MEANING OF TERMS

USED IN CLASSIFYING ANNOTATING CASES.

THE different expressions used to describe the effect of the annotating cases have the following meanings, and the classification of the annotating cases has been done strictly in accordance with these meanings. The annotating cases, except such as are classified as " Mentioned," are grouped according to the points in the case which they annotate: within these groups they are listed chronologically, except such as are classified as " Referred to," which come at the end of the group and are arranged inter se in chronological order. Cases which annotate the annotated case generally are grouped together after cases which annotate specific points, similarly arranged, and are followed by cases classified as " Mentioned " arranged chronologically inter se. The terms used in classifying the annotating cases are as follows :—

" APPLIED " (Apld.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the principle of law enunciated in the annotated case has been applied to a new set of facts and circumstances in the annotating case.

" APPROVED " (Apprvd.).—This expression is used to denote the fact that the annotated case has been considered to be good law in the annotating case where the latter is in a higher court than the former.

" CONSIDERED " (Consd.).—This expression is used where the remarks in the annotating case are devoid of adverse criticism and merely denote the giving of more or less careful consideration to the annotated case.

" DISTINGUISHED " (Distd.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but where some essential difference (either on the facts or in law) between it and the annotated case is pointed out.

" DOUBTED " (Dbtd.).—This expression is used where the court in the annotating case without definitely going to the length of saying that the annotated case is wrong, adduces reasons which seem to show that it is not accurate.

" EXPLAINED " (Expld.).—This expression is used where the earlier case is not necessarily doubted, but the decision arrived at is justified or accounted for by calling attention to some point of fact or of law which is usually, but not necessarily, one not obvious on the face of the report.

" EXTENDED " (Extd.).—Compare " APPLIED," supra.

" FOLLOWED " (Folld.).—This expression is used to denote that the same principles of law are applied in the two cases. It does not necessarily imply that the facts are substantially identical in the two cases.

" NOT FOLLOWED " (N.F.).—Compare " FOLLOWED," supra, to which it is the adverse.

" OVERRULED " (Overd.).—This expression is used where the annotating case is on substantially identical facts with the annotated case and in a higher court and the rule in the latter case is held to be wrong.

" REFERRED " (Refd.).—This expression is used only where the annotating case deals with the point of the Digest paragraph and is without comment of any definite character on the case annotated, and where there is no delicate shade of approval or disapproval which would justify the use of any of the foregoing words.

" MENTIONED " (Mentd.).—This expression is used only where none of the foregoing terms apply. In other words, it is used only where the case annotated is cited on a point having nothing to do with the point in the Digest paragraph.

Part I.—Representations Generally.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1. Representation defined.]—(1) A representation is a statement or assertion, made by one party to the other, before or at the time of a contract, of some matter or circumstance relating to it.

(2) Although a representation is sometimes contained in the written instrument, it is not an integral part of the contract; &, consequently the contract is not broken though the representation proves to be untrue; nor, with the exception of the case of policies of insurance, at all events marine policies, which stand on a peculiar anomalous footing, is such untruth any cause of action, nor has it any efficacy whatever, unless the representation was made fraudulently, either by reason of its being made with a knowledge of its untruth, or by reason of its being made dishonestly with a reckless ignorance whether it was true or untrue.

(3) Whether a descriptive statement in a written instrument is a mere representation or a substantive part of the contract is a question of construction which the ct., & not the jury, must determine.

(4) With respect to statements in a contract descriptive of the subject-matter of it, or of some material incident thereof, the true doctrine is that, generally speaking, if the descriptive statement was intended to be a substantive part of the contract, it is to be regarded as a warranty, that is to say, a condition on the failure or non-performance of which the other party may, if he is so minded, repudiate the contract in toto, & so be relieved from performing his part of it, provided it has not been partially executed in his favour. If, indeed, he has received the whole or any substantial part of the consideration for the promise on his part, the warranty loses the character of a condition, or, to speak perhaps more properly, ceases to be available as a condition, & becomes a warranty in the narrower sense of the word—viz., a stipulation by way of agreement, for the breach of which a compensation must be sought in dama[illegible].

(5) The representation was made fraudulently, either by reason of its being made with a knowledge of its untruth, or by reason of its being made dishonestly, with a reckless ignorance whether it was true or untrue (WILLIAMS, J.).—BEHN v. BURNESS (1863), 3 B. & S. 751; 2 New Rep. 184; 32 L. J. Q. B. 204; 8 L. T. 207; 9 Jur. N. S. 620; 11 W. R. 496; 1 Mar. L. C. 229; 122 E. R. 281, Ex. Ch.

2. Must be of fact present & existing.]—Ordinarily fraud lies in the wilful misrepresentation of any material matter of fact present & existing; not in a promise, the breach of which is something future. It is not enough even that there has been fraud, unless the party upon whom it was practised was deceived by it into making the contract (CROMPTON, J.).—CAVALEIRO v. PUGET (1865), 4 F. & F. 537.

—— Mere promise distinguished.]—See Sect. 2, sub-sect. 3, post.

3. Must be clear—& not ambiguous.]—A representation on the faith of which others have acted must be clear & unambiguous to fix the party making it with liability upon it.—Re UNIVERSAL BANKING CO., BARTLETT'S CASE (1868), 19 L. T. 628; 17 W. R. 131.

SECT. 2.—STATEMENTS DE FUTURO.

SUB-SECT. 1.—REPRESENTOR'S INTENTION.

A. In General.

8. Whether amounting to representation of fact.]—The subject of the representations was not a future project contemplated by a third person. If that had been the case, pltf. might have held out the expectations with a degree of uncertainty as to whether they would be fulfilled. If he had said merely that a plan was in contemplation, that would not have been an undertaking to do anything himself; it would only be holding out a hope as to the future conduct of a third person, not under his control; & it would be the fault of the bidder if he relied on so loose & vague a report. But here the representation went to induce a belief that the plan was in contemplation by

PART I. SECT. 2, SUB-SECT. 1.—A.

1. Whether amounting to representation of fact.]—In the case of a contract entered into on the faith of a representation a statement of intention may be a statement of fact.—Re NEW BRIGHTON RECREATION GROUND CO., LTD. (1889), 10 N. S. W. Eq. 66.

—AUS.

a. Representation as to future event.]—In an action of deceit it is not sufficient for pltf. to allege a mis-himself; we must take it as a statement of what he intended to do himself (PLUMER, M.R.).—BEAUMONT v. DUKES (1822), Jac. 422; 37 E. R. 910.

9. ——.]—There is no misrepresentation of any existing fact, but only an intention at the time of the contract to depart from it, which intention is not alleged to have been carried into effect. That does not vitiate the contract (PARKE, B.).—HEMINGWAY v. HAMILTON (1838), 4 M. & W. 115; 150 E. R. 1366.

10. ——.]—GERHARD v. BATES, No. 554, post.

11. ——.]—(1) Where a person possesses a legal right, a ct. of equity will not interfere to restrain him from enforcing it, though, between the time of its creation & that of his attempt to enforce it, he has made representations of his intention to abandon it. Nor will equity interfere even though the parties to whom these representations were made have acted on them, & have in full belief in them, entered into irrevocable engagements. To raise an equity in such a case; there must be a misrepresentation of existing facts, & not of mere intention.

(2) A., holding a bond of B. often told B. & others that he, A., would never enforce it against B.; but, on being asked to give it up, said, "I will not give it up, for I will be trusted"; & B. married on the faith of the bond never being enforced against him:—Held: this was a representation, not of a fact, but merely of an intention, & so not binding upon A.—JORDEN v. MONEY (1854), 5 H. 12. ——.]—I apprehend that nothing can be more certain than this, that the doctrine of equitable estoppel by representation is a wholly different thing from contract, or promise, or equitable assignment, or anything of that sort. The foundation of that doctrine, which is a very important one, & certainly not one likely to be departed from, is this, that if a man dealing with another for value makes statements to him as to existing facts, which being stated would affect the contract, & without reliance upon which, or without the statement of which, the party would not enter into the contract, & which being otherwise than as they were stated, would leave the situation after the contract different from what it would have been if the representations had not been made; then the person making those representations shall, so far as the powers of a ct of equity, extend, be treated as if the representations were true, & shall be compelled to make them good. But those must be representations concerning existing facts (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—CITIZENS' BANK OF LOUISIANA v. FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NEW ORLEANS (1873), L. R. 6 H. L. 352; 43 L. J. Ch. 269; 22 W. 14. ——.]—(1) A misstatement of the intention of deft. in doing a particular act may be a misstatement of fact & if pltf. was misled by it an action of deceit may be founded on it.

(2) Pltf. says: I had two inducements, one my own mistake, the other the false statement of defts. The two together induced me to advance the money. But in my opinion if the false statement of fact actually influenced pltf., defts. are liable, even though pltf. may have been also influenced by other motives (FRY, L.J.).—EDGINGTON v. FITZMAURICE (1885), 29 Ch. 16. ——.]—(1) In an action to enforce a contract in which deft. sets up the plea that he was induced by fraud to enter into the contract, it is not necessary for deft. expressly to repudiate the contract.

(2) A prospectus which merely specifies the dates of & names of the parties to contracts in compliance with the Companies Act, 1867 (c. 131), s. 38, does not give notice of circumstances contained in the contracts, which are material to be known & the omission of which causes the prospectus to give a false impression.

(3) But I must protest against it being supposed that in order to prove a case of this character of fraud, & that a certain course of conduct was induced by it, a person is bound to be able to explain with exact precision what was the mental process by which he was induced to act. It is a question for the jury. If a man said he was induced by such & such an inducement held out in the prospectus, I should not think that conclusive. It must be for the jury to say what they believed upon the evidence (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

(4) When I look at the language in which this prospectus is couched, & see that it speaks of a property which requires only the erection of machinery to be either at once or shortly in a condition to do work so as to obtain all this valuable metal from the mine, it seems to me that, although it is put in ambidextrous language, it means as plainly as can be that this is now the condition of the mine, that such & such additions to it will enable it shortly to produce all those

b. Mixed fact & intention.]—When the representation relied upon is partly a statement of existing fact & partly an expression of future intent, & the two are indissolubly united in a single statement, it may form a ground of action, though the whole value of the statement arose from the promissory part.—SMITH v. MCKENZIE (1881), 3 N. great results, & that that is a representation of an actually existing fact. I should quite agree with the proposition that the Lord Chancellor of Ireland & the Master of the Rolls put forward; if you are looking to the language as only the language of hope, expectation, & confident belief, that is one thing; but it does not seem to have been in the minds of the learned judges that you may use language in such a way as, although in the form of hope & expectation, it may become a representation as to existing facts; & if so, & if it is brought to your knowledge that these facts are false, it is a fraud (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

(5) But the statement of a portion of the truth, accompanied by suggestions & inferences which would be possible & credible if it contained the whole truth, but becomes neither possible nor credible whenever the whole truth is divulged, is, to my mind, neither more nor less than a false statement (LORD WATSON)

(6) The question to be determined was what idea would be conveyed to an ordinary man by a perusal of this prospectus, viewing each statement contained in it in the light of the other statements to be found there (LORD HERSCHELL).—AARON'S REEFS v. TWISS, [1896] A. SUB-SECT. 2.—INTENTION OF THIRD PARTY.

18. Intention to bring action.]—A mere false assertion by which another person is misled to his injury is no ground of action. But if such false asertion is made knowingly & wilfully, & with the view to the advantage of the party who makes it, in consequence of the person to whom it is made believing it, such person acting upon it, & suffering damage, may sue in case for false representation.

Declaration in case stated, that pltf. was a dealer in printed silk goods, & had sent deft. divers lots of such goods, the last of which contained handkerchiefs, which had been printed by pltf. with a certain ornamental pattern, & that he was about to print others in the same manner for profit; all which was known to deft.; yet deft., contriving to defraud pltf., & to induce him to desist from so printing same & deprive him of the profits, & to acquire same for his sole use & benefit, falsely represented to pltf., of & concerning the last lot & the handkerchiefs, that in the last lot there was a copy of a registered pattern, & that the parties intended to proceed against pltf. in the most expensive manner, by injunction, thereby meaning that the pattern was a copy of a pattern registered according to the Statute, whereas in fact no such pattern had been registered, & no parties did so intend, as deft. well knew:—Held: the declaration disclosed a good cause of action; & an innuendo was unnecessary.

SECT. 3.—STATEMENT OF OPINION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—REPRESENTOR'S OPINION.

A. Stated as a Fact.

22. General rule.]—A representation of fact may be inherent in a statement of opinion; in any case the existence of the opinion in the person expressing it is a question of fact. When it is sought to rescind a contract on the ground of the falseness of a statement of opinion by which it was induced, it must be inquired what was the meaning of the statement made, & whether it was true. Relevant to those inquiries are, the material facts of the transaction, the knowledge of the parties, the words used, & the actual condition of the subject-matter.—BISSET v. WILKINSON, [1927] A. C. 177; 96 L. J. P. C. 12; 136 L. T. 97; 42 T. L. R. 727. P. C.

23. Positive statement—Based on information from another.]—(1) In 1843 a grant of an annuity was made by the Comrs. for the Reduction of the National Debt, under 10 Geo. 4, c. 24, to a life assurance co. on the life of C., who was certified by the co. to be of the age of sixty-four years. After the death of C. in 1869, it was discovered that a misrepresentation of his age had been made by the co.:—Held: the Comrs. were entitled to have the contract declared void ab initio, although the misrepresentation was not intentional; & the money paid on both sides was ordered to be repaid with simple interest at 4 per cent.

(2) 10 Geo. 4, c. 24, contained a clause empowering the Comrs. to rectify any contract in case of the discovery of an accidental error:—Held: this clause was not compulsory, & the ct. had no jurisdiction to interfere with the discretion of the Comrs. if they declined to exercise their power of rectification, & claimed to have the contract set aside.

(3) If a man makes a statement based upon the information which he has received from another, & the information is wrong, he is answerable for it, but he has his remedy over against the person who has deceived him. Here there was positive representation: the contract was based upon it (JAMES, L.J.).—A.-G. v. RAY (1874), 9 Ch. App. 397; 43 L. J. Ch. 478; 30 L. T. 373; 22 W. R. 498, L. JJ.

24. —— Recollection faulty.] — (1) When a statement or representation has been made in the bonâ fide belief that it is true, & the party who has made it afterwards comes to find out that it is untrue, & discovers what he should have said, he can no longer honestly keep up that silence on the subject after that has come to his knowledge, thereby allowing the other party to go on, & still more, inducing him to go on, upon a statement which was honestly made at the time when it was made, but which he has not now retracted when he has become aware that it can be no longer honestly persevered in (LORD BLACKBURN).

(2) If the fact be that he does not recollect, then by saying that the fact was so, or by saying that the fact was not so, he takes upon himself the responsibility of a positive statement, upon the faith of which he knows that the other man is going to deal for valuable consideration (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—BROWNLIE v. CAMPBELL (1880), 5 App. Cas. 925, H. 25. —— Made recklessly.]—Deft., a professional water-finder, undertook for reward to indicate a spot upon pltf.'s land where a supply of water might be found. He came to pltf.'s land, marked out a spot, & stated definitely that water would be found there at a particular depth from the surface. Pltf., on the faith of this statement, bored to a depth exceeding that named by deft., but found no water. Pltf. brought an action in the county court to recover the expense of boring. The county court judge found deft. made the statement recklessly, but did not find he made it fraudulently:—Held: the contractual relation between the parties imposed upon deft. the duty to refrain from making reckless statements; deft. had committed a breach of this duty, & was therefore liable in an action for damages.

Deft., knowing he could not tell at what depth water could be found, said definitely that it could be found at a particular depth, that is, he asserted the fact that it would be found & his knowledge of the fact, well knowing that he had no such knowledge. In that view the county ct. judge might have found that the statement was fraudulent (CHANNELL, J.).—PRITTY v. CHILD (1902), 71 L. J. K. B. 512; 18 T. L. R. 460; 46 Sol. Jo. 395, D. C.

26. Expressed as being true from representor's knowledge—Not from hearsay.]—To an inquiry concerning the credit of another, who was recommended to deal with pltf., a representation by deft. that the party might safely be credited, & that he spoke this from his own knowledge, & not from hearsay, will not sustain an action on the case for damages on account of a loss sustained by the default of the party, who turned out to be a person of no credit; if it appear that such representation were made by deft. bonâ fide, & with a belief of the truth of it; for the foundation of the action is fraud & deceit in deft. & damage to pltf. by means thereof, & taking the assertion of knowledge secundum subjectam materiam, viz. the credit of another, it meant no other than a strong belief founded on what appeared to deft. to be reasonable & certain grounds.

Deft. affirmed that to be true within his own knowledge, which he did not know to be true. This is fraudulent (KENYON, C.J.).—HAYCRAFT v. CREASY (1801), 2 East, 92; 102 E. R. 303.

27. Statement by party in possession of facts Not equally known to both sides.]—(1) It is often fallaciously assumed that a statement of opinion cannot involve the statement of a fact. If the facts are not equally known to both sides, then a statement of opinion by one who knows the facts best, involves very often a statement of a material fact, for he impliedly states that he knows facts which justify his opinion (BOWEN, L.J.).

(2) In a case where the facts are equally well known to both parties, what one of them says to the other is frequently nothing but an expression of opinion. The statement of such opinion is in a sense a statement of a fact, about the condition of the man's own mind, but only of an irrelevant fact, for it is of no consequence what that opinion is (BOWEN, L.J.).

(3) It appears to me that it is in every case a question of fact whether a person is induced to buy by a particular representation (BOWEN, L.J.).—SMITH v. LAND & HOUSE PROPERTY CORPN. (1884), 28 Ch. D. 7; 51 L. T. 718; 49 J. P. 182, C. A.

I have been out, & think it quite safe." Rendezvous Point was a place not known to defts.:—Held: the reading of the letter was only a statement of opinion, & not such an adoption of its contents as to amount to an averment of their truth in fact; & consequently, if Rendezvous Point was not a good anchorage there was no such misrepresentation as to vitiate the policy.—ANDERSON v. to be able to do so in four or five months' time. With the letter was sent a prospectus, from which it appeared that the co. was incorporated by Act of Parliament, & that three persons named were directors. Pltf. advanced the money, & received in return a Lloyd's bond, signed by the secretary, whereby the co. purported to acknowledge the debt, & to covenant to pay same with interest at 6 per cent. The co. having ceased to pay interest, & being in difficulties, pltf. filed a bill against two of the three directors, & the representatives of the third, praying that they might be decreed to pay the amount advanced by pltf. with interest:—Held: the principle of relief on the ground of misrepresentation by third persons did not extend to an incorrect statement of a matter of law, & demurrer by the representatives of the third director allowed.—RASHDALL v. FORD (1866), L. 38. —— ——.]—Where there is a representation made as to a mere matter of law it is, in nineteen cases out of twenty, made by a person who does not know the law better than the person to whom it is made, & at whose risk it is taken & acted upon. Still I am not prepared to say, & I doubt whether, if a man who wilfully misrepresented the law, would be allowed in equity to retain any benefit he got by such representation. . . . In the present case it is not a representation of a matter of law. It is a representation as to the powers of a co. to accept bills, & that depends on their private Acts of Parliament. Suppose I were to say I have a private Act of Parliament which gives me power to do so & so. Is not that an assertion that I have such an Act of Parliament? SECT. 6.—STATEMENTS AS TO NATURE OR EFFECT OF DOCUMENTS.

48. Nature — Voluntary assignment described as sale—False recitals.]—A young lady, a few months after she came of age, & on the eve of her marriage, with her father's concurrence, but without the knowledge of her intended husband, made an absolute assignment of her reversionary interest in a sum of stock to the trustee thereof, by a deed, which recited a contract for sale of such stock to the trustee, & the payment of the purchase-money, & upon this deed was indorsed a receipt for the purchase-money, signed by the lady, no purchase-money having been in fact paid :—Held : the falsehood of the recitals in the deed alone would have been sufficient to prevent the ct. from supporting it as a security, to the amount of the consideration expressed, for a larger sum due from the lady's father to the trustee for money advanced for her education.—LEWELLIN v. COBBOLD (1853), 1 Sm. & G. 376 ; 17 Jur. 448 ; 1 W. R. 211 ; 65 E. R. 165.

49. —— Mortgage described as renewal.]—Where A., a solr., induced B. to execute a mtge. of her estate to C., under the representation that it was necessary to raise money to pay off an old mtge. of her sister's on their common estate, & that the thing was a mere renewal, & would not cause her to incur liability :—Held : the deed was void.—LEE v. ANGUS (1866), 15 L. T. 380 ; 15 W. R. 119.

50. —— Conveyance described as payment off of mortgage.]—On Jan. 18, 1883, A., a solr., obtained from his sisters, B. & C., their signatures to two deeds, by which, in alleged consideration in each case of the release of a debt of £400 & payment to them of £300, they conveyed their shares of freehold property, which was subject to a mtge. to K., to A. in fee. No money was at the time due from B. & C. to A., nor was any payment whatever made to them. The deeds were not read over or explained to B. & C., who had no idea that they were thereby conveying their property, & signed in full reliance on A.'s statement that he was going to clear off the mtge. & wanted to send the deeds to K. On the next day A. deposited the deeds with a bank as security for an advance. In applying for the advance before the execution of the deeds, A. had told the managers that B. & C., who were joint owners with himself of the property, were going to convey & "were assisting with the deeds," but that nothing would be paid to them as consideration money, as the money was to be invested in a colliery in which A. was interested. The manager handed over the deeds to the solr. of the bank & merely told him that he was to exercise great care & diligence in investigating the title. The solr. being dead, it did not appear what inquiries were made by him, but the advance was made to A. A. having absconded, the property was claimed by the bank as equitable mtgees., & the claim was resisted by B. & C. on the ground that the conveyances, having been obtained by fraud & misrepresentation, were void as against them. They also relied on deeds which purported to be reconveyances of the property by A. to B. & C., of Jan. 18, 1883, which were attested but did not bear a seal, & which only had been discovered amongst A.'s papers after he absconded :—Held : inasmuch as B. & C., though they might not understand the nature of the deeds, knew they were executing something which dealt in some way with their property, the deeds of Jan. 18, 1883, were not void but voidable only. But as the statements made by A. to the bank manager were such as to have clearly put the bank upon inquiry, which would, if made, have led to the detection of the fraud & to a refusal of the advance, & therefore to have affected the bank with constructive notice of the fraud, the equity of the bank must, on the ground of their negligence, be postponed to that of B. & C.—NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK OF ENGLAND v. JACKSON (1886), 33 Ch. 51. —— Mortgage described as power of attorney.]—A married woman entitled to a reversionary interest was induced by her husband to execute a document which he represented to be a power of attorney enabling him to raise money at some future time. It was in fact a mtge. of a reversionary interest to which she was entitled for £12,000, containing a personal covenant for payment by the wife. The wife knew that if her husband did eventually raise money under the document it would be raised out of her reversionary interest. She did not intend to create a present charge or incur any personal liability. The mtgees. brought this action against the husband & wife for foreclosure & judgment in their covenants. The wife pleaded, among other defences, non est factum :—Held : the husband's misrepresentation was as to the nature & character of the deed, & the plea was good as to the whole deed, &, even if the charge on the wife's reversionary interest were valid, the defence ought to prevail as to her covenant to pay principal & interest.—BAGOT v. CHAPMAN, [1907] 2 Ch. 222 ; 76 L. 52. —— Guarantee described as insurance paper.]—Deft. signed a document purporting to be a continuing guarantee up to a certain amount by him to cover the payment by R. of all moneys due from him to pltfs. on the general balance of his account with them. The signature of deft. had been obtained by the fraudulent misrepresentation of R. that it was merely an insurance paper of a kind deft. had signed before. Deft. did not read the document, neither did he know the nature of it. Subsequently, R. forged the signature of an attesting witness, & handed the document thus completed to pltfs. In an action brought by pltfs. against deft. as guarantor of R.'s current banking account, the jury found (inter alia) deft. was negligent in signing the document :—Held : the fact that the jury had found deft. was negligent did not raise such an estoppel as would prevent him from setting up the defence non est factum, & the proximate cause of the loss sustained by pltfs. was not the negligence of deft., but was the fraudulent act of R.—CARLISLE & CUMBERLAND BANKING CO. v. BRAGG, [1911] 1 K. 57. —— Legal construction — Bond.] — Where a party who executes a bond is at the time competent to execute it, he cannot, under the plea of non est factum, show that he was misled as to the legal effect of the bond.

I agree that, whatever shows that the bond never was the deed of deft. may be given in evidence upon non est factum. But if the party actually executes it, & was competent at the time to execute it, & was not deceived as to the actual contents of the bond, though he might be misled as to the legal effect, & though he might have been entitled to avoid the bond by stating that he was so misled, it nevertheless became, by the execution, the deed of deft., & he is not at liberty, upon the plea of non est factum to say it was not (BAYLEY, B.).—EDWARDS v. BROWN (1831), 1 Cr. & J. 307; 1 Tyr. 182; 9 L. 58. —— —— Will.] — (1) Where one contracting party has intentionally misled the other, by describing his rights [under a will] as being different from what he knew them really to be, it is no answer to the charge of fraud to say, that the party alleged to be guilty of it recommended the other to take advice, or even put into his hands the means of discovering the truth. However negligent the party may have been to whom the incorrect statement has been made, yet that is a matter affording no ground of defence to the other.

(2) Where one of the parties to a negotiation induces the other to contract on the faith of representations, any one of which has been untrue, the whole contract is to be considered as having been obtained fraudulently; nor is the case varied by the circumstance that the untrue representation was in the first instance the result of innocent error, if, after the discovery of the error, the party who made the representation suffer the other to continue in that error.—REYNELL v. SPRYE, SPRYE v. REYNELL (1852), 1 De G. 61. —— —— Contract of sale.] — An error entertained by one of the parties to a contract of sale as to the legal meaning of the contract is not by itself sufficient to invalidate his consent to the contract.

In the case of onerous contracts reduced to writing, the erroneous belief of one of the contracting parties, in regard to the nature of the obligations which he has undertaken, will not be sufficient to give him the right [to rescind] unless such belief has been induced by the representations, fraudulent or not, of the other party to the contract (LORD WATSON).—STEWART v. KENNEDY (No. 2) (1890), 15 App. Cas. 108, H. But if any one of the parties has entered into the compromise in consequence of what afterwards proves to have been an erroneous view taken by the solr. of the facts or of the law, or merely because the solr. may have considered a compromise would be for the advantage of all parties irrespective of their legal rights, that party may have the compromise set aside.—Re ROBERTS, ROBERTS v. ROBERTS, [1905] 1 Ch. 704; 74 L. 75. Laudatory terms — No warranty.] — There may be a warranty without the use of the word warrant; but then there must be words used tantamount to it, & such as men of business would recognise as importing a warranty. A mere representation is not a ground of action unless it is wilfully false & fraudulent. A warranty imports an absolute liability on an undertaking, & it is not because traders use laudatory terms when speaking of the articles they sell, that, therefore, they are to be rendered liable, apart from fraud. . . . It is not because the seller represented that this safe was secure against burglars, or used other eulogistic language about it, whether in prospectuses or otherwise, that, therefore, he is to be held liable as for a warranty (COCKBURN, C.J.).—WALKER v. MILNER (1866), 4 F. & F. 745.

79. ——.]—What constitutes a warranty in law, or a mere representation? To create a warranty no special form of words is necessary. It must be a collateral undertaking forming part of the contract by agreement of the parties express or implied, & must be given during the course of the dealing which leads to the bargain, & should then enter into the bargain as part of it. It was laid down by BULLER, J., as long ago as 1789 in Pasley v. Freeman, No. 163, post: "It was rightly held by HOLT, C.J." in Crosse v. Gardner, No. 203, post, & Medina v. Stoughton, No. 204, post, "& has been uniformly adopted ever since that an affirmation at the time of sale is a warranty provided it appear on evidence to have been so intended." In determining whether it was so intended, a decisive test is whether the vendor assumes to assert a fact of which the buyer is ignorant, or merely states an opinion or judgment upon a matter of which the vendor has no special knowledge, & on which the buyer may be expected also to have an opinion & to exercise his judgment. In the former case it is a warranty, in the latter not (A. L. SMITH, M.R.).—DE LASSALLE v. GUILDFORD, [1901] 2 K. B. 215; 70 L. J. K. B. 533; 84 L. T. 549; 49 W. R. 467; 17 T. L. R. 384, C. A.

80. Contract of service of ship's surgeon—Ship stated to be A.1.]—Where a contract [of service of ship's surgeon] is to be collected out of a variety of letters between the parties, it is a question for the jury, & not the ct., to decide its nature, & to say whether it is complete. It is also for the jury to determine which parts of the correspondence form portion of the contract, & which of them contain mere collateral information.

It is said that the declaration should have stated as part of the contract that the Orissa was a ship that was A.1. It appears to me that this was a mere matter of representation not

84. Pictorial design on cigar boxes.]—Pltfs., who were manufacturers of & dealers in cigars in England, imported from Germany cigars made of Havannah tobacco. There was no direct evidence as to the place where they were manufactured, but the ct. found as a fact that they were also manufactured in Germany. Pltfs. sold these cigars in England in boxes on which was a label containing their trade mark, registered under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (c. 91), which consisted of the words "La Pureza," & a pictorial representation of an Indian woman in a state of semi-nudity holding up a bundle of cigars, two winged boys each holding a shield, & a background representing a portion of some tropical country. On one shield was depicted the arms of Spain, & on the other those of Havannah. In the trade mark as registered the shields were blank. A smaller label contained what was apparently the lithographed signature of "Ramon Romnedo." On each box were branded the words "La Pureza" & "Habana." It was proved that "La Pureza" was an old brand, long disused, of Havannah cigars, & that there was no known existing person of the name of "Ramon Romnedo":—Held: as the trade mark & other marks on pltfs.' boxes together amounted to a "dressing-up" of pltfs.' cigars, & a misrepresentation that they were cigars manufactured in the Havannah, the action must be dismissed, but without costs, defts. being entitled only to the costs of the appeal.—NEWMAN v. PINTO (1887), 57 L. 88. It is not unfair to conclude that these were in truth the circumstances which induced pltf. to enter into that agreement. What, then, are these circumstances? . . . A performance of experiments in pltf.'s presence, by which he is induced to believe that such representations are in substance true (ALDERSON, B.).—LOVELL v. HICKS (1836), 2 Y. & C. Ex. 46; 5 L. J. 89. Production of document—Whether representation of genuineness—Books.]—It is said & on that the whole case rests that M. must be taken to have represented to D. that the books handed to him for inspection were genuine & properly kept books; but it is impossible to say that there is any evidence of any representation made by D. to the co. which can be treated as a representation, that the books tendered by M. were in fact genuine. It is rational enough to hold that as against M., that is the effect of his handing over the books; but when D. informs those to whom he is selling, as he obviously did by showing them the contract, that the books to be examined by the accountants are the books handed over by M., & when he hands to them the result of the accountants' inspection of these books, the utmost representation which he can be taken to have made is this, there is the report of the accountants whom I have employed as to what is shown by the books which M. handed over to those accountants as the books of the business. Beyond that, it seems to me to be impossible to say that any representation was made by D. to the co. (LORD HERSCHELL, C.).—EDINBURGH UNITED BREWERIES v. MOLLESON, [1894] A. C. 96; 58 J. P. 364, H. 90. —— —— Lease.]—(1) M. was fraudulently induced to advance money on mtge. to W. on the security of certain leases, which were subsequently proved to be fictitious. The leases had been previously mortgaged to C., who was paid off by M. when the latter advanced the money to W. At this date C. had become aware that the leases were fictitious, & that he had been defrauded by W., but he made no disclosure of this fact to M. & executed a reassignment to him of the so called leasehold premises as if they had been genuine.

In an action by M. against W. & C., claiming damages against the latter for assisting in the fraud by which M. was induced to advance his money on the security of the fictitious leases, the personal security of W., who was now undergoing penal servitude, being valueless:—Held: under the circumstances C. was liable to M. for the loss & damage so suffered by him.

Pltf. undoubtedly was induced to advance his money upon the security of documents which were represented to be leases of certain premises granted by Walters to Weaver. These so-called leases were fictitious. Walters was the same person as Weaver (ROMER, L.J.).

94. —— Delivery of bought notes—Whether representation of interest of buyer.]—A. & co. brokers in the City of London, were authorised by B., at two several times, to purchase for him,

3,000 tons of iron. A. & co. shortly afterwards delivered to B. "bought notes," which expressed that they had bought the iron for him at the prices & upon the terms therein named, & specified their charges for brokerage & commission, but which did not name any person, as the seller. B. thereupon paid to A. & co. the brokerage, etc., & made the deposits according to the terms of the bought notes. Pltfs. being about to advance money to B. upon the security of the bought notes, inquired of A. & co. whether they might safely rely upon the fulfilment of the contracts; & A. & co. thereupon indorsed on the contracts a memorandum, that in consideration of the payment of their brokerage, etc., they personally guaranteed the performance of the contracts. The advance was made, & the bought notes deposited, by way of mtge. with pltfs.; A. & co. undertaking to hold the iron & deposits for the benefit of pltfs. A considerable fall afterwards took place in the price of iron; & pltfs., having discovered that there were no other sellers but A. & co., filed their bill against A. & co. & B. to have the contracts cancelled, & for a return of the deposits:—Held: A. & co. having failed to prove that pltfs. knew the real facts at the time of their advance to B., must be taken to have represented to them that B.'s interest in the contracts was such as the documents represented it; & the decree must be for a return of the deposits, with interest & costs. —WILSON v. SHORT (1848), 6 Hare, 366; 17 L. Gondell presented himself & so conducted himself as to lead pltf. to suppose he was one of the firm of Gondell & Co. & had authority to order goods on their behalf which was not the fact. Pltf. sent goods, according to E. Gondell's order, to the place of business of Gondell & Co., an invoice being made out by E. Gondell's direction to the name of "E. Gondell & Co." E. Gondell, unknown to pltf., carried on business with one Todd at another place; & the goods were, within three or four days of their delivery, pledged with deft., with a power of sale to secure advances bonâ fide made by him to Gondell & Todd & he sold them under the power without notice from pltf.:—Held: (1) there was no contract of sale, inasmuch as pltf. intended to contract with Gondell & Co. & not with E. Gondell personally & Gondell & Co. were not contracting parties; (2) no property passed & pltf. was entitled to recover value of goods from deft.—HARDMAN v. BOOTH (1863), 1 H. & C. 803; 1 New Rep. 240; 32 L. 96. —— Delivery of invoice—Whether representation that shippers & sellers distinct parties—Question for jury.]—A collateral statement, made at the time of entering into a contract, but not embodied in it, must, in order to invalidate the contract on the ground of its being a fraudulent statement be shown not only to have been false, but to have been known to be so by the party making it, & that the other party was thereby induced to enter into the contract.

A cargo of coffee was sold by a broker, for H. P. & co., of Liverpool; & the words "invoiced to the sellers as of first shipping quality," were introduced into the bought & sold notes. At the same time the invoice was shown to the buyers, which stated the cargo to be shipped by H., Brothers & co. consigned to H. P & co. for sale on account & risk of whom it may concern—3,150 bags "first shipping quality." H. Brothers & co. were a branch house at Rio de Janeiro, composed of the same partners as the firm of H. P. & co. In an action on the case against H. P. & co. for deceit:—Held: it was a proper question for the jury, whether the invoice imported that the coffee was invoiced to defts. by distinct parties as the sellers thereof.

The only inference of fraud in the present case arises from the peculiar forms of the instrument; that is a part of the case which seems fit for a jury, the question being, whether the invoice would necessarily be understood by mercantile men as an invoice usually passing from one house to another (PARKE, B.).

The fraud which vitiates a contract, & gives the party a right to recover, does not in all cases necessarily imply moral turpitude (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).

If a person makes a representation or takes an oath of that which is true, if he intend that the party to whom the representation is made should not believe it to be true, that is a false representation (ALDERSON, B.).—MOENS v. HEYWORTH (1842), 10 M. & W. 147; H. & W. 138; 10 L. J. Ex. 177.

100. Whether deemed a false statement—Question for jury.]—An action for false representation, contained in the prospectus of a co., of which deft. is a director, is maintainable, although such representation may be capable of a meaning in which it would not be literally false. In such a case it is for the jury to say whether the representation was made in the sense necessary to maintain the action.—CLARKE v. DICKSON (1859), 6 C. B. N. S. 453; 28 L. J. C. P. 225; 33 L. T. 101. —— When misleading to representee.]—Relief given against a contract where the purchaser knew that the vendors, the assignees of a bkpt. were ignorant of a circumstance considerably increasing the value.

If an estate is offered for sale & I treat for it, knowing that there is a mine under it, & the other party makes no inquiry, I am not bound to give him any information of it. . . . But a very little is sufficient to affect the application of that principle. . . . . If a word, a single word be dropped, which tends to mislead the vendor, the principle will not be allowed to operate (LORD ELDON, C.).

If one man understands an expression in one sense, & another in a different sense, though the ct. might impute to both that they understood it in the right sense, yet if there has been any mistake, & especially if the expression used by one party has at all misled the other, it is always material in considering what a ct. of equity will do with the case (LORD ELDON, C.).—TURNER v. HARVEY (1821), Jac. 169; 37 E. PART III. SECT. 1, SUB-SECT. 2.—A.

1. Indication of doubt—When certainty exists.]—It is a misrepresentation to say that a ship "is reported to have sailed" when it is positively known that she has sailed.—KINLOCH v. DUGUID (1813), 17 Fac. Coll. 108.—SCOT.

value of the turnover or output of the entire works is over £1,000,000 sterling per annum." If that statement meant that the works had actually in one year turned out produce worth at present prices more than a million, or at that rate per year it was untrue. If it meant only that the works were capable of turning out that amount of produce it was true. In an action of deceit for fraudulent misrepresentation whereby pltf. was induced to take shares he swore in answer to interrogatories that he "understood the meaning" of the statement "to be that which the words obviously conveyed" & at the trial was not asked either in examination or cross-examination what interpretation he had put upon the words:—Held: the statement taken in connection with the context was ambiguous & capable of the two meanings; it lay on pltf. to prove that he had interpreted the words in the sense in which they were false & had in fact been deceived by them into taking the shares & that as he had as a matter of fact failed to prove this the action could not be maintained.

(2) In an action of deceit pltf. cannot recover unless he proves that the representation made to him was false in a material particular, that the intention to deceive must necessarily be implied, & that he incurred damage by acting on the faith of the false representation.

If, in the context in which it stands, it could not be honestly intended or reasonably understood in any other sense, I should think that applt.'s case was made out, although he has contented himself with swearing in answer to deft.'s interrogatories, that he understood the meaning of the words to be "that which they obviously convey," & has professed to be unable to express in other words what he understood to be the meaning thereof. . . . But it is otherwise, in my opinion, if the words in the context in which they stand may have been honestly intended to bear another sense, in which they would be true, & might reasonably have been so understood by an intelligent man of business (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(3) If with intent to lead pltf. to act upon it, they put forth a statement which they know may bear two meanings, one of which is false to their knowledge, & thereby pltf. putting that meaning on it is misled, I do not think they can escape by saying he ought to have put the other (LORD BLACKBURN).

(4) The motive of the person saying that which he knows not to be true to another with the intention to lead him to act on the faith of the statement is immaterial. Defts. might honestly believe that the shares were a capital investment, & that they were doing him a kindness by tricking him into buying them. If they did trick him into doing so, they are civilly responsible as for a deceit (LORD BLACKBURN).

(5) He (pltf.) must establish that this fraud was an inducing cause to the contract; for which purpose it must be material, & it must have produced in his mind an erroneous belief, influencing his conduct (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

(6) I think the tribunal which has to decide the fact should remember that now, & for some years past, pltf. can be called as a witness on his own behalf, & that if he is not so called, or being so called does not swear that he was induced, it adds much weight to the doubts whether the inference was a true one. I do not say it is conclusive (LORD BLACKBURN).

(7) I think if it is proved that defts. with a view to induce pltf. to enter into a contract made a statement to pltf. of such a nature as would be likely to induce a person to enter into a contract & it is proved that pltf. did enter into the contract, it is a fair inference of fact that he was induced to do so by the statement (LORD BLACKBURN).

(8) I agree in what is said by COTTON, L.J., in Arkwright v. Newbold, No. 114, post, "An action of deceit is a common law action & must be decided on the same principles, whether it be brought in the Ch. Div. or any of the common law Divs.; there being in my opinion no such thing as an equitable action for deceit" (LORD BLACKBURN).—SMITH v. CHADWICK (1884), 9 App. Cas. 187; 53 L. J. Ch. 873; 50 L. 110. Mere silence no misrepresentation.]—If a person, who is asked by a tradesman respecting the circumstances & credit of another, tells him that he has been paid a debt due to himself from such person, & that he was ready to give him credit for anything he wanted; that representation would not be sufficient to support an action for a deceitful misrepresentation of such person's circumstances, whereby the tradesman was induced to give him credit although such person had been before that time discharged under an insolvent Act, & that deft. knew it but did not mention it. Such a colloquium will not support an innuendo that deft. meant thereby that such person was in good circumstances & fit to be trusted generally with goods on credit.—GAINSFORD v. BLACHFORD (1819), 7 Price, 544; 146 E. 115. ——.]—Inasmuch as a purchaser is, generally speaking, under no antecedent obligation to communicate to his vendor facts which may influence his own conduct or judgment when bargaining for his own interest, no deceit can be implied from his mere silence as to such facts, unless he undertakes or professes to communicate with them. This, however, he may be held to do, if he makes some other communication which, without the addition of those facts would be necessarily or naturally & probably misleading.

If it is a just conclusion that he did this intentionally & with a view to mislead in any material point, that is found. . . . A man is presumed to intend the necessary or natural consequences of his own words & acts & the evidentia rei would therefore be sufficient without other proof of intention.

If the vendor was not, in fact, misled, the contract could not be set aside; because a dolus which neither induced nor materially affected the contract is not enough (LORD SELBORNE, C.).—COAKS v. BOSWELL (1886), 11 App. Cas. 232; 55 L. 123. Whether amounting to misrepresentation.]—In treaties for an agreement, a wilful & industrious concealment of a material fact, by one of the parties, in order to keep the other in ignorance, & to profit by that ignorance, is a gross fraud, & will in equity set aside the contract.—MEADE v. WEBB (1744), 1 Bro. 124. ——.]—There is fraud apparent on the face of the transaction. . . . 125. ——.]—In an action on the case for giving a false character to a tradesman, whereby he was induced to trust an insolvent person:—Held: (1) fraud was necessary to support the action.

(2) Fraud may consist as well in the suppression of what is true, as in the representation of what is false. If a man professing to answer a question select those facts only which are likely to give a credit to the person to whom he speaks, & keeps back the rest, he is a more artful knave than he who tells a direct falsehood (CHAMBRE, J.).—TAPP v. LEE (1803), 3 Bos. & P. 367; 127 E. On the evening of that day B. told A. that the cheque had been returned, not telling A. that W. & co. had stopped payment, a fact which A. did not know. A. gave B. £5, & an I.O.U. for £5 10*s.*, & took back the cheque. It was proved that C. had funds in the hands of W. & co.:—Held: the suppression of the fact by B. that W. & co. had stopped payment, & the statement by him that the cheque had been returned, amounted to such a fraud upon A. as would entitle him to recover back the £5, in an action for money had & received; &, to entitle him to do so, it was not necessary that he should have given or tendered back the check to B.—BILLING v. RIES (1841), Car. & M. 26, N. It is said that everything which is stated in the prospectus is literally true & so it is, but the objection to it is not that it does not state the truth as far as it goes, but that it conceals most material facts with which the public ought to have been made acquainted, the very concealment of which gives to the truth which is told, the character of falsehood (LORD CHELMSFORD, C.).

137. When duty arises—Fiduciary relationship.]—There being no fiduciary relation between vendor & a purchaser, the purchaser is not bound to disclose any fact exclusively within his knowledge which might be expected to influence the price of the subject to be sold. Simple reticence does not amount to legal fraud, but a word or gesture intended to induce the vendor to believe in the existence of a non-existing fact, which might influence the price of the subject to be sold, would be sufficient ground for a ct. of equity to refuse a decree of specific performance, & so, a fortiori, would any contrivance on the part of the purchaser, better informed than the vendor as to value, to hurry the vendor into an agreement without giving him an opportunity of being fully informed on that subject, or taking advice as to the terms of the bargain.

A single word, or, I may add, a nod or a wink, or a shake of the head, or a smile from the purchaser intended to induce the vendor to believe the existence of a non-existing fact, which might influence the price of the subject to be sold would be sufficient ground for a ct. of equity to refuse a decree for a specific performance of the agreement (LORD CAMPBELL, C.).—WALTERS v. MORGAN (1861), 3 De G. It was brought to the mind of deft.'s solr., that that was the ground upon which pltf.'s solr. would enter into negotiations & probably come to a compromise. He knowing that & knowing the materiality of the fact of the father being dead, intentionally concealed that fact, knowing . . . that if he said that the father was then dead, the other solr. would immediately stop the negotiations. (c) Partial Truth Disclosed.

144. Partial information may amount to misrepresentation.]—Deft. having had a credit lodged with him by a foreign house in favour of T. to a certain amount, upon an express stipulation that T. should previously lodge in his hands goods to treble the amount; & being applied to by pltfs. for information respecting the responsibility of T. answered that he knew nothing of T. himself, but what he had learned from his correspondent; but that he had a credit lodged with him for so much by a respectable house at H., which he held at T.'s disposal, omitting the condition, & upon a view of all the circumstances which had come to his, deft.'s, knowledge, pltfs. might execute T.'s order with safety, an order for the sale & delivery of goods on credit. In an action on the case to recover damages incurred by pltfs. in consequence of having trusted T. on this representation:—Held: there was a material suppression of the truth, & evidence sufficient for the jury to find fraud, which is the gist of the action; although deft. had no immediate interest in making the false representation; & though at the time when it was made, he added, that he gave the advice without prejudice to himself.—EYRE v. DUNSFORD (1801), 1 East, 318; 102 E. 159. Whether statutory illegality necessarily involved.]—A general plea of fraud & covin to an action on a contract is not supported by evidence of circumstances calculated to mislead the public at large; but they must be of such a nature as to vary the liability of the contracting party in the particular transaction.

Pltfs. were members of a friendly society, instituted, among other purposes, for that of lending money to its members on interest. Deft. became security for B., who borrowed £20 on his promissory note to the society. It appeared in evidence, that the society, in the place of being formed according to its printed rules consisted of only two members, pltfs.:—Held: these facts could not be given in evidence on fraud & covin pleaded; fraud & covin on a plea, does not mean that which shows any statutory illegality; as, for instance, any act done against the game laws; but, it means, some concealment or deceit in a particular thing touching the parties in question. —GREEN v. GOSDEN (1841), 3 Man. & G. 446; 4 Scott, N. SUB-SECT. 2.—FALSITY OF STATEMENT.

A. Whether Sufficient by Itself.

163. General rule.]—A false affirmation, made by deft. with intent to defraud pltf., whereby pltf. receives damage, is the ground of an action upon the case in the nature of deceit. In such an action, it is not necessary that deft. should be benefited by the deceit, or that he should collude with the person who is.

I agree that an action cannot be supported for telling a bare naked lie. . . . Every deceit comprehends a lie, but a deceit is more than a lie on account of the view with which it is practised, its being coupled with some dealing, & the injury which it is calculated to occasion & does occasion to another person (BULLER, J.).—PASLEY v. FREEMAN (1789), 3 Term Rep. 51; 100 E. consequence, defts. were no longer able to issue tickets by the train as advertised. Relying on the time tables, pltf. left London on Mar. 25 for Peterborough, on business, intending to go on to Hull, the same evening. He accordingly applied to the clerk at the Peterborough station in proper time for a ticket by the train advertised to leave for Hull about 7.20 p.m., & offered to pay the fare; the clerk, however, refused to grant the ticket, stating as a reason, the N. E. Ry. co. having discontinued running their train as before. Pltf. then took a ticket, & proceeded as far as the M. Junction, where he was obliged to remain that night, &, it was admitted, had, in consequence, sustained a pecuniary loss:—Held: (1) the publication of the time tables amounted to a promise by defts. that a train would leave Peterborough for Hull, as advertised, for the conveyance of any person who regularly applied for a ticket & tendered the proper fare, although part of the line of railway belonged to a different co., & defts. therefore were liable to pltf. for a breach of contract; (2) by continuing the publication of the time tables throughout Mar. defts. were also liable for the loss to pltf., caused by a false representation knowingly made.—DENTON v. GREAT NORTHERN RY. 185. ——.]—(1) In an action of deceit pltf. must prove actual fraud. Fraud is proved when it is shown that a false representation has been made knowingly, or without belief in its truth, or recklessly, without caring whether it be true or false.

(2) A false statement, made through carelessness & without reasonable ground for believing it to be true, may be evidence of fraud but does not necessarily amount to fraud. Such a statement, if made in the honest belief that it is true, is not fraudulent and does not render the person making it liable to an action of deceit.

(3) A special Act incorporating a tramway co. provided that the carriages might be moved by animal power, &, with the consent of the Board of Trade, by steam power. The directors issued a prospectus containing a statement that by their special Act the co. had the right to use steam power instead of horses. Pltf. took shares on the faith of this statement. The Board of Trade afterwards refused their consent to the use of steam power, & the co. was wound up. Pltf. having brought an action of deceit against the directors founded upon the false statement:—Held: defts. were not liable, the statement as to steam power having been made by them in the honest belief that it was true.

