples (India)
The Isles of the Pacific

Cheap Editions of Popular Volumes for Young People Illustrated. 2s. 6d each

In Quest of Gold, or, Under the Whanga Falls
On Board the Prince Rupert, or, Martin Leigh's Log Esther West
Three Homes
For Queen and King
Working to Win
Perils Afloat and Brigands Ashore

Two-Shilling Story Books. All Illustrated

Margaret's Enemy
Stories of the Tower
Mr Burke's Niece
May Cunningham's Trial.
The Top of the Ladder
How to Reach it
Little Flotsam
Madge and her Friends.
The Children of the Court
Maid Marjory
The Four Cats of the Tippertons
Marion's Two Homes
Little Folks Sunday Book
Two Fourpenny Bits
Poor Nelly
Tom Heriot
Aunt Tabitha's Waifs
In Mischief Again
Through Peril to Fortune
Peggy, and other Tales

Half-Crown Story Books.

Pen's Perplexities
At the South Pole
Pictures of School Life and Boyhood

Cassell's Pictorial Scrap Book. In Six Sectional Volumes. Paper boards, cloth back, 3s 6d per Vol.

Our Scrap Book
The Seaside Scrap Book
The Little Folks Scrap Book
The Magpie Scrap Book
The Lion Scrap Book
The Elephant Scrap Book

Books for the Little Ones. Fully Illustrated

Rhymes for the Young Folk By William Allingham Beautifully Illustrated 3s 6d

The Sunday Scrap Book With Several Hundred Illustrations Boards 3s 6d cloth, gilt edges 5s.

The History Scrap Book With nearly 1,000 Engravings Cloth 7s. 6d

Cassell's Robinson Crusoe With 100 Illustrations Cloth 3s 6d gilt edges 5

The Old Fairy Tales With Original Illustrations Boards, 1s, cloth 1s 6d

Cassell's Swiss Family Robinson Illustrated Cloth 3s 6d gilt edges, 5s.

The World's Workers A Series of New and Original Volumes by Popular Authors With Portraits printed on a tint as Frontispiece 1s each

John Cassell By G Holden Pike.
Charles Haddon Spurgeon By G Holden Pike.
Dr Arnold of Rugby By Rose E Selfe.
The Earl of Shaftesbury
Sarah Robinson, Agnes Weston, and Mrs. Meredith.
Thomas A Edison and Samuel F B Morse.
Mrs. Somerville and Mary Carpenter
General Gordon.
Charles Dickens.
Florence Nightingale, Catherine Marsh, Frances Ridley Havergal, Mrs Ranyard ("L N R.")
Dr Guthrie, Father Mathew, Elihu Burritt, Joseph Livesey
Sir Henry Havelock and Colin Campbell Lord Clyde Abraham Lincoln
David Livingstone
George Muller and Andrew Reed.
Richard Cobden
Benjamin Franklin.
Handel.
Turner the Artist.
George and Robert Stephenson.
Sir Titus Salt and George Moore.

 The above Works can also be had Three in One Vol., cloth gilt edges, 2s 6d*

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London, Paris & Melbourne.