(4) To quote the language now some centuries old in dealing with actions of this character, fraud without damage or damage without fraud does not give rise to such actions (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

(5) Where rescission is claimed it is only necessary to prove that there was misrepresentation; then however honestly it may have been made, however free from blame the person who made it, the contract, having been obtained by misrepresentation, cannot stand (LORD HERSCHELL).

(6) An action of deceit is a common law action, & must be decided on the same principles, whether it be brought in the Ch. Div. or any of the Common Law Divs., there being in my opinion, no such thing as an equitable action for deceit. This was the language of COTTON, L.J., in Arkwright v. Newbold, No. 114, ante. It was adopted by LORD BLACKBURN in Smith v. Chadwick, No. 100, ante, & is not, I think, open to dispute (LORD HERSCHELL).

(7) To prevent a false statement being fraudulent, there must, I think, always be an honest belief in its truth (LORD HERSCHELL).

(8) Although means of knowledge are . . . a very different thing from knowledge, if I thought a person making a false statement, had shut his eyes to the facts, or purposely abstained from inquiring into them, it should hold that honest belief was absent, & that he was just as fraudulent as if he had knowingly stated that which was false (LORD HERSCHELL).—DERRY v. PEEK (1889), 14 App. Cas. 337; 58 L. 187. ——.]—(1) No action will lie for damages suffered by pltf. in consequence of his reliance on untrue statements made negligently, but not fraudulently, by deft. when there is no contract between them.

(2) If a man tells a wilful falsehood with the intention that it shall be acted upon by the person to whom he tells it, his mind is plainly wicked & he must be said to be acting fraudulently. Again a man must also be said to have a fraudulent mind if he recklessly makes a statement intending it to be acted upon, & not caring whether it be true or false. . . . But negligence however great does not of itself constitute fraud (ESHER, M.R.).

Gross negligence might amount to evidence of fraud, if it were so gross as to be incompatible with the idea of honesty but even gross negligence. in the absence of dishonesty did not of itself amount to fraud. . . . There seems to have been some sort of an idea that when a jury was asked . . . whether a man had made the representation not knowing & not caring whether his statement was true or false, the expression "not caring" had something to do with his not taking care. But that expression did not mean not taking care to find out whether the statement was true or false; it meant not caring in the man's own heart & conscience whether it was true or false—& that would be wicked indifference and recklessness (BOWEN, L. J.).—LE LIEVRE v. GOULD, [1893] 1 Q. B. 491; 62 L. J. Q. B. 355; 68 L. T. 626; 57 J. P. 484; 41 W. R. 468; 37 Sol. Jo. 267; 4 R. 274; sub nom. DENNES v. GOULD, 9 T. L. R. 243, C. A.

(2) An action does not lie for a false representation whereby pltf., being induced to purchase the subject matter of the representation from a third party, has sustained damage, the representations appearing to have been made bonâ fide under a reasonable & well grounded belief that the same were true.

It appeared to me that defts., at the time they made the representations, really believed in their truth. Perhaps it would have been as well if I had put it more distinctly to the jury to consider whether defts. honestly believed the representations to be true; but that was in substance left to them (ERSKINE, J.).—SHREWSBURY v. BLOUNT (1841), 2 Man. & G. 475; Drinkwater, 70; 2 Scott, N. A sheriff declared in case, for that, defts. being attorneys of P. who had sued out a ca. sa. against J. W., & the sheriff having in custody, under another ca. sa., another J. W. who was entitled to his discharge, defts., well knowing the premises, falsely represented to the sheriff that the last mentioned J. W. was the J. W. against whom P.'s writ had issued; by means whereof defts. caused the sheriff to detain the J. W. who was in his custody; for which the last mentioned J. W. sued the sheriff, & he paid money by way of compromise. The attorneys pleading not guilty, evidence was given, for the sheriff, that his officer delivered a note to defts.' managing clerk in P.'s action, describing the J. W. who was in custody, & inquired if that was the J. W. whom they had sued on behalf of P.; & that the clerk took the letter into the office where defts. were, & afterwards returned & told the officer that that was the J. I confess that my opinion was that in what his Lordship thus stated, he went beyond what principle warrants. If persons in the situation of directors of a bank make statements as to the condition of its affairs which they bonâ fide believe to be true, I cannot think they can be guilty of fraud, because other persons think, or the Court thinks, or your Lordships think, that there was no sufficient ground to warrant the opinion which they had formed. If a little more care & caution must have led the directors to a conclusion different from that which they put forth, this may afford strong evidence to show that they did not really believe in the truth of what they stated, & so that they were guilty of fraud (LORD CRANWORTH).

SUB-SECT. 4.—NON-BELIEF ARISING AFTER REPRESENTATION MADE.

226. Error ascertained after representation—Duty to correct.]—On Nov. 4, shares in a projected railway co. were allotted to pltf.; on Nov. 14, he paid the deposit thereon; on Dec. 6, a report was made by deft., who had inspected the proposed line, to the committee of management, of which he was a member, showing, that all the essential statements in the prospectus which the committee had issued were false, & that the undertaking could not be prosecuted; on Dec. 13, pltf., in ignorance of that report having been made, signed the parliamentary contract & subscribers' agreement. In assumpsit for money had & received brought to recover back the deposit so paid, two questions were left to the jury, (a) whether the undertaking to which pltf. had subscribed, had been abandoned, (b) whether pltf.'s signature to the subscribers' agreement had been obtained by fraud. The jury having returned a verdict for pltf. the ct. refused to disturb it.

The question here is whether it was properly left to the jury to say whether or not there was fraud in getting parties to sign the agreement, suppressing facts that ought to have been disclosed. The evidence of fraud was the concealment of the report of Dec. 6, which contained information that was important to pltf., but the communication of which was studiously confined to the committee (WILDE, C.J.).—JARRETT v. KENNEDY (1848), 6 C. 230. —— —— Statement by third party—Report of expert.]—The directors of a co. issued a prospectus containing certain grave misstatements as to fact. At the time of issue the directors themselves honestly believed in these misstatements, although they knew that they were based upon the report of an intermediate vendor to the co., & although they did not at the time take pains to investigate their truth. Subsequently the directors discovered that these statements were in fact false; but they did not take any form of action in respect of their discovery. The directors were also, at the time of the issue of the prospectus, aware that the property that the co. was being formed to purchase had been sold not very long previously for a much smaller sum; but they did not take any steps to satisfy themselves as to the reason for the very great rise in price. One of the arts. of assocn. of the co. provided that "no director shall be liable . . . for any loss, damage, or misfortune whatever which shall happen in the execution of the duties of his office or in relation thereto unless the same happen through his own dishonesty." The co., having been ordered to be wound up by the ct., the liquidator asked that the directors might be compelled to indemnify the co. for the loss suffered by the co. by reason of their alleged misfeasance as disclosed in the facts mentioned above:—Held: (1) the directors had honestly believed that the contract was a beneficial one for the co.; &, notwithstanding the discrepancy in price & the absence of an independent report, this conclusion had not been arrived at by negligence on their part as directors; (2) their conduct subsequent to the discovery of the misstatements was a matter of lack of sound judgment rather than of negligence.—Re BRAZILIAN RUBBER PLANTATIONS & ESTATES, LTD., [1911] 1 Ch. 425; 80 L. The purpose held out disclosed nothing of fraud. If negligence alone were sufficient, it ought to have had the effect in that case (LORD ELDON, C.).

(2) Is there negligence so gross as to amount to constructive fraud ; . . . such evidence of fraud that he shall not be heard in a ct. of justice to say, there was not fraud (LORD ELDON, C.).

(3) If the intention is fraudulent in any respect, though not pointing exactly to the object accomplished, yet he will be bound (LORD ELDON, C.).

(4) An old head of equity that if a representation is made to a man, going to deal on the faith of it in a matter of interest, the person making the representation, knowing it false, shall make it good ; & the jurisdiction assumed by cts. of law in such cases will not prevent relief in equity.—EVANS v. BICKNELL (1801), 6 Ves. 174 ; 31 E. The lessor accordingly, in Jan. 1857, granted a lease of such property to A. at a peppercorn rent, & A. mortgaged the same to B. by way of underlease. B. afterwards found that the lessor had, on Aug. 6, 1856, granted a lease of the same property to A., & that A. had, before his mtge. to B., mortgaged the same property to D. The lease granted on Aug. 6, 1856, was registered on Aug. 23 of that month:—Held: B. was entitled to a decree for repayment by the lessor of the sum advanced by B. to A., the lessor alleging only that he had forgotten the grant of the prior lease to A. when he executed the lease of Jan. 1857.—SLIM v. CROUCHER (1860), 1 De G. B. & W., who were partners in a bank, agreed to take R. into partnership with them. W., who took no actual part in the business, & was known to R. not to do so, joined with B. in producing to R. during the negotiation, as a true account of the affairs of the bank, a paper stating the amount in which it was indebted to customers to be £11,000, the amount being in fact £26,000. R. entered into the partnership without examining the books, & continued in it for four years, taking no part in the business & never examining the books. At the end of that time the bank turned out to be insolvent. R. then filed a bill against B. & the exors. of W., asking to have the agreement for partnership rescinded, & to have an indemnity against the debts of the concern:—Held: (1) the delivery of the paper to R. as a true account of the state of the bank was such a misrepresentation as entitled R. to have the contract rescinded; (2) the case as regarded W. was not varied by the facts that W. took no part in the affairs of the bank, & was known by R. not to do so, & did not know the representation to be untrue; (3) R.'s having

272. ——.]—If pltf. asserted, as of his own knowledge, any matter of fact which turned out to be false, & by means of such assertion obtained the contract, then that would be a fraud on his part, which would vitiate the contract. For if a man for his own object & his own benefit asserts a fact as known to himself to exist, which does not exist, he is guilty of fraud, whether or not he knows it does not exist, because he asserts it as of his own knowledge when he does not know whether it exists or not. This principle does not, it is obvious, apply to matters of mere opinion, but only to assertions of matters of fact, on which it may be supposed that the other party has relied (ERLE, C.J.).—SMITH v. PRICE (1862), 2 F. & F. 748.

The vendee induced the servant of the vendor to deliver it for a check upon a banker, by representing it to be as good as money ; in fact he had overdrawn his account for many months, & when the check was presented, payment was refused. On the same day that the goods were purchased, the vendee gave a warrant of attorney to a creditor, under which judgment was immediately entered up, & execution issued, & the property in question seized by the bailiff of a liberty. There are some kinds of fraud of which the presumption is, that they are almost impossible, because they are so extremely improbable; & there are other kinds where the presumption against them is not so great, such as in horse dealing, as to which a person cannot know much of the world without knowing that the presumption is the other way (MAULE, J.).—GLADSTONE v. SEYLOR (1851), 16 L. 338. ——.]—The making of a representation which a party knows to be untrue, & which is intended to, or is calculated from the mode in which it is made, to induce another to act on the faith of it, so that he may incur damage, is a fraud in law.

It was contended . . . that . . . it is not necessary to prove that the false representation was made from a corrupt motive of gain, to deft., or a wicked motive of injury to pltf.; it was said to be enough if the representation is made which the party making it knows to be untrue, & which is intended by him, or which, from the mode in which it is made, is calculated to induce another to act on the faith of it, in such a way as that he may incur damage, & that damage is actually incurred. . . . It was stated that defts., who were directors, thereby induced pltf. to apply for, & become the holder of shares. At the trial it was proved, that both when the application by, & the allotment to pltf., took place, although half the first issue of shares had been applied for, the deposit had not been paid upon that number. It was also proved that at the time of pltf.'s application, the persons mentioned in the declaration were directors of the co., but that before the allotment of the shares to pltf., these persons had, without his knowledge retired:—Held: the judge misdirected the jury in saying that it was not material whether the deposit was paid, on the whole of the shares applied for; also, the judge was right in refusing to amend the declaration, by adding a count for fraudulent concealment; it would have been sufficient to establish the declaration, if the alleged second misrepresentation had induced pltf. to become the holder of shares, & it was not necessary to prove that it had induced him to apply for them, but that the evidence failed to show any misrepresentation at all.—BEVAN v. ADAMS (1870), 22 L. 358. ——.]—(1) It must be no doubt a material misstatement, & the other party must have been induced to act upon it. As it was sometimes said, it must be material to the inducing of the contract, but it need not be the only inducement. If it is a part of the inducement, it will do. We had to consider the matter in the Appeal Ct. only recently in Redgrave v. Hurd, No. 417, post. There we said, if a man has a material misstatement made to him which may from its nature induce him to enter into the contract, it is an inference that he is induced to enter into the contract by it. You need not prove it affirmatively (JESSEL, M.R.).

(2) It was argued ingeniously before us that that was not a representation of a fact, but merely a representation of an opinion as to a future event; but I think that is not the true construction of the particulars. 362. ——.]—If, in negotiations for a contract, an agent make a false representation as to the name of his principal, knowing that, if he disclosed the true name the other party would not enter into the contract, the ct. will not order specific performance of the contract. A. signed a contract for the sale of a house to B. Before signing, he asked, "Are you buying for C. or his nominees?" B. answered, "No." He was, in fact, buying for nominees of C., to whom he afterwards assigned his contract. He & they brought an action for specific performance:—Held: the contract could not be specifically performed.

It is true that a man may with impunity tell a lie in gross in the course of negotiations for a contract. But he cannot, in my opinion, tell a lie appurtenant. That is to say, if he tells a lie relating to any part of the contract or its subject-matter, which induces another person to contract to deal with his property in a way which he would not do if he knew the truth, the man who tells the lie cannot enforce his contract (NORTH, J.).—ARCHER v. STONE (1898), 78 L. 363. —— Except in case of warranty.]—(1) Whatever was known to the parties must have been known to the purchasers early after their possession, & it is quite impossible, with the knowledge of that defect, the purchasers going on dealing with the property, not as an ordinary estate, which may be restored at the end of six months in the same state in which it was, but a property of this description, varying every day, that they can set up such an objection at the end of six months, when they must have known the fact from the commencement (LORD CHELMSFORD, C.).

(2) If two parties enter into a contract, & if one of them, for the purpose of inducing the other to contract with him, shall state that which is not true in point of fact, which he knew at the time that he stated it not to be true, & if upon that statement of what is not true, & what is known by the party making it to be false, the contract is entered into by the other party, then generally speaking, & unless there is more than that in the case, there will be at law an action open to the party entering into such contracts, an action of damages, grounded upon the deceit, & there will be a relief in equity to the same party to escape from the contract which he has so been inveigled into making by the false representation of the other contracting party. In one case it is not necessary that all those three circumstances should concur in order to ground an action for damages at law, or a claim for relief in a ct. of equity; I mean in the case of warranty given, in which the party undertakes that it shall in point of fact be so, & in which case, therefore, no question can be raised upon the scienter, upon the fraud or wilful misrepresentation (LORD BROUGHAM).

were enough, I hardly know a contract, even between persons of very strict morality, that could stand; we generally find the case to be that there has been an attempt of the one party to overreach the other, & of the other to overreach the first; but that does not make void the contract. It must be shown that the attempt was made, & made with success, cum fructu. The party must not only have been minded to overreach, but he must actually have overreached. He must not only have given instructions to the agent to deceive, but the agent must, in fulfilment of his directions, have made a representation, & moreover, the representation so made must have had the effect of deceiving the purchaser; & moreover, the purchaser must have trusted to that representation, & not to his own acumen, not to his own perspicacity, not to inquiries of his own. I will not say that the two might not be mixed up together, the false representation of the seller & the inquiries of the buyer, in such a way as even then to give a right to relief (LORD BROUGHAM).—ATTWOOD v. SMALL (1838), 6 Cl. & Fin. 232; 7 E. 374. ——.]—Persons took debenture stock in a co. in reliance on a statement in a prospectus issued by the directors that £200,000 of share capital had been subscribed, when it had in fact only been allotted in fully-paid shares to the contractor. 20 per cent. of the amount subscribed for was to be paid on allotment, & the rest by instalments, with an option to pay up in full on allotment & receive a discount. After allotment the directors sent to the allottees along with their stock certificates a circular which, amid statements about other matters, stated the truth as to the matter misrepresented, but did not admit the misrepresentation, nor inform the allottees that they could retire & get back their money. After this the allottees who had paid up in full received their discount, & those who had not went on paying up the remaining 80 per cent. by instalments. The concern having proved a failure, some of the debenture stock holders sued the directors to recover damages for misrepresentation: —Held: (1) the untrue statement in the prospectus was to be taken as inducing the allottees to enter into the contract, & entitled the allottees to damages, & its effect was not done away with by the circular, & the allottees who went on to pay in full after receiving the circular could recover damages for the loss of the money paid by them after receiving it, as well as in respect of what they had paid at first. Qu.: how the case would have stood if the circular had admitted the misrepresentation & informed the allottees that they could have their money back. (2) Some of pltfs. were absent from illness at the trial & no evidence was given to prove their individual cases. The judge gave judgment in favour of those pltfs. who proved their cases, but ordered those who did not appear to pay to defts. the costs occasioned by their being joined as pltfs.:—Held: this judgment ought to be varied as regards these latter pltfs. by making it without prejudice to their bringing a fresh action.

M.R., in Smith v. Chadwick, No. 106, ante, that if the ct. sees on the face of the statement that it is of such a nature as would induce a person to enter into the contract, or would tend to induce him to do so, or that it would be a part of the inducement to enter into the contract, the inference is, if he entered into the contract, that he acted on the inducement so held out, unless it is shown that he knew the facts, or that he avowedly did not rely on the statement whether he knew the facts or not (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

(4) If men tell for business purposes what in plain English is called a lie, they are guilty of fraud, & to talk about their having had no intention to deceive is no more a defence than it would be a defence to a prosecution for forging a bill of exchange to say that the forger meant to pay it when it became due (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

(5) It is an old expedient, & seldom successful, to cross-examine a person who has read a prospectus, & ask him as to each particular statement what influence it had on his mind, & how far it determined him to enter into the contract. This is quite fallacious, it assumes that a person who reads a prospectus & determines to take shares on the faith of it can appropriate among the different parts of it the effect produced by the whole. This can rarely be done even at the time, & for a shareholder thus to analyse his mental impressions after an interval of several years, so as to say which representation in particular induced him to take shares, is a thing all but impossible. A person reading a prospectus looks at it as a whole, he thinks the undertaking is a fine commercial speculation, he sees good names attached to it, he observes other points which he thinks favourable, & on the whole he forms his conclusion. You cannot weigh the elements by ounces (LORD HALSBURY, C.).

(6) It is certainly in the highest degree improbable that these pltfs. did not see the prospectus, or that they were not influenced by the representations contained in it, but we are all of opinion that there is no evidence of these facts upon which a ct. of justice can act (LORD HALSBURY, C.).—ARNISON v. SMITH (1889), 41 Ch. 375. ——.]—Now, we know one right that a man has as against a stranger, which is this: that a stranger should not make a false statement to him with the intent that he should act upon it; & if he does act upon it & suffers damage, then the one having done that which the other had a right to insist that he should not do, he could maintain an action. Now, what other right is it alleged that pltf. had as against defts.? The first seems to be that he had a right, not that defts. should tell him the truth or should not tell him what was false, but that he had a right that deft. should not tell someone else an untruth I protest that there is no such right that I know of known to the law of England. I have tried to put my views of the matter in broad language, & I say there is no such right that I know of in the law of England. Then pltf. says: "I have this further right, that the people who have nothing to do with me may not agree together to do something, & do that which results in an injury to me." I do not know of any such right. If by something which they do, which is no breach of any right which pltf. has, he has suffered damage it cannot be helped. There is no legal remedy for it, & there is no infringement of any legal right (LORD ESHER, M.R.).—SALAMAN v. WARNER (1891), 65 L. T. 132; 7 T. L. R. 484, C. A.

376. ——.]—(1) The false representation in the newspaper on which pltf. acted & by so doing was damnified was made with the intent that it should be acted on by any person who had already received the prospectus. The jury have found that the natural consequence of the publication in the newspaper was that pltf. should buy shares; &, if so, the injury received by pltf. was the immediate, & not the remote, consequence of the representation thus made. It follows, therefore, that pltf. was entitled to recover (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

(2) It is not taking the correct view of the case to sever it into parts as deft.'s counsel sought to do, & to argue that the prospectus by itself would not support a cause of action, & that the telegram by itself would not do, & since two nothings make nothing, the combination of the two would not support a cause of action. 391. —— ——.]—Where a person has been induced to take shares in a co. by misrepresentation contained in the prospectus, the mere circumstance that the co. is insolvent at the time when he takes proceedings to rescind his contract to take shares does not, in the absence of countervailing equities, deprive him of his right to rescind. Where a person seeks to rescind a contract to take shares on the ground of misrepresentation, it is not necessary that he should prove that if the misrepresentation had not been made he would not have taken the shares. It is sufficient if there is evidence to show that he was materially influenced by the misrepresentation. On Sept. 6, C. applied for shares in a co., being induced so to do by misrepresentations in the co.'s prospectus. On Sept. 7, he received notice of allotment. On Sept. 22, he wrote repudiating his contract on the ground of the misrepresentation, & on the same day commenced an action for rescission. On Sept. 24, he moved to have the register of members rectified by removing his name therefrom, & on same day a petition for the winding up of the co. was presented, upon which an order was afterwards made. The co. was insolvent & had been so previously to Sept. 22, but had not stopped payment, & was issuing advertisements for applications for shares. Nearly all the debts of the co. had been contracted before Sept. 6:—Held: C. was entitled to have his name removed from the register.—Re LONDON & LEEDS BANK, LTD., Ex p. CARLING, CARLING v. LONDON & LEEDS BANK (1887), 56 L. 393. —— ——.]—The question in this case is whether a person, whose evil reputation in business is such that no man will deal with him, can, after fraudulently concealing his identity & thus inducing another to enter into a contract which he otherwise would not have done, prevent that other, when sued by the defrauding party upon the contract, from insisting upon the ordinary defence of the defrauded—namely, that he had been induced by the fraud of pltf. to enter into the contract sued on (A. L. SMITH, L.J.).

I am by no means prepared to say that the fraud in this case was not material to the contract itself. But whether it be so or not, I will refer to a passage in the judgment of the LORD CHANCELLOR (LORD CHELMSFORD) in the House of Lords in Smith v. Kay, No. 109, ante, when dealing with the contention of the materiality of a representation, which passage is very much in point. He says: "But can it be permitted to a party who has practised deception, with a view to a particular end, which has been attained by it, to speculate upon what might have been the result if there had been a full communication of the truth?" I apply this to the present case (A. L. SMITH, L.J.).—GORDON v. STREET, [1899] 2 Q. B. 641; 69 L. J. Q. B. 45; 81 L. T. 237; 48 W. R. 158; 15 T. L. R. 445; 43 Sol. Jo. 621, C. A.

399. —— With reference to particular misstatement.]—In an action or defence, by a shareholder in a joint stock co., on the ground of fraud, it is for the jury to say upon the whole of the evidence, including the prospectus, & the arts. of assocn., & other documents whether there were material & fraudulent misrepresentations, by which the shareholder was really induced to subscribe. If this partly depends upon the sense & meaning in which any statement in the prospectus might fairly be intended to be, or would naturally be understood, then that is for them to consider on the whole of the prospectus, & the other evidence in the case. If the prospectus is ambiguous, & in one sense is consistent with truth, they are bound to construe it in that sense, unless satisfied that it was meant to mislead. But the question, in such a case, is not whether the statements put forth are strictly, literally, or technically correct, nor even whether they are in any degree really incorrect; but whether they are so far substantially false & wilfully so, as that they must be deemed to have been intended to deceive, & to have, in fact, deceived. Thus the wilful publication of the name of a person of credit as a director, without any reason to believe that he is so, or will be so, with intent to induce others to subscribe on the credit of his name, which intent may be inferred from the very use thus made of the name, assuming it to be wilful, may be deemed fraud; but if there was reason to believe that the person would be a director, though, in fact, he never is so, it is not necessarily fraudulent. So as to a statement that all, or so much of the "capital required" has been subscribed. So of the omission in the prospectus of matters disclosed in the articles. In all such cases, the intent & materiality of the misstatement, as well as the fact of a misstatement, must be considered by the jury with a view to judge whether it was fraudulent. Although on that question they may & ought to look at the whole of the prospectus, it must be with reference to some particular statements in it; & they must be satisfied that on some one or more points it was proved.—CLEVELAND IRON CO. v. STEPHENSON (1865), 4 F. & F. 428.

In arriving at a conclusion upon this question of fact all the circumstances must be considered. A statement may be made so preposterous in its nature that nobody could believe that anyone was

407. On representor.]—The vendor had been induced to take the shares by false & fraudulent representations as to the position of the co. These representations were partly made by one of the directors, & were partly contained in a report which was made by the directors to the co., & approved at an annual meeting, & afterwards embodied in a circular issued by the directors inviting subscriptions for new shares:—Held: the co. could not be considered to have authorised such a use of the report, nor to be answerable for the misrepresentations contained in it, & whether they could or not, the vendor having had the means of discovering the fraud, & having taken no step to repudiate the contract before the winding-up of the co., but having received dividends on, & made a transfer of, the shares, was not entitled to be relieved from the contract, but must be held to have been a shareholder down to the time of the transfer.

Semble: if the representations contained in the circular could have been considered those of the co., the circumstance of their having been only some of the representations on which the vendor acted, would not have defeated his right to relief; the burden of proving that one of several misrepresentations which led to a contract was not a material inducement to enter into it being on the party who has made such misrepresentation.

Supposing that the reports & other statements of the directors formed a material part of the inducement to him to take the shares, without which the purchase never would have been made, I cannot think that the effect of them is destroyed, because other influences were at the same time at work, which, either innocently or intentionally, contributed to the success of those false representations (LORD CHELMSFORD, C.).—Re ROYAL BRITISH BANK, ETC., NICOL'S CASE (1859), 3 De G. & J. 387; 28 L. Subsequently the purchaser entered into an agreement with a third party to sell the colliery at a price implying the existence of a considerable quantity of coal, & afterwards discovered the fact of the exhaustion of the coal. Where the particulars of sale are likely to mislead, it is incumbent on a vendor to show that the purchaser has not been misled; & where a misrepresentation has been made by a vendor, the ct. applied the rule of caveat emptor with great caution:—Held: pltf. having failed to show that his misrepresentation did not influence deft. to enter into the agreement, the rule of caveat emptor did not apply, & pltf. must be left to his remedy, if any, at law.—COLBY v. GADSEN (1867), 17 L. 411. On representee.]—Pltf., who was an underwriter of shares, sought to recover damages for non-disclosure of the same agreement as that in Cackett v. Keswick, No. 594, post, of Mar. 10, 1899, in the prospectus, but the circumstances were different. On Mar. 13, 1899, pltf. met a friend who mentioned the co. to him & showed him a draft prospectus. He was attracted by the name of M. & K. on the front sheet, but in his evidence he stated that he did not remember reading anything about the contracts. He signed an underwriting agreement for 250 shares, & gave a cheque for £62 10*s.*, which was returned to him on Mar. 28, as the directors had decided "not to issue" the prospectus before Easter. Another cheque & a signed application form for those shares were sent before the end of Apr.:—Held: pltf. signed his underwriting agreement & application for shares before any prospectus had been issued to the public; the incorporation took place on May 24, and the prospectus was issued on May 27; & Cos. Act, 1867 (c. 38), s. 28, was not intended to apply to copies of a prospectus not authorised for publication shown to friends or speculators by way of anticipation of the public. If such persons were deceived they had certain rights, but could not get the benefit of the statute. Moreover, pltf. had failed to prove that he subscribed on the faith that there was no such contract as that of Mar. 10 in existence; & the fact that his commission was payable in shares was insufficient to regard him as "the careful investor." The contract of underwriting with the promoters was wholly different from that with the co. to take shares, & different considerations applied as to the materiality of facts.—BATY v. KESWICK (1901), 85 L. 415. Subject-matter known to representor—Unknown to representee.]—If the party to whom the representations were made, himself resorted to the proper means of verification, before he entered into the contract, it may appear that he relied upon the result of his own investigation & inquiry, & not upon the representations made to him by the other party; or if the means of investigation & verification be at hand, & the attention of the party receiving the representations be drawn to them, the circumstances of the case may be such as to make it incumbent on a ct. of justice to impute to him a knowledge of the result, which, upon due inquiry, he ought to have obtained, & thus the notion of reliance on the representations made to him may be excluded. Again, when the ct. is endeavouring to ascertain what reliance was placed on representations, it must consider them with reference to the subject-matter, & the relative knowledge of the parties. If the subject is capable of being accurately known, & one party is, or is supposed to be, possessed of accurate knowledge, & the other is entirely ignorant, & a contract is entered into, after representations made by the party who knows, or is supposed to know, without any means of verification being resorted to by the other, it may well enough be presumed, that the ignorant man relied on the statements made by him who was supposed to be better informed; but if the subject is in its nature uncertain, if all that is known about it is matter of inference from something else, & if the parties making it, & receiving representations on the subject, have equal knowledge, & means of acquiring knowledge, & equal skill, it is not easy to presume that representations made by one would have much or any influence upon the other. —CLAPHAM v. SHILLITO (1844), 7 Beav. 146; 49 E. 431. Sufficiency—"Having now seen prospectus"—Letter on application for shares.]—(1) On the whole, I think the evidence is irresistible that pltf.'s contention that he was induced by the prospectus . . . is not a genuine contention; & that the expression in his letter of Feb. 7, "Having now seen the prospectus," falls short of proof that he was induced by the statements in it as to success & realised profits to apply for the shares he took (DENMAN, J.).

(2) I cannot agree with him [LOPES, J.] that the construction of the document was for the jury. I think it was for the judge & not for the jury to say whether, with reference to the surrounding circumstances, the statements in question were expressions of hope or belief only or statements of existing facts (DENMAN, J.).—BELLAIRS v. TUCKER (1884), 13 Q. 445. —— ——.]—In 1895 defts., who were trustees of a Congregational chapel, put up for sale by public auction a building, which had formerly been used as their chapel. The conditions of sale imposed no restrictions on the user of the building. After the sale C. made an offer for the building, but defts. declined to accept it, on the ground that it was made on behalf of a committee of Roman Catholics, who intended to use the building as a Roman Catholic place of worship, & defts. objected to sell for that purpose. The committee then told pltf., who was the manager of a mineral water co., that if he could get the property they would buy it of him at £100 profit. Pltf.'s solrs. wrote to defts.' agent, making an offer for the property "on behalf of our client, the manager of the E. Mineral Water co." After some negotiations, a contract was signed by defts. for sale of the building to pltf. at £1,025 a price less than C.'s offer. No direct statement was made that pltf. was buying for the co., but it was admitted that defts., during the negotiations, believed that he was, & that pltf. knew it. Pltf. signed the contract as principal without protest from defts.' agent. Defts. refused to complete on the ground that pltf. was buying as agent, for the Roman Catholic committee, to whom he knew they would not sell, & had obtained the contract by misrepresentation:—Held: pltf. was not buying as agent for the Roman Catholic committee, but for himself with a view to resell to them at a profit; the misrepresentation as to the mineral water co. was immaterial because the vendors did not care whether they sold to the co. or pltf., & as between them no consideration of the person with whom they were contracting entered as an element into the contract.—NASH v. DIX (1898), 78 L. SUB-SECT. 2.—LIABILITY OF AGENT.

456. For acts of co-agents.]—To what extent are agents liable for the frauds of their co-agents committed in respect of acts which they know that those co-agents are about to perform? I conceive the general law to be this, that the persons responsible for a fraud, are of two classes.

First, the actual perpetrators of the fraud, the authors of it, the agents who commit it, the parties to it; those who concur in it, who either do something to produce the fraudulent result, or abstain from doing something, which they are under an obligation to the deceived person to do in order to prevent fraud. Secondly, the principal for whom an agent in the performance of his duties as agent commits the fraud is also responsible. But, as a general rule, I think that one agent is not responsible for the acts of another agent, unless he does something by which he makes himself a principal in the fraud (FRY, J.).—CARGILL v. BOWER (1878), 10 Ch. SECT. 3.—INNOCENT MISREPRESENTATION.

SUB-SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

472. General rule—Remedy lies in rescission—Not in damages.]—A statement may form part of a contract which the party making it promises to be true, or it may be an innocent misrepresentation of fact which he does not promise to be true, but which, if it was untrue in a material particular, & formed part of the inducement to enter into the contract, may give rise to a claim to rescind, but does not give rise to a claim for damages (SCRUTTON, L.J.).—HARRISON v. KNOWLES & FOSTER, [1918] 1 K. SUB-SECT. 2.—ACTION FOR DAMAGES.

A. In General.

473. General rule.] — (1) The general rule of law is clear that no action is maintainable for a mere statement, although untrue, & although acted on to the damage of the person to whom it is made, unless that statement is false to the knowledge of the person making it (BRAMWELL, J.).

(2) No action will lie against a man for misrepresentation of facts whereby damage has been occasioned to another person, unless that misrepresentation is fraudulent or careless. But it is never laid down that the exemption from liability for an innocent misrepresentation is taken away by carelessness. If it were held that a person is liable for a negligent misrepresentation, however bonâ fide made, a great check would be put upon many very useful & honest communications, owing to a fear of being charged, & perhaps untruly charged, with negligence (BRAMWELL, J.).—DICKSON v. REUTER'S TELEGRAM CO. B. Where Privity of Contract.

474. Whether action lies — Without privity of contract.]—Tradesman, who contracts with an individual for the sale to him of an article to be used for a particular purpose by a third person, is not, in the absence of fraud, liable for injury caused to such person by some defect in the construction of the article.

A declaration by husband & wife stated, that deft. was the maker & seller of certain lamps, called "The Holliday Lamp" & thereupon the husband bought of him one of those lamps, to be used by his wife & himself in his shop, & deft. then fraudulently warranted that the lamp was reasonably fit & proper for that purpose, whereas the lamp was dangerous & unsafe, by reason whereof, when the wife attempted to use the lamp, it exploded & injured her. At the trial, it appeared that the accident arose from the defective construction of the lamp, but there was no proof that deft. knew of the defect; & the jury found that he was not guilty of any fraudulent or deceitful representation:—Held: the action could not be maintained by the wife, there being no misfeasance towards her independently of the contract, which was with the husband alone.—LONGMEID v. HOLLIDAY (1851), 6 Exch. 761; 20 L. 488. No action lies—Apart from duty to take care.]—(1) Speaking of Derry v. Peek, No. 185, ante, broadly, I take it that it has settled once for all the controversy which was well known to have given rise to very considerable difference of opinion as to whether an action for negligent misrepresentation, as distinguished from fraudulent misrepresentation, could be maintained. There was considerable authority to the effect that it could, & there was considerable authority to the effect that it could not; &, as I understand Derry v. Peek, No. 185, ante, it settles that question in this way: that an action for a negligent, as distinguished from a fraudulent, misrepresentation in a company's prospectus cannot be supported; I think it is perfectly impossible to read the judgments which were delivered in that case, especially Lord Herschell's, to which I will allude presently, without seeing that that is the broad proposition of law which Derry v. Peek, No. 185, ante, has settled, & settled for good (LINDLEY, L.J.).

(2) Not caring, in that context, does not mean not taking care, it meant indifference to the truth, the moral obliquity which consists in a wilful disregard of the importance of truth (BOWEN, L.J.).

(3) A man may tell a lie about the state of his own mind, just as much as he can tell a lie about the state of the weather, or the state of his own digestion (BOWEN, L.J.).

(4) To prevent a false statement being fraudulent there must, I think, always be an honest belief in its truth. & this probably covers the whole ground, for one who knowingly alleges that which is false has obviously no such honest belief (LINDLEY, L.J.).—ANGUS v. CLIFFORD, [1891] 2 Ch. 449; 60 L. 493. —— Duty arising from fiduciary relationship.]—Nothing short of proof of a fraudulent intention in the strict sense will suffice to maintain an action of deceit, but an action for damages, for negligence may lie, without evidence if an actual intention to deceive, where a confidential relationship exists, such as that of solr. & client, so that the person to whom a representation was made was entitled to rely, & did in fact rely, upon it, & sustained damage in consequence.

The necessity of proving moral fraud in order to succeed in an action of deceit has not narrowed the scope of this remedy.—NOCTON v. ASHBURTON (LORD), [1914] A. C. 932; 83 L. J. Ch. 784; 111 L. T. 641; 30 T. L. R. 602, H. L.

517. ——.]—An action to recover damages, more than £3,000, for an alleged fraudulent misrepresentation upon the sale of a public-house was tried with a special jury, the trial lasting five days. The misrepresentation relied upon was that the "legitimate takings" of the house were represented by the vendor to £500 per week, whereas the takings-book shown to the purchaser was concocted, & the takings were not legitimate, but were brought about by giving over-measure to the customers & a quality of liquor superior to that which was usual in the trade. About thirty witnesses, chiefly customers at the public-house before & since the sale, were called. An action was brought to set aside certain agreements on the ground of duress & fraud. Pltf. alleged that deft. had induced him by misrepresentations which he knew to be false as to the position & solvency of the drawer & acceptor, to advance the money, & further, that no money ever was, in fact, advanced by deft.; but that, knowing the bill to be worthless, it was a scheme on his part to obtain money for his own purposes. SUB-SECT. 2.—ESSENTIALS OF ACTION.

A. Fraud.

See, also, Part IV., ante.

531. General rule—Proof of fraud necessary.]—The purchaser of an estate cannot recover back his purchase-money on the ground of a concealment of a defect in the title by the vendor, without proving that such concealment was fraudulent; & the question of fraud is properly one for the jury.

A fraudulent concealment is as bad as a wilful misrepresentation. A fraudulent concealment by the seller of a fact which he ought to communicate, will undoubtedly vitiate the sale; but in order to have that effect the concealment must be fraudulent (BAILEY, J.).

The scienter, or fraud, is the gist of the action where there is not a warranty; where there is a warranty, the party takes upon himself the knowledge of the title of the article & of his qualities (LITTLEDALE, J.).—EARLY v. GARRET (1829), 9 B. & C. 928; 4 Man. & Ry. F., which was indorsed in the usual form, the indorsement being followed by these words: "deft. is a" [blank] "& resides at Redcar, in your bailiwick." Pltf. in the present action was sheriff of Yorkshire, & he issued a warrant, setting out the indorsement of the writ verbatim. His officer went with the warrant to Redcar, where W. F., the son of the W. F. named in the writ, lived. The son informed the officer that he was not the person against whom the writ was issued, but that his father, who lived at Coatham, an adjacent village, probably was; & the father subsequently came & admitted the fact. The officer, however, seized the goods of W. F., the son, at Redcar, who afterwards recovered damages against pltf., as sheriff, for the wrongful seizure. Pltf. brought this action to recover from deft. the amount of the said damages & costs. The first count of the declaration alleged that deft., by the indorsement, & with the intent that pltf. should act upon the statement, falsely represented to pltf. that the W. F. named in the writ resided at Redcar, whereby pltf. was induced to seize:—Held: the action was not maintainable, the representation alleged in the first count not having been fraudulently made.—CHILDERS v. WOOLER (1860), 2 E. & E. 287; 29 L. The fees for this classification were paid by the owner. After the date of this classification & certificate pltf. bought the Midas from the owner, & he did so in reliance upon the statement in the certificate as to the condition of the vessel. Defects were soon afterwards discovered in the condition of the vessel, by reason whereof pltf. suffered damage. It was admitted, for the purpose of the case, that the survey was negligently made, & that but for such negligence the defects in such vessel would have been discovered, & pltf. saved from the loss which he sustained. In an action by pltf. against the trustees of the society to recover damages from the loss so sustained:—Held: even assuming the negligence of the classification & the false character given to the vessel thereby, pltf. was not entitled to recover against defts., as his action could not be based upon contract, there being no privity of contract between pltf. & defts., & it could not be based upon misrepresentation, as there was no misrepresentation of a fraudulent character.—BRAGINGTON v. CHAPMAN (1878), 60 L. Plea, that pltf. never paid C. & Son:—Held: the action was maintainable, for after putting the averment of payment which had been traversed out of consideration, it appeared sufficiently that deft. knew that there was no agreement for a lien on the goods, & that there was no obligation on C. & Son to deliver the goods to pltf. without payment; & that their refusal so to deliver the goods to pltf. arose from deft.'s statement, & the damage directly resulted from that act of his.—GREEN v. BUTTON (1835), 2

C. Actual Amount of Loss.

583. General rule.]—One of several partners in a banking house, being also a co-trustee with other persons, such trustees being entitled to certain stock & the dividends thereon, forged a power of attorney to transfer the stock, which was sold & transferred under such forged power. After the transfer he made false entries in the partnership books, by which he regularly credited the trustees with the supposed dividends upon the stock. It did not appear that any account recognising such false entries had been delivered to the trustees by the partners before their bkpcy. They, however, paid checks drawn on the credit of the dividends supposed to have been received, & which checks were duly paid:—Held: as the trustees were entitled to recover the dividends at the Bank of England, they could not treat the amount of those dividends as money had & received to their use by defts., the bankers, although the bankers might be liable to an action on the case for deceit, in which damages might be recovered in proportion to the injury arising from their untrue representation, that they had received the dividends for the use of the trustees.—HUME v. BOLLAND (1832), 1 Cr. & M. 130; 2 Tyr. 575; 149 E. A. volunteered to see B. on the subject, & accordingly went to him & afterwards told pltf. that B. represented the receipts of the house to average a certain sum daily ; upon faith of which statement pltf. bought the house for £400. It turned out that the value of the business had been grossly exaggerated, & pltf. without any notice to A., & without making any inquiry, brought an action against C. charging her with a deceitful representation on the sale. B. swore at the trial that he never made any such representation as A. stated ; & the jury being satisfied that A.'s statement was false, returned a verdict for deft.

Pltf. then sued A. for damages he had sustained from his false representation, when the jury gave him £300, being the difference between the price he gave for the business & the sum for which he afterwards sold it, £100 for loss of time, & £151 5*s.* the costs of the abortive action against C. :—Held : —the action was maintainable so far as related to the £300 & the £100 ; but the costs of the first action were not, under the circumstances, the natural & proximate consequence of A.'s misrepresentation, & therefore were not recoverable.—RICHARDSON v. DUNN (1860), 8 C. 594. —— ——.]—Pltf., a shareholder, claimed damages against defts. for non-disclosure in the prospectus of a contract, in breach of Cos. Act, 1867 (c. 131), s. 38. The co., a copper co., was incorporated on May 29, 1899, & was in liquidation. Deft., K., was chairman of the directors & partner in the firm of M., of high reputation in the copper trade, & defts., C., another director, & W., were both promoters. In the course of the promotion C. wrote to M. & co., on Mar. 10, 1899, that in consideration of their underwriting 10,000 shares, they were to receive 12,000 vendors' shares as commission, they were to be appointed commercial agents, the office of the co. was to be at their address, & K. was to go on the prospectus as chairman. In fact, 2,000 shares only were attributable to commission, the balance being for the use of the names of M. & K. This contract was not disclosed in the prospectus. There was no fraudulent intention, but the omission was due to a misunderstanding between counsel & the solr. as to the nature of the contract :—Held : the measure of damages was the difference between the amount paid for the shares & their actual value the day after allotment.—CACKETT v. KESWICK, [1902] 2 Ch. 456 ; 85 L. 595. —— ——.]—In Dec. 1896, a promoting co. in the name of R. agreed to purchase two music halls for £24,000, with a view to sell them at an enhanced price to a theatre co. which it intended to promote for the purpose. On Feb. 1, 1897, R. agreed to sell the music halls to C. as trustee for the intended theatre co. for £75,000, to be paid partly in cash & partly by mtges., debentures, & fully paid shares, the vendor undertaking to pay all preliminary expenses & to expend some £5,000 in repairs. Both R. & C. were mere nominees of the promoting co. On Feb. 2, the theatre co. was incorporated, & on Feb. 4, the directors of the theatre co., who were all nominated by the promoting co., approved the prospectus & adopted the purchase by C., which was subsequently carried out. The business failed, & the music halls were sold by the mtgees. The promoting co. was the promoter of the theatre co., & was responsible for the prospectus, which concealed the fact that the promoting co. was the true owner, & further contained fraudulent misrepresentations: —Held: the promoting co. was liable in damages to the theatre co., the measure of which was the difference in value between the consideration paid by the theatre co. & the actual value at the date of the purchase of the properties which it acquired.—Re LEEDS & HANLEY THEATRES OF VARIETIES, LTD., [1902] 2 Ch. 809; 72 L. Arbitrator acquitted deft. of all collusion with A., & of all fraud at the time of making the representation, but feeling himself compelled by adjudged cases, which he mentioned, to decide that the knowledge of the falsehood of the thing asserted was in itself fraud & deceit, he awarded in favour of pltfs. The ct. set aside the award, on the ground that the arbitrator had, on the face of it, acquitted the deft. of fraud & deceit.—AMES v. MILWARD (1818), 8 Taunt. 637; 2 Moore, C. P. 713; 129 E. But deft. is liable only within a reasonable time, & to a reasonable amount. If one who has sold goods on the representation of another concerning the buyer's circumstances, afterwards tells the buyer he will sell him no greater amount without further references, & after that entrusts him to a greater amount, the author of the misrepresentation is not liable beyond the sum due at the date of pltf.'s declaration.—HUTCHINSON v. BELL (1809), 1 Taunt. 558; 127 E. SUB-SECT. 2.—PROOF OF FRAUD.

A. Where Relief sought on Ground of Misrepresentation.

623. Proof of fraud not necessary.]—Pltf. was a single lady, about fifty-three years of age, & the heiress-at-law of her deceased brother. Deft. had been the brother's agent, & managed his property for him till his death, & for pltf. afterwards. Pltf. knew nothing of her brother's affairs. Soon after the brother's death deft. informed pltf. that her brother had left some land, to which she was entitled as his heiress-at-law, & asked her what she meant to do with it, adding, that her brother often said deft. & his daughter were to have it, but he never in any way made it over to them. Pltf. then asked deft. what was the value of the land, & he answered, "£100, may be a trifle more or less"; & asked her whether she was willing that he should purchase it at that price. On her saying yes, deft. further added that all his property would come to his daughter, & that he should have it made over to her. Deft. then asked pltf. whether she would like to consult any one on the subject, & she replied that she did not want that, because she had perfect confidence in him. The property was really worth about £750 or £800. Pltf. executed a conveyance of it to deft.'s daughter in fee, for the expressed consideration of £500; but was paid only £100 on the transaction.

Deft. explained the amount of the consideration money by alleging, but not proving, that there were moneys due to him from pltf.'s brother, which, if taken into account, would have reduced the value of her interest in the property to the £100.

Pltf., on ascertaining the truth, filed a bill to set aside the sale on the grounds of, first, inadequate consideration; second, misrepresentation; third, the fiduciary relationship of the parties; fourth, the confidence naturally & justly reposed by her in deft., & her ignorance of the facts, except so far as he, & he alone, could inform her of them; & fifth, undue influence on his part:—Held: the transaction was a sale, & not a gift; there was no such fiduciary relationship between the parties as incapacitated them to bargain for the property; but on the simple ground of the misrepresentation made by deft., the sale must be declared void, & the conveyance set aside.

Semble, if the transaction had been a gift, & not a sale, the result would on that ground have been the same.—HAYGARTH v. WEARING (1871), L. R. 12 Eq. 320; 40 L. J. Ch. 577; 24 L. T. 825; 36 J. P. 132; 20 W. R. 11.

On an action for rescission of the contract:—Held: the carrying on of pltf.'s school in an ordinary & reasonable way would be within the wording of the restrictive covenant, which could not be limited to trades or businesses ejusdem generis with those specifically mentioned; & pltf. having been induced by a misrepresentation of fact, & not a mere statement of law, made by deft.'s agent to enter into this contract, was entitled in equity to rescission, even though the representation had not been made fraudulently.—WAUTON v. COPPARD, [1899] 1 Ch. 92; 68 L. the property from passing, but merely gave the party defrauded a right, on discovering the fraud, to elect whether he would continue to treat the contract as binding, or would disaffirm the contract & resume his property.

(3) We further agree that the contract continues valid till the party defrauded has determined his election by avoiding it (MELLOR, J.).

(4) If it can be shown that the London Pianoforte co. have at any time after knowledge of the fraud, either by express words or by unequivocal acts, affirmed the contract, their election has been determined for ever (MELLOR, J.).

(5) We think that so long as he has made no election he retains the right to determine it either way, subject to this, that if in the interval whilst he is deliberating, an innocent third party has acquired an interest in the property, or if in consequence of his delay the position even of the wrongdoer is affected, it will preclude him from exercising his right to rescind. A mtge. deed was prepared by B., who was a solr., purporting to be a mtge. of an estate belonging to R. to whom B. was also solr., for securing the repayment of the money so sold out. R. executed this deed under the influence & from the confidence reposed by him in his solr. without knowing the contents of it; he had never given instructions to B. authorising him to mortgage this estate, nor had ever received any of the alleged mtge. moneys, which had been retained by B. for his own purposes. B. afterwards became bkpt., & the mtge. deed came into the hands of A. his co-trustee. A. thereupon brought an action on R.'s covenant. 724. —— ———.]—Where a bkpt. has obtained goods on credit without any intention of paying for them the vendor is entitled to treat the contract of sale as having been induced by fraud, & to disaffirm the contract & take back his goods after notice of act of bkpcy. provided that he disaffirms the contract within a reasonable time of his discovery of the fraud.

As soon as they discovered that he had bought the goods with no intention at all of paying for them, they were entitled to treat the contract as a contract induced by fraud, induced that is to say by a representation which the purchaser knew to be untrue, that he meant to pay for the goods (BIGHAM, J.).—Re EASTGATE, Ex p. WARD, [1905] 1 K. 725. —— ———.]—A sale of goods upon credit was induced by the fraud of the purchaser, who upon obtaining them pledged them with a pawnbroker. After the purchaser had paid part of the price a receiving order in bkpcy. was made against him. The vendor then discovered the fraud & disaffirmed the contract, retaking possession of the goods upon payment to the pawnbroker of the sum advanced upon them. The purchaser having been adjudicated bkpt., his trustee in bkpcy. brought an action against the vendor, claiming to recover the goods or their value after giving credit for the sum paid to the pawnbroker to redeem them:—Held: the trustee acquired the property in the goods subject to the right of the vendor to disaffirm the contract of sale & to retake possession of the goods; the vendor had a right to disaffirm the contract after the date of the receiving order; & therefore the trustee was not entitled to recover the goods or their value.—TILLEY v. BOWMAN, LTD., [1910] 1 K. 726. Valid defence.]—In a case depending on alleged misrepresentation of value, there cannot be a more effectual bar to pltf. than by showing that he was from the beginning cognisant of all the matters complained of, or, after full information of them, continued to deal with the property.—VIGERS v. PIKE (1842), 8 Cl. & Fin. 562; 8 E. But he did not do so, he proceeded to investigate the title, & his solr. examined the title deeds, in a part of that very building which was the subject of the contract; & I think it is now too late for him to ask the ct. to rescind the contract on that ground (WOOD, V.-C.).—STANTON v. TATTERSALL (1853), 1 Sm. & G. 529; 1 Eq. 732. ——.]—Deft., who practised at R., had some time acted as solr. to pltf., & it was arranged that he should take pltf.'s brother-in-law G., who was under twenty-one years of age, as his articled clerk. The usual articles were accordingly prepared, to which pltf. was a party, whereby G., with the consent of his guardian, bound himself clerk to deft. for five years. There was no covenant in any way restricting G. from practising as a solr. at the expiration of the articles. Simultaneously a bond was executed by pltf. binding himself to pay £1,000 to deft. in case G. should within ten years of the expiration of the articles carry on his profession as a solr. in R. or within ten miles thereof, without the written consent of deft. Shortly after the expiration of the articles G. was admitted a solr. Deft. then insisted that G. should not practise in R., or within ten miles thereof, & threatened to enforce the bond in case G. should commence to practise within that radius. Pltf. thereupon brought an action against deft. claiming a declaration that the bond was obtained by misrepresentation & undue influence & without consideration, & was void, & that he was entitled to have the same set aside :—Held : there had been no undue influence or misrepresentation, but pltf. was perfectly well aware what the object of the bond was when he executed it.—RICHARDS v. WHITHAM (1892), 66 L. 741. Act merely incidental to contract.]—The purchaser of a mare at an auction was induced to buy her by the description that she had been hunted with certain hounds. The conditions of sale provided that horses not answering the description must be returned before a specified time, otherwise the purchaser must keep them with all faults. The purchaser paid the price & was casually told that the description was untrue; nevertheless he removed the mare to his own stables; & while being so removed she ran away & injured herself severely, without any negligence on pltf.'s part. The description was, in fact, untrue, & on that ground the purchaser returned her to the seller within the specified time:—Held: since the purchaser had in removing her done no more than he was entitled to do under the contract & since the injuries were not owing to any negligence on his part he had not lost his right to rescind the contract & could recover the price from the seller in an action for money had & received.—HEAD v. TATTERSALL (1871), L. SUB-SECT. 6.—IMPOSSIBILITY OF SPECIFIC RESTITUTION.

742. General rule.] — A person induced by fraud to enter into a contract under which he pays money may, at his option, rescind the contract, & recover back the price, as money had & received, if he can return what he has received under it. But, when he can no longer place the parties in statu quo, as if he has become unable to return what he has received in the same plight as that in which he received it, the right to rescind no longer exists; & his remedy must be by an action for deceit, & not for money had & received.

If you are fraudulently induced to buy a cake you may return it & get back the price, but you cannot both eat your cake & return your cake (CROMPTON, J.).

Pltf. must rescind in toto or not at all. He cannot both keep the shares & recover the whole price. That is founded on the plainest principles of justice (CROMPTON, J.).—CLARKE v. DICKSON (1858), E. B. & E. 148; 27 L. J. Q. B. 223; 31 L. T. O. S. 97; 4 Jur. N. S. 832; 120 E. R. 463.

The letters were accordingly destroyed & the husband paid his wife the £500 a year. In 1915 the wife brought an action against the husband claiming to have the deed rescinded upon the ground that she had been induced to execute it by his false & fraudulent representations & concealment as to his means.

The ct. ordered the deed to be rescinded though the letters had been destroyed & could not be restored to the respective parties, & refused to make it a condition of rescission that the wife should repay to the husband the annual sums of £500, which he had paid to her under the deed, the husband having received corresponding benefits under the deed.—HULTON v. HULTON, [1917] 1 K. Assignee of chose in action.]—In the first place, I hold it to be a proposition that cannot be questioned that the assignee of a debt, whether it is a debt created by covenant or by bond, or a debt created by a parol agreement, stands in no better position than the assignor. He takes no further rights than the assignor had, who assigned the debt, & he acquires no other rights unless the debtor, after knowing of the defence which he has, lies by so long as to induce a reasonable inference that he elects not to take advantage of the fraud, but to confirm the assignment, or notifies to the assignor of the debt that he elects to affirm it, or does something equal to that (LUSH, L.J.).—WAKEFIELD & BARNSLEY BANKING CO. v. NORMANTON LOCAL BOARD (1881), 44 L. 772. —— ——.]—Defts., a limited co., had patented in England a process for utilising sewage. Pltf., acting ostensibly on his own account, but really on account of the co., bought from defts. for £15,000, a grant of the exclusive right to use their process in Berlin. Pltf. then conveyed his interest to L. for £30,000, & L. conveyed it for £30,000 to H.'s clerk, in trust for the intended Berlin co. The Berlin co. was formed & issued a prospectus, stating that they had the exclusive right to use defts.' process in Berlin. The £30,000 was paid to H., who kept £15,000 & paid £15,000 to defts. in satisfaction of pltf.'s obligations. The object of the scheme was to float the Berlin co., in which H. was interested. No exclusive right had been or could be obtained in Berlin, & pltf. & H. knew this, but defts.' directors did not. In an action to recover the £15,000 paid to defts.:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to recover, because, knowing that there was no Berlin patent, he had only bargained for an ostensible grant, which he had got, & because his claim was founded on fraud, & a rule to enter the verdict for defts. was made absolute.—BEGBIE v. PHOSPHATE SEWAGE CO. 776. What must be proved—General rule.]—(1) A contract into which a person may have been induced to enter by false & fraudulent representation is not void, but merely voidable at the election of the person defrauded after he has had notice of the fraud. Unless & until he makes his election & by word or act repudiates the contract or expresses his determination not to be bound by it the contract remains as valid & binding as if it had not been tainted with fraud; (2) the party defrauded cannot avoid one part of a contract & affirm another part unless the parts are so severable from each other as to form two independent contracts.

(3) To maintain the first [plea of false representation], the burden rested on resps. of establishing, either by the admission of applts. or by the findings of the jury, the following conclusions of fact: (a) that the representations complained of were made by applts. to resps.; (b) that these representations were false in fact; (c) that applts., when they made them, either knew they were false or made them recklessly without knowing whether they were false or true; (d) that resps. were thereby induced to enter into the covenants contained in the leases; & (e) that immediately on or at least within a reasonable time after their discovery of the fraud which had been practised on them they elected to avoid the leases & accordingly repudiated them.

Of these, the last is the most vital, in the sense that it is the condition precedent which must be fulfilled before resps. can escape from the obligations of the contracts they have entered into, however fraudulent those contracts may be (LORD ATKINSON).—UNITED SHOE MACHINERY CO. 792. —— ——.]—H., a merchant dealing in tobacco & a broker in that trade, had fifty hogsheads of that article lying in bond in his name in the K. dock. The warrants for them had been issued to him. Pltf. bought the tobacco from H. & paid for it, but he left the dock warrants in the possession of H., & took no steps to have any change made in the books of the dock co. as to the ownership of the tobacco. H. being the ostensible owner of the tobacco fraudulently obtained advances on the pledge of a portion of the tobacco from defts. respectively, & handed to them the dock warrants. Both defts. acted in good faith, & took fresh dock warrants from the dock co. :—Held : H. was not entrusted by pltf. as his factor or agent with the documents of title, within 6 Geo. 4, c. 94, s. 2 ; & the conduct of pltf., in leaving the indicia of title in H.'s hands & thus enabling him to obtain advances on the security of the goods, was not such as to disentitle pltf. to recover its value from defts.—JOHNSON v. CREDIT LYONNAIS CO., JOHNSON v. BLUMENTHAL (1877), 3 C. 804. Right of action for money lent—Securities obtained from agent by fraud.]—Deft. employed a stockbroker to obtain a loan on the security of bonds, which were transferable by delivery. The broker, accordingly, borrowed a sum from pltf., but he wrongfully applied a part to his own use. The broker was unable to redeem the bonds, & deft., with knowledge of the circumstances, promised & agreed to call & give the broker his cheque for the deficiency on receiving back the bonds. The broker, acting on the faith of this promise, gave a crossed cheque to pltf., & redeemed the bonds. On the same day deft., by a trick, obtained possession of the bonds without giving his cheque; & the broker's crossed cheque was consequently returned, & he became a defaulter:—Held: deft. was responsible to pltf. for the fraud, & the bonds in his hands were still liable to repay pltf. his debt.—MOCATTA v. BELL (1857), 24 Beav. 585; 27 L. Part I.—Nature of Mistake.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

1 Ignorance.] — Agreement relating to distribution of personal estate set aside, although ratified; the value appearing to be greater than was known at the time of the agreement.

Though there is no very great evidence of undue influence, yet the ct. will always look with a jealous eye upon a transaction between a parent & a child just come of age, & interpose if any advantage is taken. The mother plainly knew more than the daughter; & only says in general, she believes she concealed nothing from her (STRANGE, M.R.).—COCKING v. PRATT (1750), 1 Ves. Sen. 400; 27 E. R. 1105.

2. ——.] — Decree upon the evidence of a single witness against the positive contradiction of the answer, containing circumstances giving greater credit to the deposition: deft. declining an issue. Relief upon an instrument, that had been delivered up, under the ignorance of one party, & with the knowledge of the other, as to a fact, upon which the right attached.—EAST INDIA CO. v. DONALD (1804), 9 Ves. 275; 32 E. R. 608, L. C.

3. ——.]—Reference ordered to the master to ascertain the sum due for principal & interest in an action on a bond, upon motion on the part of defts. Money paid for interest on bond by representatives of an obligor, through misrepresentation of the terms of the condition, which provided that the property tax should be deducted from the interest, of which, not having obtained sight of the bond, the exors. were not aware:—Held: to have been improperly paid, & they were entitled to be allowed it by the master on such reference. Aliter as to so much of the interest as had been paid by the obligor himself.—SMITH v. ALSOPP (1824), 13 Price, 823; M'Cle. 622; 147 E. R. 1167.

4. ——.] — Defts., the East India co., being entitled by escheat to real property of S. in India, in consequence of his will not being executed to pass such estate, & he being illegitimate granted it, together with all the rents & profits which had arisen between the death of testator & the date of the grant, to pltfs., in trust for the persons entitled to the personal estate. To a declaration on this grant, averring that the co. held & enjoyed the land, & took & had & received to their use the rents & profits of the land from testator's death to the date of the grant, & alleging the non-payment to pltfs., as a breach, & also to a count, alleging that the Crown, being entitled by escheat, had granted to pltfs. the rents due from defts., defts. pleaded, as an equitable defence, that testator, by will, appointed P. his exor. in India, who agreed with the officers of the co. to grant a lease of the property, & they, without the co.'s knowledge, entered into occupation, & the rent was paid, to the date of the grant, by the Govt. of India, to P. during his life, &, after his death, to T., his exor., & that the Govt. of India & the co. were ignorant of the fact that the will of testator was invalid, & that the property had escheated to the Crown or to the co., & that notwithstanding pltfs. were aware of such payment, they were now suing deft. for the amount of such rents, & that the parties interested in the will were the same persons as those represented by pltfs., & that the co. were induced to make the grant sued upon in consequence of, & upon the faith of, the statements in a petition, on behalf of pltfs. setting out all the facts, & alleging that the Crown had refused to entertain any memorial as to the escheated property until the concurrence of the co. had been obtained, & which petition stated, among other things, that T. was then in possession of the rents & profits; & the plea averred that the directors, at the time of the grant, had no knowledge that the co. had been in possession:—Held: the plea was an answer to the action.—BILLING v. EAST INDIA CO. (1861), 31 L. J. Ex. 240.

5. Forgetfulness.] — A lease contained covenant not to underlet without consent in writing of lessor first obtained, but such consent not to be withheld arbitrarily. Lessee's solr. prepared an underlease, but omitted to look at the head-lease & no lessor's consent had been obtained:—Held: this was not a mistake which equity would relieve against but was due to negligence or forgetfulness, which was not included in the principle of exemption.

Now, I can find no definition of what "mistake" is; but if you treat mistake in its ordinary sense in the English language, is mere forgetfulness mistake? Can you, in English, say, "I forgot?" & is that the same thing as saying "I was mistaken?" I think not. Both those questions depend on something happening in the mind of the person, & you have to see what it is that happens in his mind. If he merely forgets, he does not assume that one state of things exists whereas some other state of things exists; it is mere passive state of mind; he has forgotten—he has not thought that one thing was in existence, whereas something else was in existence. I should say that mere forgetfulness is not mistake at all in ordinary language. I cannot find any decision in Cts. of Equity which has ever stated that mere forgetfulness is mistake against which equity would relieve (LORD ESHER, M.R.).

It is an easily arguable question whether mere forgetfulness of such a covenant, even if not negligent, can properly be called mistake. The case of Kelly v. Solari, No. 487, post, however, & the observations of LORD BLACKBURN in Brownlie v. Campbell, No. 249, post, establish that in an action to recover money paid by mistake it is sufficient to prove that at the time of payment the person paying was actually ignorant that the money was not due although he had the means of knowledge, & it was owing to his own carelessness or forgetfulness that he was in fact ignorant. . . . I feel great difficulty in saying that if this be mistake at law it would not be considered mistake in equity (KAY, L.J.).—BARROW v. ISAACS & SON, [1891] 1 Q. B. 417; 60 L. J. Q. B. 179; 64 L. 6. ——.]—In a lease for years the lessees covenanted not to underlet, assign, or part with the possession of the premises, or any part thereof, without the consent in writing of the lessors, such consent not to be unreasonably withheld. The lease contained a power to re-enter upon breach of any of the covenants. The lessees, without asking for the consent of the lessors, underlet a part of the premises to a tenant who already occupied under the lessors, & to whom no objection could have been reasonably taken. In an action by the lessors to recover possession of the premises for breach of covenant:—Held: the fact that the breach of covenant had been committed through forgetfulness, or because the lessees thought it unimportant, did not form a ground for giving them equitable relief against forfeiture for breach of the covenant, & pltfs. were entitled to succeed in the action.—EASTERN TELEGRAPH CO., LTD. v. DENT, [1899] 1 Q. B. 835; 68 L. J. Q. B. 564; 80 L. T. 459; 15 T. L. R. 296; 43 Sol. Jo. 366, C. A.

7. ——.] — (1) An appointment by deed poll, made in entire forgetfulness by the appointor of an earlier appointment to the same person, may be rescinded & set aside on the ground of mistake.

(2) If the ct. comes to the conclusion that pltf. is entitled to relief, then whether the proper relief be reformation or rescission is really immaterial because whatever is the proper & necessary relief the ct. is bound to give it (EVE, J.).

(3) It seems to me that when a person has forgotten the existence of a pre-existing fact & assumes that such fact did not pre-exist, he is labouring under a mistake & he acts on the footing that the fact really did not pre-exist. I should have thought a man makes a mistake in forgetting an existing fact quite as much as he does in assuming a state of things to exist which does not in fact exist (EVE, J.).

(4) I think that it would be a wise expedient if there was now indorsed on the original settlement a note of the three appointments which have been made & which stand & also a note of the appointment with which I am now dealing & a copy of the order which I am now making rescinding that last appointment, & I so direct (EVE, J.).—HOOD OF AVALON (LADY) v. MACKINNON, [1909] 1 Ch. 476; 78 L. J. Ch. 300; 100 L. T. 330; 25 T. L. R. 290; 53 Sol. Jo. 269.

Annotation:—As to (1) Apld. Ellis v. Ellis (1909), 26 T. L. R. 166.

8. ——.]—A husband transferred securities of large value to his wife intending them as a gift to her absolutely. When he made the gift he knew of his marriage settlement, but did not realise that the gift would come within the operation of a clause therein under which his wife covenanted to settle all after acquired property. It having been decided that the gift came within the operation of that clause, the husband brought this action for the purpose of obtaining a revocation of the gift upon the ground that it was made under a mistake of fact:—Held: the gift being voluntary, & having been made under a mistake of fact, the husband was entitled to have it set aside.

Here there was a mistake of fact in this, that when the husband thought that he was giving the securities to his wife the gift was in reality hit by a document which the donor had at the moment forgotten & the effect of which he had probably never realised at all (WARRINGTON, J.). —ELLIS v. ELLIS (1909), 26 T. Part II.—Mistake of Law.

SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

9. Distinction between mistake of law & fact —Not clearly defined.]—(1) A ct. of equity will not direct payments made under a mistaken construction of a doubtful clause in a settlement to be refunded, after many years of acquiescence by all parties, & after the death of one of the authors of the settlement, especially where subsequent family arrangements have proceeded on the footing of that construction.

(2) I do not feel it necessary to argue, upon the present question, the distinction between payment made in error of law & in error of fact. The distinction, it may be observed, is somewhat more easy to lay down in general terms than to follow out in particular cases, even as regards the application of the rule, admitting it to be a correct one; & I think I could, without much difficulty, put cases in which a ct. of justice, but especially a ct. of equity, would find it an extremely hard matter to hold by the rule, & refuse to relieve against an error of law (LORD BROUGHAM, C.).—CLIFTON v. COCKBURN (1834), 3 My. & K. 76; 40 E. R. 30, L. C.

Annotation :—As to (2) Consd. Rogers v. Ingham (1876), 3 Ch. D. 351.

10. —— ——.]—(1) In the absence of special agreement simple interest only can be charged in a mtge. account. Where such mtge. account had been settled on the footing of compound interest with half yearly rents, both parties wrongly understanding the mtge. deed to require the same: —Held: such settled account might be re-opened.

(2) Undoubtedly there are cases in the cts. of common law in which it has been held that money paid under a mistake of law cannot be recovered, & it has been further held that, under certain circumstances, the giving credit in account may be treated as so far equivalent to payment as to prevent sums wrongly credited being made the subject of set-off. But in equity the line between mistakes in law & mistakes in fact has not been so clearly & sharply drawn (per CUR.).—DANIELL v. SINCLAIR (1881), 6 App. Cas. 181; 50 L. J. P. C. 50; 44 L. 21. —— —— Plaintiff's conduct determined by mistake—Necessity for proof.]—A husband survived his wife, who was one of several equitable tenants in common. He was advised by counsel that he had no title as tenant by the curtesy, his wife never having been in possession, & that if he intended to set up such a title, he ought not to sue with his infant daughter in a partition suit which was then in contemplation. The suit was nevertheless instituted by him as the next friend of the daughter & in 1830 a decree was obtained. A partition was made under the decree, & the legal estate in the daughter's share conveyed to the use of the father during the infancy of the daughter, in trust for her maintenance, & afterwards to her own use in fee. The daughter attained twenty-one in 1843 & married in 1847. In 1852 the father filed a bill to be relieved from the trusts on the ground of mistake, & to have his title as tenant by the curtesy established:—Held: (1) length of time & acquiescence, & the marriage of the daughter, although without the father's consent, before the father disputed the daughter's title, constituted a sufficient answer to the suit. (2) the ct. had power to relieve against mistakes in law as well as against mistakes in fact; but where relief was sought against the consequences of mistakes in law, the ct. must be satisfied that pltf.'s conduct had been determined by those mistakes.

The ground on which he founds his title to the relief is, that in the year 1826 he was erroneously advised that his equitable title could not be maintained; & I assume that the advice so given to him was erroneous, & that this ct. has power, as I feel no doubt that it has, to relieve against mistakes in law as well as against mistakes in fact. . . . Parties may be erroneously advised as to the law, but they may be told on what circumstances the question of law depends, & in what mode it may be tried, & they may determine that, whether the advice which they have received be well or ill founded, they will give up the question in favour of the party with whom it arises. Cases of this nature, therefore, require the most careful examination, & particularly when they arise between parent & child (TURNER, L.J.).—STONE v. GODFREY (1854), 5 De G. M. & G. 76; 2 Eq. 22. —— ——.]—(1) Mistake as to a contract is a ground for equitable relief, but it must be a mistake in fact, not in law.

Mistake is undoubtedly one of the grounds for equitable interference & relief, but then it must be a mistake, not in matter of law, but a mistake of fact. The construction of a contract is clearly matter of law; & if a party acts upon a mistaken view of his rights under a contract, he is no more entitled to relief in equity than he would be to recover at law (LORD CHELMSFORD, C.).

(2) Mutual mistake as to its construction will not entitle either party to relief in equity.

(3) Where the law has declared the construction of a contract, a ct. of equity will not interfere to aid either of the parties merely on the ground of their own or their agents' dealings under it, for that would be to make a new contract, which can only be done by mutual consent, by persons properly authorised & in due form.—MIDLAND GREAT WESTERN RY. (2) The claim . . . can stand only on the ground of a common mistake. But then the question arises, whether the parties can be replaced in their original situation; & this creates an insuperable difficulty . . . the claim of the Era Society must, therefore, be disallowed (PAGE WOOD, V.-C.).—Re SAXON LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY (1862), 2 John. & H. 408; 32 L. 24. —— —— Necessity for proof of mistake.]—A mistake in law, in order to be relieved against, must be distinctly stated & proved in the bill, & on the evidence.

The ct. no doubt will relieve against mistake, & that without reference to the manner in which the legal maxim was construed in the House of Lords in the case referred to, Cooper v. Phibbs, No. 27, post, but in order to found relief on the ground of mistake, it must be alleged & proved in such manner as to satisfy the ct. that there was such mistake (BACON, V.-C.).—KILVINGTON v. PARKER (1872), 21 W. R. 121.

25. —— ——.]—There being a dispute on the construction of a will as to how a fund should be divided between two legatees, both parties took counsel's advice, & the exor. divided the fund in accordance with such advice, the dissatisfied legatee assenting in order to avoid litigation. Two years afterwards the dissatisfied legatee filed a bill against the exor. & the other legatee to have the will construed by the ct., & the money received by the other legatee repaid:—Held: as the fund had been divided by consent with a perfect knowledge of the facts on both sides, & as the mistake, if any, was a mistake of law, the suit could not be maintained.

There is no doubt as to the rule of law that money paid with a full knowledge of all the facts, although it may be under a mistake of law on the part of both parties, cannot be recovered back; & I think it is equally clear that, as a general rule, the ct. of equity did not, in such cases, interfere with the cts. of law. Nothing, in my opinion, would be more mischievous than for us to say that money paid, for instance, under a mercantile contract, according to the construction which the parties themselves put upon that contract, might, years afterwards, be recovered, because perhaps some ct. of justice, upon a similar contract, gave to it a different construction from that which the parties had put on it. I think there is no doubt that the rule at law is in itself an equitable & just rule which is not interfered with by cts. of equity; but, on the other hand, I think that, no doubt, as was said by TURNER, L.J., "This ct. has power, as I feel no doubt that it has, to relieve against mistakes in law as well as against mistakes in fact," in Stone v. Godfrey, No. 21, ante, that is to say, if there is any equitable ground which makes it, under the particular facts of the case, inequitable that the party who received the money should retain it (MELLISH, L.J.).—ROGERS v. INGHAM (1876), 3 Ch. (2) It is said "Ignorantia juris haud excusat"; but in that maxim the word "jus" is used in the sense of denoting general law, the ordinary law of the country. But when the word "jus" is used in the sense of denoting a private right, that maxim has no application. Private rights of ownership is a matter of fact; it may be the result also of matter of law; but if parties contract under a mutual mistake & misapprehension as to their relative & respective rights, the result is, that that agreement is liable to be set aside as having proceeded upon a common mistake (LORD WESTBURY).—COOPER v. PHIBBS (1867), L. Applt. made resp. an offer of his entailed estates at a certain price by a letter which contained this stipulation, "The sale is made subject to the ratification of the ct." The offer was accepted. This offer & acceptance, according to their proper construction, constituted an absolute & unconditional sale of the entailed estates:—Held: applt. could not claim to have the contract reduced merely because he understood it to be other than it really was.

I think it may be safely said that, in the case of onerous contracts reduced to writing, the erroneous belief of one of the contracting parties, in regard to the nature of the obligations which he has undertaken, will not be sufficient to give him the right [to rescind] unless such belief has been induced by the representations, fraudulent or not of the other party to the contract (LORD WATSON).

They were allotted to her & notice of the allotment communicated to her. Knowing that she was on the register of members she dealt with the shares, selling a portion of them & voting at a meeting of the co. in respect of the remainder. About twelve months after she had agreed to take these shares, a decision of the Ct. of Appeal throwing doubt on the validity of an issue at a discount came to her knowledge, & shortly afterwards, when the co. proposed to make a new issue at a discount, she wrote to the co. that she had been advised that the issue would be illegal & that she should, if necessary, take steps to oppose it. About five months later, i.e. on May 10, 1888, the Ct. of Appeal decided that the issue of shares at a discount was invalid. On June 5 S. wrote to the co. referring to this decision, & desiring the co. to remove her name from the register: & on Nov. 15 she applied to the ct. by motion for rectification of the co.'s register by removal therefrom of her name, & this was granted by the judge:—Held: there was evidence to show that she had agreed to become a member of the co., & had assented to being on the register; there never was any mistake by her as to the facts,

36. —— Construction of deed—Annuity subject to income tax.]—By indenture made in 1885, after reciting a decree for judicial separation & an order of the Divorce Ct. directing the husband to pay the wife permanent alimony at the rate of £200 per annum, the husband covenanted with the wife that he should in substitution for the permanent alimony directed by the order pay to her during her life the sum of £200 per annum subject to a provision that if he should make default in so doing the wife should be at liberty to enforce payment by process under the order as well as by action on the covenant, the intention being that the order should be a collateral & additional security for the covenant thereinbefore contained. The husband died in 1907, having by his will bequeathed his residuary estate to his exors. & trustees upon certain trusts in favour of his four sons, one of whom subsequently died, having bequeathed his one-fourth share to the wife absolutely. The husband during his lifetime, & his exors. & trustees after his death, had paid the wife's annuity in full without deducting income tax:—Held: past overpayments in respect of income tax having been made under a mistake of law were not recoverable as a debt from the wife & could not be deducted either from future payments of the annuity or from the wife's share in the residuary estate of the husband.—Re HATCH, HATCH v. HATCH, [1919] 1 Ch. 351; 88 L. 51. —— ——.] — The children of J., a deceased remainderman, insisted as against their uncle C., a prior tenant for life in possession, that they were entitled, under the terms of a settlement, to have their portions raised from the death of their father in 1831. Some discussion took place, & a bill was filed by them. An arrangement was come to by deed, which, proceeding on the foundation of the validity of the claim, compromised the amount of arrears of interest, & settled the amount of the future interest which thereby engaged to pay. It having been afterwards determined, in another suit, that on the true construction of the settlement the claim of the children was unfounded, instituted a suit to set aside the deed:—Held: if the right to have the portions raised in 1831 had formed one of the matters compromised, the transaction could not be disturbed, although the claim of the children, had turned out to be wholly unfounded; but the ct., having arrived at the conclusion, that the parties had all proceeded on the foundation of the children's claim being unquestionable, & that all that had been compromised was the amount of arrears payable on that foundation, set aside the deed.—LAWTON v. CAMPION (1854), 18 Beav. 87; 23 L. 56. —— —— Doubtful construction of settlement.]—CLIFTON v. COCKBURN, No. 9, ante.

57. —— —— Doubtful construction of grant.]—(1) Where, in the making of an agreement between two parties, there has been a mutual mistake as to their rights, occasioning an injury to one of them, the rule of equity is in favour of interposing to grant relief. The Ct. of Equity will not, if such a ground for relief is clearly established, decline to grant relief merely because, on account of the circumstances which have intervened since the agreement was made, it may be difficult to restore the parties exactly to their original condition.

(2) What is the nature of a mistake & what has been the cause of it will be considered in determining whether relief ought to be granted. The rule ignorantia juris neminem excusat applies where the alleged ignorance is that of a well-known rule of law, but not where it is that of a matter of law arising upon the doubtful construction of a grant. In the latter case it is not decisively a ground for refusing relief.

(3) Acquiescence in what has been done will not be a bar to relief where the party alleged to have acquiesced has acted, or abstained from acting, through being ignorant that he possessed rights which would be available against that which he permitted to be enjoyed.

Resp. urges . . . that the subsequent dealings of the parties with the property prevent their being restored to their former position. . . . If there existed a clear ground of mistake which in itself would have entitled applt. to set the agreement aside . . . I should be unwilling to believe that equity would refuse its aid on account of transactions respecting the exchanged properties which it would not be difficult to adjust so as to place the parties in a position in which they would receive little or no prejudice from what had been done after the exchange (LORD CHELMSFORD).—BEAUCHAMP (EARL) v. WINN (1873), as reported in L. SUB-SECT. 3.—MISTAKE AS TO IDENTITY OF OTHER PARTY.

64. General rule.]—Jurists have laid down, as I think rightly, the test to be applied as to whether there is such a mistake as to the party as is fatal to there being any contract at all, or as to whether there is an intention to contract with a de facto physical individual, which constitutes a contract that may be induced by misrepresentation so as to be voidable but not void. It depends on a distinction to be looked for in what has really happened. Pothier, Traité des Obligations, section 19, lays down the principle thus, in a passage adopted by FRY, J., in Smith v. Wheatcroft, No. 71, post: "Does error in regard to the person with whom I contract destroy the consent & annul the agreement? I think that this question ought to be decided by a distinction. Whenever the consideration of the person with whom I am willing to contract enters as an element into the contract which I am willing to make, error with regard to the person destroys my consent & consequently annuls the contract. . . . On the contrary, when the consideration of the person with whom I thought I was contracting does not enter at all into the contract, & I should have been equally willing to make the contract with any person whatever as with him with whom I thought I was contracting, the contract ought to stand" (LORD HALDANE).—LAKE v. SIMMONS, [1927] A. 72. —— Contracts induced by misrepresentation & fraud.]—L. was a manufacturer in Ireland; Alfred Blenkarn, who occupied a room in a house looking into Wood Street, Cheapside, wrote to L., proposing a considerable purchase of L.'s goods, & in his letter used this address: "37 Wood Street, Cheapside," & signed the letters, without any initial for a Christian name, with a name so written that it appeared to be "Blenkiron & co." There was a respectable firm of that name "W. Blenkiron & co." carrying on business at 123 Wood Street. L. sent letters & afterwards supplied goods, the letters, the goods & the invoices accompanying the goods, being all addressed to "Messrs. Blenkiron & co.," 37 Wood Street." The goods were received by Blenkarn at that place, & disposed of to the defts., who were entirely ignorant of the fraud:—Held: no contract was made with Blenkarn, even a temporary property in the goods never passed to him, so that he never had a possessory title which he could transfer to defts., who were consequently liable to the pltfs. for the value of the goods.—CUNDY v. LINDSAY (1878), 3 App. Cas. 459; 38 L. 73. —— ——.]—In 1895 defts., who were trustees of a Congregational chapel, put up for sale by public auction a building, which had formerly been used as their chapel. The conditions of sale imposed no restrictions on the user of the building. After the sale C. made an offer for the building, but defts. declined to accept it, on the ground that it was made on behalf of a committee of Roman Catholics, who intended to use the building as a Roman Catholic place of worship, & defts. objected to sell for that purpose. The committee then told pltf., who was the manager of a mineral water co., that if he could get the property they would buy it of him at £100 profit. Pltf.'s solrs. wrote to defts.' agent, making an offer for the property "on behalf of our client, the manager of the E. Mineral Water co." After some negotiations, a contract was signed by defts. for sale of the building to pltf. at £1,025 a price less than C.'s offer. No direct statement was made that pltf. was buying for the co., but it was admitted that defts., during the negotiations, believed that he was, & that pltf. knew it. Pltf. signed the contract as principal without protest from defts.' agent. Defts. refused to complete on the ground that pltf. was buying as agent, for the Roman Catholic committee, to whom he knew they would not sell, & had obtained the contract by misrepresentation:—Held: pltf. was not buying as agent for the Roman Catholic committee, but for himself with a view to resell to them at a profit; the misrepresentation as to the Mineral Water co. was immaterial because the vendors did not care whether they sold to the co. or pltf., & as between them no consideration of the person with whom they were contracting entered as an element into the contract.—NASH v. DIX (1898), 78 L. 74. —— ——.]—If, in negotiations for a contract, an agent made a false representation as to the name of his principal, knowing that, if he disclosed the true name the other party would not enter into the contract, the ct. will not order specific performance of the contract.

A. signed a contract for the sale of a house to B. Before signing he asked, "Are you buying for C. or his nominess?" B. answered "No." He was, in fact, buying for nominees of C. to whom he afterwards assigned the contract. 75. —— ——.]—Shortly before Nov. 1895, B. took steps with a view to becoming a fellow of an old-established society called "The Auctioneers' Institute of the United Kingdom." In Nov. 1895, X., an officer of a recently incorporated society, with unlimited liability, named "The Institute of Auctioneers & Valuers," called on B. & asked him to become a member of it. B. believed the new society to be the old one, & in this belief which was known to & fostered by X., B. applied for membership in the new society, & received a certificate of membership. In answer to his subsequent inquiries of the new society, untruthful statements were made to B. which resulted in his remaining in his error as to the identity of the society:—Held: the principle of Cundy v. Lindsay, No. 72, ante, applied; there was not even a voidable contract to become a member, but no contract at all.—Re INTERNATIONAL SOCIETY OF AUCTIONEERS & VALUERS, BAILLIE'S CASE, [1898] 1 Ch. 110; 67 L. SUB-SECT. 4.—MISTAKE AS TO IDENTITY OF SUBJECT-MATTER.

A. When Contract Ambiguous.

(a) In General.

76. General rule—Contract not enforceable.]—(1) Upon the ambiguous terms of a contract, as including or excluding the timber, the purchaser's bill for specific performance dismissed; & having throughout insisted upon his construction, he was not permitted to compel the vendor to convey upon the terms he originally offered.

If there is such a degree of doubt & ambiguity, that the ct. can come to no other conclusion, than that the parties did not rightly understand, what the one meant to buy, & the other to sell, & upon that ground of mistake the one has been let off, that is a ground for refusing in a ct. of equity to perform a contract, the effect of which must be so much injustice to one party or the other (PLUMER, V.-C.).

(2) The Master of the Rolls in forming that conclusion adopts LORD THURLOW'S opinion in Calverley v. Williams, Williams v. Calverley, No. 159, post, & seems to think, the consequence of such a mistake would be, that in reality there was no agreement between them; that, misunderstanding each other, the one proposing to buy one thing, the other to sell another, a contract, so founded in mistake, cannot consistently with justice be executed (PLUMER, V.-C.).

(3) The rule, admitting evidence in those cases, is intelligible & clear. It is admitted, not to vary an agreement, as it is expressed open to no objection, & therefore upon the letter binding, but to show circumstances of fraud; making it unconscientious in the party, who so obtained it, to insist upon, & unjust in the ct. to decree, the performance. Fraud is not the only head, upon which parol evidence may be received, &, if made out satisfactorily, a specific performance may be refused. Upon clear evidence of mistake or surprise, that the parties did not understand each other, it is introduced, not to explain, or alter, the agreement, but consistently with its terms to show circumstances of mistake or surprise, making a specific performance, as in the case of fraud, unjust; & therefore not conformable to the principles, upon which a ct. of equity exercises this jurisdiction (PLUMER, V.-C.).—CLOWES v. HIGGINSON (1813), 1 Ves. & B. 524; 35 E. R. 204.

78. —— Bill of lading applicable to two charterparties.]—A charterparty was entered into in London on June 17, 1872, between pltf., as master of a ship lying at London, & R., a ship-broker, to carry 407 tons of iron from H. to G., at freight of 7*s.* 3*d.* per ton. Freight to be paid in London on signing bills of lading, the owner or master to have an absolute lien for freight. On the following day L. chartered the ship to deft. at 8*s.* per ton for the same amount of iron. The charter contained similar clauses as to freight & lien, & the following clause at the end: "The brokerage of 5 per cent. is due on the execution of this charter to R. by whom the vessel is to be entered & cleared at the port of loading." Though deft. thought he was treating with L. as broker for the ship, L. had no authority in fact to act as broker for pltf., or to receive the freight; & neither pltf. nor deft. knew of the charter entered into by the other. The cargo having been put on board by deft., the master signed bills of lading making it deliverable to consignees or assigns, "they paying freight for the said goods as per charterparty." Pltf. did not demand the freight on signing the bills of lading. The cargo was duly delivered at the port of discharge; & in the meantime L. obtained payment of the freight of 8*s.* per ton from deft., & afterwards stopped payment, leaving the 7*s.* 3*d.* per ton unpaid to pltf. Pltf. having sued deft. for the 7*s.* 3*d.* per ton for the carriage of the iron:—Held: pltf. could not recover; for pltf. & deft. never were ad idem, & consequently there was no express contract between them; & under the circumstances, no contract to pay reasonable freight for the carriage could be implied on the shipment of the goods.—SMIDT v. TIDEN (1874), L. R. 9 Q. B. 446; 30 L. T. 891; 22 W. R. 913; 2 Asp. M. L. C. 307; sub nom. SCHMIDT v. TIDEN, 43 L. J. Q. B. 199.

79. Admissibility of evidence — To identify subject-matter intended.]—Deft., by a written contract, agreed to sell the pltf. 60 tons of "Ware potatoes," at £5 a ton. It appeared in evidence that in the neighbourhood three qualities of potatoes were known, "Wares, Middlings, & Chats," Wares being the largest & best:—Held: evidence was not admissible to show that pltf. had in fact contracted for the sale to him of a particular kind of Ware potatoes, viz. "Regent's Wares," while those offered to him by deft. were of an inferior kind, viz. "Kidney Wares."

This is not a latent ambiguity. A latent ambiguity is where you show that words apply equally to two different things or subject-matters, & then evidence is admissible to show which of them was the thing or subject-matter intended (ALDERSON, B.).—SMITH v. JEFFRYES (1846), 15 M. & W. 561; 15 L. J. Ex. 325; 7 L. T. O. S. 231; 153 E. R. 972.

80. —— ——.]—By a written agreement, pltf. undertook to do work for deft. on the houses "in South Street and Southampton, Street." It appeared that, at the date of the agreement, deft. had land & houses in South Street, but had nothing in Southampton Street:—Held: the agreement being unambiguous, evidence was not admissible to show that the word "and" was inserted by mistake; & it was a misdirection to leave it to the jury to say what was the intention of the parties.

There are numerous cases to show that parol evidence may be received for the purpose of explaining what the parties to an agreement meant; but that is only where there is some ambiguity on the face of it. Here, there was none (WILDE, C.J.).—HITCHIN v. GROOM (1848), 5 C. B. 515; 17 L. J. C. P. 145; 10 L. T. O. S. 346; 136 E. R. 979.

81. Application of rule—Misdescription in date of bill of exchange.]—It appears upon the evidence that the bill accepted by pltf. was drawn & dated on Oct. 25; & it is contended that deft.'s promise is confined to indemnifying pltf. in respect of a bill dated Oct. 24 & cannot charge him in respect of a bill of a different date. But I think the substance of the transaction was a promise on the part of deft. to stand half the loss that might arise by reason of pltf. having lent his name to Read on a bill for £110 & that the bill is sufficiently identified. Although there is a falsa demonstratio in one respect the rest of the surrounding circumstances are abundantly sufficient in my judgment to identify the subject matter of the contract & effect must be given to the substance of the transaction (ERLE, C.J.).—WAY v. HEARN (1862), 13 C. Applt., the mistake being discovered, claimed that the premium should be £105, as the lease of the other premises was not "about four years," but seven years unexpired:—Held: the words "about four years" were dominant words & were not inserted in the agreement merely as a statement of belief which resp. was not entitled to rely on.—WATKINSON v. WILSON (1911), 55 Sol. up of more than one part, & one part is true & the other false, there, if the part which is true describes the subject with sufficient legal certainty, the untrue part will be rejected as falsa demonstratio, & will not vitiate the grant or devise. In the saleroom were plans of the property, which consisted of the closes numbered 454 & 455 of the tithe map. At the back of the property were two pieces of garden ground containing together about twenty perches, not belonging to the vendors, one of which had for many years been occupied with the inn & the other with the saddler's shop, & which were hardly at all fenced off from the premises with which they were occupied. Deft., who was acquainted with the property & knew that the gardens were occupied along with the inn & saddler's shop, did not look at the plans, & bought in the belief that he was buying the whole of the property in the occupation of the tenants :—Held : the purchaser could not resist specific performance on the ground of mistake.—TAMPLIN v. JAMES (1880), 15 Ch. The contract was sealed by the corpn. in accordance with Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 174 (1). The builder assigned the benefit of the contract to a building firm & that firm sought rectification of the contract on the ground that at the time at which the builder entered into the contract he was labouring under a serious mistake :—Held : the contract expressed the intention of deft. council, having regard to the provisions of Public Health Act, 1875 (c. 55), s. 174 (1), there was no contract at all between the parties until the seal of the council was affixed to the formal contract, & the ct. had no jurisdiction to grant the relief sought. Semble : even if the parties had been labouring under a common mistake, the contract could not have been rectified.

The result is very unfortunate for pltf. & an extreme hardship on him. But can I rectify the contract so as to make it give effect to what was undoubtedly his intention when he entered into the contract ? It appears to me that I cannot. For, in the first place, it follows from what I have said that in my opinion the parties were not labouring under a mutual mistake (ROMER, J.).

There was no contract between these parties at all until the seal of the council was put to the formal contract which was entered into. That being so, I must hold that that contract, & that contract alone, expressed the intention of defts. at the time that defts.' seal was attached. If there had been an earlier parol contract between the parties, & then an attempt had been made to put that parol contract into writing, & in the course of that attempt a blunder had been made so that the written contract did not correctly represent what had been verbally agreed, there is no doubt I could have rectified the written document. But where, as here, there is no precedent contract between the parties, I cannot see that I have any jurisdiction to make a different contract between the parties from the only one which exists, merely because I come to the conclusion that both parties previously to making that contract had intended to make a different one (ROMER, J.).

I need hardly say that in so deciding I do not in the least wish to revive the old suggestion made some years ago that one could never rectify a written contract for the sale of lands so as to conform with a previous parol contract. It is now, I think, settled that in such a case the ct. can rectify the written contract, & there is nothing in Stat. Frauds to prevent it from being done. My difficulty here is not that we have a parol contract between the parties which could not be enforced. The difficulty is that there was no parol contract at all, no contract of any kind at all between the parties until the contract under seal was executed (ROMER, J.).

At any rate, it has not been shown to me that defts. were labouring under any mistake, & of course the onus is upon pltf. to prove that fact, if fact it were (ROMER, J.).—HIGGINS (W.), LTD. v. NORTHAMPTON CORPN., [1927] 1 Ch. 128; 90 J. P. 82.

88. General rule — Transaction set aside.] — Pltf. has a proper ground of relief, & that on the head of mistake. Here was a will made by Isaac Wells in 1721, but that will was revoked by the settlement afterwards made in 1725. The agreement about levying a fine was founded upon a mistake, the parties taking it for granted, that there was a will in being when there was none. For which reason the acts done under that agreement must be set aside, as being founded upon a mistake (LORD HARDWICKE, C.).—MARTIN v. SAVAGE (1740), Barn. Ch. 189; 27 E. R. 608.

In fact the corn had, a short time before the date of the contract, been sold at Tunis, in consequence of getting so heated in the early part of the voyage as to render its being brought to England impossible. That covenant, therefore, was broken, if the subject of the transfer had been, at the time of the covenant, physically destroyed, or had ceased to answer the designation of a ship; but if it still bore that character, there was no breach of the covenant in question, although the ship was damaged, unseaworthy or incapable of being beneficially employed. A ship was insured by a valued time policy, & its value stated in the policy was £8,000. At the time the policy was made, but unknown to the parties, the ship had been injured in a storm, so that the expense of the repairs would have exceeded its value when repaired. During the continuance of the risk the ship was totally lost. Deft. subsequently became the purchaser of Lot 11, but the deed of conveyance to him did not contain the restrictive covenants. In 1882 pltfs., a co. for manufacturing bricks, contracted to purchase Lot 11 from deft. under conditions of sale which stated that the property was sold subject to any matter or thing affecting same, whether disclosed at the time of sale or not; & provided that any error or omission in the particulars should not annul the sale, nor entitle the purchaser to compensation. The existence of the restrictive covenants was not mentioned in the contract, but during the negotiations deft. stated that there were covenants restricting the use of the land as a brickyard, but his solr., who was present, & to whom pltfs.' solr. applied for information, stated that he was not aware of any such covenants. Pltfs. paid a deposit upon the purchase money, & having subsequently discovered that there were restrictive covenants, claimed to rescind their contract & sued deft. to recover the amount of the deposit :—Held : pltfs., if their contract with deft. were carried out would be bound by the restrictive covenants, & that the owners of the other twelve lots purchased from the original vendor would be entitled to enforce those covenants against pltfs.; pltfs. were not precluded by the terms of the conditions of sale, nor by Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c. 41), s. 3 (3), from refusing to complete the purchase, & that they were therefore entitled to recover the amount of the deposit.—NOTTINGHAM PATENT BRICK & TILE CO. v. A broker employed by pltfs. to sell Petersburg clean hemp, & by deft. to buy hemp, sold to deft., & gave him by mistake a sale note of Riga Rhine hemp, a description of hemp of a different quality from the Petersburg, & gave pltf. a note of the sale of Petersburg clean hemp :—Held : no contract for the sale of the hemp in question subsisted between the parties.—THORNTON v. Equitable plea, that the tea was bought & sold upon a sample which defts. believed to be a sample of the said tea ex the said ship, & that by the said contract defts. agreed that the tea in the said one hundred chests should be equal to the said sample; that the said sample was not a sample at all of the said one hundred chests, but was a sample of a totally different tea; & that defts. afterwards discovered that there had been a mistake respecting the said sample, & forthwith, & before pltf. had in any respect altered his position on account of the said contract having been made, gave notice of such mistake to pltfs., & that defts. would, on account of the said mistake, treat the contract as void; & the contract was entered into solely through the mistaken belief of both parties that the said sample was a sample of the one hundred chests, & would not have been entered into but for the said mistake:—Held: the plea was bad, because it failed to show that a ct. of equity would have granted a simple relief in favour of defts. against their liability to deliver the tea ex the ship S.—SCOTT v. LITTLEDALE (1858), 8 E. & B. 815; 27 L. On the printed tender defts. had asked for a tender for "Heydozone," & pltf. omitted to alter the word "Heydozone" into the word "Anite" on the tender, so as to make the tender agree with the label on the sample delivered. Defts. accepted the tender of pltf. for the supply of "Heydozone":—Held: pltf. had failed to show that the minds of the two contracting parties were not ad idem, or that defts. had misled him in any way, & consequently the contract was binding on him.—JOHNSON v. ISLINGTON UNION (1909), 73 J. 120. Alienation of dividends of separate property —Clause against anticipation.]—A married woman having personal property under a will for life & absolutely, a settlement is made of it to her separate use without power of anticipation, with a power of appointment by deed. Without adverting to the clause against anticipation, & in alleged ignorance of its existence, she & her husband grant an annuity in consideration of £215, & an order is made for payment of the dividends of her separate property to the grantee to secure the annuity, & he receives the dividends & hands over the surplus from time to time. The clause against anticipation is then discovered, & the wife petitions for discharge of the order for payment of the dividends to the grantee of the annuity, for restitution of the money received, & for costs against the grantee & his solr.:—Held: the order must be discharged, & the restitution not being pressed for, no order made upon that part of the petition, but costs given against the grantee, his solr., & her husband.—FORTY v. REAY (1855), 3 W. R. 317.

121. Sale of interest in partnership — Copyholds described as freeholds.]—Pltf. & deft. had been partners in a brewery to which a number of tied houses were attached. In an action between them an order was made for dissolution & sale by tender. By the chief clerk's certificate deft. was declared the purchaser, as being the highest bidder, of the moiety of pltf. The conditions, which were prepared by pltf.'s solr. & approved by deft.'s solr. & deft., provided that the title should be accepted as it stood, the properties being well known to both parties, & nothing was said about compensation. It subsequently transpired that certain of the properties which were to be conveyed as freeholds were copyholds. Negotiations thereupon took place between the parties & their legal advisers, &, as it was feared that there would be delay, the properties being in mtge., a conveyance was executed by pltf. in the form settled by counsel. Deft., having had to pay a large sum in respect of enfranchisement of the copyholds, took out a summons in the action, in which he asked that pltf. might be ordered to pay him one half of that sum in effect by way of compensation:—Held: the principle laid down in Mortlock v. Buller (1804), 10 Ves. 315, & Castle v. Wilkinson (1870), 5 Ch. 536, which allowed the purchaser to insist on having all the vendor could convey, with a compensation for the difference, was confined to the class of cases where the vendor knew the title & the purchaser did not, & had no application to the present case; therefore, it was unnecessary to consider whether compensation could be enforced by a purchaser after the money was paid & the conveyance executed.—HOPCRAFT v. HOPCRAFT (1897), 76 L. It being discovered that her supposed marriage was void, because at the time thereof her legal father was alive, & did not consent sale of a business the parties negotiate on the basis of an ascertained amount of liabilities, the inclusion twice, in such amount, of the same item, resulting in the purchaser assuming less in liabilities than was believed at the time of the contract, brings the case within the purview of mutual mistake as to which the ct. should grant equitable relief.—WHITAKER v. RUMBLE (Alta.), [1919] 1 W. to the marriage, the parties conceived that the settlement & recovery were void, & executed a deed of revocation, & suffered another recovery, after which the lady made a new settlement:—Held: the recovery & first settlement were valid, although made under a mistake of the situation in which the parties stood.—BOUGHTON v. SANDILANDS (1811), 3 Taunt. 342; 128 E. 125. —— Sale of goods — Mistake by buyer known by seller—Passive acquiescence of seller.]—Pltf. offered to sell to deft. oats, & exhibited a sample; deft. took the sample, & on the following day wrote to say that he would take the oats for the price of 34*s.* per quarter. Deft. afterwards refused to accept the oats, on the ground that they were new, & he thought he was buying old oats; nothing, however, was said at the time the sample was shown as to their being old, but the price was very high for new oats. The judge left to the jury the question whether pltf. had believed deft. to believe, or to be under the impression that he was contracting for old oats, & if they were of opinion that pltf. had so believed, he directed them to find for deft. The jury having found for deft.:—Held: there must be a new trial (1) (COCKBURN, C.J.) on the ground that the passive acquiescence of the seller in the self-deception of the buyer did not entitle the latter to avoid the contract; (2) (BLACKBURN, J.) on the ground that there is no legal obligation in a vendor to inform a purchaser that the latter is under a mistake not induced by the act of the vendor; & that the direction did not bring to the minds of the jury the distinction between agreeing to take the oats under the belief that they were old, & agreeing to take the oats under the belief that pltf. contracted that they were old; (3) (HANNEN, J.), on the ground that the direction did not sufficiently explain to the jury, that in order to relieve deft. from liability, it was necessary that they should find, not merely that pltf. believed deft. to believe that he was buying old oats, but that pltf. believed deft. to believe that he, pltf., was contracting to sell old oats.

If therefore in the present case pltf. knew that deft., in dealing with him for oats did so on the assumption that pltf. was contracting to sell him old oats, he was aware that deft. apprehended the contract in a different sense to that in which he meant it, & he is thereby deprived of the right to insist that deft. shall be bound by that which was only the apparent & not the real bargain (HANNEN, J.).—SMITH v. HUGHES (1871), L. This is not a mere misdescription, & even if it were by mistake, it is one of those gross mistakes, to the advantage of the party making it, which in law vitiates a contract. . . . It is immaterial whether he [pltf.] misstated it wilfully, if he stated it falsely (WILLES, J.).—WOOD v. KEEP (1858), 1 F. & F. 331, N. P.

129. —— —— ——.]—In deciding whether a purchaser is getting substantially that which he bargained for, the ct. is bound to consider every incident by which the property offered to be assured can be differentiated from that contracted for. If the sum of these incidents really alters the subject-matter, then the purchaser can repudiate the contract; if, on the other hand, the subject-matter remains unaffected or so little affected as to be substantially that which was agreed to be sold, then the purchaser must be held to his contract.

By an agreement in writing a vendor agreed to sell, & a purchaser agreed to purchase, thirteen freehold houses let on six leases for a term of ninety-nine years at ground rents amounting in the aggregate to £72. One pair of houses was described in the contract as let at one entire rent of £11 10*s.*, each of the next four pairs at one rent of £11, & the last three houses at one rent of £16 10*s.* The title shown was for twelve houses at a rent of £5 10*s.* each, & one at a rent of £6, each of such rents issuing out of & secured by one of the thirteen houses instead of the six rents described in the agreement. The agreement contained a provision that "if there be any misstatement or error in the description of the premises" no compensation should be allowed or the sale annulled. 131. —— —— As to covenants.]—It is a sufficient defence to a vendor's action for specific performance of an agreement to purchase land that the purchaser was induced or allowed to sign the agreement on the faith of an assumption that the property was not subject to any "unusually restrictive" covenants, whereas in fact it was subject to a covenant to build at the request of the original grantor, such covenant, though probably not enforceable against the purchaser, yet rendering it possible that he might be called upon to allow buildings to be erected, or be harassed by claims to that effect.

A. agreed to purchase from B. a plot of land & dwelling-house, in the neighbourhood of a large town, of which B. was mtgee., with power of sale, & which were held by his mtgor. subject to a covenant "that he, his heirs, exors., administrators, or assigns . . . would, at the request of the original grantor, his heirs or assigns, erect & build upon the said plot of land one or more dwelling-house or dwelling-houses." In the margin of the draft agreement A.'s solrs., who had not seen the deed containing the covenant, had written the following note: "We assume that the covenants . . . include nothing unusually restrictive." This assumption was not negatived by B., & the agreement was eventually signed by A. on the faith of its being correct. Upon the discovery, however, of the existence of the above covenant, A. refused to complete his purchase:—Held: in an action by B. for specific performance, A. could not be compelled to complete; since, though he probably could not be forced actively to fulfil the covenant, he might nevertheless be called upon under it to allow B. to build upon the land, or at any rate be harassed by claims to that effect or otherwise under the covenant.—ANDREW v. AITKEN (1882), 22 Ch. A. Mutual Mistake.

141. Whether ground for relief—Sale of land.]—STAPYLTON v. SCOTT, NICHOLSON v. STAPYLTON, No. 89, ante.

142. —— ——.] — On a sale of a leasehold interest of lands, described in the particulars as held for a term of twenty-three years, at a rent of £55, & as comprising a yard, one of the conditions was, that if any mistake should be made in the description of the property, or any other error whatever should appear in the particulars of the estate, such mistake or error should not annul or vitiate the sale, but a compensation should be made to be settled by arbitration. The yard was not, in fact, comprehended in the property held for the term at £55, but was held by the vendor from year to year, at an additional rent. It was essential to the enjoyment of the property leased for the twenty-three years. It did not appear that the vendor knew of the defect:—Held: this defect avoided the sale, & was not a mistake to be compensated for under the above condition; although, after the day named in the conditions for completing the purchase, & before action brought by the vendee, the vendor procured a lease of the yard for the term to the vendee, & offered it to him.—DOBELL v. HUTCHINSON (1835), 3 Ad. & El. 355; 1 Har. & W. 394; 5 Nev. & M. 145. —— Sale of goods — By auction — Mistake as to lots.]—Pltfs. instructed an auctioneer to sell by auction a number of bales of hemp & of tow. The goods were described in the auctioneer's catalogue as so many bales in different lots with the same shipping marks & without disclosing the difference in the commodities. Before the sale samples of the hemp & tow were on view in a show room on the floor of which the catalogue numbers of the lots of hemp & tow were marked in chalk opposite the respective samples, & defts.' manager examined the hemp but not the tow, as he was not intending to bid for tow. When the lots representing the tow were put up for sale in the auction room, defts.' buyer made a bid which was an extravagant price for tow, & the lots were at once knocked down to him. In an action against defts. for the price of the tow the jury found that the auctioneer intended to sell tow; that defts.' buyer intended to bid for hemp; that the auctioneer believed that the bid was made under a mistake, but that he had reasonable grounds for believing that the mistake was merely as to value; that the form of the catalogue & the negligence of defts.' manager in not more closely examining the samples at the show room & identifying them with the lots in the catalogue contributed to cause the mistake:—Held: the parties were never ad idem as to the subject-matter of the proposed sale, & there was, therefore, no contract of sale.—SCRIVEN BROTHERS & CO. v. HINDLEY & CO., [1913] 3 K. The pictures, including the Vandyck, were sold, & on the following day the borrower's wife claimed her picture. 152. Assignment of interest in residuary estate —Including fund not known to exist at time of assignment.]—H. was entitled for life to the interest of certain residuary estate, to the principal of which the wife of J. was entitled absolutely. H., being largely indebted to J., executed an indenture assigning to J. all his, H.'s, interest in the residuary estate. It was subsequently discovered that the residuary estate consisted partly of a fund, the existence of which was unknown to either of the parties at the time of the execution of the indenture. H. thereupon filed a bill which, not complaining that the indenture had been executed by fraud, sought to exclude from its operation the additional fund by treating the indenture merely as a security for the amount then due from H. The Lord Chancellor, however, dismissed the bill, holding that the words of the indenture were sufficient to pass the interest of H. in the fund in question, & that no case was made on the pleadings for reforming the instrument.—HOWKINS v. JACKSON (1850), 2 Mac. & G. 372; 2 H. & Tw. 301: 19 L. 154. Mistake as to defect in title to property conveyed—Caveat emptor.]—A. agreed to take an underlease for whatever term B. held. By mistake of B.'s solr. the underlease purported to grant a term seven years longer than that B. held. The underlease contained the usual qualified covenant for quiet enjoyment. A. entered into possession & held it until nearly the end of B.'s term. Then B.'s exors., finding out the mistake wrote to A. that they would be obliged to require him to give up possession at the end of the term which B. really held. A. procured a fresh lease from the ground landlord at an increased rent, & claimed the amount of such increased rent for the seven years as damages for misrepresentation & breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment:—Held: it was the duty of A. to look at the original lease, & not having done so he could not recover damages for the common mistake.—BESLEY v. BESLEY (1878), 9 Ch. The language of all the judgments in Palmer v. Johnson, No. 157, post, appears to treat Besley v. Besley as wrong, but that is erroneous. All that was intended, as I think, was to decide that any expressions in Besley v. Besley which laid down a principle inconsistent with that laid down in Palmer v. Johnson were wrong. It had been cited as an authority for the proposition that, in the absence of fraud, no relief for misdescription could be given after conveyance; perhaps the language in it may have been too wide; & so far, if at all, as it supported that proposition, it was overruled. When, however, the fact is looked at, that in Besley v. Besley there was no agreement for compensation the decision in that case is not inconsistent with Palmer v Johnson, & in my opinion it was rightly decided (BOWEN L.J.). Mentd. Debenham v. Sawbridge, [1901] 2 Ch. 98.

155. —— ——.] — Deft., believing his term had thirty years to run, agreed to grant an underlease for twenty-one years to pltf., nothing being said about compensation for misdescription. Pltf. did not investigate deft.'s title, & a year after the lease was granted it was discovered that deft.'s term had only fourteen years to run. Pltf. then brought this action claiming rectification of the lease & compensation:—Held: as there was no contract as to compensation, & pltf. claimed in respect of a defect in the title which he might have discovered before he took the lease, he was not entitled to any compensation after he had taken it.—CLAYTON v. LEECH (1889), 41 Ch. In return for the advance applt. was to receive interest & 37½ per cent. of the profits of resp.'s business. The contract stipulated that there should be an annual audit of resp.'s business by the firm of M. & co., accountants, & that their certificate as to the profits should be binding on both parties. For four years resp.'s books were audited by G., a member of the firm of M. & co. Subsequently applt. raised this action against resp. for a judicial account on the ground that the audits had not been in terms of the agreement in respect that the auditor did not know that his estimate of the profits was to be binding on applt. & resp. G. swore in his evidence that he did not know of this agreement, & that if he had he would have made out the account in a somewhat different form:—Held: there must be a new account taken, the auditor being unaware that his audit was to be final between the parties.—TEACHER v. CALDER, [1899] A. 157. Conveyance containing express contract for compensation—In case of mistake.]—Pltf. purchased at a sale by auction certain property belonging to deft. described in the particulars of sale as producing a net annual rental of £39, & one of the conditions of sale was, "if any error, misstatement, or omission in the particulars be discovered, the same shall not annul the sale but compensation shall be allowed by the vendor or purchaser as the case may require." After the conveyance, without any covenants, had been executed by deft. to pltf., it was discovered by pltf. that the rental of £39 was a gross rental, the net rental being considerably less:—Held: notwithstanding the error was not discovered until after the conveyance, pltf. was entitled to compensation under the conditions of sale.—PALMER v. JOHNSON (1884), 13 Q. P. agreed in writing to purchase for the sum of £2,500 "the benefit of L.'s agreement with his lessor" & he covenanted to perform all L.'s covenants in the agreement for a lease. L. admitted that this contract was erroneous. It was subsequently discovered that B. had not a freehold title to more than three-fourths of the property, & P. consequently refused to complete his purchase. L. brought an action to recover £600, the declaration stating that pltf. in the action sought to recover £500 only under the first count, the sum of £2,500 having been inserted in the agreement by mistake for £500. P. instituted this suit to have the agreement set aside, & to have the action stayed, & dealt with by the ct. On the motion for a decree:—Held: the mistake in the agreement rendered it null & void, & ordered it to be delivered up to be cancelled & deft. to pay the costs of the suit & of the action.

(2) Where a written agreement between a vendor & a purchaser did not express the intention of either of the parties, the ct., upon a bill by the purchaser against the vendor to set aside the agreement, admitted parol evidence to show that there was a mistake in the agreement as to the subject-matter of the purchase, & accordingly set the agreement aside.—PRICE v. LEY (1862), 4 Giff. 235; 32 L. 164. —— ——.] — The rule that the ct. will not interfere to rectify an instrument unless it is proved that the mistake was common to both parties, does not apply to the case of a contract which has been executed between parties in the relation of vendor & purchaser, whom it is in the power of the ct. to replace in their original position. Accordingly where, in a conveyance of messuages, the plan on the deed comprised a piece of land not intended by the vendor to be included, a decree was made to rectify the deed, an option being given to the purchaser to have his contract annulled; but, having regard to the conduct of the parties, no costs were given on either side.

With regard to costs in such cases, they must depend on the conduct of the parties. When the mistake is entirely owing to the conduct of pltf., then he must pay all the costs of the suit. When deft. has been aware of the mistake from the beginning, & refused to rectify it, then the costs must be given against him (LORD ROMILLY, M.R.).—HARRIS v. PEPPERELL (1867), L. R. 5 Eq. 1; 17 L. 172. Compromises.] — The ct. refused to set aside a contract entered into by a gas co. & a railway co. under a mistake common to both parties.

Though the law, no doubt, is that when two parties have entered into an agreement under a common mistake, it may be a ground for setting it aside, it is equally clear that if the parties are dealing with one another "at arm's length" & they choose to enter into an agreement for the settlement of rights which are in dispute & which may tend to litigation & they are dealing with one another on equal terms & there is nothing to show that either has been misled by the other, such an agreement must be upheld (WILLS, J.).—GAS LIGHT & COKE CO. v. METROPOLITAN RY. CO. (1892), 9 T. L. R. 98.

173. ——.] — A. & B., the owners of adjoining lands, the rights to which were in dispute, "in order to terminate their differences" agreed that A. should cede his asserted claim, & that B. should pay an annuity to A. B. having impeached the agreement, on the ground that A.'s claim was originally unfounded, that his consent was obtained by misrepresentation, & was founded on a mistake both of law & of fact:—Held: (1) the bonâ fide surrender of a claim, however unfounded, forms a good consideration for a compromise; (2) a general compromise is not affected by a mistake in fact, included in the subject-matter of the agreement, nor by a mistake in law, though prevailing generally at the time.—TRIGGE v. LAVALLEE (1863), 15 Moo. 174. Adjustment of accounts.] — Where parties agree to settle accounts by ascertaining the exact balance, & for that purpose obtain vouchers & give information, if it should afterwards turn out that there were errors in that account, a court of equity will open it up & set it right; but otherwise, if the parties met, not to ascertain the exact balance, but to agree to take a gross sum as such balance. In both cases, however, fraud will vitiate the settlement or compromise.—MCKELLAR v. WALLACE (1853), 8 Moo. P. C. C. 378; 5 Moo. Ind. App. 372; 1 Eq. Rep. 309; 22 L. T. O. S. 309; 14 E. R. 144, P. C.

175. ——.]—In an action for breach of a covenant to pay a certain sum for every ton of ore raised, deft. pleaded that pltf. & deft. met & examined deft.'s books, & agreed on a certain sum as the balance due to pltf., & that pltf. paid that sum before action. Pltf. replied that the accountings were erroneous, certain amounts of tonnage rent having been omitted by mistake, & that the balance agreed was erroneously agreed

179. —— No written contract.] — A. died in 1831, possessed of freehold, copyhold, & leasehold estates, & also of stock in trade & goodwill of his business, & considerable personalty ; he left a wife & two sons. He had made a will, by which, after certain provisions for his wife, he gave all his property to his two sons equally ; but this will was not admitted to probate, being incomplete. At an interview between the brothers shortly after the will had been refused probate, the elder brother declared that the invalidity of the will should make no difference, & that the property should not be "mine or thine, but ours." No agreement in writing was ever entered into ; but it appeared that, for twenty years after the death of A., the two sons carried on the partnership together, & dealt with the whole property as if it belonged to them equally ; & the widow, who survived her husband about six years, never insisted on her rights in her husband's property. In 1851 the elder brother gave his younger brother notice of dissolution of partnership. Upon bill by representatives of younger brother who had died, against elder brother :—Held : such a course of dealing had been proved as the ct. would uphold, as a family arrangement, notwithstanding there was no written, or formal contract between the parties.—WILLIAMS v. WILLIAMS (1867), 2 Ch. B. Material Facts not Honestly Disclosed.

180. Family arrangement — Information withheld.]—When parties, whose rights are questionable, have equal knowledge of facts & equal means of ascertaining what their rights really are, & they fairly endeavour to settle their respective claims among themselves, every ct. feels disposed to support the conclusions or agreements to which they may fairly come at the time, & that notwithstanding the subsequent discovery of common error.

An account between an aged tenant for life & the remainderman, who was also exor., which was settled & signed by the tenant for life, under the advice of her solr., set aside, on the ground of the executor not having furnished full information of the account being founded on an erroneous opinion of counsel as to the rights of the parties, obtained ex parte by the exor., & of the account being complicated in its form, & though professing to be made in conformity with the opinion, yet containing an addition of a purchase & sale between the parties.—PICKERING v. PICKERING (1839), 2 Beav. 31 ; 8 L. 181. Compromise — Mistake induced by misrepresentation.]—Pltf. may be entitled to relief from a contract or conveyance on the ground of ignorance & mistake, although deft. with whom he dealt, & against whom relief is sought, was also in ignorance & under mistake ; the contract or conveyance not being made upon the principle of compromising doubtful rights.

Deft. became acquainted with the fact that, under the will of a relation of pltf., an estate vested in trustees was settled, after subsisting life estate, & upon the failure of issue of the tenant for life, who had then no issue, to pltf. for life, with remainder to his issue in tail, with remainders over, & an ultimate remainder to pltf.'s brother, then deceased, & his heirs & assigns ; deft. having communicated to pltf., who was then supposed to be, & was in fact, the heir at law of his brother, the existence of such a will, in a long correspondence produced an impression on the mind of pltf., contrary to the true facts, that pltf.'s interests under the will were precarious ; that they were endangered by the conduct of the trustees & tenant for life, & could not be established without difficulty, delay & litigation ; & deft. obtained a conveyance of a moiety of the estate from pltf., deft. indemnifying pltf. against the costs of recovering the property. The ct. set aside the conveyance ; & held it was not an objection to this relief that pltf. had, throughout, the means, equally with deft., of knowing what his rights were, & of obtaining competent advice respecting them.

But if parties are ignorant of facts on which their rights depend, or erroneously assume that they know those rights, & deal with their property accordingly, not upon the principle of compromising doubts, this ct. will relieve against such a transaction (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—REYNELL v. SPRYE, SPRYE v. REYNELL (1849), 8 Hare, 222 ; 68 E. SUB-SECT. 2.—MISTAKE AS TO EFFECT OF INSTRUMENT.

204. Whether ground for relief—General rule.]—Deed set aside upon the ground of ignorance & mistake as to its purport & effect, no fraud or undue influence in obtaining its execution being alleged, & the deed itself being inconsistent with the effect contended for by the grantee under it as against pltf. Pltf. intending to assist deft., his illegitimate son, in raising money upon mtge., & to give security for him, had executed a deed which recited a contract for sale, & in consideration of £50 conveyed the equity of redemption in the property, which had been mortgaged to deft. No consideration was ever paid; & deft., who insisted that the deed was a voluntary conveyance to himself from pltf., had not questioned a subsequent sale of a portion of the property by pltf. Deed set aside & reconveyance ordered.—COX v. BRUTON (1857), 5 W. R. 544.

205. —— ——.]—To a declaration against W. & H. for not loading according to the terms of a charterparty, defts. pleaded, on equitable grounds, that they entered into the charterparty solely as agents of D. & co., & that before they signed it was agreed between pltf. & defts. that defts. were only to sign as such agents so as to bind D. & co., & were not to make themselves liable as principals for the performance of the charter; that they signed the charter in the following manner: "For D. & co., W. & H., agents," defts. & pltf. bonâ fide believing at the time that defts. having so signed would not be personally liable as charterers, notwithstanding the charter professed to be made between pltf. as owner & defts. as merchants & freighters; that defts. had power to bind D. & co. by signing the charter as their agents, & that D. & co. are bound by the charter; & that pltf. was inequitably taking advantage of the mistake in drawing the charter so as to make the defts. personally liable, contrary to the intention of pltf. & defts.:—Held: a good equitable plea.

Semble: the plea raised a good defence at law. —WAKE v. HARROP (1862), 1 H. & C. 202; 31 L. J. Ex. 451; 7 L. T. 96; 8 Jur. N. S. 845; 10 W. R. 626; 1 Mar. L. C. 247, Ex. Ch.; affg. (1861), 6 H. & N. 768.

206. —— When operation doubtful.]—A deed may be reformed so as to be plainly confined to the object intended, where its operation as it stands is doubtful. An appointment under a settlement limited the settled estates to such uses as a husband & wife should jointly appoint, but by mistake omitted to give them life estates. On discovering the error, they instructed a solr. to frame such a deed as would remedy it. The solr. prepared a deed which remedied the defect, but was framed by way of complete relimitation of the uses, & thus raised a question whether a testamentary appointment which the wife had made in the meantime, but of which the solr. was unaware, was not revoked:—Held: a proper case for reforming the deed.

The very principle of this Ct. in correcting instruments is, that the parties are to be placed in the same situation as they would have stood in if the error to be corrected had not been committed (TURNER, L.J.).—WALKER v. ARMSTRONG (1856), 8 De G. M. & G. 531; 25 L. J. Ch. 738; 27 L. T. O. S. 329; 2 Jur. N. S. 959; 4 W. R. 770; 44 E. R. 495, L. JJ.

207. —— Mistake in means of giving effect to intention.]—By a marriage settlement in 1779, lands were conveyed to the use of the husband, the settlor, for life; remainder to the wife for life; remainder to the children, as they, or the survivor, should appoint; & in default of appointment, to the heirs of the body of the wife by the husband; &, in default of such issue, the lands to stand charged with a sum of £2,000 to the wife's father, his heirs & assigns. In 1798 the husband & wife, by a deed reciting the first deed, that there was no issue of the marriage, & that they intended to bar all the estates & provisions in the former settlement, & to settle the lands to new uses thereby declared, covenanted to levy a fine for that purpose, to enure to such uses as they should appoint; &, in default of such appointment, to the use of the husband for life; remainder to trustees for a term of years; remainder to the wife for life; &, after the decease of both, to the use of the heirs & assigns of the husband; &, as to the term, upon trust to raise £2,000, & pay the same to the wife, or as she should appoint, &, in case of her death without appointment, to her next of kin. The fine did not bar the first charge. On a bill by the representative of the wife's father, who was also one of the next of kin of the wife, after the death of the husband & wife without issue or appointment, to procure both sums of £2,000 to be raised out of the settled lands:—Held: notwithstanding the recital in the deed of 1798, of the intention of the parties, that the first charge of £2,000 should be extinguished, & although such charge still remained, yet the trusts of the term for raising the second charge of £2,000 were not therefore inoperative, but the same must still be carried into execution; & both sums of £2,000 must therefore be raised.

The difficulty arises from the fact that the parties have mistaken the way of giving effect to their own intentions, correctly expressed in the deed (WIGRAM, V.-C.).—FARR v. SHERIFFE,

210. —— ——.]—By a settlement of the funds belonging to a husband & wife it was agreed that it should be lawful for the funds to be sold & the proceeds invested in the purchase of an annuity in the joint names of husband & wife, with benefit of survivorship: & if the annuity should not be purchased the whole of the funds should, in the event of the death of the husband in the lifetime of the wife, be vested in the wife & the exors. of her husband upon trust to invest the same in the purchase of a life annuity for the sole & separate use of the wife. The settlement contained a power for either party to revoke it. Upon the death of her husband his widow, who was an old lady, desired to avoid the necessity of purchasing the annuity. Upon the advice of her solr., who did not appreciate that the widow, being solely entitled to the annutiy when purchased, could call for a transfer of the capital applicable for its purchase, she executed a deed poll revoking the settlement. In an action against the exors. of her husband's will she claimed to be entitled to the funds settled by her husband, or alternatively the cancellation or rectification of the deed of revocation:—Held: pltf.'s solr. having gone beyond his instructions in ignorance of the true legal position of pltf., there would be a declaration that she was absolutely entitled to the investments representing her husband's fund, & an order for the cancellation of the deed poll.—Re WALTON'S SETTLEMENT, WALTON v. PEIRSON, [1922] 2 Ch. 509; 92 L. 212. Restriction of meaning—General covenant in deed.]—Covenant by the assignor of certain shares in a patent right that he has good right, full power, & lawful authority to assign & convey the said shares, & that he has not by any means directly or indirectly forfeited any right or authority he ever had or might have had over the same:—Held: the generality of the former words of the covenant is not restrained by the latter. If the assignees of an uncertificated bkpt. in their own names execute a deed with other creditors, whereby they, & all the creditors who may sign the said deed, release the bkpt. from all actions, suits, claims, & demands against him or his estate, & such deed be not signed by all the creditors of the bkpt., the assignees are not barred from claiming as assignees the benefit of a patent right previously obtained by the bkpt. A patent right for the exclusive exercise of an invention obtained from the Crown by an uncertificated bkpt., is affected by the previous assignment of the comrs., & vests in the assignees. An Act of Parliament, empowering such bkpt. patentee, his exors., administrators, & assigns, to assign the right to a greater number of persons than allowed by the letters patent, & declared to be a public Act, does not enable either the bkpt. or his assigns to make a better title than they could before the Act.

However general the words of a covenant may be if standing alone yet if from other covenants in the same deed it is plainly & irresistibly to be inferred that the party could not have intended to use the words in the general sense which they import, the ct. will limit the operation of the general words (LORD ALVANLEY, C.J.).—HESSE v. STEVENSON (1803), 3 Bos. & P. 565; Dav. 213. Words supplied.]—A submission empowered an arbitrator to make his award on or before a certain day, "or on some such ulterior day as he by a memorandum in writing, under his hand, to be indorsed hereon:—Held: the arbitrator had power to enlarge the time for making his award until such day as he should indorse on the submission.

By the submission, the award was "to be delivered to the parties or any of them on or before Dec. 30, next, or on such further or later day as the arbitrator, by a memorandum in writing under hand indorsed hereon," & there it stops. No one can doubt that the words "shall appoint" have by some accident been left out. The question is, whether sufficient appears on the face of the agreement to enable the ct. to supply the defect. We think there does (ALDERSON, B.).—KIRK v. UNWIN (1851), 6 Exch. 908; 2 L. M. & P. 519; 20 L. J. Ex. 345; 18 L. T. O. S. 64; 155 E. R. 815.

216. —— Mistake affecting substance of transaction.]—In order to entitle a party to rescind a contract, it is sufficient to show that there was a fraudulent representation as to any part of that which induced him to enter into the contract. But when there has been only an innocent misrepresentation, it is not ground for a rescission, unless it was such as that there is a complete difference in substance between the thing bargained for & that obtained, so as to constitute a failure of consideration. A co., already carrying the intercolonial mails under contracts with the govt. of New Zealand, issued a prospectus that they were "prepared to receive applications for new shares in order to enable the co. to perform the contract recently entered into with the govt. of New Zealand, for a monthly mail service between Sydney, New Zealand, & Panama, in correspondence with the West Indian Mail co.'s steamers between Southampton & Panama." K., induced by this statement in the prospectus, applied for & obtained some of the new shares. The contract alluded to in the prospectus had been made by the co. with the agent of the New Zealand govt., both parties bonâ fide believing that he had authority to make it; but it turned out that he had no such authority, & the govt. refused to ratify the contract:—Held: the prospectus by implication alleged that there was a binding contract, but being an innocent misrepresentation it did not entitle K. to rescind the contract under which he became a shareholder, as it did not affect the substance of the matter, K. having got shares in the very co. for which he had applied, & which shares were of considerable value.

The principle is well illustrated in the civil law as stated in the Digest. lib. 18, tit. De Contrahenda Emptione, leges 9, 10, 11. There—after laying down the general rule, that where the parties are not at one as to the subject of the contract there is no agreement & that this applies where the parties have misapprehended each other as to the corpus. . . . The answer given by the great jurists quoted are to the effect that if there be misapprehension as to the substance of the thing there is no contract; but if it be only a difference in some quality or accident, even though the misapprehension may have been the actuating motive to the purchaser, yet the contract remains binding. . . . &, as we apprehend, the principle of our law is the same as that of the civil law; & the difficulty in every case is to determine whether the mistake or misapprehension is as to the substance of the whole consideration, going, as it were, to the root of the matter, or only to some point, even though a material point, an error as to which does not affect the substance of the whole consideration (BLACKBURN, J.).—KENNEDY v. PANAMA, ETC. amounted in the whole to 249 acres. Deft.'s agent desired to let only 214 acres with this farm but he accepted pltf.'s offer without looking at the acreage included in it. He had, in fact, already let one of the closes to another person. Another tender had been made by a former tenant for the same farm as comprising 235 acres & deft.'s agent admitted in examination that he thought pltf. had tendered for the same quantity of land as the former tenant. Pltf. commenced an action for specific performance against deft., & was willing to take a lease of the 214 acres at a proportionately reduced rent:—Held: deft. must grant pltf. a lease of 214 acres at a rent reduced from £500 in the proportion of 214 to 235.

What is the effect of that mistake? . . . It appears to me that the mistake is not one which goes to the corpus with which the contract deals; it is not a mistake as to the essential terms of the contract. The Ct. of Ch. always drew a distinction between the essential & non-essential terms of a contract & allowed the incapacity to perform it in non-essential terms to be made the subject of compensation (FRY, J.).—MCKENZIE v. HESKETH (1877), 7 Ch. The mtge. deed contained a power of sale upon three months' notice, or on interest being one month in arrear. The interest being in arrear, the stock was sold under the power for £1,950 as subject to succession duty at 3 per cent. The tenant for life was then in a precarious state of health, & died within three months. It was afterwards found that only £7 was payable for succession duty. None of the purchase-money was paid except the deposit, the remainder being left on a mtge. of the stock. There was evidence that, having regard to the age & health of the tenant for life, from £100 to £200 might have been obtained for the reversion:—Held: the sale could not be set aside, either on the ground of undervalue, as there was no fraud; nor the leaving of the purchase-money on mtge.; nor the mistake as to the succession duty, that being merely a matter for compensation.—BETTYES v. MAYNARD (1883), 49 L. A proviso was also inserted "subject to approval of conditions & form of agreement by purchaser's solr. The vendors, by a mistake on their part, required the purchaser to take 42 acres at £100 per acre. The purchaser refused, & brought an action for specific performance of the contract for the sale of 36 acres, which contract the vendors repudiated:—Held: (1) the mistake did not go to the root of the contract; (2) the proviso was not a condition precedent to a complete contract.—NORTH v. PERCIVAL, [1898] 2 Ch. 128; 67 L. SUB-SECT. 2.—RESTORATION OF PARTIES TO ORIGINAL POSITION.

221. General rule — Possibility of restoration necessary.]—By agreement in writing, deft. agreed to sell, & pltf. to purchase, a piece of land, & to pay part of the purchase-money down, & the remainder on a future day; & it was agreed that pltf. should have immediate possession, & that deft. should furnish pltf. with a full & sufficient abstract of title to the land, &, upon payment of the balance of the purchase-money, a conveyance of the fee simple should be made; that all objections to, & requisitions in support of, the title, not delivered in writing in a month after the delivery of the abstract, should be deemed to be waived. Pltf. paid the deposit, & took possession of the land. Deft., in due time, delivered an abstract, containing a statement of all the deeds, etc., in his custody, power, or knowledge, but tracing the title for a period less than sixty years, & showing it to be in a trustee. No objection was made within the month. Afterwards the trustee died intestate; & it not appearing in whom the legal estate vested, pltf. gave notice that he rescinded the contract, & brought an action to recover back the deposit, &, in one count of the declaration, declared specially on the agreement, & assigned as a breach the non-delivery of a "full & sufficient abstract" of deft.'s title to the land, which was traversed by a plea. The second count was for money had & received:—Held: (1) no objection having been made within the month, the issue was satisfied by the abstract delivered, it having been a full & fair statement of all the muniments which deft. had in his possession, power, or knowledge, & a fair statement of the deduction of his title, though it did not go back sixty years.

231. —— ——.] — Lands were devised upon trust for C. for life with remainder to her husband B. for life, with remainder to their children as tenants in common in tail, with an ultimate remainder over in fee. The will contained a power to the trustee, his heirs & assigns, at the request of C. & her husband, to sell the property, & to give valid discharges to the purchaser, & to reinvest the purchase-moneys upon the trusts therein mentioned for C. & her husband & children. The trustee died in 1806, intestate as to trust estates, leaving his sister a residuary devisee, & his brother heir at law. In the same year B., the husband of the tenant for life, contracted to sell the property, & a conveyance was executed by G. who was supposed to be the devisee of the trust estates, to the purchaser, who with her consent, subsequently paid the purchase-money to B. & it was never reinvested according to the trusts of the will. B. died in 1837, C. in 1845. None of the children became aware iuntil 1848 that the trustee had died intestate, & that G. had no authority to sell the property. In 1848 a decree was made in a suit instituted shortly after the death of B. by one of the cestuis que trust against his representatives for the settlement of the claims of the cestuis que trust under testator's will against B.'s estate in respect of the purchase-money of testator's estates received by him, declaring that an estate purchased by B. with part of the purchase-money must be considered as subject to the trusts of testator's will, & that the cestuis que trust were entitled to claim against B.'s estate as creditors for any deficiency. In a suit instituted by mtgees. of C.'s life interest against the extrix. of G., G.'s estate was held liable to make good the purchase-moneys received by her permission by B. Her estate is sufficient to answer the claim. In 1851 the cestuis que trust under testator's will filed their bill against the purchaser, disputing the validity of the sale, & seeking to restrain him from setting up an outstanding term in any action of ejectment brought against him. The purchaser filed a cross bill for an injunction to restrain the cestuis que trust from taking any proceedings at law:—Held: the sale having been made under mistake by a party not authorised, bonâ fide, & for the full value, & the cestuis que trust having a remedy against the estate of G., the supposed trustee, which is solvent, & against the estate of B. who had received the purchase-money this ct. would not, after such a lapse of time & the dealings of the cestuis que trust with their shares of the purchase-money, interfere to set aside the sale, but would grant a perpetual injunction against any action at law to recover the debts; if G. had had the legal estate vested in her, the ct. would not have set aside the sale on account of the character of it, or the circumstances attending being made bonâ fide & for full value.—HOPE v. LIDDELL, LIDDELL v. NORTON (1855), 21 Beav. 183; 25 L. 234. Where restoration impossible.]—No doubt the general rule is that a buyer cannot rescind a contract of sale to get back the purchase-money unless he can restore the subject matter. . . . It certainly seems to me that, in a case of rescission for a breach of the condition that the seller had a right to sell the goods, it cannot be that the buyer is deprived of his right to get back the purchase-money because he cannot restore the goods, which, from the nature of the transaction, are not the goods of the seller at all, & which the seller, therefore, has no right to under any circumstances (SCRUTTON, L.J.).—ROWLAND v. DIVALL, [1923] 2 K. SUB-SECT. 3.—EFFECT OF MEANS OF KNOWLEDGE.

235. General rule—Right to relief not affected.]—A negotiable security given by a party in satisfaction of a liability from which he was discharged in law, in ignorance of the facts which constituted such discharge, cannot be enforced against him, though he may have had the means of knowing those facts.

Therefore, where a bill of exchange indorsed by A. for the accommodation of the drawer, was afterwards altered in a material point, with the consent of the drawer, & when the bill was at maturity, B., the then holder, made a demand upon A., who, ignorant of the alteration, though he had ample means of knowing it, gave B. a promissory note for the amount of the bill, & expenses:—Held: it was a good defence to the action on the note by B., that at the time A. gave it, he was not, in fact, aware of the alteration in the bill.

We can in fact regard the possession of the means of knowledge only as affording a strong observation to the jury to induce them to believe that the party had actual knowledge of the circumstances; but there is no conclusive rule of law that, because a party has the means of knowledge, he has the knowledge itself (TINDAL, C.J.).—BELL v. GARDINER (1842), 4 Man. & G. 11; 1 Dowl. 236. —— ——.]—Mistake of fact is not the less a ground for relief because the person who has made the mistake had the means of knowledge.

The lessee of 3 acres of land agreed in Jan. 1874, to let 1 acre to pltf. for the whole of the residue of his term, & he agreed also to sell to pltf. his interest in the whole 3 acres at any time within five years from the date of the agreement. The lease contained a covenant by the lessee not to assign the property, or to part with the possession of it, or any part of it, without the written consent of the lessor. Pltf. was not, in fact, aware of this covenant. He was let into possession of the 1 acre, & he laid out money upon it, & also upon adjoining property of his own, with the view of occupying the 2 together. The lessor was aware of this expenditure. In Oct. 1877, the lessee, without pltf.'s knowledge surrendered the lease to the lessor, in exchange for a new lease for a longer term of the 3 acres, together with other property. The new lease contained a similar covenant by the lessee not to assign, etc., without licence. In Nov. 1877, pltf. gave the lessee notice of his desire to exercise his option to purchase his interest under the original lease in the 3 acres. The lessee declined to perform his agreement, on the ground that the lessor refused to give his licence to an assignment. Pltf. brought the action against the lessee & the lessor, claiming specific performance of the agreement by the lessee, & to compel the lessor to give his licence, on the ground (inter alia) that he had acquiesced in pltf.'s expenditure, knowing that he was acting in the mistaken belief that the lessee was able to assign the property to him. It appeared that the lessor was not, when pltf.'s expenditure was incurred, aware of the existence of the lessee's covenant not to assign without licence:—Held: inasmuch as the lessor was ignorant of his own rights, & there was nothing to show that he knew that pltf. had been acting in ignorance of his legal rights, the lessor could not be compelled to give his licence to assign to pltf.—WILLMOTT v. BARBER (1880), 15 Ch. 238. Effect of negligence — Failure to examine description—Exchange of lands.]—6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 115, extended by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 31, authorises exchanges of lands on conditions therein prescribed. One of these is the written consent of the owners of the lands intended to be exchanged. The landowners of a parish determined to carry this Act into execution, & appointed a comr. for that purpose. B., one of the landowners, authorised his agent to attend for him at the meetings held for the purpose of carrying the Act into execution, but desired him not to exchange a particular wood except for woodland. N.'s lands were to be exchanged against those of B., & this restriction was communicated to N.'s agent, who, being asked to exchange another wood against the wood in question, said that his principal had no power to do so. This answer was communicated to B., who took no further notice of the matter. The restriction on the authority of B.'s agent did not appear to have been brought to the knowledge of the comr. The comr. prepared & B. signed a written consent

K. Effect of negligence — Failure to examine description.]—In an action claiming rectification of a deed on the ground among others of mutual mistake, even assuming the existence of mutual mistake calling for the reformation of the instrument, the negligence of pltf. in not examining his deed to satisfy himself that it correctly described the property he intended to purchase, & his failure to discover the error relied on until about four years after the conclusion of the transaction, present serious obstacles in the way of

to ratify the exchange of certain closes belonging to him, & designated in the consent by numbers. Among the closes thus designated was the wood in question, but the number by which it was referred to in the consent, & in a map & plan previously submitted to B.'s inspection was not the same as that which it bore in B.'s private map of his own estate. A comparison of the two maps, or the reading of the plan sent with the comrs.' map, would have shown B. that the wood in question was included in his consent. The comr. allotted the lands to be exchanged, &, among them, included this wood, but did not give woodland for it. Possession of the exchanged lands, & of this wood, although the award of the comr. had not been formally executed, was delivered by B.'s agent to N., who immediately began to exercise acts of ownership over it. B. some time afterwards, discovered what had been done, & brought ejectment against N. for the wood. N. filed his bill in Chancery to restrain B. from proceeding with the action, & to compel him to perfect the exchange; & B. filed his bill to prevent the comr. from executing the award, alleging that the consent given to him had been signed in mistake:— Held: N. was entitled to an injunction, as prayed by his bill, & B. had no equity on which to ask for the interference of the ct. in his favour. —BEAUFORT (DUKE) v. NEELD (1845), 12 Cl. & Fin. 248; 8 E. 239. —— —— Building contract.]— A builder made a tender, undertaking to sign a contract to execute for a certain sum certain works described in some rough sketches & verbal explanations of an architect. The architect subsequently sent by special messenger to the builder a contract to perform for the sum named the works delineated & described in certain plans & specifications thereto annexed. These differed materially from the works described in the rough sketches & verbal explanations on which the builder had made his tender. The builder, however signed the contract, without any examination, & completed the works according to the plans annexed to it. He then filed a bill, claiming to have an account taken of the works executed by him on the basis on which he had made his tender:—Held: as the mistake under which he signed the contract was due to his own negligence & he had not taken proceedings for rectifying the contract as soon as he discovered it, he was not entitled to any relief in this respect. —KIMBERLEY v. DICK (1871), L. 249. —— —— Unless on ground of fraud.]—Articles of roup of certain lands expressly stipulated that the purchaser was to take the property with all risks of error in the particulars. A. agrees by missives attached to the articles of roup to buy the estate, & conveyance was executed containing a clause of warrandice in the usual general terms. Neither the disposition nor the articles of roup contained any information as to the tenure of the lands. The particulars of sale contained this statement : "The lands hold of the Crown," & in answer to an inquiry made before the sale on behalf of A. as to the nature of the holding, the sellers' agents referred A. to the note of particulars, adding : "The proprietors," B. & C., "are not entered with the Crown, but you are aware the Crown never asks for an entry." The foundation for the belief that the lands were held direct of the Crown rested on a decree of tinsel, dated 1813, directed against the heir of line of the last superior, & a decree of forfeiture of the mid-superiority, dated 1849, followed by a Crown charter. From 1813 there had been no assertion of a contrary right. Immediately before the sale the agents for D., the disponee of the last superior, wrote to B. & C.'s agents claiming the right of mid-superiority, but this claim on its being disputed & not further persevered with, B. & C.'s agents did not intimate to A. Two years later D.'s agents renewed the claim, & ultimately raised an action against A., claiming a year's rent as composition on his entry. A. was found liable, & the decree of forfeiture was reduced. A. thereupon raised this action against B. & C. for repetition of the sum paid, the expenses of the litigation, & a sum equal to one & a half times the casualty of composition, on the ground of warrandice, & misrepresentation & concealment on the part of B.'s agents :—Held : (1) there had been no breach of warrandice ; & the representation was perfectly true according to the knowledge & belief of those who made it, &, that being so, any error therein was covered by the express contract of the purchaser to take the property with the risks of errors in the particulars.

(2) I assume them to be errors unconnected with fraud in the particular, & when the conveyance takes place it is not, as far as I know, in either country the principle of equity that relief should afterwards be given against that conveyance, unless there be a case of fraud, or a case of misrepresentation amounting to fraud, by which the purchaser may have been deceived (LORD SELBORNE, C.).

M., who died in 1871, was seised in fee of the freeholds, & should not "require the production of or investigate or make any objection in respect of the prior title" thereto. He accepted the title, & before completion contracted to sell the lands, with a farm of his own adjoining the freeholds, to a sub-purchaser, who discovered, from an inclosure award prior in date to 1841, as to the effect of which both pltf. & deft. had been under a misapprehension, that the freeholds had never belonged to E. M., but at the date of the contract belonged to deft. himself in fee, subject to a leasehold interest in pltf. Deft. then refused to complete, & pltf. filed her bill for specific performance, stating that she too had discovered that part of the lands she had contracted to sell as leaseholds belonged to her in fee simple, & offering mutual waiver or compensation: —Held: deft. was not precluded by the condition or the acceptance of title from taking the objection, & the ct. could not agree specific performance; but although there was no fraud, yet, there being a common mistake, deft. was entitled to an inquiry as to the title to the freeholds at the date of the contract. Semble: ct. will, even in the case of a completed contract, give relief against a common mistake without fraud.

Nothing can be clearer than this, that LORD CRANWORTH [in Bingham v. Bingham, No. 244, ante] recognised the principle that the ct. would, even in the case of a completed contract, give relief against a common mistake in the same way as it would against fraud (HALL, V.-C.).—JONES v. CLIFFORD (1876), 3 Ch. 255. —— —— ——.]—On a sale by the ct. of property described in the particulars as freehold stabling with dwelling rooms over, one of the conditions provided that if any error or misstatement should appear to have been made in the particulars of sale or conditions it should not annul the sale, but compensation, to be settled by the judge in chambers, should be made in respect thereof; the property was conveyed to pltf., the purchaser, in Oct. 1897, & the purchase-money was paid into ct. & the bulk of it distributed among the beneficiaries. A year after completion it was discovered that some of the dwelling rooms over & a cellar underneath a portion of the property belonged to third persons, & pltf. eventually had to pay £300 to acquire a title to these dwelling-rooms. In Feb. 1900, the present action was commenced against the vendor trustee & the beneficiaries, claiming compensation for the errors & misstatements in the particulars & conditions of sale, or, in the alternative, to set aside the sale on the ground of common mistake, & obtain repayment of the purchase-money:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to compensation under the above condition of sale, which did not, & was not intended to apply to the case of a defect of title, but only to error or misstatement in the subject-matter of the sale; even assuming there had been a common mistake, & assuming that there need not be a total failure of consideration to justify rescission after conveyance, the error made in the present case was not sufficient to justify rescission, & plaintiff's action therefore failed & must be dismissed.

This [rescission on the ground of mutual mistake] is relief which may undoubtedly be granted in a proper case even after conveyance although there has been nothing in the nature of fraud (BYRNE, J.).—DEBENHAM v. SAWBRIDGE, [1901] 2 Ch. 98; 70 L. C. Unilateral Mistake.

(a) In General.

257. Whether ground for rescission—General rule.]—A misstatement, in the particulars of sale, of the length of the term for which a tenant of the vendor holds a portion of the property, is not, in the absence of any evidence as to whether such misstatement is to the advantage of the purchaser or not, such a misrepresentation as will enable him to resist specific performance. Seven cottages, let to weekly tenants, were put up for sale, & described as "producing £73 14*s.* a year." When the particulars were issued the cottages did not produce this rental. Before the sale the vendors had entered into a contract to do certain repairs, & had given notice to the tenants that their rents would be raised, & before the day fixed for completion the repairs were done, & the rents were raised 3*d.* a week; so that, on the day of completion, the statement in the particulars was quite accurate:—Held: (1) this

275. —— —— Release by cestui que trust.]—A release to a trustee set aside after the lapse of more than twenty years, & after the death of a trustee, on evidence of pltf., corroborated by the tenor of the deed, that it was executed in error. Testator bequeathed one-half of his residuary personal estate to his sister & one-quarter thereof to each of his two nieces: he appointed his sister trustee & extrix. of his will, & died in the year 1855. The residuary personal estate consisted principally of railway shares & stocks, & at the time of passing the residuary account it was valued at £42,000. The nieces lived with their aunt, who had brought them up from childhood. In 1859 the nieces executed a release of all suits & causes of action in favour of their aunt in consideration of the payment of £10,500 to each. At the time of the execution of the release, the railway shares & stocks had increased in value & the share of each of the nieces was worth much more than £10,500. The release was drawn up by the aunt's solr., & the nieces had no independent advice & executed it in error, but no fraud was imputed. In 1879, the aunt died. In 1883, an action was commenced by one of the nieces to set aside the release:—Held: the release was invalid & must be set aside.

It is enough to avoid a release if the ct. is satisfied that it has been made under error in a material particular, & that is certainly not the less so where the release is given by a cestui que trust to a trustee, & by young ladies who have been living under the care of their aunt to a person who has stood to them in loco parentis (FRY, L.J.).—Re GARNETT, GANDY v. MACAULAY (1885), 31 Ch. 277. —— —— ——.]—An account was settled, & releases executed between the residuary legatees of a partner & the representatives of the surviving partner. Numerous & important errors in the account having been proved, the release was set aside, but having regard to the lapse of time, & the loss of books & documents the ct. declined opening the accounts altogether, but gave liberty only to surcharge & falsify. Partnership accounts having been directed to be taken by the master, in a case in which some of the books had been lost, the ct. directed the master, if it should appear in taking the account that any necessary books, etc., should be wanting, to report the same specially; & whether, in consequence of the want of such books, he was unable to proceed satisfactorily in taking the accounts. Where a release has been executed, & the parties have for a long space of time acquiesced in it, the mere proof of errors will not, in the absence of fraud, induce the ct. either to set it aside or to give leave to surcharge & falsify; but the nature & amount of the errors alleged & proved, may have a very considerable effect in the consideration of the question, whether the release was fairly obtained.

No amount of evidence, however conclusive proving that he did so intend, will at all justify the ct. in compelling him to introduce a clause into the deed which he does not choose to introduce now, although he might at the time have wished to have done so. It comes to this: that the ct. will never interfere to enforce a contract between parties for the due execution of a voluntary deed (LORD ROMILLY, M.R.).—LISTER v. HODGSON (1867), L. 281. —— ——.]—In order to maintain a voluntary deed of gift from a son for the benefit of a father, it must be shown both that the son understood the contents of the deed & that he was not under undue parental influence.

Under a marriage settlement, the son of the marriage was entitled to the reversion expectant on the life estate of the father in two sums of money, one of which had come from the father's side, the other from the mother's side. The son had also a large income under the will of his grandfather, & would have a much larger income on attaining the age of twenty-five years. The son had lately attained the age of twenty-one years, & was residing with his father. The son, without employing a separate solr., executed a deed giving to his father's second wife & her daughter the reversion in both the sums which were included in the marriage settlement, & giving to the father power to appoint the sum which came from the mother's side to any third wife & her children. The son left the father's house five years after the execution of the deed, & employed a separate solr. two years afterwards, when the subject of setting aside the deeds was mentioned. Seven years afterwards the son filed a bill to set aside so much of the deed as related to the sum which had come from the mother's side :—Held : though the son understood all the contents of the deed except the power to appoint to a third wife & her children, he was not sufficiently protected from parental influence, & if the bill had been filed at an earlier time the deed must have been set aside to the extent prayed; but as the filing of the bill had been so long deferred, the deed must be rectified only by striking out the power.

There is great difficulty in reforming a voluntary deed, because if any part of it is shown to be contrary to the intention of the parties, you can only deal with it by setting the whole aside, as in Hoghton v. Hoghton (1852), 15 Beav. 278. But here the son agrees that part of the deed ought to stand, & I have therefore power as against him; & I have certainly power against the father . . . & I shall direct the settlement to be rectified by striking out of it the power in question (LORD HATHERLEY, C.).—TURNER v. COLLINS (1871), 7 Ch. 291. —— ——.]—(1) Where there is mutual mistake in a deed or contract the remedy is to rectify by substituting the terms really agreed to. Where the mistake is unilateral the remedy is not rectification but rescission, but the ct. may give to deft. the option of taking what pltf. meant to give in lieu of rescission. Pltf. wrote a letter offering to deft. to make a lease to him of a portion of a block of three houses, consisting of the first, second, third, & fourth floors of all three houses, at a rent of £500 a year. Deft. wrote in answer, accepting the offer; & a lease was executed whereby all the upper floors of the block were demised by pltf. to deft. at the rent of £500. Pltf. alleged that the first floor of one of the houses was included in the offer, & in the lease, by mistake, & that he always intended to reserve such first floor for his own use. Deft. denied that he accepted the offer, or executed the lease, under any mistake. The ct. having found upon the evidence that a common mistake was not sufficiently proved, but that mistake on the part of pltf. was, gave judgment for rescission with an option to deft. to accept rectification instead.

The other class of cases is one of what is called unilateral mistake, & there, if the ct. is satisfied that the true intention of one of the parties was to do one thing, & he by mistake has signed an agreement to do another, that agreement will not be enforced against him, but the parties will be restored to their original position & the agreement will be treated as if it had never been entered into (BACON, V.-C.).

The minerals were never worked under this reservation by pltf. or his predecessors in title. In 1865 the then owner of the lands demised the coal under part of them to persons whose interest became vested in defts. B. & B.; & in 1877 deft. H., who had succeeded to the ownership of the lands, demised the coal under another part to pltf. Some years after this pltf. first became aware of the reservation in the deed of 1783, & brought his action to establish his right to the minerals, to restrain defts. from working them, & to have the lease of 1877 rectified or set aside:—Held: the lease of 1877 could not be rectified, as there was no common mistake.—SUTHERLAND (DUKE) v. HEATHCOTE, [1892] 1 Ch. 475; 61 L. She consulted W., a solr., & told him she was buying the property for £450 & wanted some one to provide the money due to A., & instructed him to carry out the transaction. W. introduced F. who agreed to advance £300 on a first mtge. of the farm, &, on receipt of the money from F. paid off A. & obtained from him the title deeds on F.'s behalf. W. acted for all the parties except A. Neither W. nor any of the parties except the mtgor. had any knowledge of pltf.'s mtge., & mtgor. did not disclose it. W. then prepared three deeds, which were duly executed & registered: (a) a reconveyance by A. to the mtgor.; (b) a conveyance by the mtgor. to L.; (c) a mtge. by L. to F. An interval of three weeks elapsed between the payment off of A. & the execution of the deeds, the first two of which bore the same date, the third being dated the following day. Pltf., in an action against F., L., & the mtgor., claimed that by virtue of the reconveyance to the mtgor. his mtge. had become a first charge on the property & that he was therefore entitled to priority over F.:—Held: pltf. was not entitled to priority, on the following ground: that owing to a common mistake induced by the misconduct of the mtgor., the deeds as framed did not express the true bargain between the parties, which was that F. should have a first mtge. on the property, & could have been rectified in the present action if defts. had counterclaimed for that relief, & in those circumstances a ct. of equity would not enforce in favour of a volunteer a title based upon deeds framed under a common mistake.—WHITELEY v. DELANEY, [1914] A. The error, on the part of the lessor, was proved, & the ct. considered that the lessee must have perceived the discrepancy between the amount of rent previously stated by pltf. & specified in the agreement & that reserved by the lease :—Held : pltf. was not entitled to have the lease reformed, but the proper relief was to give the lessee the option of taking the reformed lease or of rejecting it, paying, in the latter case, a rental for the past occupation & a mtge. on the lease created by such lessee.

(d) Necessity for Prior Contract.

309. General rule.] — A., being the holder of several policies of insurance on the life of B. & being unable to keep them up, entered into an agreement with C. for the purpose of C. keeping them up. The agreement consisted of three instruments: (a) a letter by which it was stated that C. was to pay the premiums, & to have his advances & interest secured by a deposit of the policies, a bond & an equitable mtge. of certain estates. No time was specified for the repayment of the advance & interest. (b) A bond for £6,000, referring to the letter for repaying the advances & interest at the expiration of six months from the death of B. (c) An agreement also referring to the letter & to the deposit of the policies to secure the payment of the advances & interest at the expiration of six calendar months from the death of B. by which agreement the advances & interest were secured to be paid at six months after the death of B., upon certain estates. A. died, living B., leaving a considerable amount of advances & interest unpaid, & having before his death, assigned the policies to trustees for his creditors. C. now filed his bill claiming to have all his advances & interest paid & that the agreement might be varied & made to conform to the letter & that, if necessary the policies might be sold:—Held: the agreement could not be rectified, there being nothing to rectify it by except the letter itself, the letter & agreement being incorporated in effect into one instrument & the letter not specifically pointing out the time when the security was to be available.

When a party wishes to rectify an agreement one rule is plain: he must have some draft or some evidence of the intention by which to rectify. . . . If these instruments do not express the intention of the parties, how am I to ascertain their intention? (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—BROUGHAM v. SQUIRE (1852), 1 Drew. 151; 61 E. R. 409.

310. ——.] — Pltfs., underwriters, having executed to defts., iron merchants, a policy of marine insurance on a cargo which suffered loss, filed a bill for a rectification of the policy, so as to make it conformable to that which they said was the real contract between the agents, in proof of which they produced in evidence the slip which was signed by their agent when presented at Lloyds by a clerk of defts.' insurance broker. Defts. denied that they ever entered, or intended to enter, into any contract other than expressed by the policy:—Held: as the slip formed no contract, & there was no binding agreement between the parties until the policy was signed & the premium paid, the bill must be dismissed with costs.

Cts. of equity do not rectify contracts; they may & do rectify instruments purporting to have been made in pursuance of the terms of contracts. But it is always necessary for a pltf. to show that there was an actual concluded contract antecedent to the instrument which is sought to be rectified; & that such contract is inaccurately represented in the instrument (JAMES, V.-C.).—MACKENZIE v. COULSON (1869), L. 311. ——.]—Now, no one for a moment doubts that where it is shown that the actual contract & intention of the contracting parties was different from that which is expressed in the deed, the ct. has jurisdiction to alter it. But there is an enormous difference between altering a settlement under these circumstances & altering a settlement where there is no evidence whatever that there was a different intention at the time when the deed was executed, as is the case here (COTTON, L.J.).

It requires very clear & distinct evidence to show that there was some different intention at the time when the settlement was executed, & with this exception (Wollaston v. Tribe, No. 396, post), there is hardly a single case where many years after the settlement was executed, on mere parol evidence, uncontradicted because there was no one to contradict it, the ct. has altered a deed because one of the parties afterwards desired that it should not stand as it was executed (COTTON, L.J.).—TUCKER v. BENNETT (1887), 38 Ch. 312. ——.] — The essence of rectification is to bring the document which was expressed & intended to be in pursuance of a prior agreement into harmony with that prior agreement. . . . It presupposes a prior contract & it requires proof that by common mistake the final completed instrument as executed fails to give proper effect to the prior contract. For this purpose evidence of what took place prior to the execution of the completed document is obviously admissible & indeed essential. . . . Let me repeat that a prior agreement must be proved; mere intention will not suffice (COZENS-HARDY, M.R.).—LOVELL & CHRISTMAS, LTD. v. WALL (1911), 104 L. T. 85; 27 T. L. R. 236, C. A.

It is clear that the S. Estate . . . was not intended to be included in the settlement; & that it formed no part of the proposal or of the contract, but was so included by mistake. In these proposals it was stated that the policy could be accepted only on the condition that "H. should be at liberty to visit Tangier or any other port within the Mediterranean, without subjecting himself to any extra premium, etc.; but it was understood that he was not to reside out of Europe at any place in the Mediterranean beyond the period of three months, or to go into the interior of Asia or Africa." O. built four houses & the bridge not having been erected within three months brought this action, claiming to have the agreement rectified on the ground that the number 6 had been inserted by mistake for 4 & to have damages for non-performance of the agreement to build the bridge. The objection was taken that pltf. who was in effect seeking specific performance, because unless he was entitled to specific performance he would be a mere tenant at will & have no claim to damages, could not bring parol evidence to alter

There is no doubt on the one hand, that if an instrument affects by its recital to carry into execution a certain agreement & goes beyond that agreement, the ct. will rectify it; because then it has clear evidence on the face of the instrument itself; that the instrument operates beyond its intended operation; on the other hand it is quite clear that parties may enter into articles of agreement & the terms of the agreement may be extended by parol, provided the conveyance itself is written evidence that there has been such an extension by the parol agreement (LORD ELDON, C.).—BEAUMONT v. BRAMLEY (1822), Turn. & R. 41; 37 E. It was executed by pltfs., two elderly ladies & their nephew who was appointed trustee. Pltfs. had recently discovered, as they alleged, that the deed did not carry out their real intention, & they therefore desired to have it rectified in certain respects. It was decided that the ct. had jurisdiction, in a proper case, to reform or rectify a voluntary settlement, as well as a settlement for value; but that the ct. would hesitate to rectify a voluntary settlement at the instance of the settlors merely on their own evidence as to their intention, unsupported by other evidence, such as written instructions, even though the rectification sought would bring the settlement more into harmony with recognised precedents, & with what the settlors might reasonably have intended at the time. 340. ——.] — For the purpose of reforming an instrument, clear & unambiguous evidence must be produced, not merely showing a mistake, but showing the deed in its proposed state to be in conformity with the intention of all the parties at the very time of its execution, & a denial by one of the parties that the deed as it stands was not according to his intention at the time ought to have considerable weight. A deed of compromise between a mother & son recited a letter of the mother's, who was a widow, written before the son's marriage, stating that by her will her residuary estate would be divided equally between her four sons. The deed also recited that the mother was seised, or had power to dispose of real estate, the particulars whereof were specified in a schedule to the deed. It further recited disputes as to the effect of the ante-nuptial letter, & that to end them the arrangement was entered into effected by the deed. By the witnessing part, the mother covenanted that her exors. would at her death pay to the son such a sum as should be found to be the amount to which he would have been entitled if her real & personal estate had consisted of the particulars specified in the schedule, & she had died without altering her will as it stood when the letter was written. The descriptions in the schedule comprehended not only property of which she could dispose, but other property of which she was tenant for life only, & which was intermixed with the former, & this was noticed in the schedule :—Held : without conclusive evidence of an intention on the part of both parties at the execution of the deed to enter into some other contract, it could not be reformed.

It is clear that a person who seeks to rectify a deed upon the ground of mistake must be required to establish in the clearest & most satisfactory manner, that the alleged intention to which he desires it to be made conformable continued concurrently in the minds of all parties down to the time of its execution, & also must be able to show exactly & precisely the form to which the deed ought to be brought (LORD CHELMSFORD, C.).—FOWLER v. FOWLER (1859), 4 De. 343. Qualification of rule — Rectification to set aside deed pro tanto.]—Although in general, in order to induce the ct. to rectify an instrument on the ground of mistake, it must be shown that the mistake was the concurrent mistake of all the parties, yet semble: this rule ought not to be applied where the object of the rectification is to set aside the deed pro tanto as against the party alleging the mistake (TURNER, L.J.).

I venture to doubt whether this rule applies or ought to be applied to a case like the present in which the purpose of the rectification is to set aside the deed pro tanto as to the parties alleging the mistake, for in such a case no proof would be necessary of any further agreement. It would be sufficient to prove the mistake & the circumstances entitling the party to have the mistake removed. It is obvious, that unless the rule be so qualified, it would always be in the power of one of the parties to an instrument to defeat the right of another of the parties to set aside the instrument (TURNER, L.J.).—BENTLEY v. MACKAY (1862), 4 De G. 345. ——.]—At the time of the marriage of the daughter of A. she was contingently entitled to a portion out of certain trust funds. By the settlement made on such marriage, after reciting that she was entitled to the sum of £10,000 in possession, the same sum was vested in trustees & settled on herself, her intended husband, & the children of the marriage. The settlement also contained a covenant to settle all her after-acquired property. The £10,000 mentioned in the settlement & settled, was in fact advanced by A. out of his own moneys. After A.'s death, & when the daughter's portion out of the first-mentioned trust funds became payable, a bill was filed by the representatives of A. to have it declared that his estate was entitled to be recouped the £10,000 advanced by him on his daughter's marriage to the extent of her portion. Evidence was adduced as to the terms & circumstances under which the daughter's marriage settlement was executed, & the husband made an affidavit, in which he stated that he was utterly ignorant at the time of the marriage whence the £10,000 was derived, or that it was advanced by A. under an impression that he was to be recouped out of his daughter's fortune the money so advanced:— Held: (1) treating the question as one arising upon the construction of the settlement, when evidence of the intention of the parties was inadmissible, there was nothing to show that the £10,000 paid by A. was meant to be an accelerated advance of what his daughter might, & ultimately was, entitled to out of the other trust funds, or to exclude the last-mentioned property from the operation of the covenant to settle future-acquired property; (2) treating the case as one for the reformation of the settlement, when parol evidence was admissible, there was no evidence to show that its provisions were at variance with the real intention of the parties, & as no mistake common to all parties had been made, the settlement could not be rectified.

(3) In cases of reforming a deed it is essential that the extent of the proposed alteration should be clearly defined & ascertained by evidence contemporaneous with or anterior to the deed.—BRADFORD (EARL) v. ROMNEY (EARL) (1862), 30 Beav. 431; 31 L. SUB-SECT. 4.—DEFENCE TO ACTION.

349. When available—Contract not such as equity would reform—Action at law restrained by injunction.]—In an action on a dissolution of partnership deed, in which one of the parties covenanted with the other not to practise in a certain district, the action being for the penalty incurred by practising in a certain part of that district, a plea was allowed to be pleaded, by way of equitable defence, to the effect that the part in question had been treated between the parties in their partnership arrangements as not part of that district, that it was not intended to include it in the prohibition to practise, & that the deed in that respect was executed under a mistake in fact, the ground of the defence being, not that a ct. of equity would reform the deed, for, semble, it could not be reformed, but would decree a perpetual & absolute injunction against suing upon the covenant for practising in the place in question.—LUCE v. IZOD (1856), 1 H. & N. 245; 25 L. 350. —— —— Performance impossible—By default of plaintiffs.]—To a count for not accepting petroleum pursuant to contract by bought & sold notes, defts. pleaded, by way of equitable defence, that the real contract was not that which was contained in the bought & sold notes, but was a contract for 150 cases of refined petroleum to agree with a sample shown by the brokers at the time of making the contract, & that the brokers, who were acting as agents for both parties, in drawing up the contract, by mistake omitted to state therein that the sale was by sample; that the mistake was not discovered until after defts. had received a portion of the petroleum; that pltfs. were never ready & willing to deliver to defts. any cases of petroleum as the petroleum they so agreed to sell, except a certain lot of 150 cases; that the petroleum which pltfs. were so ready & willing to sell in fact did not agree with the sample, but were greatly inferior thereto, of less value; & that, as soon as defts. discovered that fact, they refused to receive any more of it, & gave notice of such refusal to pltfs.:—Held: this plea afforded a good equitable defence, inasmuch as, the full performance of the agreement having become impracticable by reason of the default of pltfs., the case was not one in which a ct. of equity could reform the contract, or impose conditions upon defts.—BORROWMAN v. ROSSELL, (1864), 16 C. B. N. S. 58; 33 L. J. C. P. 111; 10 L. T. 236; 10 Jur. N. S. 679; 12 W. R. 426; 143 E. R. 1045; sub nom. BOWMAN v. ROSSEL, 3 New Rep. 471.

351. —— Contract reformable in equity.]—(1) By the conditions attached to a contract of indemnity against losses in trade, the guarantee became void on the death or retirement from trade of the person guaranteed:—Held: this condition applied to the death or retirement of one of two partners guaranteed; & therefore that a plea alleging such death of the partner was an answer to an action against the co-partner by the guarantors for the subscription or annual payments agreed to be paid by the assured.

(2) Deft. pleaded on equitable grounds to an action for such payments, & also for a certain increased premium, that by certain printed rules & regulations delivered to him as the rules & regulations under & subject to which the agreement for guarantee was to be made, the amount of subscription payable by the assured was to be increased at a certain specified percentage rate, according to the amount of admitted claims in the previous year, & that deft. entered into the contract upon the basis & faith of such rules & regulations; but that the contract did not contain them, & other & much less advantageous rules, with other rates were substituted, of which deft. had no notice:—Held: the plea was bad, as the facts stated would not relieve deft. from the performance of the contract, but would only entitle him to have it reformed.—SOLVENCY MUTUAL GUARANTEE CO. v. FREEMAN (1861), 7 H. & N. 17; 31 L. London co. owed £500, on deft., their cashier, who accepted it for that amount payable at sixty days. Pltf., as well as the assurance co., were under the same mistaken apprehensions that the assignment was valid. It turned out to be invalid. To an action upon the bill, deft. proposed to plead by way of equitable defence that the bill was drawn & accepted under a mistaken supposition on the part of pltf., as well as of deft., that the assignment was valid:—Held: the mistake was not a mistake as to the contract in the bill itself, but was a mistake as to another contract between other parties, & such a plea was no defence either at law or in equity.—BALFOUR v. SEA FIRE LIFE ASSURANCE CO. (1857), 3 C. B. N. S. 300; 27 L. J. C. P. 17; 30 L. T. O. S. 122; 3 Jur. N. S. 1304; 6 W. R. 19; 140 E. R. 756.

353. —— Plaintiff deceived by reasonable reading of contract.]—Pltfs.' agent entered into a contract to supply bricks to a builder at certain prices "to be taken within four months from the date thereof. Month's account, & bill at five months from the date thereof. The due performance of this contract by" the builder being guaranteed by deft. This was signed by deft., but he & pltf.'s agent both understood & agreed that he was thereby guaranteeing only the acceptance of bills by the builder. Pltf. always believed deft. had guaranteed the payment of the bills, & heard nothing of the agreement of their agent with deft. The agent had received no authority from pltfs. to assent to such a guarantee as deft. intended, & pltfs. supplied the bricks on the faith of the guarantee, as they interpreted it:—Held: the contract was a guarantee for the payment of these bills, & this was not such a mutual mistake between the parties as to constitute an equitable ground of defence to an action upon the guarantee.

Pltfs. having been deceived by the reasonable reading of the guarantee as to what had been deft.'s meaning, deft. is not entitled to relief in equity, nor is he, according to my opinion, in common justice (COCKBURN, C.J.).—HAYMEN v. GOVER (1872), 25 L. T. 903.

354. —— Agreement contrary to intention of parties.]—Equitable plea to a declaration for allowing the business of a cheesemonger or pork butcher to be carried on on deft.'s premises near to certain premises let by deft. to pltf. contrary to agreement that at the time of making the agreement deft. possessed a shop near the premises let, where such business was, & had long been carried on, as pltf. knew; that it never was intended that such business should not be carried on there; that the agreement was by mistake so framed as to include the carrying on of such business there in the general words; that the real & true agreement was fulfilled, & was always understood & acted upon as not intended to prevent the carrying on of such business there:—Held: a good plea.—NICOLL v. BELL (1875), 32 L. 361. —— ——.]—Trustees for sale put certain property, including two freehold houses, into the hands of an auctioneer to be sold. The property for sale comprised a scullery so situated that it might have belonged to either of the two houses. The auctioneer prepared a plan which clearly showed the scullery as part of Lot 2, but, by some inadvertence, it was in the particulars of sale clearly included in Lot 3. The person who subsequently became the purchaser of Lot 2, having before the sale called the auctioneer's attention to the discrepancy, was informed by the latter that the plan was correct, & that the scullery was included in Lot 2. He also orally pointed out the mistake at the sale, & informed those present that the scullery formed part of Lot 2. Lot 2 was sold, but Lot 3 was not sold. The conveyance of Lot 2 was made, after an interview on the subject between the solrs. of the vendors & of the purchaser, so as expressly to comprise the scullery. The purchaser, immediately after the execution of the conveyance, mortgaged Lot 2. The vendors brought an action against the purchaser & his mtgees. for rectification of the conveyance, alleging that the scullery was included in the conveyance by mistake, as they had never authorised their agents to include it in Lot 2, their attention never having been called to what had passed between their agents & the purchaser with reference to it, & that they had executed the conveyance without reading it. Pltfs. contended that, there being a written contract to sell Lot 2 without the scullery, & that contract being free from ambiguity, parol evidence to vary it was not admissible:—Held: (1) even apart from the difficulty arising from the position of the mtgees., who like the purchaser himself, had no notice at the time they took their mtge., of the facts on which the equities claimed by pltf. were based, there was certainly no mistake on the part of deft. the purchaser, & none was satisfactorily proved even on the part of pltfs., as they simply left the matter to their agents, who accordingly had authority to include the scullery in Lot 2 in the way they did, & there was therefore no case for rectification; (2) the conveyance, having been executed, primâ facie governed the relations between the parties & evidenced their contract, but if for the purpose of showing a mistake in the conveyance the prior written contract was to be looked at, then all the prior relevant transactions ought to be looked at also, & not the contract alone.—ELLIS v. HILLS & BRIGHTON & PRESTON A. In ejectment by the heir-at-law for the paternal estate, on the ground that the fine operated as a revocation of the will:—Held: parol evidence was admissible to restrain the operation of the fine to one of the purchased estates on which were twelve messuages, so as not to pass the estate in question.—DENN d. Pltf. continued in possession of the property. It subsequently appeared that he was not liable to be indicted; & he then requested deft. to reconvey the property. Deft. refused. The schedule described the property as "three leasehold houses in Coity held by the mtgor. under a lease of Sept. 25." The lease of Sept. 25 in fact comprised only one house. There was evidence that on Nov. 2 the bankers agreed to make further advances to the customer, upon his giving them satisfactory security: that he then offered to give them a charge upon three leasehold houses, which he pointed out to the manager; that the manager agreed to accept those three houses as security; & that the deed of charge was then drawn up at the bank, the description in the schedule being inserted from the customer's instructions. One only of the three houses thus pointed out was comprised in the lease of Sept. 25, & the two others were comprised in a lease of Dec. 31, which, as well as the lease of Sept. 25, was subject to a prior mtge. to the building society:—Held: this evidence was admissible.—Re BOULTER, Ex p. NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK OF ENGLAND (1876), 4 Ch. Pltfs. thereupon sent an agent to view the premises, who saw deft. there, & accepted those terms. Pltfs. were thereupon let into possession, & commenced alterations & additions. The ingrossed lease contained a covenant on the part of the lessees to pay, in addition to the above rent, a premium of £500 on obtaining a licence, which deft. insisted had been mentioned viva voce at the interview with pltfs.' agent, & taken down by him in writing in deft.'s presence. This turned out to be an entire misapprehension, although positively sworn to by deft., but in deft.'s letter, containing the first offer of terms to pltfs., there was the following passage: "I am giving to all the brewers who have left cards the offer in rotation"; & it was proved, that immediately before the offer to pltfs., deft. had offered the premises to another brewer on the same terms as those in the ingrossed lease to pltfs., viz. the same as in the letter, with the additional term of the £500 premium:—Held: this was sufficient evidence of a mistake by deft. in accidentally omitting the premium in the terms first mentioned to pltfs.

403. ——— ———.]—Rectification of a marriage settlement decreed at the instance of the wife after the death of the husband upon her uncorroborated parol testimony.

Upon the marriage of a widow with a retired solr., who had formerly acted as her solr., the whole of her property, amounting to more than £20,000, was vested in trustees, upon trust to pay the income to the wife for her life, & after her death to the husband for his life; &, as to the capital, upon trust, after the death of the wife, to pay one moiety thereof to the husband, his exors., administrators, or assigns, & to hold the other moiety upon such trusts as the wife should by deed or will appoint. By another deed, executed contemporaneously, the husband, in exercise of a power given to him by the will of his father, charged some estates of which he was tenant for life, with remainder to his issue in tail male, with the payment of an annuity of £100 to the wife for her life. The settlement was prepared by the husband himself the night before the marriage, & was brought by him to the wife for execution on the morning of the marriage day. She had no independent professional advice. After the husband's death she brought an action for the rectification of the settlement by omitting the trust of a moiety of the capital for the husband. The trustees & one of the next of kin of the husband were made defts. Pltf. deposed that her husband had told her that he wished every farthing of her property to be settled upon her, & that she said she was willing to allow him a life interest; that he said he would employ counsel; that the settlement did not carry out her intentions, & that she did not know what its provisions were until after the husband's death:—Held: it was the duty of the husband to have explained to the wife in the most unmistakable terms, & with due opportunity for deliberation, the provision in his favour, & as the settlement on the face of it was not such as the ct. would have sanctioned in the absence of agreement, the burden of proof was on the representatives of the husband, & pltf. was entitled to the rectification which she claimed; also, the fact that pltf. claimed to retain the benefit of the settlement made on her by the husband was no bar to the rectification.—LOVESY v. SMITH (1880), 15 Ch. 412. —— —— Mistake clearly proved.] — A marriage settlement, dated in 1823, reformed in 1857, & after the death of the husband, upon proof of the written instructions, so as to give the property to the wife absolutely in the event of her surviving her husband & there being no issue, which events had happened.

It is very true, that the ct. pays great attention to the lapse of time in cases of this description on account of the loss of evidence & the doubt thence arising; but here there is none, for the instructions which were given in writing are preserved & the intention is established (ROMILLY, M.R.).—WOLTERBEEK v. BARROW (1857), 23 Beav. 423; 29 L. 413. —— Change in position of parties — Fund distributed.]—After money has been paid under a judgment founded on the construction of an agreement, an action to rectify the agreement on the ground that such construction was contrary to the intention of all parties is barred.

C. & Co. built a ship for B., & a considerable sum remained due to them, for which they had a lien on the ship. M. had made advances to B. An agreement was made between the three parties for sale of the ship by C., & for the distribution of the proceeds. The agreement was very obscure, & left it doubtful in what order the claims of C. & of M. were to be paid. After the sale M. sued C. for an account of the proceeds, & judgment was given in the ct. of the County Palatine for carrying into execution the trusts of the agreement, & for the requisite account. On taking the account before the registrar, C. claimed to be allowed his debt, but the registrar held that M. had priority. The proceeds were amply sufficient to pay M.'s claim, but not C.'s also. The Vice-Chancellor affirmed the view of the registrar, & made an order for C. to pay M.'s claim. C. appealed, but the appeal was dismissed & the money was paid to M. After this C. brought an action to rectify the agreement by making it provide that C.'s claim should have priority over that of M. M. pleaded that the agreement having been executed & the money paid under the order of the Palatine Ct., C. was not entitled to any relief:—Held: that the action must be dismissed, for that although, the question of rectification not having been before the Palatine Ct., there was no res judicata, C. could not come to have the agreement rectified after it had been worked out, & the fund distributed, under the order of the ct. in the Palatine action.—CAIRD v. Moss (1886), 33 Ch. A. executed this settlement under the advice of a friend of the family, & in ignorance of its real effect, though it was read over to him by the family solicitor, who prepared it. A. married in 1859, & then executed a settlement, in which he recited the deed of 1857, & exercised the power of jointure & charge portions. She afterwards made considerable additions to the fund, partly arising from the accumulations of the dividends, & partly from other parts of her separate estate. Her sons lived to attain vested interests, subject to her life interest, & then died: —Held: on a bill by the trustees to carry into effect the trusts of the deed, that not only the accumulations, but the other additional moneys, followed the trusts of the original fund.

440. Deed granting annuity declared void — Order to account for principal & interest.]—In 1839 a treaty was entered into between C. & P. for the purchase from the former of an annuity by the latter for her own life. An agent of P. in an interview with C. agreed, subject to P.'s approval, to give £1 per cent. more on the purchase than the Govt. would grant for the same amount of purchase-money; & on same day the agent stated to P.'s solr. that he would obtain from a friend in the Govt. Annuity Office the amount of annuity which the Govt. would grant on P.'s life, for the sum proposed to be invested, which was £1,800. He accordingly did so, & C. expressed himself satisfied. Four years afterwards C. happened to discover that the amount of the annuity was much too large, the computation having been made on a male, & not a female, life, as it ought to have been. It was in evidence that P. had been informed by her agent of the principle of calculation previously to the grant being made; but P. distinctly denied by her answer that she had been informed of the mode, or would have taken a less annuity than she did:—Held: the ct. could not rectify the deed granting the annuity; the grant of the annuity, & the agreement for granting it, ought to be declared to be void, but on C.'s waiving any account of the payments made in respect of the annuity previously to the filing of the bill to set aside the deed, it was ordered to be delivered up to C. to be cancelled, & the proper accounts of principal & interest due to P. were ordered to be taken, & the balance thereof, after deducting the costs of the suit, was ordered to be paid to P.—CARPMAEL v. POWIS (1846), 10 Beav. 36; 16 L. This sum had been settled, on her former marriage, upon a trust for her separate use, which was supposed by the lady to extend, but did not extend, to future covertures. The husband & wife were divorced, on account of adultery of the husband. In a suit instituted by the wife to rectify the settlement by including the £10,000, therein, or, in the alternative, to enforce her equity to a settlement out of the same fund; although the husband had had no portion of the wife's property, & the wife had other means sufficient for her support:—Held: without determining the question of the rectification of the settlement, she was entitled to have the whole income secured for her separate use upon her equity to a settlement. The husband's conduct is taken into account in considering the wife's equity to a settlement.

(2 The solr. who had prepared the marriage settlement, being also a trustee of it, & as such a party to the suit, had severed in his defence for his co-trustee. The bill was filed by the wife to rectify the settlement against the husband & the solr. who prepared the settlement:—Held: upon the evidence, the limitations were contrary to the intention of pltf., & the husband having undertaken as agent for the wife to have a settlement prepared, was bound to have such a contract prepared as the ct. would sanction, & such contract would give the wife the first life estate in her own property. A decree was therefore made to rectify the settlement.

The husband, & the solr. who prepared the settlement, who in the view of the V.-C. had failed in his professional duty, & had by his neglect & misconduct caused the litigation, were ordered to pay the costs of the suit:—Held: on appeal by the solr., as he had not been guilty of participation in a fraud, but at most only of a blunder for which the remedy was an action for professional negligence, there was no jurisdiction to order him to pay the costs of the suit.—CLARK v. GIRDWOOD (1877), 7 Ch. 458. ——.]—In 1917 pltfs., under licence from the Russian Imperial Govt., exported timber to this country, &, in accordance with the conditions of the licence, paid the purchase-money received by them for the timber to deft. bankers for the credit of the Russian Govt. They then became entitled to receive from the Govt. in Russia an equivalent amount in roubles at a fixed rate of exchange. In Mar. 1917, the Imperial Govt. was overthrown by a revolution, & was succeeded by a Provisional Govt., which in its turn, was, on Nov. 7, 1917, displaced by the Bolshevists, who, on Dec. 13, forcibly dissolved the Constitutent Assembly & established a Soviet Republic. Pltfs., having received no roubles in Russia, brought actions against the bankers to recover two sums of money, one of which was paid to them by pltfs. in the second action before Nov. 7, & the other by pltfs. in the first action on Nov. 9, at which date they did not know of the Bolshevist revolution. Pltfs. in both actions alleged that the bankers & the Russian Govt. were merely trustees for them, & the money having been paid under a contract, the consideration for which had entirely failed, they were entitled to recover. Pltfs. in the first action further contended that they had paid the money under a mistake of fact, & on that ground also they were entitled to recover it:—Held: this money had been paid to the bank as agents for the Russian Govt., & the ct. would not order payment of it in the absence of that Govt. or its representatives. As to mistake of fact, the fact of which pltfs. were ignorant was not one which, if they had known it, would necessarily have discharged them from the liability to make the payments in question. The bank were entitled to keep the money in their hands, but must undertake not to part with it without notice to pltfs. & an order of the ct.—STEAM SAW MILLS CO., LTD. v. BARING BROTHERS & CO., ARCHANGEL SAW MILLS CO. v. BARING BROTHERS & CO., [1922] 1 Ch. 244; 91 L. 459. ——.] — Pltfs. in London sold to a New York co. a quantity of Belgian francs to be delivered to defts. as the purchasers' agents in Brussels on Dec. 31, at a price to be paid in dollars on the same day in New York, & the purchasers instructed defts. to pay the francs when received to the C. Bank. On Dec. 30, bkpcy. proceedings were commenced against the purchasers in New York & a receiver was appointed, & on the same day the purchasers cabled to pltfs. not to pay the francs to defts., as they, the purchasers, were unable to complete their contract. Before that cable arrived pltfs. had already paid the francs to defts., & defts. had paid them to the C. Bank. Pltfs. then requested the C. Bank to return them, & the C. Bank returned them to defts., with an explanation that they did so for the purpose of cancelling defts.' payment to them. Under these circumstances defts. claimed that, the money having been returned to them they were entitled to hold it on behalf of their principals, & refused to pay it over to pltfs. Pltfs. brought their action to recover the francs as being money had & received by defts. to their use:—Held: (1) at the time pltfs. paid the francs to defts. the purchasers had already repudiated their contract, although pltfs. did not know that fact & consequently had not accepted the repudiation, pltfs. were under no legal obligation to pay, & having paid under a mistaken belief of legal liability, they would have been entitled to recover the money back if they had discovered their mistake before defts. had paid it to the bank; (2) the effect of the money being returned by the C. Bank was to restore pltfs. to the same position as that which they occupied before defts. paid it away, & that position was unaffected by the fact that before redemand of the money by pltfs. the trustee in bkpcy. of the purchasers had directed defts. not to part with it, & defts. in compliance with that direction had credited the purchasers with it in their books; (3) consequently defts. were bound to repay it to pltfs.—BRITISH AMERICAN CONTINENTAL BANK v. BRITISH BANK FOR FOREIGN TRADE, [1926] 1 K. In order to entitle a person to recover back money paid under a mistake of fact, the mistake must be as to a fact which, if true, would make the person paying liable to pay the money: not where, if true, it would merely make it desirable that he should pay the money. 465. Payment to avoid litigation — Doubt as to liability.]—From Sept. 1900, to June, 1912, pltf. carried on business as a dealer in produce in the vicinity of Spitalfields Market. As soon as he commenced business deft. who was the owner of the market, demanded tolls from him under threat of seizure of his goods if he refused to pay, & on the first occasion pltf. objected to pay & actual seizure took place. Pltf. then consulted a solr. & upon learning that other dealers outside the market paid tolls he, acting upon his solr.'s advice, paid the tolls under protest, & thereafter, he, or his agents acting upon his instructions, always paid the tolls under protest. Subsequently, whenever pltf. challenged deft.'s right, or disputed the amount of tolls, in particular cases there was a seizure or threat of seizure followed by payment under protest. From the decision in A.-G. v. Horner, [1913] 2 Ch. 140, it appeared that the tolls had been unlawfully demanded, & in consequence, pltf. brought this action for money had & received to recover the tolls so paid, claiming that he paid them under a mistake of fact & not voluntarily but under the pressure of seizure of his goods:—Held: pltf. did not pay under a mistake either of law or fact, but because he found that other sellers were paying tolls & he did not wish to be involved in litigation with deft., & pltf. could not recover under this head of claim.—MASKELL v. HORNER, [1915] 3 K. 466. General rule.]—A. pays a sum of money into a banker's for a specific purpose; the banker's clerk, by mistake, pays this money to B. who has no right to it:—Held: A. cannot maintain an action against B. to recover it back.

There is no privity between the parties to this suit. Pltf.'s claim is on the bankers, & they must seek their remedy against deft. the best way they can. Pltf.'s money must still be considered as in the hands of the bankers (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.). —ROGERS v. KELLY (1809), 2 Camp. 123; 170 E. R. 1102, N. P.

Whilst pltf. was counting the notes one of defts., having discovered that the drawer of the cheque had no assets, demanded the money back. Pltf. refused to give it up, & defts. thereupon took it by force; in an action by A. of assault & trespass for taking the money from him by force:—Held: he was entitled to recover; the transfer of the money was complete; as between pltf. & defts. there was no mistake at all, the mistake being between defts. & their customer; & defts., therefore, could not have recovered back the money from pltf. in an action for money had & received.—CHAMBERS v. MILLER (1862), 13 C. punctual payments. All the payments of interest except the first had been punctual, but, through pltf.'s ignorance of the proviso for reduction of the interest, they had been made at the rate of 5 per cent. In an action by pltf. to recover from deft., the trustee, the extra 1 per cent. paid under this mistake:—Held: the action was rightly brought against the trustee; the only contract was between pltf. as mtgor. & deft. as mtgee.; money had been received under that contract by the mtgee.; & he alone could be asked or required to repay it.—KING v. STEWART (1892) 66 L. T. 339.

469. ——.]—Pltfs. claimed to recover from defts., who were merchants carrying on business in the City of London, the sum of £1,000 as money paid under a mistake of fact. Defts. had among their customers in Poland two associated cos. namely, the W. co & the S. co. In 1920 the W. co. owed defts. a large sum of money for goods sold & delivered. The W. co. instructed their local bank, the Bank of Warsaw, to pay defts. £2,000. The Bank of Warsaw thereupon telegraphed to pltfs., whom they employed as their London agents, to pay defts. £2,000. On the receipt of the telegram pltfs. immediately paid that amount to defts. in London. The Bank of Warsaw wrote to pltfs. a letter confirming the telegram, but pltfs., on receipt of the letter of confirmation, treated it as a direction to pay defts. a further sum of £2,000 & did not notice that it was merely confirming the telegraphed instructions. Pltfs. thereupon paid to defts. a second sum of £2,000 making a total of £4,000. Even with the total of £4,000 thus paid to defts., the W. co. still remained indebted to them. Afterwards the W. co., believing that they had paid off only £2,000 of their debt, instructed the Bank of Warsaw to arrange to pay another £1,000 to defts. Instructions to that effect were sent by the Bank of Warsaw to pltfs., but were never received by pltfs., being lost in transmission. Subsequently pltfs. discovered all the facts & informed defts. that the £2,000 was paid by mistake of fact. They offered to credit defts. with £1,000 which they then knew the W. co. wished to pay to defts., but they claimed to recover the balance of £1,000, as money paid under a mistake of fact:—Held: there was no such mistake of fact in this case as would entitled pltfs. to maintain that the money had been received by defts. to pltfs.' use; & even if, in the first instance, there had been such mistake, defts. must still succeed on the ground of ratification of the payment by pltfs., who, after the facts were all discovered, were willing to allow the payment to hold good with regard to the £1,000, but claimed that it was bad as to the remainder. There must, therefore, be judgment for defts.—BARCLAY & CO., LTD. v. MALCOLM & CO. (1925), 133 L. T. 512; 41 T. L. R. 518; 69 Sol. Jo. 675.

470. ——.]—B., being indebted to defts. under a hire-purchase agreement in a sum of £5,000, which he had no means of paying, represented to pltfs. that he was the agent of a firm of motor manufacturers, who were putting on the market a new car, & persuaded pltfs. to sign a form of agreement appointing them on behalf of the firm agents for the sale of the car on the terms that pltfs. should purchase five hundred cars & pay £5,000 as a deposit. On pltfs. objecting to pay this sum to B. or to the firm, B. told them that defts. were financing the firm & were his principals, & suggested that the £5,000 might be paid to them. Pltfs. then drew two cheques to the order of defts., one for £2,000 & one post-dated for £3,000 & handed them to B. who handed them on to defts. in payment of his debt. Defts. objected to the cheques as being irregular in form, & as the result of a conversation through the telephone between defts. & pltfs., no mention being made of the purpose of the payment, pltfs. took back the irregular cheques & posted to defts. a new cheque for £5,000 duly signed. Defts. cashed the cheque & returned to B. goods which they had seized under the hire-purchase agreement. No such motor firm of car as alleged existed. On discovery of the fraud pltfs. sued defts. for the recovery of the £5,000 as money paid under a mistake of fact:—Held: pltfs. were entitled to recover on the principle of Kelly v. Solari, No. 487, post.

In the language of LORD LINDLEY, in Imperial Bank of Canada v. Bank of Hamilton, No. 494, post, "Means of knowledge & actual knowledge" are not the same; & it was long ago decided in Kelly v. Solari, No. 487, post, that money honestly paid under a mistake in facts could be recovered back, although the person paying it did not avail himself of means of knowledge which he possessed. [This is] the general principle of the law as to payments made under mistake in fact (LORD SHAW OF DUNFERMLINE).—JONES (R. E.), LTD. v. WARING & GILLOW, LTD., [1926] A. C. 670; 95 L. J. K. The officer not being able to meet with S. & J. paid the amount of the levy to the under-sheriff, who without any instructions from S. & J. remitted the money to A. in London, whose name was indorsed on the warrant. A. refused to pay the money over to the client, claiming to apply it in reduction of the general balance due from S. & J. for agency business:—Held: on these facts there was no privity of contract to support an action by the client against A. for money had & received to his use. But it appearing that the money had been paid in the first instance to the town agent under a mistake, & retained by him against the express directions of S. & J., the ct. made absolute a rule obtained by the client to compel the town agent to refund the money.—ROBBINS v. FENNELL (1847), 11 Q. 472. Money coming accidentally to payee's hands.]—A country attorney was employed to obtain judgment & execution upon a warrant of attorney. The London agents of that country attorney issued writs of execution, & sent them to the under-sheriff in the country, with a direction to call upon the country attorney for instructions. The levy was made, & £166 3*s.*, the proceeds thereof, was paid by the under-sheriff to the bankers of the London agents, he having first sent to the country attorney & not found him at home. The London agents then wrote to the country attorney informing him that the money had been remitted to them, & inquiring what they should do with it. The answer to that letter was not produced; but a second letter from the London agents to the country agents to the country attorney was produced, in which they expressed their surprise at being required to refund that money, & their intention of retaining it to satisfy a general balance due from the country attorney to the London agents. The country attorney expressly stated that the London agents held the money without his authority, & against his consent. Upon a summary application to compel the London agents to repay the money to pltf.:—Held: although under ordinary circumstances there is no privity between the London agent & the client in the country, so as to make the former

This money did not come into the hands of the town agents merely as such town agents; it came directly from the under-sheriff to them, & out of the ordinary course; indeed, so much out of the ordinary course that they immediately wrote to the country attorney to know what they are to do with it. . . . 487. ——.] — (1) Money paid by pltf. to deft. under a bonâ fide forgetfulness of facts which disentitled deft. to receive it, may be recovered back in an action for money had & received.

(2) It is not sufficient to preclude a party from recovering money paid by him under a mistake of fact, that he had the means of knowledge of the fact; unless he paid it intentionally, not choosing to investigate the fact.

I think that where money is paid to another under the influence of a mistake, that is, upon the supposition that a specific fact is true, which would entitle the other to the money, but which fact is untrue, & the money would not have been paid if it had been known to the payer that the fact was untrue, an action will lie to recover it back, & it is against conscience to retain it, though a demand may be necessary in those cases in which a party receiving may have been ignorant of the mistake.

If indeed money is intentionally paid, without reference to the truth or falsehood of the fact, pltf. meaning to waive all inquiry into it & that the person receiving shall have the money in all events, the latter is certainly entitled to retain it; but if it is paid under the impression of the truth of a fact which is untrue, it may, generally speaking, be recovered back, however careless the party paying may have been in omitting to use due diligence to inquire into the fact (PARKE, B.).—KELLY v. SOLARI (1841), 9 M. & W. 54; 11 L. 491. ——.] — Cotton was shipped at Madras, consigned to London for pltfs., merchants residing at Liverpool. The bills of lading expressed the freight to be "at the rate of £2 5*s.* per ton of 50 cubic feet as per margin." The margin contained a note of the measurement of the cotton, & of the amount of freight calculated accordingly. On the arrival of the ship the cotton was bonded at a wharf in London, & pltfs.' brokers sent copies of the bills of lading to the wharfinger, & also to pltfs. at Liverpool. The wharfinger in the ordinary course of business measured the cotton & sent a note of the measurement to defts., who were the ship's brokers, one of them being the sole owner of the ship. Defts. thereupon made out a freight note, calculating the freight according to the London measurement, which was larger than the Madras measurement, & forwarded it to pltfs.' brokers, who paid the amount & were credited therewith by pltfs., their principals, the latter having the bills of lading in their possession at the time. After the lapse of nearly two years pltfs. settled their accounts with their agents at Madras, & the mistake was discovered. Pltfs. then sued defts. for the amount of freight overpaid. Defts. had in the meantime settled the ship's account for the voyage with the owner. There was perfect bona fides on both sides:—Held: the money having been paid by pltfs. under a mistake, they were entitled to recover it back from the owner of the ship, but not from defts. the ship's brokers.—SHAND v. GRANT (1863), 15 C. SUB-SECT. 6.—WAIVER OF INQUIRY.

503. General rule — Money not recoverable.] — C., a trader, on June 5, 1838, assigned his effects in trust for the benefit of creditors. On the same day, but before the execution of the assignment, a fi. fa. against C. was delivered to the sheriff's agent in London, under which a sheriff's officer levied upon his goods on June 6. The trustees under the assignment paid him the amount of the levy under protest, & he withdrew from possession. It afterwards appeared that C. had committed an act of bkpcy. on June 2, upon which a fiat issued on June 18:—Held: the trustees could not recover back from the sheriff the money so paid by them to the officer, as having been paid under a mistake of fact.

The short answer, however, to the action is, that the money was not paid under a mistake of fact, but upon a speculation, the failure of which cannot entitle pltfs. to recover it back (LORD ABINGER, C.B.).—HARRIS v. LOYD (1839), 5 M. & W. 432; 9 L. J. Ex. 95; 151 E. R. 182.

action for money had & received, although pltf. had been guilty of laches in making the miscalculation. Where a party pays money under a mistake of fact, he is entitled to recover it back, although he may at the time of the payment have had means of knowledge of which he has neglected to avail himself.

T. purchased from C. his share in the business of an attorney, & covenanted to pay him by six half-yearly instalments the sum of £300 & the further sum of £450 at the end of six calendar months after the expiration of three years, subject to a proviso that if one moiety of the whole of the net profits of the business for the period of three years should not amount to £1,800, T. should be entitled to deduct from the £450 such a sum as should be equal to the difference between £1,800 & the amount of one moiety of the net profits. T. had access to all the accounts & examined them, & having come to the conclusion that the profits in the three years amounted to £1,800, paid the £450 to C. He afterwards ascertained that he had made an error in his calculation, & that the net profits were less than £1,800, & then brought an action to recover back the amount overpaid :—Held : such action could be maintained.

This does not fall within that class of cases where a man chooses to waive going into the accounts. He paid it because he believed the fact existed. If the agreement had been that the facts should be taken to have been conclusively ascertained at a certain time, then, even if that were impliedly stipulated, I think the party paying the money would not afterwards have been entitled to recover it (ERLE, C.J.).—TOWNSEND v. CROWDY (1860), 8 C. void, on the ground that it was drawn on an improper stamp. The indorser inspected the bill, & finding that the stamp was not that required for a bill of the same amount drawn in England, but ignorant of the fact that it had been drawn in Ireland, paid the amount to the holder:—Held: this was money paid in ignorance of the fact, & there being no laches imputable to the party who paid the money, he might recover it back in an action for money had & received.

(2) Money paid with a knowledge of the facts, but in ignorance of the law, cannot be recovered back, unless it be against good conscience to retain it. A party who has the means of knowledge of the facts, but neglects to avail himself of them, will be concluded as though he had actual knowledge.

(3) If a fact is bonâ fide, but incorrectly, stated by one party to another, who therefore pays money under a belief of the accuracy of that fact, & the means of knowledge as to its correctness are as much within the reach of one party as the other, the party who has paid the money may recover it back on a discovery of the mistake, provided it would be against good conscience that it should be retained.—MILNES v. DUNCAN (1827), 6 B. & C. 671; 9 Dow. & Ry. A promissory note for the amount of the valuation, after deducting £2,000 paid on account, was given by pltf. to deft.; & pltf. entered into possession. On the occasion of his selling his interest in the farm to a third person, pltf. discovered that errors had been made in the former valuation, by including items that ought not by the custom of the country to have been valued to him, & items that did not exist. He nevertheless paid the promissory note at maturity without objection. Afterwards, without having given deft. any information as to the nature of his complaint of the valuation, & without having made any demand, he brought this action for money had & received:—Held: pltf. could not recover.

(1) (KELLY, C.B., & MARTIN, B.), the conduct of pltf. had made it impossible to restore the parties to their original condition or to do justice between them, & therefore pltf. could not maintain an action for money had & received.

(2) (MARTIN & BRAMWELL, BB.), to enable a pltf. to maintain an action for money paid by mistake, as money had & received by deft., notice of the mistake must have been given to the deft. & a demand made.

It appears to me, therefore, that this case does not come within the principle upon which the action for money had & received, to recover money paid by mistake, is maintainable. That principle is clear & simple in the extreme. No man should by law be deprived of his money, which he has parted with under a mistake, & where it is against justice & conscience that the receiver should retain it (KELLY, C.B.).—FREEMAN v. JEFFRIES (1869), L. 533. ——.] —By certain military regulations officers in the Royal Air Force were on demobilisation entitled to a gratuity varying in amount according to circumstances. If their names were on a certain list, called the Emergency List, they were only entitled to a gratuity at a lower rate than if they were not on that list. Deft. was a demobilised officer of the Royal Air Force. Pltfs., who acted as Govt.'s agents for the payment (inter alia) of gratuities to demobilised officers of that force, in ignorance of the fact that deft. was on the Emergency List, but also in forgetfulness of the regulation which provided that the gratuities of officers on the Emergency List should be paid at the lower rate, & not appreciating the materiality of an officer being on that list, paid deft. his gratuity at the higher rate to which he would have been entitled if he had not been on that list. More than a year afterwards, & before notice of the mistake, deft. spent the money. In an action to recover back the excess payment as money paid under a mistake of fact :—Held : (1) pltfs.' mistake was not a mistake of fact causing the payment; (2) as deft. had been led by pltfs.' conduct to believe that he might treat the money as his own, & in that belief had altered his position by spending it, pltfs. were estopped from alleging that it was paid under a mistake.

The provisions of Order 263 of 1919 appear to have been altogether overlooked. Pltfs.' mistake, if any, is one of law; it resulted from a failure to apply what is now said to be the true construction of the Orders relating to gratuities to deft.'s case. Pltfs. consequently cannot recover (BANKES, L.J.).—HOLT v. MARKHAM, [1923] 1 K. B. 504; 92 L. J. K. B. 406; 128 L. T. 719 67 Sol. Jo. 314, C. A.

SUB-SECT. 11.—ACTUAL PAYMENT UNNECESSARY.

537. Whether actual payment essential — Sum credited in account.]—The paymaster of a military corps had given credit in account to an officer in that corps from Jan. 1, 1817, to Nov. 5, 1820, for certain increased pay, erroneously supposed to be granted by a general order of Aug. 27, 1806, to an officer of his situation, & a statement of that account was delivered to the officer in 1821. In Dec. 1816, the paymasters were informed by the board of ordnance that the increased pay granted by the order of 1806 would not be allowed to persons in the situation of the officer in question. The paymasters did not communicate this information to the officer until 1821, & subsequently to that time they continued to receive his pay. In an action brought by his personal representative to recover such pay :—Held : it was not competent to the paymaster to retain any of such sums of money on account of the sums which they had credited him for by way of increased pay, & which they had allowed him to consider his own for so long a period of time.

I think they cannot now be permitted to say, that the money which they allowed him in account as money received by them to his use, was not money received to his use (BAYLEY, J.).—SKYRING v. GREENWOOD (1825), 4 B. & C. 281; 6 Dow. & Ry. K. B. 401; 107 E. R. 1064.

558. ——.]—The landlord of a dwelling-house, to which Increase of Rent & Mortgage (War Restriction) Act, 1915 (c. 97), applied, in Mar. 1915, increased the tenant's rent by 6*d.* a week. The tenant paid the increased rent &, in ignorance of the Act, continued to do so until Jan. 31, 1916. Having then become aware of the Act, he deducted from his subsequent payment of rent the total amount of the increase over the standard rent which he had paid between Nov. 25, 1915, & Jan. 31, 1916. In an action by the landlord to recover the amount so deducted:—Held: although the Act provided that the increase beyond the standard rent was not recoverable by the landlord if the tenant had not paid it, yet the tenant, having paid it under mistake of law, was not entitled to recover it from the landlord in any shape or form.

On the facts I have stated the money was paid under a perfectly legal contract, & while it is true that it was continued to be paid at a time when the sum had become irrecoverable by law, neither party knew of this, & neither party put any pressure on the other to continue to pay. Under these circumstances it seems to me the right to repayment does not come within any of the common law doctrines; & it is not conferred by the express words of the Act; & for these reasons I think that the sum cannot be recovered (SCRUTTON, L.J.).—SHARP BROTHERS & KNIGHT v. CHANT, [1917] 1 K. 562. —— Subsequent declaration of law by court.]—Pltfs., as owners, chartered a steamer to defts. to bring to West Hartlepool a cargo of pit props, to be "taken from alongside at the charterers' risk & expense as customary." The custom at West Hartlepool varied according as the discharge was to be into railway wagons or on to the quay. In this case the discharge was into railway wagons, & the props, after being swung over the wagons by a crane, had to be stowed in the wagons. Pltfs. & defts. settled accounts on the basis that pltfs. were liable for the whole cost of discharge, but afterwards it was held in The Rensfjell (1924), 40 T. L. R. 458, that by the custom at West Hartlepool from the moment when the cargo was released from the sling the cost of handling it & stowing it in the wagons fell on the charterers. The shipowners, therefore, in this action sought to recover from the charterers such share of the cost of discharge as ought to have been borne by the latter, the claim being for breach of contract in not providing the men to stow the cargo, & alternatively for money paid to defts.' use:—Held: as both parties believed it to be the duty of pltfs. to provide the men for stowage & therefore, defts. had not committed a breach of contract, & as pltfs. had made a voluntary payment under the mistaken belief that they were liable to make it, the action failed.—AKT. 567. —— Liability of negligent solicitor.]—In an administration action a fund belonging to the children of R. who should attain twenty-one or marry was carried over to "the account of the issue or children of R. deceased." The fund in Jan. 1884, consisted of £4,387 10*s.* 3*d.* Consols & £195 19*s.* 4*d.* cash. B., managing clerk of the firm of solrs. conducting the action, knew that R. died leaving one daughter, who would attain twenty-one in Dec. 1886. He retained L. as solr. on behalf of the daughter to get the fund out, saying he had authority. A summons was taken out in chambers, & B. having produced an affidavit that the daughter was of age, an order was made by the chief clerk on Jan. 28, 1884, for transfer & payment to the daughter. B. got the usual form of power of attorney from the Paymaster-General, & it was apparently executed by the daughter of R. in favour of L., but in reality it was forged. L. obtained payment, & after deducting one-half of one-sixth of the fund & other expenses, pursuant to an agreement between him & B., paid the remainder to B. on an authority apparently signed by the daughter of R., but really forged. L. never saw the daughter of R., & had no communication with her. The daughter of R. never saw B., & never gave any authority to B. B. absconded. In Dec. 1886, when the daughter of R. attained twenty-one, she presented a petition to the Lord Chancellor under Court of Chancery Funds Act, 1872 (c. 44), s. 5, for a certificate under that sect. in order that the fund might be replaced out of the Consolidated Fund. Upon the hearing of this petition on Dec. 14, 1887, counsel for the Treasury contended that the application should not go until petitioner had herself obtained a proper order from the ct. for payment out of the fund to her, & the Paymaster-General had failed to comply with such order. This was a petition to discharge the order of Jan. 28, 1884, & for payment out of the sums above-mentioned, & the interest & dividends. The petition was served on the Comrs. of Her Majesty's Treasury, & the Paymaster-General, & upon L. :—Held : the order of Jan. 28, 1884, must be discharged, & an order now be made that the sums of £4,387 10*s.* 3*d.* Consols & £195 19*s.* 4*d.* cash, & such further sums as would have been standing to the credit of the account, if the order of Jan. 28, 1884, had not been made, should be respectively transferred & paid to petitioner, & L. should within two months from the date of the present order pay into ct. to the account of the Paymaster-General the sum of £4,387 10*s.* 3*d.* Consols & £195 19*s.* 4*d.* cash, & such other sums as should be payable to the petitioner under the present order.—SLATER v. SLATER (1888), [1897] 1 Ch. 222, n.; 58 L. A petition was afterwards presented on behalf of L. for the purpose of getting her legacy transferred to a separate account & of obtaining payment of the dividends to her. The petition did not state that the fund in ct. represented the two legacies, & in consequence of this omission, & of the amount of the fund proposed to be dealt with being stated in blank, an order was erroneously made upon the petition, under which the whole fund was transferred to the account of L.'s legacy & the dividends paid to her during her life. The solr. who acted for the trustees on the occasion of the payment into ct. also acted for petitioners, & had the carriage of the whole proceedings. After L.'s death M. attained twenty-one, & presented a petition for payment out of ct. of her legacy, with the accumulated dividends thereon :—Held : the estate of L. was primarily liable for the amount of the dividends erroneously paid to her; but, failing her estate, the solr. was personally liable to make good to M. any deficiency there might be, & to pay all the costs occasioned by the mistake as between solr. & client.—Re DANGAR'S TRUSTS (1889), 41 Ch. Previously to the presentation of a petition for the winding up of a co., the sheriff was in possession of goods of the co. which he had seized under writs of fi. fa. Subsequently to the presentation of the petition, the sheriff, in the honest belief that he was justified in so doing, seized the money paid at the doors of the co.'s theatre, & thereout paid the execution creditors, & his own costs, & handed a small sum to the provisional liquidator, who accepted the same. The sheriff afterwards gave up possession of the goods. 577. Retention of funds in payer's hands—As against official receiver.]—Bkpt. having mortgaged two fishing boats to some fish salesmen to secure his current account with them, & having subsequently failed in his business, the mtgees. offered to pay his creditors a composition which nearly all the creditors agreed to accept, &, after having notice that the debtor had committed an act of bkpcy. they paid this composition in good faith to the assenting creditors, believing that they were entitled under their mtge. to add the money so paid to their security. They then sold the fishing boats, & claimed to retain the balance of the proceeds of sale, after paying themselves the amount due on their mtge. at the date of the act of bkpcy. on account of the composition paid to the creditors. The official receiver applied that the balance might be paid over to him:—Held: the mere fact that the mtgees. were not familiar with the working of the bkpcy. law was not a ground for precluding the official receiver from insisting on his right to treat this balance as part of the debtor's estate, & the money ought to be paid over to him.

If the payment of the money into ct. by the co. gives pltfs. at law the right of taking the money out of ct., I do not see there is any equity to restrain them. In each of the three succeeding years, similar demand notes for one-third only were sent to & paid by the co., notwithstanding that they continued to be correctly rated in the rate book at the full net annual value. In the fifth year the overseers discovered the mistake, & sought to recover from the co. the unpaid two-thirds for each of the four preceding years, as arrears under 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, s. 11:—Held: the money sought to be recovered was arrears within 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, s. 11, & the overseers were not estopped from recovering it by reason of the delivery of the incorrect demand notes by their predecessors.

It was said that the case came within the rule of Skyring v. Greenwood, No. 537, ante, that money allowed in account under a mistake of law cannot be recovered back, & that the non demand of the two-thirds was equivalent to an allowance in account. But I do not think that this could in any sense be treated as an allowance in account. The money was not allowed; it was merely not claimed. I can see no reason why the money should not be paid (SMITH, J.).—R. v. BLENKINSOP, [1892] 1 Q. B. 43; 61 L. J. M. C. 45; 66 L. T. 187; 56 J. P. 246; 40 W. R. 272, D. C.

4. —— ——.]—Money has no earmark, & if invested in land or other things it cannot be pursued; therefore if a receiver of rents, or if an exor. in trust lays out the rents or the assets in a purchase of lands in fee, & dies insolvent, the purchase will not be liable; but where A. receives a sum of money, which he covenants to lay out in land to be settled to certain uses, & afterwards purchases an estate which he does not settle, but does by writing own that this purchase was made with the trust money, this binds the estate, & is a declaration of trust.—DEG v. DEG (1727), 2 P. 5. —— ——.] — It has been quaintly said, "that the reason why money cannot be followed is, because it has no earmark": but this is not true. The true reason is, upon account of the currency of it: it cannot be recovered after it has passed in currency. So, in case of money stolen, the true owner cannot recover it, after it has been paid away fairly & honestly upon a valuable & bonâ fide consideration: but before money has passed in currency, an action may be brought for the money itself (LORD MANSFIELD, C.).—MILLER v. RACE (1758), 1 Burr. 452; 2 Keny. 189; 96 E. 6. —— ——.] — The dictum that money has no earmark must be understood in the same way; i.e. as predicated only of an undivided & undistinguishable mass of current money. But money in a bag, or otherwise kept apart from other money, guineas, or other coin marked, if the fact were so, for the purpose of being distinguished, are so far earmarked as to fall within the rule on this subject, which applies to every other description of personal property whilst it remains, as the property in question did, in the hands of the factor, or his general legal representatives (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—TAYLOR v. PLUMER (1815), 3 M. & S. 562; 2 Rose, 457; 105 E. 7. —— ——.] — It may be that the true meaning of the saying that money has no earmark is that when current coins of the realm have passed bonâ fide from hand to hand as currency & as money they are considered, for all purposes of property in them, not to be identifiable. They become merely so much money in the possession of the person to whom they have passed. If it is a sovereign, then for all purposes of the property twenty shillings or eight half-crowns are the legal equivalent of the sovereign. If the payment to the man has been made in error the right against him is, as a rule, merely to recover so much money, & not the identical coins. . . . The point only arises upon the passing of the coins from one person to another as money. The doctrine that money has no earmark, whatever it means, is undoubtedly a doctrine of our law (CHANNELL, J.).—MOSS v. HANCOCK, [1899] 2 Q. B. 111; 68 L. J. Q. B. 657; 80 L. T. 693; 63 J. 8. —— ——.] — A building society, formed under the Building Societies Act, 1836 (c. 32), with powers of borrowing, in addition to the legitimate business of a building society, established & developed a banking business on a large scale, which was admitted to be ultra vires. A winding-up order was made, & the assets of the society, after payment of the outside creditors & the costs, were more than sufficient to pay the members in full, but were not sufficient to pay them & also the depositors in the bank in full:—Held: the depositors could not maintain an action for money had & received in respect of the money borrowed by the society ultra vires, but they could recover money which they could trace into the hands of the society as actually existing assets, & on this footing the members of the society & the depositors were entitled to rank pari passu in the distribution of the assets, in proportion to the amounts properly credited to them in respect of their advances.

The difficulty of establishing a title in rem in this case arises from the apparent difficulty of following money. In most cases money cannot be followed. When sovereigns or bank notes are paid over as currency, so far as the payer is concerned, they cease ipso facto to be the subjects of specific title as chattels. If a sovereign or bank note be offered in payment it is, under ordinary circumstances, no part of the duty of the person receiving it to inquire into title. The reason of this is that chattels of such a kind form part of what the law recognises as currency, & treats as passing from hand to hand in point not merely of possession, but of property. It would cause great inconvenience to commence if in this class of chattel an exception were not made to the general requirement of the law as to title. But the exception is not extended beyond the limits which necessity imposes. If money in a bag is stolen, & can be identified in the form in which it was stolen, it can be recovered in specie. Even if it has been expended by the person who has wrongfully taken it in purchasing some particular asset, that asset, if capable of being earmarked as purchased with the money, can be claimed by the true owner of the money. This is a principle not merely of equity, but of the common law (LORD HALDANE, C.).—SINCLAIR v. BROUGHAM, [1914] A. C. 398; 83 L. J. Ch. 465; 111 L. T. 1; 30 T. L. R. 315; 58 Sol. Jo. 302, H. 9. —— ——.] — Deft. H., having possessed himself of crossed cheques which were drawn on pltf. bank in his favour & which purported to be drawn by his employer's authority defrauded his employer by paying them into a bank, which collected them & credited H. with the amounts. H. drew out these amounts & paid some of the money without valuable consideration to deft. S., who in turn paid into her account with deft. bank a portion of what she so received. S. had no notice of any defect in H.'s title, & she never paid into her account with deft. bank any money except money which was part of the proceeds of H.'s frauds. In an action for a declaration that the money standing to the credit of S. with deft. bank was the property of pltf. bank:—Held: on the assumption that H. obtained a voidable title to the proceeds of the cheques, yet pltf. bank had established their right to the money claimed, as it was capable of being traced.—BANQUE BELGE POUR L'ETRANGER v. HAMBROUCK, [1921] 1 K. 11. Abroad—Notes issued by recognised government.]—The only question in the case was what at the present time was Russian currency. It was really a question rather for the Foreign Office than for a judge, but he must give the best opinion that he could on it. In his view metal coinage was excluded. The Imperial rouble notes were currency; & as the Kerensky Govt. was a successor of the Tsar's Govt., &, while it was in existence, was recognised throughout Russia & by our own Govt., he thought that Kerensky notes also must be considered currency. Bolshevist notes were on a different footing; the Bolshevist Govt. had never exercised authority over the whole country & had never been recognised by England; he thought, therefore, that Bolshevist notes must be ruled out. The result was that defts. must pay in London such a sum in English currency as was represented by the number of roubles held by them, treating both Imperial notes & Kerensky notes, at the respective values, as Russian currency (BAILHACHE, J.).—LINDSAY, GRACIE & Co. v. RUSSIAN BANK FOR FOREIGN TRADE (1918), 34 T. L. R. 443.

12. —— Treasury notes made legal tender by foreign government.]—In an action brought to administer the trusts of a fund settled by an indenture dated Mar. 23, 1887, an inquiry was ordered whether the persons who had become entitled on the death of the tenant for life, who died on Jan. 19, 1920, to shares of the trust fund, which was represented by a fund in ct., had encumbered their shares. The master by his certificate, dated Nov. 24, 1922, found that F. had not encumbered her share, that Edwin von B. had absolutely assigned his share to M., who, on Nov. 23, 1911, had assigned it by way of mtge. to a Dutch bank to secure the repayment of a sum of German reichsmarks, & that Egon von B. had, on Feb. 12, 1906, also assigned by way of mtge. his share to another Dutch bank to secure the repayment of a sum of German reichsmarks. The master further found that there were due to the Dutch banks certain sums in German reichsmarks. On further consideration the ct. was asked to apportion the mtge. security in the proper proportions between the mtgors. & mtgees., & it was therefore necessary to convert the sums found due in reichsmarks into English currency. At the date of the execution of the mtges. the creditors could under German law have insisted on payment in gold, but by a German Imperial Statute of Aug. 4, 1924, it was provided that Imperial Treasury notes should be legal tender & that any agreement made before July 31, 1914, for the payment of any debt in gold should, until further order, not be binding on the debtor, & no further order had been made:—Held: (1) the loans were loans of foreign money, involving on the one side an obligation to pay, & on the other side an obligation to accept payment in whatever at the date of repayment was legal tender & legal currency in the foreign country whose money was lent, & the covenants to pay specified sums in reichsmarks were satisfied under the German law now in force, by the payment in Treasury notes of sums so specified. (2) The date for the conversion of the sums of money found due in marks into English currency was the date of the master's certificate.—Re CHESTERMAN'S TRUSTS, MOTT v. BROWNING, [1923] 2 Ch. 466; 93 L. 14. —— ——.] — R. became a partner in a mercantile house in Ireland, in the year 1801, & having no ready money to bring into the firm, & being in London, he obtained from N. & co., London bankers', a credit for £10,000, by giving them his bonds, with warrants of attorney to confess judgments to secure the payment of the loan. Four bonds, drawn on Irish stamps by the London bankers' law agent in Ireland, were executed there by R., who resided in Ireland, & had large estates there, & none elsewhere. Each of the bonds was expressed to be for the sum of £5,000, conditioned for the payment of £2,500 "sterling, good & lawful money of Great Britain, with legal interest." The last of them was payable in Mar. 1804. The warrant of attorney to each bond was expressed to be to confess a judgment upon a bond for £5,000 "sterling, good & lawful money of Great Britain, with legal interest of like lawful money of Great Britain." The judgments were entered up in the Ct. of K. B., in Dublin, in the usual form, & had the word sterling only. The £10,000 put to R.'s credit, in the London bank, was applied in paying, in London, by R.'s direction, bills drawn by his partners in Ireland. Payments on account were made by R. & his agents to N. & co.'s law agent in Dublin, in Irish currency, & he acknowledged these payments. The assignee of the securities, several years after, filed a bill in Ireland, against R.'s heir-at-law & exor., claiming full principal & interest; & thereupon a question was raised, whether the debt was to be repaid in English or Irish currency, & with English or Irish interest :—Held: the sums secured by the bonds should be treated as principal money of English currency, bearing English interest, payable in London, with exchanges on the payments made by R. on foot of the bonds at the rate of the day on which such payments were made.—NOEL v. ROCHFORT (1836), 4 Cl. & Fin. 158; 10 Bli. 15. Salary payable at such place & in such manner as directed—Unpaid bills drawn in foreign currency—Claim in liquidation in English currency.]—By an agreement entered into in England between the manager of a co. carrying on business in Chile & the co. it was provided that he should be paid an annual salary, at the rate of £1,000 sterling, by monthly payments, "at such place or places & in such manner as he may direct." The manager, while the co. was carrying on business, drew bills upon them from time to time for the monthly payments of his salary payable in Chile in Chilian dollars, in an amount of dollars that would at those dates, at the then rate of exchange, be equivalent to the amount of his sterling claim. These drafts were not paid by the co.; & on the co. subsequently going into liquidation the manager claimed to prove in the liquidation for the amounts of the unpaid instalments calculated in pounds sterling, the rate of exchange having fallen since the dates when the bills were drawn :—Held: the co. not having paid the manager in the manner in which he "directed" by drawing the bills, his position was that of a person whose salary, at the rate of £1,000 per annum, was unpaid; & he was entitled to prove for his unpaid salary at the sterling rate.—Re TALTAL CHILE NITRATE CO., LTD. 16. Mortgage debt — Money of same kind as that lent.]—An English bank obtained a loan from a Russian bank on the security of certain bonds. A question having arisen upon the construction of the contract whether the loan was repayable in roubles or in sterling, the borrowers commenced an action against the lenders in the K. B. Div., which was transferred to the Commercial Ct., claiming a declaration that they were entitled to the possession of the bonds upon payment of the amount of the loan in roubles, & an injunction restraining the lenders from parting with the bonds save by delivery of the same to the borrowers against such payment. The judge held, upon the construction of the correspondence as pleaded, that the loan was repayable in sterling & dismissed the action. The Ct. of Appeal, after allowing an amendment which let in some further correspondence, declared that the loan was repayable in roubles, & gave liberty to the borrowers to take proceedings in the Ch. Div. to redeem their securities, but granted no further relief in the action :—Held: the loan was repayable in roubles, &, notwithstanding that the action, being an action for relief which was incidental to a redemption action, was brought in the wrong ct., there was in the circumstances no ground for interfering with the discretion of the Ct. of Appeal in making the declaration or in allowing the amendment.—RUSSIAN COMMERCIAL & INDUSTRIAL BANK v. BRITISH BANK FOR FOREIGN TRADE, LTD., [1921] 2 A. 17. —— ——.]— Pltfs., a British bank, obtained from defts., a Russian bank, on the security of certain bonds, a loan of 750,000 Russian roubles, in June, 1914, when the currency was based on the gold rouble. At that time 750,000 Russian roubles represented £78,206, but subsequently they became almost valueless owing to the issue of paper currency uncovered by gold. In an action for redemption :—Held: the loan was repayable in paper roubles issued by the authority of the Russian Govt. & in use at the material date, & upon payment of the principal & interest in roubles & of the costs in English money pltfs. were entitled to redemption.

If he [the mtgor.] made repayment in full in the kind of money actually advanced to him—paper roubles issued by the authority of the Russian Govt.—it did not matter whether that paper money was legal tender in or out of Russia. . . . A further defence was that the debt was repayable at expiration of nine months from the date of the loan, & that from that date pltfs. were in default & could only redeem by payment of a sum equivalent to the value of 750,000 roubles at the rate of exchange current at that date. . . . Pltf. could not have been called upon to repay except in exchange for their securities, which being in Belgium could not be forthcoming. . . . The authorities as to the date when rate of exchange has to be taken, which had been cited, did not apply. . . . Defts. said pltfs. in a redemption action sought equitable relief & must act equitably . . . & in my opinion in the case of a loan of paper roubles the risk of depreciation or the benefit of appreciation lies with the lender (RUSSELL, J.). —BRITISH BANK FOR FOREIGN TRADE, LTD. v. RUSSIAN COMMERCIAL & INDUSTRIAL BANK (1921), 38 T. 26. —— Mortgage on colonial land.] — A., resident at Amsterdam, being possessed of property in Essequibo, in British Guiana, sold it to B., & took, as part of the consideration money, a first mtge. for 100,000 guilders "Holland currency," with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. The terms of the mtge. were, that the 100,000 guilders were not to be paid during the life of A., but, upon her death, to her descendants, if she had any, &, if not, to the nephews & nieces of J.; but there was a special condition that, if at any time the interest should not be punctually paid every year in Amsterdam, & A. should be obliged to appoint an attorney to demand the same in the colony, the interest in that case should be at the rate of 6 per cent., instead of 5. The interest was allowed to fall in arrear, & A. appointed an attorney to recover it in the colony. A. married, & died in the year 1828, without leaving any descendants, at which time the interest was in arrear more than two years. In 1836 appcts. purchased this first mtge. together with all interest due thereon, from persons, who, by a decree of the ducal tribunal of Overgonne, the proper ct. for that purpose, were declared to be the attorneys of the persons described as the nephews & nieces of J. The consideration money paid by appcts. was not within several thousand pounds of the amount then due upon the mtge., including interest. In 1837 appcts. received from the slave comrs., in respect of the first mtge., a sum more than sufficient to repay them what they gave for the mtge., but much less than what was then actually due upon the mtge. In 1838 the mtged. estate was sold, at the suit of a second mtgee., &, in the proceedings arising out of that suit, it was decided by the Supreme Ct. of Civil Justice in the colony that the second mtgee. was preferent over the first, & rejected the claims of appcts. The decision of the ct. below was founded upon the supposition that the Lex Anastasiana, by which an assignee for valuable consideration of a debt cannot recover more than the consideration which he actually paid to the assignor, with legal interest from the time of payment, & that the debt was settled by the money received from the slave comrs.:—Held: (1) in the absence of any fraud by appcts. in the purchase of the mtge., & in the absence of any authority to show that the Lex Anastasiana prevails in the colony, the amount of consideration-money given by appcts. was not to enter into the question.

(2) The operation of the condition for increasing the interest from 5 to 6 per cent. was not limited to the lifetime of A., but circumstances might make it inequitable to increase the rate of interest after the death of A., or during some portion of time after A.'s death.

(3) By the term "Holland currency" coupled with the fact that it was to be paid in Amsterdam, meant Dutch currency, & not colonial currency.—MACRAE v. GOODMAN (1846), 5 Moo. P. C. C. 315; 10 Jur. 555; 13 E. R. 512, P. C.

36. —— Contracted & payable in France — Sued for in England—Payment in France in French currency pending action.]—Deft., an English lady, having in 1914 contracted in France a debt to pltfs. of 18,035 francs, undertook to pay that sum to them in France in French money before the end of that year. Deft. did not pay the money within the time specified, & in Nov. 1919, by which date the value of the French franc as expressed in English currency had heavily fallen, pltfs. commenced an action against her in England on a specially indorsed writ claiming the amount of sterling which would have been the equivalent of 18,035 francs at the end of the year 1914. While the action was pending deft. went to France & paid in French money to the then hotel manager of pltfs. the sum of 18,035 francs. The manager, who did not know the amount of deft.'s debt, nor that an action had been begun, did not when taking the money intend to accept it in full satisfaction, & gave deft. a receipt as for money deposited with him. By French law interest is not payable on money due in the absence of an express agreement to pay it. Deft. then pleaded that after action brought she had satisfied pltfs.' claim by payment. On the question whether upon the facts above stated that plea had been established:—Held: the debt, being payable in France, in French currency, did not cease to be a French debt by reason of its being sued for in England, & as, if the action had been brought in France, the payment made would have been a good discharge of the debt notwithstanding the depreciation of the French franc as expressed in English currency since the date when the money became due, that payment must equally be a good discharge of the debt for the purposes of the English action; & pltfs. were entitled to recover no more than nominal damages for the non-payment at the due date, & the costs of action down to plea pleaded.—SOCIÉTÉ DES HÔTELS LE TOUQUET-PARIS-PLAGE v. CUMMINGS, [1922] 1 K. 37. Bill drawn in England—Payable abroad—Dishonoured abroad.]—Where a bill, drawn & endorsed in England, & payable abroad, is dishonoured by the acceptor's non-payment, the holder is entitled, as against the drawer, to the amount of the re-exchange, that is, the value at the rate of exchange on the day of the dishonour, of the sum expressed on the face of the bill in the currency of the place where it is payable, with interest & expenses.

In an action against the drawer on a bill so drawn, accepted & dishonoured:—Held: evidence is not admissible to prove a usage among merchants here to entitle the holder, at his option, to demand from the drawer the amount of the re-exchange, or the sum which he gave him for the purchase of the bill, this being a usage which in terms contradict the written instrument.—SUSE v. POMPE (1860), 8 C. SUB-SECT. 2.—CLAIM OR DAMAGES IN FOREIGN CURRENCY.

A. In General.

38. Whether principle differs for liquidated or unliquidated amounts.]—In an action by a German subject for the balance of an account due for goods sold & delivered to defts. in England the question arose, the original price being in marks, as to the date on which the rate of exchange at which the goods should be paid for should be fixed:—Held: the rate of exchange to be taken must be that prevailing on the date on which the debt became due & payable, & not that prevailing on the date of judgment in the action.

In practice, the theory that the rate to be taken should be that prevailing at the date of the judgment would lead to great inconvenience, & it would not be in accordance with the principle adopted in cases of tort or breach of contract (ROWLATT, J.). —ULIENDAHL v. PANKHURST, WRIGHT & CO. 39. Whether principle differs where damages for breach of contract or for tort.]—In an action arising out of a collision between an English ship & an Italian ship both ships were held to blame & the cross-claims for damages were agreed, subject to a question raised by the owners of the Italian ship as to the rate of exchange in respect of a claim calculated in Italian lire for detention during the period that the ship was undergoing repairs :—Held : the proper date for ascertaining the rate of exchange for the purpose of converting the amount payable into English currency was the date at which the detention occurred.

A judgment, whether for breach of contract or for tort, where, as in this case, the damage is not continuing, does not proceed by determining what is the sum which, without regarding other circumstances, would at the time of the hearing afford compensation for the loss, but what was the loss actually proved to have been incurred either at the time of the breach or in consequence of the wrong (LORD BUCKMASTER).

In the case of contract no doubt the parties may agree to make an alteration of exchange subsequent to the breach of contract an element in the assessment of damages, but in the absence of any such agreement, the same considerations would be applicable whether the action is based on tort or on contract (LORD PARMOOR).—S.S. 54. —— ——.] — A bank in England, hereinafter called the bank, contracted with appcts., a German bank, to deliver to appcts. on Dec. 31, 1920, specific amounts of American dollars & English pounds sterling against the delivery to the bank of specific amounts of Swiss francs & German marks. Appcts. performed their part of the contract, but the bank failed to deliver either the dollars or the sterling. On Jan. 6, 1921, the bank suspended payment, & on Jan. 25, 1921, a compulsory winding-up order was made & a liquidator was appointed. Appcts. in the meantime, namely, on Jan. 15, 1921, to put themselves in a position to fulfil their obligations to customers & to minimise their loss, purchased, as it was not disputed they were entitled to do, the American dollars & English sterling against the bank & paid therefor German marks at the market price ruling on that day. On May 19, 1921, appcts. at the invitation of the liquidator lodged their proof for a sum of English pounds sterling which represented the German marks converted into English currency at the rate of exchange ruling on Jan. 25, 1921, the date of the winding-up order. In Dec. 1921, the liquidator, in pursuance of Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (c. 69), s. 214, purchased the same number of marks as appcts. had expended in acquiring the undelivered currencies, & on Jan. 5, 1922, in spite of appcts.' proof tendered that sum of marks to appcts. in full satisfaction of their claim, which tender was refused. Owing to the rapid depreciation of the mark from & after Jan. 1921, the value of the marks converted into English currency at the date of the purchase & tender by the liquidator as compared with their value on Dec. 31, 1920, was approximately in the ratio of £5,000 to £20,000. Upon the application of appcts. that the liquidator be directed to admit their proof :—Held : the claim was for damages for breach of contract to deliver American dollars & English sterling & not for a debt in German marks, & on the authority of Re British American Continental Bank, Ltd., Goldzieher & Penso's Claim, No. 53, ante, appcts. were entitled to be admitted as creditors in the winding up for the value of the marks in English sterling at the rate of exchange ruling on Dec. 31, 1920, the date of the breach, & were not bound to accept the tender of the marks made on Jan. 5, 1922.—Re BRITISH AMERICAN CONTINENTAL BANK, LTD., LISSER & ROSENKRANZ'S CLAIM, [1923] 1 Ch. 276 ; 92 L. 56. Whether at date of judgment—Or at time of default.]—The rate of exchange at which a creditor is entitled to recover on account of money received under a specific authority, to be applied in a particular manner, is according to the rate at the time & place specified, where the default in payment was made & not at the time the judgment for the recovery of the sum is recorded.—BERTRAM v. DUHAMEL (1838), 2 Moo. When a pltf. sues a deft. in England on a contract made abroad, under which periodical payments in foreign currency ought to have been made to him in a foreign country, & the ct. orders an account, he is not entitled to have each periodical sum treated as converted into English money at the rate of exchange which prevailed at the date when the payment ought to have been made under the contract.

SUB-SECT. 4.—INSURANCE POLICIES.

62. Conversion at date of payment—"Profits" added at other rates of exchange.]—Pltf., Mrs. A., a widow, brought an action on a semi-tontine policy of insurance on the life of her husband, who died in Mar. 1922. Pltf. claimed a declaration that on the true construction of the policy she was entitled to payment of the sum insured, together with the surplus & profits, at the pre-war rate of exchange, or in gold marks. The policy was issued by deft. society on Feb. 18, 1887. Under the policy pltf. agreed to pay in London an initial premium of 2,149.80 reichsmarks, & thereafter quarterly payments of 570 reichsmarks for twenty years. Deft. society undertook to pay 60,000 reichsmarks on the death of the assured, Mr. A. The policy became fully paid in 1907. There were profit sharing rights when the policy became fully paid. Throughout the period of the policy deft. society had continued to keep their accounts as if there had been no violent fluctuations in the rate of exchange, &, in computing their contingent liabilities, they had treated the reichsmark as being at its pre-war value. After the death of her husband in 1922 pltf. brought the action. Defts. contended that they were liable to pay the amount of reichsmarks due under the policy only at the rate of exchange ruling on the day of payment, one billion reichsmarks being equivalent to one English shilling:—Held: on the true construction of the contract contained in the policy, the amount due under the policy must be paid by defts. in this country in sterling, & the amount of sterling to be paid was to be calculated on the basis of the rate of exchange between Germany & this country, prevailing on the day of payment & not at the pre-war rate.—ANDERSON v. EQUITABLE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF UNITED STATES (1926), 134 L. T. 557; 42 T. L. R. 302, C. A.

63. ——.]—Between 1903 & 1909, pltfs., who were Russian subjects, affected with defts., an American insurance co. then having a branch in Russia, certain insurances in the form of four endowment life policies & paid the premiums in Russia in roubles down to 1918. The amounts secured by two of the policies were now payable if the policies were still existent & enforceable, & it was admitted by both parties that the contracts were to be governed by Russian law. In an action claiming the amount due on the policies or the return of the premiums defts. contended that by the laws of Russia the policies had become void, as the Russian Govt. had in 1919 by decree cancelled all kinds of life insurance & transferred all premiums to the Govt. Treasury. Uncontradicted evidence was given for pltfs. that by a Russian law made in 1923 the People's Commissariat of Justice was charged with the "interpretation" of existing laws & that the Commissariat had interpreted the decree of 1919 as having no application to contracts of life assurance made by Russian subjects with companies having assets which were in the United States & which were not liable to confiscation in Russia:—Held: as the ct. could not, by putting its own construction on the term "interpretation," make for Russia a law which the Russian judicial system did not recognise, pltfs. were entitled to recover on the two policies above referred to, & judgment should be entered for the sterling equivalent of the amounts due in chervonetz roubles at the date when those amounts became due.—BUERGER v. NEW YORK LIFE ASSURANCE CO. 67. —— ——.]—Where a person borrows money for a certain period, with interest at a certain rate down to the day named, a contract for payment of interest at that rate after the day named is not to be implied. The principal & interest, if not then paid, become a debt, & any allowance for detention of non-payment made by any tribunal before which the payment may be sought, is in the nature of damages, not of interest. Although the rate of interest agreed on for the time certain is usually adopted as the proper measure of the damages for the subsequent delay, the tribunal may look at all the circumstances of the case, & award such a rate of interest as shall appear fair & reasonable. Where the holder of a warrant of attorney to enter judgment for a fixed sum on a day named, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per month & costs, did not enter up judgment, & did not, the maker of the instrument having died, make any definite claim against his debtor's estate for the space of four years & upwards :—Held : the tribunal before whom the claim at last came, was justified in awarding by way of damages such a rate of interest as the holder of the warrant of attorney would have been entitled to, according to the ordinary rule of the Ct. of Ch., had he entered up judgment on the day named in the defeasance to the warrant of attorney, namely, at the rate of 4 per cent.—COOK v. FOWLER (1874), L. 68. —— ——.]—Deft. agreed with pltf., his tenant of a mill, to purchase at a proper valuation at the expiration of the tenancy some machinery which pltf. was setting up in the mill, nothing being said about interest on the purchase-money. The tenancy expired at Michaelmas, 1885. Deft. refused to purchase the machinery, & in Feb. 1887, pltf. commenced an action for specific performance, not specifically mentioning in his statement of claim either interest or damages. The action was dismissed, but in Nov. 1888, the Ct. of Appeal reversed this decision & gave a judgment directing a reference to an official referee to ascertain the value & ordering deft. to pay it when ascertained. The question as to interest was not raised. Pltf. applied to vary the minutes by directing deft. to pay the value with interest from Michaelmas, 1885. The ct. made the order for payment of interest only from the referee's report & declined to decide anything further on that application but gave leave to pltf. if so advised to apply after the report for payment of prior interest. The report was made in Feb. 1889, & pltf. then applied to the ct. to order interest from Michaelmas, 1885 :—Held : pltf. was entitled by way of damages for delay, to interest at 4 per cent. on the amount of the valuation from Lady Day, 1886, on which day deft. had taken possession, pltf. having up to that time remained in possession rent free as caretaker.—MARSH v. JONES (1889), 40 Ch. SUB-SECT. 1.—AT COMMON LAW.

A. In General.

75. Liquidated sums generally.] — Interest is not allowable by law upon money lent generally, without a contract for it expressed or to be implied from the usage of trade, or from special circumstances, or from written securities for the payment of principal money at a given time.

It was said, indeed, in Blaney v. Hendrick, No. 90, post, that interest is due upon all liquidated sums from the instant the principal becomes due & payable. But those words must be taken in a restricted sense, & I must understand by them something more than an account stated. If an account be stated, & the nature of the transaction be such as to afford evidence of an agreement for interest, as if it be shown to have been allowed before upon a prior settlement of accounts, then it may be warranted (LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J.).—CALTON v. BRAGG (1812), 15 East, 223; 104 E. 99. ——.]—Interest is only payable on a sum of money, when there is an express promise to pay it, or it is due on a mercantile security, or it has been paid by the usage of trade. Therefore interest cannot be claimed on the amount of a policy of insurance on a life, which has not been paid for a long time after it ought to have been discharged.

The general practice of late years has been to allow interest only upon mercantile securities, such as promissory notes, & bills of exchange, which carry interest by the custom of merchants, or in those instances where interest is secured, by the express undertaking of the parties, or where such undertaking is implied from the usage of trade, or other circumstances. That is the general rule. . . . This is not one of those mercantile instruments which carry interest by law, & inasmuch as there was no promise express or implied, on the part of deft. to pay interest, I cannot hold that the jury ought to have been told they were bound to give interest (ABBOTT, C.J.).—HIGGINS v. SARGENT (1823), 2 B. & C. 348; 3 Dow. & Ry. 117. Debt or sum certain.]—Interest at 4 per cent. will be allowed on the amount of a demand for work & labour in an administration suit from the time when the demand for interest was made.

The question now is, whether by virtue of the demand of payment, & notice of his claim for interest, claimant is entitled to interest from the date of the notice? & that depends upon the question whether Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (c. 42), s. 28 applies. Now that sect. applies to debts or sums certain, & the question is, whether this is a debt or sum certain? In considering the case in reference to that & to the next sect., it appears to me that this is a case of a debt or sum certain & that claimant is entitled to interest at 4 per cent. from the date of his demand & notice (KINDERSLEY, V.-C.).—MILDMAY v. METHUEN (1854), 3 Drew. 91; 61 E. 118. ——.]—The arts. of a limited co. provided that, after certain sums had been paid, 10 per cent. of the residue of the net profits should be paid as remuneration to the directors, & that the ultimate residue of net profits, should be applied in paying such dividend on the ordinary shares, or in such manner as, subject to the regulations, a general meeting might determine. At a general meeting held in Apr. 1883, it was resolved that a sum treated as the balance of net profits should be dealt with in accordance with the last-mentioned provisions of the articles. It was objected that some of the items which were then treated as valuable had no substantial value, & that the directors could not, acting reasonably, take the view that they were valuable. The directors acted on the report of their auditor, & after consultation with him. The co. was wound up voluntarily in 1883, & all the creditors were paid in full, & certain directors claimed to be paid their shares of the 10 per cent. of the residue of the net profits, a claim which was opposed by the liquidator, on the ground that the assets were overestimated at the time the resolution was passed, & that the proposed distribution of the residue was in effect a payment of dividends out of capital: —Held: the directors were entitled to the 10 per cent. claimed, but without interest.

They had commenced actions for the first two sums, & obtained a verdict in an action for the last. Under these circumstances, deft., an attorney, but not employed as such in the business, induced pltfs. to stay proceedings for two months in the last action, & to allow judgment to be suffered by default in the other two, on which no execution was to issue for two months from Aug. 1, 1841. The consideration for this stay of proceedings was set out in a correspondence, from which it appeared, that deft. undertook that the money should be paid, whenever the necessary securities should be completed; stating at the same time the name of another party through whom the Ultimately, the third party in question refused to execute:—Held: on the effect of the whole circumstances & correspondence, deft. had rendered himself personally liable in respect of all these sums; also, interest on these sums, from Oct. 1, 1841, could not properly be allowed by a jury on the trial of the issue, under Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (c. 42), s. 28, as the sums were not payable by virtue of any written instrument at a certain time, nor had any demand of payment in writing, within the Act, been made; but, as to the former two sums, such jury would have been recommended to add the interest on them to the damages, independently of the statute. —HARPER v. WILLIAMS (1843), 4 Q. 122. —— —— ——.] — The contract between a railway co. & a contractor provided that payments should be made monthly, as the works proceeded, on the certificates of the co.'s engineer. There was no stipulation in the contract in reference to the payment of interest to the contractor on any sums due, but not paid to him. The contractor made a demand in writing for a sum as the balance due to him, & claimed interest thereon. His accounts were disputed, but on a bill filed by him against the co., the result showed that he was entitled to a balance less than one half of the sum which he had claimed to be due from the co.:—Held: the contractor was not entitled to interest either under the contract, there being no express stipulation on the part of the co. to pay any, or under Civil Procedure, 1833 (c. 42), s. 28, the demand in writing for payment not being of a sum certain payable at a certain time.—HILL v. SOUTH STAFFORDSHIRE RY. 123. —— —— ——.] — Where the instrument under which a sum is payable makes the day of payment depend on a future contingent event, such time is not a time certain within Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (c. 42), s. 28, & such sum does not carry interest unless there has been a demand for payment with notice that interest would be claimed, & interest cannot be given as damages for detention of the debt.

An award made upon a joint traffic agreement between two railway cos. determined that accounts should be rendered by each co. to the other in May; that a payment of not less than 75 per cent. should be made on account of the balance appearing to be due on the face of the accounts so exchanged, & that this payment should be made as soon after June 1 as possible & not later than June 15. A large balance became due from one of the cos. to the other, to recover which an action was brought & interest claimed:—Held: no interest could be recovered under Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (c. 42), s. 28; since there was no "debt or sum certain payable by virtue of a written instrument at a certain time," within that statute; nor had any demand of payment claiming interest been made in writing; & interest could not be given by way of damages for detention of the debt, the law upon that subject, unsatisfactory as it is, having been too long settled to be now departed from.—LONDON, CHATHAM & DOVER RY. In 1875 B. proved A.'s death to the satisfaction of the assurance co., & demanded payment of the policy moneys, which were insufficient to pay his debt, but the co. refused to pay him without the consent of the legal representative of A. In 1878 B. died, & on action brought by his exors. against the co. claiming a declaration that they were entitled to the policy moneys, & payment with interest from the time when the demand of payment was made, the judge held that the co. was justified in refusing to pay over the policy moneys without the consent of A.'s legal personal representative; dispensed with the legal personal representative of A. under 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44, &, ordered payment of the policy moneys, with interest at 4 per cent., from the date when demand of payment was made.

On appeal on the question of interest:—Held: as the default or delay in payment of the policy moneys had been caused, not by the co., but by B.'s neglect to clothe himself with a legal title to the money, interest did not commence to run till the order for payment of the principal was made.—WEBSTER v. BRITISH EMPIRE MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE CO. 141. ———.] — The Admlty. requisitioned a steamer upon the terms of a charterparty, clause 19 of which provided that the risks of war which are taken by the Admlty. are those risks which would be excluded from an ordinary English policy of marine insurance by the following, or similar, but not more extensive clause warranted free of capture, seizure & detention & the consequences thereof, or of any attempt thereat, piracy excepted, & also from all consequences of hostilities or warlike operations, whether before or after declaration of war. Such risks are taken by the Admlty. on the ascertained value of the steamer, if she be totally lost, at the time of such loss, or, if she be injured, on the ascertained value of such injury. The steamer was lost by war risks, & the owners claimed to be paid by the Admlty. interest on the ascertained value of the steamer from the date of the loss on the footing that clause 19 was either a policy of insurance or was a contract of indemnity:—Held: the shipowners were not entitled to interest under above sect. because clause 19 of the Admlty. charterparty was not a policy of marine insurance within 6 Edw. 7, c. 41, s. 23, as the sum insured was not stated therein; nor was it a contract of indemnity, as the liability of the Admlty. was in terms limited to the ascertained value of the steamer at the time of the loss.—ADMIRALTY COMRS. v. ROPNER & CO., LTD. 142. Damages for trover or trespass.] — By the decree made in this suit in 1870, it was declared that defts. S. & R., & the estate of deceased deft. W., were answerable for all minerals gotten or removed from under pltfs.' farm; & an inquiry was directed what quantities of minerals had been so gotten or removed, & it was ordered that the value at the pit's mouth of all minerals so gotten or removed, with just allowances for carriage, but none for getting, should be certified. The decree was silent as to interest, no claim for interest being made at the hearing.

After the decree defts. S. & R. died, & the suit was continued, so far as the inquiry was concerned, against their representatives.

The official referee having, in Dec. 1889, reported the value at the pit's mouth of the minerals taken to be £9,028 6*s.*, pltfs., upon the further consideration of the suit in 1891, claimed to be entitled to damages in the nature of interest on that amount on the ground that the action was in the nature of an action of trover or trespass de bonis asportatis within above sect.:—Held: the action must be treated as an equitable action to recover the benefits that defts. or their respective estates had received from the wrongful taking of the minerals belonging to pltfs., & not as an action of trover or trespass; & although according to the settled practice in the case of such an equitable action, pltfs. might, at the hearing, have been allowed interest on the value of the minerals wrongfully taken, yet, pltfs. not having claimed interest at the hearing & the decree being silent as to interest, it was too late to claim it for the first time twenty years after the date of the decree.

In an equitable action to recover from the estate of a deceased person the profits he has received from a wrongful act, such as taking coal belonging to pltf., the ct. will at the trial, make the estate liable, not only for the amount of profits actually received, but also for interest thereon at 4 per cent. from the death of the wrongdoer.—PHILLIPS v. HOMFRAY, [1892] 1 Ch. 465; 61 L. 148. —— —— ——.]—Where A. retired from a certain partnership, but left £60,000 capital in the business ostensibly as part of the partnership capital of B. such sum to be repaid at the end of three years, being the agreed term of the new co-partnership, & where B. retained & employed in the business the said sum beyond the expiration of the said period :—Held : interest at 5 per cent. per annum was payable on the £60,000 from the expiration of the three years, & also on the profits from the time of the realisation of the different portions of the same.

The courts of equity are not limited by Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (c. 42), s. 28, as to the allowance of interest.

Even if the statute were being resorted to, I think the statute would furnish a sufficient authority for directing the payment of interest. But I do not rely upon the statute. The statute has been recognised by the ct. on many occasions, but never in the shape of a limiting or binding authority upon the ct., but as a reason if any one wanted it, in addition why the ct. should direct the payment of interest. The sums which were payable from time to time are capable of easy ascertainment. The days on which they ought to have been paid can also be easily ascertained. The sum was become certain & a day was become certain. Then upon that which I take to be a principle higher than any which is recognised by the statute alone, upon the well established law of this ct., the money being payable at the times which will be ascertained, which may now be said to have been easily ascertained, I think from each of these times, whenever the money was received, the persons entitled to receive the money at that time are entitled to interest upon the same money from that day (BACON, V.-C.).—SPARTALI v. CONSTANTINIDI (1872), 20 W. 153. Defendants obstructing recovery of interest at law.]—A railway co., having agreed to let its line to another, which had taken possession under the agreement, filed a specific performance bill against the other, which thereupon gave notice that it would pay the rent into ct. Pltfs. then gave the defts. notice, that, unless the rent were paid to pltfs., interest would be claimed on it under Civil Procedure Act, 1833 (c. 42), s. 28. Defts. obtained ex p. an order that they might be at liberty to pay the rent into ct., & paid it in accordingly :—Held : they thereby obstructed the recovery of interest at law, & the ct. had jurisdiction to order payment of interest.—HULL & SELBY RY. Recovery after payment of principal—Bond.]—A bond conditioned for the payment of a specified sum to A. after the death of B. & C. & the survivor of them, will bear interest after the death of B. & C. although the engagement was perfectly voluntary, & although the principal was payable on a contingency. One issue in such case having been taken on the plea of payment, according to the condition of the bond, deft. is not entitled to a verdict on that issue, on proof of

170. Interest accrued before judgment.] — Pltf. discounted for deft. a bill for £250, drawn by the latter, upon one A., deft., & A. at the same time signing the following memorandum addressed to pltf.: "Sir,—In consideration of your discounting the undermentioned bill, we do hereby jointly & severally undertake, if the same is not wholly paid at maturity, to pay, as interest thereon £20 for each month any portion of which shall have elapsed after maturity of the said bill, & until the same is wholly paid & satisfied." At the foot of this memorandum was written, "£250, Jenings on A., at three months." The bill not having been paid at maturity, pltf. sued deft. thereon, claiming by the particulars indorsed on the writ interest at the rate of £20 per month, as per agreement, but declaring only on the bill, & obtained a verdict & judgment thereon. Pltf. afterwards brought another action against deft. upon the agreement for the stipulated interest of £20 per month:—Held: the former judgment was no answer to pltf.'s claim for interest accruing before the recovery of such judgment, but pltf. was not entitled to recover in the second action interest accruing since.—FLORENCE v. JENINGS (1857), 2 C. 173. —— —— Subsequent application to vary judgment by adding interest.]—Pltf., as extrix., claimed the amount of a policy of insurance for which her husband's life had been insured in the defts.' office, & also interest thereon. Two years after his death she obtained a verdict & judgment for the principal sum only, & subsequently applied to the judge before whom the case was tried to vary the judgment entered for her by adding the amount of the interest. This he refused on the ground that he had no power to do it:—Held: the decision was right, as the question, being one which depended upon whether or not the claim had been improperly resisted, was one solely for the jury.—LOTINGA v. COMMERCIAL UNION ASSURANCE CO. B. Tender of Amount Due.

174. 176. Delay not owing to debtors wilful default.] —After some disputes between a corpn. & trustees of charity estates, a compromise was agreed on & confirmed by Act of Parliament, under which the corpn. were to sell certain estates, & out of the proceeds pay to the trustees a gross sum of money by a fixed day. The money was not paid by the time appointed; but there being no case of wilful default made against the corpn.:—Held: they were not liable to pay interest on the gross sum.—A.-G. v. LUDLOW CORPN. 177. Principal not wrongfully withheld.] — Where a pecuniary claim has been left by creditor for years unascertained & unexamined, debtor having always been ready & willing to meet the demand, it was held by the House of Lords reversing the decision below, that the right to interest on the principal sum did not commence until after the debt had been established, & the precise amount settled. A sheriff's jury awarding compensation to a landlord against a railway co. in 1864, found that so far back as 1852 he was entitled to £5,272; saying, however, nothing as to interest. The ct. below added to the principal sum twelve years' interest. Their order reversed.

Interest can be demanded only in virtue of a contract, expressed or implied, or by virtue of the principal sum of money having been wrongfully withheld (LORD WESTBURY).—CALEDONIAN RY. CO. v. CARMICHAEL (1870), L. R. 2 Sc. & Div. 56.

182. Negligence of creditor.] — The general & common rule is, that bills & notes carry interest ; & it would be highly inconvenient to leave it to the caprice of a jury to give or withhold it at their pleasure ; it would be introducing confusion where there ought to be certainty. There may be cases of very extraordinary circumstances, such as where it is the holder's own fault that he had not been paid, in which the jury should be directed not to give interest which, in this case, is in the nature of damages, & not the debt itself (BAYLEY, J.).—LAING v. STONE (1828), 2 Man. & Ry. Pltf. sued at law on the note & by mistake he claimed & recovered interest at 5 instead of 60 per cent., which was paid :—Held : pltf. could not afterwards sue in this ct. upon the mtge. to recover the deficiency, & his bill for that purpose was dismissed with costs.—DARLOW v. COOPER (1865), 34 Beav. 281 ; 55 E. D. Smallness of Sum Due.

186. General rule.] — Mtgee. in receipt of rents & profits, under a covenant that he should receive them till his debt should be satisfied, having received more than his debt, & retained the overplus in his hands for a considerable time, ordered to pay it in, with interest on the amount, & on the annual balances in his hands, from the time of his receiving notice from a subsequent mtgee. that he should hold him chargeable with interest, unless the money received were paid over in aid of the other incumbrancers. The rate at which such interest was ordered to be paid was 4 per cent. The ct. will require a very strong case to be made out against the party required to pay 5 per cent. The present case, on the facts stated in the master's report, was not considered sufficient to justify a departure from rule as to the usual rate of interest adopted by the practice of Cts. of Equity ; & the time for which such interest was ordered to be calculated was from the receipt of the notice by the subsequent incumbrancer that interest would be demanded, to the time of deft. paying it in. Where the subject-matter is of small amount, the ct. will not take into consideration the question of interest, lest the necessary inquiry should lead to an expense that would exhaust the principal which is the object of it.—ARCHDEACON v. BOWES (1824), 13 Price, 353 ; M'Cle. 149 ; 147 E. R. 1015.

187. Whether good defence — De minimis non curat lex.]—I am of opinion the tender was sufficient ; that the £2 10*s.*, as the extrix. was a stranger in blood to the legatee, must be presumed to be money advanced in part of payment of the legacy ; & as to interest upon such small legacies as this, upon which no interest could be supposed to have been made, the ct. never allowed interest, especially to a stranger, de minimis non curat lex (SIR GEORGE LEE).—BRADSHAW v. BRADSHAW (1756), 2 Lee, 289 ; 161 E. 190. Specially indorsed writ — Interest claimed under terms of will—Not by way of damages.]—Pltfs., by their writ, claimed to have a legacy of £2,750, bequeathed by the will of John Brogden, "which has remained unpaid by reason of a breach of trust on the part of defts., & which is now due from them upon a trust" paid by defts., with interest thereon at 4 per cent. per annum from Apr. 12, 1885. John Brogden, by his will, directed that interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum should be paid on this legacy from the death of his wife; she died on Apr. 12, 1885. On an application by pltfs. for leave to enter final judgment against defts. for the amount of principal & interest due in respect of the legacy:—Held: the writ claimed the interest payable under the will, & did not claim interest by way of damages arising out of a breach of trust; &, therefore, that the writ was specially indorsed within R. S. C., Ord. 3, r. 6.—HAMILTON v. BROGDEN (1890), 60 L. J. Ch. 88.

191. —— Interest not claimed under agreement —Or fixed by statute.]—An indorsement, purporting to be a special indorsement under R. S. C., Ord. 3, r. 6, claimed a balance due for goods sold. After stating the "place of trial," & after the signature of pltfs.' solrs., there came a claim for interest, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, from the date of the writ till payment or judgment, & after that claim a statement that if the amount claimed was paid to pltfs., or their solrs., within four days from the service of the writ, further proceedings would be stayed. On an application for leave to sign judgment under R. S. C., Ord. 14, r. 1, pltfs.' affidavits showed that the claim for interest was not made upon any contract to pay interest; but that they supposed they were entitled to recover it, & asked for judgment, not only for the balance due, but also for the interest claimed:—Held: the claim for interest must be treated as part of what purported to be the special indorsement, &, therefore, the writ was not "specially indorsed" under R. Pltf., as surety, & deft. having covenanted to pay A. an annuity, deft., by way of indemnity to pltf., covenanted with him that he would pay A. the annuity, & observe the covenants of the annuity deed, & also conveyed to the plaintiff real estates, with power by sale or mtge. to raise adequate sums to indemnify him against all costs, charges, damages, & expenses which he should incur by his being surety. Pltf. was compelled to pay the annuity, & after several payments, an account containing these was submitted to deft., with interest charged upon them at the rate of 5 per cent. & a balance stated, which deft. acknowledged to be correct, & "recoverable under the trusts of the deed of indemnity." SUB-SECT. 3.—WHERE RATE NOT AGREED OR FIXED BY USAGE.

A. In General.

198. Discretion of court.]—There is no general rule as to the rate of interest the ct. will allow on repayment of consideration money expressed in an absolute assignment, which is treated only as a security for such consideration money; &, in a case where the assignee of a reversionary interest in a trust fund was the solr. of the assignor & also solr. to the trust estate; & there was evidence of the assignment having been for an undervalue, the ct. allowed interest at 5 per cent.—Re UNSWORTH'S TRUST (1865), 2 Drew. & Sm. 337; 12 L. 199. ——.] — Testator gave his property to trustees upon trust for H. for life, & after his decease upon trust as to one-third share for the children of G. equally, to be paid to them at twenty-one years of age, & directed that, if any of the children should be under age at the death of the survivor of himself & H., the income of such child's share, or any part thereof, might be applied for the maintenance, etc., of such child, & the surplus, if any, should accumulate & become part of the original share of such child. Pltf. being one of the children of G. survived the testator & H., & subsequently attained twenty-one, namely in 1849, previously to which his share under the will had come into the hands of G. as trustee of the will, of which fact pltf. alleged that he was never informed. G. had never paid the share over to pltf., but claimed to have expended the whole upon his maintenance & education. It appeared, however, that of the share part had been lost through improper investments, while during recent years the whole had been mixed with G.'s own moneys in his business as a solr. & otherwise. Upon an action by pltf. for account:—Held: (1) there was no trust to accumulate beyond minority, but G. must be taken to have held the share under the circumstances subject to such an obligation to accumulate after the period named as to render him chargeable with compound interest upon the whole share for the whole period during which it was in his hands; (2) there was no rule compelling the ct. to charge the interest at a higher rate than 4 per cent.—Re EMMET'S ESTATE, EMMET v. EMMET (1881), 17 Ch. After A.'s death, notice was given to the firm of England, of there being male issue of A., but not stating their names. B. subsequently received the dividends, & credited the Indian firm with the amount in the books of the English firm:—Held: the partners of the English firm were liable to repay such dividends, with interest at 5 per cent.

There were three seams of coal under the land. The licencee reached one of them by a driftway from an adjoining colliery & worked the coal. He afterwards, by similar means, reached & worked another of them. The third was also reached, but this was abandoned as worthless. The licencee mixed the coals gotten under the licence with those gotten from his own colliery & sold them together. 216. —— Interest as damages for detention of cargo.]—In an action in the Ch. Div. pltfs. claimed delivery of cargoes of guano, an injunction to restrain defts. from delivering otherwise than to pltfs., & the appointment of a receiver. Defts., who claimed the right to the cargoes, after the issue of the writ took possession of them under a consent order by which it was agreed that the receipt of the cargoes by defts. should be "without prejudice to any question between the parties, & that they would keep separate accounts of their expenditure & receipts in respect of the cargoes, & abide by any order the ct. should make with respect to the cargoes." An order for the appointment of a receiver was afterwards made, & to the receiver when appointed defts. delivered the unsold cargoes & the proceeds of the cargoes they had sold. The action was defended on the ground that the cargoes were not the property of pltfs. At the hearing the judge made a decree declaring that pltfs. were entitled to the cargoes, & that defts. were not entitled to reimbursement of any expenses, & directing an inquiry "what damages had been sustained by pltfs. by reason of the detention of the cargoes by defts." On appeal this House having regard to the terms of the consent order varied the decree by declaring that defts. were entitled to receive out of the proceeds of the cargoes payment of all sums properly disbursed by them on account of freight & landing cargoes, & otherwise, affirmed the decree. Upon the inquiry as to damages the chief clerk found that the detention began on the arrival of the cargoes respectively at their ports of discharge, & computing the damages on the principle that the illegal detention continued until the decree of the judge allowed interest at 5 per cent. upon the proceeds of the cargoes until the decree, less the interest gained in ct. & paid in by the receiver. Upon a summons to vary the chief clerk's certificate:—Held: the consent order did not convert an unlawful into lawful detention, but after the order for the appointment of a receiver the cargoes were in the possession of the ct. & any damages suffered by pltfs. were due to the law's delay & not to any wrongful act of defts.; interest at 5 per cent. ought therefore to be allowed until the order for the appointment of a receiver but not after.—PERUVIAN GUANO CO. v. DREYFUS BROTHERS & CO., [1892] A. 224. —— Loan by insurance company—Proof of collateral agreement.]—Pltf. was the holder of various policies of assurance on his own life in the Hand in Hand Fire & Life Assurance Society, & had obtained loans from the society on the security of his policies. By a prospectus issued by the society at the time when pltf.'s policies were effected, it was therein stated that loans were promptly made upon the security of the society's policies at 4½ per cent. interest, except when the loan amounted to £200 or more, when the rate was only 4 per cent. The affairs of the society were regulated by certain rules under which the general management was committed to a board of directors, who had power to invest the funds of the society on mtge. of any life policies. Successive prospectuses were issued by the society containing statements as to collateral matters relating to the policies, but no mention was made as to the rate of interest on loans. As a fact the rate of interest was varied from time to time between 4½ per cent. & 5 per cent. down to 1899. In Jan. 1905, the undertaking of the society was acquired by deft. company according to an agreement. From 1921 deft. company had charged interest at 6½ per cent. & 5 per cent. from Aug. 1923, to the present time. By the agreement for the transfer to deft. co. that co. became liable for all the debts, contracts, & engagements of the society, including all the policies & the benefits then attached thereto, & the further benefits in the second schedule mentioned. By that schedule various benefits were secured to the policy holders, & by clause 12 thereof it was stated that the society's policy holders were to be entitled to all benefits established by the practice or prospectuses of the society, in addition to any benefits conferred by this schedule. Deft. co. claimed the right on any further loans being made to pltf. to charge a higher rate of interest than 4 per cent. & pltf. by his action claimed declarations that they were not so entitled:—Held: (1) although there was a collateral agreement on other matters, there was no collateral contract or agreement by the society that the rate of interest on loans should not be varied, but be at a uniform rate.

(2) No established practice to charge one uniform rate of interest had been proved, but it had been the uniform practice to make loans at the rate fixed by the board of directors; & further, the benefit claimed had not been established by any prospectus of the society. In the result the action failed on both points, & must be dismissed. —THISELTON v. COMMERCIAL UNION ASSURANCE CO., [1926] Ch. 888; 95 L. J. Ch. 447; 70 Sol. Jo. 892.

229. Profits made by company director—In absence of fraud.]—Applts. were a joint-stock co., registered under Cos. Act, 1862 (c. 89), the objects of the assocn. including the negotiation of loans, & the transaction generally of the business of a capitalist. A clause in the arts. of assocn. was, so far as is material, in the following terms:—"Disqualification of directors. The office of a director shall be vacated: . . . 3rd. If he contracts with the co., or is concerned in, or participates in, the profits of any contract with the co., or participates in the profit of any work done for the co., without declaring his interest at the meeting of directors at which such contract is determined on, or work ordered, if his interest then exists, or in any other case at the first meeting of the directors after the acquisition of his interest, & no director so interested shall vote at any meeting, or on any committee of the directors, on any question relating to such contract or work." Resps., K. & C., were stockbrokers, carrying on business in partnership as K. C. & Co. C. was a director of the applt. co., & he was also a member of a temporary board, by which the business of the co. was for a time conducted. C. agreed with contractors for a railway to place certain debentures of that railway at a commission of 5 per cent. The firm of K. C. & Co. then made a proposal to the applt. co. to place these shares at 1½ per cent. This proposal was submitted to a committee, of which C. was not a member, who recommended its acceptance, & subsequently the recommendation of the committee was adopted by the temporary board. C. was present at the meeting of the temporary board, & at the time stated that he was interested in the sale of the debentures, & offered to leave the room while the proposal was discussed. The chairman told him that this was unnecessary, & C. accordingly remained in the room. On a bill filed by the applt. co., praying the repayment by K. & C. of the profits made by them, viz., 3½ per cent. on the amount of the debentures placed:—Held: resps. were bound to refund, the fiduciary position of C. forbidding him to make a profit out of the funds of the assocn.; the transaction was not protected by the clause in the arts. of assocn.; since C. did not "declare his interest" within that clause, i.e. the nature, as well as the existence, of his interest; & K. & C. were jointly & severally liable for the whole amount claimed; further, no fraud having been intended, & C. having acted on the honest belief that he had brought himself within the terms of the clause in the arts. of assocn., interest should be ordered at the rate of 4, & not 5 per cent.—IMPERIAL MERCANTILE CREDIT ASSOCN. No regular deed of co-partnership was executed, but by an agreement between them it was stipulated that some interest, the nature & extent of which was not defined, in a piece of land, wharf, & premises, upon which the partnership business was carried on, should form part of the partnership property. This property was then held by S., D., & L., under a lease, & was also subject to a mtge. During the negotiation for the partnership, S., D., & L., paid off the mtge., & acquired by purchase the fee of the property, & upon failure of the partnership concern sold the same, receiving the consideration money, which they refused to account for to G., or to treat as partnership assets, on the ground, that the property had been acquired by them on their separate account, & not purchased with the partnership assets:—Held: (1) S., D., & L., having purchased the fee in the property during the negotiation for the partnership, & the consideration money paid by G. for his share in such partnership being based upon the fact of the property being freehold, the purchase must be treated as being for the benefit of the partnership concern; & that G. was entitled to participate & share with S., D., & L. in the freehold interest so acquired, G. contributing in the sum paid by S., D., & L., for the purchase thereof, to the extent of his share in the partnership. In Jan. 1881, B. took out a debtor's summons for £150, on the footing that interest continued to be paid at the rate of 7½ per cent. down to the date of demand, & not merely until July 15, 1879, in which case the debt would have been under £50:—Held: the agreement amounted to a contract that if the £1,000 was not repaid in July, 1879, interest at 7½ per cent. should continue to be paid, & accordingly there was a liquidated demand of sufficient amount within Bkpcy. Six per. cent.]—Upon reference to the master to ascertain the amount to which a widow was entitled for income out of the trust estate which had been devised to her for her life, some of the investments having been unproductive & realised at a loss:—Held: a calculation should be made of what principal invested at the date from which interest was to run, at 6 per cent. per annum, would amount with interest to the sum actually realised, & then the difference between this principal & the amount realised should go to the tenant for life, & the rest to the remaindermen.—MILLER v. DAHL (1894), 10 Man. daughters for life, & after her death for her issue. His estate consisted chiefly of land, of which the trustees in exercise of their discretion under the will postponed the sale. They raised upon mtge a sum sufficient to pay the debts, including the £6,000 which they paid to the daughter's trustees but the £30,000 was not so raised. The rents of the real estate after providing for the interest on the £30,000 & on the mtge., produced a surplus income of about £200 a year, which was paid in equal shares to the two unadvanced daughters. The widow died in 1895 :—Held : upon the division of the residue, the period of distribution was the death of testator ; the advanced daughter, besides bringing into hotchpot the £6,000, must be charged with interest thereon as from the date of the advance ; but the rate of interest ought to be 3 & not 4 per cent.—Re LAMBERT, MIDDLETON v. MOORE, [1897] 2 Ch. 169 ; *sub nom. Testator provided as to certain advances already made to some of his children & as to any future advances to his children exceeding at any one time the sum of £2,000, these advances should be treated as capital of the original shares & brought into hotchpot & accounted for accordingly. Testator died on July 3, 1887 & left surviving six children, of whom three had received advances & three had not. The widow died in Mar. 1900 :—Held : in bringing the advances into hotchpot for the purpose of determining the respective shares of the six children the shares of the advanced children must respectively be debited with 4 per cent. on the respective advances from testator's death down to the time when the estate ought or should be deemed to have been divided.—Re HARGREAVES, HARGREAVES v. HARGREAVES (1902), 86 L. 258. ——.] — W. had three sons, H., S., & B. On the marriage of H. in 1866 W. conveyed upon the trusts of H.'s marriage settlement real estate of the value of £4,000, & by the settlement covenanted to pay £6,000 to the settlement trustees within six calendar months after the death of the covenantor. H. died before W. W. died in June, 1893, having by his will, after giving certain legacies, &, to his wife, an annuity, given his residuary estate to trustees upon trust, as to one-third for S., & as to another one-third for B. The remaining one-third was directed to be transferred to the trustee's of H.'s settlement to be held upon the trusts thereof, but subject to the proviso that after payment of the £6,000 the sum of £10,000, the £6,000 plus the £4,000, should be considered to have been received & advanced out of residue in respect of H.'s portion, & should for the purpose only of ascertaining the amount of that portion, be considered as part thereof, & should be accounted for in the way of hotchpot accordingly. On Dec. 6, 1893, the trustees of the will paid the £6,000 to the settlement trustees. B. died in Aug. 1893, & under his will his widow was tenant for life. The trustees of W.'s will made payments of equal amounts from time to time (1) to S. & (2) to B. & the trustees of his will. Part of each sum was treated as capital, & the rest (of which half was paid to B.'s widow) as income. SUB-SECT. 2.—EXCEPTIONS TO GENERAL RULE.

A. Express Agreement.

268. Compound interest allowed.]—Award not to be impeached for allowing compound interest; for it may be allowed in case of a contract for it either express or be inferred from the nature of the dealings between the parties; as if it is according to the course of their trade; therefore it is a conclusion of fact, on which the judgment of the arbitrators is final.—MORGAN v. MATHER (1792), 2 Ves. 15; 30 E. 269. ——.]—FERGUSSON v. FYFFE, No. 262 ante.

270. Validity of express agreement.] — Though compound interest cannot be taken under an antecedent contract, accounts may be settled, even half yearly, upon that principle. Exception as to real securities.

It is clear you cannot a priori agree to let a man have money for twelve months, settling the balance at the end of six months; & that the interest shall carry interest for the subsequent six months. . . . But if you agree to settle accounts at the end of six months, that not being part of the prior contract, & then stipulate that you will forbear for six months upon those terms, that is legal (LORD ELDON, C.).—Ex p. BEVAN (1803), 9 Ves. 223; 32 E. 271. ——.]—A contract on a loan of money to add the interest to the principal at the end of each year, & pay interest on the whole sum as principal, is valid in law, & may be inferred from accounts stated by the debtor on that footing.

If a party show, in an action for money lent, that it was the course of dealing between him & deft., to calculate the interest every year, & add that to the principal, & the next year to calculate upon the total, he may recover interest, calculated in same way, for the years subsequent to the striking of the last balance between the parties.—

B., by a subsequent agreement with P., bound himself to make up half-yearly balances, & to pay the sums found due in respect of the building as the different parts of the work were finished & valued. B. did not keep up these payments:—Held: when accounts were decreed, P. was not entitled to have them calculated with half-yearly rests, the agreement not necessarily giving him any such right, & the precedent of the acknowledgment not establishing this as a settled mode of dealing between the parties, if such a mode could be legal by agreement or by the practice of the parties.—PAGE v. BROOM (1837), 4 Cl. & Fin. 436; 7 E. 286. Money-lending primary object — Advances to impecunious persons—For company promoting.] —(1) When a lender is in the habit of lending money to impecunious persons who are engaged in promoting cos. & taking shares in such cos. from them by way of bonus for so doing, without the money so advanced being necessarily lent to facilitate the promoting of such cos., such a lender is a "money-lender" within Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51).

(2) Where the amount of such bonus has no ascertainable relation to the accommodation rendered, but is fixed arbitrarily with more regard to the necessities of the borrower than the risks which the vendor runs, the ct. will order the transactions to be reopened, on the ground that they are "harsh & unconscionable."—BONNARD v. DOTT (1905), 92 L. & to discount & renew the bills from time to time. In 1903 he retired from the business & sold off his stock by public auction, & took bills for the greater part of the purchase-moneys, which he discounted & renewed from time to time, & some of which were still running. After his retirement he carried on business as an expert art valuer & adviser, & he also assisted two art businesses, in which he was largely interested, by discounting for them their customers' bills & by taking bills for the interest from time to time due on the debentures he held in one of those businesses. He also assisted some old friends in the curio trade, & a few persons with whom he had been connected in business, about ten in all, with loans & by discounting bills for them. He did not advertise as a money-lender, & did not discount bills for any outsiders. In an action by A. on bills given him in 1904 for a loan made by him to an old customer :—Held : A. was not, & never had been, a money-lender within Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 6 ; &, as to the bills given on the sale of his stock & renewed & still running, he came within the exception in Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 6 (d).—LITCHFIELD v. DREYFUS, [1906] 1 K. 288. —— —— Advances on bills of sale.]—Pltf., who carried on business as an auctioneer, surveyor, & valuer, was in the habit of advancing money upon bills of sale to any person, against whom there was no personal objection, where the security was sufficient, charging 15 per cent. interest. He did so because by that means he obtained a valuation fee in the first instance, & the business brought him into contact with a class of persons from whom he got other business. He never lent money on personal security :—Held : the pltf. carried on a bonâ fide business not having for its primary object the lending of money, in the course of which & for the purposes whereof he lent money, within Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 6 (d), & therefore he did not require to be registered as a money-lender.—FURBER v. FIELDINGS, LTD. 289. —— —— Jeweller's loans to customers.]—When, in answer to a claim for money lent, the defence is set up that the person seeking to recover is carrying on business as a money-lender & is not registered under Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), the onus of proving this fact is upon deft. In determining the question whether the business of a person is that of money-lending the whole of the transactions by way of loan into which he has entered must be considered, including those cases which may fall within the exceptions to Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 6.

A person carried on business as a jeweller & lent money to customers & persons who came in contact with him in connection with his jewellery business :—Held : such loans did not fall within the exception contained in Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 6 (d), as being loans made in the course of & for the purpose of a business not having for its primary object the lending of money.—FAGOT v. FINE (1911), 105 L. A. In General.

See Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), ss. 2, 3.

292. How registration may be effected—Registered post.]—(1) A money-lending co. which acquires another place of business in addition to an already existing place of business makes a "change" in its place or places of business within Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51).

(2) A money-lending co. which sends by post to the registry a return in the prescribed form duly filled up with the required particulars effects a "registration" within Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51).

(3) A money-lending co. acquiring another place of business in addition to an already existing place of business does not effect the fresh registration entailed by such change in its place or places of business unless in making its return it inserts in the space left in the form for the names of places where the business is carried on the address of its existing as well as that of its additional place of business.—STAFFORDSHIRE FINANCIAL CO. v. VALENTINE, [1910] 2 K. (2) A money-lender who under different names carries on one business as an individual & another as a member of a partnership firm carries on business "in more than one name" within Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 2 (1) (b), & incurs the penalty imposed by Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 2 (2).

(3) The provision in Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 2 (1) (c), strikes at a money-lender who is actually registered by the registration authorities & contracts otherwise than in his registered name, & not at a money-lender who being so registered contracts in that name.—WHITEMAN v. SADLER, [1910] A. A money-lender, named Mary Wallace, registered as "M. Wallace":—Held: the registration was sufficient.

303. —— —— —— On terms of repaying money lent.]—In an equitable action by a borrower against an unregistered money-lender for the return of certain securities mortgaged by the borrower to secure advances:—Held: on the authority of Victorian Daylesford Syndicate Ltd. v. Dott, No. 301, ante, & Bonnard v. Dott, No. 286, ante, the loan transactions were void for illegality; in the case of loan transactions void for illegality the usual rule was that neither party could sue the other for the restoration of property or the repayment of money, but borrowers in illegal loan transactions came within the exception to this rule in Bonnard v. Dott, No. 286, ante, &, as it was an appeal to equitable jurisdiction, pltf. ought to be put on terms, as he could not obtain equity without himself doing equity by repaying the money which had been advanced to him.—LODGE v. NATIONAL UNION INVESTMENT CO., LTD., [1907] 1 Ch. 300; 76 L. 304. —— —— Money borrowed on mortgage.]—By his marriage settlement R. assigned funds to trustees upon trusts under which he took a protected life interest & the trustees were empowered to pay his debts & for that purpose to raise money upon his request in writing. In Nov. 1906, he committed an act of bkpcy., on which he was adjudicated a bkpt. in Apr. 1907. In Dec. 1906, he signed a request to the trustees to raise £800, for payment of his debts. They borrowed the money from G. & executed a mtge. in which they covenanted "as such trustees but not otherwise" to repay the money with interest at 6 per cent. G. brought this action to enforce his security:—Held: the mtge. was taken by G. in the course of his business as a money-lender & was therefore entirely void, inasmuch as he was not registered; that being so, the debt was gone & G. could not succeed in a claim for money had & received; G. had not been taken by surprise, & under the circumstances the omission of one of the trustees to plead Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), was immaterial.—Re ROBINSON'S SETTLEMENT, GANT v. HOBBS, [1912] 1 Ch. 717; 81 L. 306. Effect of lapse of registration—Transaction void—Effect on subsequent agreement.]—At a time when deft., who had been registered as a money-lender, but had allowed the registration to lapse, was nevertheless still carrying on business as a money-lender, an agreement was made between pltf. & deft., whereby, in return for an advance of £500 to pltf. for six months & a guarantee of a loan of £1,000 which was made to pltf. by a third party & was otherwise secured, it was agreed that 25 per cent. of the profits of a theatre, the lease of which pltf. had agreed to buy, should belong to deft. for eighty-seven years, subject to pltf.'s being able to carry out the purchase, & it was further agreed between pltf. & deft. that pltf. was to be liable for losses, deft. being only responsible for his guarantee. Subsequently pltf., in order to carry out the purchase, required to mortgage the theatre, & a second agreement was made, whereby it was agreed between pltf. & deft. that deft., in consideration of his consenting to the mtge. of the whole interest, including his quarter share, should have his share increased to 50 per cent.:—Held: under Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), both agreements were void.—LEVY v. DOTT (1919), 35 T. 309. —— Examined or certified copy not necessary.]—Pltf., a money-lender, brought an action in the county ct. on a promissory note made in her favour by defts., who did not deny that the sum claimed had not been paid. Defts. had not given notice that they relied upon the statutory defence that pltf. was not registered as a money-lender, & they were therefore prevented from setting up that defence at the trial. Nothing appeared on the face of the transaction between the parties or in the course of the proceedings to suggest that pltf. was not registered. Pltf.'s agent gave evidence on her behalf, stating that she was registered, & producing a copy of her return of particulars for registration which he said had been obtained from the registration authorities; & defts. did not attempt to shake his evidence by cross-examination or otherwise. The county ct. judge held that pltf. must give strict proof of her registration by an examined or certified copy thereof, &, as she had not done so, he gave judgment for defts. On appeal to the Div. Ct.:—Held: in the circumstances it was not necessary pltf. should prove her registration by an examined or certified copy thereof, & she was entitled to judgment.—LIPTON v. POWELL, [1921] 2 K. 310. What amounts to—Fraudulent concealment of identity.]—Pltf., a money-lender, advertised under a fictitious name, & deft. borrowed money & gave a promissory note to secure the sum borrowed & interest. In an action on the promissory note the jury found that pltf. intentionally concealed his identity to induce deft. to borrow money of him as if from another, & that deft. was so induced; that pltf. did so fraudulently; that deft. entered into the contract believing that he was doing so with a person of the fictitious name given by pltf., & that deft. repudiated the contract within a reasonable time after he discovered that pltf. was the person with whom he had contracted:—Held: the fraudulent concealment by pltf. of his identity with a person whose reputation in business was such that deft. would not have dealt with him was material to the inducement which brought about the contract, which deft. was therefore entitled to repudiate within a reasonable time after the discovery of the fraud.—GORDON v. STREET, [1899] 2 Q. 316. —— Variation in name—Not trivial variation—Question of law.]—P. was registered as a money-lender under the name of the "Wentworth Loan & Discount Office, of 27, Strafford Houses, Wentworth-street, E." She lent money to defts. on promissory notes, which described her as P., of the "Wentworth Loan & Discount Co., of 27, Strafford Houses, Wentworth-street, E." In an action on the promissory notes, defts. contended that, as the word "co." appeared on the notes instead of the word "office," P. was not trading in her registered name within Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 2:—Held: as there was no pretence for suggesting that the identity of P. was in any way concealed by the substitution of the word "co." for the word "office," the variation did not vitiate the transaction.

I think that the difference in the variance is a question of law & not of fact (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.).—PEIZER v. LEFKOWITZ, [1912] 2 K. B. 235; 81 L. J. K. B. 718; 106 L. T. 776; sub nom. WENTWORTH LOAN CO. v. LEFKOWITZ, 28 T. L. R. 334, C. A.

317. —— Transaction by unregistered partnership—Though members separately registered.]—T. was in need of money for the purpose of his business, & asked pltf. to lend him the money; but pltf. said he was not a money-lender, but if T. would form his business into a co. the money could be lent. Pltf. introduced T. to B. as his partner. Both pltf. & B. were separately registered as money-lenders. The business was formed into a co., & a debenture of the same amount as the loan was issued to T. containing a condition that principal & interest should become payable if execution was levied. Pltf. & B. lent the money in equal moieties, & were appointed as managing directors of the co. at a salary of £12 10*s.* each per week, but were exonerated from any obligation to attend to the business of the co. The business was ample security for the loan, for which no interest was charged. T. subsequently transferred the debenture to pltf. Pltf. & B., their salary being in arrear, issued a writ, obtained judgment on it, & issued execution. Pltf. then brought an action on his debenture for the usual relief; & a receiver was appointed, who sold the business for more than the amount of the loan. Pltf. brought this action, claiming that the debenture constituted a charge on all the property of the co., & the co. counterclaimed that the debenture & transfer were void & the transaction a fraud on the co.:—Held: the transaction was a partnership transaction by pltf. & B. & also was a money-lending transaction, & the loan, having been made by an unregistered partnership, was void under Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 2 (1) (c), both as to the loan itself & the security taken for it.—Re TAYLOR (LONDON), LTD., MILLER v. TAYLOR (LONDON), LTD., TAYLOR (LONDON), LTD. v. MILLER & FINGARD (1916), 86 L. Louis Vorst lent money & took a security in his own name alone, & then claimed to recover on the security:—Held: he could not recover, as he had not taken the security in his registered name. 325. —— Single transaction at other than registered address.]—A money-lending transaction was re-opened, under Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 1 (1), where the ct. came to the conclusion that, the borrower being under the necessity of raising a sum of money at short notice, the money-lender took advantage of that necessity to induce him to sign a promissory note payable in three months with interest at the rate of 44 per cent. per annum, the primary security being an equitable mtge. of real property, which was sufficient security for the advance.

The interview took place at deft.'s office, & there pltfs. made a loan to deft. in return for a promissory note. A further advance was afterwards made by pltfs. to deft. at their registered office in return for another promissory note. Ultimately these promissory notes were cancelled at pltfs.' registered office in return for a third promissory note. For the mutual convenience of both parties a cheque for the amount of the loan was sent by the money-lender by post to the borrower's address:—Held: the mere fact that the cheque for the money advanced was sent to the borrower by post, instead of being handed to the borrower at the money-lender's registered address, did not make the transaction void as being a carrying on of the money-lending business elsewhere than at the registered address in contravention of Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 2 (1) (b).—JACKSON v. PRICE, [1910] 1 K. 343. —— Distinguished from "carrying on business in other than registered name."]—I should like to add a word as to the existence in Money-lenders Act, of 1900 (c. 51), s. 2, of two sub-sects. of so similar a character as sub-sects. (b) & (c). One possible explanation is this: If in a particular transaction a contract is made in a name which is not the money-lender's registered name. The object of sub-sect. (c) is to enable the person with whom it is made to ask the ct. to say that the agreement was an invalid one. Under sub-sect. (b), . . . if it can be shown that the money-lender is in the habit of "carrying on business in a name other than his registered name," then the object of the sub-sect. is to allow proceedings for penalties to be taken against the money-lender (LUSH, J.).—PEIZER v. LEFKOWITZ, [1912] 2 K. 344. Taking security otherwise than in registered name—Absolute deed of transfer—No covenant to repay.]—Re ROBINSON, CLARKSON v. ROBINSON, No. 369, post.

345. —— Post-dated cheques — Payable to employees of money-lender.]—Pltfs., who were money-lenders registered in the name of C. Stirling, advanced to deft. the sum of £1,000 on the security of a promissory note for £1,600 to be repaid in eight consecutive monthly payments of £200 each. At the same time deft. gave to pltfs. eight cheques, each post dated so as to correspond with one of the eight consecutive monthly payments stipulated for in the promissory note. The cheques were made payable, not to pltfs. in their registered name, but to nominees who were in their employ. Two of the cheques were duly met, but the next two were dishonoured. In an action by pltfs. to recover the amounts unpaid with interest:—Held: the taking of the cheques by pltfs. in the names of nominees was the taking of "a security for money" otherwise than in the money-lenders' registered name, within Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 2 (1), & the transaction was consequently illegal & void.—STIRLING v. JOHN, [1923] 1 K. B. 557; 92 L. J. K. B. 353; 128 L. T. 560; 39 T. L. R. 123; 67 Sol. Jo. 168, C. A.

346. —— Security endorsed in blank.]—Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 2 (1) (c), which provides that a money-lender as defined by the Act shall not take any security for money in the course of his business as a money-lender otherwise than in his registered name does not prohibit him from taking a security in which his name does not appear at all, but prohibits him from taking it in a name other than his registered name.

Pltf. carried on business as a registered money lender at Manchester, & prior to the loan the subject-matter of this action had had several money-lending transactions with deft., S. S. sent a letter to pltf.'s registered address at Manchester asking him to come to London for the purpose of granting a loan on the security of certain furniture belonging to deft. M., who knew of the suggested visit & its object. Pltf. accordingly interviewed deft. at the St. Pancras Hotel, London, & there lent S. £150, taking as security a bill of exchange for £175, payable one month after date, drawn by S. upon, & accepted by, M. as surety, & indorsed in blank to pltf.:—Held: (1) pltf. had not taken the security "otherwise than in his registered name"; (2) he had not carried on business otherwise than at his registered address; (3) interest would only be allowed at the rate previously charged by pltf., namely, £5 on a loan of £50 for a month.—SHAFFER v. SHEFFIELD, [1914] 2 K. B. 1; 83 L. J. K. B. 817; 110 L. T. 1023; 30 T. L. R. 276; 58 Sol. Jo. 363.

347. Agreement in other than registered name—With respect to advance & repayment of money—Compromise of bankruptcy proceedings.]—Pltf., a money-lender, obtained judgment in his registered name against C. his debtor, &, as the judgment was not satisfied, he presented a bkpcy. petition, in the same registered name, against C. When the petition was about to be heard, & in consideration of it being withdrawn, an arrangement was entered into between pltf., in the same registered name as that in which he had obtained judgment, & deft. H., by which H. paid a portion of the debt & agreed to redeem certain shares for £50 within fourteen days. At the time this agreement was entered into, but after he had obtained judgment against C., pltf. had changed his registered name. H. not having paid the £50, pltf. sued him to recover same:—Held: (1) the agreement was one "with respect to the advance & repayment of money" within Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 2 (1) (c); (2) as it was ancillary to the bkpcy. petition it was rightly entered into on the part of pltf. in the registered name under which he had obtained judgment & presented the bkpcy. petition; (3) H. was liable.—BLAIR v. HOLCOMBE (1912), 28 T. L. R. 198.

348. —— —— Compromise of judgment debt.]—Applt., an unregistered money-lender, became the holder of certain promissory notes made by the debtor in respect of a money-lending transaction & obtained judgment in default of defence against the debtor in an action upon the notes. An arrangement was subsequently made whereby the debtor agreed to pay the debt with certain interest by instalments, & all further proceedings upon the judgment were to be stayed. The debtor having been adjudicated a bkpt., applt. claimed to prove in the bkpcy. for the amount due under the arrangement:—Held: (1) the arrangement was an agreement entered into by the money-lender in the course of his business as a money-lender "with respect to the advance & repayment of money" within Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 2 (1) (c); (2) the original transaction being unlawful, the judgment would not have been conclusive against the trustee for the purposes of proof, & the subsequent arrangement did not prevent the ct. from going behind the transaction & rejecting the proof.—Re CAMPBELL, Ex p. SEAL, [1911] 2 K. 351. —— Right to declaration of illegality of transaction.]—(1) In an action by the trustee of a debtor, under a scheme of arrangement with his creditors, against a money-lender who in the course of his business has taken a mtge. security from the debtor in a name other than his registered name, the ct. will, under R. S. C., Ord. 25, r. 5, give a declaratory judgment that the security is illegal & void under Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 2, notwithstanding that a mere declaration without any specific consequential relief is claimed. The declaratory judgment is not equitable relief, & terms as to repayment of the money actually advanced will not be imposed upon pltf., as a condition of his obtaining the judgment.

(2) Semble: a statutory illegality, if it can be waived at all, is not waived unless both the parties to the transaction expressly recognise its invalidity at the time of the alleged waiver.—CHAPMAN v. MICHAELSON, [1909] 1 Ch. 238; 78 L. J. Ch. 272; 100 L. T. 109; 25 T. L. R. 101, C. A.

SECT. 3.—LOANS BY UNREGISTERED PERSONS.

SUB-SECT. 1.—PERSONS OTHER THAN MONEY-LENDERS.

A. Evidence of Loan.

354. Delivery of money—When amount borrowed from third party.]—A loan of money by A. to B. is not to be inferred from the bare fact that A. delivered a sum of money to B. which A. had borrowed from another.—WELCH v. SEABORN (1816), 1 Stark. 474, N. P.

355. Drawing cheque in favour of another.]—The mere fact of a person's drawing a cheque in favour of another is not evidence of a debt.—PEARCE v. DAVIS (1834), 1 Mood. & R. 365, N. P.

*Annotations:—Refd. Garden v. Bruce (1868), 17 L. T. 545; Marreco v. Richardson, [1908] 2 K. B. 584.

356. —— Amount placed to credit of defendants.]—In an action by assignees, proof that a cheque for a certain sum in defts.' favour was drawn by the bkpts. upon their bankers, & that the amount thereof was placed by their bankers to defts.' credit, no evidence to go to the jury of a loan of money to defts. by the bkpts.—GRAHAM v. COX (1848), 2 Car. & Kir. 702, N. P.

357. Delivery of note—Presumption as to value.]—Evidence that pltf. had handed deft. a note, without proof of the value of such note, is good evidence of money lent to the extent of £5 the lowest English current note.—NORTON v. SWEENEY (1844), 4 L. T. O. S. 98.

358. Payment of sums equal to interest.] — A., in 1837, transferred £1,000 in the 4 per cents. to B., who possessed other stock of the same description. B., after some years, sold out all his stock, including the £1,000. B. made payments to A. equal to interest at 5 per cent. upon that sum until A.'s death. After the death of A., her exor. wrote to B. referring to the transaction as a loan of money: B. in reply asserted that he was employed by A. to purchase an annuity for her, & that he had done so. No purchase of an annuity was proved:—Held: there was evidence to go to the jury in support of a count for money lent.—HOWARD v. DANBURY (1846), 2 C. B. 803; 135 E. R. 1160; sub nom. HOWARD v. BUNBURY, 7 L. T. O. S. 44.

359. Payment of notes to defendant's credit — Defendant's subsequent knowledge of balance.]—In an action for money lent, the payment of certain notes having been made to deft.'s credit, & the fact that he had been told the balance afterwards, held sufficient proof that the notes were paid, & had therefore been received by him.—GILL v. GILLINGHAM (1858), 1 F. & F. 284.

B. Action for Money Lent.

360. Condition precedent to action — Return of security not necessary.]—A. lends money to B. & receives a gun as security for the repayment. A. may recover the amount without first returning the gun.—LAWTON v. NEWLAND (1817), 2 Stark. 72, N. P.

Request for payment.]—See ACTION, Vol. I., pp. 52–59, Nos. 422–485; GUARANTEE, Vol. XXVI., pp. 67–69, Nos. 473–486.

361. When action lies — Effect of subsisting security—Mortgage.]—Semble: an express security of a higher nature does not destroy an implied security of a lower. Thus a mtge. given as a security for money lent, does not preclude the lender seeking his remedy in an action of assumpsit for the money lent, though, at the time of the commencement of the action, the mtge. may have become absolute by forfeiture. The mtge. is not to be treated as a satisfaction, or as a suspension of the common law right of action.

Accordingly, where a sum of money has been advanced, upon the surrender of copyhold property to the use of the party making that advance, on condition that such surrender shall become void, if payment with interest be made at a particular time, otherwise to be of full force & virtue; & interest has been paid from time to time, subsequent to the day appointed for repayment; & where other circumstances in the conduct of the party to whom the advance was made, show that it was considered as money borrowed. This transaction will not be treated as a conditional purchase, but as a loan for which the surrender is a collateral security; & the administrator of the lender may recover principal & interest in arrear, in an action of assumpsit.—ALLENBY v. DALTON (1827), 5 L. J. O. S. K. B. 312.

Annotation:—Distd. Price v. Moulton (1851), 10 C. B. 561.

362. —— —— —— Where no covenant for repayment.]—Where a mtge. deed contains no covenant for repayment, so that no action can be maintained on the deed, debt for money lent may be brought in the ordinary indebitatus form.—YATES v. ASTON (1843), 4 Q. 363. —— Effect of subsisting agreement.] — Pltf. engaged to let deft. land on building leases, & to lend him £4,000 to assist him in the erection of twenty houses; the money to be repaid by June, 1828. Deft. agreed to build the houses, to convey them as security for the loan, & repay the money: when six houses were built, & £1,168 had been advanced, pltf. requested deft. not to go on with the other fourteen houses: deft. desisted:—Held: after June, 1828, pltf. might recover the £1,168 on a count for money lent; & it was not necessary to sue on the agreement.—JAMES v. COTTON (1831), 7 Bing. 266; 5 Moo. & P. 26; 9 L. 366. —— —— Covenant in mortgage deed.]—L. devised certain lands to deft. on trust to sell the same & apply the proceeds in payment of debts, etc. Deft. mortgaged the lands to pltf. as a security for money lent to him. The mtge. deed contained a covenant by deft. that he would, out of the moneys which should come to his hands as such trustee, from the lands comprised in the mtged. security & the personal estate, if any, of L. pay to pltf. the principal & interest:—Held: as there was an express covenant by deft. to pay in a qualified manner, no contract by parol could be implied for the repayment, & consequently an action for money lent would not lie.—MATHEW v. BLACKMORE (1857), 1 H. & N. 762; 26 L. J. Ex. 150; 28 L. T. O. S. 325; 156 E. R. 1409; sub nom. MATTHEW v. BLACKMORE, 5 W. R. 363.

it back in an action for money lent.—BANK OF ENGLAND v. TOMKINS (1842), 6 Jur. 347.

368. Where right of action arises — Where no time stipulated for repayment.]—Where a person advances money, if there is no stipulated time for repayment, he may sue instantly for the money; & it would be monstrous to tie up his hands by a claim for damages, which is only the subject of a cross action.—ATTERBURY v. JARVIE (1857), 2 H. & N. 114; 26 L. SECT. 4.—TRANSFER OF SECURITIES TAKEN BY MONEY-LENDERS

369. Void security — Position of assignee for value without notice—Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), ss. 1, 2.]—A bonâ fide holder for value without notice of a security given to a money-lender which is invalidated by reason of non-compliance with above Act, sect. 2, is in no better position than the original holder of the security.

A firm was registered under above Act, in the firm name, & was stated to consist of two partners, C. & J. C. was in fact not a partner, but merely a nominee of C., who supplied all the capital of the firm, which consisted of himself & J.:—Held: securities given to the firm in respect of money-lending transactions were void, as the money-lenders were not properly registered, & an assignee of the securities for value without notice was in no better position than the original lenders, & could obtain no benefit from the securities.—Re ROBINSON, CLARKSON v. ROBINSON, [1911] 1 Ch. 230; 80 L. 371. —— —— No application to loan by money-lender.]—There was no evidence to support the finding of the jury that pltf., a money-lender, at the time he made the loan & took a promissory note in respect thereof, fraudulently represented that it was his intention to renew the note, if renewal was required, on easier terms. The doctrine of equity as to bargains with expectant heirs has no application to the ordinary case of a loan by a money-lender.—GORDON v. FOWLER (1901), 17 T. L. R. 243, C. A.

372. —— —— Interest at rate of five per cent.]—SAMUEL v. NICHOL (1902), 18 T. L. R. 513.

373. —— —— —— Whether applicable where expectant heir of full age.]—(1) In cases under Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), where the ct. is asked to reopen a transaction on the ground that the interest charged is excessive, all the circumstances, such as time & risk, &, further, whether the interest was deducted in cash or still remained in the region of speculation, have to be taken into consideration. Merely to say that the percentage of interest is too high affords no assistance to the ct. in determining the question.

(2) Qu.: whether the equitable rule that in money-lending transactions with an expectant heir the onus is on the money-lender to prove that the transaction is fair, & that if it is not fair only 5 per cent. interest is allowed, applies where the expectant heir is of full age.—KING (J.), LTD. v. HAY CURRIE (1911), 28 T. n. General rule.]—Although the number of persons in this country in the position of expectant heirs & reversioners is but small, still the same rule applies here as in England, the principle of the doctrine being that such persons need to be protected against the consequences of their own improvidence in dealing with designing men.—MOREY v. TOTTEN (1857), 6 Gr. 176.—CAN.

370 i. Equitable rule — Onus on plaintiff to show fairness of transaction.]—The result of the English cases regarding "hard" or "unconscionable bargains" is that in dealings with expectant heirs, reversioners, or remaindermen, the fact that the bargain was declined by others as not being sufficiently advantageous, does not raise a presumption that it was fair & reasonable; & that until the contrary is satisfactorily proved by the party trying to maintain the bargain, the ct. may presume that a bargain which apparently provides, in the opinion of the ct. for an unusually high return or an exceptionally high rate of interest is a hard & unconscionable bargain against which relief should be granted.—CHUNNI KUAR v. RUP SINGH (1888), I. 375. Where transaction harsh & unconscionable—"Such that a court of equity would give relief"—Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 1.]—By above sect. sub-sect. 1, where proceedings are taken in any ct. by a money-lender for the recovery of money lent after the commencement of above Act, & there is evidence which satisfies the ct. that the interest charged in respect of the sum actually lent is excessive, or that the amounts charged for expenses, inquiries, fines, bonus, premium, renewals, or any other charges, are excessive, & that, in either case, the transaction is "harsh & unconscionable, or is otherwise such that a ct. of equity would give relief," the ct. may reopen the transaction & give relief to the person sued:—Held: the words "or otherwise is such that a ct. of equity would give relief" are not exclusive of the words "harsh & unconscionable," & in order to entitle the person sued to relief the transaction must be such that a ct. of equity would relieve against it on the ground of its being harsh & unconscionable.—WILTON & CO. v. OSBORN, [1901] 2 K. 376. —— —— ——.]—Under above sect., a transaction with a money-lender can be reopened when the ct. is satisfied that the transaction is "harsh & unconscionable," even though it is not "such that a ct. of equity would have given relief" before above Act.

This power to give relief can be exercised by the ct. of bkpcy. upon the hearing of a petition by a money-lender for a receiving order against a borrower, the petition being founded on a final judgment recovered in an action in which the debtor did not apply for relief under above sect.

377. —— —— ——.]—(1) The relief which above Act extends to a borrower is not limited to cases in which before the above Act the Ct. of Ch. would have given relief.

Above Act confers upon the cts. of this country a new jurisdiction, & gives to borrowers a form of relief different in kind & range from that theretofore granted to any class of tribunal in this country. The relief given . . . is not that theretofore administered by cts. of equity, but differs from it in character, nature & extent (LORD ATKINSON).

(2) The policy of above Act is to enable the ct. to prevent oppression, leaving it in the discretion of the ct. to weigh each case upon its own merits & to look behind a class of contracts which peculiarly lend themselves to an abuse of power.

(3) An excessive rate of interest, having reference to the nature of the risk, & other circumstances, is in itself primâ facie evidence that the transaction is harsh & unconscionable within above Act.

(4) In certain cases which, in modern times at any rate, have been confined to dealings with expectant heirs, including the whole class of persons for the sake of convenience comprehended under that designation, the Ct. of Ch. gave relief on terms. On pltf. submitting to do equity by repaying what was justly due, the ct. set aside the transaction which it considered unrighteous, & ordered that the securities impeached should stand as a security for the money actually advanced with interest (LORD MACNAGHTEN).

(5) Under above sect. sub-sect. 1, a ct. may reopen a transaction & take an account between the money-lender & the person sued upon two conditions. The first condition is that the interest charged in respect of the sum actually lent is excessive, or that the amounts charged for expenses, inquiries, fines, bonus, premium, renewals or any other charges, are excessive. . . . The second condition is that the contract is harsh & unconscionable, or is otherwise such that a ct. of equity would give relief (LORD LOREBURN, C.).—SAMUEL v. NEWBOLD, [1906] A. C. 461; 75 L. J. C. What Transactions are Harsh and Unconscionable.

(a) In General.

390. Circumstances of each case must be considered.]—Transaction re-opened on the ground that it was harsh & unconscionable.

It was possible that the interest might be deemed excessive, & yet the transaction might not be deemed harsh & unconscionable; & it was possible that the interest might be deemed so extravagantly excessive as alone to satisfy the ct. that the transaction was harsh & unconscionable. . . . The circumstances of each case must be considered, including the necessities of the borrower, his pecuniary position, the presence or absence of security, the relation in which the money-lender stood to the borrower, & the total remuneration derived by the money-lender from the whole transaction (COZENS-HARDY, L.J.).—PONCIONE v. HIGGINS (1904), 21 T. Deft. contended that under the Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 1, the transaction ought to be re-opened on the ground that, in view of the high rate of interest charged, it was harsh & unconscionable. Pltf. submitted that excessive interest was not, in itself, sufficient ground for the re-opening of the transaction:—Held: in considering whether to re-open a transaction under sect. 1, the ct. must have regard to all the facts in the case, for instance, the financial embarrassment of the borrower at the time of the making of the loan.—GLASKIE v. GRIFFIN (1914), 111 L. 397. —— ——.]—By a promissory note, dated July 10, 1922, pltf., who was a married lady, promised to pay £500 to deft., a money-lender, for a loan of £300. The money was to be repaid by twenty-four consecutive monthly instalments, & on default in payment of any instalment the whole amount remaining unpaid became due. Interest was to be at the rate of 1*s.* in the pound per month. By an instrument of charge dated the same day, in consideration of this advance of £300 secured by the promissory note for £500, it was provided that certain furniture & chattels belonging to pltf. & which had been delivered into deft.'s possession should be held by him as security for the payment of £500. In the event of default of payment of the promissory note, or any instalment, deft. was to be at liberty to sell the furniture & chattels & repay himself thereout for all principal, interest, & costs. The furniture had been purchased some eighteen months before for £1,750. Pltf. had expected to receive £400 as previously suggested by deft., but being in extreme financial straits she had no alternative but to execute the two documents when put before her on July 10, 1922. Pltf. failed to pay the first instalment due under the promissory note, & the whole £500 became payable. If all payments had been duly made the rate of interest would have been at 82½ per cent.:—Held: inasmuch as the loan was not made on personal security only, but was adequately secured by the goods pledged, the rate of interest, which might not have been regarded as necessarily excessive for a loan on personal security only, became outrageous & extortionate for an advance upon good security; also deft. had made an unconscionable bargain & tricked pltf. into the position in which she was placed on July 10, 1922; & in the exercise of its jurisdiction the ct. would accordingly direct that the contract should stand as a security for £300 with interest at the rate of 15 per cent. from July 10, 1922, & pltf. must pay the costs of the storage of the furniture & of the insurance. (c) Clause not explained to Borrower.

400. Effect of clause rendering interest excessive.]—The ct. has jurisdiction to re-open a transaction between a borrower & a money-lender where it appears that by reason of a term of the bargain between them, understood by the money-lender, but not explained to or understood by the borrower, the rate of interest is considerably increased beyond that contemplated by the borrower.—LEVENE v. GREENWOOD (1904), 20 T. 402. —— ——.]—Where, in consideration of an advance of £50, a promissory note for £70 was taken by a money-lender from a borrower, the £20 being for interest, & the £70 was payable by twenty-two weekly instalments, & upon default in payment of any instalment the whole sum was to become due, the ct. re-opened the transaction upon the ground that the interest might turn out to be very excessive & the rate was not understood by most people.—LEVENE v. TITCHENER (1907), 23 T. L. R. 508.

403. —— ——.]—Where, in a money-lending agreement, a clause is inserted by which the whole amount for which the borrower has given a promissory note becomes due if default is made in the payment of one instalment, with the result that the rate of interest is largely increased, the transaction is primâ facie harsh & unconscionable, unless such a clause is very clearly explained to the borrower.—HARRIS v. CLARSON (1910), 27 T. L. R. 30.

404. —— ——.]—Deft. borrowed from pltf., who was a money-lender, the sum of £1,000, & gave a promissory note for £1,600, which was payable in instalments spread over twelve months, the first payment to be £150 at the end of three months, & there was the usual default clause. Deft. made default in paying the first instalment & pltf. brought an action to recover the £1,600. Deft. gave evidence that pltf. agreed that the interest should be 60 per cent. per annum, but did not explain the default clause, & that it was agreed that he should be at liberty to pay off the whole amount at any time & only pay interest at 60 per cent. After action deft. paid the principal & offered to pay 60 per cent. interest:—Held: the note did not contain all the terms of the bargain, deft. did not understand the effect of the default clause, the transaction was harsh & unconscionable, & pltf. should have judgment for 60 per cent. on £1,000 up to the date when the offer was made.—STIRLING v. ROSE (1915), 30 T. L. R. 67.

405. —— ——.]—Deft., a registered money-lender, on four occasions advanced money to pltf., a tradesman, upon what deft. himself described as a fair average risk. For the first advance of £100 pltf. gave a promissory note for £150 payable by fourteen equal monthly instalments, & after twelve of these had been duly paid the second advance of £50 was made, upon deft.'s own invitation, & for this advance pltf. gave a bill for £65, falling due three months after date. The rate of interest on the first advance was admittedly at least 72 per cent., & on the second advance 120 per cent. per annum. While the last-mentioned £65 & £20 of the first loan were still owing but not yet due, deft. advanced pltf. £15 in cash, making with the moneys so owing £100, for which deft. gave a promissory note for £150, the extra £50 representing interest, repayable by monthly instalments of £10 15*s*. After ten of these instalments had been duly paid deft. advanced pltf. £150 in cash & took his promissory note for £281 10*s*. repayable by instalments & made up of the £150 advanced £37 10*s*. being the money due on the last promissory note less a rebate of £5, & £94, presumably for interest. All the promissory notes contained a proviso that upon default in payment of any instalment the whole of the money then remaining due on the note, i.e., including both capital & unaccrued interest, should immediately become payable. The effect of the third & fourth transactions involved the payment of interest upon interest charged in respect of the balance then outstanding of the earlier loans. After six of the instalments had been paid under the last promissory note, pltf. commenced this action to re-open the transactions & for an account & consequential relief:—Held: (1) in the circumstances, the charges made by the deft. were exorbitant & excessive; the whole course of dealing with pltf. in respect of interest & otherwise was harsh & unconscionable within Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51); pltf. was entitled to relief; & in taking the account interest at the rate of 15 per cent. per annum would be allowed.

(2) It is settled that the questions as to the rate of interest & whether the transactions are harsh & unconscionable are for the judge to decide (JOYCE, J.).

(3) The accounts must be taken upon the footing of a lower rate of interest. I doubt very much whether, in the circumstances, I ought to allow more than 10 per cent., but I will allow 15 per cent., 20 per cent. being, in my opinion, more than ample to cover this fair average risk (JOYCE, J.).—HALSEY v. WOLFE, [1915] 2 Ch. 330; 84 L. The notes each contained a default clause, the nature & effect of which deft. clearly understood, providing that on default of payment of any instalment the whole of the amount of the note then remaining unpaid should become due & payable. The interest on the loan worked out at 75 per cent. per annum. Pltfs. obtained no security for the loan, but at the time were informed by deft. as to his financial position. Deft. paid off all the instalments of the £72 note, &, after paying seven instalments of the £50 note, made default, & on being sued for £62 10*s*., the balance, claimed relief under Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51):—Held: although the rate of interest was high, that fact did not of itself necessarily render the transaction "harsh & unconscionable," & having regard to the risk & to all the circumstances of the case, amongst which the ct. was entitled to consider the fact that deft. understood the transaction, & without any misrepresentation or pressure by pltfs. voluntarily agreed to pay the interest asked, 75 per cent. per annum was a reasonable rate of interest, & not "excessive" within the Act, & the transaction was not "harsh & unconscionable," & deft. was therefore not entitled to relief.—CARRINGTONS, LTD. v. SMITH, [1906] 1 K. Parties on equal terms — Absence of pressure by lender.]—There had been a previous negotiation where the rate of interest was 30 per cent. which had failed to go through because the lady had not been candid, & in consequence deft. had refused to lend her any money at all. The lady, according to deft.'s evidence, then begged & prayed him to lend her £300. She offered to pay interest at the rate of 40 per cent. instead of 30 per cent. & also offered her daughter's guarantee. One of the circumstances in this case undoubtedly was that deft. relied upon the guarantee. The pressure that was put upon pltf. was by other persons & not by deft. There was a default clause to the effect that if any instalment was unpaid the whole amount was to become payable & interest at 60 per cent. was to be paid from the date of default. Default was made in the payment of the first instalment. Deft. had an income of about £2,000 a year, & was entitled to the reversion of certain property worth about £4,000 a year. Deft. had had previous transactions with pltf. & had settled them voluntarily. In an action on the promissory note:—Held: in the circumstances deft. was not entitled to relief under the equitable doctrine as to catching bargains made with expectant heirs & the past transactions ought not to be opened up, but as the terms on which the money was lent in the present case were out of all reason the transaction must be opened up under Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51), s. 1, & pltf. would have judgment for the principal with interest at 30 per cent.—WOLFE v. LOWTHER (1915), 31 T. F. Practice and Procedure.

(a) In General.

433. Concurrent actions in King's Bench & Chancery Divisions—Application to stay proceedings—By lender.]—A money-lender issued in the K. B. Div. a specially indorsed writ claiming £450 on a promissory note signed by deft. The borrower admitted the facts, but said that various transactions between him & the money-lender were harsh & unconscionable, & a week after the issue of the writ in the K. B. Div. issued a writ against the money-lender in the Ch. Div. asking that these transactions might be re-opened & for an account. On a motion by the money-lender that the Chancery action might be dismissed with costs, as an abuse of the process of the ct., or stayed:—Held: the motion failed; although the money-lender's proceedings in the K. B. Div. came first in point of time, & although the K. B. Div. could decide all other questions between the parties on a counterclaim by the borrower, yet the Ch. Div. had the better machinery for taking accounts, which, moreover, were assigned to it by Jud. Act, 1873 (c. 66), s. 34 (3), & as a general rule it was preferable to allow that action to go on in which the burden of proof rested on pltf.; both actions must continue, unless the King's Bench transferred or stayed the King's Bench action, or until the Ct. of Appeal, which controlled both divisions, had pronounced judgment.—RECHNITZER v. SAMUEL (1906), 95 L. T. 75.

Annotation:—Apld. Tumin v. Levi (1911), 28 T. L. R. 125.

434. —— —— By borrower.] — (1) Deft., who had a number of transactions with pltf., a registered money-lender, offered pltf. just before the last sum he had borrowed had become due the balance of the principal & a sum for interest which the money-lender declined. The borrower thereupon issued a writ in the Ch. Div. claiming an account of all transactions between him & the money-lender, & a declaration that some of them were harsh & unconscionable, & for relief under Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51). The money-lender shortly thereafter issued a writ in the K. B. Div. for the full amount said to be owing by the borrower. The borrower thereupon took out a summons asking for a stay of the proceedings in the K. B. Div. on the ground that they were an abuse of the process of the ct. in view of the proceedings pending in the Ch. Div.:—Held: in the circumstance of the case, the proceedings in the K. B. Div. should be stayed.

(2) In the present case £10 was due for the principal & as to that R. S. C., Ord. 14, could be appealed to, but it would be wrong to make use of that Ord. so as to alter the right of pltf. to an inquiry as to the interest. It would be an abuse of the Ord. to deprive a litigant of his right of action on the ground that one item of the action fell within the purview of the Ord. & I think such a case was never intended to come into the short cause list (BUCKLEY, L.J.).—TUMIN v. LEVI (1911), 28 T. 435. "Excessive interest"—"Harsh & unconscionable transaction"—Whether questions for judge or jury.]—In an action to recover damages for trespass & conversion of pltf.'s goods, which had been seised under a bill of sale, the question arose whether defts. were money-lenders, & whether, if so, the interest charged & certain other charges were excessive; & whether the transaction was harsh & unconscionable. It was contended that those questions, except as to whether defts. were money-lenders, were for the ct. & not for the jury:—Held: if there was any evidence upon them, the questions must be left to the jury.—BURTON v. COMPANIES REGISTRATION AGENCY (1906), 23 T. Upon each advance deft. gave to pltf. a bonus in the shape of shares in a co. In this way pltf. received from deft. shares to the value of £1,800 & he also held an undertaking to deliver a number of other shares. Deft. brought an action in the Ch. Div. to have these transactions re-opened, & pltf. sued in the K. B. Div. to recover the £1,040. Upon an application in this latter action for judgment under R. S. C., Ord. 14, deft. alleged that the transactions were harsh & unconscionable & that he was entitled to relief under Money-lenders Act, 1900 (c. 51). He swore that deft.'s agent then told him he could have it at 5 per cent., & after negotiations agreed to take 4½, & that he executed a bill of sale, as he believed, to secure £100, with interest at 4½ per cent. by weekly instalments. SECT. 1.—IN GENERAL.

See Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 205 (1) (xvi), Sched. I., Parts VII. and VIII.; Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 68 (7); Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18), s. 117 (1), (xi.).

1. Definition—Conveyance of property as security for payment of debt—Or discharge of other obligation.]—(1) A mtge. is a conveyance of property as a security for the payment of a debt, or the discharge of some other obligation, & the security is redeemable on such payment or discharge, & any provision inserted to prevent such redemption is a fetter on the equity of redemption, & is void; but the amount or nature of the debt or obligation is not a fetter.

(2) A mtgee. may in the mtge. stipulate for a collateral advantage for himself, provided that the bargain is not unconscionable or oppressive; & there is no presumption that where a mtgee. has stipulated for such a collateral advantage it has been obtained by pressure.

(3) A covenant in a mtge. of a term of years that the mtgor. will, during the residue of the term, notwithstanding that all principal moneys & interest may have been paid, pay to the mtgee. one-third of the net profit rental derived from any underlease or tenancy affecting same, with provisions for continuing the relative positions of mtgee. & mtgor. for the purpose of securing the said share of rental, is not void as clogging the equity of redemption.

(4) The right to redeem is not a personal right, but an equitable estate or interest in the property mtged. (LINDLEY, M.R.).—SANTLEY v. WILDE, [1899] 2 Ch. 474; 68 L. J. Ch. 681; 81 L. T. 393; 48 W. R. 90; 15 T. L. R. 528, C. A.

SECT. 2.—PERSONAL OBLIGATION TO PAY DEBT.

3. General rule.] — [A mortgage] consists of two things; it is a personal contract for a debt secured by an estate, & in equity the estate is no more than a pledge or security for the debt (PLUMER, V.-C.).—QUARRELL v. BECKFORD (1816), 1 Madd. 269; 56 E. R. 100.

4. ——.] — It has been decided that if there is no covenant & no accompanying bond, there is still the implied promise to pay; & if there is a time fixed either by recital or otherwise for the repayment, in many cases depending upon the construction of the instrument, the ct. will imply even a covenant to pay. That being so, every mtge. contains within itself, so to speak, a personal liability to repay the amount advanced (JESSEL, M.R.).—SUTTON v. SUTTON (1882), 22 Ch. D. 511; 52 L. J. Ch. 333; 48 L. PART I. SECT. 1.

a. Essentials of mortgage.]—The three essentials of an English mtge. are (i) that the mtgor. should bind himself to repay the mtge. money on a certain day, (ii) that the property mtged. should be transferred absolutely to the mtgee., (iii) that such absolute transfer should be made subject to a proviso that the mtgee. will reconvey the property to the mtgor., upon payment by him of the mtge. money on the day on which the mtgor. bound himself to repay the same.—NARAYANA AYYAR v. VENKATARAMANA AYYAR (1902), I. 19. ——.] — In a mtge. of a leasehold public-house by a licensed victualler to brewers the mtgor. covenanted with the mtgees. that he & all persons deriving title under him should not during the continuance of the term, & whether any money should or should not be owing on the security of the mtge., use or sell in the house any malt liquors except such as should be purchased of the mtgees.:—Held: this covenant was a "clog" on the equity of redemption, & the mtgor., on payment of all that was due upon the security, was entitled to have a reconveyance of the property, or at his option a transfer of the security, free in either case from the "tie."

The first doctrine to which I refer is expressed in the maxim, "Once a mortgage always a mortgage" . . . it is only another way of saying that a mtge. cannot be made irredeemable, & that a provision to that effect is void (LORD DAVEY).

The principle is this, that a mtge. must not be converted into something else; & when once you come to the conclusion that a stipulation for the benefit of the mtgee. is part of the mtge. transaction, it is but part of his security, & necessarily comes to an end on the payment off of the loan (LORD DAVEY).—NOAKES & CO., LTD. v. RICE, [1902] A. 20. ——.] — There is now no rule in equity that a mtgee. cannot stipulate in the mtge. deed for a collateral advantage to endure beyond redemption, provided that such collateral advantage is not neither (a) unfair & unconscionable, or (b) in the nature of a penalty clogging the equity of redemption, or (c) inconsistent with or repugnant to the contractual or equitable right to redeem. Semble: the equitable doctrine against clogging applies to a floating charge as much as to any other mtge. security.

By an agreement dated Aug. 24, 1910, a firm of wool-brokers agreed to lend to a co. carrying on the business of meat preservers a sum of £10,000 at 6 per cent. If the interest was punctually paid the loan was not to be called in until Sept. 30, 1915, but the co. might pay off at any time on giving one calendar month's notice. The loan was secured by a floating charge on the undertaking of the co. The agreement provided that for a period of five years from the date thereof the co. should not sells sheepskins to any person other than the lenders so long as the latter were willing to buy at the best price offered by any other person & that the co. should pay to the lenders a commission on all sheepskins sold by the co. to any other person. The loan having been paid off by the co. in Jan. 1913, in accordance with the agreement, the lenders claimed to exercise their option of pre-emption notwithstanding the payment off of the loan:—Held: the stipulation for the option of pre-emption formed no part of the mtge. transaction, but was a collateral contract entered into as a condition of the co. obtaining the loan; that it was not a clog on the equity of redemption or repugnant to the right to redeem; & the lenders were entitled to an injunction restraining the co. from selling sheepskins to any person other than the lenders in breach of the agreement.

The equity to redeem, which arises on failure to exercise the contractual right of redemption, must be carefully distinguished from the equitable estate, which, from the first, remains in the mtgor., & is sometimes referred to as an equity of redemption (LORD PARKER).—KREGLINGER v. NEW PATAGONIA MEAT & COLD STORAGE CO., LTD., [1914] A. 26. ——.] — In 1840, A., in consideration of an amount then due by him to B., assigned to B. his interest in certain lands in Canada, to which he was equitably entitled. In 1843 B. with the privity of A. obtained the legal title to those lands, & remained in possession of them up to his death in 1850. In 1844 A. became bkpt., but he did not return B. as a creditor under his bkpcy., nor did he assert any right to an equity of redemption. The deed of assignment was lost. A.'s assignee filed a bill to redeem. It appeared by parol evidence that the intention of the parties to the assignment was that at some time & upon some terms A. should have the power of redeeming: —Held: the presumption was that, although the assignment was not intended in the first instance to be absolute & unconditional, A.'s right of redemption was divested before B. obtained the legal title.—HOLMES v. MATHEWS (1855), 9 Moo. Pltf. agreed to pay the amount of such valuation, after deducting therefrom the moneys so advanced. The valuation was made, & a further payment was made by pltf. to deft., & the former entered into possession of the farms & tendered the amount of the balance due under the valuation, but deft. refused to receive same, contending that the agreement was for a mtge., & not for a sale:—Held: the relation of vendor & purchaser, & not that of mtgor. & mtgee., was constituted by the agreement.—TAPPLY v. SHEATHER (1862), 7 L. In Aug. 1798, they conveyed the M. estate alone to O. in fee, with a declaration, that the fine already levied should enure to the uses of that deed. In Nov. 1798, by a deed reciting that the original transaction was only a mtge., & that it had been lately discovered that the wife had only a life interest in the F. estate, the husband & wife, in consideration of a further advance of money from O., conveyed to him the wife's life interest in that estate. O. never executed the last-mentioned deed, but he entered into possession of both estates at the time of its execution. Upon a bill filed in 1836, by the heir of the wife, to redeem the F. estate:—Held: he was not entitled to relief; for, with the exception of the recital in the deed of Nov. 1798, the circumstances of the case were consistent with the original transaction being a purchase; & although O. entered into possession under that deed, yet not

36. —— ——.] — By an indenture dated in 1890 the Duchess of M., in consideration of natural love & affection, assigned to her husband the Duke a leasehold house belonging to her. The deed was in form an absolute assignment. The Duke subsequently mortgaged the house for the purpose of raising money to pay his debts. The Duchess joined with the Duke in covenanting to pay the mtge. debt, but the equity of redemption was reserved to the Duke alone. Upon the death of the Duke in 1892, the Duchess claimed to be entitled to the house subject to the mtge. There was evidence that she had assigned the house to the Duke solely to enable him to mtge. it in his own name, & that it was part of the arrangement between them that he should reassign to her, which, if he had lived, he would have done :—Held : the case fell within the authorities which forbid Stat. of Frauds to be used to cover what would amount to a fraud, & consequently the statute could not be successfully pleaded in opposition to the claim of the Duchess.—Re MARLBOROUGH (DUKE), DAVIS v. WHITEHEAD, [1894] 2 Ch. 133 ; 63 L. 55. ——.] — (1) Pltf.'s grandfather, in 1689, mortgaged the estate in question to the Whiteheads, they afterwards mortgaged it to Cartwright & Heywood, & their heirs, for £200, who, to secure the interest, leased the estate to pltf.'s father, in June 1689, & to his assigns, for five thousand years, at £12 a year rent for the three first years, & £10 a year rent for the remainder of the term; & if at three years end, the £200 was paid, & interest, then the premises were to be reconveyed: Receipts given, sometimes for interest, & sometimes for a rentcharge, the last in 1730; the £200 lent was charity-money, directed to be laid out in the purchase of lands in fee, & the rents to be applied for clothing twenty-four needy housekeepers. In 1738, pltf. gave notice he would pay in the money, but deft. refused to take it, & insisted it was an absolute purchase, & so decreed.

56. ——.] — An agreement, made upon an advance of money, to convey property, & containing a power of redemption within a given time, & in default the sale to be absolute:—Held: under the circumstances, to be a conditional sale & not a mtge.

A. having agreed to purchase a property for £1,435, borrowed £185, the amount of auction duty & deposit, from B. B. afterwards advanced A. £600 on account of the purchase, but which was not so applied, & £1,291 of the purchase-money remained unpaid. A. & B. afterwards entered into an agreement, by which it was agreed, in consideration of the £185 & the £600, & of a further sum of £400 to be paid by B. to A. that the property should be conveyed to B. provided that if A. paid B. on a day specified the £1,435, & the sum of £1,000 advanced, the agreement should be void; & A. was to have permission to make sales in the meantime, subject to the approval of B., so as to reimburse the purchase-money & advances made; "but if not then made, the sale was absolutely confirmed to B." The agreement contained no engagement to pay. B. afterwards completed the purchase:—Held: this was a conditional purchase, & not a mtge., & A. having made default in payment, the estate belonged absolutely to B.—PERRY v. MEDDOWCROFT (1841), 4 Beav. 197; 49 E. 60. ——.]—O., a cotton spinner, being under advances from B., a cotton broker, for which B. held an equitable mtge. of the mills & premises, came to a general composition with his creditors in July, 1850, paying them the amount of their compositions by means of promissory notes, in which B. joined, & which B. had ultimately to pay. B. got no composition, but the whole spinning mills & business, as a going concern, was sold to B. by O. with a proviso, that if within ten years O. should repay B. principal & interest, or if the profits of the business, after deductions for necessaries & repairs, should within ten years repay the principal & interest, then B. should reconvey to O. It was further agreed, that if at any period of the ten years the result of six months' business, on an account thereof being taken, should be that there was not enough net profit to pay interest on the whole principal moneys advanced by B., B. might give O. two months' notice to bar the right of repurchase; & if within that period of two months O. should not pay up to B. all principal & interest then due, all the right & equity of redemption should be barred. B. further agreed to continue to employ O. as manager at £3 per week. In Nov. 1850, stock was taken, & showed sufficient profit. In Sept. 1851, an account was taken, which showed, as B. alleged, a loss of £3,000. Thereupon B. sent a notice dismissing O. from his situation as manager, on the ground of disobedience & calling on him to pay up in two months the amount of principal & interest, or to stand barred:—Held: the notice to bar the right of repurchase might well be given on the account in question, although it was a nine months' account, not a six months' account, as required by the provision, provided that it could be shown that a loss upon the business for the six months ending July, 1851, had actually been incurred.—OGDEN v. BATTAMS (1855), 1 Jur. 61. ——.]—In 1825, by indentures of lease & release, N. purported to convey his life interest in certain freehold & leasehold estates to C., in consideration of the sum of £4,739; & by another deed of even date it was covenanted by C. that N. should be allowed to repurchase same, if desirous of so doing, for the sum of £4,739, by giving twelve months' notice on Lady Day in any year. N. afterwards became insolvent & the assignee, thirty years after the execution of these deeds & fifteen years after the death of C. filed a bill contending that the transaction was a mtge., & praying that an account might be taken of the rents & profits received by C. or his representatives, & that the estate might be reconveyed to pltf. on payment of the sum of £4,739 with interest:—Held: this transaction was not to be treated as a mtge.—ALDERSON v. WHITE (1858), 2 De G. & J. 97; 30 L. 71. ——.]—C., by indentures, dated in 1800, for the consideration of two sums of £2,000 & £2,000 granted unto G. two annuities of £300 each, charged on his freehold lands at T.; & the indentures contained powers of repurchase by C., his heirs & assigns, on giving notice in writing under his or their hands, & paying all arrears. In 1812, C. agreed to sell all his lands, including those at T., to B. for £90,528, & to convey free from incumbrances, except certain mtges., & in pursuance of the agreement B. was let into possession, & paid large sums. The annuities to G. being in arrear, in 1818 C. granted to him all his lands on trust to sell them, & out of the proceeds, to retain costs & pay incumbrances; &, in 1824 C. assigned to G. the unpaid balance of the said purchase-money, subject to prior charges, to apply the same in payment of what was stated in account to be due to G. Nothing was done on these deeds. B. filed a bill in 1825 for specific performance of the agreement with B., & for repurchase of G.'s annuities, alleging that C., at B.'s request, gave G. such notice as was required to enable C., or B. in his place, to repurchase the annuities, & that on the day in the notice mentioned, the agents of C. & B. went to G.'s residence, to pay the principal & arrears with costs, & to tender deeds of transfer for his execution, & G. being from home, they left a notice that the money & deeds would remain for ten days at the office of one of them. The bill prayed for a declaration that the annuities had ceased from that day. G., by his answer, admitted the service of a notice, signed C., by E. & P., his attorneys, but insisted that they had no authority from C., & that the notice was irregular & of no avail, as not being in pursuance of the powers of repurchase:—Held: the notice of repurchase was not in strict pursuance of the power in the deeds, & was also defective in not naming a place for payment of the money.—JOY v. BIRCH (1836), 10 Bli. 74. —— —— Mortgage passes whole legal interest.]—A holder of script certificates for shares borrowed of deft. a sum of money on his own promissory note, payable on demand, & on the security of the shares, & deposited with deft. the scrip certificates. He afterwards became bankrupt, & deft. without demand & without notice, sold ten of the fifteen shares to repay himself his debt. The creditor's assignee, without making any tender of the amount of the debt, brought an action of trover against deft. to recover the value of the shares:—Held: even assuming the sale to be wrongful, the immediate right to the possession of the shares was not by the sale revested in pltf., & he could not therefore maintain trover, either for the whole value of the shares or for nominal damages.

There are three kinds of security; the first, a simple lien; the second a mtge., passing the property out & out; the third, a security intermediate between a lien & a mtge., viz. a pledge, where by contract a deposit of goods is made a security for a debt, & the right to the property rests in the pledgee so far as is necessary to secure the debt (WILLES, J.).—HALLIDAY v. HOLGATE (1868), L. 75. —— —— ——.]—The doctrine that an equitable mtgee. by deposit of title deeds so entitled to foreclosure, does not extend to a pledgee of personal chattels.

A. deposited railway bonds with B. as security for a debt, without any written memorandum. B. filed a bill praying for foreclosure or sale:—

Sect. 6.—Mortgage distinguished from other similar transactions: Sub-sects. 2, 3 & 4. Part II. Sects. 1 & 2: Sub-sect. 1.]

Held: as a mere pledgee of chattels B. was not entitled to foreclosure, but only to a sale.

In a regular legal mtge. there has been an actual conveyance of the legal ownership, & then the ct. has interfered to prevent that from having its full effect, & when the ground of interference has gone by the non-payment of the debt the ct. simply removes the stop it has itself put on. Then when there is a deposit of title deeds, the ct. treats that as an agreement to execute a legal mtge., & therefore as carrying with it all the remedies incident to such a mtge. None of this reasoning applies to a pledge of chattels; the pledgee never had the absolute ownership at law, & his equitable rights cannot exceed his legal title (JESSEL, M.R.). —CARTER v. WAKE (1877), 4 Ch. D. 605; 46 L. J. Ch. 841.

76. —— —— ——.]—A pledge of personal chattels as a rule is & must be accompanied by delivery of possession. It is not of the possession given him under the contract that the pledgee's rights spring. A contract of pledge carries with it the implication that the security may be made available to satisfy the obligation & enables the pledgee in possession, though he has not the general property in the thing pledged but a special property only, to sell on default in payment & after notice to the pledgor, though the pledgor may redeem at any moment up to sale. A mtge. of personal chattels involves in its essence not the delivery of possession but a conveyance of title as security for the debt. . . . Where there is no express power of sale given by the mtge. he has after default in payment & after he has given the mtgor. a reasonable time to pay, a power to sell & give a good title to the purchaser (COTTON, L.J.).

A mtge. conveys the whole legal interest in the chattels; a pawn conveys only a special property. . . . A pawn involves transfer of the possession from the pawnor to the pawnee. A mtge. may be made without any transfer of possession. In my opinion the two transactions of pawn & mtge. are in their nature distinct (FRY, L.J.).—Re MORRITT Ex p. OFFICIAL RECEIVER (1886), 18 Q. B. D. 222; 56 L. J. Q. B. 139; 56 L. T. 42; 35 W. 82. Option to purchase pledged shares.]—The transaction between pltfs. & defts. . . . cannot be properly regarded as a mtge. . . .

It was in effect the deposit of certain shares on security for a loan, the consideration for the loan being the right to take these shares at the price of £11. In reality the right to call the shares at £11 up till Mar. 31, 1901, was the only consideration for the loan so far as the transaction with defts. recorded in the documents is concerned. . . . Further, in my opinion, it is not correct to say that there is any clog upon any supposed equity of redemption. During the period for which defts. were given the call, that is to say, up to Mar. 31, there was no right to redeem. Any equity of redemption which pltfs. had only arose in the event of defts. not exercising the right of call or to the extent to which they do not exercise it (LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J.).—LONDON & GLOBE FINANCE CORPN., LTD. v. MONTGOMERY (1902), 18 T. SUB-SECT. 4.—RENTCHARGE.

See, generally, RENTCHARGES & ANNUITIES.

83. Owner of rentcharge has no estate in the land.]—The distinction between a mtgee. & the owner of a rentcharge is obvious. At law the mtgee. is absolutely owner. The mtgor. comes into equity to be relieved against the forfeiture. Equity imposes as the condition of relief certain terms, namely that the mtgee. shall be repaid not only the money due on the loan, but also all expenses that the owner might properly have incurred in repairs & permanent improvements. The owner of a rentcharge has no estate. His remedy is by distress & entry & he is entitled to enforce that remedy in a proper manner. The owner of the estate subject to the charge is not like the mtgor. obliged to resort to equity to recover possession. On payment of the arrears of the rentcharge he can recover possession at law. Equity therefore imposes no conditions on him (ROMILLY, M.R.).—HOOPER v. COOKE (1855), 20 Beav. 639; 3 Eq. Rep. 988; 25 L. J. Ch. 62; 25 L. T. O. S. 286; 1 Jur. N. S. 949; 3 W. R. 636; 52 E. 99. —— Effect of demand for execution—Validity as against trustee in bankruptcy of mortgagor.]—Two traders, brothers, obtained advances amounting to £500 from their father & brother in various sums, & in 1870, on the last advance of £250, they signed an agreement that they would, on demand, assign the lease of their premises & their business, stock-in-trade, & book debts to the creditors, with a proviso that if they should repay the sums advanced the agreement should be void, but if they should fail to do so a valuation should be made, & the balance, if any, should be paid to debtors. At the same time the lease was deposited with same creditors as a security for the due performance of the agreement. In 1873 debtors became embarrassed, & creditors demanded the execution of an assignment in pursuance of the agreement, which was accordingly executed, & the balance of the valuation of the property, amounting to £123, was paid to debtors. The assignment included substantially the whole of debtors' property, & creditors took possession of it forthwith. A few days afterwards debtors filed a petition for liquidation, & the trustee applied to have the deed of assignment of 1873 declared void:—Held: the agreement of 1870 became a binding security on demand being made, & the assignment of 1873, being based upon it, was valid.—Re COOK, Ex p. IZARD (1874), 9 Ch. 100. —— Relationship of mortgagor & mortgagee established.]—A banking co. entered into an agreement dated May 29, 1886, to sell certain paper mills & machinery to L. co. for £20,000 to be paid by instalments. By clause 2 of the agreement it was provided that upon payment of the first two instalments the bank should convey the premises to L. co. upon their executing a mtge. for the balance of the purchase-money, & that the mtge. should contain a clause enabling the bank, in case the business of L. co. should be suspended, to re-enter & take possession of the premises, & of everything which should have been built or placed thereon, & which should not require registration within Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (c. 31), & to hold same for their own use & benefit absolutely, but without prejudice to the liability of L. co. for the unpaid balance of the purchase-money. This agreement was not registered as a bill of sale. The first two instalments of the purchase-money were paid, but no conveyance or mtge. of the property was executed in pursuance of the agreements. L. co. entered into & held possession of the property until a winding-up order was made on Feb. 7, 1887. The bank thereupon re-entered on the property. The official liquidator of L. co. asked by summons for delivery up of a paper making machine & all other trade machinery attached to the mills. The bank claimed possession of the fixtures & trade machinery under their vendors' lien:—Held: (1) the position of the parties under the agreement was the same as if a conveyance & mtge. of the property had been actually executed, & the bank had no vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money, as an express stipulation had been substituted for such lien; (2) the agreement to mortgage did not extend to any property which required registration under Bills of Sale Acts, & the trade machinery was therefore not included in the security, & must be delivered up to the liquidator of L. co., but in other respects the agreement remained valid.—Re LONDON & LANCASHIRE PAPER MILLS CO., LTD. 104. —— Mistake as to form & reservation of equity of redemption.]—On June 14, 1858, deft. L. being indebted to pltf. signed a memorandum of agreement whereby in consideration of the forbearance of pltf. in not requiring immediate repayment of the moneys he had advanced to or for him, he, L., agreed to give & execute to pltf. a charge on the interest to which he was entitled by right of marriage in the property settled on his wife, or to which she was entitled in respect of her former marriage as a security " for the repayment of the moneys pltf. had advanced to or for him, L. "; & deft. L. further pledged himself not to incumber his interests in such property or any part thereof. On June 18, four days afterwards, deft. L., with the knowledge, but without the consent of pltf., executed a post nuptial settlement, whereby he conveyed all his interest in right of his wife in the property settled on her on her first marriage to trustees, on trusts for her for life, then for himself for life, & after the decease of the survivor for the children. About a month afterwards on July 13, deft. L. executed a deed purporting to be in pursuance of the agreement of June 14, whereby he charged all the dividends, interest & annual proceeds of the trust funds which were settled at the time of his wife's first marriage, & also his share in the trust funds themselves, with the payment to pltf. of £800, & interest from June 14. He also, by same deed, assigned his said share in the trust funds to pltf. by way of mtge., with a proviso for redemption to L. on repayment by him of the sum of £800 & interest:—Held: the deed of July 13, though constituting a mere equitable security, & being entirely mistaken with regard to the form of the mtge., & the reservation of the equity of redemption, yet operated as a recognition of the debt of £800, &, coupled with the memorandum, it gave pltf. a right to an account & payment of what should be found due on both securities; & in default of payment, a right of foreclosure, against L. & his assignee in insolvency.—CAREW v. ARUNDEL (1861), 5 L. Before any lease was granted or any money paid, B. became bkpt., & his assignee seized & sold the fittings & fixtures under an order of the ct.:—Held: until the execution of the proposed lease, the agreement constituted an equitable contract between pltf. & B. that "the premises as fitted & licensed" should stand as a security for the £1,000 premium, & consequently pltf. was entitled to them as equitable mtgee.—TEBB v. HODGE (1869), L. No interest was paid under this agreement, & nothing was done until about eleven years after the date of it, when this action was brought for the specific performance of the agreement. The question was, whether pltf. was entitled to have in the mtge. a covenant for principal & interest :—Held : pltf. was entitled to have a covenant for the payment of principal & interest.—FIRTH v. SLINGSBY (1888), 58 L. 119. Enlargement of subject-matter of mortgage.]—Where a receiver is appointed at the instance of mtgee. over property on which the mtgor. carries on business, the receiver cannot be directed to manage the business unless the business is in express terms or by implication included in the security.

An hotel keeper who was about to rebuild the hotel, & had an agreement for the grant to him of a lease for eighty years when he had rebuilt it, charged "the said building agreement, & all the premises comprised therein, & the hotel & buildings to be hereafter erected as aforesaid, & the lease so to be granted as aforesaid," with the repayment of a sum borrowed, subject to a prior charge, & agreed to execute to the lender, as soon as the lease was granted, a valid second mtge., which should be in such form & contain such powers, covenants, & provisions as the solr. or counsel of the mtgee. should advise or require. The hotel was built, & the mtgor. carried on business on the property, but did not execute any formal mtge. The mtgee. brought an action for sale or foreclosure :—Held : the security did not charge the goodwill or business, & the provision that the mtge. should be in such form & contain such stipulations as the mtgee. should require did not enlarge the subject of the charge, but only provided for perfecting it.—WHITLEY v. CHALLIS, [1892] 1 Ch. 64 ; 61 L. Extent of interest comprised in second mortgage—Right of second mortgagee to legal estate—On payment off of first mortgage.]—(1) After a first mtge. has been paid off, the second mtgee. may file a bill to have the legal estate conveyed to him without praying to foreclose the mtge. ; & it seems he may do this, at the peril of costs, until the day of payment under a decree for redemption obtained against him by the mtgor.

(2) Until the mtgee. is actually paid off by his own consent or by decree of the ct., he retains the character of mtgee. with all the rights incident to it, & may therefore file a bill for foreclosure, notwithstanding a notice by the mtgor. to pay off the mtge., & even notwithstanding a decree of redemption.—GRUGEON v. GERRARD (1840), 4 Y. & C. Ex. 119.

123. —— Mortgagor's whole interest saving the rights of prior incumbrancers.]—P., being indebted to B., makes a mtge. of an equity of redemption of real estate to B. for the purpose of securing the debt, & by the indenture of mtge. it was falsely recited that the mortgaged estate was subject to an equitable charge for moneys due to J., secured by the deposit of a deed. P. retained the deed in his own possession, & subsequently deposited it with J. as a security for money partly lent to P. by J. before & partly after the mtge. of the estate to B. J. at the time of the deposit had no notice of the prior mtge. to B. :—Held : (1) inasmuch as an actual prior charge on the estate, if afterwards paid off by P. or otherwise avoided, would have left B. in the position of the first mtgee. of the equity of redemption, the recital of a charge which had in fact no existence could not have the effect of postponing B. ; (2) the interest acquired by J. by the subsequent mtge. by way of deposit could not be enlarged by the effect of the false recital, & was only an interest in the equity of redemption, subject to the mtge. to B. ; & B., in a suit for that purpose, was entitled, as against J., to the ordinary decree for payment or for foreclosure, & delivery up of the deed on default.

137. ——.]—A co. held land under a building agreement from the Corpn. of London, under which separate leases of the houses were to be granted as they were built. In Apr. 1883, the co. borrowed money from pltfs., & covenanted to mortgage the houses to them by demise when the leases were granted, & that in the meantime the premises comprised in the building agreement should be a security to pltfs. The building agreement was handed over to pltfs., but no notice of their security was given to the Corpn. of London. In Feb. 1886, leases of two of the houses were granted to the co. & immediately afterwards the co. deposited them by way of equitable mtge. with B., J. & Co., who had no notice of pltf.'s security:—Held: although the giving notice to the Corpn. would probably have prevented the handing over the leases to the co., still, as notice is not requisite to complete a security on real estate, the omission to give such notice was not a neglect of duty by pltfs. on the ground of which they ought to be postponed to the subsequent equitable incumbrancers.—UNION BANK OF LONDON v. KENT (1888), 39 Ch. 138. Agreement for purchase of freeholds.]—A father purchased a piece of land, & took an agreement that the vendors would convey it to him. He afterwards built a granary, & allowed his sons to occupy the premises for their business. They supplied goods to their father to the amount expended by him in building the granary, & they erected other buildings on the land of greater value. The father, pending these transactions, became surety for his sons to certain brokers for £10,000. The sons afterwards surreptitiously obtained possession of the agreement; & one of them, representing that his father had given the land to them, signed his father's name on the blank leaf of the agreement, & deposited it with pltfs., who were bankers, to secure their cash credit. The sons afterwards became bkpt.; the son depositing the agreement was upon several indictments, convicted of forgery; & the father was required to pay the £10,000 for which he was surety. Upon a bill, by pltfs., to obtain the benefit of the deposit made with them:—Held: the sons had a lien on the land to the value of the goods supplied to the father & the money expended by them in building; the deposit of the agreement, though made under the false representations, was good to the extent of that lien.—UNITY JOINT-STOCK MUTUAL BANKING ASSOCN. v. KING (1858), 25 Beav. 72; 27 L. 144. —— Deeds not agreeing with memorandum.]—Among the effects of testatrix were found title deeds belonging to a trader, & there was a letter written by testatrix to her agent, directing him to advance a certain sum to the trader, & stating that the advances were made on the security of certain title deeds & documents therein described; & at the foot of this letter the trader signed a receipt for the advances. The title deeds found among testatrix's effects did not answer the description in the letter, but it did not appear whether any others were deposited with her on the occasion of the loan. The trader became bkpt., & the usual petition of an equitable mtgee. was presented by testatrix's personal representative:—Held: there was a good lien on the property comprised in the title deeds found in testatrix's possession for the amount of the advances; but there was no sufficient memorandum to entitle petitioner to costs.—Re MOORE, Ex p. POWELL (1842), 6 Jur. 490, Ct. of R.

149. Memorandum signed but not dated—Burden of proof on mortgagor.]—M. a stockbroker, having in his possession a deed of conveyance of property belonging to B., one of his customers, a bill was filed by B. for the recovery of the deed. M. claimed to hold the deed as having been deposited with him by B. as a collateral security by way of equitable mtge., for a balance of an account due to him from B. B. asserted that the deed was only left with M. for safe custody, & denied that it was deposited by way of security; he also denied that a balance of account was ever ascertained. M. in support of his case, further produced a memorandum signed by B. but not dated, containing a statement to the effect that B. was agreeable to deposit the deed with M. as security for the amount he owed to him:—Held: in the circumstances, the burden of proof lay upon B., who sought to recover the deed, & to treat the custody of M. merely as that of a bailee.—BURGESS v. MOXON, MOXON v. BURGESS (1856), 28 L. (2) To constitute such a deposit, for so securing money due, an equitable mtge., it is not necessary that there should be any agreement accompanying the transaction, that the depositor should execute a legal mtge. to the depositee, it is sufficient if it can be shown by satisfactory testimony that the object & intent of the deposit was the security of money.
